Charlevoix Sugar Factory in Difficulty.

Construction Co. doesn't pay its men and they go on a strike.

There will be no sugar made at the Charlevoix Sugar Co.'s factory this winter. Up to last Saturday night it had been hoped and expected that the new plant would begin slicing beets soon as it was almost completed but at that time the National Construction Co., which has the contract for putting up the plant, defaulted on its pay rolls for the past three weeks and the 100 men who were employed refused to return to work. We understand that the Construction Co. were able to meet their obligations by Tuesday and thus averted attachment proceedings. Another unfortunate feature has been the early setting in of winter which has greatly delayed the work of completing the factory.

The Charlevoix Sugar Co. is an entirely separate concern from the Construction Co. and is entirely solvent but this difficulty has compelled them to ship their entire crop of beets to Saginaw, entailing a big loss.

The factory is practically completed however, and the Sugar Co. will be in position to make a vigorous campaign next year.

"Slaves of the Mine" is one of the big productions booked direct from New York City by Loveday Opera House on representation that while small we turn out as large audiences to good attractions as do much larger cities, if we continue as we have, "to make good," we can get more of them.

The Pacific Spring and Wagon Works has received an order from London, England, for 10 wagons to be built for use in transportation between the African coast and the gold mines. If the lot proves satisfactory and adapted for the purpose for which they are designed, 100 of them will be ordered. The wagons will be put up without pole or shafts, but will have a steering pole. Heavy ropes are attached to the axles and the rigs are designed to be drawn by natives. They are of heavy construction.

THE TORCH LAKE PHILOSOPHER.

Over at Torch Lake is a man who doesn't know he is a philosopher—but he is. He doesn't look like the philosopher of our ideals, but rather like the hard-headed business man which he is. The man is Arch Cameron, well-known throughout Northern Michigan.

Talking to a party around the hotel stove at East Jordan the other morning, Mr. Cameron said:

"Well, now, I can't realize that I am growing old. I am just as much of a boy as I ever was. If any of the lads had come around last night I would have gone out to a dance or anywhere, just to see the fun. This snow makes me feel like the snow falling. I don't let business let me grow old—fire, flood or what not, I go on just the same. Now, there's Mr. — he has much more money than I, but he don't enjoy life half so well, I'll wager. With him it is push and pull, and worry to get more. But what's the use? You can't take it with you when you go. All I want is to go through life happy and contented and have my health, and be able to put my hand in my pocket and get a dollar when I want it.

This struggling for wealth is like pushing a snowball. You start small and the ball keeps getting bigger and bigger as you roll it up hill, and the higher you go and the bigger the ball gets, the harder you have to push to keep it rolling, and often you have to dig your toes in to keep it from rolling back and crushing you. And often you see men almost to the top, and then the ball gets too big and gets away from them and back it comes down hill and goes to smash at the bottom. Give me my health and a dollar when I want it, and I'll keep young as long as I live and let the other fellows worry, and struggle for a bigger snowball."

Mr. Cameron says he is undecided as to what will be done about replacing his mill, recently burned at Torch Lake. He has been figuring on moving his Ellsworth mill to Torch Lake, but the cost would be considerable, and he is still undecided. He has about two years cut at Torch Lake, and if he could sell out his holdings to some one and clean it up, would not put in a mill there again.

But in the meantime, regardless of "fire or flood" the genial philosopher is not worrying, and is continuing to keep young. The world would be better and happier if there were more men of like philosophical temperament.—Charlevoix Courier.

So many people delude themselves with these words when they notice signs of kidney trouble. Instead, the kidneys become more and more affected until some fatal malady such as diabetes or bright's disease develops. If you notice any signs of kidney or bladder disease take Foley's Kidney Cure as it will cure any case of kidney or bladder disease that is not beyond the reach of medicine. "I was troubled with kidney complaint for two years," writes A. H. Davis, of Mt. Sterling, Ia., "but two bottles of Foley's Kidney Cure effected a permanent cure." Sold by L. C. Madison & Co.

SLAVES OF THE MINE.

A new play styled "Slaves of the Mine" will be seen at Loveday Opera House next Friday night Dec. 4th. The name is more appropriate than those of many plays for it is a story of the anthracite coal regions near Wilkesbarre, and turns upon a peculiar law of the state by virtue of which a conveyance of land carries the surface only, and not the ore beneath unless especially mentioned. Though the labor question comes in incidentally, and there is a thrilling strike scene, it is not a "labor" play, but a domestic narration, full of plot and action, and containing strong dramatic scenes and intense climaxes. The leading scene occurs in the bottom of a coal shaft, the characters using a real "cage" or elevator, and actual coal cars. This scene also shows the destruction of the mine from an explosion of fire damp. Such capable people as Frederick Reynolds, Jos. R. Kettler, Howard Brandon and Alice Hamilton are in the production, which will be given with entire special scenery. Seats will be on sale next Tuesday.

Mr. Burritt's face became flushed, and he started to his feet with the haste and hot indignation which would have done credit to one of half his years. "James!" he cried, with passion, "is this the way you treat your old friend? Does the fidelity of half a life time count for nothing? Why, even your name has been preserved in inviolable secrecy, and at this very moment not one single soul, besides myself, is aware of the object of my journey, or of the identity of the individual I have come to meet!—and this is all you have to say to me! I had better return home at once, without more delay!"

He was evidently much moved, and the other man could not but recognize that the emotion he betrayed was genuine. So he, too, rose from his seat and, catching Mr. Burritt by the arm, said, "My dear fellow, don't misunderstand me! Surely you did not take me seriously just now. It is not that I doubted you for a moment, Silas; but—" He passed his hand over his eyes, as though to clear away something which obstructed his vision. Then, after a moment's hesitation, he continued: "I only landed in the old country, this morning, and it has brought it all back again—all the shame and sorrow, all the suffering and remorse—it seems as fresh as though—as though it had all happened yesterday. Instead of twenty years ago, I cannot but realize the fact that, in spite of all my wealth—honestly earned, too, every penny of it, I swear—I am a pariah, an outcast. No, don't interrupt me. I tell you—with a letter, with a laugh—I feel more like a returned convict than anything else." "James!" exclaimed Mr. Burritt, "you shock me! you grieve me more than I can say! I—" excitement caused by the meeting with the old friend he had not seen for so many years. At any rate, whatever the cause, there was no doubt as to the effect; for he found it impossible to sleep, or to do anything but toss from side to side, as hour after hour wearily wore itself away. By some peculiar action of the brain, he also found himself compelled to review all the past scenes of his life, and mentally, step by step, retrace the path he had trodden during those fifty years or so, which went to make up the sum of his existence on this planet.

His friend interrupted him. "You!"

At last, in despair, he rose, and going to the window, looked out upon the night. It was a very moonlight night—too much so, in fact. There was something almost weird and ghastly in its effect. So he dropped the blind with a crash, and went back to bed again, hoping that, this time, he might be able to sleep.

But it was the same thing over again. Only this time his thoughts concentrated themselves upon his family and his home life. He remembered, with a sense of remorse, that he had been a little—only a little—irritable at breakfast that morning, and that he had spoken rather sharply when interrogated as to the purpose of his sudden expedition.

