Fourth of July. Day We Celebrate Come and Help Us Observe Our Nation's Holiday.

Preparations are well under way for one of the best Fourth of July Celebrations ever held in this village. East Jordan Military Band, consisting of twenty-six pieces and finely drilled, will furnish the music, and Harbor Springs Base Ball Team will play our team a double header on that day. The Committee on Attractions, Messrs W. A. Loveday and Carl Stroebel, are in correspondence with a first class Vaudeville Troupe and in all probability arrangements will be made to have them here that day to add to the attractions. An organ is being engaged and everything points to a first class celebration. The managers of our new Electric Light Plant (which is one of the best in the state) are planning to wire Main-st for the evening and show what a dandy plant we've got by donating the glims.

The Transportation Committee, Messrs E. J. Crossman and E. A. Ashley are making arrangements whereby our village will be cheaply and easily accessible on that day, both by land and water. Bring your best girl or your wife (nobody else's wife) and join with us in one of the best celebrations ever held in this burg. Below are the committees appointed for the Fourth of July Celebration here, by the Committee of Arrangements—Messrs Converse and J. A. Boosinger: Finance, W. A. Lemieux, Dr. H. W. Dicken; Program, Prof. J. M. Tice and H. Milford; Games, R. F. Steffen, H. S. Price, J. G. Falls; Advertising and Attractions, W. A. Loveday, Carl Stroebel; Transportation, E. J. Crossman, E. A. Ashley; Fireworks, Geo. Otis, Roy Sherman.

McLeod of Detroit for Auditor General

One of the most important considerations of the coming Republican State Convention will be the choosing of a successor to the Hon. Perry F. Powers, present auditor general of the state of Michigan. Prominent among the candidates for the office is Hon. Malcolm J. McLeod of Detroit, a man who is fitted in every way for this office and who would fill the office with unrivaled credit if honored with a nomination and election. Mr. McLeod is a comparatively young man, being 36 years of age. Has lived most of his life in Michigan, fourteen years of the time in Detroit. He began life as a laboring man, and soon after coming to Detroit entered the employ of the Street Railway Company. In this position he won the confidence of his associates to such an extent that he was selected to represent them in the conferences with the Company relative to the adjustment of all questions affecting the relations of employer and employee. In this capacity his good judgment and conservative ideas were manifest and commended for him the respect and admiration of all parties interested. In 1898 he was elected a member of the legislature by a handsome plurality, and made a good record for honesty of purpose and faithful work.

In 1901 he was appointed to the position of Deputy Labor Commissioner, where he has had charge of the details of the work of the department, and in which the qualities referred to were none the less conspicuous and were supplemented by rare executive ability. The laws governing factories have been faithfully executed without the imposition of any unnecessary hardship upon the manufacturer. So satisfactory was his administration that his re-appointment in 1903 was one of the first decided upon by Governor Bliss.

Mr. McLeod is a loyal, consistent republican, and has ever been an active efficient worker for party success. His friends in Wauve county and throughout the state are numbered by thousands. If nominated and elected Auditor General there is no doubt that his administration of the affairs of that department will be marked by the same good judgment, honesty and efficiency which he has displayed in the past.

"The Bridal of the Seas."
A nuptial feast is spreading
On Panama's far shore,
With such a show of bounty
As ne'er has been before.
The bright and fair Pacific
The bonny bride will be
Who weds the proud Atlantic
The restless Eastern sea.
He's coming on to claim her;
The wedding garment's spun
Of opalescent wave crests
A-shimmer in the sun.
The mist that hides the hilltops
Will be the wedding veil,
All caught with pearls and coral
And laced with sea-ferns pale.
A shore of snowy whiteness
Will be the altar rail
Banked deep with palms and roses
And hung with orchids frail.
The wind, who loves the oceans,
The wedding march will play
Upon the strings of heaven,
Just at the dawn of day.
The nations will be bidden
From every foreign shore,
And echoes of the wassail
Will ring for evermore;
For chosen from these nations
Our own shall tie the band
That joins these eager oceans
Across the neck of land.

Every housekeeper should know that if they will buy Defiance Cold Water Starch for laundry use they will save not only time, because it never sticks to the iron, but because each package contains 16 oz.—one full pound—while all other Cold Water Starches are put up in 4-pound packages, and the price is the same 10 cents. Then again because Defiance Starch is free from all injurious chemicals. If your grocer tries to sell you a 12-oz. package it is because he has a stock on hand which he wishes to dispose of before he puts in Defiance. He knows that Defiance Starch has printed on every package in large letters and figures "16 ozs." Demand Defiance and save much time and money and the annoyance of the iron sticking. Defiance never sticks.

Hidden Gold in Mexico

Whether the report of the discovery of the Incas' treasure at Chayaltaya, Bolivia, is true or not, it is certain that the conquistadores did not get all the gold of the last Inca of Peru; nor all the gold and precious jewels of the Mexican monarch. The story is that the Incas' treasure, withheld from Pizarro and now discovered in Bolivia, is worth $16,000,000, and that the Indians believe there is still much more hidden away. Pizarro received a great sum from the Inca whom he so cruelly treated and then killed, but in so doing he missed a greater amount, which the Inca, hoping to save his life, promised his tormentor. In this country one sometimes hears talk of a great golden sun and other treasure hidden securely from the early Spaniards. One gentleman who has the blood of Montezuma in his veins and in whose family the traditions of the times of the conquest have been preserved, has said that probably fully $80,000,000 worth of treasure escaped the hands of Cortes and his followers. Where is this treasure hidden? Some have said that it was thrown into Lake Texcoco, and not many years back a company, well provided with funds, made extensive excavations in the Fedregal, near Coahuacan, on a spot indicated by tradition. A series of subterranean chambers was found, but no golden sun. Both in Mexico and Peru gold was hidden away from the greedy conquistadores by the Indians, who cherished the hope of making a successful rising against their conquerors. That hope has long died away, though much of the hatred for the race of the conquistadores remains in the breast of the aborigine. It is quite probable that some fine day much of Montezuma's hidden treasure may be found here, by a lucky hit. Perhaps it is concealed in an idol cave in the southwestern part of the Sierra surrounding this valley, a cave of which stories have been told among the Indians. Whence has come the gold that Indians living in these mountains, so close to the city, have brought here and sold to their legal representative? There is a mystery in all this, and a greater mystery in the whereabouts of Montezuma's treasure, which remains untouched. Mexican Herald.

Gems to Cure Ills

Many of the precious gems that are so highly valued as ornaments were once supposed to possess curative powers. The amethyst, for instance, was the stone of temperance and sobriety and was said to prevent the wearer from strong drinks and from indulging in too much sleep. Further, it was believed to quicken the wits and drive vapors from the head—altogether, a most desirable gem to have about one's person. Amethysts should certainly become fashionable. Pearls were administered in cases of consumption, and, when powdered, were recommended in ten-grain doses to strengthen the heart. Besides these virtues they were believed to fortify the nerves, cure weak eyes, old age and even "a cordial to resist the plague when taken in doses of six grains in water sweetened with marjama." Amber was given to cure coughs and diseases of the head, while red coral was said to be "an excellent purifier of the blood and good for the liver." Jasper was employed by the early physicians as an astringent and a cure for epilepsy and stone. It is probable the wonderful effects attributed to this stone were due more to the faith of the patient than to the substance itself. The beryl was said to help "defluxions of the throat" and the sardonyx "to make men cheerful and avert melancholy." The chrysolite was reputed to ward off fevers, while the onyx, when worn around the neck, was believed to prevent epileptic fits. The opal was said to cure weak eyes, and the bloodstone was often carried by warriors to arrest bleeding from a wound. It will be seen from this list, which might be considerably extended, that the physicians of old had in precious stones a formidable armament to combat many of the diseases of the flesh. Whether their modern descendants will be bold enough to try their effects remains to be seen. Who knows but we may yet hear of the specialist in nervous diseases prescribing powdered jasper for his epileptic patients, nor need we be surprised to see the "amethyst cure" advertised as the latest treatment for inebriates!

