RETURN OF SALOONS TO WEXFORD COUNTY

Some Facts of Which the Liquor Interests of Michigan are not Boasting.

There has been more than a little jubilation in saloon circles in Michigan and among those interested in the advancement of the liquor traffic over the defeat of local option in Wexford county at the April election. It is not probable, however, that the Wexford county incident will be boasted of to any extent by the friends of the saloon when the facts relating to the election in this county are all known. It was declared by the friends of local option in Wexford county that the results of that system were successful and satisfactory in Cadillac and throughout the county. And this declaration was true.

Scores of business men who were opposed to the law when it was enacted found the results helpful to all legitimate business. Employers who had been indifferent to its adoption because the most active friends in the county to keep the saloons out of the county.

Eighty more votes were cast for local option in the city of Cadillac at the end of its two years' experience in that city than when the law was first voted on, and the vote in favor of local option was greater in the county as a whole than when it was first submitted.

The very fact that local option had been successful in Wexford county and that in all moral and material directions it had accomplished more than its strongest friends expected caused the saloon interest of the state to plan and work for the defeat of local option here through any means and without regard to cost.

Four hundred more votes were cast in the city of Cadillac in the recent election than were cast two years ago, although it had been proclaimed throughout the state by the saloon interests that Cadillac had decreased in population since the adoption of local option, that there were about eighty empty dwellings here and that workmen had been forced to leave the city because of decreasing demands for labor.

These statements were all false, but attention is here called to them because of the fact that the saloon interests now seek to have it believed that four hundred new voters have been added to the city within two years. Nearly all of this unexpected increase in votes were cast in two wards in the city. It is known to be true that many of them were not legal residents of Cadillac; they had been brought here for the purpose of voting for the return of the saloons. They had not lived in this city; they knew nothing as to the results of local option here and they cared nothing as to such results.

Wexford county was returned to the saloon column through hundreds of votes provided by a very large expenditure of money, and not because of any change in sentiment on the part of the people of this county as to the desirability of saloons.

When it became known that the saloons were coming back there was almost the mourning that comes with death in a number of Cadillac homes. The occupants of these homes well know from bitter past experience by whom the saloons will be supported and they know of the privation and misery the saloon demands will involve for them.

More arrests for drunkenness were made in Cadillac within four days after the return of the saloons than had been made in three months under local option. It will cost the people of the city of Cadillac $100,000 to support the saloons that came back, and for this enormous expenditure not one element of value has been added to the city, nothing that will in any way help wage earners or their families, or that will give to the city any permanent means of advancement or upbuilding. The saloons will be a dead weight on the city and they will bring dissipation to many men here who during the past two years had returned to lives of sobriety and usefulness.

And this is the incident over which the saloon circles of Michigan are jubilating. It would appear almost as fitting to celebrate a disaster by flood or fire, or to express gladness over an impending harvest failure through which famine and affliction were sure to come.

Fruit Growers' Meeting.

The regular monthly meeting of the Charlevoix County Fruit Growers' Association will be held in Charlevoix on Tuesday, June 7th, 1910, at 1:00 p. m.

The general subject for the afternoon will be pruning, spraying and thinning, but perhaps the most valuable part of the meeting will be an address given by Mr. J. L. Gibson, secretary of the Western Michigan Development Bureau.

Mr. Gibson will address the meeting on the subject of fruit raising and the fruit growers of the county should be on hand with a long list of questions.

Every member of the society should be present.

If you are not a member we invite you to come and become a member.
J. H. MILFORD, Secy.

FOR BALD HEAD

A Treatment that Costs Nothing If It Fails.

We want you to try three large bottles of Rexall "93" Hair Tonic on our personal guarantee that the trial will not cost you a penny if it does not give you absolute satisfaction. That's proof of our faith in this remedy, and it should indisputably demonstrate that we know what we are talking about when we say that Rexall "93" Hair Tonic will grow hair on bald heads, except where baldness has been of such long duration that the roots of the hair are entirely dead, the follicles closed and grown over, and the scalp is glazed.

Remember, we are basing our statements upon what has already been accomplished by the use of Rexall "93" Hair Tonic; and we have the right to assume that what it has done for thousands of others it will do for you. In any event you cannot lose anything by giving it a trial on our liberal guarantee. Two sizes, 50c. and $1.00. Remember, you can obtain Rexall Remedies in this community only at our store—The Rexall Store. The W. C. Spring Drug Co.

At Break of Day.

WARREN W. LAMPFORT

Of all the hours of all the day
There's none so merry quite
As when the legions of the dawn
Are driving forth the night.

I'm often loth to leave the songs
Then floating in my dreams,
But when I hear the waking birds
Oh, sweeter far it seems.

I hear the robin's roundelay,
The bluebird's twittering note;
I hear the merry little wren
A-splitting wide his throat.

I hear the pewee call his mate,
The lark begins to sing,
The blackbird's "chick-a-weasel" notes
Up from the ready spring.

From sword and fence, from bush and tree,
From here and everywhere,
Swells out a wildering melody
Upon the trembling air.

No doubt the angels will awake
Sweet music in the skies
When dawn the great eternal day
And heavenly chorals rise.

They'll have to get up early, tho,
And tune their loftiest notes,
To beat the birds when o'er the hills
Their morning carol floats.

Oh, brighter seem the passing hours,
And sweeter all the day,
If one but wake to hear the song
Of birds at break of day.

Jails Must Be Improved.

A new rule has been adopted by the state board of corrections and charities relative to county jails under which all new buildings must provide for classification of prisoners. More stringent approval of plans has been adopted which was brought about by the annual inspection conducted by Secretary Murray which developed some deplorable conditions in some sections of the state.

It seems that all jails are lacking in certain facilities in that they lack facilities to separate hoboes, drunks, convicted men and men awaiting trial from each other. Under the new rule the new jails must provide quarters for men awaiting trial separate from those of the other classes.

The first plan submitted was from Montcalm county and showed two blocks of cells facing on a common alley way and the board has requested that the plans be changed to conform to the new rule adopted.

FRED E. BOOSINGER CLOTHING DEPARTMENT

THERE is something about Men's Clothes we sell that you will find different and unusual. There are extreme styles if you want them or conservative. But in every style there is evidence of dignity, good taste and individuality that does not often come in most clothing.

You can wear smart clothes and look like a clown; or you can wear smart clothes and look like a gentleman. Our clothes will put you in the latter class; and that, we think, is where you want to be.

These are clothes worthy of you, and other stylish dressers. Style radiates from these garments. It requires more than mere pictures to do them justice. Nothing short of seeing the clothes in the store can tell the story.

From the moment the designer maps out his pattern until the last button is sewed on, there is a constant effort made to put as much style, dignity and exclusiveness into each square inch as human ingenuity is capable of. The standard is always refinement. The result can't fail to produce clothes above the ordinary.

Fit is a much talked of quality in clothes. But "fit" isn't the word. "Drape" is it. That is what makes a suit of clothes or an overcoat attractive and noticeable. That is what gives you a well dressed appearance. That is style, itself.

When you get a Born or Schloss Suit, you have a garment made in one of the highest class tailor shops in the world. No merchant tailor in existence has anything to compare with it. There are scores of highly skilled clothes makers to give their combined knowledge and experience to making Young Men's Clothing right in every detail. And when a garment comes from their hands, there is little chance for improvement.

JUST RECEIVED three different styles and patterns, in Navy Blue—the most popular clothing and most talked of in clothing circles today. They are just from the shop. Price $12.50 to $20.00.

"Quality First of All" our motto.

The CURSE of OPIUM

Copyright by
HAROLD F. FINE

By ELLIOTT FLOWER

HERE came to a western state some years ago a young man of energy and more than the ordinary ability. He started a general store in a small place and prospered. He moved to a larger place and prospered. He went into politics and was successful. He was elected to the legislature, became president of the state senate, and in such esteem was he held that there seemed to be no office within the gift of the people to which he might not reasonably aspire.

Then opium claimed him as a devotee—not directly, but through morphine, one of its derivatives. I do not know how he acquired the habit, but the effect was soon apparent; he began slipping backward—down, down, down—much more rapidly than he had climbed up. In a short time he was out of politics, and a little later he was out of business. The foundations of success, that he had laid with such labor and pains, crumbled away; he became a "fend," a pitiable wreck of an able man, a byword and a joke among the more thoughtful of those who knew him.