Certain of his friend's sayings had grated upon his ear, and caused a chill feeling of dissatisfaction and regret.

"Thank God!" he had said when he heard of the deaths of those others, cut off, more than one of them, before they had attained their proper span.

Mr. Burritt turned uneasily in his bed as he reflected upon this, and remembered that he was the only one left who knew all. The only one his friend had to fear. To fear! Surely that was not the right way to put it?

he felt himself falling—falling from an immeasurable height—and woke! "What a hideous dream," he thought. "How weird—how awful—how real! I would rather lie awake the whole night through than dream just such another. I wonder what the time is?"

He felt for his watch and the matches, and struck a light. Just half-past three—no more. As he restored the articles again to their places, he thought he heard faint sounds of movement in the next room.

"Evidently I am not the only restless person," he said to himself as he lay down again. "I have a companion in misfortune. To-morrow morning we shall be able to compare experiences. Suppose I were to knock at the wall and speak to him? But then I might disturb someone else and alarm them. That would never do. I expect it must have been the cucumber that gave me the nightmare. I hope I shan't have another such dream; if I do, I'll never touch cucumber any more as long as I live." His eyes closed, and in a few moments his deep and regular breathing showed that he had again fallen asleep.

And again he dreamt, and the dream was as follows:

He was lying in his bed, or at least, so he thought, and, after a while, it seemed to him that it became very hard and narrow, so that he had no room to move in it. It was also very dark. He tried to turn over upon his side, but found, as in the other dream that he could stir neither hand nor foot. And what appeared to him a long time, he began to hear sounds over his head. Sometimes in one place, sometimes in another, and at the same time he began to experience a difficulty in breathing. And still the sound went on—the sound of some one hammering—of some one hammering nails—

The sound of some one hammering nails into a coffin!

And with that, all at once, the awful truth broke upon him. He was dead, and they were nailing him up in his coffin—dead!

His heart stopped beating as he grasped the full horror of the situation. They were burying him alive! Oh, horrible!—horrible!

In vain he tried to burst the bonds of the insensibility, in which he was held. In vain he made frenzied efforts to cry aloud. The most frantic endeavors were unavailing. He was unable to utter a sound or produce the smallest movement. Then it seemed as though some one were trying to raise the lid of the coffin. There was a faint, creaking sound—a faint glimmer of light was perceptible overhead. It increased and widened! Oh, joy! He was saved—saved! The coffin lid was raised little by little—higher and higher—in another moment he should be free!

It was done. He saw a face bending over him—a familiar face—the face of an old friend. Already he hailed him in his heart as his benefactor, his deliverer. Then—what were these words he heard? Words he had heard before—when was it?

"You can ruin me whenever you please, but now you are in my power."

The lid was clapped down again, leaving him in utter darkness. The hammering began again. He made one last tremendous effort and woke. Woke to find himself sitting bolt upright, with the perspiration streaming from him. Woke to find the man whose voice even now seemed to ring in his ears as he bent over the open coffin, standing beside his bed, in the faint, grey light of morning.

"What brings you here?" gasped Mr. Burritt, as soon as he had realized the fact that the terrible ordeal he had just passed through was only a dream.

"I couldn't sleep," was the response, "and I couldn't lie still any longer, so I came to see whether you were awake." (To be continued.)

A Chess Village.

Near the Prussian town of Mardburg lies the little village of Strobeck, which has earned for itself an interesting celebrity. The village contains 1,200 inhabitants, who are one and all chess players. They may be said to learn the game in their cradles, for among the first lessons taught to a child by its parents are the moves in chess and the first playthings it receives are chessmen. The smallest children are to be seen in their playtime sitting quietly together with a chessboard before them gravely considering the moves, and in the evening the old people meet to play their favorite game. At stated times in the year there are chess tournaments in which both the grown-up people and the children take part, prizes being given to the victors. Many people come to Strobeck during these competitions to watch the peasants at their games. The children even receive instruction in chess in the schools.

A Collection of Pens.

The Carnavalet Museum in Paris contains a collection of pens which, while interesting from a connoisseur's point of view as works of art, are no less attractive to the historian. Every time a sovereign visits the town hall in Paris he is begged to sign his name in the visitors' book, and for this purpose a richly ornamented pen is handed the royal visitor.

For the intended visit of the king of Italy the city of Paris has ordered a special pen of the Italian silversmith Froment Meurice. The design is in XVI. century style and is in exquisite taste. The penholder is ornamented with a little enamel cartridge bearing the arms of the House of Savoy.

LAKE LUCERNE

The Famous Show Spot of German Switzerland

(Special Correspondence.)

No part of German Switzerland is so beautiful as that which includes the town of Lucerne on the lake of the four Forest Cantons, or Lake Lucerne, as it is more commonly called.

The town of Lucerne, the capital of the canton to which it belongs, is situated on the shore of the lake of the same name, and is still surrounded by ancient walls, with many dark and gloomy watchtowers, built as far back as the last part of the 14th century. There were at first a few small fishermen's huts on the banks of the river Reuss, but in the year 735 a convent was built, and the settlement became a town, which the traffic on the lake enriched and prospered.

The clear, green river Reuss runs through Lucerne, and four artistic bridges cross the stream. Of these, the "Capellbruecke" and the "Muehlenbruecke," as the Germans call them, have the greatest interest for the sightseers in the town. The roof of the "Capellbruecke," of "Chapel bridge," is adorned with many frescoes, which portray the lives of the patron saints of Lucerne; and also numerous scenes from the history of Switzerland. This curious bridge was built in 1333, and is made entirely of wood, instead of stone. The town itself, 400 years ago, was practically built of this material, and was often called in common parlance, "The wooden stork's nest."

In the current of the river a structure called the "water tower," stands near the "Chapel bridge," and guards the archives of the town. This tower was used in olden times as a safe, well guarded prison, and was originally part of the fortifications of Lucerne. A somewhat ghastly set of frescoes, called "The Dance of Death," covers the high roof of the old "Muehlenbruecke," or mill bridge, and is viewed with interest by all who go across the river at this point.

When it is possible to turn away from the glorious mountain view, which is the most valuable possession of Lucerne, there are a few objects of interest to be seen in the town itself. There is, first of all, the celebrated "Lion of Lucerne," cut from the solid rock by Thorwaldsen the great sculptor of Denmark, and dedicated to the famous guards who died in France in 1792. In years gone by the people of Lucerne were strong and warlike, and often served as guards for other and more powerful nations.

Not far from this pathetic monument the entrance to the "Glacier Garden" can be seen, where are preserved many strange relics of ages past. It was while some men were digging a wine cellar among the rocks that "these primitive documents of the world" were unearthed. They are relics of the ice or glacier period, when a coating of frozen water enveloped not only Switzerland, but all the countries of the north.

In summer, floods of water poured over this icy covering, and broke off pieces of rocks and massive bowlders, and carried them downward with a partially surrounded. The lake has four long arms, or branches, and several trips by water must be taken in order to explore the most beautiful parts. The scenery on all sides is grand and impressive, and the lake is one of the most picturesque in the world.