Marvels of the Ganges

The bank of the river Ganges, says a traveler, is one of the most picturesque and imposing panoramas you can imagine. It rises from the water at a steep grade, and is covered with a series of terraces upon which have been erected towers, temples, mosques, palaces, shrines, platforms and pavilions, bathing-houses, hospices for pilgrims, khans or lodging-houses, hospitals and other structures for the accommodations of the millions of people who come here from every part of India on religious pilgrimages and other missions. These structures represent an infinite variety of architecture, from the most severe simplicity to the fantastic and grotesque. They are surmounted by domes, pinnacles, minarets, spires, towers, cupolas and canopies; they are built of stone, marble, brick and wood; they are painted in every variety of colors, sober and gay; the balconies and windows of many of them are decorated with banners, bunting in all shapes and colors, festoons of cotton and silk garlands of flowers and various expressions of the taste and enthusiasm of the occupants or owners. From the Sparrow Hills at Moscow one who has sufficient patience can count 555 gilded and painted domes; from the cupola of St. Peter's one may look down upon the roofs of palaces, cathedrals, columns, obelisks, arches and ruins such as can be seen in no other place; around the fire tower at Pera are spread the marvelous glories of Stamboul, the Golden Horn and other parts of Constantinople; from the citadel at Cairo you can have a bird's-eye view of one of the most typical cities of the east; from the Eiffel Tower all Paris and its suburbs may be surveyed, and there are many other striking panoramas of artificial scenery, but nothing on God's foot-stool equals the picture of the holy Hindu city that may be seen from the deck of a boat on the Ganges. It has often been described in detail, but it is always new and always different, and it fascinates its witnesses. There is a repulsiveness about it which few people can overcome, but it is unique and second only to the Taj Mahal of all the sights in India.

A Real Fishing Yarn

Seeing some of your fish and bear stories in Maine woods, I must confess some of them do smell a little fishy, and for a change I will give you one founded on facts. You see it was this way: We were fishing on one of the Keswick lakes in the spring of 1893, and our catch had been enormous. About 3 o'clock in the afternoon we heard a peculiar noise on the bank of the lake like tearing of roots. So we went to investigate, and on nearing the shore were surprised to find a large black bear digging up the ground to beat pine of a kind. We lay low to watch, and what do you think he was doing? Why, he was digging worms, and after putting nice, fat angle worms on each of his forepaws he ventured out in the lake on an old sunken log, put down his forefeet in the water and actually scooped out huge trout so thick and fast that he almost darkened the sun. After a while, thinking there was enough fish for us, we put an ounce ball in his head. Talk about fish! Great heavens! There lay trout two feet deep on which two young cubs were gorging themselves. Well, we skinned that bear and, wishing to secure the cub alive, I just threw the bearskin over me and got down on all fours, and those cubs followed me right into camp, thinking it was mother bear. The cubs I afterward sold for $25 each, and the hide of the mother bear, which was a very large one, brought me $40, not too bad a day's work. Oh, yes, about those fish on the bank. Well, we went back the next day and barreled up twenty-four barrels of the best of those trout. The rest were left to rot in the sun. We put those fish in cold storage and we have some of them yet. Next.—Maine Woods.

FALL OF A GRIZZLY BEAR.

Without an instant's warning Tractable Beast Kills His Trainer. Another distinct type of a zoo rogue is the beast that goes wrong owing to accidental temptation—like Shaggy, an exceedingly intelligent, tractable Rocky Mountain grizzly who reverted to savagery and turned man-killer in a twinkling, owing to the unfortunate misstep and fall of his trainer. Shaggy was a big, handsome, gray old fellow, with a jungle-thick coat and a lumbering, awkward gait, and a funny twinkle that made him particularly adaptable for his part of clown in a remarkably trained group of fourteen bears. He had come under the hands of his teacher when but a helpless cub, had never lost his liking for carcasses, and, although the mightiest beast in the collection, was least suspected of being dangerous. Once, when a striped hyena hung to the ankle of his friend, he had run to the rescue, and cut loose right and left with his ponderous fore paws, and had bitten and torn and mangled the ugly beast to death before he could be beaten off. Among his accomplishments were that of turning admirably grotesque somersaults and the more difficult feat of balancing himself on his hind legs on a three-foot wooden sphere. Not a scratch or a scar had his trainer to show for the years of work he had put in with the bear. And yet, without an instant's warning, this same beast attacked and injured his master so that, when rescued, he was semi-demented, and so dreadfully cut and lacerated that the surgeons decided it useless to try to save his life. —McClure's Magazine.

Old Uncle Ned's Moose

"Uncle Ned" Abercrombie, a noted Maine guide, who comes from the Rangely lakes, told the following story while in Boston recently: "Did you ever hear about me and the moose cow and calf?" "I was up to Peavy's camp at Moose Lake—Moostlick, we call it—and one day went down the river to the dam to get a canoe. I were fetchin' it up, and just as I were goin' to beach to git out of the way of some men goin' down to mend the dam, right there on the shore stood a moose cow and a calf. She lowered her head like she wanted to charge and defend her calf. Says I to her: "Old gal, you've got a nice bossy and you got the longest beard I ever saw on a cow, but you ain't interferin' with me, and I ain't goin' to interfere with you." "Then I started up Bartlett's Brook with the canoe, and comin' around a curve there was the cow and the calf again. Says I, 'Old gal, I'll give you all you want with my gun if you foller me any more.' "But she wasn't interferin' much with me, so I didn't interfere with her. Now, Bartlett's Brook, you know, runs all criss-cross and zig-zag, like saw teeth, and comin' around three turns more there was the cow and calf again. Says I: 'Old gal, you'll shoot you.' But there wasn't no use doing that, for she wasn't really interferin' with me. Then I went around a couple of more turns, and there she was agin, still lowerin' her head and lookin' wicked like. "By gosh, old gal," says I, 'that'll do for you. You come to me, an' I'll settle you.' But she didn't do no interferin', so I didn't either. So I went to fishin' for an hour, and after I had caught two or three hundred I come back down stream, and darned if there wasn't the calf all alone. It seems the cow wasn't after me, but after my little dog, who was in the boat, but who had swimmited ashore while I was fishin'. That moose cow followed the dog clean into Peavy's camp, and was eatin' corn oatmeal out of a pot on the hearth when Peavy came along, and she was scared of Peavy was too surprised to shoot. "Anyways, he didn't have a gun."

Eugenie in Her Glory

From an article by Clara Morris in the Booklovers' Magazine we clip the following description of the Empress Eugenie, the "Empress of Sorrows," as Miss Morris quotes it from one who was connected with the American legation when Eugenie was in the height of her glory and who was permitted to escort her to her carriage on the occasion: "She was greatly addicted to wearing all the varying tones of lavender; but one shade of mauve—a pinkish mauve—she seemed passionately fond of. She wore it that day. The sun was shining brilliantly; the air seemed full of that suppressed excitement, peculiar to Paris. The empress's gown was of a transparent stuff women call 'organdie'—a white ground—with a wonderfully natural looking flower on it. Then this thin flowered stuff was worn over an under-slip of mauve silk—there seemed to be yards and yards of it; it billowed all about her and fairly filled the open landau. "Her slender little feet rested on a cushion, and they were gleaming in mauve silk and narrow-strapped, open sandals of black satin. From the vague, rosy purple mass of drapery the clear lines of her stately body rose; round waist, superb shoulders, queenly head, the pale blonde hair crowned with a bonnet composed entirely of violets, a great bunch of violets upon her breast; and over all a tent-like sun shade of mauve satin, founced all over with white lace, lined with white silk; while cunningly between mauve outside and white inside was stretched a pink silk inner lining, so that when the sunlight struck fully upon the parasol an evanescent, pearly-pink tint fell upon the fair face beneath it. And when the great open landau rolled swiftly toward the Bois, it was as if the carriage was full, filled with the plummy extravagance of the lilac's bloom—the poignant perfumes of violets massed beneath the loosely petaled opulence of the purple fleur de luce! From this tremendous mass of perfumed bloom her lovely face smiled forth, as though the prodigality of spring had been personified in her.

Ocean as Motive Power

A writer in the Paris Revue des Deux Mondes, M. Gaston Cadoux, has drawn a fancy picture of that happy time when London, Paris and Berlin will be lighted and warmed by electric energy derived from the sea. In these economic days, sea mills will skirt the shore; they will convert the rise and fall of the tides into electricity, which wires will conduct to the capital cities to do work, to illuminate and to warm. No more miners, we may suppose, pursuing their dangerous vocations under ground, and no more gas lights polluting the air we breathe, and smoke-laden London fogs will have ceased forever. As the moon does in a single tide, on but a short stretch of coast line, more work than all our steam engines, here is a limitless supply of energy. The idea is charming, not the least delightful part of it being the satisfaction of yoking the old satellite to our machinery and making her run our trains and drive our factories! Hitherto the least available natural source of electricity has been the sea.

