How to Stop Army Worm.

Prof. Pettit, entomologist at the Agricultural College, when consulted about the reported appearances of the army worm in some parts of the state, said it was true, but not specially new. The army worm, like the poor, we have always with us. Ordinarily, its numbers are kept down within harmless limits by its parasitic enemies, as is the case with many other injurious insects; but occasionally, under favorable conditions it develops in formidable numbers and works great destruction in restricted areas of brief periods. These cases are so unusual that they never come within the experience of many people, and few ever see them more than once or twice in a lifetime, as in small numbers they do not attract notice and are not identified by the uninitiated. The entomologist, however, who is called to any part of the state where the pest appears, sees a good many of their visitations, and is familiar with their appearance in unimportant numbers pretty much everywhere every year. He has observed some of their destructive raids this year, though not very extensive, and the papers have reported several cases of complete destruction of fields of corn and other grain in a single night. The worms, migrate from field to field when they have developed to their destructive stage and have devoured the vegetation upon which they were. Their march can be checked by turning a furrow toward them across their path, as they are unable to climb the smooth land side. If they fill that, turn another upon them, and present a second perpendicular for them to perish against. The unusual abundance of the worms this year is due to the wet weather, which favors their development, contrary to the rule with many other insects. Brush and rubbish in low places furnish favorable winter harbors for them, from which the moths issue in the early spring, and they produce three broods in a year, and singularly may be found in all three stages of larva, pupa and moth at any season.

Some people believe a newspaper should cut and slash. The result is in most communities you find one newspaper howling for one thing, a rival newspaper howling for another thing; and a quarrel involving half the people. Some people believe the Press should "take sides" in political affairs. Others believe it should do this, and that, and the other. After long experience, the editor has decided that the best plan is Peace and Decency. When you think that a certain thing should be "jumped" remember that other people believe it should be commended.

Michigan's New State Roads.

The new state highway department is organized in conformity with the law creating it, with a deputy and one clerk, and is temporarily housed in the speaker's room adjoining the hall of representatives until permanent quarters can be assigned by the board of auditors. The commissioner, Hon. Horatio S. Earle, of Detroit, is in personal command when not out in the state on the business of his office, which will probably very often be the case when the operations of the department are a little farther under way. He went last Friday to inspect the first mile of road submitted to his judgment, in Kalkaska county—through Dickinson county competes for the honor of completing the first mile under the new law, and is awaiting the commissioner's visit. Another job of two miles is in progress in Warren township, Macomb county, in extension of four miles of macadam heretofore constructed there. Mr. Earle inspected the four miles of old road, and finding it somewhat out of repair, ruled that, although the town would be entitled to no state reward on that portion, it would all be rated as a state rewarded road, and it must be put in good repair, with culvert guards and complete drainage, and supplies of stone every half mile for keeping ruts filled, before their application for reward on the two miles of new road could be entertained. This the township board obligated themselves to do.

A scheme that is particularly valuable in hot weather, for the housewife who must iron, is to cover her irons with an iron spider, turned over them on the stove. A very light fire will do the work where otherwise a heavy "ironing fire" is necessary. The irons are also heated through more evenly when covered, and hold heat longer and better. So great is the difference in heating that the irons will very likely be found too hot before the housewife is aware of it.

"Something for nothing is not business, nor is it good advertising," said a prominent merchant in a recent address to the New England Dry Goods Association. "I would rather have my advertisement in a thousand copies of any of the Boston papers, paid for by the readers, than to have the same advertisement in ten thousand sample copies of the same paper." Here is one of the reasons why newspaper advertising is so much more effective than circular bill board, booklet publicity, though the latter forms are useful as adjuncts to the former. The man who buys a newspaper buys it because he wants what is in it, including the "ads." Thus assured of a hearing, all that remains for the newspaper advertiser is to take the fullest advantage of the opportunity by skillfully pleading his cause.

Neuralgia And Other Pain.

All pain in any disease is nerve pain, the result of a turbulent condition of the nerves. The stabbing, lacerating, darting, burning, agonizing pain that comes from the prominent nerve branches, or sensory nerves, is neuralgia, and is the "big brother" of all the other pains.
Dr. Miles' Anti-Pain Pills rarely ever fail to relieve these pains by soothing these larger nerves, and restoring their tranquility.
Dr. Miles' Anti-Pain Pills leave no bad after-effects, and are a reliable remedy for every kind of pain, such as headache, backache, stomachache, sciatica, rheumatism and neuralgia. They also relieve Dizziness, Sleeplessness, Nervousness, Car-Sickness, and Distress after eating.

Strawberries

All strawberries, whether grown in the home garden or bought at the market, should be washed before using them. Do not dash water upon them or handle in such a way as to break the berries. The best plan is to place them in a colander, set the colander in a deep pan containing water and draw it up and down through the water several times. The sand and grit will fall through the colander and the berries will be as perfect as though water had not touched them.

When berries are picked in the home garden and the hulls and stems are well preserved, a pretty way to serve them at luncheon is to place them in dishes beside individual sugar bowls and eat the berries from the stem, dipping them in the sugar. Perhaps it is considered more up-to-date to serve whipped cream with strawberries but the epicure still clings to the old-fashioned way of serving them with thick, sweet, unadorned cream.

The original strawberry cake has been largely replaced by a sweet cake adorned with a few whole berries and dabs of whipped cream. To make the old-fashioned short cake—and in fact the only real "short cake"—sift two cups of flour with two heaping teaspoons of baking powder and a pinch of salt. Rub in one and one-half tablespoons of lard and the same amount of butter. Add two-thirds of a cup of milk and roll into sections to fit a square, shallow pan. Handle the dough as little as possible. Butter the upper side of each section, place one on top of the other and set in the oven to bake. When done lift the upper section off and again butter the middle and upper crusts, then spread on the berries. A quart of berries will be needed for the purpose and they should be crushed and sweetened a half an hour before they are used. Do not spread the berries on until a short time before the cake is to be eaten as the juice may soak the dough and make it heavy.—Mary E. Hammond.

Man and the Soil

Nature, has made abundant provision for the maintaining of the fertility of the soil and the best or the worst man can do he cannot rob the soil permanently of its fertility. He can, however, rob it for a time and reduce it to a state where it will not pay for the tilling. But in the end nature will recommence the work by which she made the soil fertile in the first place. Man, however, cannot afford to wait for the slow processes of nature.

It has been discovered that the bacteria in the soil have the power of so changing their character that in the course of a few years almost any plant will have attached to it the bacteria that is suited to it, providing it is a pod-bearing plant. We know little or nothing about bacteria on other kinds of plants. It has been found that the man that sows clover on one piece of land that has never had clover on it is likely to fail to get a catch. He should continue to sow clover on that same piece of land year after year, as the few plants that grow will make it possible for the bacteria already in the soil to begin their transformation, and in time the soil will be so well supplied with bacteria adapted to the clover plant that a good crop can be grown.

But is it not foolish for man to wait for years for the development of bacteria or their transformation when he can take inoculated earth from some old clover field, and by sprinkling it on his own field get a good crop of clover in at most two years. Even if he had to buy the commercial cultures it would pay him to do so. Man cannot afford to wait the slow processes of nature to get any manurial element into the soil. He can far more profitably buy the kind of fertilizer he needs.

Man by his carelessness has deprived the soil of much of its fertility, but man by his intelligence can replace it. We can make of the soil almost anything we need. We have the clays and the sands for the mixing, and the time will come when land will be so high in price that it will pay man to haul clay to put on sandy leachy soil and to haul sand to put on heavy clay soil. The man that so regards his soil as to spare no pains in its improvement will have the consciousness that he has improved the soil for all the ages, for the clay and sand are not taken off in the removal of the crops.

On a Diversified Farm

The man that has to run a diversified farm has his "hands full," if we may use a slang expression that has almost ceased to be slang. The man that has to look after twenty different crops needs a mental development far above that of the man that has to look after one crop only. The man with many crops to look after, has to acquire twenty times the information about crops that the man does that has to look after one crop only. On the other hand, he does not have to do so much worrying about the sale of his crop, as the community around any farm will largely absorb the crops of the farm where diversified farming is practiced.

On a diversified farm all the ground is kept in use, and sometimes several crops are grown on the same piece of ground in one summer. One crop may be dovetailed into another crop, so that a new crop is being started before the old one is off the ground. The mixed farmer generally breaks the old Jewish commandment not to sow mixed seed in the field. He does not find that the growing of two, three, or even four crops in the same field the same season damages his fields, provided his land is kept well manured and well supplied with humus.

On a diversified farm labor can be used to better advantage than on a farm devoted to the production of any one crop. On the diversified farm there is a demand for labor from one part of the season to another, and the owner is also enabled to utilize all of his own time. This is a great thing to the man that is running a small farm. In this day it is not possible to make money out of any establishment that is run on half time, even a farm.

Imitation Gems.

Nearly all the lesser gems except the moonstone and opal are now reproduced in the laboratories from a dense and highly transparent glass. But the peculiar structure of the moonstone and opal which breaks up the light and gives the changeable fire effect has not yet been imitated. Imitation beryls, pearls, diamonds, garnets, emeralds and spinels are imported into the United States in immense quantities, but whatever their appearance may be the manufactured product is not a real gem.

POLISH FOWLS.

This is one of the oldest varieties of fowls in the world and is known to have been in existence before the settlement of America. Records are found of it way back between the years 1500 and 1600, and we do not know how old it was at that time. It was then known as the crested fowl and it is supposed that fancy led to the first development in this breed. Polish fowls are now bred in this and European countries quite extensively. The breed does not, however, stand as well as some others as a producer of eggs. It may be that it has not been fully exploited. We illustrate a pair of White-Crested Black Polish.