One of the four long branches of the lake is called the Lake of Uri, and is surrounded by rocky cliffs and lofty mountains. The town of Brunnen is beautifully situated on this smaller lake, and here the scenery grows more wild and grand, and lovely views of snowcapped mountains can be seen.

From Brunnen to Fluellen runs the celebrated Axenstrasse, but in the massive rocks, with the railway of the St. Gotthard below and parallel with it. The views from the wide Axenstrasse are varied and beautiful, and there are many openings in the tunnel like road, which look down upon the lake below, and across to the green hills and higher Alpine peaks.

Not far away, and overhung with foliage, the little Chapel of William Tell stands on the very edge of the lake, where the water is still and deep, and there is a fine view of the mountains. This chapel was erected by the people of Canton Uri, at the place where Tell once landed when escaping from the tyrant Gessler's boat. Even now, on Sunday after Ascension day, a solemn mass is held here, and villagers from far and near come in their decorated boats to celebrate the occasion.

Beyond Fluellen is the town of Altdorf, where the tyrant Gessler ruled, and where, according to tradition, the valiant Tell pierced with his arrow the apple placed upon the head of his beloved son. The spot on which the famous scene took place is marked by fountains, and a statue of William Tell now stands within the town. The birthplace of this man, made famous by the pen of Schiller, was in Burglen, now a well known summer resort. It is from Vitnau that the ascent of Mt. Rigi is usually made, although another railway starts from Arth, a small town in a fruitful valley, lying on the southern shore of the Lake of Zug. This road leads over many rocky cliffs and ledges, and through tunnels cut deeply in the solid stone. From the starting point at Vitnau, the train goes slowly on past various stations on the mountain side, and through the open windows of the carriages the hills and the beautiful lake appear. On three sides of the mountain are the lakes of Zug, Lowers and Lucerne, while on one side only is there land.

From the lesser heights around Lucerne, the views are very beautiful, even if not so full of grandeur as those seen from the summit of Rigi. The great composer, Richard Wagner, lived near Lucerne for several years and may have drawn some of his inspiration from the magnificent scenery of Switzerland.

Just after sunset the crowning touch is added to the beauty of the

HOW TO SPELL "BURNS."

The True Patronymic of the Great Scotch Poet.

In the review of Mr. Millar's "Literary History of Scotland" in the Spectator of Sept. 12 the writer says:—"The father of Burns spelt his name, not 'Burns' or 'Burness,' but 'Burnes.'"

There is, I think, ample evidence to the contrary, as appears from the following facts: When a certain Walter Campbell moved from Argylshire to Glenberrie in the Mearns (Kincardineshire) early in the seventeenth century he assumed the name of Burnhouse or Burness. From him the fourth in descent was William Burness, the father of the poet.

The family Bible records the marriage of "William Burness and Agnes Brown" in 1757, and I myself copied the name of "William Burness" from the old gravestone in Alloway Kirk-yard more than forty years ago, which has since been replaced by a new one.

The poet always signed himself "Robert Burnes" in his letters for about two years after his father's death in 1734 the last extant letter with that signature being one addressed to Mr. Aiken, April 3, 1780. After this date he appears to have adopted the spelling with which we are all familiar, "Robert Burns."—London Spectator.

JEALOUSY OF A SINGER.

How Famous Tenor Looked on an Aspiring Rival.

Brignoll, the famous singer, was intensely jealous of all other tenors, never admitting for an instant that any one of them could sing even passably well. When the handsome, talented Tom Karl burst upon the New York stage Brignoll turned up his nose.

"What do you think of Tom Karl?" Tagliapietra asked him one night.

"Oh, he is a very nice little boy," he replied, with a shrug. "I like him very much, but he has missed his vocation. I think he was born to be a policeman."

Karl was tall and of fine proportions and was singing at the time with Titons in "La Favorita."

New Idea in Advertising.

The ringing of a burglar alarm will attract attention to a particular building rather more quickly than most other incidents, as every policeman knows. Some of the burglar alarms which ring in populous thoroughfares early in the evening are for advertising purposes. "No, that ain't no burglar, sonny," said a policeman to a man who wondered at the apathy of the men in blue when the alarm bell display was working hard to attract attention. "That's what I call a peevishical. It always goes off at this time, when folks are coming out of the theaters. I'll tell that gent of a pawnbroker what I think about his advertising schemes the first time I catch him on my day turn."—New York Sun.

The Child's Reasoning.

The late Rev. Nehemiah Pierce, formerly pastor of the Twelfth Street Reformed church, Brooklyn, used to tell the following story of his grandson: A colored woman whose skin was very black came to the house one day to assist with the housework. The boy asked his mother what caused the woman's skin to be so black.

"God made it so, my dear," replied his mother.

The boy thought a moment, having in mind a cake which on being taken from the oven was found to be scorched, and then said:

"God did? Did he cook her too much?"—New York Times.

Bank Notes at a Premium.

The recent notice authorizing the issue of notes to the value of £275,000 recalls the fact, little known to the present generation, that Bank of England notes were at one time actually at a premium in the market. In the year 1825 coin was very scarce and the bank applied for and obtained permission to postpone payment of a portion of its issue of notes, only the holders of those which bore date prior to a certain period being able to demand cash for them. As a result those notes were worth and did actually sell for more than their face value.

Peculiar Spots on Earth.

The sunniest place in the earth is either the great Sahara or the desert of Arabia. The cloudiest place is in northern Russia, the southwest coast of Peru or the coast of the French Congo, Africa, all being about the same in this respect.

Little Difference in Nations.

A recent writer says: "There have been gibes from the Frenchman boastful of his small breakfast and reciprocal sarcasms from the Englishman, conscious of his moderate luncheon. Both have accused the American of gorging on account of his large baked potatoes and his dishes of hash that follow the porridge and the fruit at the hours of 8 or 9 in the morning. The truth is that, man for man, the nations eat a fairly equal quality, if variously distribute the consumption of it over twenty-four hours."

"What brings you here?"

he sneered. "You are the immaculate citizen—the man without a past! What have you to do with such an one as I?" There was a bitter sarcasm in his tone, a morbid jealousy in his look. Mr. Burritt refused to recognize the presence of either.

"But you will return with me, will you not?" he said, "you will let me introduce you to them and make their acquaintance? Take us on your way, and spend at least one night under my roof."

"You are very good, Silas," said his friend. "Ah, if they were all like you—but you forget there are others who—"

Mr. Burritt interrupted him. "I know what you are going to say and will relieve your mind at once. Of all those—and they were not many, six at the outside—who were intimately acquainted with your past history and," he hesitated a moment, "and that unhappy affair, not one is living besides myself."

"What?" cried the other man, in great excitement. "All dead?"

"All but myself," was the answer. "Thank God for that!" burst from the other's lips. "Will you swear that this is so—that they are indeed all dead who are connected with the past, except yourself?"

Mr. Burritt bent his head in reply. The strain of the interview was beginning to tell upon him, together with the hurried journey, and he felt the need of repose.

"Believe me, Jim," he said, falling back again into the old familiar style of address, "you have nothing to fear. Your secret is safe enough with me—never doubt it." He spoke kindly, even affectionately, but his fatigue was evident, and his friend could not but observe it.

