Track Team Meet

At East Jordan, Friday, May Twentieth

Schools From All Around Us Are Planning to Come and Participate.

The East Jordan High School Athletic Association have sent out invitations to all towns in this vicinity requesting the schools to send a track team to a Field Day meet, May 20th, same to be held on the Fair Grounds at this place. Among the towns invited are Charlevoix, Traverse City, Bellaire, Gaylord, Manelona, Central Lake and Kalkaska.

At this meet an effort will be made to organize the North Traverse Interscholastic Athletic Association. The boys here are working hard on the affair and it promises to be one of the best ever held.

The meet will be under interscholastic rules and the eligibility of the competitors will be determined by the rules adopted by the High School section of the Michigan State Teachers' Association. Gold medals will be given for first places and ribbons for seconds. First places will count 5 points; second 3 and third 1. A cup will be presented to the winning team. This is 13 inches high, burnished, gold lined, ebony handles and base, 5 1/2 inch burnished gold name plate, cost $22.

The events are: 100 yard dash, 200 yard dash, 440 yard run, 880 yard run, 1 mile run, 2 mile run, 12 pound hammer throw, 12 pound shot put, high jump, broad jump, pole vault, discus throw, 120 yard hurdle (3 1/2 feet high), 220 yard hurdle (2 1/2 feet high), half mile relay (2 men 1/2 mile each), foot ball punt.

State Land Commissioner

(From Reed City Clarion)

Major E. B. Nugent, a candidate for State Land Commissioner from Bay county and the 10th district, is no doubt one of the best qualified and as much entitled to the place, as any other candidate liable to come before the State Convention this fall. He is a full blooded "Michigan boy," being born at Rochester, Oakland Co., about sixty years ago. He went with his father to Saginaw county, in 1852, making Nugent one of the oldest settlers in the Saginaw Valley. He has been identified with the lumbering business for over fifty years, having been employed by such firms as Wm. Peters, N. B. Bradley and the Alger, Smith & Co., and many other of the most prominent lumbermen doing business in the state, which naturally has made him more or less familiar with every acre of public land in the state. He is an old veteran of more than ordinary merit and distinction having enlisted in 1861 as a private in the 3d Mich. Cavalry at the age of 18. He was promoted to a major and commanded the regiment at the age of 21, and that, too without family influence or political push behind him, which goes to show that whatever he may be entrusted to do, will be well done. In politics he has always been a consistent Republican, always ready to do his best, both with time and money, his purse being always open to push along the good cause, and the best of all to be said of him is, he has never been an office seeker, this being the first time he has asked anything at hands of the party which owes him so much. The party will honor itself by placing such a man on its ticket.

Coulter Appointed.

A. B. Dougherty of Elk Rapids has been asked to resign his position as deputy revenue collector and A. L. Coulter of Charlevoix has been appointed to succeed him. Mr. Coulter is widely known throughout the state as a state deputy game and fish warden and is especially well and favorably known in this locality.

Repub. State Convention

The Republican State Convention will meet in Grand Rapids Wednesday, May 18th, to elect four delegates-at-large to the National Convention at Chicago June 21, a Chairman of the State Central Committee and two Members from each Congressional District, also for nominating 14 Electors for President and Vice President. Charlevoix is entitled to 6 Delegates. The total vote of the Convention is 1,004.

New Paper at Wolverine.

R. L. Lorraine, for several years publisher of the Charlevoix County Herald, has re-embarked in newspaper work, this time starting a publication at Wolverine. He has purchased a plant and moved same to that place. Beginning next Friday the Wolverine Express will supply a long felt want in that community, furnishing the people there with a good country weekly.

Mr. Lorraine has been in the printing business for upwards of sixteen years and knows it from A to Z. He will give the citizens of Wolverine and vicinity such a paper and job office as will meet the approval of all. A host of friends here, of whom The Herald desires to be numbered, wishes Editor Lorraine success in his new enterprise.

The plant purchased was that of the Michigan Vidette, a newspaper published in the interest of the Settlers' Home at Grand Rapids, which failed and was taken to Borne City.

New Flying Machine.

Papers throughout the state are devoting considerable space to the new flying machine invented by W. C. Freeman of Kalkaska. Mr. Freeman is quite well known here, being the father of Mrs. S. E. Landrum. The Kalkaskian of recent date has the following concerning the invention:

One of the bestest men in Kalkaska is W. C. Freeman who is working hard to complete the flying machine, of which he is the inventor. As this machine has been entered for the World's Fair exhibit, the time for its completion is limited. At the present rate of progress the public are assured that it will be on hand at the specified time.

The inventor has pondered long upon the problem of air navigation. The present machine is the result of nearly fifty years of thoughtful investigation. A mechanic by natural gifts, supplemented by close application to practice and theory, Mr. Freeman is well-qualified to solve the difficult problem he has attempted.

While it would be premature to describe fully the invention, the owner confidently expresses himself that it will be a success, and hopes to capture the prize offered by the promoters of the World's Fair, a prize by the way, larger than others offered for the products of skill and ingenuity. It is to be hoped that our respected townsman may have the honor to carry home the reward. It would not only make famous an industrious man but would give the little town among the Jack Pines a world wide name.

In attempting to solve the problem of navigation in the air, Mr. Freeman has discarded the balloon idea and seeks in aviation the success of his venture. To do this the inventor of the Kalkaska machine has followed closely the flight of the birds as his guiding principle. The chief difficulties of weight and continuous motive power have been overcome by unique methods of construction and machinery entirely new. Along these lines it is expected that the new machine will take precedence of others.

The flying machine is but yet in the experimental stage of construction. Some of the difficulties which have been thought unsurmountable are now disappearing under the progress of scientific research.

Many minds are constantly at work upon the problem and it would not be surprising that some one should succeed in this method of transportation. Much information has been gathered toward one of the greatest problems facing the mechanic and scientist. As remarked by Pettigrew, "The land and the water have been successfully subjugated. The realms of the air are alone unvanquished. These, however, are so vast and so important as a highway for the nations that science and civilization equally demand their occupation. It is impossible to overestimate the boon which would occur to mankind, from such a creation. If this day should ever come it would not be too much to affirm that it will inaugurate a new era in the history of man, and that, great as the destiny of our race has been hitherto, it will be quite outlustered by the grandeur and magnitude of coming events."

A THOUSAND DOLLARS THROWN AWAY.

Mr. W. W. Baker of Plainview, Neb., writes: "My wife had long trouble for over fifteen years. We tried a number of doctors and spent over a thousand dollars without any relief. She was very low and I lost all hope, when a friend suggested trying Foley's Honey and Tar, which I did; and thanks be to this great remedy, it saved her life. She is stronger and enjoys better health than she has ever known in ten years. We shall never without Foley's Honey and Tar and would ask those afflicted to try it." Sold by L. C. Madison.

Dainty Decoration for Dinner Table. In table setting there is always something new. At a recent dinner the hostess surprised her guests by decorating the center of her table with a cloth of pure gold thread, solidly worked, the border a lace design of white silk and fine gold mesh in diamond-shape stitches. The green for the table was small ferns, set in an oval dish of dark blue china, with figures in relief representing peasants in holiday costume. At each corner of this gold center was a candlestick in dull silver, of colonial design, furnished with a shade of iridescent glass, which graduated from tones of light yellow to dark orange, and then to red.

Eton Collars for Spring. The Eton collar is noticed on some spring suits. It is a welcome change from the collarless effects of former seasons. It gives a girlish, not to say boyish, look to the wearer. It has already been seen on the English tennis suits of white duck and sea green linen in Florida courts, and now it comes along as a top dressing of the nolo or jacket-shaped bodies of spring suits.

It is of linen usually, but is made more becoming and softly feminine by a frilling of soft Valenciennes lace sewed all the way around. The open space between the collar points is thus filled in and finished with a bow.

Menu Card Ideas. Nothing is prettier for a dainty luncheon than the ribbon menu. This consists of a nine-inch length of broad satin ribbon, with a floral emblem and the word "Menu" painted on it.

Another idea is the swan menu, which is cut out of deckled cardboard. The tail feathers are first cut, and the word "Menu" printed at the top with the bill of a swan underneath. The head and wings of the bird are then cut separately and a piece of baby ribbon in the shape of a loop attached to the head and over the tail feathers to keep the different parts of the anatomy together.

Eton Jacket. Eton jackets are to be noted among the best fashionable coats and are jaunty, becoming and generally attractive. This one includes the tiny vest effect that marks the latest designs with full sleeves and the drop shoulders that give the broad line of fashion. As shown it is made of wood brown broadcloth with trimming of brown and white braid, the vest being white cloth braided with brown and tan, but all suiting materials are appropriate and the vest can be one of many things. Oriental embroidery is much liked, brocades and lace are sea and wide brand is used.