Profitable Dairying

I have one pasture where we will get $10 per acre for our milk during the present month of June. That is because we did not turn our cows into the pasture as soon as the ground looked a little green. We kept our cows out of the pasture till the 28th day of May this year. Some farmers that I know turn out their cows as soon as possible in the spring, and the pastures are very short, and the result is that the pastures keep short all the summer. When my cows went into pasture this spring the grass was up to their knees. As a result of this my cows are now making half a can of milk per cow a day.

I have been selling off some of my cows this spring, having decided to get rid of 73 head, which did not come up to my standard of dairy cows. I intend to get fewer and better cows. I have 55 cows now mostly giving milk, but this fall I expect to increase the number to 100 cows. That will mean the purchase of 45 cows this fall. I will go up to Wisconsin and hunt them up and I intend to get good ones. I intend to select 45 cows that will give as much milk as the 73 I have discarded. I have some good Holsteins, but the new cows I am going to get will be mostly Guernseys, if I can find them. If I can't get all the Guernseys I want I will put in some Jerseys. Then I will put in scales for weighing the milk and buy a Babcock tester. I have always depended on my judgment in the valuing of cows, but I guess the scales and test are more nearly accurate.

I own two farms, one of which has an area of 120 acres. I rent this farm on the usual terms that are common in this section, on shares. I furnish the cows and the farm; the tenant furnishes the team and tools and does all the work; each one pays for half of the repairs on the tools; the proceeds are divided.

I keep on that farm 46 cows, that being the average the year round. Sometimes I had more than that number and sometimes less, but the average is as I have indicated. The feed that we purchased for those cows last year cost $19.50 per cow; this consisted largely of bran and oil meal. I bought half a ton of feed per acre of land. With this and the feed we raised on the farm we produced 183 tons of milk. This was sold at an average price of $1.315 per 100 pounds. We got better than the average price for the year, which was $1.26, for we made as much as possible of our milk in the winter when the price was highest. My half of the returns were $1,900, which is pretty good interest on my investment. The total returns for each cow were $105.

The land improved in value, as we put 5 1/2 tons of manure on every acre of land. The cows averaged over 8,000 pounds of milk during the year.—J. B. Mason, Kane Co., Ill., in Farmers' Review.

Utilizing Force

Force lies all about us in the muscles of men and animals, in the moving air, in the running stream or the imprisoned lake, in the varying degrees of heat, in fire and water, and in the changes of liquid to gaseous forms. The farmer is the person best situated to utilize these forces and make them work for him. The ordinary laborer of the city is unable to use even the most common of these to better his situation. The force that is penned up in the muscles of his boys is seldom utilized for his help, and too often becomes a source of anxiety to him. The country father can and does use the energy sleeping in the strong arms of his sons. If the city resident owns a horse that is not connected with some regular service, he has a dead weight on his hands. The horse is a thing for pleasure, but when not being used for pleasure is a heavy expense. The pleasure horse of the farmer spends much of his time in utilitarian service. Farmers' sons know how to perform the innumerable services of the farm, and so the energy locked up in them comes out in full fruition. On most of the farms it is a problem how best to direct the force. The farmer finds about him. To a large degree it is misdirected, and the result is that the force expended, though bringing in to the farmer more returns than the city man can get out of the force around him, yet does not give the returns it should. The strong arms of the farm boy should be directed by his brain in the management of machines more than it is. Why set the country boy to wielding a hoe day after day in the soft loamy soil, when with a wheeled hoe he could accomplish ten times as much with the same expenditure of force? Why make him spend days and weeks in sawing wood with a common buck saw when with a saw driven by power he could accomplish ten times as much in the same time and have the rest of his force for other work or for self development? All around the farmer lies the power of the wind that sweeps over his farm every day in the year. This is a force that every farmer should utilize, and many are now utilizing it. The initial investment in a windmill and appliances for doing work should be considered an expenditure necessary for the operation of the farm, as much so as the purchase of a horse or wagon. In the explosion of gases in engines made for the utilizing of such force is a wonderful possibility for the farmer and one that has been but partially appreciated. From running the churn to irrigating the potato field the gas engine is useful. Explosive power, if so it may be termed, is found to be one of the cheapest of all powers, and the farmer that cannot make such a machine profitable must be in very restricted conditions as to area of land worked or kinds of crops to be grown. The brain of the farmer has all it can attend to in planning how to use to advantage the numerous forces laying about him, even to the force of sunshine. The man that plants his crops so close together that the sunlight cannot get in among them thereby prevents even the operation of the great force of light which is a dynamic force of immense power. The prosperity of the farmer will depend on the way he can use the forces that have come under his hand, and the first step in this utilization is the realization that the forces do really exist and are tributary to him.

Lack of Plant Food Apparent

When their attention is drawn to the fact that most of our oat fields have been quite sickly in appearance this spring many farmers will attribute this condition of affairs to the cold, wet, backward season. But this is not the true cause. The weather is one cause but it becomes quite apparent that on the average there is a lack of plant food in the soil for, not oats alone, but for other crops likewise. When the young oat plants are weaning themselves from the parent seed they must have plenty of assimilable plant food ready for immediate use. When the plants linger and have a sickly, yellowish green color it is evident that they are struggling for existence and that it is lack of food that keeps them back. At last the roots find a supply of food and then growth goes on quickly.

But the lack of food when most required tells upon the success of the crop from start to finish. It is like semi-starvation of a foal or calf. If the foal or calf flesh are lost or the youngster is stunted at first he rarely makes up for it later on when nourishment is abundant. And we see the same lack of food in the pastures and meadows—not this spring alone, but each spring in succession—and the evidences have been apparent for these many years. The grass on the average is short but, wherever there has been a dropping of manure from an animal pastured last fall, there the grass is long and dark green in color. It would all be of equal length, vigor of growth and healthiness of color were the manure equally distributed over the surface.

There is need of this general distribution of fertilizing material on nearly every field in the west. We have been robbing the land year after year and now the bad effects of this course become apparent.

It is a fine thing to improve corn and other seeds. We cannot have too good quality in our seeds, but it is as important, nay, absolutely necessary, that we should have plenty of food for the seeds at time of germination and throughout the growth of the plants. This matter deserves serious consideration. It is no longer enough to manure the bare spots and knolls, or to put all of the manure upon the tobacco, the beets, or the corn field. It is not enough to top-dress the pastures. What is wanted most is some feasible and practical plan of supplying and maintaining adequate stores and available plant food on every acre of the farm.

Clover for Pigs.

On our farm we regard clover as one of the best foods we can use in the production of pork. This is especially the case in the growing of pigs. For this reason we make much of clover, growing it both for winter feed and for summer pasture. We begin pasturing the clover when it is three or four inches high and try to keep it pastured close enough so that it will not head. If it heads it afterward tends to get woody, but by keeping it down we have an abundance of good food for the pigs throughout the late spring, summer and fall. The field that we cut for hay we try to cut before it gets too old and have it made into hay while it has the bright green color to it. If we dared try putting it up green it would perhaps give us a still better feed, but we are inclined to let well enough alone. I find that clover hay is well relished by both pigs and hogs in winter. The man that raises fall pigs must look to the production of some kind of food that will give the animals the protein they must have if they are to be vigorous growers, and the more so if they are to be used for breeders.

The Hotel Business.

The hotel business of the United States is a mighty one. The number of hotels, large and small, is put at over 44,000, and the number of people employed about them 3,500,000. This gives some hint of the traveling habits of the American people. Some of the hotels are magnificent palaces and are patronized only by those able to pay magnificent prices. Strange to say some of the most expensive hotels are the best patronized.

Causes of Contagious Abortion.

The Kansas station in a bulletin issued to the Press, says: The term abortion is applied to the premature birth of the offspring before full term. It is sometimes known as "slinking," "casting," or "losing" the calf. Abortion may be caused by drinking considerable ice water, eating a large quantity of cold food (frozen roots or green vegetables covered with frost), exposure to rain or snow-storms or wading in ice cold water, injuries to the abdomen (as being crushed by a gate, kicks, or being hooked), foods that are easily fermented, also insufficient or very innutritious foods; too close stabling, heavy milking, early breeding, inbreeding, stagnant drinking water, ergoted grasses and smut in the various grains, irritant vegetables, impaction of the rumen and constipation, severe constitutional diseases, direct irritation of the womb (as in the removal of the ovaries or death of the offspring), and irritation of the kidneys. Whenever abortion of cows cannot be traced to any of the above causes the contagious form of abortion is to be suspected.

Contagious abortion is quite common in this State and frequently causes considerable loss, not only from losing the young but also from the fact that many of the cows that have aborted fail to breed again. Contagious abortion is probably caused by several different germs and is transmitted from one animal to another by contact, by means of the discharge from the cow that has aborted, the afterbirth, dead calf, and from bulls that have served cows affected with the disease.

The Overburdened Horse.

Who has not seen a horse staggering with too great a load, whipped by a merciless driver? Very often this is the result of the owner of the horse placing upon the horse (and the hired man as well) more than he can do. It is often the hired man that is the driver of the overburdened horse, and the owner is the one that is primarily responsible for the cruelty to the animal. The man that sends his hired man to town over muddy roads with a load big enough for a horse drawing it over a dry road takes great chances with his horse, not only of rendering him uncomfortable, but also of injuring him permanently. Horses, as well as men, can be injured by overdoing.

The Meat Trade.

Whenever there is a falling off in the consumption of meat the decrease falls on the poorer and cheaper cattle, sheep and swine, as was seen in the depression caused by the strike in the packing houses about two years ago. Then the dealers were surprised to find that the highest-priced meats were more generally purchased than the lower-priced meats, though for the time both had advanced strongly in value. It is but another illustration of the continual discrimination against the poorer article by the American public. Even in localities where the people are in only moderate circumstances the butchers find it hardest to dispose of the cheap cuts.