In time he reached a point where he "borrowed" from anybody who would "lend" him anything from a nickel to a dollar. So strong was the instinct of the man in him, even then, that he would accept nothing as a gift, but resorted to the miserable makeshift of entering every "loan," however small, in a notebook that he carried for that purpose. Could anything be more pathetic than the picture of a man of his attainments and early promise—"borrowing" 15 cents or a quarter that both he and the lender knew he never would or could repay? Yet he always insisted upon this form.

This story would unquestionably have a more horrible ending were it not for the fact that the victim had a devoted and prosperous brother. This fact kept the "fend" out of the gutter, for provision was always made for his material wants, although it was quite impossible to trust him with the money for his board, lodging and other necessities. The brother did all that was possible to do to break the habit, and he finally succeeded in getting the unfortunate one into an asylum and under the watchful care of physicians. The habit was there broken, but the patient nearly died in the breaking. Furthermore, the harm had been done, and, although the man never went back to morphine, he never was anything but a miserable wreck, of no use to himself or to anyone else. His brother provided for him, but he continued to be a joke or tragedy (as you happened to look at it), to the day of his death, and he died miserably.

That's one story of opium in one form; a promising career checked in the very moment of its greatest promise, and then ruined. There are many others, where there is no devoted brother, that will surpass it in horrid details of degradation, but the very fact that this man, with all the uplifting influences and help that he had, fell so swiftly and so far makes his story impressive and illuminating.

Smuggled opium drifts naturally into those channels that lead to its vicious and harmful use. Duty-paid opium is also thus used to a large extent, but the smuggled article is almost wholly for that market. Indeed, without that market there would be little smuggling.

There are restrictions placed upon the sale of opium and its derivatives, but these restrictions cannot well be made to apply to what is contraband anyhow and liable to confiscation wherever found. Neither national nor state government can successfully regulate the sale and use of an article that neither is able to find, so smuggled opium naturally follows subterranean channels and reaches those who would have difficulty in buying openly. The very fact that it is contraband compels it to seek this market, and the very fact that this market is under the ban of the law compels it to depend largely upon the contraband article. The fact that it is cheaper than the duty-paid article also commends it, but that is merely incidental.

Smuggled opium it is for the most part that supplies the opium "johns," and the "johns" not only cater to the smuggled article, but create the habits that make the demand for it. Morphine is a derivative of opium, and is properly to be considered therewith. Opium contains an average of about nine or ten per cent. of morphine. There are also other derivatives of opium that produce some of the sensations the "fend" learns to crave, but morphine alone seems to take the grip on him that becomes a habit. He passes quite easily and naturally from opium to morphine, usually taking it internally at first, and then with the "needle." It is a saying among physicians that "a man is lost when he begins to use the needle." This is not to be understood as meaning that all opium-users, or even a majority of them, pass to morphine, or that all morphine-users, or even a majority of them, begin with opium. On the contrary, the morphine habit is distinct and is usually acquired without any preliminary "pipe" experience, but the road from opium to morphine is open and easy.

Cocaine, on the contrary, bears no relation to opium. It is not a derivative; it gives entirely different sensations; and it is a separate and distinct habit. It is allied to opium only in this: the morphine victim occasionally turns to cocaine for relief when trying to break himself of the morphine habit, and, according to the Chicago police, there are occasional "fends" so far gone that they use both, finding that one so counteracts the other in its physical effects that it is possible to use more of each without danger. So, while cocaine itself bears no relation to opium, there is an occasional connection between the cocaine habit and the morphine habit, and the confusion that makes it necessary to include cocaine in a discussion of opium and its derivatives is not altogether without justification.

It is a common belief that desperate criminals are generally, or at least often, "dope fends." When the perpetrator of a particularly daring crime is caught, it is not unusual to find the newspapers gravely announcing that he is a victim of the cocaine habit. It may be morphine, or it may be just "dope" generally, but it is usually cocaine. The more sensational the crime or series of crimes for which a man or a gang is responsible, the more certain we are to learn that "dope" had much to do with the making of the criminal or criminals. It takes such a hold on a man, we are told, that he will commit any crime to obtain it. Being in need of his cocaine or his morphine—opium itself has not such a bad name in this way—we picture him taking his magazine pistol and going out to get the necessary money.

I asked a Chicago policeman of much experience about this. "If a dope fiend needed his dope," he said, "and had a magazine gun or any other kind of a gun, he'd hock the gun." "If he had no gun?" I suggested. "He'd try to borrow dope from another fend." "And if he couldn't do that?" "He'd hock his clothes—all that he could get along without." "And if he had nothing to pawn?" "He'd beg." "Might he not become desperate enough to go out with a club or slung-shot, and slug some unsuspecting wayfarer?" "Rarely. One of them may occasionally do something like that, if very desperate and conditions are just right, but he seldom has confidence enough in himself to attempt it. Whisky would be much more likely to result in an act like that. Whisky gives a man nerve, dope takes it away. Dope fends are almost invariably arant cowards; they have not even the nerve to be good sneak-thieves. They are responsible for a lot of petty crime that calls for neither courage nor exertion, but that is all." The impression that the use of these narcotics leads to insanity is also an error, according to those in a position to know. While under the influence of the drug, a man may be temporarily insane, but, deprived of it, he recovers very much as a man gets over a drunk. He may be, and usually is, weakened mentally, but his condition is not such as to warrant his continued restraint in an asylum. In fact, he seldom gets to an asylum. Dr. Adolf Meyer, director of the Pathological Institute of the New York state commission in lunacy and head of the Phipps Research commission, quotes a report that shows only 12 out of over 1,500 cases investigated to be due to the use of opium, cocaine, etc., although he adds that private sanitariums would probably show a larger proportion.

Dr. Clarke Gopen, now located at Madison, Wis., but formerly at the head of the Illinois Eastern Hospital for the Insane, at Kankakee, could find only nine in a report covering four years, and 2,181 cases of insanity. "The effects, so far as the necessity for restraint are concerned," said Dr. Gopen, "are temporary. The Keeley cures and private asylums undoubtedly get a larger proportion than the public asylums, but even there they are usually discharged quickly. And most of those in these places are not classed as 'insane' anyway; they are merely there to be assisted in breaking a habit. Some should be kept under restraint, at least much longer than they are, as the only means of keeping them from dropping back into the old rut, but you can't hold in an asylum a man, otherwise mentally sound, just because he has a weak will."

Then what is the fate of the "dope fend?" He seldom finds his way to the penitentiary or the asylum, so what does become of him?

Well, that question is answered in part by the story that leads this article, and here is another: A young man of Los Angeles, California, was engaged to be married to a charming girl of the same city. She was of excellent family, a favorite in society, accomplished, and the future seemed rosy. He was a youth of excellent standing and good business prospects. But he had acquired the opium habit. He still had the manners, however, to confess this to her before marriage. He was, of course, going to break himself of the habit, and she, womanlike, was willing to risk her happiness on the chance of reclaiming him.

They were married, and for a year, with her help he succeeded in keeping away from the stuff. The habit, apparently, was broken. Then, in some way, he drifted back to it. His wife tried again and again to lead him back to the decent and safe life, but it was the old, old story: the man who has not the strength to reform to get the wife he wants is very, very seldom reformed by her afterward.

The young wife became discouraged. The task was hopeless, the future was black, and there was nothing to keep up her courage. Now, a person in that frame of mind is the one to whom opium or morphine most appeals; if he or she happen to have knowledge of the effect. It is when the gloom is deep that the drugs that bring temporary solace seem most alluring. And the wife tried opium, and opium claimed her.

They drifted away from Los Angeles, and no more was heard of them—until they were arrested in St. Paul for running an opium den. Another young man and another young woman were arrested with them when the police raided the place. All four were under the influence of the drug.

The following, also from the police report, seems to be at variance with the policeman quoted previously and also with the views of the physicians: "No crime, great or small, is beyond the reach of the person surrounded by such conditions."

The habit is sometimes acquired unconsciously, but this does not apply to opium smoking. No one ever "hit the pipe" without knowing exactly what he was doing, and no one ever had a legitimate excuse for trying it. Opium may be administered in other ways for an entirely proper and sometimes necessary purpose, and out of this may grow the habit, but it does not lead to the "pipe." On the contrary, it is much more likely to lead to the morphine needle. So opium smoking may be said to be the least excusable of the habits, and, except as it leads to morphine, it is the least harmful.

The morphine and cocaine habits, and other forms of the opium habit, may be acquired by one who takes no such deliberate or conscious risk. Reputable physicians are extremely chary these days of administering any of these drugs, avoiding them so far as possible; but they were not always so careful, and there are physicians now who are somewhat reckless in using them.