"Silas," he said, "you are worn out. We will continue the subject some other time."

They turned to leave the room together. Mr. Burritt passed out first; his companion lingered behind him. As he did so, his brief assumption of cheerfulness fell from him, his face changed and darkened, and the whole expression altered.

"All dead but one," he whispered to himself—and that one— The sentence was left unfinished.

Midnight Reflections.

Mr. Burritt passed a very restless night. Perhaps his dinner had disagreed with him. More probably it was the result of the agitation and

PANAMA AND ITS COMMERCE.

The new Republic of Panama and the proposed isthmian canal bring that country much before the public. We take the following interesting article from the current issue of the Scientific American:

The commerce of Panama amounts to about three million dollars per annum, its population to about 300 thousand, and its area to 31,571 square miles, or nearly equal to that of the State of Indiana. These figures are supplied by the Department of Commerce and Labor through its Bureau of Statistics, and are the latest available data on commerce, population and area. Those of commerce are from the reports of the United States consuls at Panama and Colon, which have just been received, and not yet published; those of population are based upon the latest official estimate, which shows the population in 1881, and was based upon the census of 1871; while the figures of area are from accepted geographical authorities and are those of the area of the "Department of Panama" of the Colombian Republic. The principal ports are Panama, on the Pacific coast, and Colon, on the Atlantic side, and these ports are visited annually by more than one thousand vessels, which land over one million tons of merchandise and nearly 100,000 passengers, chiefly for transfer over the Panama Railway, 47 miles in length, connecting the Pacific port of Panama with the Atlantic port of Colon.

Colon, or Aspinwall, as it is sometimes called, has a population of about 3,000 persons. The city of Panama has a population of about 25,000. It was founded in 1519, burned in 1671, and rebuilt in 1673, while Colon is of much more recent date, having been founded in 1855.

The population, which, as already indicated, amounts in number to about 300,000, is composed of various elements—Spanish, Indian, negro and a limited number of persons from European countries and the United States, especially those engaged in commerce and transportation and the operation of the Panama railway. A considerable number of the population is composed of persons brought to the isthmus as laborers on the construction of the canal, and of their descendants. Since the abolition of slavery in Jamaica a considerable number of blacks and mulattoes have settled in the isthmus as small dealers and farmers, and in some villages on the Atlantic side they are said to be in the majority, and as a result the English language is much in use, especially on the Atlantic side. Some of the native population have retained their customs, speech and physical type, especially those in the western part of the province, and claim to be descendants of the natives found there by the Spaniards when they discovered and conquered the country.

Of the commerce of Panama, the United States supplies a larger share than any other country. From the port of Panama the exports to the United States in the fiscal year 1903 amounted to $193,342. The consul at Panama states that the imported articles come mostly from England, Germany, France, Italy, and the United States, but gives no statistics of the imports.

Panama is connected with San Francisco by a weekly mail steamer schedule operated by the Pacific Mail Steamship Company, and with Valparaiso by a weekly steamer schedule operated by the Pacific Steam Navigation Company and South American Steamship Company. Two passenger and two freight trains leave Panama daily for Colon, and Colon daily for Panama. The time for passenger trains over the 47 miles of railway is three hours.

From Panama there is one cable line north to American ports, and one to the south. The actual time consumed in communicating with the United States and receiving an answer is stated by the consul to be usually about four hours. There also are cable lines from Colon to the United States and Europe.

The money of the country is silver, the rate of exchange having averaged during the past year about 150 per cent.

School Notes.

Howard Porter is absent from school on account of sickness.

School closed Wednesday for the Thanksgiving vacation.

Bert Lorraine and Roy Gregory were visitors in the High School Friday afternoon of last week.

Harold Turner and Nellie Maddaugh have returned to school after six weeks absence on account of sickness.

Frances Malpass took charge of the Third Grade Tuesday afternoon and Wednesday, during Miss Malpass' absence in Traverse City.

Several of the teachers expect to attend the Northern Michigan Teachers' Association at Traverse City Friday and Saturday of this week.

We listened to a very interesting program at the Literary Society Wednesday evening, Nov. 18th. The question for discussion at the next meeting will be: Resolved, "That the Revolutionary War did more to benefit the United States than did the Civil War."

CIGARS GALORE.

There've been cigars made of rope, cigars made of straw, And cigars made of spinach and hay, But experience teaches that its the cigars That are made of tobacco that pay.

There've been cigars made of cabbage and puff In the newspapers chiefly, yet, well The facts of the ages will prove It's cigars made of tobacco that sell.

There've been cigars made of label and box, But the sale was confoundedly slow, Which points to the verdict of the time— It's cigars of tobacco that go.

Now boys, if you haven't already enough, There's a party shof left that is meet: By gum, if you're in for the limit, It's those "Pride of Charlevoix" cigars that repeat.

"Slaves of the Mine" comes to East Jordan after playing all the larger cities of the State, in fact, this is probably the smallest town they play this season, as East Jordan is known in theatrical circles as the biggest little town in Michigan—and to say that it is a fine production would only be voicing the reports from all the large cities where they have played this season. Grand Rapids papers spoke very highly of the play after their engagement there the last half of last week. Don't forget the date and secure seats early.—Saturday Dec. 5th.

DO YOU KNOW

That the liability to accident or sickness is constant, that you cannot get away from it, whether you are asleep or awake? That it costs you something to carry this risk (liability) and that you must pay for it?

That it costs you much less to pay a good insurance company to carry it than to carry it yourself? You may not have thought much about these propositions, but they are solid facts verified every day by the experience of men who get injured or are taken sick.

Our proposition is a simple one. You pay us $1.00 per month, and we pay you, for the time you lose in case of accident or sickness from $20.00 to $50.00 per month, according to the liability to injury in your occupation. For further information call on SUNDOWN.

A late lark twitters from the quiet skies,
And from the west,
Where the sun, his day's work ended,
Singers are in content,
There falls on the old, gray city
An influence, luminous and serene—
A luring peace.

The smoke ascends
In a rosy and golden haze. The spires Shine and are changed. In the valley Shadows rise. The lark sings on, The sun.

Closing his benediction,
Falls, and the darkening air,
Thrills with a sense of the triumphing night—
Night, with her train of stars
And her great gift—of sleep.

So be my passing!
My task accomplished and the long day
done,
My wages taken, and on my heart
Some late lark singing,
Let me be gathered to the quiet west,
The sundown splendid and serene. Death,
The sundown splendid and serene.—W. E. Henley.

THE LOST OPPORTUNITY

PART 2 By EDWIN LEEFVIE. Copyrighted 1903, by Ethelie Leefer. In Three Parts PART 2

There was a period of peace in Wall street following the last encounter between the diminutive Napoleon and Dutch Dan. But after a few months the fight resumed. Greener was desirous of "bailing" his stocks generally and his pet, Federal Telegraph Company, particularly. Just to show there was no need to hurry the "bull" or upward movement, Dan sold the stock "short" every time Greener tried to advance the price. Four times old Greener did try, and four times Dittenhoefer sold him a few thousand shares—just enough to check the advance. Up to a certain point a manipulator in stocks is successful. His manipulation may complete many intentions and complete the loss and device, but the essential fact in this manipulation is to buy more than the other fellow can or wishes to sell. Greener was willing to buy, but Dan was even more willing to sell.