Unjustified Conclusions.

A hog raiser says that he favors pure bred hogs because one year the cholera took all the hogs of his neighbor that were not pure bred while his hogs, all pure bred, escaped. He says that this is where the advantage of having pure bred hogs comes in. We fail to agree with the opinion. It is more than likely that the scrub hogs received scrub care and so the cholera found a dirty condition of things, which favored its advent. The other man, having pure bred hogs surrounded them with cleanly conditions, and the cholera found there no abiding place.

Animal Heat.

The smaller the animal the greater relatively is the amount of surface exposed to the elements and the greater the amount of heat radiated, every other circumstance being equal. The skin of a small animal must be a more thorough non-conductor of heat than the skin of a large animal if the same amount of heat-making food is to have the same value. Some of the naturalists that have studied this question assert that most animals lose nine-tenths of their heat through radiation from the body and through perspiration, in which case the heat goes off in water at the temperature of the body.

Proving the Dirt.

A good way of convincing a patron that there is silt in his milk is to catch the last of the milk as it runs from the can, and, after allowing the sediment to settle, pour off quietly the larger part of the milk, filling the bottle up with water. After repeating this process, which will largely remove the casein, the sediment can very readily be filtered out. The effect of showing the patron the amount of solid floss taken from his milk in this way can be but productive of good and lead to a change in the right direction.—Prof. J. G. Moore.

"Your chief is out of danger," finally said the doctor, turning to Pearson and Sharkey. "With proper care he will be able to be moved on a stretcher in two or three days."

"Your duty is done then, doctor," replied Pearson, who seemed to be the leader, now that the captain was disabled. "Now, in the matter of your joining our band; which would you prefer, to depart or to continue with us?"

"I am willing to join you, providing—" began the doctor.

"Providing we will guarantee you protection, an ample salary, and a chance at some future time to obtain revenge upon a certain doctor whom you have a grudge against, is that it?" interrupted Pearson.

"That is it," said Schiller.

"Are you willing to take the oath of allegiance to our cause?"

"I am."

"This well." Evidently they had prepared for such a ceremony as that which followed, for they escorted the doctor into yet another room leading off from the one they were in. Here were fully as many horses stabled as there were men accommodated in the other room. In one corner was a pile of brush and decayed corn stalks.

"You will now repeat after me the oath that binds us together, bearing this in mind, that our promises to you will be fulfilled only after you have proved yourself worthy of it."

"I do solemnly swear," said Pearson.

"I do solemnly swear," repeated the doctor in a firm voice.

"That I will not betray any of the secret signs, haunts, modes of gaining a livelihood, the character of a brother, to anyone who is not entitled to know them; nor will I let any one else betray any of the secrets, if in my power to prevent, even if I have to most beautiful, refined and simple such as are all good girls brought up by pure parents. Her heart and had been sought for by many, but she was fancy free and heart whole as yet. Thus far in life her path had been strewn with flowers and the thought had been carefully hidden from sight. A vision of beauty and grace, and as sweet as she was beautiful.

Having introduced the main persons of our story, we shall now take the liberty of inserting a clipping taken from the Plankinton Plaindealer of Friday, June 7th:

"Dr. Huntington, the well known practitioner and genial leader of society and his daughter, the beautiful Miss Pearl, have very mysteriously disappeared from the haunts which know them so well, as completely if the earth had opened and swallowed them. The facts of the case are these as near as we can learn: 'At 7:30 o'clock last evening, Dr. Huntington was engaged with his patient in his office, when the door bell rang violently.'

"Mrs. Huntington answered the summons. The caller is described by her as a man of medium build and height wearing a heavy beard and mustache. He said he wished to see Dr. Huntington immediately. 'A man has been nearly killed through a railroad accident, and the doctor must come right away!'

"The wife informed Dr. Huntington and the visitor was admitted to the doctor's presence. Dr. Huntington hastily secured his medicine and will instrument cases, a roll of cotton bandages, some linen, and prepared bandages and left the office with the man, bidding his patients good-bye for the day. In front of the door stood a bay horse hitched to an open wagon. The stranger got in first and held out his hand for the cases."

"Just then Thaddeus Whalen, of Forest avenue, came along, and asked if the doctor was to appear at Miss Reynolds' reception, which was held last evening, at which the doctor was to speak. The doctor replied: 'Ah! Thad, glad you came along, as I don't know when I can get off. I'm called to attend a man who has been hurt down at Squire Briggs' house.'

"Dr. Huntington jumped into the wagon, the impatient driver whipped the horse into a spirited gait and disappeared. This is the last time Dr. Huntington was seen.

"Mrs. Huntington and daughter were preparing for the reception, only waiting for the return of the doctor. An old friend of the family, Mrs. Lillie Thompson, of Oak street, dropped in shortly afterward, and the two older heads, getting tired of waiting, resolved to walk on toward the hall, thinking that the doctor and his daughter, who was to wait for him, would overtake them before their destination was reached. But neither the doctor nor his daughter attended the reception.

"At 9 o'clock, no word having been received from the doctor, Mrs. Huntington grew uneasy. Unable to enjoy herself, on account of the strange absence of her husband, Mrs. Huntington requested Mr. Whalen to escort her home. Arriving, they were surprised to find the house deserted—but upon the center-table in the parlor was found a note from Miss Huntington. It read:

"Dear Mamma—Papa has been hurt in crossing the railroad track, and I have gone to him."

"Upon reading the letter Mrs. Huntington became greatly excited and exclaimed: 'This is Schiller's work!'

"Schiller, you will recollect, was the doctor who was convicted of malpractice and sentenced to ten years in the penitentiary, upon the testimony of Dr. Huntington."

"Oh! fudge!" said Mr. Whalen. "But Mrs. Huntington, even from the first, would not believe that her husband was hurt."

"Mr. Whalen succeeded in temporarily pacifying Mrs. Huntington, and calling upon Sylvester Smith, the two proceeded to the home of Squire Briggs to see if any one really had been hurt at his home, and were horrified

It has not been tenanted for a considerable period. The former looked as if tumbling to decay, while grass had grown over the path leading from the tumbled-down gate to the front door. The window was boarded up, but through the cracks in the window and the cracks in the walls caused by the mud falling away from between the logs, shone a dim light, which could not have been seen very far.

Arriving at the end of the lane, the team was hitched to the fence, and the doctor and driver walked toward the house door. There was a sound as of shuffling feet on the inside of the house, then the driver opened the door, motioning to the doctor to enter first.

The scene presented to the gaze of the doctor was one gotten up especially for his benefit, and calculated to throw him completely off his guard, which it did. On a rude bunk, placed before the fireplace, rested the form of a man, supposed to be wounded. Near the head of the bunk, on a three-legged stool, sat a tin cup, containing what looked like water. On the head of an upturned barrel in a candlestick, burned a candle that furnished the flickering light which illumined the rude interior. All these things were apparent to Dr. Huntington because plainly seen—but he did not see the form of a man behind the door.

The driver motioned again to the doctor to enter, and the doctor did so. As he crossed the threshold, the door was closed behind him. The supposed dying man quickly turned and blew out the light and while the doctor stood undecided how to act, he was pounced upon from behind, his arms pinioned, a rough gasp thrust into his mouth, and he was thrown roughly upon the floor.

The candle was lit again and over the doctor stooped Dr. Schiller, the hated enemy and one time rival to the love of the woman Dr. Huntington had married.

UNCLE SAM IN BUSINESS.

Likely to Do Things on a Large Scale When He Operates at All.

Uncle Sam may not set up as a business man, but when he does go into business he is likely to do it in a large way, as he does for instance at the New York navy yard, where are located the largest naval storehouses in the United States.

In the general storehouses there is carried a stock of material, merchandise and supplies of the most varied character, including lumber, cordage, and provisions, clothing, shoes and libraries, including many articles of ship supplies and everything required for the sailors' personal wants amounting in value to upward of $10,000,000.

The business done in these storehouses during the fiscal year ended in 1904 amounted to more than $30,000,000.

Supplies are received here from many sources and from here they are shipped to all parts of the world. The shipments in the course of the fiscal year 1904 aggregated 21,000 gross tons and comprised more than 450,000 packages.

The official who administers this business, of a volume that would be counted big among the biggest businesses done by private concerns, is known as the General Storekeeper, this post being occupied by a pay director of the United States navy.

Have Quaint Celebration

(Special Correspondence.)
American visitors to England this summer had an opportunity of witnessing something worth going far to see, the commemoration by Sherborne, one of the quaintest and most picturesque of West Country towns, of its 1200th birthday.

Instead of feasting, oratory and fireworks, or any of the other varieties of civic celebration which mushroom cities have made so wearisomely familiar, Sherborne had a show worthy of its great age and glorious memories. It took the form of a spectacular folk play or pageant in which the most noteworthy events that have taken place in the old gray town were re-enacted.

It was given in the open air amid the ruins of old Sherborne castle, around which cluster so many memories of the days when Sherborne lived the strenuous life. No modern stage, could provide a setting so well adapted to the performance.

In the folk play 700 of the townsfolk took part. The historical accuracy of

"It is a great glory for the house of Sherborne and for Sherborne school to have him among us," says the warrior prelate. "For his presence lifts Sherborne on high as the chief city of Wessex."

Brief comment from the chorus fills up a gap of considerably over a century and introduces the fourth episode, the date of which is 998. It graphically depicts the laxity of life into which the monastery at Sherborne, in common with other monasteries, had fallen at that time. The monks are shown drinking and feasting and having a high old time generally. Upon this scene enters Bishop Wulfsey III, and reads an ecclesiastical riot act to them, denouncing them as a "graceless brood of vipers," reminding them that "life is short and hell is near at hand," and scaring them into a penitential mood, in which they accept the rule of St. Benedict.