The jacket is made with fronts and back and is fitted by means of single darts, shoulder and under-arm seams. The little vest can be applied over the edge and finished with the braid, or the jacket can be cut away and the edge of the vest arranged under it, then attached to position. The sleeves are gathered and are joined to the drop shoulders, the seams being concealed by the braid and are finished at the wrists with braid cuffs.

The quantity of material required for the medium size is 4 yards 21 inches wide, 3 yards 27 inches wide or 2 yards 44 inches wide with 3/4 yards of vesting, 5 yards of braid and 3 yards of lace to trim as illustrated.

The pattern 4606 is cut in sizes for a 32, 34, 36, 38 and 40 inch bust measure.

Potato Salad. Eight cold boiled potatoes, one bunch of celery, two white onions, one head of lettuce. Slice the potatoes, cut the celery fine and slice the onions very thin; take off the green leaves of the lettuce, wash carefully and drain and line your salad bowl with them; break up the center of the lettuce and mix with the salad. When ready to serve mix the mayonnaise through before putting in your salad bowl. Garnish with olives and hard boiled eggs.

Small Mutton Pie. Pour enough boiling water upon half a pound of clarified beef dripping or upon the same quantity of cleaned and crumbled suet to melt it to the consistency of lard.

Make a hollow in two pounds of sifted flour to which you have added a little salt, and pour in the melted dripping, adding more water if required. Work with the hand until it is a smooth paste, and then roll out. Use small tins with the paste, put in the meat, cut small and parboiled; place a "lid" of paste on the top, press the sides and top together, cut a small hole in the top and bake in a quick oven.

Seven Gored Skirt. Full skirts are rapidly becoming general and some fresh variations are shown each week. This one is eminently graceful and suits the season's fabrics admirably well. As shown it is made of novelty sage green voile with trimming of coru lace, but there are numberless other materials that suit it equally well. The combined plaits and tucks are notably smart but when liked shirrings can be substituted for the latter. In either case the lines are good and the skirt falls in becoming folds below the stichings which confine the fullness over the hips.

The skirt is cut in seven gores, there being a box plait at the back edge of each with tucks between that are stitched with corticelli silk. The center back meet and beneath them the invisible closing is made.

The quantity of material required for medium size is 9 3/4 yards 21 inches wide, 9 3/4 yards 27 inches wide or 5 1/2 yards 44 inches wide with 5 1/2 yards of lace applique.

The pattern 4637 is cut in sizes for a 22, 24, 26, 28 and 30 inch waist measure.

A French Salad. Take one cup of lima beans, one cup of celery, cut in small pieces; one cup of peas, one cup of brussels sprouts, one-half of a cauliflower, three medium-sized potatoes, two small carrots, and one chopped onion. Boil all these separately. When cold, mix in a salad bowl and season with salt and pepper. Break into small pieces the center of one head of lettuce and mix with the salad. Let all stand until ready to serve, then mix through it a mayonnaise sauce.

The Coat-Scuttle Bonnet. The quaintest of all chapeaux for little people is a coat-scuttle bonnet in white satin trimmed with roses and other white flowers. The sides of this bonnet are sometimes folded over after the manner of Breton caps. For the little fancy coat and wrap, white cloth is the general favorite. There are many different designs for these garments, but the Gretchen shape, which is simplicity itself, seems to be the most popular.

One Style of Sailor Hat. A hat on the Bretonne sailor order that is selling well in London has the brim made of green yedda and the crown of a green and white plaid silk braid, pleated and standing on edge. A band of emerald green velvet ribbon around the crown is ornamented at each side with steel buckles. These buckles hold pairs of dainty small wings, shaded from green to white.

The Summer Sleeve. Sleeves are still full and voluminous below the elbow, but in the summer dresses they will be half length, and some will fall in fan pleats from the elbow.

New Fabric for Spring. A new voile, something of a cross between cloth and crepe de chine, is among the latest fabrics for spring costumes.

SCYTHE AS CHURCH ORNAMENT

Placed There to Commemorate Peasants' Defense of Their Faith. At the first sight the scythe is a strange ornament for a church, but there is nothing incongruous in these curious agricultural implements as seen in the parish church of St. Mary's, at Horncastle, in Lincolnshire. Thirteen of these blades are nailed above the door in the north chapel. At one time the blades numbered forty or fifty, but owing to rust and decay many of them have been lost. Each of the scythes is about a yard in length.

The general belief is that these blades were placed in the church in commemoration of the zeal of peasants who wielded them in defense of their faith in the rebellion known as "The Pilgrimage of Grace," which had its rise at Louth in 1536.

When the people saw the ruins of their churches and abbey, they rose in revolt, and arming themselves with the instruments of husbandry, such as scythes, they went forth to encounter the enemy.

They were beaten and dispersed, but in the eyes of their countrymen they were heroes, and the rude implements with which they fought were deemed worthy of an abiding place in the old church, where the peasants had worshipped.—Christian Age.

Hauled by a Thin Cable. Washington state will send the famous "Gray's Harbor Toothpick" to the World's fair at St. Louis. This is a log 271 feet long and almost twelve feet in diameter at the base. But the log itself, interesting as it is, is not nearly as interesting as the story of how it was brought out of the woods for shipment. This was done by means of steel ropes only three-fourths of an inch in diameter, with which the tree was dragged three miles through the forest. These ropes when three-fourths of an inch in diameter have a breakage strength of 100,000 pounds.

The Birth of a Geysir. Near the famous and erratic geyser of Waimangu, in New Zealand—so whimsical in its spoutings and times of quiet that the oldest Maori in the region can give the visitor no schedule of these performances—there has lately been born a new geyser. A few hours before the birth a passer-by had stopped to look at a placid little lagoon ringed about with gentle green slopes. Then dwellers in the region were notified of something doing by a salvo of earthquakes, more than thirty shocks in half as many minutes. The next man who walked that way found, instead of the placid green ringed lagoon, a boiling, bubbling caldron over which hovered and soared and rolled into fantastic shapes a dense cloud of steam. The older and more famous geyser looks placid enough, too, sometimes, then it wears a feathery foamy cap, again it belches out water and stones and mud to immense heights and with immense noise.

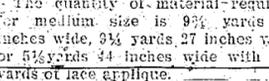

Neither of Them Knew. Lord Kelvin was once being shown over some big electric works by the foreman engineer, who was unaware of the identity of his visitor. The engineer was a capable man, and enthusiastic about his work, and he gave long lectures about everything to Lord Kelvin, who listened with great interest. "Once or twice the senior partner, who was of the party, tried to tell the foreman to whom he was talking, but Lord Kelvin would not have it and remained an attentive listener till the round of the works was concluded. Then, when the engineer had finished, he turned to him quietly and said: "And what is electricity?" The man, somewhat abashed, admitted that the question was altogether beyond him. "Well, well," said Lord Kelvin, "that's the one thing about electricity you and I don't know."

Apple Scoop. John Bunyan is reported the owner of this. The author of "Pilgrim's Progress" used it for removing cores for apples.

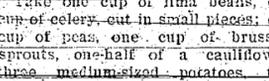

An Early Umbrella. A curious relic of the century before last is still to be seen in Sheffield, England. This is nothing less than the first umbrella that ever created a sensation in the streets of the city of cutlers. It belonged originally to John Greaves of Fargate, who faced the ridicule of the townsmen under its shelter, and it was handed down to his descendant, Miss Law of Western Bank.

The conquering of diffidence in public speaking.

The accuracy of co-operation in information on the enemies of easy errors and the friends of forethought, to reduce mutually expensive mistakes of mechanical, commercial and professional people.

The forethought of a very cautious young man who had just been promoted.

Visiting with friends and attending to private business during business time is where a few people are very positive.

This morning I noticed an employer looking at an employee who was visiting with a social caller. The employer thought it out of order and the employee may have thought the same, but the latter was between two fires, duty and duty.

Duty to the employer and duty to the friend who called were in conflict. The employer may have discouraged friends from calling, but could not conquer all of them. To offer to work overtime when possible to excuse the employer from paying for the time spent with friends during business hours might be considered.

The very cautious young man just promoted had a caller who wanted to leave a package for him and who could not make the right change. The man just promoted overpaid him and requested him to leave the package and change at the inquiry window. This plan saved time and commotion, and showed that Mr. Just Promoted was thinking in advance.

A general manager tells me that he must secure a plan for taking less time with callers either by having hours for callers or more diplomacy or a retreat for work.

One man who was just finishing a directory told a caller that he was so busy he could not take time to trade dimes for gold dollars.

How some new white flannel caps got into the m.d.

The first I saw about it was a group of men and boys on the street crossing.

A man was helping a boy pick up some large, square, overturned paper boxes.