Greener really was in desperate straits. He was committed to many important enterprises. To carry them out he needed cash and the banks, careful of stock market possibilities, were loath to lend him enough. Besides which, there was the desire on the part of the banks' directors to pick up one bargain should their refusal to lend Greener money force him to throw overboard the greater part of his life. Greener had despoiled innumerable widows and orphans in his railroad-working schemes. The money lenders should avenge the widows and orphans. It was a good deal. There was not a doubt of it in their minds.

Federal Telegraph, in which Greener's commitments were heaviest, had been slowly sinking. Success in other quarters of the market, Dutch Dan decided to "bail out the over-extended" Greener. He went about it calmly, just as he played roulette, selling it methodically, consistently, depressingly. And the "Very well. Sell 50,000 shares of Federal Telegraph Company for me." price wilted. Greener, unsuccessful in other quarters of the Street, decided it was time to do something to save himself. He needed only $5,000,000. At a pinch $3,000,000 might do, or, for the moment, even $2,500,000. But he must have the money at once. Delay meant danger, and danger meant Dittenhoefer, and Dittenhoefer might mean death.

Of a sudden, rising from nowhere, fathered by no one, the rumor whirled about the Street that Greener was in difficulties. Financial ghoulies ran to the banks and interviewed the presidents. They asked no questions in order to get no lies. They simply said as though they knew: "Greener is on his uppers."

The bank presidents smiled indulgently, almost pityingly. "Oh, you've just heard it, have you? We've known it for six weeks."

Back to the Stock Exchange rushed the ghoulies to sell the Greener stocks—not Federal Telegraph, which was really a good property, but his reorganized banks, whose renaissance was so recent that they had not grown into full strength. Down went prices and up went the whisper, "Dittenhoefer's got Greener at last!"

A thousand brokers rushed to find their dear friend Dan to congratulate him—Dan being a connoisseur, the hero of the hour, the future dispenser of liberal commissions. But dear Dan could not be found. He was not on the "floor" of the Exchange nor at his office.

Some who had sought Dittenhoefer before the London flight of continental money, saw one who was the personal guardian of all Greener even then Dutch Dan's little man with white teeth, blue eyes, and a square jaw, was a wonderful creature. Mr. John F. Greener.

"Mr. Dittenhoefer, I am here for you to sell me a few shares," he squeaked calmly. He had been a narrow escape.

"What do you want, Mr. Greener?" and Dittenhoefer instantly had a vision of Greener's money to the "man." And he almost parroted the words of a withering peasant.

He ordered the cabin-man to bring his breakfast on deck, and a cloth was laid upon the skylight. While he was eating Laura came out of the cabin and stood opposite to him. She was as pale as a dead body, and her beauty had that sort of droop and lusterlessness which you observe in the plumage of glorious birds when they are sick.

"Have you breakfasted?" said he. "I cannot eat," she answered. "Oh, cousin, why did you kill him?" He stared at her in silence with a dark frown, chewing his food like a ruminating bull. She was afraid of his gaze and said with a change of voice and even of manner:

"Now that I am under your protection you will tell me what you mean to do."

"Yes," he answered, "I will tell you. When the brig is clear of those villains," says he, with a sideways drop of his head, "I will steer you to your father's house. We are now lying a straight course for Kingston, Jamaica. You shall be sent ashore with a communication from me to your father, who will come on board. If he refuses to help me I shall know how to manage single-handed. Meanwhile you will be safe, but I shall expect you to thank me."

The captain's servant came from the cabin to attend to Crystal's wants. He said to him:

"Make a neat job of the corpse, and take care to double shot it; we'll bury him through the cabin window, you and me alone."

By this time the armed seamen of come up. Their scowls, their deep hoarse mutterings, their murderous glances were of no use; they needed but to look at Crystal to read death, pitiless and instant, in his face.

"Cast off, up sail, and away with ye!" roared Crystal. "If you're not astern of us in a minute I'll fire into you and sink you alongside."

Those of the men who had their senses hoisted the big lug. Grindal in the sternsheets grasped the tiller. The water slopped greasily betwixt the two craft, and the long-boat which, though deeply laden, still showed a fair height of side, glided off, blew slowly on to the brig's quarter, then astern, a number of her people shaking their clenched fists at Crystal, and howling oaths and curses at him in ecstasies of helpless wrath.

"So amen to them," said Crystal. And after casting another look at the boat, and sweeping the horizon with his vision, he bade the fellow who had read the newspaper on the captain to keep a lookout, and heavily sank down the companion-steps.

Just as he entered the cabin, Pope's servant came out of his late master's berth.

"Have you stitched him up?" says Crystal.

"He's ready for launching, sir," was the man's answer.

The fellow knowing Crystal and fearing him had worked nimbly, and there, secreted in a hammock, on the floor of the berth, with a couple of shot secured in the clews at the foot of the corpse, lay all that was mortal of the heroic Irishman, Captain Richard Pope.

White and large-eyed with horror.

When the two vessels were within gunshot, the corvette shook the wind out of her canvas, her way was arrested. A stout, conspicuous figure stood upon a quarter-deck sun; he grasped a speaking-trumpet. As the Gypsy went floating past, without the least shift of helm, the commander of the corvette, if indeed that figure commanded her, raised the trumpet to his lips; and while his proud ship's helm was again put down, causing the spaces on milky softness aloft to tremble into a hundred hurrying fingers of shadow, the trumpet spoke, in a note of thunder:

"Ho, the Gypsy, ah! Peck your main-top-sail, that I may send a boat aboard of you!"

"Twas plain he had the vessel's name put; nor was it possible to see that he could have read it upon her stern!"

"We have been reported," Crystal instantly thought, and he knew he was a fast man.

"They'll be firing into us if we don't leave to!" said the fellow who had commandeered.

Crystal stood irresolute, with his hand upon the companion-step. At this instant, a shot was fired by the corvette.

"What shall we do, sir?" roared the man.

Then, finding that Crystal had disappeared, they sprang to the main-top-sail brace, and were in the act of rounding in upon it hand over hand, when a second heavy shot, followed by a third, struck the main-top-sail, crash! a foot above the main-masthead. Instantly, the whole fabric of yards and canvas, and masts, and stunsails, beams, fluctuating on high as though gazed at through the transparency of running water, fell aft in a roar as though a gale of wind came sweeping from the bows. The huge wreck missed the wheel, but killed the fellow who was standing at it. It smothered the quarter-deck in a vast heap of canvas and spars. A long space of bulwarks was crushed flat.

"Back your fore-top-sail!" was roared through the trumpet.

This was promptly done by the wretched and terrified remnant of the crew of the pirate, and in a few minutes a boatful of armed seamen, in charge of a lieutenant, arrived alongside. It was of course known that the Gypsy was the pirate brig that was wanted; no need to ask any questions. Her crew were at once ordered over the side, and sent on board the Saxon. Meanwhile, a gang of naval seamen cleared the quarter-deck so as to give access to the cabin, and the lieutenant and two or three seamen descended the steps. They found a beautiful young woman, white and large-eyed with horror, standing at the table. When the men entered, she pointed dumbly to the cabin occupied by Crystal, and they saw a man lying on the deck, dead, with a pistol beside him, and a bullet wound in his brow.