Time takes another jump, and William the Conqueror, full armed, stern and wrathful, stalks upon the scene and frightens the monks worse than Wulfsey did.

"By God's grace," he says, "ye shall find William the Norman hand a swift hand to seize and a strong hand to hold."

Then he goes on to declare that Sherborne is no longer a see, the church no longer a cathedral; and the town no longer the chief city of Wessex. He transfers the bishopric to Sarum, and departs, attended by his knights on horseback and followed by the bishop, whom he compels to trudge after him afoot to his new billet.

The next episode shows Roger of Caen, the chief minister of Henry I, laying the foundations of the castle whose ruins supplied the stage on which the folk play was performed.

The episode which followed, the seventh, presents a striking contrast to those which precede it and is carried out in the Dorset dialect. It portrays a dispute between the parishioners and the monks, which starts in a controversy concerning the erection of a font in the parish church and ends with the firing of the abbey by the parish priest. During the progress of this scene Robin Hood, Maid Marian, Friar Tuck, Little John and their retinue were introduced and gave a Morris dance. It was danced to the original tune, too.

The foundation of the almshouse, still a flourishing institution in Sherborne, by Sir Humphry Stafford and others in the year 1437, forms the subject of the eighth episode.

The ninth shows the expulsion of the monks at the dissolution of the monastery by King Henry and the sale of the abbey church.

The next illustrates the re-founding of the famous Sherborne school and the receipt of its charter from King Edward VI. in 1550.

The last of the episodes introduces one of the most heroic and tragic figures of English history, Sir Walter Raleigh, whose association with Sherborne is accounted not the least of its claims to distinction. It depicts his homecoming, with his wife, to the castle which had been granted him by Queen Elizabeth. Sir Walter makes some pretty and gallant speeches to his wife, which puts her in such good humor that she fills his pipe for him and leaves him to the enjoyment of the "virginian weed," which he is supposed to have first introduced into England. Then occurs that humorous incident with which every smoker is familiar. A servant comes in, and imagining his master is on fire, souses him with a jug of ale.

The performance concluded with a final tableau emblematic of the present and past greatness of Sherborne, in which all the principal figures that the costumes provided for them is vouched for by the best authorities. Sherborne's chief claim to historic renown lies in the fact that it was for a time the capital of the newer Wessex and the center of the one district which successfully withstood the Dane while Alfred gathered his forlorn hope in the marshes of Athelney for the fight which made England and all that has since come out of it possible.

Three of the eleven "episodes" into which the play is divided were devoted to this period of its history.

The first of these depicted the founding of the town by St. Eadheim in 705, when the inhabitants of the west had most of them relapsed into heathendom. In the midst of a hunting scene the saint makes his entrance accompanied by some of his disciples. Dipping his hand in the small stream which flows by he asks its name and on being told that in the ancient tongue it is called Seir-burn—the clear stream—and is a holy place, he raises the standard of Christ there.

"Upon this holy place, by this clear stream, and on this pleasant hill," he says, "I will build a city and a church. From this holy place the knowledge of the true God shall spread throughout the western lands. And it shall be known throughout all ages as the place of the clear stream, and unto the end of time its children shall call it—Sherborne."

The next episode introduced the most famous of Sherborne's bishops, Ealhan, known as the fighting bishop, and King Ethelwald's best general. He it was who won the first complete victory over the Danes at the mouth of the Parret in 845. He was shown in the full armor of the period, leading a charge against the invading Danes to the cry of "For God and home." After a terrific hand-to-hand encounter they are driven back through the Chapel Exit, leaving their dead and wounded on the ground.

The third scene presented the most famous figure associated with Sherborne's history, Alfred the Great. A procession enters bearing the dying King Ethelwald to his last resting place at Sherborne. He is met by his brother, Ethelbert, and their mother, Queen Osburga. With them is Alfred, at this time but a lad. Ethelbert embraces Ethelbert, with whom he had long been at enmity, and expires after bestowing a blessing on Alfred. Queen Osburga leaves Alfred with Bishop Ealhan to be educated.

Sherborne was symbolized by a "stately female figure" with long loose hair, surmounted by a "castellated crown, and bearing in her right hand a model of Sherborne abbey.

On her right hand stood another female figure, typifying her American daughter, who dropped the final "e" from her name when she settled in Massachusetts. She wore a diadem of stars on her head; her left hand rested on the arms of the state of Massachusetts, and in her right hand she bore a model of a caravel.

Circle of Life Nearly Complete. Stephen P. Steele, who practiced law in Pejerboro, N. H., for a generation, was employed by a Boston man, who had purchased a piece of real estate in that town, to clear the title. This necessitated the purchase of a life-interest in it, owned by an old lady. This interest was converted into an annuity, figured upon the probability of her life according to the regular tables.

After this period had expired by many years the Boston man wrote Mr. Steele, through whom he had made the annual payments, asking him how much longer he thought the old woman would live. Steele replied that she was then bent nearly double with age, and in a few years he believed her extremities would meet, and then she would live forever.

WHERE GAME IS PLENTY.

Newfoundland Declared a Paradise for the Sportsman.
L. F. Brown, the veteran angler and camper, writes in The Country Calendar:

"Brook trout and brown trout are not appreciated in Newfoundland, being far more common than are the perch and sunfish of the states. Catching them will soon surfeit the angler who casts his flies from the shore of almost any lake. Such catches are counted by the dozen—one lot of seventy-two dozen being brought aboard the train at Harbor Grace. One dozen ten-inch trout usually sell for 10 cents."

"There are 687 named lakes on the island, and 30,000 known ones, without names. The island has about 4,000 miles of seacoast, including that of bays like Bonavista, Notre Dame, Fortune, St. Mary's Bonne, St. George, Placentia and Bay of Islands. From one to six streams of clear green water empty into each of these bays. Every stream that reaches salt water is a salmon stream. Back from all that coast are other and easily reached streams that have not even a tradition of a fishnet, rod or hook and lakes never mapped where one may camp and add to the fare wild geese and ducks, willow grouse, whose plumage turns white in winter; ptarmigan, plover and curlew. These camping places bring a unique sense of remoteness and solitude. Only one who has actually seen the wall of darkness around a camp fire in the Newfoundland jungles and over the tundras can understand the tinge of fear that sometimes becomes almost appalling in the vast solitudes."

Lincoln and Webster's Friend.
The late Hon. Charles W. Slack, told the following of the Hon. Peter Harvey, the friend and biographer of Daniel Webster:

Mr. Harvey was a large man with a small voice and that diffident manner that many very diffident men possess. Above everything, he valued and prized himself upon his friendship with the "great expounder."

The first year of the war of the rebellion he went to Washington; and on his return was asked how he liked President Lincoln.

"Well," he said, "Mr. Lincoln is a very singular man. I went on to see him, and told him that I had been an intimate personal friend of Daniel Webster; that I had talked with him so much on the affairs of the country that I felt perfectly confident I could tell him exactly what Mr. Webster would advise in the present crisis; and thereupon I talked to Lincoln for two solid hours, telling him just what he should do and what he should not do; and, will you believe it, sir, when I got through all Mr. Lincoln said was, as he clasped his hand on my leg: 'Mr. Harvey, what a tremendous great calf you have got!'"—Boston Herald.

The Lost Decoy.
H. E. Buermeier, the president of the National Amateur Skating Association, was describing a banquet that he had once attended in New York.

"I found this banquet interesting," he said, "and I was one of the last to leave. In the cloakroom, as I was putting on my hat and coat, I couldn't help noticing the woebegone look on the attendant's face. The poor fellow appeared worried and sad, and every little while he sighed and muttered to himself."

"You seem disconsolate, friend," I said.

"I am disconsolate, sir," said the attendant.

"What is the trouble?" said I.

"Haven't the guests tipped you well to-night?"

"The attendant answered in an excited voice:

"It's not only, sir, that they haven't tipped me, but they've taken the quarter that I put in the tray for a decoy!"—Buffalo Enquirer.

Judge Sherman's Estate Renamed.
When Judge Sherman was renovating his beautiful summer home, which is built directly on the rocks at Gloucester, Mass., he thought he would like to give it a name appropriate to the location. So he wrote a letter to a friend and put "Founded-on-a-Rock" across the top, to see how it would look on his stationery.

The friend he wrote to happened to be a great joker, and the judge was astonished to receive a letter addressed to "The Hon. Judge Sherman. Found-dead-on-a-rock. Gloucester, Mass."

Choate Needed a Starter.
Harvey Waters, an expert on patent cases, had occasion to write Rufus Choate on some important question, and when he received the reply was unable to read a word of it, so took the missive to Mr. Choate and asked him what he had written.

That I will abide by the laws, and in every way do my best to improve the common lot of my fellows. That I will yield up my life to them, my body to molder and rot, should I fall in my duty to you! Amen! Do you so promise?"

"I promise!" was the answer.

"Then I will create you a member of the CONVICTS' CLUB. Bare your heart!"

Two of the desperadoes stepped to the doctor's side, while he feebly attempted to carry out the order, but through this ordeal he was as helpless as a child.

A red hot branding iron was brought from the stove, and before the doctor could cry out, or offer resistance, he was seized and held securely while on his bared breast was burned in the living flesh the initials "C. C."

"You are now the equal of any of us, and your life belongs to the king of the convict country!"

CHAPTER X.
Abduction of Doctor and Pearl Huntington.

Dr. Huntington heard of the pardon of Dr. Schiller, and was gratified in one sense of the word. He was not a hard-hearted man and really felt sorry for his guilty brother. Dr. Huntington recalled the words spoken by Dr. Schiller in reference to being revenged, and was constantly in fear of the result. But as the years went by after Schiller's release and no sign was made, Huntington felt easier.