The boy was more of a person than you would think from his size.

The boxes numbered eight or more and made a small wagon load, but the boy was carrying them, alone when a string broke and into the mud they went.

White flannel caps were in the boxes and a number of them were more or less coated in mud when they reached the sidewalk.

The boy told me that the man at the factory did not put enough string around the boxes.

Now, that is human nature, isn't it? You or I would have said the same.

The boy either neglected to audit the string when he took the boxes, or else he decided wrong about it.

We can sympathize with the boy and all who were blamed or worried by mud on the new white caps, but we can learn to shoulder more things which belong to us and more that do not belong to us. It is a strengthening and educating exercise to blame ourselves some and give others an occasional rest.

Little folks' eyes are sometimes as useful as anything in or out of the house.

A man had a book ready to be printed and he had pinned the proof sheets up to file away when his little girl became interested in the queerly marked sheets of paper, and she found a wrong word in a sentence.

How was there in place of have, and several men had gone over it blindly.

Then she found a comma left out, and for these two discoveries she was given eleven cents.

Her father would not have had the wrong word printed for a hundred and eleven cents, but she was more than satisfied with what she got.

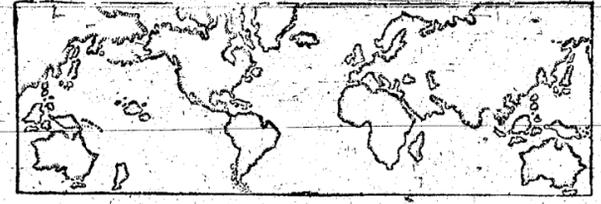

Her grammar is more interesting to her now in her school work than before the wrong word event, and in time she may become a good proof-reader.

An old gentleman said he wished he could have lived his sixtieth year when he was twelve years old, as he thought that it would help him during the years between. It might and it might not. We can by association and information exchanging get the next thing to experience.

The Mercator letters from me and their to the individual anywhere.

Mr. Mercator drew a map of the world which I have admired for a long time and I may never find a better name for my daily reports on accuracy for you.

Three years ago I printed a letter to send to my friends and in it requested them to send me a short suggestion for the daily life of men and boys in shops and factories, on railroads, ships and farms and in mines and forests.

To offer to work overtime when possible to excuse the employer from paying for the time spent with friends during business hours might be considered.

The very cautious young man just promoted had a caller who wanted to leave a package for him and who could not make the right change. The man just promoted overpaid him and requested him to leave the package and change at the inquiry window. This plan saved time and commotion, and showed that Mr. Just Promoted was thinking in advance.

A general manager tells me that he must secure a plan for taking less time with callers either by having hours for callers or more diplomacy or a retreat for work.

One man who was just finishing a directory told a caller that he was so busy he could not take time to trade dimes for gold dollars.

How some new white flannel caps got into the m.d.

The first I saw about it was a group of men and boys on the street crossing.

A man was helping a boy pick up some large, square, overturned paper boxes.

The boy was more of a person than you would think from his size.

The boxes numbered eight or more and made a small wagon load, but the boy was carrying them, alone when a string broke and into the mud they went.

White flannel caps were in the boxes and a number of them were more or less coated in mud when they reached the sidewalk.

The boy told me that the man at the factory did not put enough string around the boxes.

Now, that is human nature, isn't it? You or I would have said the same.

The boy either neglected to audit the string when he took the boxes, or else he decided wrong about it.

We can sympathize with the boy and all who were blamed or worried by mud on the new white caps, but we can learn to shoulder more things which belong to us and more that do not belong to us. It is a strengthening and educating exercise to blame ourselves some and give others an occasional rest.

Little folks' eyes are sometimes as useful as anything in or out of the house.

A man had a book ready to be printed and he had pinned the proof sheets up to file away when his little girl became interested in the queerly marked sheets of paper, and she found a wrong word in a sentence.

How was there in place of have, and several men had gone over it blindly.

Then she found a comma left out, and for these two discoveries she was given eleven cents.

Her father would not have had the wrong word printed for a hundred and eleven cents, but she was more than satisfied with what she got.

Her grammar is more interesting to her now in her school work than before the wrong word event, and in time she may become a good proof-reader.

An old gentleman said he wished he could have lived his sixtieth year when he was twelve years old, as he thought that it would help him during the years between. It might and it might not. We can by association and information exchanging get the next thing to experience.

The Mercator letters from me and their to the individual anywhere.

Mr. Mercator drew a map of the world which I have admired for a long time and I may never find a better name for my daily reports on accuracy for you.

Three years ago I printed a letter to send to my friends and in it requested them to send me a short suggestion for the daily life of men and boys in shops and factories, on railroads, ships and farms and in mines and forests.

The conquering of diffidence in public speaking.

The accuracy of co-operation in information on the enemies of easy errors and the friends of forethought, to reduce mutually expensive mistakes of mechanical, commercial and professional people.

The forethought of a very cautious young man who had just been promoted.

Visiting with friends and attending to private business during business time is where a few people are very positive.

This morning I noticed an employer looking at an employee who was visiting with a social caller. The employer thought it out of order and the employee may have thought the same, but the latter was between two fires, duty and duty.

Duty to the employer and duty to the friend who called were in conflict. The employer may have discouraged friends from calling, but could not conquer all of them. To offer to work overtime when possible to excuse the employer from paying for the time spent with friends during business hours might be considered.

MURDER MYSTERY PROVING BAD TANGLE FOR POLICE OF MASSACHUSETTS TO UNRAVEL

THE PAGE HOUSE—DOTTED LINE SHOWS THE ROUTE THE MURDERER TOOK, ENTERING THE FRONT DOOR, GOING THROUGH THE LIVING ROOM AND UPSTAIRS TO MISS PAGE'S ROOM WHERE SHE WAS KILLED.

FACTS OF THE CRIME.

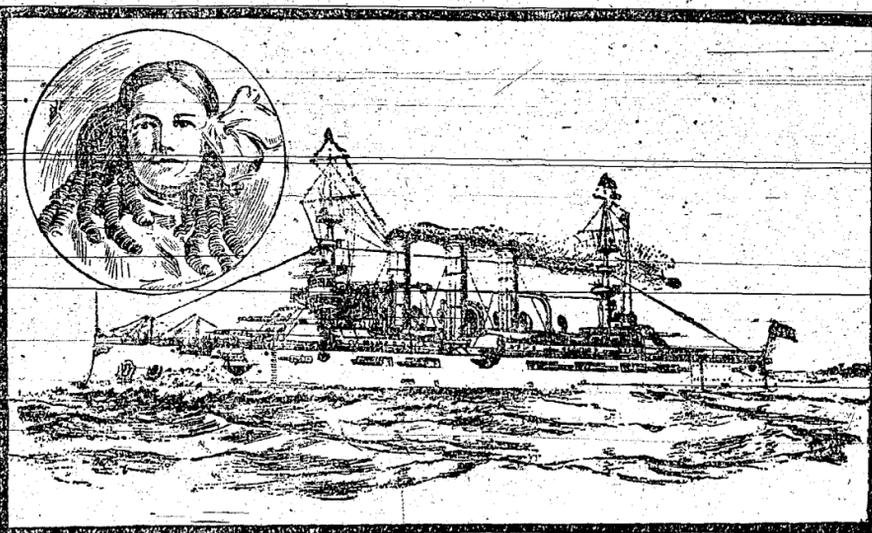

The murderer knew the home and the family thoroughly. There was no robbery, no assault and no apparent object in the murder. The story of injury to the brother shows careful premeditation. The mutilating slashes made after death shows that it was not the work of a hardened criminal. No tracks, stains or clues of any sort have been found in the house. Stabbed in the back with a great two-edged knife that pierced her lungs, and slashed in the throat until her jugular vein was severed, to give the deed an appearance of suicide, and with eleven other terrible stabs and slashes, Miss Mabel Page, daughter of Edward Page, former millionaire of Boston, was most foully murdered in her father's home in Weston, Mass., March 31. When her father returned to the home at 2.30 in the afternoon, after a trip to Boston, he found the house unlocked and this note on a table in the sitting room on the first floor: "Brother Harold has been injured and I have gone to the Massachusetts General Hospital to see him."