He had kept his word, and the annals of the Crystals were not to be disgraced by the imputation of the gibbet.

The girl told her story to the lieutenant, who sent her on board the corvette. And within two hours of the Saxon falling in with the Gypsy, both vessels, the brig with nothing left but trysail and mainsail, were heading north and east on a course for the English Channel. The End.

Trusty and the Telephone.

Trusty is a dog. His mistress is a professional nurse and lives with her mother. They have a telephone. When the nurse is detained by her business away from home over night, she telephones to her mother to have the father's answer. One night, after talking with her mother over the wire, she asked about Trusty. The dog was by the side of the mother. The daughter telephoned back to have the receiver placed at Trusty's ear. This was done, and the mistress of the dog talked to him. That he recognized her voice was evident, for he barked and appeared overjoyed. After the receiver was hung up, Trusty jumped toward it, and acted as if he wanted to take it down. During the night he lay near the telephone, and frequently looked up at the receiver and whined. In the morning he sat before it and howled until his mistress was called up. She commanded him to leap quiet, and not call until she did so again. —Our Four-footed Friends.

Turned to Rubber.

"Will you don't believe all the stories told in the Bible, do you?" "Why, sure, Sallie. Why not?" "Do you believe that story about Lot's wife looking back and being turned into a pillar of salt?" "There is nothing very peculiar about that, Sallie, in the light of modern events. Just as strange things happen nowadays. Why, as we were going up street last evening I saw a woman turn to rubber!" —Roller Monthly.

HAPPY DAYS.

When Friends Say "How Well You Look."

What happy days are those when all our friends say, "How well you look." We can bring those days by a little care in the selection of food just as this young man did.

"I had suffered from dyspepsia for three years and last summer was so bad I was unable to attend school," he says. "I was very thin and my appetite all decayed. I was dizzy and my food always used to ferment instead of digesting. Crossness, unhealthiness and nervousness were very prominent symptoms."

"Late in the summer I went to visit a sister and there I saw and used Grape-Nuts. I had heard of this famous food before, but never was interested enough to try it, for I never knew how really good it was. But when I came home we used Grape-Nuts in our household all the time and I soon began to note changes in my health. I improved steadily and am now strong and well in every way and am back at school able to get my lessons with ease and pleasure and can remember them too, for the improvement in my mental power is very noticeable and I get good marks in my studies which always seemed difficult before."

"I have no more of the bad symptoms given above but feel fine and strong and happy, and it is mighty pleasant to hear my friends say: 'How well you look.'" Name given by Postum Co., Battle Creek, Mich. Look in each package for a copy of the famous little book, "The Road to Wellville."

Mrs. L. C. Glover, Vice Pres. Milwaukee, Wis., Business Woman's Association, is another one of the million women who have been restored to health by using Lydia E. Pinkham's Vegetable Compound.

"DEAR MRS. PINKHAM: I was married for several years and no children blessed my home. The doctor said I had a complication of female troubles and I could not have any children unless I could be cured. He tried to cure me, but after experimenting for several months, my husband became disgusted, and one night when we noticed a testimonial of a woman who had been cured of similar trouble through the use of Lydia E. Pinkham's Vegetable Compound, he went out and bought a bottle for me. I used your medicine for three and one-half months, improving steadily in health, and in twenty-two months a child came. I cannot fully express the joy and thankfulness that is in my heart. Our home is a different place now, as we have something to live for, and all the credit is due to Lydia E. Pinkham's Vegetable Compound. Yours very sincerely, Mrs. L. C. Glover, 614 Grove St., Milwaukee, Wis., Vice President, Milwaukee Business Woman's Ass'n."

Women should not fail to profit by the experience of these two women. Just as surely as they were cured of the troubles enumerated in their letters, just as certainly will Lydia E. Pinkham's Vegetable Compound cure others who suffer from womb troubles, inflammation of the ovaries, kidney troubles, nervous excitability, and nervous prostration. Remember that it is Lydia E. Pinkham's Vegetable Compound that is curing women, and don't allow any druggist to sell you anything else in its place.

An Irishman Tells of a Wonderful Cure:

"DEAR MRS. PINKHAM: It is a pleasure for me to write and tell what your wonderful medicine has done for me. I was sick for three years with change of life, and my physician thought a cancerous condition of the womb. During these three years I suffered untold agony."

"I cannot find words in which to express my bad feelings. I did not expect to ever see another well day. I read some of the testimonials recommending your medicine and decided to write to you and give your treatment a trial."

"Before I had taken half a bottle of Lydia E. Pinkham's Vegetable Compound, I began to sleep. I have taken now six bottles and am so well I can do all kinds of work."—Mrs. LIZZIE HINKLE, Salem, Ind.

If there is anything in your case about which you would like special advice, write freely to Mrs. Pinkham. She can surely help you, for no person in America can speak from a wider experience in treating female ills. Address is Lynn, Mass.; her advice is free and always helpful.

FOR THE BIG FOLKS WHO LIKE LITTLE FOLKS.
The Value of a Mother.
A Chicago man told me about a little event in his boyhood which seems to me to be a great event in his life.
One day he was playing around the bench of a carpenter and accidentally broke the workman's rule.
Not being discovered he quietly showed the rule to an unnoticed position and left the place.
But later he made a confidant of his mother and told her about it. She was able to show him his error and to get him to purchase a new rule for the man.
The boy had a mother and she had his confidence and the man had a new rule—nothing unusual in this.
Yet the man nearly a half century later thought it worth while to tell about it and I think it worthy of even more space than I am giving it.
It is suitable for all of this page and so big type because it is a starting point. The necessary basics are so few you can count them on your fingers.
When a vital start is made in real wisdom it is more important every year we look back on it. We are more and more grateful to the parents and teachers who did some very little thing which created some great condition.
When a boy my parents encouraged me in memorizing and speaking, at a Sunday school entertainment, Montgomery's little hymn, "Sow in the Earth Thy Seed." Years later when perplexed and among strangers that you jumped into my head at the right time to give me just the encouragement I needed to go on and believe.
That entertainment has made me ever thankful to that church and my teacher, the superintendent and my parents. There is a sunrise glory around the whole event.
Children know more than they hear and see, and they feel more than they know. The wisdom of parents speaking well of the teacher is self-evident yet easily neglected. A wise teacher can see the home through the manners of the child—even read the home opinion of the teacher in the treatment received from the scholar. Have you wondered if well-taught parents forget that they were taught and trained at great effort and let their children grow up in a wild state? I have noticed that some untrained parents pay special attention to the education of their children.
What part of your early life has proven most useful later on?
What one thing have you read or heard which has helped you take better care of children?
What one useful hint do you know about children's clothing?
What is the subject on which you would like to see useful information gathered?
What is the best way to keep children quiet in church?
How can a mother learn the best diet for a peculiar child?
What have you learned in expensive experience which you think you should have learned by observation?
How can a little girl be taught to care for her younger brother?
AN OLD MAN IN A NEW BODY.
A few weeks ago I saw two men talking to each other in the entrance of a big Chicago office building. One was an old man in an old body and the other was an old man in a new body.
Knowing both men, but not seeing much of them for a year, I was made to stop and wonder at the new body.
A few days ago I had a train talk with a third man, who happened to tell me when the man in the new body got his body.
For a year this man with a new body has been playing golf in a park near his home, before going to his office. He kept at it as late in the fall as the weather would permit, and he started as early in the spring as possible.
Nearly all parts of the body are renewed every few years and some parts are renewed every minute. Daily exercises which recrete better than 100 are not limited to golf. You can study out one for yourself.
Report Where or What.
If you have a piece of printed information which you wish to keep and which is too long to copy, but which you think I should have for my collection, on a postal please tell me what it is and where I can get it if possible.
During Momentary Goodness.
Have you ever decided on inaugurating better methods during a momentary visit and on your next visit to the same place wonder to yourself how you could so easily drift back into the old ways of doing and thinking?