Dr. Huntington was now a prosperous man, and a very successful practitioner. He had tasted the fruits of honest toil and enjoyed the flavor. He owned a beautiful residence, furnished throughout in sumptuous style; was blessed with a handsome and worthy helpmate, and still more handsome daughter. He has ceased to care for old England and his aristocratic family and had passed them from memory—a happy and contented man, engrossed in his profession, working for the best interests of his fellow townsmen and neighbors.

The daughter grew up to be an honor and credit to her parents. She was

CAMP ACHAZE, 7-18-'05.

MISTER EDITOR:
For the benefit of our friends who are not enjoying camp life, we have decided to steal a few moments from our other pleasures, and tell through your columns, if allowed, a little of what we are doing.

Through the kindness of Mr. Walker Sr., we have the most ideal camping ground on the eastern shore of the beautiful Intermediate, with a spring of ice cold water close by.

The advance guard arrived on Saturday afternoon and found the tents already pitched through the courtesy of Dr. F. C. Warne, also a fine row boat and fishing tackle provided. Mr. Etcher who moved us out here, was very anxious to build a substantial table and seats, and we, woman like, did not discourage him and though he was very kind to take so much trouble, after the table was finished he invited himself to supper. We then saw the "method in his madness."

Mr. F. Crowell and party were here when we came, and had a fine string of pike and bass. They left camp soon after our arrival, but left a three pound pike for breakfast, for which we are very grateful.

On Sunday No. 3 joined our company and we were reinforced on Monday by No. 4 who apparently came in on a thunder bolt.

Perhaps an outline of one day's doings will be the best way in which to give an idea of the way we pass the time. Awakened at 4 a. m. by the carolling of the birds, we arise "hungry as hunters," and while 1 and 2 prepare breakfast, 3 and 4 go for a morning row and catch a few fish for dinner. It only takes a few minutes to "do up the work." We then read, talk and rest in our hammocks, pick berries for tea, and perhaps take a few winks of sleep. At 11:30 we have luncheon to which all do ample justice. The afternoon is passed much as the forenoon was, some write a little and some work a little. As the sun begins to sink in the west, we have another row, take a bath and dress for dinner. For this meal we often have guests from town, and as they always add to the stores in our pantry, they are always welcome. The evening is spent in music and songs, laughter, and story-telling and 10 p. m. finds all quiet in camp with Old Glory floating o'er us, we sleep unmolested until our feathered friends again sound the reveille.

The storm of Sunday last was one of the worst ever seen in this section of the State. At East Jordan lightning struck an electric light pole near the Methodist church, tearing the transformer to pieces and welding parts of it together; it followed the wires into M. H. Robertson's cellar but did no damage. At the Flooring Plant a blog was discovered among the beams which is supposed to have been caused by lightning striking one of the guy wires to the smoke-stack. A number of trees were struck, one of the remarkable instances being a green tree on the Sweeney hill, which burned for nearly 24 hours after being struck. The excursionists' fared very well, being on the Illinois a few miles out of Charlevoix when the storm first struck. Its only effect there being simply to list the boat a little, and again near Ironton on the Hum when it began to rain again.

Grand Traverse Region suffered quite badly from the element. Two residences and the Methodist steeple were struck, boat houses were undermined, and a number of boats—particularly the Columbia—suffered from the storm although no lives were lost.

A northern paper states that this is about the dullest winter Michigan has had in some time. The sleighing for the past few weeks has not been at its best and woodhauling operations have been interfered with to a great extent.

Another delivery from the Antrim county jail occurred at Bellaire, Sunday morning. Arbie Fetters and Mason Norton, awaiting trial at the next term of circuit court which sits there next Monday, upon the charge of highway robbery, escaped by sawing through the floor of the cage. After dropping through to the ground they proceeded in effecting an opening sufficient in size to permit their exit. It is said that they borrowed a pair of scissors to assist in mending their pants and with them serrated the edge of a dust pan, making a saw with which they cut open the floor.

Mary had a little lamb, its fleece was white as snow; it strayed away one summer day where lambs should never go. Then Mary sat her down and tears streamed slowly from her eyes; she never found the lamb because she did not advertise. And Mary had a brother John, who kept a village store; he sat down and smoked his pipe and watched the open door. And as the people passed along and did not stop to buy, John still sat down and smoked his pipe and blinked his sleepy eye. And so the brokers seized his stock, but still he lingered near, and Mary came to drop with a sympathetic tear. "How is it, sister, can you tell why other shopmen here sell all their goods so quickly and thrive from year to year?" Remembering now her own bad luck, the little maid replied, "These other fellows fatten, John, because they advertise."

Women Obtain Mrs. Pinkham's Advice and Help.

She Has Guided Thousands to Health—How Lydia E. Pinkham's Vegetable Compound Cured Mrs. Fred Seydel.

It is a great satisfaction for a woman to feel that she can write to another telling her the most private and confidential details about her illness, and know that her letter will be seen by a woman only, a woman full of sympathy for her sick sisters, and above all, a woman who has had more experience in treating female ills than any living person.

Over one hundred thousand cases of female diseases come before Mrs. Pinkham every year, and this has been going on for twenty years, day after day. Surely women are wise in seeking advice from a woman of such experience, especially when it is absolutely free.

Mrs. Pinkham never violates the confidence of women, and every testimonial letter published is done so with the written consent or request of the writer, in order that other sick women may be benefited as they have been.

Mrs. Fred Seydel, of 419 North 54th Street, West Philadelphia, Pa., writes: Dear Mrs. Pinkham:—

"Over a year ago I wrote you a letter asking advice, as I had female ills and could not carry a child to maturity. I received your kind letter of instructions and followed your advice. I am not only a well woman in consequence, but have a beautiful baby girl. I wish every suffering woman in the land would write you for advice, as you have done so much for me."

Just as surely as Mrs. Seydel was cured, will Lydia E. Pinkham's Vegetable Compound cure every woman suffering from any form of female ills.

No other medicine in all the world has such a record of cures of female troubles as has Lydia E. Pinkham's Vegetable Compound. Therefore no prudent woman will accept any substitute which a druggist may offer.

If you are sick, write Mrs. Pinkham, Lynn, Mass., for special advice. It is free and always helpful.

From Three View Points

She captured my heart when I met her. By her form's rhythmic, willowy swag. Though her nose would perhaps have been better. Were it not so pronounced retrose.

But really, on closer inspection, When that imp Cupid's eye dazzled mine 'Twas a different kind of projection. And appeared to have grown aquiline.

Alas! though, since I have been jilted, With a frivolous laugh and a shrug, Her nose toward the clouds more is tilted, And appears quite decidedly pug. —Foley Johnson in New York Herald.

ROB'S HOME COMING

(Copyright, 1906, by Daily Story Pub. Co.)

Christine hummed softly to herself as she mixed the flour and butter to a pie-crust thickness. The soft, summer breeze came through the window, loosening the rippling locks of her squirrel-colored hair. Her peach-like cheeks were flushed, and her blue eyes were dancing in the felicitation of her meditations.

"And Rob comes home to-day!" she mused. "I wonder if four years have changed him much—three years at an eastern college and one year abroad can do so much for a man. And what have four years done for me except to make me twenty instead of sixteen?"

She sighed as she thought of her few advantages, and plunged her hands anew into the soft, white, clinging dough. "And there is such a difference in our conditions of life and those of the Thornleys," she continued in her reminiscence, picturing the big stone house on the hill with its sweep of lawn, driveways, and its retinue of servants. "Our little home will seem so crude to him, though he used to stay here more than he did at his own home, but of course he was only a boy then, and wouldn't notice things as now after his four years in a world of fashionable folks. I wonder if he'll be blasé and bored? No!" she concluded, contradicting the thought, "Rob could not change from the frank, impetuous, boyish fellow he always was. And I will see him tonight at the fête at his house," and she smiled happily, thinking of the shimmering, white dress she was to wear.

Christine ever combined comfort with cooking. She did her baking, or made her preparations for baking, not in the heated kitchen, but in a little room that opened into a latticed porch. All conveniences, materials and utensils were in easy reach. She transferred the dough from the mixing bowl to the board, and had just begun to roll it into flatness when there was a knock at the open door behind her. She turned and saw a good-looking, well-groomed young man regarding her with admiring, mischievous eyes. They continued looking at each other in silence for a few seconds and then he said: "Aren't you Christine Wendon?" "Yes," she replied, "but I do not recall—"

"What! Have you forgotten me—your old friend Rob Thornley!" he exclaimed reproachfully.

She smiled incredulously. "You are not Rob Thornley, though I admit there is a strong resemblance. You must be a relative."

"You are right, Miss Wendon. I am John Stanley, Rob's cousin. We are frequently mistaken for each other even by the people who know us well. He suggested that I come down and see if you would be deceived."

"I am glad to meet you, Mr. Stanley," she said, "and I am sorry that I cannot abandon my pie at the present stage of its existence. If you will please go through the house to the sitting-room, or around the house to the porch, I will join you as soon as I can."

"But I prefer to stay here," he replied, pleadingly. "I rang the bell,

"And Rob comes home to-day!"

and no one responded, so I investigated the kitchen precincts, as you see. Can't I stay and watch you make pies? We shouldn't be formal, you know, as long as I am a cousin of Rob's, and he and you such friends."

"Very well. Will you please get a chair from the kitchen?"

"No, I like this one," he replied, seating himself on the broad sill of the window, and watching her deftly "thin the crust." He thought that she was very cool and dainty-looking in the blue ruffled Gretchen apron, with the sleeves rolled up to her dimpled elbows. He liked, too, the perfect little air of unconcern she showed at the intrusion of a stranger.

"What made you so sure I was not Rob?" he asked curiously.

"She reflected a moment. "I just felt it," she replied, "when you just spoke, and then though the resemblance is there, there is a difference."