The aged father made a hurried search of the house, realizing his daughter would not have left the house unlocked. In her room he found her, lying full length upon the floor beside her bed, with arms outstretched, fully dressed for the street, even to hat and jacket, and he saw a terrible gash across her throat from ear to ear. Mr. Page thought his daughter had killed herself or attempted to do so, and he ran to the nearest house, half a mile away, to telephone for medical assistance. There is not on record in the Commonwealth an instance of such a cruel, brutal, unprovoked and terribly mysterious crime as this and the keenest wits of the State police and others are at work in vain for some clue, some slight thing upon which they may build a theory that will stand, but all to no purpose. These are the wounds the undertaker found: A stab in the back that penetrated the left lung. This would have proved fatal, and it shows the murderer first struck the woman from behind. Then there was a stab in the center of her breast, just below her neck, that would have proved fatal, and shows the man struck a second blow as the woman fell. There are four wounds upon her right hand, showing where she put her hand to ward off the weapon. In the throat were three slashes, one of which severed the jugular vein and half severed the head. The others were vicious deep slashes, apparently made to give an appearance of suicide, which only one in a murderous frenzy would be unwise enough to make. In the left side was a deep stab and in the right side of the abdomen were three stab wounds, all deep and all of which would have singly proved fatal. In all, the brutal fiend who killed the defenseless woman, left alone in her father's home, delivered thirteen telling blows, and at least seven of them were wild, maniacal slashes of mutilation delivered after the woman was dead. And yet, with all these wounds, the dead woman lay with her clothes on, in such a fashion that the father and two physicians failed to realize she had been murdered, as the throat slashes were all they could see. Remarkable in the extreme is the fact that there was not a cupful of blood upon the floor where the dead woman lay. She bled internally, the physicians declared, which explains the extraordinary absence of blood stains. The murderer so slashed and mutilated the body that internal bleeding was made possible and the blood flowed internally easier than it came from the thirteen wounds. The woman apparently had been informed that her brother, who worked in Boston, had been injured in an accident, and taken to a hospital. She was preparing to leave at once for Boston when she met her death. A note written by her explaining that she was going to her brother's aid was found on a table. The brother, however, was found to be in good health. Patent Commissioner Has Exalted Opinion of Himself. Patent Commissioner Allen is impressed with the dignity of his position. A few days ago a young man came into his office, took off his hat and said: "Mr. Allen, may I speak with you a moment?" Allen eyed the visitor coldly. "Sit down," he said, "and I will attend to you in a few minutes." Then he went out and talked with a representative or two and some other visitors. Finally he turned to the young man and said: "Come into my private office." Once there, Mr. Allen looked severely at the young man and said: "I observed when you came in that you called me 'Mr. Allen.' Do you know, sir, that I am the commissioner of patents for the United States?" Enjoys Dancing at Ninety-six. Mrs. Ann Randall of Langhorne, Pa., celebrated her ninety-sixth birthday by giving a party at which she danced several times in as lively a manner as anyone present. Among those at the ball were a daughter, five sons, twenty grandchildren and twenty-eight great-grandchildren.

THE VIRGINIA AND HER SPONSOR

The battleship Virginia was launched in Newport News, Virginia, April 6. Miss Matilda Gay Montague, daughter of the Governor of Virginia, officiated as sponsor at the launching. The Virginia is the most recently designed battleship of the United States navy, and embodies the highest ingenuity and maturest experience of naval experts. She is the first of five battleships that are being built on the one model. In the group is shown a picture of the ship, as she will appear when completed, and one of Miss Montague.

Prof. Haecel is Modest.
To escape onerous congratulations on the occasion of his seventieth birthday, Prof. Ernest Haecel has been spending the winter at Rapallo, in the French Riviera. He is as active as a man of 40. In a recent letter Haecel protests against being called a savant. Germany, he says, "is full of professors who are more learned, who have read more books than I have. My life-long aim has been particularly to study one big book—nature."

Making Carpets in India.
The finest carpets in India are produced at Amritsar, and between 4,000 and 5,000 people are engaged in their manufacture. These operators are not collected in factories as with us, but work in their own homes. The looms are usually set up in the doorways, through which the only light can enter the houses, and as you pass up and down the streets you see women and men, even children, at work at the looms, for every member of the family takes a turn.

Two Eyes Not Needed.
It is said that "Si" Basch of Savannah, Ga., a typical sportsman of the old-time south, may visit some of the Chicago race tracks this summer. Basch lost an eye years ago, but he says he does not feel his loss much. "You see," he explains whimsically, "it is so easy to pick winners nowadays that I don't need two eyes." He is said to have left his mark among the bookmakers at Benning track, Washington, having been remarkably successful.

MIGHT CALL HIM JACK.

Rear Admiral Walker's Quiet Rebuke Silenced Pert Youth.
Rear Admiral John G. Walker devotes more time to canal matters than to fashion plates and could hardly be called "spick" and span in the civilian clothes he wears at his work. A stranger would be far more likely to take Admiral Walker for a countryman than a retired army officer. His long whiskers are of the type so popular with rural dramas, and his rolling walk might well be taken for the movement acquired by following a plow. A brusque young man in search of the canal commission encountered Admiral Walker in a corridor of the Corcoran building, in Washington, and asked pertly: "Can you tell me where I will find Walker?" "Yes," Admiral Walker replied. "Just come with me." The dapper young fellow followed Admiral Walker into his office. The Admiral took a seat behind his desk and invited the young man to sit down. "Well, what can I do for you?" Admiral Walker asked of the young man, who began to squirm uneasily in his chair. "I am Walker," the Admiral continued. "John G. Walker is my full name, but you might call me Jack for short." Unable to summon up enough voice to apologize, the young fellow rushed out of the office without saying a word.—New York News.

Precious Stones in This Country.

"It is a little strange," said Irving L. Russell, "that the United States, so far ahead in national resources of every other part of the globe in all essential things, should be so deficient as a producer of precious stones. I am of the opinion that there will be a big discovery some day of the most valued gems, probably in some out-of-the-way corner of the land. I do not mean to intimate that we are exactly destitute of fine stones, but that those found are mostly of inferior quality as compared with the output of the old mines. In North Carolina a good many emeralds and rubies and sapphires are to be had, but they are not of sufficient value to warrant cutting. Some very fine pearls have been taken out of the shells picked up in the streams of Arkansas, and at one time the search for them down there amounted to a craze. Pearls, by the way, have gone up in price from 200 to 300 per cent in recent years. A great many semi-precious stones are mined in California, the turquoise found out there being especially beautiful, but lacking in hardness. Tourmalines also come from California in abundance."—Washington Post.

Caught Alligator With a Fishline.

While deep duck and quail shooting have been better this season in the neighborhood of Titusville than in several years, Rockledge, Stuart and a few other places seem to have the expert fishermen. But it takes a Merritt fisherman to catch alligators. We are told that a few days ago a seven-foot alligator was caught with a fishline. The life was set and baited with a mullet for trout. The alligator took the bait and the hook fastened itself in his throat. Had the line been a rope or chain it would have been twisted apart or the hook torn out. The alligator tired himself out and was easily taken by slipping a rope over his nose, securing his flippers, and towing him ashore, where he was killed with an axe.—East Coast Advocate (Titusville, Fla.).

Secular Sunday School.

In England and America the term "Sunday school" has a definite meaning, and is exclusively used to denote a place of religious teaching. A Germany, however, the race for commercial supremacy has led to the establishment of Sunday schools at which mechanics are given practical instruction in their trades. There is, for example, a school for masons, at which the students, many of them mechanics who work during the week, spend several hours on Sunday morning in learning the higher branches of their craft. Similarly there are Sunday schools for tailors, ironmongers, bookbinders, and followers of other trades—even barbers and blacksmiths.

Good-Bye.

Two whispered words—"Good-bye! Forgive!" Her dull brain throbbed to them. And thoughts came crowding thick and fast. Of how, and where, and when They two might meet again. Good-bye! Her quickened heartbeats tell Of nerves not made of steel. Yet still and cold she stands. No word, no look! Well, was best that they so parted. For lying tongues had broken faith and trust. Good-bye! Forging eyes sought hers. That only sought the ground. A moment's pause, in which a heart's life passed away. And then receding footsteps fell upon her ear. A closing door, a woman's sob— And she was peaceless Upon a sea of pride and doubt, Good-bye forevermore!

Sees Every Overstudy.

Henry R. Edmunds, president of the Philadelphia board of education, says half the public school pupils of that city are suffering from ill brought on by overstudy. The principal evils resulting, he says, are nervous affections and defective eyesight, both largely traceable to excessive home study and the crowding of too many branches into the elementary grades. He champions the abolition of afternoon classes and the wiping out of all home study.

God Never Fails.
The dearest things, in this fair world must change; Thy senses hurry on to sure decay; Thy strength will fail, the pain seem no more strange. While love more feebly cheers the misty way. What then remains above the task of living? Is there no crown where that rude cross hath pressed? Yes, God remains, his own high glory giving. To light thy lonely path, to make it best. Yea, God remains, though suns are daily dying. A gracious God, who marks the sparrows' fall; He listens while thy aching heart is sighing. He hears and answers when his child, in drear night, calls all the void when death assaults. The one, eternal God, who never fails.—W. O. Partridge.