Physicians, however, maintain that neither the morphine nor the cocaine habit is often acquired as a result of the use of the drug under a doctor's directions in cases of illness or to allay pain. Strangely enough, the white man is the victim of opium rather than the Chinaman.

With regard to the class from which it claims its victims, a report from the Pittsburg police to the International Opium commission puts physicians in the lead among professional men, with ministers second.

Stop Women And Consider

This Fact—that in addressing Mrs. Pinkham you are confiding your private ills to a woman—a woman whose experience with women's diseases covers twenty-five years.

The present Mrs. Pinkham, daughter-in-law of Lydia E. Pinkham, was for years under her direction, and has ever since her decease continued to advise women.

Many women suffer in silence and drift along from bad to worse, knowing well that they ought to have immediate assistance, but a natural modesty causes them to shrink from exposing themselves to the questions and probable examinations of even their family physician. Such questioning and examination is unnecessary. Without cost you can consult a woman whose knowledge from actual experience is great.

MRS. PINKHAM'S STANDING INVITATION:

Women suffering from any form of female weakness are invited to promptly communicate with Mrs. Pinkham at Lynn, Mass. All letters are received, opened, read and answered by women. A woman can freely talk of her private illness to a woman; thus has been established this confidence between Mrs. Pinkham and the women of America which has never been broken. Never has she published a testimonial or used a letter without the written consent of the writer, and never has the company allowed these confidential letters to get out of their possession, as the hundreds of thousands of them in their files will attest.

Out of the vast volume of experience which Mrs. Pinkham has to draw from, it is more than possible that she has gained the very knowledge needed in your case. She asks nothing in return except your good will, and her advice has helped thousands. Surely any woman, rich or poor, should be glad to take advantage of this generous offer of assistance. Address Mrs. Pinkham, care of Lydia E. Pinkham Medicine Co., Lynn, Mass.

LIMBURGER AND THE LAW SAW CHANCE TO MAKE MONEY

Odororous Compound Responsible for Some Trouble and a Little Alleged "Wit."

Unreasonable Attitude of His Friend Naturally Disgusted Man of Business.

"Technically," said Judge Wells to William Rung in the municipal court, "you had the right on your side. However, you chose a form of cruel and unusual punishment that cannot be tolerated by this court. I'll have to fine you one dollar."

It appeared from the evidence that Mr. Rung, who is a stereotyper, sat down to luncheon with Edward Snider, a fellow employe. The piece de resistance of Rung's luncheon consisted of Limburger cheese, and Snider, who regards himself as something of a wag, had made certain remarks about the cheese, reflecting particularly on its odor. Thereupon Mr. Rung smeared a piece of the cheese over the humorous Snider's countenance.

"This," said Rung, as he stepped up to pay his fine, "is the kind of justice that smells to heaven."

"That will be about all from you," said the court bailiff, "cheese it!"—Chicago Record-Herald.

Why She Permitted It.— "Why did you ever permit your husband to buy a flimsy, rickety automobile like that?"

"He recently got himself heavily insured against accidents."

In the London streets there are nearly 10,500 boy traders under 14 years of age, and over 900 girl traders.

Solomon and Moses, while walking by the canal, saw a notice board which stated that five shillings would be paid to whoever rescued another man from drowning.

It didn't take them more than a minute to arrange that one should fall in and be saved by the other, and the "stakes" divided.

In went Sol, and found it rather deeper than he expected. However, he splashed about, crying: "Come on, Moses! Save me!" Moses hesitated.

"Sol," he said, "I've been reading that notice board again, and it says, 'Ten shillings for a dead body.' Now, do be reasonable."—London Tit-Bits.

Another Instance.— The Fiji cannibal reluctantly produced a quarter in response to the Lightning Calculator's pathetic plea at the psychological moment.

"If you would only cut out the booze, he growled, 'and pass up the crap and dice and the handbook thing, you wouldn't have to be touching your friends for a grub-stake so regularly.'"

"Ah! You're like so many others, my Phillistine friend," sighed the Lightning Calculator; "it seems impossible for you to understand the eccentricities of genius!"—Los Angeles Herald.

The Morrow

The world goes up, and the world goes down,
And the sunshines follows the rain,
And yesterday's sneer and yesterday's frown
Can never come over again,
Sweet wife,
No, never come over again.

For woman is warm, though man be cold,
And the night will hallow the day
Till the heart which at even was weary
And old
Can rise in the morning gay,
Sweet wife,
To its work in the morning gay.

The Rescue of Injured Innocence

By JOHN CARMICHAEL

(Copyright, 1908 by Associated Literary Press.)

When Poindexter, on a sketching tramp, came upon the spot that June morning, he remarked to himself that it was the most perfect setting for a highway robbery or a murder he had ever seen east of the Mississippi. The fact that he knew that it was not a desert miles from New York city did not make it seem less so. The path below him ran through a ravine, whose rocky precipitous sides, overgrown with low scrub oak and pine, would furnish hiding places for a score of highwaymen. From where he lay, 25 feet or more above the path, there was not a house, not a human being in sight, although he knew that over beyond the clump of pines there was a respectable farmhouse, surrounded by its prosaic vegetable garden and orchards, and that the railroad station on the Shore View road was only a quarter of a mile away.

Poindexter had not yet outgrown his boyish love of adventure, and as he lay there on the moss in the cool shadow of the pines, he amused himself imagining various tragic and romantic happenings, appropriate to the spot. The whistle of a passing freight train, sounding shrilly near, at last dissipated his dreams, and he rolled over, laughing happily and calling himself a fool.

He was lying on his back, his hands clasped under his head, watching the feathery pine branches sway in the sunshine against the blue sky, when a slight sound broke the peaceful stillness. He listened a moment, and then raised his head, cautiously peering around the corner of the bowlder, which quite hid him from view of a passerby below.

Down the patch, walking straight toward him, came a graceful girl in a white gown, swinging a broad hat in her hand. She made such a perfect picture, coming as she did through the sunshine, dappled with shadows, the light falling on her bronze hair and bringing out every perfect line of her

"Will You Marry Me To-Day or Will You Not?"

beautiful figure, that Poindexter's artistic soul was seized with a desire to paint her. She was walking in a brown study at first, her eyes on the ground, as if she were buried in thought, but when she was so near to Poindexter that he could have spoken to her without raising his voice, she stopped and lifted her face to the sky with a look of rapture, as if she were filled with the joy of living, of being out there all alone under those pines and that infinite sky.

As she stood thus, Poindexter leaned forward. He could see every feature distinctly, even the color of her eyes, and he was puzzled by a maddeningly vague resemblance to some one he had met, or seen, before. Who was this girl, and what could she be doing all alone in this deserted spot?

Suddenly, as he watched her, her eyes dropped to the path ahead of her, and Poindexter saw a look of terror come into her face. At the same moment he heard a step approaching, although the newcomer was hidden from him by a turn in the path. The girl, however, could see him distinctly, and as she watched him coming, she began to back away, step by step, one hand raised to her breast, as if to still the beating of her heart.

By leaning far over, Poindexter could see a man, an exceedingly disagreeable-looking person, coming toward her, with a sinister look on his face. It was exactly the sort of smile a spider might wear as he bore down on

DUCHESS OF AOSTA SLAYS BIG GAME

KILLING OF A HIPPO THE MOST EXCITING SPORT, SHE SAYS.

DESCRIBES DANGEROUS FIGHT

Royal English Woman Who Has Slain Lions, Tigers and Elephants Tells Interesting Story of Fierce Battle With Wounded Animal.

New York.—The Duchess of Aosta, one of the world's keenest sports-women, in an article in Harper's Weekly gives an interesting account of the slaying of a hippo. The duchess has killed lions, tigers, elephants and other vicious animals, but she declares the slaying of a hippo is one of the most exciting battles she knows.

BY THE DUCHESS OF AOSTA.

Half an hour's silent march brings us within sight of a small lake, a short distance from the river; it is a floating field; the roots of the rushes have interlaced, weaving a big network, under which the waters are imprisoned and jealously hidden, covering unfathomable mysteries, an infinity of unknown lives. It is an ideal garden of frail flowers born in stagnation. The lake is already surrounded; but before beginning the hunt the chief prays for the preservation of all those taking part from accident and death. In the last hunt two men were killed and several hurt, by a furious hippo coming charging out of the water, trampling and crushing all that he met on his path.

The chief prays; standing before a hole in the ground in which he has placed an offering of tobacco, he pronounces in a loud voice an invocation to the protecting spirits; all the hunters squat on the ground and clap their hands—not in the noisy European fashion, but by striking the two palms one against the other.