"Where? Features, expression—"

"Well, Rob is more serious looking—"

"Then you think me flippant!" in a piqued tone.

Came up to him, smiling, and not so jesting as yours. He combs his hair differently—"

"Pon my word! you must have observed Rob very closely, and you must have kept his lineaments in your memory remarkably well."

The pink flush that crept over Christine's face was most delicious and fascinating to watch.

"Why, you see, he was over here every day since I can remember up to four years ago, and since then he has sent me pictures of himself at frequent intervals, but why didn't he come down with you?"

"Why, we only arrived a couple of hours ago, and his mother wanted him to superintend the decorations for to-night, so he suggested that I come down and see if you would not mistake me for him—but oh, is that the way you do it?" he asked as she fitted the dough to the tins and trimmed off the superfluous edges.

"Didn't you ever see a pie made before?"

"Not in years. What are you going to put in it?"

"Cherries."

"My favorite—pie! May I stay to luncheon?"

"These are for dinner to-night."

"And I can't come down then," he said in such aggrieved tones, that Christine laughed and went to one of the shelves and took down a little patty-pan.

"I'll make you a little pie all for your own, and you can take it home with you."

"Really?" he asked in delighted tones, watching her prepare it. She put it with the larger ones in the oven and then began the making of a salad dressing.

When the pie was pronounced "done," he ruefully declared that he must depart.

"They told me they needed my help and I was not to stay but a minute. That reminds me, Rob said to ask you to save him the first and last waltzes."

"Tell him I will."

"If you give him two, I think you might be as generous with me. Will you give me two?"

"I will give you one," she replied demurely.

"And will you come early to-night?" he asked eagerly.

"Yes, I am anxious to see Rob."

Throughout the day her thoughts were as much with the handsome cousin as with her old schoolfellow.

When Mr. and Mrs. Thornley and their son Rob stood in receiving attitude in the doorway that night, one of the late arrivals was Christine, a slender, graceful girl in white. Rob felt himself invaded by a thrill as she came up to him, smiling.

"Christine, will you forgive the joke? I was piqued at your not recognizing me, and so I said I was John Stanley, who, by the way, is not here. And to think that you were so easily misled!"

"Rob, you silly! John Stanley and I met but a month ago, when I was visiting his aunt."

"And you knew all the time! Christine, I wouldn't have thought it of you! Anyway, I get the waltzes you saved for me and the one you promised John Stanley.

HIGH SPEED ON RAILWAYS.

Hundred Miles an Hour Must Be Made on Separate Tracks.

A study of the net results of the German experiments on the Berlin-Zossen railway with trains electrically propelled at high velocity appears to have led thoughtful railway men to the conclusion that any attempts to force train acceleration on steam railroads would be destructive of rolling stock and permanent way and incidentally of passengers and train crews. As pointed out in the paper of Dr. Frederick Schultz before the International Railway Congress, the best type of modern railway equipment can be operated safely at speeds of more than 100 miles an hour, provided a clear way can be assured.

This is exactly the difficulty which it would not seem possible to overcome in a railroad operated for a mixed traffic. At a speed of 100 miles an hour, unless the weather is quite clear track signals cannot be distinguished clearly enough to be read with certainty. This means that a railroad devoted to very high speeds would need to be divided into long blocks, and before a train entered upon a block its conductor must know that the road is clear.

Such blocks would need to be approximately a hundred miles long, which means the surrender of every other kind of traffic, which now keeps out of the way of fast trains by taking sidings or otherwise temporarily withdrawing itself from the track which belongs to the "flyer." As a matter of fact this would mean separate tracks for high-speed trains, over or under the other tracks, with absolutely no grade crossings and no points or switches by which slower moving trains could have access to such tracks. Anything like a coincident movement of freight and passenger traffic would be impossible.—New York Times.

Admiral Helen Gould.

Miss Helen Gould was saluted with the two ruffles of an admiral as she boarded the battleship Alabama at the Brooklyn navy yard, says the New York World. A "ruffle" is a roll of the drum with the bugles. The president of the United States receives three ruffles. It was the pretty compliment of the 700 jacks to the woman who has done so much for them.

Miss Gould had been invited to inspect the ship, which Lieutenant-Commander Schumacher told her was "the finest." With her were Miss Edith Hay, Kingston Gould, her nephew, and Cueseter Harrison, her cousin. She was received on the quarter-deck and every one of the jacksies received a nod of greeting from her as the line filed past in review. Rear-Admiral Coghlan led the way in the inspection of the battleship.

The only thing that went wrong was the dog, the mascot. The Rev. John F. Carson in a brief talk inadvertently spoke of the president as "Teddy." At this the dog set up a howl. The dog was banished from its place of honor and it was explained that it meant no harm, but was only saluting its own name.

Whenever Miss Gould visits an army post the enlisted men salute her as if she were an officer.

Blaine and His Hostess's Gale. About twenty-seven years ago the late James C. Blaine was invited to dine in a certain city in eastern Maine where he happened to be on business. His host had recently married a second wife, more noted for beauty and wealth than for intelligence. It was near the middle of March, and a storm was coming on, which, the husband remarked, would probably be the equinoctial gale.

"What do you mean by that? Is it the same as the fine gale," she asked.

The husband replied in the affirmative, and in reply to further questions told her it was usual to expect a storm twice a year, when the sun crossed the equinox.

"That day at dinner," said Mr. Blaine, "I remarked upon the severity of the storm and my hostess, with an engaging smile, replied: 'Yes, Mr. Blaine, isn't it singular that we always have such a fearful storm whenever the sun crosses the Penobscot? Before I could frame a reply my host in a tone of mild surprise exclaimed: 'You don't mean the Penobscot, dear, and she at once said: 'Oh, no. How stupid of me! I meant the Andros coggin.'—Boston Herald.

La Belle Inconnue. What wonder that I turned with ardent face To contemplate such grace? Or that in spite of me I fondly loved, So gazing, unimproved?

Sure—all the gentleness of heaven's blue Was there concentrated true! What maiden slowness, delicate fair! What a patrician air!

What pure return of glances, unashamed, As from a soul unblamed! What innocence, what beauty and what trust In humankind unjust!

Some Bird Neighbors. Wrens, chickadees, bluebirds, martins and sometimes crested flycatchers will come to birdhouses in our gardens, says St. Nicholas. Such houses should not be too new nor exposed. They should be arranged so that coats and squirrels cannot get to them. If they do come, we can learn much more by watching them a season than any book can teach us. Nearly all birds build nests for their eggs, each pair selecting a pleasant and secure place, while some kinds—mostly water birds—form immense colonies.

HIS JUDGMENT AT FAULT.

One Instance Where Balzac Failed as a Graphologist.

If there was one thing upon which Balzac flattered himself more than another it was his skill in reading character from handwriting.

But he made a sad mistake on one occasion. A lady brought him an extract from the exercise book of a 12-year-old schoolboy, and asked him for an opinion as to the youngster's character and prospects. Balzac inquired whether the child was her own. Answered in the negative, he examined the exercise carefully and delivered his judgment.

"Madama," he said, "this child is thick-headed and frivolous. He will never come to any good. If he were my child I would take him from school and put him to the plow."

Then it was explained to the novelist that the specimen on which he had pronounced so severely was one of his own which had been discovered hidden away between the leaves of an old lesson book.

Use for Discarded Trams.

Australia has found a new use for discarded trams. Sydney ladies have them painted green and white, hang them with baskets of flowers, train creepers over the roof and then utilize them as afternoon tearooms.

Proved Beyond a Doubt.

Middlesex, N. Y., July 3.—(Special)—That Rheumatism can be cured has been proved beyond a doubt by Mrs. Betsey A. Clawson, well known here. That Mrs. Clawson had Rheumatism and had it bad, all her acquaintances know. They also know she is now cured. Dodd's Kidney Pills did it. Mrs. Clawson tells the story of her cure as follows:

"I was an invalid for most five years, caused by Inflammatory Rheumatism, helpless two-thirds of the time. The first year I could not do as much as a baby could do, then I rallied a little bit and then a relapse. Then a year ago the gout set in my hands and feet. I suffered untold agony and in August, 1903, when my husband died I could not ride to the grave.

"I only took two boxes of Dodd's Kidney Pills and in two weeks I could walk on myself and saw my own wood. I dug my own potatoes and gathered my own garden last fall. Dodd's Kidney Pills cured me."

Rheumatism is caused by uric acid in the blood. Dodd's Kidney Pills put the kidneys in shape to take all the uric acid out of the blood.

Talents and Confidence.

A single-talent man, supported by great self-confidence, will achieve more than a ten-talent man who does not believe in himself. The mind can not act with vigor in the presence of doubt. A wavering mind makes a wavering execution. There must be certainty, confidence and assurance, or there can be no efficiency. An uneducated man who believes in himself, and who has faith that he can do the thing he undertakes, often puts to shame the average college-bred man, whose overculture and wider outlook have sometimes bred increased sensitiveness and a lessening of self-confidence, whose decision has been weakened by constant weighing of conflicting theories and whose prejudices are always open to conviction.—Success.

Majority of Men Immoral.

A Boston scientist says that hypnotism can develop only natural instincts and that the best hypnotist in the world cannot make a really moral person do wrong. From experiments he has made he believes that 75 per cent of the human race, if unrestrained by family pride and other like considerations, would steal.

IN COLONEL'S TOWN.

Things Happen.

From the home of the famous "Key-nel Keeyartah of Cartersville," away down South, comes an enthusiastic letter about Postum:

"I was in very delicate health, suffering from indigestion and a nervous trouble so severe that I could hardly sleep. The doctor ordered me to discontinue the use of the old kind of coffee, which was like poison to me, producing such extreme disturbance that I could not control myself. But such was my love for it that I could not get my own consent to give it up for some time, and continued to suffer, till my father one day brought home a package of Postum Food Coffee.