Engineers find more difficulties in the way than occur to dreamers. Lord Kelvin showed, three-and-twenty years ago, says the London Telegraph, how hard it would be to get any power economically out of the rise and fall of the tides on the seashore. Ten, or in some cases a hundred, times as much might be done with a tidal river. The rise and fall of the tides between Gravesend and London would represent an enormous amount of power; but it so happens that the Thames is required for other purposes. Mr. Sutherland, in that ingenious work "Twentieth Century Inventions," calculates that the waves of the sea would yield in a few seconds as much power as a tidal force elevating and depressing the water level, say, eight feet, would do in as many hours. The infant born yesterday will be a very old man before he sees London lighted and warmed, to say nothing of other little requirements fulfilled by the power of marine tides, or currents or waves.

Word Is a Mouthful

"What is the longest word in the world? I am not rash enough to attempt to answer that question," said a well-known author. "There is a certain Welsh name of a place which reaches me every now and then, and which I have printed more than once, which is sufficiently formidable. I believe that the patient and serious Germans have turned out some verbal monsters, and it may be that the Chinese, the Russians and other races with whose literature I am unacquainted have produced series of linked letters long drawn out which are called words. So I carefully abstain from saying what is the longest word in the world. "But I think I may venture to suggest that there are not many words longer than one which may be found in Liddell and Scott's Greek lexicon. Here is the modest trifle: "Lepidotemachoselactogaleokraniolellopsarodrimputrimmataphiopiaaromellotokatechumenokichipikossuphophatopeteralektrononoptegkphalokigoklolelolagoosiraloabaletraganoptero gon. "I hope I have copied it correctly, but there may be a slip here and there, and life is not long enough to write it out twice, and the good printer, in whom I have the utmost confidence, may be excused if he stumbles now and then. In English it ought to have 177 letters—there or thereabouts. "In its original Greek form the letters would not be quite so numerous, as 'ch,' 'ps' and 'ph' are represented by one letter. The word is used by Aristophanes, who was a comedian, and who therefore must have his little joke, and some of his little jokes, by the way, are not quite nice. As to its meaning, the learned lexicographers state that it is the name of a dish compounded of all kinds of dainties, fish, flesh, fowl and sauces. "It would look well on a menu and I should like to hear a badgered waiter trying to shout it down a long-suffering tube or a gentleman who has already dined fairly well bawling it out toward the end of the banquet. on its purple and diamonds. No city ever wore such diamonds or so many of them before. The shroutted towers blaze with electric fire, while in all directions, over bridge and ferry and elevated road, radiate trailing lines of light.

FAD FOR BARVAS POTTERY.

Oddly Constructed Utensils That Are in Current Demand. In the Island of Lewis, so well known to all readers of William Black's romance, is the little village of Barvas, where two old women carry on a rude pottery, for many years unknown to any but their neighbors. These, the only potters in the Scottish Highlands, have made their coarse ware for village use and must have been poorly paid, since the people are badly off, and for many a year now the crockery made in factories has been procurable even in the Isle of Lewis. But a sportsman staying in the neighborhood saw and fancied the pottery and its makers and spread its fame abroad and now the old women can scarcely supply it fast enough. Formerly only cragans, a rude sort of bowl to hold fish oil or milk, was made, but now to please tourists and visitors strange and uncouth tea services are turned out. The cups are not warranted to stand straight or the saucers to maintain their equilibrium, the teapot bulges and the sugar bowl looks tipsy, but they are queer, they are of Barvas, and so precious, the best of all they keep the old women in comfort. These dishes are made from a local clay of a smooth yellow. After being kneaded it is shaped by hand, scraped with a knife and dried for days in the sun, then fired among peats. A Lucky Inspiration. He had studied by himself, and came up for examination to college with inadequate preparation. He approached ancient history with fear and doubt, for he had had little time to stuff himself with the history of the Caesars. The paper contained a question at which the young man looked with dismay. "What can you say about Caligula?" He did not remember that Caligula was the worst of a long line of mad and bad Roman emperors. But a witless inspiration came to him, of the sort that often saves the young and the ignorant. He wrote: "The less said about Caligula, the better." He passed.

Love and the Light of Morning. A shelter rude and a crust of bread, But your hand in mine on the way I tread. And the red blooms over the roses dead. And Love, and the light of morning.

A sorrow-fritling, the lonely years, But your smile like light in a rain of tears. And your sweet, firm faith, and your whispered prayers. And Love, and the light of morning! And so we mingle, and so we meet, And shall, till the journey, at last, complete. We rest with the beautiful dreams and sweet. In Love and the light of morning! —Frank L. Stanton in Atlanta Constitution.

Not Ready for His Coffin.

Engineer Minamisawa was wounded in a sea battle, where he distinguished himself on board the Kasumi. On his arriving at Sasebo, "I was astonished to find," remarked the officer with a great deal of amusement, "three coffins brought and to hear some one calling out: 'Where is the corpse of Engineer Minamisawa?' I am that corpse," I bawled in reply.

Owens Much English Land.

There are a number of famous estates in England, but the man who probably owns more land than any other one inhabitant of that country is the duke of Sutherland, who is now in Canada and will make a tour throughout the British northwest. The duke is said to be the largest landholder in the British islands, owning about 1,358,000 acres.

The Abused Party.

"Is that your mule?" asked the man who was going fishing. "Yassir," said the colored man, who was sitting on a log by the road. "Does he kick?" "Decd, mistuh, he ain't got no cause to kick. He's gittin' his own way right along. I'm de one dat's havin' de worry an' difficulty."

MAGNETIC TRAIN THAT INVENTOR CLAIMS WILL HAVE SPEED OF 400 MILES AN HOUR

According to the plans of Prof. Albert C. Albertson, president of the Electro-Magnetic Railway Construction company, New Yorkers are soon to see something in the way of dizzy speed over the rails that will make the Empire State Express and Twentieth Century Flyer look like local freights. The mere matter of eighty miles an hour will be comparatively so slow that the passengers are like-and Twenty-sixth street. He has a miniature railroad there on which he chases a toy train of one car and the queer-looking motor every day, in order to perfect the mechanism. The inventor says he can burn up the rails with it, and is really afraid to let it reach its maximum.

Prof. Albertson says that he himself does not yet know the exact maximum of speed that his invention can attain, but is convinced that it can haul a train along a straight track at more than four hundred miles an hour.

The railroad between Midland Beach and South Beach is to be a sort of a toy elevated structure. The rails will rest on a steel framework eight feet above the ground. The object of this is to give the train what the inventor regards as absolute im-

By to ask the conductor what's detailing them.

By July 1 Prof. Albertson plans to have in operation the first magnetic train the world has ever seen. His company is about to begin the construction of a railway between Midland Beach and South Beach, S. I. The road will be one and eight-tenths miles in length and the rolling stock will be one little motor of the Albertson patent and, at the most, three cars. There will be no necessity for more than a single train for, at the lightning speed that the inventor purposes sending it over the right of way, two trains would be cumbersome.

Fifteen seconds will be the schedule time from terminal to terminal, if Prof. Albertson realizes his hopes. He said yesterday that he had figured it all out and made his estimates of the speed with the little models he has in his workshop at Eleventh avenue can attain, but is convinced that it can haul a train along a straight track at more than four hundred miles an hour.

readily understand it," said the inventor. "I have given seven years of my life to its study and perfection. The time is not far distant when the railroads not only of this country but of every one in the civilized world, will be compelled to adopt the electro-magnetic motor. It will revolutionize speed and reduce the cost of operation."

"Although a speed of 400 or more miles an hour sounds extravagant at the present, it is no more fabulous than the rate of speed attained today by fast trains appeared to the inventive world forty or fifty years ago."

"The short line is to be constructed chiefly for the purpose of demonstrating that under the proper conditions a phenomenal rate of speed may be obtained with perfect safety. We expect to have the best engineers in the world here to see the initial tests."—New York World.

PERILS FACED BY CREWS OF "DESTROYERS"

"Put a 30-knot destroyer into a rough sea," says Sir William White, "and the limit of speed she can make is what she can bear—what the people on her can bear."

Traveling at a 30-knot speed is going at the rate of a little over thirty-four miles an hour. You can travel at that speed in a railway train with comfort—in fact, it is about the speed of the ordinary train. But imagine a runaway horse dragging your carriage over a rough country road at thirty-four miles an hour and you get an idea of what it means to go thirty knots an hour in a torpedo boat. Good for the digestion, maybe, but rough on the nerves; and if anything gives way, disaster complete and overwhelming.

The average age of the commanders of the battleships in the United States navy is about 57 years. In selecting officers to command torpedo boats it is endeavored to get men of about 30 or under. Torpedo boats are the bucking bronchos of the sea, and it takes a young man to ride them successfully.