Christ's Remedy for Despair.

All things are delivered unto me of my father. Come unto me, all ye that labour and are heavy laden, and I will give you rest. For my yoke is easy, and my burden is light.—Matthew, xi, 27-30.

Look Ahead.

There is glory for the time to come. A great many people seem to forget that the best is before us. Dr. Bonar once said that everything before the true believer is "glorious." This thought took hold of my soul and I began to look the matter up and see what I could find in Scripture that was glorious hereafter. I found that the Kingdom we are going to inherit is glorious! Our crown is to be a "crown of glory," the city we are going to inhabit is the city of the glorified; the songs we are to sing are the songs of the glorified; we are to wear garments of "glory and beauty," our society will be the society of the glorified; our rest is to be "glorious," the country to which we are going is to be full of "the glory of God and of the Lamb." There are many who are, always looking on the backward path and mourning over the troubles through which they have passed; they keep digging up the cares and anxieties they have been called on to bear and are forever looking at them. Why should we go reeling and staggering under the burdens and cares of life when we have such glorious prospects before us?—D. L. Moody.

"How Much Do You Wish It?"

Have you ever said: "I wish I had a more cheerful disposition?" How much do you wish it? Enough to dispose yourself so as to be in the way of getting it? Your words are idle and sinful unless you will to have it, instead of wishing to have it. You are not responsible for the disposition you were born with, but you are responsible for the one you have to-day. And you have no business to bewail your "bad disposition" while doing nothing to improve it. Everything you carelessly or seriously purpose to do affects what you are disposed to do, and are disposed to look on the dark side, borrow trouble, and say discouraging things. Suppose you earnestly purposes for one week to look for pleasant things, and speak of them, and never speak of what you dread or do not like. You will be more cheerful and hopefully disposed at the end of the week, and you know it. If you know these things, happy are ye if ye do them. It is your duty—your business in life—to work up out of your evil environments, whatever they may chance to be.

What is Happiness?

Happiness is the greatest paradox in nature. It can grow in any soil, live under any conditions. It defies environment. It comes from within. It is the revelation of the depths of the inner life as light and heat permeate the sun from which they radiate. Happiness consists not of having, but of being; not of possessing, but of enjoying. It is the warm glow of a heart at peace within itself. A martyr at the stake may have happiness that a king on his throne might envy. Man is the creator of his own happiness; it is the aroma of a life lived in harmony with high ideals. For what a man has he may be dependent upon others; what he is rests with him alone. What he obtains in life is but acquisition; what he attains is growth. Happiness is the soul's joy in the possession of the intangible.—William George Jordan.

The Path of Duty.

The truth is, for the performance of every duty commanded by our Lord, somebody is specially gifted and prepared. When the time came to give the Gospel to the Gentiles, and the Lord needed a man for the work, he called and qualified Saul and Tarsus, and sent him out. So it will ever be. In the church; so it will ever be. All men have to do is to hold themselves in readiness and obey the voice of the Spirit. In some way the path of duty will be made plain. Woe to the man who knows his duty and fails to do it. Woe to the man who wastes his Lord's goods, or wraps them in a napkin, and puts them where they will do no good.

Grow Old and Make Progress.

It is possible to grow old and at the same time grow toward an endless life of future progress. The fallen leaf rises into new combinations, and lives in these in after years. Its embodied strength, as it exists in the wood of the tree, marches out to serve human life in every structure into which wood is builded. This is a symbol of what the life of the ageing man may be. He has a future. The life behind him lives in institutions, and his on-going soul enters into the higher scenes of the higher life. The beauty and glory of a dawn such as never empurpled our horizon breaks upon his emancipated soul. We bless God that among the possibilities of humanity is a grand old age. Old men have blessed the world in all generations. Nestor was old; Solon was old; Aristotle was old; Lycurgus was old; Seneca was old. Thus it was in the secular world. In the religious world it has been the same—old men have blessed the world. The aged Caleb fought the battles of the Lord in the land of the giants; the aged Abraham offered the prayer that held the storm-cloud in mid-air until Lot escaped from the doomed cities; the aged Paul carried the Gospel to the ends of the earth; and the aged John wrote the Apocalypse, by means of which we men-of the twentieth century receive our highest conceptions of Heaven.—Dr. Gregg.

There are many writers of melodramas and comedy-dramas who conceive plots as mystifying and as clever as that of "Old Arkansaw" but the playwrights are few indeed who can equal Fred Raymond, the author of this tremendous success. In introducing clean, refined comedy into a play. Those who have seen "Old Arkansaw" are well aware that fun predominates in the performance and by the way fun is what most people desire when they go to a theatre. Strong dramatic situations and thrilling hair-breadth escapes appeal to critics and to some theatre-goers but a good, hearty laugh makes everyone feel better and the laugh-producing qualities of "Old Arkansaw" are what enable it to visit the same section year after year and each time play to a large audience. "Old Arkansaw" abounds with pure, clean, refined humor and at the same time possesses many good dramatic situations and it has especially fine scenery and effects. It is a play dealing with common folks and apparently the characters are the acme of naturalness, still a wonderful fund of comedy is introduced through the action of the play and you remember it as one long laugh. CHAPTER SEVEN—Continued.

"Yes, he has, and she's a beauty," he replied, with the air of one giving an expert opinion.

"Well, you keep away from her!" said the old man gruffly. "Let her alone. She'll never have a dollar. Carden's ruined right now, but he doesn't know it. I do. What about this daughter?" he demanded, pausing in front of Arthur. "Is she stopping around here?"

"She is spending the summer at Bishop's—a farmhouse about five miles from here," replied the son. "Say, governor, you must write to Carden and say you've learned that his daughter is here, and that you and your family will be delighted to meet her socially, and will try to make her stay in the country agreeable."

"I'll do nothing of the kind," roared Randolph Morris. He stormed and raged for a while, and then wrote the letter, as his son knew he would from the beginning.

"There it is!" he said as he handed the envelope to Arthur. "For God's sake, don't marry the girl!"

Arthur Morris leaned back in the chair and laughed.

"I have never spoken to her, governor," he said, putting the letter in his pocket, "and I certainly don't contemplate matrimony."

Jessie was greatly excited when a letter came from her father notifying her of the invitation which had been received and accepted. The general recognition of the incident—a gratifying recognition of his increasing importance as a financier. Jessie knew little of the business prestige such recognition entailed, but was delighted with the opportunity to meet the famous Morris, and in despair over the gown she should wear.

The day after she received the note from her father John Burt called, and they took their first horseback ride of importance at the moment, but Jessie did not like him—why, she neither knew nor cared. She tactfully eluded his further attentions, and spent the remainder of the afternoon with his sisters.

Three days later Arthur Morris called at the Bishop's house and found Jessie at home. They chatted for an hour or more, and he secured her consent to be one of a coaching party on the next Saturday. Had it not been for his presence, she would have enjoyed the expedition thoroughly.

More than a week had passed. From Sam Rounds—who knew of everything that happened for miles about—John heard of the party, and drank deep of the lover's first cup of suspicion, bitter with the wormwood of jealousy. He decided to call on Jessie and learn his fate. His heart leaped when Jessie came forward to meet him. There was tenderness in her eyes and welcome in the clasp of the warm little hand which nestled for an instant in his.

"Saddle my horse, John; let's ride!" she said.

Delighted, John obeyed, and set himself stolidly to enjoy her presence as they galloped along the beach.

"Have you an engagement for Saturday?" asked Jessie.

"I have none. Can I do anything?" asked John eagerly.

"I have cousins who live near the beach twelve miles south of here," said Jessie. "I want to spend a day with them. Do you think you could endure the company of three foolish girls all day, John?"

"I could enjoy the company of one wise little girl forever," said John, with a fervor which astounded him when the words were uttered. A blush suffused Jessie's cheek, but her drooping eyes expressed no rebuke. "I—shall be delighted to be your escort," stammered John, far more than Randolph Morris is powerful, a good business friend, and a foe to be feared. At the present moment, I dread to incur his displeasure. Your slight of his son might be of vast consequence in determining Randolph Morris' decision in a matter most vital to our welfare, Jessie, my darling. It might even—"

Gen. Carden checked himself. His face was drawn with a distress which Jessie was quick to perceive, though not to comprehend.

"I do understand, papa, dear," said Jessie. "I will write and ask Mr. Morris to call, and will treat him just as if nothing had happened. But I know I can never like him, and I don't have to try, do I, papa?"

"Certainly not, my pet," said Gen. Carden. He kissed his daughter affectionately and seemed greatly pleased.

On Sunday Jessie wrote a note to Arthur Morris. Two days later he called and Jessie received him in the old-fashioned parlor. Both ignored the incident of the preceding week, and chatted gaily for an hour or more. Jessie accepted his invitation to a reception in the Morris mansion for Saturday evening, and went under her father's escort.