"I had the new food drink carefully prepared according to directions, and gave it a fair trial. It proved to have a rich flavor and made a healthy, wholesome and delightful drink. To my taste the addition of cream greatly improves it.

"My health began to improve as soon as the drug effect of the old coffee was removed and the Postum Coffee had time to make its influence felt. My nervous troubles were speedily relieved and the sleep which the old coffee drove from my pillow always came to soothe and strengthen me after I had drunk Postum—in a very short time I began to sleep better than I had for years before. I have now used Postum Coffee for several years and like it better and find it more beneficial than when I first began. It is an unspeakable joy to be relieved of the old distress and sickness." Name given by Postum Company, Battle Creek, Mich.

There's a reason. Read the little book, "The Road to Wellville," in each pkg.

LASTING RELIEF.

J. W. Walls, Superintendent of streets of Lebanon, Ky., says:

"My nightly rest was broken, owing to irregular action of the kidneys. I was suffering intensely from severe pains in the small of my back and through the kidneys and annoyed by painful passages of abnormal secretions. No amount of doctoring relieved this condition. I took Doan's Kidney Pills and experienced quick and lasting relief. Doan's Kidney Pills will prove a blessing to all sufferers from kidney disorders who will give them a fair trial."

Schiller's Mean Revenge.

When Schiller was a boy at school he was tormented by a Swiss tutor named Kuplig, who came from the Grisons canton. Years later, when the poet wrote "The Robbers," he revenged himself on Kuplig and the Grisons by introducing this little speech: "To be a scamp you must have genius. Moreover, a special climate is needed for the growth of scamps, and to prove this I recommend you to visit the Grisons canton. It is the veritable Athens of modern rascality." In the later editions of "The Robbers" this quaint bit of spleen does not appear. It is suggested that Schiller was not moved to expunge it by any remorseful feeling, but by a very forcible protest from the residents of the abused canton against this calumny.

Cleaning India Rubber Goods.

To clean India rubber goods, a piece of clean, household flannel should be rubbed upon a bar of common yellow soap. When a lather is obtained, apply the flannel to the rubber and pass it briskly over the surface. This will speedily make the article clean. Set to dry in a cool breeze.

Good Advice for Women.

George Eliot says: "To manage men one ought to have a sharp mind in a velvet sheath." But why should we everlastingly strive to manage men? Why not let men manage themselves? That would give all plenty to do and rid the world of most of its mischief.—Exchange.

THE MONTHLY TRIAL

HEADACHE, DIZZINESS, BEARING-DOWN PAINS.

A Woman Tells How She Has Become Well and Strong after Years of Misery Due to Irregular Functions.

The fact that one woman is bright-eyed, rosy-cheeked, strong and cheerful, while another is pale, weak and depressed, is due more often than otherwise to the regularity in the one case and the irregularity in the other of the functions that are peculiar to the sex. When these are disturbed everything goes wrong; pain and discomfort are felt all over the body; the sensations are often terrifying.

"For four years," said Mrs. Davis recently, "I suffered indescribable misery from sick headache every month, accompanied by fainting spells, shortness of breath and severe pain in my left side. There were also bearing-down pains, at times so acute that I could not stand up, and my head was full of ringing sounds. It seemed as if everything was going to hit me in the eyes. I was compelled to lie down with closed eyes for hours to get a little relief. When I attempted to arise everything would whirl around and it would grow so dark that I could scarcely see any object."

"Couldn't your doctor help you?"

"Five doctors in all treated me, but I got no lasting benefit. Besides I used a lot of advertised remedies. The only medicine, however, that had the desired effect was Dr. Williams' Pink Pills and they are truly a godsend to women. I did not have much faith in them when I began to take them. I found myself, however, so much better after using two boxes that I began to believe in them. They checked right away the decline into which I was going. My troubles kept lessening and finally disappeared altogether."

"How long did it take for a cure?"

"After I had used several boxes my health was all right. I had taken on flesh and was strong and hearty. I feel today my spirits more like a girl of sixteen than a woman of my years."

Mrs. O. H. Davis' address is Carmel, Maine, R. F. D., No. 3. Dr. Williams' Pink Pills are confidently offered to women for the cure of anemia, chlorosis, painful and irregular periods, and all forms of weakness. They are sold by every druggist.

Brought Diggers to Time

A sea captain was talking about the late Maskline Clark, the Philadelphia recluse, whose sole interest in life appeared to be the helping of sailors in distress.

"Mr. Clark came to my help once," the mariner said. "I had hurried ashore of a four months' cruise with over $60 in my pockets, and the next mornin', by gum, I woke up in a lodgin' house without a cent."

"It was terrible. I had drunk nothin' but beer, an' I had treated nobody, them bein' my principles always; and yet here I was, clean busted. Either I had drunk $60 worth o' beer, which would tot up to over a thousand glasses, or else I had been robbed. I had been robbed, of course."

"Well, Mr. Clark put me on my feet again, and he give me some good advice about gettin' my money back. I remember now he said it was always possible to get the best of people, no matter how tricky they might be, and to encourage me he told me how he once got the best of some tricky cellar diggers in a contract for a house what he had took."

"The cellar of this house was to be a big one. Clark said he was payin' the diggers by the day. They got good wages, but the way they dug was scandalous. Shovel one minute, then smoke and gas five. Then go and get a drink of water. Then gas some more. I guess you know the kind of men I mean."

"The contract was out in the country, and Mr. Clark couldn't get new men to substitute, and the diggers kept doin' less and less all the time. He was losin' money right and left on the contract, and one night, with a grave face, he was countin' up his losses, when a thought struck him."

"He put this thought into effect right away, and the result was somethin' wonderful. The diggers, instead of only doin' about an eighth of a man's work, now done near ten men's work apiece. They slaved away like maniacs. You could hardly get 'em to stop. In fact, Wednesday and Thursday two of 'em dug all night by the light of a lantern. The cellar was dug in no time."

"And this was all due to Mr. Clark's cleverness. You see, he had buried in the earth, where the diggers would be sure to turn it up with their spades, a very old, ancient piece of parchment, with these here words on it:

"Grete store of Money Lyeth buried beneath thys Spot. He yt fyndeth ytt may kepe ytt. Remember ye Poore. "GOTTILIEB ASTOR."

The Chunchuses in Dalny

When the correspondents with the Japanese army first went to the front in the siege of Port Arthur they were given quarters in Dalny, which city had been evacuated by the Russians and thoroughly plundered by the Chinese before the arrival of the Japanese forces. How the Chinese robbers found their opportunity for plundering, Frederic Villiers tells, as follows: "When the position at Nanshan fell the town was practically uncovered and the Russian citizens were compelled to fly to Port Arthur. But the mayor informed the people that they had quite four and twenty hours in which to prepare for the flight, as it would be impossible for the enemy to arrive before that time."

"Unfortunately on the very evening of the taking of Nanshan an adventurous Jap Sergeant pressed forward alone to Dalny and, arriving late at night, went from house to house in the Chinese quarter, spreading the news that a big force would be in early in the morning, and insisted on the celestials flying the Japanese flag over their houses, which was done. When daylight came the Russians saw, to their dismay, that there were many rising suns, and all but one dawning in the wrong direction. Thinking that the Japanese had entered the town, there was a terrible panic.

"They immediately packed up and rushed away for protection to the great fortress. On seeing this movement on the part of the Muscovites, the chunchuses, who were secreted in the town and in the outlying villages, hurried into the city and commenced firing and looting the Russian quarter. These men had been for weeks awaiting this possible event; now their time had come and judging by the number of bottles lying empty in the courtyard of the hotel they must have had a very good time indeed."

"For the thirty odd hours they were pillaging they made the hotel their headquarters. They ripped up all the beds, sofas and chairs in their search for hidden treasure and left nothing behind them but bare iron bedsteads and foul matting, on which they had slept off the effects of their dissipation. We unfortunate correspondents had to camp out in the empty rooms."

Trials of Prodigy's Mother

This is one of the great seasons of the infant prodigy—a phenomenon becoming more plentiful every year. But behind the triumphs of the infant prodigy there is sometimes a pathetic little family history, as witness the following account of her life and that of her child given by Mme. Annie Vivanti, the mother of Vivien Chartes, whose violin playing is sending London mad. I find the account in the Pall Mall Magazine for June. I transcribe it as a wonderful little human document:

"Nobody," says the mother, "would believe how difficult it is to be the mother of a wonderkind. Everything I do is wrong; everything the child does is 'for-effect'; everything we say is utterly untrue. If Vivien runs up to me and kisses me, I hear it murmured that she is trained to do so. So I tell her never to do it again. Immediately people remark how cold I am to the child. No, I am not at all happy. The dear child herself is spoilt by the compassion that visitors lavish upon her and vaguely feels that it is hard lines that she should be a wonderkind. On the other hand, if I suggest taking her violin away, she shrieks and is naughty. I cannot punish her, lest the neighbors should think we are beating her to make her practice. The child knows this, and cries whenever she wants anything she ought not to have; and her digestion is utterly ruined by the amount of horrid things we allow her to eat rather than that she should scream for them."

"Of course, there are moments of thrilling happiness that compensate for much anxiety and worry. "It is a great joy to see Vivien step out on the platform, where a thousand people look at her and love her for the music that she makes. When the applause rises round her like a storm her smile meets mine, and my heart beats loud with happiness at the thought that that little girl belongs to me!"

"But does she really belong to me?"—M. A. P.

Rascal Kissed Pretty Girl

Two Columbia students cut classes the other day and went out for a lark. As they turned into Broadway from 11th street they looked around for something in the way of excitement.

"Say, Kid," said the taller of the two as an open car stopped in front of them, "I don't dare kiss that girl in the Alice Blue hat."