COOKERY IN ANCIENT TIMES.

Wonderful Concoctions Told of in Centuries Old Book.

An old volume, the "Noble Boke of Cookry, for a Prynce Houssholde or any other Estately Houssholde," written about the year 1467, contains many rare and curious recipes in use 430 years ago, not only for ordinary dishes, but those to be eaten on fast and fish days. It is curious, in reading this cookery book, to find that there are the same birds, beasts and fishes, the same courses, and sometimes the same names to dishes as in a modern one; but although the names are often the same the ingredients and the preparation are very different. For instance, their "blanche mange" was composed of lamprey, or other fish, and their custards contained fresh pork mixed small. Here is one recipe from the book: "To make monkey, take and boll cows' cream, and when it is boyled set it aside and let it cool; then take cow curds and press out the whey; then bruse them in a mortar, and cast them in the pot to the cream and boll together. Put thereto sugar, honey, and may butter, colour it up with saffron, and in the setting down put in yolks of eggs, well beaten and do away the strain, and let the potage be standing, then arrange it in dishes, and plant therein flowers."

The Dreamer's Dream.
With many a furrowed trace of life's wind-fretted deep,
Here lies a common face an aged man asleep.
Just off the dusty way whereon the sun-glare breaks,
Amid the drowse of day, a casual nap he takes.

Only a poor old man; yet whence, through all disguise
Of years of toil and tan, steal over his closed eyes
These dreams, sent as a kiss, which to the face impart
A beauty and a bliss—the youthime of the heart?

TRAIT OF KING LUNALILO.

Dusky Monarch, When in Liquor, Would Use Only English Tongue.

William N. Armstrong, who was attorney-general under King Kalakaua of Hawaii, has written an amusing volume about that monarch. He says in it: "It is a singular trait of the Hawaiians to avoid the use of English when sober, but when drunk to use it with much volubility. The king's immediate predecessor on the throne, Lunaliilo, when in liquor would often refuse to converse with his native relatives in the native language, but addressed them in English, and directed an interpreter to translate his speech; and, on the other hand, required a translation into English of their conversation in Hawaiian. The king's remarkable memory furnished him with a considerable vocabulary of uncommon words; alcohol seemed to open that part of his brain where they were stored, especially when, like the moon, he was at the third quarter and coming to the full." On one occasion the use of the words "hippodramatic performance" secured to him the prestige of a learned man."

HAS A $4 GOLD PIECE.

Milwaukee Man Owns Possibly Only One in Existence.

A $4 gold coin, probably the only one of its kind in existence, is on exhibition at the Germania National bank. It belongs to Dr. Charles J. Lange, and is valued by the bank of $200, although this is only approximate.

The piece of gold is of the same diameter as a $5 gold piece, but thinner. On its face is the well-known "liberty head," without the cap, however. Around this are 13 stars, interspersed with the letters "G. 3 3 7 C. 7 GRAMS." The exact meaning of these letters none of the bank officials have ascertained.

On the reverse of the coin is a five-pointed star, into which is cut the inscription: "One stella—400 cents." Around it are the words: "E Pluribus Unum. Deo Est Gloria." And around these, forming the rim of this side of the coin, are the words: "United States of America. Four Dm."

About 15 years ago this coin was sent to Washington by the Merchants Exchange bank of this city, but the only information obtained was that the coin is genuine. It is believed that the coin was minted as a design, but that the design was rejected because of its similarity to the $5 gold piece.—Milwaukee Sentinel.

HORNS THAT DIDN'T FIT SULLY.

Emblems Seem Out of Place Since His Recent Defeat.

One of the relics of the late bull campaign in cotton is a fine pair of horns that once adorned the head of a Texas long horn steer. They were presented to Daniel L. Sully in token of his ability as a bull leader and still hang in his old office, now occupied by the receivers of his firm. They are magnificent specimens, with a fine natural curve, and measure six feet from tip to tip.

Hardly ten years ago such a present as these horns would have been snuffed at by a "cotton king" or any potentate, whether of a commodity market or any other real or fancied realm. Then they were plentiful, or at least were only beginning to get scarce. Strange as it may seem, when one considers how numerous Texas long-horn steers were only a short time ago, a good pair of these horns is almost as much of a rarity as the bison head. A good set will bring from $250 to $300, or several times as much as a whole steer, beef, hide, horns and all would have brought less than ten years ago.

Indian Households.

No one is a separate unit in India. The sons never leave the parental roof-tree. All marrying—marriage with them is as birth and death, inevitable—and their children are added to the family. There are always widowed aunts, other grandparents—no relative is ever left to shift for himself in India—so that households of 150 are not uncommon. Add almost as many servants, and we have some idea of the occupation and cares of the mistress of such a home. The servants' quarters surround the yard or "compound," and the ladies of the household care for them as did the stately dames of old Virginia in the plantation life before the war. The great zenana courtyards stretch back to fruit and vegetable gardens, and there are tanks or artificial ponds, where ladies and children bathe in seclusion. Blossoming trees rise above hedges that jealously guard these sacred retreats, where a family may sport in private with freedom unknown to us, and suited to their shy, poetic, playful natures, that only unfold when with each other, caring as little to see the world outside as to be seen by it.—Everybody's Magazine.

Dogs Make Good Caddies.

The dog caddie is the striking innovation that presents itself in spring golfing in the east. Some New York young women have introduced the dog caddie upon the links with great success, and others are buying and training dogs in order to follow the example. "What advantage, as a caddie, has the dog over the boy?" was the question put the other day to one of the exponents of the dog caddie idea. He replied: "The boy caddie costs from 15 cents to 25 cents an hour. An afternoon's golfing with a boy eats a big hole in a dollar. But a dog caddie costs nothing. With the boy caddie you are constantly losing balls. Balls cost $3 and $4 a dozen, and when one disappears your boy is none too anxious to help you find it, for if he finds it later himself he can sell it at a good price. But with the dog caddie you never lose a ball. He noses through the tall weeds, finds it and picks it up in his mouth." It has been found that the best way to fasten the sticks to the dog is by means of a stout harness with loops, two or three on each side.

Demand for German Labor.

A report on the German labor market for March states that no month since 1900 has shown such great facility of employment for laborers seeking work, and in only two years since 1896 has March presented such satisfactory conditions. There was, in fact, work for all applicants.

A Visitor.

I sometimes smoke a pipe with him
When twilight shades begin;
I find him in the opposite
The Man I Might Have Been.

He never with misfortune met;
Men hail him with acclaim;
He shows me all the good he makes,
The glory and the fame.

But is he any happier
When all is counted in?
Just one man knows, and he won't tell—
The Man I Might Have Been.

Dairying in Mexico.

Mr. Leplasse, the United States consul at Tuxpan, Mexico, in a report to the government, says: "The old methods of milking, churning, and general manipulation of milk products are still in existence here, thereby rendering it impossible to produce good butter. Cows are allowed to roam over the grazing lands and are rarely sheltered or given the least care. The milking process is performed in the most unskilled manner conceivable. The cow is tied by the head, and the operator proceeds to milk the animal in his rough and unsystematic manner until he finally forces a quart or two of inferior milk from the cow's udder. The milk is placed in untidy wooden vessels and transferred to some shed or outhouse, where it is allowed to remain unprotected over night. The following morning the cream is skimmed and either beaten with a forked stick or violently agitated in a bottle until the butter granules are formed. It is then indifferently washed and offered as butter. It quickly turns rancid. It sells at from 30 to 40 cents per pound United States money and is good neither to look at nor to taste. The sour milk is compressed in a coarse cloth, salted and allowed to dry for several days. It is then an insipid, spongy mass, which sells for from 5 to 8 cents (U. S.) a cheese. Each of these cheeses is round, about an inch thick and about 8 inches in diameter. They find a quick sale in this market. Such a thing as the most simple, modern dairy appliance is unknown or at least not used.

New Meat Preservative.

A new meat-curing process is reported from Germany, where Professor Emmerich claims to be able to preserve meat in a fresh condition by injecting into the veins of the dead animal acetic acid. The blood is first permitted to run out and then the acid is put in. It permeates the flesh, so the professor claims, and that prevents all decay and makes the use of refrigeration unnecessary. It is obvious that if this process proves to be all that is claimed for it, it will revolutionize the meat curing industry, as acetic acid is not an expensive preservative. The reports say that meat so cured has been shipped from Germany to South African ports and was found on arriving at its destination to be of good quality and perfectly preserved. Our readers must remember however that great things are claimed for all new processes.

Feeding the Bull.