ABOUT BABIES AND CHILDREN

Be Kind Be Kind Be King Be Kind

How to abandon foolish theories and continue growing is the question. Common advice is about as useful as uncracked coconuts are digestible.

One mother confesses that the theories which were successful with her first three children were entirely annihilated by the fourth.

A million babies daily cry for a drink of cool boiled water.

Smile on the baby just out of a nap and show a happy face when picking it up.

Good rules may have so many exceptions that they become dangerous if common use.

One mother asked another, who had a one-year-old baby, what she had been doing the last year. Her reply was that she had been giving her theories a respectful burial.

The baby should receive discriminating attention. Foolish and unnecessary worry that endangers the health of the parent, and dangerous carelessness which harms the baby, are the extremes to keep away from.

A father of a large family reported that they used to enjoy children at their house. At one time they had a two-year-old, a pair of one-year-old twins and a pair of one-month-old twins. The neighbors had to help a little occasionally on sewing, but the children grew up to marry well and win independence. They were bright and smart—they had to be to get out of the way of each other.
Recently one case has been placed on record where a baby was smothered in bed while sleeping between its parents.
At an afternoon reception, while several ladies were exchanging baby wisdom, these reports were given: "I have just heard from our friends with the new daughter, their first child. They are so afraid that something will be wrong with the baby that if she sleeps they think she is dying, and they sit up and watch her, and if she awakes and cries they are sure she is dangerously sick. They have a hard time dressing her. The father was sure the nurse put the little vest on over its feet, but the mother succeeded in getting it on over its head."
A baby is an appetite framed by nature.
Almost all articles on babies take it for granted that the children are to be brought up on bottles, and yet there are five babies in one neighborhood taking nature's solution. It may be that babies like these five do not need any editorial assistance.
Charlie's wife writes us this: "The Lord doesn't send any babies to this home. I guess he thinks I don't know much about taking care of them. But I do love the little folk."
Can you tell by a baby's cry whether it is a pin, pain or spunk?
Baby's first attempts to use his hands are as humorous as a young man's first attempt to use his heart.
What about adopting children? When should the childless prefer responsibility and doing to only giving charity money? Are there principles to go by?
Be just as careful of the boys as you are of the girls. It may be only carelessness which makes it harder to raise a baby boy than it is to raise a baby girl.
Why is it easier to tell your friends all about your baby than to listen to their reports of theirs?
Some Questions.
What one thing have you read, heard, seen or thought, on any subject, which you can put your finger on and say "that has been useful to me."
How have you been successful in helping yourself or another person to self-help?
Will you watch out and send a printed clipping having information likely to be useful to those who are trying to help men regain their feet and grip?
One thought written means another thought born, and you know something worth recording for the use of others. Will you please think, write and send a suggestion you hope may help another in some way during the twenty-four hours, seven days or fifty-two weeks?

Yet the man nearly a half century later thought it worth while to tell about it and I think it worthy of even more space than I am giving it.
It is suitable for all of this page and so big type because it is a starting point. The necessary basics are so few you can count them on your fingers.
When a vital start is made in real wisdom it is more important every year we look back on it. We are more and more grateful to the parents and teachers who did some very little thing which created some great condition.
When a boy my parents encouraged me in memorizing and speaking, at a Sunday school entertainment, Montgomery's little hymn, "Sow in the Earth Thy Seed." Years later when perplexed and among strangers that you jumped into my head at the right time to give me just the encouragement I needed to go on and believe.
That entertainment has made me ever thankful to that church and my teacher, the superintendent and my parents. There is a sunrise glory around the whole event.
Children know more than they hear and see, and they feel more than they know. The wisdom of parents speaking well of the teacher is self-evident yet easily neglected. A wise teacher can see the home through the manners of the child—even read the home opinion of the teacher in the treatment received from the scholar. Have you wondered if well-taught parents forget that they were taught and trained at great effort and let their children grow up in a wild state? I have noticed that some untrained parents pay special attention to the education of their children.
What part of your early life has proven most useful later on?
What one thing have you read or heard which has helped you take better care of children?
What one useful hint do you know about children's clothing?
What is the subject on which you would like to see useful information gathered?
What is the best way to keep children quiet in church?
How can a mother learn the best diet for a peculiar child?
What have you learned in expensive experience which you think you should have learned by observation?
How can a little girl be taught to care for her younger brother?
AN OLD MAN IN A NEW BODY.
A few weeks ago I saw two men talking to each other in the entrance of a big Chicago office building. One was an old man in an old body and the other was an old man in a new body.
Knowing both men, but not seeing much of them for a year, I was made to stop and wonder at the new body.
A few days ago I had a train talk with a third man, who happened to tell me when the man in the new body got his body.
For a year this man with a new body has been playing golf in a park near his home, before going to his office. He kept at it as late in the fall as the weather would permit, and he started as early in the spring as possible.
Nearly all parts of the body are renewed every few years and some parts are renewed every minute. Daily exercises which recrete better than 100 are not limited to golf. You can study out one for yourself.
Report Where or What.
If you have a piece of printed information which you wish to keep and which is too long to copy, but which you think I should have for my collection, on a postal please tell me what it is and where I can get it if possible.
During Momentary Goodness.
Have you ever decided on inaugurating better methods during a momentary visit and on your next visit to the same place wonder to yourself how you could so easily drift back into the old ways of doing and thinking?

MARSHALL FIELD AND CO'S WAREHOUSE MANAGER

Cured of Catarrh of Kidneys by Pe-ru-na.

HON. JOHN T. SHEAHAN, OF CHICAGO.

Hon. John T. Sheahan, who has been for seventeen years manager of Marshall Field & Co's wholesale warehouse, and is corporal 2d Regiment Infantry, I. N. G., writes the following letter from 3753 Indiana Avenue, Flat Six, Chicago, Ill.