The "kid" sized up the pretty girl at the end of the seat and turned to his friend.

"What do you bet?"

"Bet you two bucks."

The "kid" gave a hurried glance about for an insurance against the minions of the law, sprinted after the car, which meantime had started, and swung on to the step beside the girl. A resounding smack rose above the buzz of the car. Before even the girl could realize what had happened he had dropped off. Then the girl screamed and the conductor hurried forward to her seat to learn what had happened. She was so excited that the car traveled two blocks before she could explain. The conductor, agitated possibly by her screams, pulled the bell and stopped the car.

"I wonder what I ought to do?" he asked of a stout, dignified citizen who sat in a rear seat.

"Pull that bell and let us go along," said the dignified person.

The girl, who had stopped screaming and taken refuge in tears, turned indignantly.

"Oh, you heartless man," she said.

"Good Lord, woman, do you want to tie up the whole system because a young rascal kissed you?" he asked.

She did not answer and the car went on.—New York Press.

Wondrous Road to Nap-Land

Little one, my little one,
Come and take a ride,
Day is done and play is done,
Boys are put aside,
Come up here to Nap-land,
We'll away to Nap-land,
Through the silence soft and deep,
Of the soothing realm of sleep.

Sitting snugly by my knee
Changes as by magic. See,
'Tis an airy fairy sledge,
Which a team of reindeer draws,
Just like Santa Claus.
Warmly in the lap robes curled,
We will go
O'er the snow,
Far away and over the edge
Of the Vision-World.

With a beauty rich and rare,
Only seen in dreams,
Speed away and speed away
In our fairy, magic sleigh,
While the bells they sing a song,
As they tinkle along,
Keeping time
In their chiming.

With a sort of elfin ring,
To the melody and swing
Of the music sweet and deep
Warted through the halls of sleep—
Little one, my little one,
Nestle here your head,
Soon in fancy we will run
In our magic sled
From this cozy Nap-land
Far away to Nap-land,
'Tis a country passing fair,
Still and marvelous,
And already you are there,
When I lay you thus—
Little one, my little one,
In your magic bed.

INDIAN TREATMENT OF SICK.

Superstitious Ceremony That is Often a Last Resort.

In answer to inquiries as to the meaning of the word it was explained that a pachofsha is a feast and a part of the incantation and superstitious ceremony conducted over the sick by the lower class of ignorant Indians.

When a man is thought to be sick enough to require the services of a doctor he is put into a hut, and for three days no one except the doctor sees him. The doctor goes into the woods and gathers herbs, from which he prepares a potion for the sick man and then keeps a lonely vigil with him. At the end of the third day, if the patient is not improved, the order is given to prepare a pachofsha. Corn and meat, either beef, pork or game, are put in a large kettle and stewed until the corn is soft.

All the relatives of the sick man are entitled to attend, and they gather around the kettle for the feast. The sick man is brought out and served first. He is fed as much as his stomach can hold, and the other then turn in and devour the remainder of the stew. When this is concluded a bonfire is built and lighted, and the crowd circles around and dances to the tune of a weird chant. After this, if the sick man does not show signs of getting better, nothing more is done for him, and he dies or gets well by act of Providence.—Oklahoma Times Journal.

Profits of the Packers.

There has been a great deal of disappointment because the Garfield report shows that the profits of the packing industry only amount to about two per cent of the volume of business transacted. There is no doubt, however, that the report is correct.

The census reports compiled by the government in 1900, before the agitation regarding the "beef trust" began, throw considerable light on this question. It appears from the census that the packing industry is conducted on a smaller margin of gross profit than any other industry in America. The gross margin of profit of 871 flour and grist mills in Illinois, in the census year, was nearly seven per cent on the volume of business. The gross margin of fifty-one wholesale slaughtering and meat packing establishments in Illinois was only about one-third as large, or a little more than two per cent on the volume of business.

The millers have not been accused of being in a "trust," and combinations would seem impossible in a business where there are several thousand mills in the United States competing actively for the flour trade, but it appears that the gross profits of the millers are larger than the gross profits of the packers. It may turn out that the agitation regarding the packing industry will show the same result as the devil found in shearing the pig: "All squeal and no wool."—American Homestead.

Conviction Follows Trial

When buying loose coffee or anything your grocer happens to have in his bin, how do you know what you are getting? Some queer stories about coffee that is sold in bulk, could be told, if the people who handle it (grocers), cared to speak out.

Could any amount of mere talk have persuaded millions of housekeepers to use the leader of all package coffees for over a quarter of a century, if they had not found it superior to all other brands in Purity, Strength, Flavor and Uniformity?

This popular success of LION COFFEE can be due only to inherent merit. There is no stronger proof of merit than continued and increasing popularity.

If the verdict of MILLIONS OF HOUSEKEEPERS does not convince you of the merits of LION COFFEE, it costs you but a trifle to buy a package. It is the easiest way to convince yourself, and to make you a PERMANENT PURCHASER.

LION COFFEE is sold only in 1 lb. sealed packages, and reaches you as pure and clean as when it left our factory.

Look-head on every package. Save these Lion-heads for valuable premiums.

Constipated All His Life

Wilbert Thompson never knew a well day—he had been constipated all his life—many doctors treated him, but all failed to even help him—his health failed rapidly and on January 21, 1903, Mrs. Thompson asked us to suggest a treatment for her husband. We thought the case too serious and recommended that a specialist be consulted—but he also failed to help the patient—NOW HE IS WELL.

Mull's Grape Tonic Cured Him

Mrs. Thompson first wrote us as follows: "My husband, aged 23, suffers from sharp pains in his stomach and sometimes thinks it is his heart. Let me know by return mail what caused the pain, if you can. Mr. Thompson has been treated by several doctors, but they have given him up."

We promptly advised that a first-class specialist be consulted. We quote: "We want to sell Mull's Grape Tonic, because we know it will cure constipation, but 50c a bottle is no object to us when a human life is at stake, and if your husband's case is as serious as you state, we suggest you consult a reliable specialist, not the advertising kind, promptly." At the same time, knowing that Mull's Grape Tonic could do no harm, we advised its use until a physician could be consulted. January 25th, Mrs. Thompson wrote that a physician had been consulted. He diagnosed the case as being chronic constipation and dyspepsia. His treatment was followed faithfully, but there was no perceptible improvement in Mr. Thompson's health. Then he began taking Mull's Grape Tonic and on September 3, 1903, we received the following letter from Mrs. Thompson:

"You will remember that I wrote to you last January in regard to my husband's health. It is four months since he quit taking Mull's Grape Tonic for constipation, which he suffered from since birth. He took just 24 bottles of it and is perfectly cured. He is much stronger and has gained considerably in flesh. I cannot thank you enough for Mull's Grape Tonic. It is worth its weight in gold. Just $12 cured him and he has spent hundreds of dollars with doctors who did him no good. It did all you claimed it would."

Very respectfully yours, MRS. W. H. THOMPSON, 801 Main St., Peoria, Ill.

Mr. Thompson stopped taking Mull's Grape Tonic in June, 1903. He has been completely cured and has taken no other medicine since that date. Almost two years and no return of the disease, should prove a permanent cure.

Stomach Troubles, Indigestion, Dyspepsia, Blood Poison, Skin Diseases, Sores, Sudden Bowel Trouble, Diarrhea, Cholera, Etc.

No one whose bowels are healthy and active contracts these complaints. Invariably they are the result of Constipation which means decayed, poisoned and dying bowels or intestines. Check diarrhea and you are liable to fatal blood poison—a physician makes you worse. There is only one right, course and that is to treat the cause. Revive and strengthen the bowels and intestines. We will prove to you that Mull's Grape Tonic cures Constipation and all these terrible Stomach and Bowel troubles because it cleanses the Blood and makes the intestines practically new. It feeds the starved condition and brings them back to life—nothing else will.

 Foley & Co., Chicago, originated Honey and Tar as a throat and lung remedy, and on account of the great merit and popularity of Foley's Honey and Tar many imitations are offered for the genuine. Ask for Foley's Honey and Tar and refuse any substitute offered as no other preparation will give the same satisfaction. It is mildly laxative. It contains no opiates and is safest for children and delicate persons. Sold by L. C. Madison.

Pine-solve acts like a poultice. Best thing in the world for boils, burns, cracked hands, tetter, etc. Sold by Warner's Pharmacy.
 Croup is quickly relieved, and Whooping Cough will not "run its course" if you use the original Bee's Laxative Honey and Tar. This Cough Syrup is different from all others because it acts on the bowels. You can not cure Croup and Whooping Cough until you rid the system of all congestion by working off the cold through a copious action of the bowels. Bee's Laxative Honey and Tar does this, and cures all Coughs, Croup, Whooping Cough, etc. No opiates. Sold by Warner's Pharmacy.

Backache is never known to those persons who take an occasional dose of Pineules. The value of the resin obtained from the Pine tree has long been recognized in the treatment of diseases of the bladder and kidneys. One dose of Pineules will give relief, and one bottle will cure. Sold by Warner's Pharmacy.

Passed Stone and Gravel With Excruciating Pains
 A. H. Thurnes, Mgr. Wills Creek Coal Co., Buffalo, O., writes: "I have been afflicted with kidney and bladder trouble for years, passing gravel or stones with excruciating pains. Other medicines only gave relief. After taking FOLEY'S KIDNEY CURE the result was surprising. A few doses started the brick dust, like fine stones, etc., and now I have no pain across my kidneys and I feel like a new man. FOLEY'S KIDNEY CURE has done me $1,000 worth of good."
 No Other Remedy Can Compare With It
 Thos. W. Carter, of Ashboro, N. C., had Kidney Trouble and one bottle of FOLEY'S KIDNEY CURE effected a perfect cure, and he says there is no remedy that will compare with it.