The feeding of the bull is a very important matter, more so than the feeding of the cow, for the reason that the bull is generally kept up all the time. Under such an abnormal condition he becomes too fat if he is fed a too large ration of corn. It is better to feed him on a mixed ration, including oats, and to give him a rough feed rich in nitrogen rather than rich in carbon. Bran, which is comparatively low in carbon and high in nitrogen, should be a part of the daily ration. For the bull at least roots should be fed in considerable quantities, unless he has an abundance of exercise, which most of our bulls do not get. If under a properly balanced ration the bull becomes too fat it is indicative of a lack of vigor, and such a bull should be disposed of and one substituted that has the vigor desired.

Reject Decayed Food.

The farmer is sometimes tempted to feed decayed or musty food to his poultry. It should never be done. Just what effect it might have on the eggs produced by the fowls we do not know, but it may have a very serious effect on the digestive apparatus. We have seen it urged not to feed such foods because they would give to the eggs the same taints they had themselves, but this may be doubted. One writer tries to prove his case by asserting that onions fed to fowls produced the smell of onions in the eggs. This may well be true, as the onion contains a very penetrating oil that will pass through the systems of most animals. It will appear in the egg of the hen or the milk of the cow. But that does not apply to the general run of foods. They should be rejected, but rejected for the reason that they endanger the health of the birds.

Green Manuring Crops.

There are many soils that are not benefited by green manuring crops. Such soils are those already rich in nitrogen and in humus. An investigation by the University of Illinois has shown that on many of the soils in Illinois an addition of humus and of nitrogen would be a positive detriment. This leads to the remark that we must have a reason for every farm operation. The green manure crop is needed on the soil that is deficient in humus and nitrogen, but is labor lost on many other soils. It is obvious that we cannot lay down rules that can be followed blindly on all farms. The green manuring crop is valuable when it is needed, but worthless or worse when it is not needed. The intelligence of every farmer must determine the necessity for each operation on the farm.

Many failures with incubators are due entirely to ignorance in those trying to run them. In this, as in everything else, a person must learn how.

The Abrus precatorius, indigenous to India, is said by a German scientist to accurately forecast meteorological conditions by the position of its leaflets, even to the extent of predicting a recent earthquake.

A BURMESE DWELLING HOUSE.

Little Architectural Skill Required in Their Erection.

In Burma a dwelling house is built without a nail. It is hung on four upright posts of teak or bamboo; seven or eight feet from the ground the planking of the floor is tied to the uprights with rattan; the walls are made of split bamboo plaited into beautiful and fanciful patterns. The roof consists of the leaves of the toddy palm, which have been soaked in salt water to make them insect-proof. There are no windows, but large flaps of the plaited bamboo walls are raised in the daytime to admit light and air. The house consists, in the case of the poor, of only one good-sized room, but they lead off from the common room and are separated from it by partitions of plaited bamboo. These are generally raised one or two feet from the floor of the common room, but in no case is one floor above the other in a Burmese house, it being thought a great indignity to have any one's feet over one's head. The thatched roofs are highly inflammable, and leaning against every thatched house may be seen a long hooked stick with which to pull off the roof should it catch fire.

Candle Burns Outdoors.

This candle shade covers everything—candle, candlestick, and all. It is in use in the West Indies—out of doors—and stands about two feet high, with a thick flange top and bottom. Made of clear glass, it sometimes has a small pattern etched in it. The candle burns freely inside the shade, as no direct draught can get at it, and it does not drip. It lasts a long time. As the glass is very thick for its size, it is not apt to be tipped over.

An Island of Black Cats.

One of the queerest corners of the earth is Chatham island, off the coast of Ecuador. This island lies six hundred miles west of Guayaquil, and the equator runs directly through it. Capt. Reinman, who was sent to Galapagos group of islands to inquire into the proper grounding of a deep-sea cable, stopped at Chatham island, and says it abounds in cats, every one of which is black. These animals live in the crevices of the lava foundation near the coast, and subsist by catching fish and crabs instead of rats and mice. Other animals found on this island are horses, cattle, dogs, goats and chickens, all of which are perfectly wild.

Remarry After Long Separation.

Capt. and Mrs. C. G. Thompson of Arkansas City were first married more than fifty years ago. After twenty-five years they were divorced. The wife, after a long separation, recently remarried. In the twenty-five years which followed Mrs. Thompson was married twice and buried both husbands, and Capt. Thompson was married once and divorced. Recently the pair came together by chance. A reconciliation was fixed up and their marriage followed.

Only Two Old-Timers Left.

It is a curious fact that out of a long list of merchants who were doing business in Brunswick, Me., fifty years ago none are living now except A. V. Metcalf and Ira P. Bonker, who at that time were in partnership. The latter is now the treasurer of Brunswick college.

A Salvini Incident.

The late Alexander Salvini was once playing Hamlet in a small Wisconsin town. The theater was the cruelest of structures, and the stage had been contrived for the occasion by the simple device of elevating a platform on four posts. When the gravedigging scene was reached a draft of cold air blew up through the aperture in the stage and not only caused the gravediggers' teeth to chatter, but played freaks with their garments.

Salvini, entering with Horatio, heard from the grave only a strange jumble of words bitten in pieces by the first clown's clicking teeth. But when he saw the loose garments of the workmen flapping joyfully in the breeze the irrelevant sight was too much for him, and laughter checked his speech. He tried to say, "Has this fellow no feeling of his business that he sings at gravemaking?" but he had to turn his face away from the audience and laugh, while the gravediggers carried the scene along with much fuss of occupation with pick and spade till Hamlet had recovered his gravity.

The base ball game between the Harbor Spring team and East Jordan on our grounds last Wednesday afternoon was one of the best and fastest games ever put up on the diamond here. The actual time of the game was a little less than an hour. Our boys won by a score of 2 to 0. The run-getting took place in the third inning when a hit by Dunn, sacrifice by Lalonde, base on balls to Oleary, and a hit by Fischer netted the two runs. East Jordan made one error and got five hits, Harbor Spring made two errors and got a like number of hits. Both pitchers were in good form and, needless to say, received glib-edged support. Lloyd for East Jordan, struck out 8, while Alberts for the visitors struck out 5. Petoskey plays here next Tuesday and Harbor Spring returns the Fourth for a double-header.

A NAME IN THE SAND.

And I walked the ocean strand;
 A pebbly shell was in my hand;
 I searched and wrote upon the sand
 My name—the year—the day.
 Onward from the spot I passed,
 One lingering look behind I cast;
 I saw a pebble rolling high and fast,
 And washed my lines away.

And so, methought, 'twill shortly be
 With every mark on earth from me;
 A wave of dark oblivion's sea
 Will sweep across the place
 Where I have trod the sandy shore—
 And, as I write, to be no more
 Of me—my day—the name I bore,
 To leave no track nor trace.

And yet, with him who counts the sands,
 And holds the waters in his hands,
 I know a lasting record stands,
 Inscribed against my name;
 'Tis this that mortal part has wrought;
 'Tis this that thinking soul has thought;
 'Tis from these fleeting moments caught
 For show or for

REFLECTIONS and REPENTANCE

BY EPES W. SARGENT

Bennington looked after Lucy Alton's retreating form with amazement. Only the night before she had promised that she would marry him in the spring and had sealed the bargain with a kiss. She had been tender and loving then.

This morning she walked past him with no sign that she was aware of his presence save a haughty "Sir!" when he had raised his hat in salutation.

The more Bennington thought it over the more inexplicable it became. He and Lucy had been more than friends for a couple of years. She had so clearly shown her preference for his society that none had sought to dispute his position.

He could imagine no rival who might have poisoned her mind against him in so brief a time as had elapsed since the night before. He puzzled his brain until he whirled, but still no satisfactory explanation presented itself.

Then he decided upon a very foolish action. He left town.

Not even his most intimate friends knew where he had gone, and for several weeks the set in which he moved wondered at his hurried departure. Then they decided that Lucy Alton had refused him after all, and they gave the matter no further thought.

As for Bennington, he was seeking to divert his mind in Paris, and only succeeded in discovering that gay capital to be a most despicable place. A week later he was arguing with the customs officials on the familiar pier in New York.

His man was too well trained to exhibit any surprise when his master walked in. He silently placed a huge pile of letters upon the library table and went out to attend to the trunk.

Bennington turned the letters over idly. Suddenly he gave a start. There was one little square envelope addressed in a handwriting, the sight of which made his heart beat faster. He tore it open.

"Dear Jack," it ran, "what has become of you? It is not nice, sir, to leave one's fiancée in this abrupt fashion. Have you already repented your proposal? I don't like to think that. Come in, Jack, and tell me what the trouble is. I did so want to see you last night."