Two weeks passed, during which the rich New Yorker was a frequent visitor at the Bishop's farmhouse. One evening John called when Arthur Morris was present, and Jessie introduced them. Arthur treated him with that airy tolerance which success grants to its vanquished.

"By the way, Mr. Burt," said Arthur Morris, as he carelessly rolled a cigarette, "Miss Carden has accepted my invitation to attend tomorrow's clambake near Cohasset. I must accompany a party of New York friends who will spend the night on my yacht, and attend the bake. We must start early, so I can't offer to escort Miss Carden. If I may presume on your acquaintance with her, I shall ask you to drive her to the grove, where I will meet you with my friends."

"I shall be more than pleased if Miss Carden will accept my escort," said John.

"Certainly, I will," laughed Jessie.

Arthur Morris remained a few minutes longer; then he gaily bade Jessie adieu, shook hands with John Burt, and rode away.

CHAPTER EIGHT.

The Tragedy.

Churchill's Grove was famous for its clambakes, and when John and Jessie drove into it the scene was one to delight the heart of a loyal New Englander.

The cool, salt breeze from the ocean, the aroma from the pine, and the odor from simmering clam and seaweed formed a frisky ambrosial enough to make an Apollon of an anchorite.

For an hour or more they walked along the hard, smooth sand, crunching the shells under their feet; the song of the sea in their ears, and its cool breath on their cheeks. Then the great gong sounded the signal for dinner, and they turned to the grove.

"Mr. Morris must have been delayed," observed Jessie as she glanced once more toward the harbor. "Come on; we won't wait for him."

They had a merry time over dinner. As they came out from the grove they saw the Voltairs at anchor, her upper works glistening in the sunshine. Her launch, crowded with passengers, was just leaving.

FISH-SHAPED LIKE HAM BAGS.

Jersey Visitor Spies an Old Acquaintance in the Aquarium.

"Ah, I see you have some ham bag fish here," said a Jerseyman who was looking along the tanks in the aquarium, as he paused in front of one containing two fine, adult specimens of the creature known hereabouts as the orange filefish.

There are few common fish that have not a variety of names, and the Jerseyman's name for the orange filefish is rather appropriate. The fish has somewhat the outline as well as the color of the yellow bags in which smoked hams were once put up.

The two specimens in the aquarium are the survivors out of four taken in Gravesend bay in June last. One of them is yellow all over, the other is brown in color over three-quarters of the surface of its body and of a bright light yellow over the remainder.

The orange filefish is homely in shape and as thin-bodied as an ordinary flatfish, but unlike the flatfish in this respect, which swims flatwise, the filefish swims with its body edgewise in the water and commonly carrying its head more or less down. Sometimes when not swimming it drops its head so far that the fish seems to be standing on its head in the water.

Odd in shape as it is and odd in action, and with bright colored, it is a very striking creature, and the two specimens of it here are among the most attractive of the aquarium's exhibits.

These two orange filefishes are the first that have ever been carried here through the winter, making a record for the species in captivity.—New York Sun.

Defines Cancer.

The peculiarity of cancer among diseases is that it consists in the rebellion and malignant behavior of certain parts of the body itself, not in the attacks of foreign enemies. Cancer, in fact, is a state of civil war in the body, a reign of terror produced by outbreaks of murderous fury on the part of revolutionists at one or more localities.

Canadian Cheese in Great Britain.

Canadian cheese is apparently taking a very high place in the market of Great Britain. It long ago drove out American cheese, which had obtained a bad name from the amount of filled cheese that was sent from this country under the name of full cream cheese. Last year Canada supplied 68 per cent of all the cheese used in Great Britain, the money received from Canadians from this source being over $21,000,000. So much for honesty in a manufactured product. Legislation has much to do with the success of the business of a country, as is seen in the case in hand. When Americans were debating whether it was right to prohibit the making of filled cheese, Canada had already passed a law prohibiting the manufacture of a pound of that kind of cheese for any purpose. Some men said that it was tyrannical, but others said it was good business foresight. The money that has rolled into Canada since that time on account of its good cheese has proved that the legislation was the best kind of a business policy. After that time the United States passed a law making it practically impossible to manufacture filled cheese for sale in this country, but we still permit the manufacture of filled cheese for export to foreign countries. Some of our manufacturers are taking advantage of the law to make for English trade the same kind of cheese that lost us our trade in the first place. It goes out of the country properly branded, but it is very doubtful if it is retailed on the other side of the water as filled cheese.

Preservatives in Milk.

From Germany comes the report of the invention of a new milk preservative so powerful that it will destroy all bacteria in milk and will then dissipate itself in water, making it impossible for the chemist to discover its presence, especially if it has been kept a day or so before being tested. There is no doubt that if this preservative were introduced into this country it would have a ready sale with some of our milk handlers. Their policy has been to buy those preservatives that cannot be detected. First they were using borax in one form or another, but the chemist had no trouble in detecting that kind of a preservative. Then the users of preservatives changed to salicylic acid, but the chemist followed them. After that, some one suggested that formaldehyde could not be detected and at once there was an enormous sale of this deadly chemical for the use of milk handlers. It took the chemists some time to find a way of detecting formaldehyde, but they did find a test in the end. Now the sellers of these compounds are looking for something else that can be used to mystify the chemists.

How many deaths have been caused by the use of these drugs in milk we will never be able to guess. Whatever preservative is used in other food materials, none should be used in milk that has a harmful effect on the human system. We say harmful, because there are preservatives, like sugar and molasses, that are not themselves harmful to the digestive systems. As yet many of our states have taken no action to prevent the use of preservatives in milk.

A Check on Siberian Butter.

During the last few years Siberian and Russian butter has become a very important factor in the European market. About 15,000 tons of Siberian butter went to England each of the recent years, and several thousand tons more to other European countries. It had been improving in quality to such an extent that it was proving a strong competitor to the butter made in Denmark, France and other countries. The Russian government was fostering this trade, going to the trouble of providing refrigerator steamers to carry the butter from Baltic ports to England. But now the outbreak of the war in the East has apparently paralyzed the whole traffic, at least so far as Siberian butter is concerned. The government has found it necessary to use the Siberian railway almost exclusively for the transportation of troops and of army supplies. As it is a single-track road, it does not require very much of traffic to test its capacity. It is therefore very doubtful if the butter car at the present be shipped west. Perhaps the government will be able to take the entire output of the Siberian creameries for use in its Asiatic army, but in any event the butter must temporarily disappear from the English market.

Dairy Progress in Iowa.

The Agricultural College at Ames, Iowa, expects to have a new dairy building in the near future, the said building to cost about $75,000. The legislature is being asked to appropriate this sum to be expended as indicated. The legislature is also being asked for an additional $25,000 to be used in the purchase of land with the object of creating a first class dairy and poultry farm. As the attendance at the college increases the demand for milk becomes so great that little can be obtained for college use and experimentation.

Origin of Eastern Navies.

Russia's navy had its origin in a boat which Queen Elizabeth sent to Ivan the Terrible, and with which later Peter the Great got the "sea craze." Japan's first European type of ship was built by Adams, an Englishman. Holland and Denmark, however, did most of the training of the officers of Japan's modern fleet. Some of them, as is well known, were trained in the United States.

A little Maine girl came to her mother one morning and said, "Mama, I don't feel very well." "Well, that's 'em bad," said mama, "where do you feel the worst?" "In school," was the prompt reply.

Much depends in getting the dairy heifers in the habit of calving at the time of year when they will bring in the most profit.

ALL BUILT WITHOUT NAILS.

Unusual Construction of Dwelling Houses in Burma.

In Burma a dwelling house is built without a nail. It is hung on four upright posts of teak or bamboo; seven or eight feet from the ground the janking of the floor is tied to the uprights with rattan; the walls are made of split bamboo plaited into beautiful and fanciful patterns. The roof consists of the leaves of the toddy palm, which have been soaked in salt water to make them insect-proof. There are no windows, but large flaps of the plaited bamboo walls are raised in the daytime to admit light and air. The house consists, in the case of the poor, of only one good-sized room, but when there are several chambers they lead off from the common room and are separated from it by partitions of plaited bamboo. These are generally raised one or two feet from the floor of the common room, but in no case is one floor above the other in a Burmese house, it being thought a great indignity to have any one's feet over one's head. The thatched roofs are highly inflammable and leaning against every thatched house may be seen a long hooked stick with which to pull off the roof should it catch fire.

Why War Has No Terrors.

The Japanese women are as active and strong as the men. An English writer on physical culture suggests that this may account for the Japanese courage in war. After he has settled his domestic problems with a wife as muscular and agile as himself, war has no terrors for him.

The Doctors Failed.