The chief breaks the spell—he stands up and gives his orders. All rise, and at a signal the men go down upon the green carpet of floating field. Complete silence again—we hold our breath in anxious expectation. The hippo is invisible; if he is there he is hidden under the protecting grasses. Our wait is short; the hippo is indeed there; a man has felt him under his feet. But the beast travels under the moving vault. The blacks never lose sight of him for a moment; the circle closes in; for an instant they fear that he will escape them by going out toward the river, and they hurry after him with lances poised; but he goes back to the middle of the lake by an underground passage.

A man is knocked over; jostled by the invisible animal, he loses his footing and falls. The hippo is here—quite close to us—we see the grasses move. With great skill a man throws a harpoon with a strong cord at tached to it. A shout of joy goes up; the harpoon stays upright, firmly planted in the animal's back. He disappears once more, and the crowd of hunters pursues him closely. A second and a third harpoon are successfully thrown, and the ends of the ropes quickly passed to men in canoes. They pull at the animal, which struggles and resists, and, pushing up his head bellows furiously. He plunges down again, pulling after him the canoes and paddlers.

There is an anxious moment, but the weight of numbers tells, and he is brought back to the surface. Finding he cannot escape, he becomes infuriated; he fights and struggles and throws himself against the canoes, biting at them with his huge jaws; he turns and attempts to charge, then tries again to wreck the canoes. It is too dangerous a game to be allowed to continue, and the men close in and spear him to death with their long lances. His death is almost pathetic; with an effort he lifts his forequarters out of the water and retracts his head against the side of a canoe. Then his head falls, his eyes close, and he dies.

"TIN CAN" SEPARATORS

Are low in price, but they do not separate—consequently, in buying them you are simply throwing away your money. Remember, that in separating twice a day a little loss in cream figures up a large amount at the end of the year. The National Cream Separator costs a little more, but it gets all the cream and is so simple and strong in construction that it will last a lifetime. In buying a separator the only safe way is to see it work. Your dealer will demonstrate a National to you free of expense if you insist. Complete catalog sent for the asking.

Major Green Passes Away

Died at His Home in Charlevoix, Monday,

Edward H. Green, one of the first and most highly respected pioneers of the Grand Traverse region, passed away peacefully at his home in Charlevoix Monday afternoon. His death was due to the infirmities incidental to his age, 76 years.

In addition to the widow, two sons and three daughters are left, the children being Miss Emily, who lives at home, Fred of New York, Guy of Chicago, Miss Maggie of Chicago and a married daughter.

The funeral services were held Friday morning and interment was made in the Charlevoix cemetery.

Major Green was well known all over the northern portion of the state, particularly in the gatherings of the old settlers and at the meetings of the G. A. R.

Edward H. Green was born in Reamstown, Lancaster, Pa., Oct. 31, 1834, his early education having been obtained in the district school and the Normal at Millersville. At the breaking out of the civil war, he was one of the first to respond to the call for troops, enlisting April 19, 1861, for three months' service. Later he enlisted in Co. E, 107th Pennsylvania Infantry. Mr. Green made a brilliant war record, suffering untold hardships. He was first promoted to lieutenant, then captain and at the close of the war was breveted major in recognition of his bravery and service so that the title he bore to the day of his death was actually earned and not merely an honorary appellation.

In the winter of 1865-66, he taught school and then attended the University of Michigan, graduating in March, 1868, and immediately after was admitted to the practice of law in the Supreme court at Detroit. Major Green then started in pursuit of a location and acting on the advice of Judge Ramadell of Traverse City, located in Charlevoix, then a part of Emmet county. He was the first lawyer to locate between Traverse City and the Straits and the field at that time was not calculated to inspire a young attorney who had both fame and fortune to acquire. Just about that time, the county seat of Emmet county was located at Charlevoix and the immense forests of timber surrounding Pine Lake, led Major Green to believe that some time, Charlevoix would become a business point.

On Sept. 29, 1868, Major Green wedded Miss Luna A. Matthews of Ann Arbor, who died a number of years ago. In the same year at the August term of court, he was appointed prosecuting attorney for Emmet county and upon the organization of Charlevoix county in 1869, he was elected first prosecuting attorney of the new county. He was also the first circuit court commissioner and has held the offices of county treasurer, supervisor and deputy collector of customs. He was twice elected on the republican ticket to the state legislature.

Major Green's experiences were varied. He cleared the lot upon which his house stands and while building that house, received his first retainer, Dennis T. Downing paying him $20 to defend him in an embezzlement case. He was editor of the Charlevoix Sentinel from its first issue in April, 1869, to Feb. 11, 1871.

During the winter of 1868-69, he taught the village school and there are a number of pupils still living in Charlevoix. Major Green was a Mason and was the first master of the Charlevoix lodge. He was also the first worthy chief of the Good Templars.

To The Republican Electors of Charlevoix County,

I desire to announce that I will be a candidate for the nomination to the office of Register of Deeds of Charlevoix County on the Republican ticket at the primary election to be held Tuesday, September 6, 1910.

J. H. GRAFF.

TO THE REPUBLICAN ELECTORS OF CHARLEVOIX COUNTY.

I desire to announce that I will be a candidate for the nomination of Sheriff of Charlevoix County on the Republican ticket at the primary election to be held Tuesday, September 6, 1910.

The names and addresses of all the Western Michigan fruit growers and farmers who produce products above the average, are desired at the office of the Western Michigan Development Bureau, Traverse City, that the Bureau may enter into correspondence with expert growers in each country in its territory regarding fruit and other farm products suitable for the several displays that the Bureau is planning on making.

At Macinac Island Tuesday, was organized the Straits of Mackinac Apple Belt Association, with the following officers: President, Judge Willis Brown, Charlevoix; vice-president, Dr. Gerow, Cheboygan; secretary and treasurer, E. B. Ward, Charlevoix; directors, E. H. Clark, East Jordan, Frank Breese, Cheboygan, and William Knight, Antrim. This association is planned to regulate the marketing and advance the prices of Northern Michigan fruit.

Att'y C. S. Abbott of Detroit, principal stockholder of the East Jordan Electric Light and Power Co., was an East Jordan visitor this week. He found the electric system here in good running shape. The new producer gas engine, which has given considerable trouble in the past, has been thoroughly over-hauled and is now working fine. A duplicate of this engine has been ordered and work on installing it will commence this coming week. This will give the company ample power for continuous service, the plan being to use the engines alternately. The management are expending considerable money in providing for a reliable continuous day and night service, and Manager Plank has an adv. elsewhere in this issue which is of value to every household which uses electricity.

The body of Simon P. Rowley was brought here, Friday, from Van Wert, Ohio, and interment made in the East Jordan cemetery. W. A. Rowley of Boyne City, a son of the deceased, accompanied the remains. Deceased was aged 90 years and was for years a resident of this Village, holding the office of Village Clerk several terms. He removed to Ohio some ten years ago, where he died on Monday last. Rev. A. D. Grigsby conducted a short funeral service at the cemetery. Messrs D. C. Loveday, J. B. Palmiter, L. C. Madison and F. W. Empey acted as pall bearers.

One of the acts of the Board of Review of Boyne City, was the putting on the assessment roll of the Beulah Home, which was assessed at $9,108. This property has never been on the assessment roll before, but according to the recent decision of the circuit court, in the injunction proceedings, that the property was owned by H. E. Swift, it was placed on the roll, on which a tax will have to be paid of nearly $300.

Mrs. Nellie Muma will lead the Epworth League meeting Sunday evening 6:30. Subject "The Foreigner."

Rev. W. W. Lamport, who preached at the Walker school house last Sabbath will hold services there again Sunday, June 5, 3 o'clock.

The Methodist W. F. M. S. will meet with Mrs. W. W. Lamport Tuesday, May 31, instead of June 7, which is the date of the district meeting at Pellston.

The Methodist Ladies' Aid Society was entertained by Mrs. W. G. Fortune Wednesday. After the business session a fine program was given and luncheon followed.

Public worship at Afton school house next Sunday—afternoon, the 28th, at 3:00 o'clock. Rev. A. D. Grigsby will preach. All in the neighborhood are asked to come.

You are reminded of the monthly meeting of the P. L. A. S. next Friday, June 3, at the home of Mrs. John Webster. All members and others interested should not fail to be there.

Christian Science services will be held in the Wilhelm block every Sunday at 10:30 a. m. and Sunday School at 11:45 a. m. Wednesday evening meeting at 7:30 p. m. All are cordially invited.

The Sunday evening musical at the Methodist church by the young people's choir seemed to give good satisfaction and was listened to by a full house. A good collection was taken for new anthem books.