It was signed "Lucy," and bore a date one day later than his experience on the Atlantic.

A second note was in Mr. Alton's handwriting. This was dated a week later. In vigorous terms her father told Bennington what he thought of his actions.

"I learn that you are abroad, sir," he wrote. "I should advise you to remain there. I cannot be answerable for the circumstances should we meet."

If Lucy's letter had been a puzzle, this was even less understandable. There was no mistaking the direct he had received. In the face of that, why should she write a day later, as though nothing had happened, and why should her father brand him as a booby and a cad.

The quickest way to find out would be to drive around to the Altons. He called a cab and in ten minutes he was holding converse with Jackson, the Alton's butler. Jackson was polite, but very evidently fearful.

"Please don't insist, Mr. Bennington," he pleaded. "Mr. Alton is not strong, sir. If he were to see you, the excitement might kill him."

"See here, Judson," persisted Bennington hotly, "what's the matter? Why should the excitement kill Mr. Alton? What have I done?"

Judson coughed ever so slightly. He was too well trained to admit that he knew the family secrets.

"I'm sure I don't know anything," declared Judson respectfully. "Only Mr. Alton declared that you were not to see Miss Alton, and Dr. Sommers ordered me to be careful that Mr. Alton did not see you. I am very sorry, sir."

There was a slight pause, and before he could gather his senses Ben-

"Are you sure you will never make the same mistake again?" Bennington found himself outside the closed door.

It would never do to make a scene on the front steps. Bennington was determined to get at the bottom of the mystery, but this was not the place. He jumped into the cab again and was driven around to Mrs. Graves', who had been his mentor since his mother's death.

"I'm sure I don't know what the matter is, Jack," she said sympathetically. "There is a report around that Lucy would not have you, and that you took a broken heart out of sight until it mended again."

"How can I find out?" he urged. "I can't go along like this. It will drive me crazy."

"Come to the tableaux vivants tonight," said the matron. "Lucy will be taking part and we will try to see her."

It was hard upon Bennington to face the curious gaze that evening at the charity entertainment. It seemed to him as though every one in the room were discussing him.

Still, he bore it bravely, sustained by the hope of seeing Lucy. She was to appear in the last picture, and the program line read:

"Reflections, Miss Alton, Miss Carter."

Miss Carter. That must be Mabel Carter, Lucy's cousin from the west. When the curtain went up, there was no sign of Miss Carter. It merely disclosed Lucy standing in front of a mirror admiring her reflection. Then suddenly the reflection stepped through the mirror frame, and a great light dawned upon Bennington. He remembered now that Miss Carter was supposed to exactly resemble Lucy. The resemblance must have been so strong as to have deceived even the eyes of love.

Headless of Mrs. Gray's detaining hand, he pushed his way through the crowd to the door leading to the improvised stage. Lucy was just coming down the steps from the temporary platform. He caught her wrist.

"Lucy," he cried, "can you ever forgive me for having been such a fool? I thought your cousin was you, and she cut me. I did not have the heart to stay and see you again. If you will forgive the error I promise never to do so again."

"Are you sure you will never make the same mistake again?"

"I assure you that it will not happen again," he declared eagerly.

He sought to take her in his arms, but she skillfully evaded him, and a voice from the platform cried out: "See here, Jack! I don't mind your making love to Mabel if you think it's me—but I draw the line at proxy kisses."

Then Miss Carter very thoughtfully hurried to her dressing room, while Jack had to make apologies again to the real Lucy.

She has accepted a ring as a certain means of identification. It is a circlet of plain gold.—Boston Globe.

DELAYED THE WEDDING TRIP.

Transvaal Bride and Groom Worried by the Elements.

Thrilling adventures got into the spelt columns of the Transvaal newspapers sometimes. A Johannesburg paper tells of a marriage at Lyndenburg. It says: "The bride wore her traveling gown and immediately after the ceremony the marriage trip of thirty-eight miles to Pilgrim's Rest was begun in a cart drawn by eight mules. When about half the distance was made it was found that the Ohristad river was in flood and passage was impossible. The route was retraced for about ten miles and temporary accommodation secured at a farmhouse. Next day, however, the river proved just as impassable, and thus for four days the honeymoon couple were held up by the elements. On the third day a traveler attempted to cross with a cart and two horses, but the attempt proved disastrous, for the horses and cart were swept away and were never seen again. The passenger probably owed his life to the fact that he became entangled in a barbed-wire fence. Two days after this, the river having subsided somewhat, the help of some transport drivers was requisitioned and the cart and team were floated across, with the help of strong ropes at the other side."

"Of his case Herpin says: 'I have been to hospitals, where they attempted to drug me in order to produce sleep, but I would not undergo that sort of treatment. I have given up the idea of sleeping for the rest of my life; in fact, I'm so used to it that I think no more about the matter. I've heard of people going insane that were troubled with insomnia, but I never will. I am well and eat three meals a day.'

"It would seem from this that sleep is not one of life's essentials. Is sleep absolutely necessary to healthful existence? Is it possible for men to live to the reasonable and average age without sleep? These are large questions and they ramify in many ways when one begins to deal with them speculatively. In the first place much will depend upon the type and temperament of the man. Persons whose mental capabilities are of a low order, whose receptive powers are limited, and who are without the affluents which give a rich pottle color to the things of this life—persons who are sluggish mentally and temperamentally, and who feel only when pricked and prodded by the sharp exigencies of the struggle for existence, the 'dumb-driven cattle' of the world, must needs sleep much, whereas the men and women of a sensitive mold, whose minds are as fragile and responsive as the most delicate of photographers' plates, who catch and hold, and love the images as they fit in variant shadings—the men and women who mentally trace the very finest of the nuances and absorb much of the forces which play upon them—such as these may do on less sleep than persons of the dull, unresponsive and unpoetic type. Napoleon required but little sleep; but, as a great American who was once reminded of the fact remarked, all men are not Napoleons. I have known many men well advanced in years, who actually slept less than younger and more vigorous men."

KEPT "BOY" IN CHECK.

Centenarian Restrained Spirits of His 76-Year-Old Son.

Senator Dewey tells of attending a commemorative dinner given to Chevreul, the famous French chemist, on his 100th birthday, apropos of having himself recently arrived at the age of 70.

"Chevreul ascribed his longevity," said Mr. Dewey, "to the fact that being sure of his position in the factory of the Gobelins tape-ries so long as he might live, though his position was a modest one, he never worried about finances, never had serious troubles, and never had touched tobacco or alcohol. He had lived most temperately and drank the muddy waters of the Seine."

"Beside him was a gentleman who enjoyed the dinner to the utmost and was hilariously and rather uproariously proposing the health of everybody at the table. The old gentleman every little while would place his hand upon this neighbor and check his levity."

"Why does Chevreul take so much interest in his lively neighbor? I inquired of my escort."

"Because he is his son," was the reply.

"How old is the boy?" said I.

"Seventy-six," answered my polite escort.—Washington Post.

He Couldn't "Recover."

A young clergyman in making his weekly visits among the poor of his parish in a nearby country village quite recently learned of a poor, sick man who recently came from Ireland with his wife and one child. When the minister called at the house he was given a most hearty welcome and on reaching the bedside of the sick man was surprised at finding him apparently well. The day being warm the clergyman suggested that he get out of bed and spend an hour under a shade tree in the garden.

"It may do you good," he added.

The wife, who was present, said her husband had better remain in the house until the following day and then take a little recreation. When the clergyman returned a week later he found the husband still in bed.

"Haven't you been out of bed since I was here?" asked the man of the cloak.

"No, sir, he has not," replied the wife. "I don't like to tell you, sir, but the doctor gave my husband up a week ago and we sold his clothes. That's the reason he didn't go to the garden."—Philadelphia Press.

Vain Endeavor.

A man once saved his money in a very prudent way: He put a little by for fear there'd be a He heeded all the maxims about thrift, and work, and health, and reverence economy, which is the source of wealth. He made some small investments, and some larger after while, and listened for applause, when he assumed a better style. But some of those who knew him sneered, while others simply sighed, and he had practiced all the virtues, but they weren't satisfied.

He looked the situation over with sadness and dismay. And said, "I guess I'll go ahead and give the stuff away." He built a lot of buildings and sincerely strove to find a way to spend his money that would benefit mankind. But people looked askance at him and said, "I told you so. The art of spending money is a thing he doesn't know. It's scarce to contemplate such ostentatious pride." He did his best to please them, but they weren't satisfied.—Washington Star.