Kilsore, O., April 11.—A rather remarkable case has just come to light in this place. Mr. John T. Riegle had been suffering for some time with an aggravated form of kidney disease, which had caused him a great deal of discomfort.

He tried the treatment of several doctors, but did not get any better. At last he chanced to read an advertisement of Dodd's Kidney Pills, a remedy which has been making many wonderful cures, and he bought some at once and began to use them. He says of the result:

"Dodd's Kidney Pills do just what they are advertised to do. I can praise them for the good they have done for me. They cured me completely after the doctors had failed and I wish that every poor sufferer could hear of them, for I know they will cure kidney trouble."

There seems to be no case of kidney trouble, rheumatism or backache that Dodd's Kidney Pills will not cure perfectly and permanently.

Use Sulphur to Protect Vines.

All the large vineyard owners of California sulphur their vines as a protection against mildew and thrips. The method used is the sulphur belows, which is so constructed that the operator can expel material without excess, thereby saving a large percentage. There is a receptacle on top of the belows proper which is filled with powdered sulphur. A tube passes from the belows through the sulphur to the lid. This tube has a cap which has four long holes cut in it and is kept on the tube by a little brass spring. When forcing air through, the tube lifts the cap up to the holes and forces the powdered sulphur out of the discharge tube.

Animal's Idea of Numbers.

Many animals have an idea of concrete numbers up to a few units and some go even farther. A dog which is accustomed to receive only three pieces of sugar will not ask for more after he has had his quota. In certain mines where horses are required to make thirty trips a day they walk at once to the stable after making the thirtieth trip. Montaigne tells of oxen employed in the royal gardens of Suzu, that refused to perform more than their daily task of turning the great irrigation wheels through one hundred revolutions.

WOMEN BREAK DOWN.

Sometimes women drift into a condition of "half invalid." Continual languor, all tired out, run down, backache, nerves shattered, headache, terrible pain, no appetite, poor digestion. In nine cases out of ten it is because the kidneys fail to do their work of filtering the poisonous system waste from the blood. The kidneys are weak and need the strengthening help of Dodd's Kidney Pills. Read how these pills repair a weakened physical condition when this condition is caused by sick kidneys. Mrs. Sadie Mettles of 394 W. 4th Ave., Columbus, Ohio, says: "Prior to the year 1898 I suffered considerably from backache, pain in the head, languor and depression and weakness of the action of the kidneys. The pain was always worse in the morning, and I felt miserable. I was induced to procure a box of Dodd's Kidney Pills and I began their use. They proved prompt and effective. They cured me and there has been no return of the trouble since taking them. I owe all the credit to Dodd's Kidney Pills."

A FREE TRIAL of this great kidney medicine which cured Mrs. Mettles will be mailed on application to any part of the United States. Address: Foster-Milburn Co., Buffalo, N. Y. For sale by all druggists, price 50 cents per box.

BLOOD AS A FERTILIZER.

Gave Renewed Life to Tree That Was Fast Dying.

For several seasons a very ancient walnut, with long, gaunt boughs carrying much dead wood, had been struggling to live, but each year manifested signs that its life was fast disappearing. The keeper in front of whose house the tree stood took to slinging the carcass of each deer he killed over one of its boughs for dressing. During the process all the blood dripped on the ground and was absorbed. The following spring this tree put forth an astonishing crop of leaves, and in less than three seasons it was making new wood and showing all the vigor which had characterized it thirty years before. Its renewed youth was entirely attributable to the fertilizing properties of the blood with which it had been so liberally drenched.—Country Gentleman.

Where Four States Meet.

The only place in the world where four states, territories or provinces join is where the boundary lines of Colorado, Utah, New Mexico and Arizona meet. It is the only "four corners" combination of political divisions of the land on earth, and the United States has marked the place with a stone monument, the names of the four divisions being inscribed on the shaft. The spot is in the heart of a country once densely populated by cliff-dwellers, and access to it is so difficult that few tourists make their way there. Mancos, Colo., is the nearest railroad town, and it is one hundred miles distant. Were it not for the builders lying about a wagon could be set down with each wheel in a different state.

ARMY TRIALS.

An Infantryman's Long Siege.

This soldier's tale of long is interesting. During his term of service in 17th Infantry in Cuba and Philippines, an Ohio soldier-boy contracted a disease of the stomach and bowels which all army doctors who treated him pronounced incurable, but which Grape-Nuts food alone cured. "In October, 1899, when my enlistment expired, I was discharged from the army at Calutute, Philippines, and returned to the States on the first available steamer that left Manila. When I got home I was a total wreck physically and my doctor put me to bed saying he considered me the worst broken-down man of my age he ever saw and after treating me 6 months, he considered my case beyond medical aid. "During the fall and winter of 1900 and '01 I was admitted to the Barbers Hospital in Washington, D. C., for treatment for chronic inflammation of the stomach and bowels but after 5 months returned home as bad as ever. "I continued taking medicine until February, 1902, when reading a newspaper one day I read about Grape-Nuts and was so impressed I sent out for a package right away. "The result is quickly told for I have used Grape-Nuts continually ever since with the best results, my health is so I can do a fair day's hard work, stomach and bowels are in good condition, have gained 40 pounds in weight and I feel like a new man altogether. "I owe my present good health to Grape-Nuts beyond all doubt for medical science was exhausted." Name given by Postum Co., Battle Creek, Mich.

Had he consulted any one of several thousand physicians we know of they would have prescribed Grape-Nuts immediately.

"WELL, YOU KEEP AWAY FROM HER!"

the summer. They galloped for miles along the hard sand of the seashore, and dismounted to rest and talk beneath the shade of pleasant trees.

Jessie told him of the letter from her father, and with some pride talked of the invitation from Randolph Morris. John looked at the slip of paper in Jessie's hand, and it appeared like a wedge about to separate them. And why should it not? What right had he to aspire to the love of Jessie Carden, the daughter of a rich man, beautiful beyond any woman he had ever seen? The fear, which oftentimes became a certainty that Jessie would pass beyond his reach, was the haunting terror of his dreams by day or night.

She had everything—youth, health, beauty, wealth and position. He had youth and health—so had the average farm laborer.

They climbed Strawberry Hill and watch the sunset," suggested Jessie.

John helped Jessie up the steep, winding path, and they stood on the crest of the hill. The broad Atlantic lay to the east, and the island dotted bay glowed in the colors of a gorgeous sunset. At the horizon was a mass of clouds, above burned a bar of red—the red of blood. To the zenith were spread the gorgeous tints with which the setting sun tinselled the closing curtains of night. Delicate greens toned through the shades of orange into rich amethyst, and against this background of lacework of clouds flouted the thousand gradations of the spectrum. But the bar of red above the dun cloud dominated. It was reflected in the water of the bay, shimmering in the rufescent glow.

They stood silent for minutes under the spell of nature's grandest spectacle. The sun dipped lower until its arc touched the line of the cloud. Sharp as a knife, the black bank slowly obscured the face of the sun, until a red hemisphere, weird and unreal, glowered and quivered in the western sky. Jessie Carden's reception in the Morris mansion opened to her a new and an attractive world. Accustomed from childhood to the comforts and luxuries of comparative wealth, she was awed by the magnificent sensuousness of the millionaire's palace, and by the pomp and splendor of its decorations and fittings. Nevertheless, without attempting to analyze or justify her feelings, Jessie was not favorably impressed with Arthur Morris. There is a psychological barrier between vice and virtue, an instinct which places innocence on guard. The young man's personality was of slight confused the subject of his ardent compliment. "When will you be ready, Jessie?"

"You may call at 8 o'clock, if you will," said Jessie, without raising her eyes.

It was ten o'clock in the morning when the Morris trap stopped in front of the Bishop farmhouse. Morris was looking his best. His eye was clear, and his smooth, plump face was ruddy.

"Present my compliments to Miss Carden," he said, offering his card.

"Miss Carden is not at home," replied the maid. "Will you come in, sir?"

"No, thank you. Very sorry, I am sure." His face grew dark, but his voice was quiet as he said: "Tell Miss Carden of my disappointment, and say I'll call some day soon."

Gen. Marshall Carden paid a visit to the farm a week later. After dinner he invited Jessie to a walk, and his manner told her that something was impending. They paused to rest under an arbor. For some moments both were silent.

"I have something to say to you, Jessie, which I wish could be left unsaid," began Gen. Carden, clearing his throat uneasily. Jessie looked into his face with questioning eyes. "You are nearly seventeen, Jessie, and are now a woman," he continued after a pause. "You belong to a good family, and God willing, you will inherit a modest fortune. You are very beautiful, my pet, and it is natural you should have admirers.