Next Sunday the Feast of Corpus Christi will be celebrated at St. Joseph's church. At 10:00 a. m. will be highmass and a sermon on the Holy Eucharist after the highmass a procession will be held with the Blessed Sacrament in which the altar boys and girls dressed in white will take part. At 7:30 p. m. will be special devotion with sermon.

All Sunday School teachers, workers and others should arrange to attend the annual County Sunday School Convention in the Methodist church at Boyne City next Wednesday and Thursday. You can buy tickets for $1.00 for the round trip by boat. Don't fail to come. A very interesting program has been prepared and free entertainment promised.

The union G. A. R. Memorial service will be held next Sunday morning in the Methodist church so that the usual morning worship in the Presbyterian church will be omitted. But Sunday school will meet at the usual hour, Junior C. E. at 3:15, Senior C. E. at 6:45 and evening service at 7:30 to which all are urgently invited. You need such an hour whether you want it or not, and the church needs you and your help.

PUT SMALL PRICE ON LIVES

Swiss Gatekeeper's Absurd Reward for Saving Train With its Sixty Passengers.

During the heavy rains and floods in the cantons of Geneva and Vaud at the end of last January, a Swiss railway gatekeeper at a level crossing named Allaman, hearing an unusual hissing sound, walked along the lines, having a presentiment that there was something wrong. He found that a stream flowing from the Jura mountains into Lake Geneva had become a torrent, and overflowing its banks had swept away about 30 yards of the permanent way, leaving the rails suspended in the air.

As the Geneva-Lausanne express traveling at 60 miles an hour was due in a few minutes and would be precipitated into the torrent with its 60 passengers Allaman ran to his little house for a red flag and stopped the express 50 yards from the suspended rails and then returned home pleased with the fact that he had prevented a terrible accident. Some days ago the news of the affair arrived at the Bern headquarters of the Federal Railway company and the Swiss managers thought that such an act on the part of a gatekeeper should be rewarded.

Allaman received his reward for saving the express and its 60 travelers from destruction. The reward was $8., which works out at 1 1/2 d. a life.

The Swiss press is indignant at the ridiculous reward for a great service, and several papers state that if the accident had occurred the Federal Railway company would have been obliged to pay between £8,000 and £10,000 damages.

Power of Growing Trees.

Those who wish to see the enormous power of a growing tree can do so by going to the north side of Albert street. Two trees that were inclosed by the cement sidewalk when it was built many years ago have split the slabs into fragments by huge cracks extending in several directions.

The breaking tensile strength of neat cement as used for the city is 600 pounds per square inch. With the mixture as used in the sidewalks an expert estimated it would be about 150 pounds per square inch. There are several of these cracks, so the pressure must have been still more than for one fracture. The trees are a chestnut and a soft maple. A point worthy of note in this connection is that when healthy trees are inclosed by concrete walks space should be left for expansion at least equal to the average size of the full-growth of the tree.—Ottawa Citizen.

Square Miles of Dead Birds.

It may be asserted with considerable degree of probability that there is no one natural factor more destructive to bird life than the migratory habit. Here is a well-known recent instance: One night in March there was an immense migration of Lapland longspurs over Minnesota. A wet snowstorm came on, chilling and bewildering the birds. Over an area estimated at hundreds of square miles dead birds were found. In the towns and cities they swept them up and carted them off. On wide lakes, the ice was dotted with them in all directions about a foot or two apart. The number that perished at that one time was doubtless in the millions.—Outing.

Pathos in Lives of Poets.

In a little restaurant in Soho the other evening I heard W. B. Yeats, narrate the pathetic, gradual dissolution of a coterie of poets existing in London ten years ago under the style of the Rhymesters' club. For the 12 poets who had formed the club, Mr. Yeats claimed the sincerity which marks the true artist. Several of them had gained distinction, yet of the little party two had staid died of drink, a third had committed suicide, and two others had lost their reason.

"A poet's life must almost necessarily be troubled," said Mr. Yeats. "All songs are those of victories won in the poet's mind. If you could find a perfectly steady nature, you would find a silent one."—Exchange.

Their Different Views.

The Paris Feminists are appealing for funds to complete a half-finished monument to Mme. de Staël. Their interest in her is most natural, for she was the first of the Feminists. The second was George Sand, and the difference between their points of view is neatly put by Rene Doumic in his book of essays on the latter authoress:

"In order to be pitied by Mme. de Staël, it was absolutely necessary to be a woman of genius. For a woman to be defended by George Sand it was only necessary that she should not love her husband, and this was a more general thing."

Inspire Ideals

Science of Goodness Will Produce Good Citizens

By ADA MAY KRECKER

IT WAS in one of Prof. James' talks to teachers that he begged them to dwell less on the ills of inebriety and more on the superior joys of sobriety, the clear mind, the even pulse, the sweet intoxications of sunlight, morning dew and landscape glories and their wholesome stimulations. In fine, he wished to inspire the school children with ideals, to cultivate in them the virtues rather than to try to uproot from them the vices.

His are sane pedagogics. If our minds dwell on that which we would shun we are more prone to commit it than were our minds riveted on something else. It is not the evil to be eschewed that repays our study, but the good to be developed. Our thought of vice affines us to vice, whereas the thought of virtue harmonizes us with its gracious practice.

Physicians and reformers, preachers, teachers are acting on this principle. They are studying health rather than disease, for it is health that is desired, not infirmity. Uplifters are more incensed with the perquisites for good citizenship than with the attributes and conditions of crime and delinquency. The peace party preaches the expansions and happinesses and blessings of peace rather than decries the horrors of war.

It is peace, probity and goodness that merit attention, energy, expenditure. As this becomes more fully understood and is more thoroughly applied, it will be realized that anything else is waste. It will be realized that we need no prisons, no prisoners, no police. Rather that we need schools of citizenship, hospitals for the delinquents, education for the savages.

It will be realized that prisons breed and increase crime rather than allay it; that criminal mind contacts criminal mind, criminal thought encounters criminal thought and engenders more. It may take a thief to catch a thief and criminology to detect crime. But after it has been detected, what is there? Only crime, only the criminal.

Evil is to be overcome with good. It takes goodness to make goodness, and the science of goodness, not of crime, to produce good citizens.

When goodness is understood, its beauty, charm, blisses, blessings, no preachers will be required to laud it, to press its claims. Everybody will seek it of his own accord. For to be good verily is to be happy. Nor will anyone need to mention evil, to denounce it, to deplore it, or picture its miseries. Evil and its offspring will disappear.

Getting Most Out of Holiday

By ANNA WOODWARD

It has been said that an American never walks when he can ride. There is a good deal of truth in this. It is sufficiently true, as the doctors will tell you, to account for a good deal of the national tendency to dyspepsia.

If men would only walk to their offices and women to the shops! Now that winter is behind us and it is not unreasonable to talk in pleasant anticipation of summer holidays, a word may be said before it is too late on the advantages of walking tours. The important thing is the sense of freedom to feel the joy of the road.

Certain concessions to your attachment to civilization can be made. Thus, if you map out a route you can send in advance a trunk from one chief stopping place to another, so that after two or three days of tramping with a knapsack you can find yourself at some comfortable hotel surrounded by your usual belongings.

So long as you aim at some city, some village or settlement where you can obtain a lodging by nightfall, you have the whole world before you. Since you have no packing to do, you can be up with the lark and start out in those wonderful hours of the early morning when the air has a freshness and the fields and woods have a beauty that is not known by those who do not go out till after the sun is high in the heavens.

When you are weary you can rest under the shade of a tree. A rock will provide a table for the lunch that you carry with you and at the springs which you encounter you can make a cup for yourself from the leaves of a maple, hickory or oak. And when at night you arrive at your destination your appetite is like that of one who is starving.

Almost before the meal is done sleep overpowers you and you go to bed and enjoy such rest as only those know who have walked all day and have put off care to carry a knapsack in its place on their shoulders.

Killing Farmer's Little Allies

By THOMAS J. DWYER

It is not only this winter nor the last that this destruction has been going on, but for years past accounts have come in from Florida and many other sections of the south telling of the wanton destruction of those faithful little allies of the farmer.

If the farmers of the north, east and west were only to realize the value of these birds to their farms congress would soon be petitioned to pass a national law making it a criminal offense to destroy not only the robin but all other insectivorous birds.

Does the farmer, or in fact anyone who owns a tree-planted garden, reflect on the great number of insects that even the little wren will destroy in one day?