Scotch Sabbath Observance.

Sir Archibald Gelkie's examples of the rigid Sabbatarianism of the Highlands are interesting. One is of a lady who rose early on Sunday, and carried her canary down into the collar to keep the bird quiet. Another is of a young clergyman whose orthodoxy was suspected because he was seen standing at his window on the Lord's Day "dangling his balra." A third story was told by the late Lord Playfair, who heard the nurse quieting his little boy, one Sunday in this wise: "Whist, whist, my bonnie lamb; it's the Sabbath, or I wad whistle ye a sang, but I'll sing ye a paraphrase."

He Needs No Sleep

"How is it that some persons want much sleep, some can do on little, while there are still others who can get along without any sleep at all?"

asked a writer in the New Orleans Times-Democrat. "Now here is a problem, a solution of which might prove a vast benefit to humankind. I am reminded of the importance of the subject by a case to which my attention was recently called in New Jersey. Albert Herpin of Trenton, born in France, a hostler, declares that he has not slept a wink for ten years, and his statement, according to the New York Herald's correspondent, is borne out by the physicians who have at different times treated him for insomnia.

"Of his case Herpin says: 'I have been to hospitals, where they attempted to drug me in order to produce sleep, but I would not undergo that sort of treatment. I have given up the idea of sleeping for the rest of my life; in fact, I'm so used to it that I think no more about the matter. I've heard of people going insane that were troubled with insomnia, but I never will. I am well and eat three meals a day.'

"It would seem from this that sleep is not one of life's essentials. Is sleep absolutely necessary to healthful existence? Is it possible for men to live to the reasonable and average age without sleep? These are large questions and they ramify in many ways when one begins to deal with them speculatively. In the first place much will depend upon the type and temperament of the man. Persons whose mental capabilities are of a low order, whose receptive powers are limited, and who are without the affluents which give a rich pottle color to the things of this life—persons who are sluggish mentally and temperamentally, and who feel only when pricked and prodded by the sharp exigencies of the struggle for existence, the 'dumb-driven cattle' of the world, must needs sleep much, whereas the men and women of a sensitive mold, whose minds are as fragile and responsive as the most delicate of photographers' plates, who catch and hold, and love the images as they fit in variant shadings—the men and women who mentally trace the very finest of the nuances and absorb much of the forces which play upon them—such as these may do on less sleep than persons of the dull, unresponsive and unpoetic type. Napoleon required but little sleep; but, as a great American who was once reminded of the fact remarked, all men are not Napoleons. I have known many men well advanced in years, who actually slept less than younger and more vigorous men."

From his infancy, Verne, the little five-year-old son of Mr. and Mrs. J. Barfoot of this place has been sickly. His mother consulted a doctor, but he did not begin to improve till someone suggested that she try a remedy called Doid's Kidney Pills. From unmistakable symptoms she had always believed that his kidneys were the first cause of all the trouble, so she bought a box of Doid's Kidney Pills and began giving little Verne two pills a day.

In two or three days she noticed an improvement and she kept on till he had used about two boxes when to her great joy he was all right. Everybody remarks how much better Verne looks and Mrs. Barfoot always explains, "Doid's Kidney Pills saved his life."

Centers of the Brain

Biologists admit that psychic centers are localized in the cortex of the brain. The function of language, for example, is perverted or suppressed when a certain portion of the frontal lobes of the brain is altered or destroyed. Dr. Grasset, in a recent work on "Spiritism," holds that the centers of automatism and sub-consciousness form together a kind of polygonal area. In the Revue de Psychologie he also discusses the question of an immaterial soul and its relation to these psychic centers of the brain, and he concludes that the two conceptions are not incompatible. Intelligence, he argues, is a faculty of the soul. One cannot localize it in an organ. The psychic function, however, is more complex. It comprises the immaterial intelligence and the thought expressed, associated as we observe it in human life. For this psychic function a material organ or instrument as well as the immaterial intelligence is required, and this organ is the cortex of the brain. Whether the psychic center of the cortex only serves to clothe the idea, to express the thought, or intervenes otherwise what does it matter to the biologist so long as he can localize the center? These centers of the brain are as indispensable for the expression of the highest intelligence as for the lowest automatism. Consequently the biologist may endeavor to localize the centers of higher as well as of lower intelligence. This quest, however, is distinct from the study of the principle of intelligence. Hence psychology should not become a department of biology. Psychology is the science of will and conscience. Biology is the science of the cerebral instrument whose intervention is necessary for the regular working of that will and conscience. Each of these two sciences has its own domain, and there is no contradiction between them. It is curious to find that after going from one extreme to the other, from the notion of a purely immaterial to a purely material mind, to a brain "secreting thought" as an electric battery secretes electricity, scientific thinkers are coming round to the union or conciliation of the two conceptions—namely, a brain which is the material organ of an immaterial soul.—London Globe.

The Horses of Mexico

Although at the time of the conquest horses were unknown in Mexico, that country to-day boasts of some of the finest of the species. The horses of Cuba that were taken to Mexico as well as the horses that went to the River Plate on a similar errand of conquest are believed to have been of Andalusian breed, and Cunningham Graham, the famous British author and traveler, who knows from personal experience both Mexican and Argentine horses, holds that we must look to Barbary for the progenitors of the Cordobese horses. "Most horses," he says, "in fact, all breeds of horses, have six lumbar vertebrae. A most careful observer, the late Edward Louson, a professor in the Agricultural college of Santa Catalina, near Buenos Ayres, has noted the remarkable fact that the horses of the Pampas have only five. Following up his researches, he has found that the only other breed of horses in which a similar peculiarity is to be found is that of Barbary."

So Cunningham Graham, who has ridden the horses of the Moors in Morocco as well as the horses of Mexico and the Pampas, is of the opinion that these horses are evidently descended from those of Barbary.

Of late years thousands of American horses have been imported into Mexico, often thoroughbreds, and undoubtedly the type of the Mexican horse of to-day has changed somewhat through the infusion of new blood. Some one competent and with leisure (and it is indispensable that he be a lover of horses) should take up this theme of the Mexican horse and make a big book on the subject.

"Anyone who has ridden the wiry and long enduring little Mexican horse will not need to be told of its good points. Not infrequently is he a 'wind drinker,' like the horses of the African desert, full of speed and tireless. Given a grassy plain of a league or more, a 'caballo brioso,' a horse of mettle, the crisp air of the tableland morning in autumn or even in March, and a man may taste one of the joys of paradise; for who may say that our horses will not meet us gladly over there in the good country where so the noble riders and lovers of swift steeds?

Cupid Ever at Work

Long ago the silly odium that attached to old-maidship disappeared, but even in the days when popular notion made a spinster of 40 a hopeless old maid, records show that there was no age limit to matrimonial hopes.

For instance, so long ago as 1774, Miss Jane Hodgson of Steney, England, was wedded to Henry Hulston, of the same place, when she had reached her 92d summer, and the bridegroom was two years older, says the Philadelphia Inquirer.

More remarkable was the wedding of John Jackson and Annie Bates, on March 22, 1796, the 101st birthday of the bridegroom, who was three years older than the bride. It was his fourth marriage within two years, and 10,000 persons escorted the couple to the church.

A youth of 13, a son of Mr. Graves, of Balcock-on-Herts, married "Miss-tress Lake, spinster, aged 70." April 20, 1781, and to August of the same year, at Bath, Capt. Hamilton, aged 38, married Miss Manson, a blushing bride of rank, fortune, and 85 years.

More than half a century ago a Yorkshire belle, who had so many suitors she could not choose among them, told one of the most persistent that if he would ask her 50 years later she would marry him. He waited loyally and faithfully for the 50th anniversary, and she, too, kept her word.

A celebrated French artist, who fell in love in his student days, was told by the maiden that she would never marry so long as her mother lived. They waited half a century before they were united.

Only two years ago a wealthy maiden lady in an English county provided a delightful sensation by marrying the curate of her parish church, a young man exactly 60 years her junior. An astonishing feature of this marriage was that as a girl the aged bride had been engaged to the curate's grandfather, and perhaps it was the memory of this ancient romance which inspired a sentimental regard for the youthful clergyman, who under other conditions might have been her own grandson.

AT GATE OF JERUSALEM.

Active Business is Carried on by Small Hucksters.