Peruna Medicine Co., Columbus, Ohio.
Gentlemen—Last summer I caught a cold which seemed to settle in my kidneys and affected them badly. I tried a couple of kidney remedies largely advertised, but they did not help me any. One of my foremen told me of the great help he had received in using Peruna in a similar case, and I at once procured some.
"It was indeed a blessing to me, as I am on my feet a large part of the day, and trouble such as I had affected me seriously, but four bottles of Peruna cured me entirely and I would not be without it for three months salary."—JOHN T. SHEAHAN.

Mr. Jacob Fleig writes from 44 Sumner Avenue, Brooklyn, N. Y.:
"I am now a new man at the age of seventy-five years, thanks to your wonderful remedy Peruna."—Jacob Fleig.

Catarrhal inflammation of the mucous lining of the kidneys, a so-called "Bright's disease," may be either acute or chronic. The acute form produces symptoms of such prominence that the serious nature of the disease is at once suspected, but the chronic variety may come on so gradually and insidiously that its presence is not suspected until after it has fastened itself thoroughly upon its victim.
At the appearance of the first symptom Peruna should be taken. This remedy softens at once at the very root of the disease.

snooting crocodiles by flashlight.
In the West Indies crocodiles are often shot at night. The hunter, with a lantern, sits in a canoe in one of the creeks which the crocodiles infest. The crocodiles are attracted by the light and swim toward the canoe. Their eyes shine out in the darkness and form good targets for the hunter's bullets. Sometimes a dozen crocodiles are shot in a night.

Between London and Brussels.
The telephone line between London and Brussels is 244 miles long. The overhead portion on the English side is ninety-seven miles long and that on the Belgian side is ninety-three miles long. The submarine cable runs from St. Margaret's Bay to La Panne, and has a total length of fifty-four miles; it is, therefore, the longest submarine telephone cable in operation.

SLAIN FOR MISTREATING HORSE.
Effort to Protect a Sick Brute Ends in Killing Man.
Denver, Colo., Nov. 3.—While resisting the efforts of Officer Oliver Tufts of the Colorado-Humane society to compel him to stop working a sick and abused horse, Charles Heinze, a teamster employed by a packing company, was shot and killed. The officer who did the shooting claims that Heinze drew a revolver first and wounded him in the right arm, when the officer drew his pistol with his left hand and fired in self-defense. The shooting was done in the outskirts of the city beyond Argo, a suburb of Denver. Tufts has been arrested.

BEET SUGAR.
It Was Born of France's Isolation
During the Napoleonic Wars.

Sugar as an article of food was not known to the ancients. Mankind has always exhibited the greatest fondness for sweets, and from the earliest times
the demand was supplied by honey.

The royal psalmist sets up honey and the honeycomb as the highest standard of material sweetness. A land flowing with milk and honey was the picture drawn by the most ancient poets to describe an earthly paradise. Romans of the last days of the republic, and subsequently of the time of the empire, who were at the same time the most luxurious epicures and the grossest feeders the world ever knew and spared neither money nor exertion to secure every delicacy possible for their tables, had no knowledge of sugar, but robbed the bees to obtain sweets for their famous honey cakes and other confectionery.

Sugar was made in India and Arabia in the earliest times, but it was not brought into Europe until the invasions of the Mohammedans into the countries around the Mediterranean sea, in the seventeenth century. The Moors cultivated the cane in the countries of north Africa, and they introduced it into Spain. The Spaniards, about 1510, planted sugar canes in their West Indian possessions, whence it spread through Spanish America and into the French province of Louisiana.

The cane was the original source of sugar, and so remained up to the time of the Napoleonic wars in Europe. The ports of France were so closely blockaded by the British fleets that it was impossible to secure sugar from any tropical countries, and Napoleon assembled the chemists in France and commissioned them to discover some means of making sugar out of material found in the country, at the same time offering a large reward. This proceeding resulted in the production of sugar from the beet.—New Orleans Picayune.

DAVID GARRICK.
The Great Actor's Art and His Wife's Ruined Feelings.

Mrs. Garrick's admiration of her husband's dramatic talents was intense, and on his great nights she would hang over her box, next the stage, in rapturous delight. The one flaw in her idol, she claimed, was a taste for low life, for which she blamed him greatly, insisting that he loved better to play Scrub to a low lived audience than one of his superior characters before an audience of taste.

On one particular occasion she was in her box in the theater when Garrick's impersonation of Richard III.
was applauded to the echo. In that day a farce followed the tragedy of the evening, and as Mrs. Garrick rose to leave before it her husband came to the box to say he had some business in the greenroom which would detain him, so most unwillingly the lady was obliged to acquiesce and remain through the closing entertainment.
This proved to be a comical series of blundering adventures which had befallen a countryman who had left his farm to see London and on his return gave his neighbors an account of the wonders he had met.

This characterization was received with such peals of applause that Mrs.
Garrick, ever zealous of her husband's fame, began to think it rivalled those lately lavished on Richard III. Her feelings were nearly worked up to fever heat when she was attracted by the frantic efforts of her little spaniel dog to overleap the balcony that separated him from the stage, when she immediately became aware of the truth that the actor was Garrick and exclaimed, "Strange that a dog should know his master when the woman who loved him best in the world could not perceive his disguise."

Wealth in Lapland.
What the buffalo was to the Indian the reindeer is to the Lapps. At the present day the wealth of a Lapp is calculated in reindeer. Thus, when the people speak of a man's estate they say, "He is worth so many deer."
Those who have only fifty or sixty head are poor servants, and their deer are put with those of their "betters."
To have any kind of social standing in Lapland one should possess at least 500 of these animals. A Lapp is considered well off when he is the happy owner of not less than 1,000 reindeer.

SHORT STORIES.

Within eight months we have received enough emigrants from Europe to repopulate Ireland.

A new word has been coined for application to a slight testing optician. He is to be called an "optologist."

A large moose was seen recently strolling around leisurely in the neighborhood of the school buildings at Presque Isle, Me.

In Omaha the other day a girl combing her hair gave her head a toss and dislocated her neck. It required the combined strength of four men to pull the vertebrae into place again.

On the army this year we shall spend $130,000,000, on the navy $85,000,000.
The civil establishment will cost $120, 000,000. To the Indians we shall give $13,000,000. The interest on the public debt will be $27,000,000.

It is proposed to buy the field on which Alexander Hamilton was slain in his duel with Aaron Burr and convert it into a public park. A monument already stands on the spot, but it is neglected and unvisited.

The death rate in Cuba before the war averaged about forty-two to a thousand, taking a period of several years. It is now but twenty-one. This means a decreased loss of time from illness as well as saving of life.

Dragging Pains

2825 Keeley St.,
Chicago, Ill., Oct. 4, 1902.

I suffered with falling and congestion of the womb, with severe pains through the groins. I suffered terribly at the time of menstruation, had blinding headaches and rushing of blood to the brain.
What to try I knew not, for it seemed that I had tried all and failed, but I had never tried Wine of Cardui, that blessed remedy for sick-women. I found it pleasant to take and soon knew that I had the right medicine. Now blood seemed to course through my veins and after using eleven bottles I was a well woman.

Mrs. Bush is now in perfect health because she took Wine of Cardui for menstrual disorders, bearing down pains and blinding headaches when all other remedies failed to bring her relief. Any sufferer may secure health by tak-

The first bottle convinces the patient she is on the road to health.