Does he ever think of the countless number of canker worms and grubs that the robins consume? If so, he will be convinced that his little friends are more valuable to him than hired human help can be in the destruction of injurious insects.

The government is doing a great deal to help the farmer in teaching him how to cultivate the soil scientifically. Now let our lawmakers go a step farther in the good work and pass a law to protect the farmers' best friends—the insectivorous birds.

In the summer of 1908 while visiting the great apple country of Nova Scotia, the Annapolis valley, I was surprised at the absence of bird life in the place and I further noticed that the trees were thickly infested with the canker worm. Talking of this to one of the farmers he remarked that it was only too true and that the people had been destroying the birds for some time past. They had used paris green and other poisons to kill the insects and the birds, eating the poisoned insects, had been destroyed.

Western Canada As A Grain Producer

NEVER SAW SUCH FINE WHEAT ANYWHERE.

Gust. Anderson of Maldstone, Sask. was formerly of Minnesota and has been in Central Canada three years. On January 16, 1910, he writes:

"Arriving fifteen miles from Maldstone, I bought a couple of steers from a rancher, as my capital was not large, and with the two oxen I brought with me, I broke 25 acres which I put in crop in 1908 and had to clear some brush. I earned $45.00 by breaking fifteen acres for a neighbor and during the summer I put up hay and hauled timber and put up houses for other settlers. Notwithstanding a heavy frost on August 12th, I had 22 1/2 bushels of wheat per acre and 60 bushels of oats. Off 35 acres of wheat in 1909, I got 27 bushels of wheat per acre and 1,300 bushels of oats off 20 acres. I never saw such fine wheat anywhere. We have plenty of rain between May and August and after August seldom any but dry warm days. Water can be had at from 20 to 40 feet and plenty of grass for cattle."

The evidence of Mr. Anderson is given because it is encouraging to the man of small means who is desirous of bettering his condition. It shows what can be done, and there is really but small limit to the man with push and energy to become wealthy on Canadian lands. And the grain that he raises is good. A press dispatch says:

The quality of the wheat continues to be the feature of the deliveries. In the total of 3,378 cars in the February inspections there were 2,847 of high grade stuff, a percentage of 84.28. For January the percentage was 82.21, and for the six months it was 83.6. This is an unusually high average, and it demonstrates beyond the shadow of a doubt that the farmers in this part of the Dominion still know how to grow first-class wheat. The crop of 1908 was considered good enough, and its average of contract wheat was only 70 per cent. Good weather throughout the season was an important factor, of course, in insuring the high quality of the grain, and it is not likely that atmospheric influences of so favorable a character will be encountered for a long time to come. The best that can be expected is that a fair average for a term of years will be maintained.

Not Quite.

"Young man," inquired her father, sternly, "will you give her a home like the one she has been used to?"

"No," replied the truthful suitor, "for there will be no grumpy father to come home and make everyone miserable by his kicking over trifles and swearing at matters in general. There will be no mother to scold her from morning to night for wasting time merely because she wants to be neat. There will be no big brother to abuse her for not doing half of his work, and no little brother to make enough noise to drive her crazy when her head aches. There won't be any younger sister to insist on reading some trashy novel while she does all the work. She will not have with me a home like she has been used to, not if I can help it."—Puck.

Giving Papa Away.

London is smiling over a story told regarding little Miss Asquith, who is at that tender age when indiscreet remarks are still pardonable.

Mrs. Asquith had taken her small daughter out to tea, and while her mother was talking to some friends at the other end of the room, little Margaret endeavored to entertain a conservative statesman who sat near her.

"Do you like Mr. Lloyd-George?" she asked when there was a lull in the conversation.

"No," said he, smiling, "I can't say that I do."

"Neither does daddy," said the prime minister's ten-year-old daughter, blithely.

POSTUM FOR MOTHERS

The Drink That Nourishes and Supplies Food for Mother and Child.

"My husband had been unable to drink coffee for several years, so we were very glad to give Postum a trial and when we understood that long boiling would bring out the delicious flavour, we have been highly pleased with it.

"It is one of the finest things for nursing mothers that I have ever seen. It keeps up the mother's strength and increases the supply of nourishment for the child if partaken of freely. I drank it between meals instead of water and found it most beneficial.

"Our five-year-old boy has been very delicate since birth and has developed slowly. He was white and bloodless. I began to give him Postum freely and you would be surprised at the change. When any person remarks about the great improvement, we never fail to tell them that we attribute his gain in strength and general health, to the free use of Postum and this has led many friends to use it for themselves and children.

"I have always cautioned friends to whom I have spoken about Postum, to follow directions in making it, for unless it is boiled fifteen or twenty minutes, it is quite tasteless. On the other hand, when properly made, it is very delicious. I want to thank you for the benefits we have derived from the use of your Postum."

SPRAYING IS NECESSARY TO PRODUCE GOOD FRUIT

Many Orchard Owners Do Not Realize the Importance of the Subject—Work Is Not Complex and Considering Results That Follow It, Is Quite Inexpensive.

An Outfit for Making Bordeaux.

(BY C. G. WOODBURY, PURDUE UNIVERSITY AGRICULTURAL EXPERIMENT STATION.)

Every owner of fruit trees should plan to give them some attention in the way of spraying. Spraying is essential to the continued production of good fruit. After years of the most forcible object lessons in the way of regular yields and good profits from sprayed orchards and irregular yields and no profits from unsprayed orchards, the fact still remains that many owners of fruit trees do not yet realize the importance of the subject. It cannot be doubted on the other hand, that many possessors of orchards realize something of the importance of spraying, of pruning and other measures of orchard hygiene, and yet fail to begin this work because they regard it as complex, hard to understand, difficult to accomplish, disagreeable and expensive. Spraying is none of these. The principles are few and easy to learn. The work is not complex and considering the results that follow it, is very inexpensive. Spraying is insurance.

In order to obtain results, however, it is necessary for the fruit grower to spray intelligently. He must know what he is spraying for; he must know something of the life history of the insect or disease in question so that he can prepare his material and time its application most effectively. He must have the right kind of an outfit—one capable of doing good work and not a makeshift appliance made solely to sell.

Certain precautions must be observed in making Bordeaux, in order to obtain the most efficient mixture. The secret of success is to put together as dilute solutions as possible. The copper sulphate may be conveniently made up into a stock solution by dissolving it at the rate of one pound to one gallon of water. The amount needed at any time can then be readily obtained by stirring up the solution and measuring out as many gallons as there are pounds required. The lime can likewise be slacked in quantity and kept till needed as a stock solution of known strength. The blue-stone may be dissolved quickly in hot water, or, more slowly, in cold water by suspending near the top of the water in a burlap or coarse basket over night. Good stone lime should be used. Air-slaked lime is not satisfactory. Hydrated or process lime of good quality may be used if the proportion of lime to copper sulphate is increased from one-fourth to one-half. If a barrel (50 gallons) of the Bordeaux is to be made, it is easy to secure the required dilution of material by the use of three vessels. Put 25 gallons of water in the barrel. Dilute the blue stone solution containing five pounds to the 12 1/2 gallons. Dilute five pounds slaked lime likewise, then dip alternately from each solution into the 50-gallon barrel. Whatever the particular method employed, however, the end is the same. Put the copper sulphate and lime solutions together after diluting as much as possible. Don't mix concentrated solutions. If this is done, with the idea of diluting to spraying strength later, the mixture curdles and a thick, heavy precipitate is formed which settles so rapidly that it is impossible to do a good job of spraying. A properly made Bordeaux should remain for half an hour with almost no perceptible settling. When putting the spray mixture into the tank, always strain carefully. For peaches use at not over half strength.

CONSTRUCTING MANSARD ROOF

The illustration shown herewith gives an excellent method of designing a Mansard roof. The proper pitch for these roofs is determined by describing a circle with a radius equal to half the span of the roof; then divide the circumference into five equal parts, the lower one on each side being the length of the lower rafter and the three upper ones are the span of the top roof. Both the top of the lower and upper roofs must touch the circumference of the circle. Materials for house roof are: Twenty-six lower rafters, 2x6 inches by 6 feet, set on 24-inch centers; 26 upper rafters, 2x6 inches by 9 feet, set on 24-inch centers; 13 collar ties, 2x6 inches by 16 feet; 13 collar ties, 1x6 inches by 6 feet; 26 curves, 2x8 inches by 3 feet; 26 brackets, or fish plates, 1x8 inches by 3 feet; 832 feet 1-inch lumber for roof. For kitchen—18 rafters, 2x6 inches; 18 rafters, 2x6x8 feet; 9 collar ties, 2x4x14 feet; 9 collar ties, 1x6x5 feet; curves, 18, 2x18x2 feet, and 18 brackets, 1x8x3 feet, and 540 feet 1-inch lumber for roof.