Jerome Hart gives the following sketch of street scenes in Jerusalem: "Just outside the gate, on the Jafa road, there is a multitude of booths of small dealers and rows of native cafes where laborers sit on stools smoking. There are also large numbers of 'donkey drivers' waiting with their animals for hire. Although the wall is a massive structure and the gate some fifty feet high, the entrance is narrow, with a right-angled turn—one of the methods adopted, in the old days for defense. Through this narrow gateway there pours an endless stream of camels, donkeys and footmen all day long. Without the gate you see jostling camel drivers and camels kneeling to receive their loads. Scores of hucksters are squatting on the ground behind their heaps of oranges, dates, lemons, onions, radishes and other vegetables. There are also many vendors of bread—a staple in Jerusalem, as in all the eastern world; it is piled up in stacks, very much as we handle cordwood here, and with about as much attention to cleanliness. Many of these hucksters have a stock so small as to be pitiful—some two or three pounds of wormy figs, for example, worth perhaps five cents."

A Happy Mother. Maple Hill, Ia., May 30.—A very remarkable case occurred here recently. The people here have never seen anything like it and it may interest many others.

JOHN BURT By FREDERICK UPHAM ADAMS

Author of "The Kidnapped Millionaire," "Colonel Moore's Deceit," Etc.

At the sight of the ore, and of the dull gloss of the nugget, a wonderful transformation took place in John Hawkins. He gazed at the ore with the rapt look of an enthusiast.

"Go ahead and tell me about this," he said abruptly. "You look like an honest man, and it's a waste of time to lie to me. What have you got, and how did you get it?"

In a matter of fact way John Burt related the story of the discovery and development of the Sailor Mine.

"This may be worth looking into," said the capitalist. "I'll send an expert to investigate it and make a report."

"Until we have arrived at some tentative agreement or understanding, I don't care to have your expert examine this property," said John Burt.

"Your expert will find one of two things—either that my estimate of these claims is accurate, or that it is not."

"That sounds like business," roared John Hawkins, a gleam of admiration for an opponent worthy of his attention showing in his eyes.

"You will assume the payments on the Blake option, which amount to three hundred thousand dollars," said John.

When Jim Blake received his first instalment of a hundred thousand dollars, he gave a dinner in John Burt's honor in the Occidental Hotel.

John Burt received a message from David Parker, asking him to call at his office.

"I had an interview with Mr. Hawkins this morning," said David Parker. "Mr. Hawkins is a very peculiar man—very peculiar—as I have told you."

John thanked Parker, and arranged to meet him with Mr. Hawkins at a later hour. He then called on an attorney and submitted the agreement to his inspection.

Over a dinner such as is possible only in San Francisco the agreement was ratified.

CHAPTER XIV Success and Failure. David Parker's report on the Sailor Mine was submitted to Mr. Hawkins ten days later, and it more than confirmed the statements made by John Burt.

John Burt, upon receipt of the magnate proceeded to the mine with Burt and Parker, taking several miners in whom he had absolute confidence.

John Burt was publicly named as the manipulator and principal winner, but James Blake was hailed as the daring operator whose brilliant generalship had crowned the success of the deal.

James Blake suddenly developed traits which bewildered his friends and surprised himself. Under the guidance of John Burt he mastered the details of the business, displaying ability in dealing with the intricacies which formed the daily routine.

Nature had denied to James Blake that spark of genius which inspires the leader, but he possessed in a high degree those traits which leadership attracts and invests with power.

Blake accepted his honors with dignity and modesty. He was willing and proud to shine in the reflected light of John Burt.

From the moment when Peter Burt stood with uplifted arms in the lightning's glare and gave him a blessing, John Burt had no doubt of his financial future.

A profile portrait of Jessie Carden rested on an easel which stood near the desk in his library. It was the work of an artist of local fame, drawn from a tintype photograph—his sole memento of the woman he loved.

Jessie was in her sixteenth year when the picture was taken, but the long riding-habit and the queenly pose of her head against the plain background added dignity to the nascent charms of face and figure.

Again and again he attempted to picture the Jessie Carden of the present. With his eyes fixed on the portrait, and his mind centered on its original, he struggled to span the void of miles and years which parted them, and to hold communion with her.

But when slumber fell upon him, and his soul wandered into unknown regions, he dreamed—dreamed not of millions nor of triumphs over master minds. He dreamed of Jessie Carden.

Though rain shields are 10,000 Years Old They Need Improving. "How rich I'd be," said an umbrella salesman, "if I had patented the umbrella."

The floorwalker smiled. "You might as well talk," said he, "of a patent on swimming or cooking. Umbrellas appear to have existed always. Whenever we excavate—Babylon, Nineveh, Nippur—traces of the umbrella are found. This instrument is coeval with mankind."

"It is of oriental origin. The English didn't begin to use it until 1700. Shakespeare, with all his genius, had no umbrella to protect him from the rain. Jonas Hanway was the first English umbrella maker."

"Now, what you might do would be to patent some new sort of umbrella—some rain shield built on better lines. We have proof that the umbrella has existed for 10,000 years, and yet in all that time it has not been improved. Consider it. It is by no means perfect. It turns inside out readily, and it only protects the head and shoulders from the rain. Change all that. Give us an umbrella that is a complete rain shield. Then you will become a millionaire."

Paradoxical Doc. "Doctor, you are the most jovial, even tempered man I ever met—do you ever get out of temper?" "One has to get out of patience to lose one's temper, and as I am never out of patients, I am never out of patience."

U. S. SENATOR FROM SOUTH CAROLINA Recommends Pe-ru-na For Dyspepsia and Stomach Trouble.

Ex-Senator M. C. Butler.

Catarrh of the Stomach is Generally Called Dyspepsia—Something to Produce Artificial Digestion is Generally Taken.

Hence, Pepsin, Pancreatin and a Host of Other Digestive Remedies Has Been Invented.

These Remedies Do Not Reach the Seat of the Difficulty, Which is Really Catarrh.

Ex-U. S. Senator M. C. Butler from South Carolina, was Senator from that State for two terms. In a recent letter to The Peruna Medicine Co., from Washington, D. C., he says: "I can recommend Peruna for dyspepsia and stomach trouble. I have been using your medicine for a short period and I feel very much relieved. It is indeed a wonderful medicine besides a good tonic."

The only rational way to cure dyspepsia is to remove the catarrh. Peruna cures catarrh. Peruna does not produce artificial digestion. It cures catarrh and leaves the stomach to perform digestion in a natural way.

Peruna has cured more cases of dyspepsia than all other remedies combined, simply because it cures catarrh wherever located. If catarrh is located in the head, Peruna cures it. If catarrh has fastened itself in the throat or bronchial tubes, Peruna cures it.

Peruna is not simply a remedy for dyspepsia. Peruna is a catarrh remedy. Peruna cures dyspepsia because it is generally dependent upon catarrh.

If you do not derive prompt and satisfactory results from the use of Peruna, write at once to Dr. Hartman, giving a full statement of your case, and he will be pleased to give you his valuable advice gratis.

YOUR KIDNEYS ARE THEY WELL?
Unless they are, good health is impossible.

Every drop of blood in the body passes through and is filtered by healthy kidneys every three minutes. Sound kidneys strain out the impurities from the blood, diseased kidneys do not, hence you are sick. FOLEY'S KIDNEY CURE makes the kidneys well so they will eliminate the poisons from the blood. It removes the cause of the many diseases resulting from disordered kidneys which have allowed your whole system to become poisoned.

Rheumatism, Bad Blood, Gout, Gravel, Dropsy, Inflammation of the Bladder, Diabetes and Bright's Disease, and many others, are all due to disordered Kidneys. A simple test for Kidney disease is to set aside your urine in a bottle or glass for twenty-four hours. If there is a sediment or a cloudy appearance, it indicates that your kidneys are diseased, and unless something is done they become more and more affected until Bright's Disease or Diabetes develops.

FOLEY'S KIDNEY CURE is the only preparation which will positively cure all forms of Kidney and Bladder troubles, and cure you permanently. It is a safe remedy and certain in results.

If You are a sufferer, take FOLEY'S KIDNEY CURE at once. It will make you well.

Some Pronounced Incurable Had Lumbago and Kidney Trouble
Mr. C. A. Stillson, a merchant of Tampico, Ill., writes: "FOLEY'S KIDNEY CURE is meeting with wonderful success. It has cured some cases here that physicians pronounced incurable. I myself am able to testify to its merits. My face today is a living picture of health and FOLEY'S KIDNEY CURE has made it such."
Edward Huss, a well known business man of Salisbury, Mo., writes: "I wish to say for the benefit of others, that I was a sufferer from lumbago and kidney trouble, and all the remedies I took gave me no relief. I began to take FOLEY'S KIDNEY CURE, and after the use of three bottles I am cured."

Two Sizes, 50 Cents and $1.00.