"I will explain to you frankly what has happened. I received a call yesterday from Mr. Randolph Morris. In a casual way Mr. Morris spoke of you and sent his compliments. He expressed regret that his family had failed in an attempt to make your visit to the country more enjoyable. Of course this greatly surprised me, and when I pressed him for particulars he said he knew nothing, except that Arthur had called and that you had refused to see him." Gen. Carden paused.

"I don't wish to see him, papa," said Jessie, with much spirit. "He annoys me. He said he would call Saturday and take me out riding, and never so much as asked me if I cared to go or not. So I went to visit Cousin Edith, and when he called the maid told him I was out."

Gen. Carden looked greatly relieved. "I am glad that Arthur has given you no more serious cause for displeasure," he said. "You know little of business affairs, but you must know

LIVER TROUBLES

"I had Theford's Black-Draught, a good medicine for liver disease. It cured my liver after he had spent $100 with doctors. It is the medicine I take."—MRS. CAHOLINE MARTIN, Parkersburg, W. Va.

If your liver does not act regularly, go to your doctor. And secure a package of Theford's Black-Draught and take a dose tonight. This great family medicine from the constipated bowels, stirs up the torpid liver and causes a healthy secretion of bile.

Theford's Black-Draught will cleanse the bowels of impurities and strengthen the kidneys. A torpid liver invites colds, biliousness, chills and fever and all manner of sickness and contagion. Weak kidneys result in Bright's disease which claims as many victims as consumption. A 25-cent package of Theford's Black-Draught should always be kept in the house.

HER CHOICE

By Louise Hubert Guyot

Copyright, 1903, by T. C. McClure

"Now that it is all over, I don't mind telling you that is the girl that I had chosen for you to marry."

She looked up at him over the great bunch of pink roses that she held in her arms and from under the soft chiffon of her white hat, and he looked down at her out of deep set eyes under shaggy brows. Then his glance followed hers down the long distance of the room, resting on the girl who stood there beneath a bower of palms. The cloudy masses of her white veil were thrown back from a face of smiles and blushes as she received congratulations and wondered vaguely at the strange sweetness of it all.

"You don't mean it?" There were great pauses of incredulity between Wilton's words, and the slow smile that came into his eyes was not one of vanity, rather of great pleasure in an unexpected compliment.

"Is she not the girl I have always described? Tall and slender, big brown eyes and soft, curling light brown hair? You have been blind all this time not to have seen who I meant."

"I DON'T SEE WHY WE DON'T EITHER—DO YOU, MARGARET?"

I had set my heart on it somehow," she added sadly. "You both seem so well suited to each other."

"Why did you not tell me sooner? I might have set to work. It would have been hard work, though." He was still looking at the bride.

"Play the part of matchmaker? And where my little sister was concerned? Ah, no! I could not tell you, but I did so want it."

"That is the greatest compliment you could have paid me. I really!" He had turned and was looking down into her eyes. Suddenly he stopped as if a thought had stifled his words, and the color left his face for one short second.

"Come," she said, as though divining his thought and wishing to interrupt it, "you are to make the first toast, I believe. You must continue your duties as best man."

She led the way down the long hall, and together they paused on the threshold of the dining room.

"Did you do this?" he asked.

"Yes. Do you like it?"

He stood silently drinking in the beauty of the room, with its filmy draperies of asparagus fern, amid the delicate green of which stood forth tall silver and crystal vases filled with long stemmed bridesmaid's roses. Here and there low bowls of green and gold Etruscan glass were half buried beneath the dainty color of the Duchesse. The conventional cake, with its streamers of narrow satin ribbon, shimmered white amid the colors, and the pink shaded candles threw soft reflections over everything.

It was very beautiful, and he said so to her. She was very beautiful as she moved about in her clinging gown of palest green chiffon, straightening a leaf here or bending a flower there, and his eyes said so, although she did not see it.

Then the next thing he knew the room was filled with people, the young bride was beside him, and some one was holding a glass toward him, saying, "Will you not toast them?"

He looked at the bride, loved and began.

"Hail to thee, blithe spirit!" then stopped, laughing. "That won't do. You are not a skylark."

"She's a bird, though," vehemently interrupted a boy who had adored the girl for years.

"Then I cannot continue at all, for 'bird thou never wert' won't apply. What shall I say?" He looked at the tall man standing near, then into the eyes of the girl bride.

"With thy clear, keen joyance Languor cannot be," he quoted, then, improvising, continued:

"May shadow of annoyance Never come near thee."

He raised his glass and turned toward the groom:

"Then wilt love and ne'er know love's sad satiety."

And amid a murmur of applause and clinking of glasses the toast was drunk. Then some one, taking up the thread of Wilton's thought, began:

"What thou art we know not What is most like thee?"

And the boy who had used the slang surprised them all by continuing the quotation:

"She is like a glowworm golden? Oh, oh, oh! But like a star of heaven in the broad daylight or a rose embowered in its own green leaves." "All that ever was joyous and clear and fresh!"

"Please," said the bride appealingly, "no more. It is very beautiful, but so embarrassing. I don't deserve it. I am going to drink to Shelley, who taught you to say such beautiful things."

"With such a subject," some one began, but Margaret and her sister had disappeared.

Wilton slipped from the crowded room out into the quiet halls, where he wandered up and down, thinking, wondering how he had not thought the same thing before. All these months past how stupid he had been! Yes, he thought it would do no harm to try his luck. Ah, no; she never would, she could not love him; it was too much to expect. She would look higher and find— But she had chosen him for the little sister, whom he knew she loved better than life. If she thought him good enough for her, would she not be willing to—

The idea had taken so strong a hold upon him from the moment he had looked down into her eyes to thank her for her compliment that now he wondered how he could have been blind to it for so long a time. It seemed to him as if he had never had any other thought than this, as if he could never have any other thought than Margaret. He wondered if—

The carriage was at the door; the bride had her arms about her mother's neck; the groom, already half-way down the steps, was impatiently waiting. A shower of rice filled the air, a white satin slipper shimmered through the shower. With a quick pull the horses started, and the man within the carriage turned from waving a last adieu to the party on the balcony and put his arms about the girl.

"At last I have you safe," he said. "Do you know, I was always afraid of that man Wilton?"

That man Wilton was already following Margaret into the drawing room just as a voice behind them said:

"That's the best fellow in town. I don't see why he and Margaret don't—"

The color rushed over Margaret's face as she glanced up to see if he had heard. The smile in his eyes made her look down again quickly. She walked to the far end of the room beneath the palms where her sister had stood and, stooping, picked up some rose petals, that lay scattered at her feet. She did it all unconsciously. When she rose Wilton was standing over her. He took her hands in his, rose petals and all, and looked down into her eyes.

"I don't see why we don't either. Do you, Margaret?"

Some one had gone to a piano, and the strains of the march from "Le Prophete" came to them through the open doors, a breeze softly stirred in the palm leaves above their heads, the pink rose petals slipped from her fingers in a shower down over her gown as she put her hands up on Wilton's shoulders and met his eager, questioning look.

"No—I don't," she said very softly.

YOUR KIDNEYS ARE THEY WELL?

Unless they are, good health is impossible.

Every drop of blood in the body passes through and is filtered by healthy kidneys every three minutes. Sound kidneys strain out the impurities from the blood, diseased kidneys do not, hence you are sick. FOLEY'S KIDNEY CURE makes the kidneys well so they will eliminate the poisons from the blood. It removes the cause of the many diseases resulting from disordered kidneys which have allowed your whole system to become poisoned.

Rheumatism, Bad Blood, Gout, Gravel, Dropsy, Inflammation of the Bladder, Diabetes and Bright's Disease, and many others, are all due to disordered kidneys. A simple test for kidney disease is to set aside your urine in a bottle or glass for twenty-four hours. If there is a sediment or a cloudy appearance, it indicates that your kidneys are diseased, and unless something is done they become more and more affected until Bright's Disease or Diabetes develops.

FOLEY'S KIDNEY CURE is the only preparation which will positively cure all forms of Kidney and Bladder troubles, and cure you permanently. It is a safe remedy and certain in results.

If You are a sufferer, take FOLEY'S KIDNEY CURE at once. It will make you well.

Some Pronounced Incurable

Mr. G. A. Stillson, a merchant of Tampico, Ill., writes: "FOLEY'S KIDNEY CURE is meeting with wonderful success. It has cured some cases here that physicians pronounced incurable. I myself am able to testify to its merits. My face today is a living picture of health and FOLEY'S KIDNEY CURE has made it such."

Had Lumbago and Kidney Trouble

Edward Huss, a well-known business man of Salisbury, Mo., writes: "I wish to say for the benefit of others, that I was a sufferer from lumbago and kidney trouble, and all the remedies I took gave me no relief. I began to take FOLEY'S KIDNEY CURE, and after the use of three bottles I am cured."