Scab Spores Live in Soil.

Soil that has produced a crop of scabby potatoes should be used for some other crop for several years because the scab spores live over in the soil and will attack subsequent potato crops for five or six years afterward. For potatoes select, if possible, a northern slope, since the crop will suffer less on such slope during hot, dry weather.

THE LAST VOYAGE OF THE DONNA ISABEL

BY RANDALL PARRISH
AUTHOR OF "BOB HAMPSON OF PLACER, ETC."

ILLUSTRATIONS BY DEARBORN PREVILL
COPYRIGHT A. C. McCLURE & CO. 1908

SYNOPSIS.

The story opens with the introduction of John Stephens, a Massachusetts man marooned by authorities at Valparaiso, Chile. Being interested in mining operations in Bolivia, he was denounced by Chile as an insurrectionist and as a consequence was hiding. At his hotel his attention was attracted by an Englishman and a young woman. Stephens rescued the young woman from a drunken officer. He was thanked by the Admiral of the Peruvian navy, and Stephens told him that war had been declared between Chile and Peru and offered him the office of captain. He decided that that night the Esmeralda, Chilean vessel, should be captured. Stephens accepted the commission. Stephens met a motley crew, to which he was assigned. He gave them the instructions. They boarded the vessel. They successfully captured the vessel supposed to be the Esmeralda, through strategy. Capt. Stephens gave directions for the departure of the craft. He entered the cabin and discovered the English woman and her maid. Stephens quickly learned the wrong vessel had been captured. It was Lord Darlington's private yacht, the Lord's wife and maid being aboard. He explained the situation to his ladyship. Then First Mate Tuttle laid bare the plot, saying that the Sea Queen had been taken in order to go to the Antarctic Circle. Tuttle explained that on a former voyage he had learned that the Donna Isabel was lost in 1753. He had found it frozen in a huge mass of ice on an island and found much gold. Stephens consented to be the captain of the expedition. He told Lady Darlington that the Sea Queen was not to be captured, but expressed confidence in him. The Sea Queen encountered a vessel in the fog. Stephens attempted to communicate. This caused a fierce struggle and he was overcome. Tuttle finally squaring the situation. Then the Sea Queen headed south again. Under Tuttle's guidance the vessel made progress toward its goal. De Nova, the mate, told Stephens that he believed Tuttle, now acting as skipper, insane because of his queer actions. Stephens was awakened by crashing of glass. He saw Tuttle in the grip of a spasm of religious mania and overcame him. The sailor upon regaining his senses was taken ill. Tuttle committed suicide by shooting. Upon vote of the crew Stephens assumed the leadership and the men decided to continue the frigate hunt, the islands being supposed to be only 200 miles distant. Tuttle was buried in the sea, Lady Darlington pronouncing the service. Stephens awaking from sleep saw the ghost, supposed to have formed the basis for Tuttle's religious mania. Upon advice of Lady Darlington, Stephens started to probe the ghost. He came upon Lieut. Sanchez, the drunken officer he had humbled in Chile. He found that at Sanchez's instigation, Engineer McKnight played "ghost" to scare the men into giving up the quest.

"I promised with an eager earnestness that went far toward convincing me I had not only conquered the man, but won his friendship as well. 'Then wait here, McKnight, until I can pass back alone through the engine room. In ten minutes you slip through, and let this end it. Shake hands, my man.'

"He gave me a grip I felt, and so I left him, a mere shadow in the black passage.

Lady Darlington stood within the door of her cabin waiting for me, her face brightening as I emerged through the pantry door.

"Who was it?"

"McKnight; I caught him in the very act, but shall keep it from the crew. There will be no repetition of this affair, I am sure, for now we are homeward bound."

"How quickly her gray eyes lighted up, her hands instantly clasping mine.

"Homeward bound, Mr. Stephens! Have we already attained the spot sought in this sea? Was there nothing discovered there as a reward for all this long voyage?"

"No, we are not yet there, but I have determined upon turning back. I can not take you any farther into danger."

"But why? why? Is the peril so terribly desperate? How much farther south must we go?"

"With fair luck, the wind holding as it is, we might attain the position to-morrow. 'Tis not a long run; but, Lady Darlington, I am afraid to risk it. The slightest slant of wind will bring the ice crashing down upon us. We are under Damocles' sword, suspended by a hair. This is the beginning of winter in these latitudes—of fierce gales from the south sweeping across leagues of frozen waters. We have been wonderfully fortunate thus far, yet, a single day, ay! a single hour, might seal our fate, hemming us in beyond any possibility of escape. I might take the chance if we were all mere adventurers on board, but I dare not trifle any longer with your life."

"I am not that kind of a coward, Mr. Stephens. You—you owe it to those men to push on, now we are so near their goal. You have pledged them your word, and—and I want you to keep it."

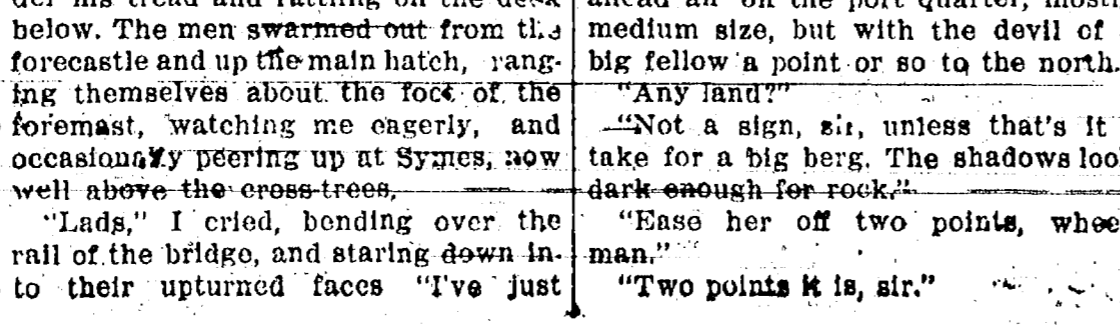

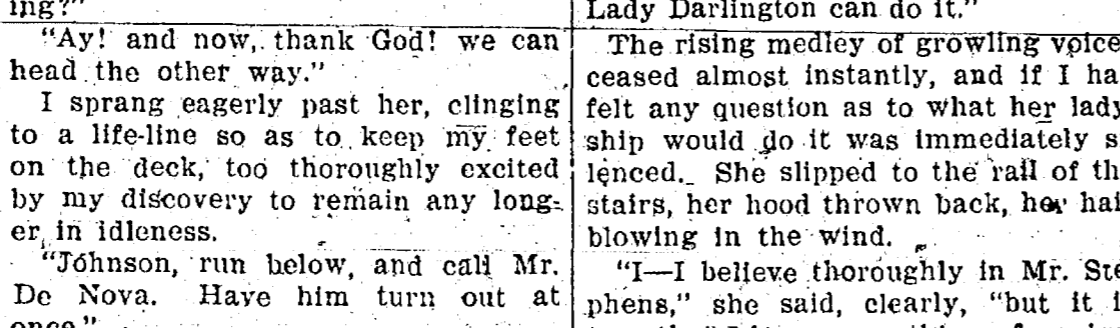

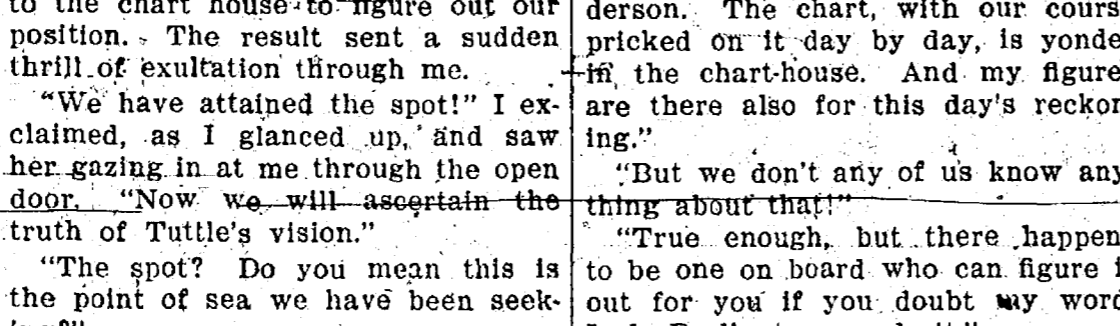

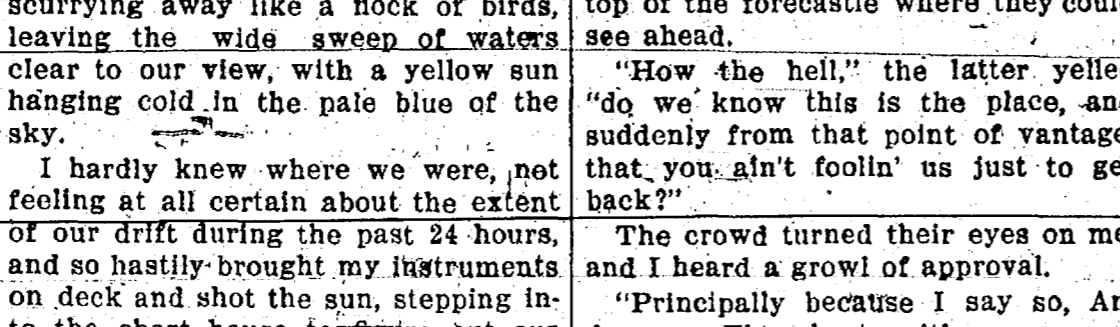

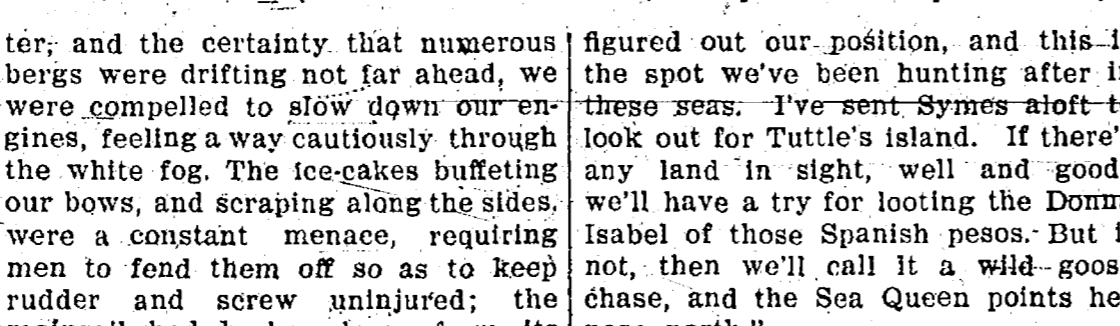

"The companion door slid back, and a man came heavily down the steps. As he caught sight of us he pulled on his cap awkwardly.

"Mr. De Nova sent me to call you, sir," he said. "It's four bells."

CHAPTER XIX.

In Which We Attain 66° 17' South.

When morning arrived the Sea Queen was plunging through an angry sea, in the midst of a raging snow storm which effectually concealed all our immediate surroundings. With vivid remembrance of those vast ice fields lying off our starboard quar-

We stood there, silent and motionless, waiting anxiously, the men ranged along the rail, with their eyes all turned forward. I rang for full speed, and the Sea Queen fairly leaped ahead through the icy smother, flinging clouds of white spray over the heedless figures. Within ten minutes we began to perceive the huge mass we were approaching from the deck, and never before had my eyes looked upon so gigantic and majestic a mountain of ice. It was one immense cliff towering into the upper air, being fully 300 feet high, and not less than 1,200 feet in length, with vast glittering pinnacles rising still farther into the sky, its entire front a sheer precipice, gleaming in cold blue, with hardly a darker shadow anywhere to yield relief to the eye. We rounded its eastern edge so closely one could have tossed a biscuit from the foreyard against its smooth front, the swell of its motion tossing the darning yacht like an eggshell. Symes clung to his perch aloft with the grip of a monkey, swinging back and forth to the wild swaying of the spar. Suddenly he yelled down:

"There's wind—comin' from the south-west, sir."

"Heavy?"

"Looks to be a stiff breeze, an' it's bringing more snow."

"Lay down from aloft."

I sprang over to consult the binnacle-card, and then cast one swift, comprehending glance at the thickening gloom in the southwest. Beyond doubt the change had come.

"Give her two more points north, wheelsman; keep her head nor'east by nor—steady so. Mr. De Nova, send another man up here to the wheel. All hands now; stow everything; tail on to those gaskets lively, my lads; we're in for a blow, and a run for our lives."

To my amazement scarcely a man among them stirred, the eyes of the majority turning toward Anderson. Evidently there was an understanding between them; they intended to revolt and had chosen him—their leader. He stood just in front of the forecastle, a lumpy big figure in his heavy clothes, his coarse face and ugly jaw showing beneath a fur cap.

"What yer turnin' north for in such a hurry, Mr. Stephens?" he growled, hoarsely. "It's not by vote of the crew, an' we're the ones that's got their say of it on this voyage. We're for keepin' along this line o' latitude for a day or so anyhow. Tuttle might 'a' got his fingers tangled an' missed a few leagues. Anyhow, we want the lady to give us her reckoning first."

I felt the hot blood leap to my face, and my teeth clenched as I leaned over the rail gazing down at him.

"Lads," I said, striving to master myself. "I've put you exactly where I promised I would; I've shown you all that was here. You can see for yourselves what will happen if we hold on any longer. The wind has swept around; it is going to bring that whole pack of ice down on us. We've got to run for it, or be crushed. Now what I want to know is, are you with me, or with Bill Anderson?"

They held off muttering, yet casting uneasy glances over the rail. Anderson stamped angrily on the deck.

"Oh, to hell with yer fine words," he said, grimly. "What if the wind has changed a bit? Can't we beat off the ice under steam the same as we did before? We're sailormen, and not afraid of a rough sea. For one, I'm damned if I leave that gold to rot here without huntin' for it."

Words were clearly useless, and I ripped back my heavy coat, dragging off my gloves, all patience exhausted.

"Come on, De Nova," I exclaimed, "you've got sense enough to realize what this means."

I was over the rail with a leap, fronting them on the deck. Almost to my surprise the creole landed beside me, and without a word we struck out at the heads in our front. It was a fierce mix-up for a minute, yet only a man or two stood with Anderson, the suddenness of our assault taking all the fight out of most of them. I struck Big Bill twice squarely in the face, driving him back against the steps leading to the foreccastle deck; over these he fell sprawling, his head thumping the plank. The next instant I had De Nova's antagonists in the rear, and together we laid them out against the rail, and none too gently. The mate's smile had become ugly, and he would have leaped into the rest of the bunch, but I caught his arm.

Within a Minute De Nova Had Joined Me, His Eyes Still Heavy with Sleep.

ter, and the certainty that numerous bergs were drifting not far ahead, we were compelled to slow down our engines, feeling a way cautiously through the white fog. The ice-cakes buffeting our bows, and scraping along the sides, were a constant menace, requiring men to fend them off so as to keep rudder and screw unharmed; the mainsail had broken loose from its gaskets, and, frozen stiff as the heavy canvas was, proved difficult to secure; while the ice on our forward deck had accumulated to such a thickness as to be weighing us down by the head, and had to be chopped loose and flung overboard in great blocks.

It was not far from noon when the heavy snow-clouds broke and went scurrying away like a flock of birds, leaving the wide sweep of waters clear to our view, with a yellow sun hanging cold in the pale blue of the sky.

I hardly knew where we were, not feeling at all certain about the extent of our drift during the past 24 hours, and so hastily brought my instruments on deck and shot the sun, stepping into the chart house to figure out our position. The result sent a sudden thrill of exultation through me.

"We have attained the spot!" I exclaimed, as I glanced up, and saw her gazing in at me through the open door. "Now we will ascertain the truth of Tuttle's vision."

"The spot? Do you mean this is the point of sea we have been seeking?"

"Ay! and now, thank God! we can head the other way."

I sprang eagerly past her, clinging to a life-line so as to keep my feet on the deck, too thoroughly excited by my discovery to remain any longer in idleness.

"Johnson, run below, and call Mr. De Nova. Have him turn out at once."

I watched the fellow slide to the companion, and made my own way to the bridge, sweeping my glasses anxiously about the clearing horizon. Within a minute De Nova had joined me, his eyes still heavy from sleep.

"Mr. De Nova," I said, rapidly, my gloved hand sweeping a semicircle in front of me, "I have just taken an observation, and this is latitude 66° 17' south and longitude 110° 30' west. Send your sharpest-eyed lookout to the foretopmast yard with these glasses. Then call all hands."

He went down the bridge stairs as though shot from a gun, and a moment later a young seaman named Symes was swiftly footing the ratlines, their coating of ice breaking under his tread and rattling on the deck below. The men swarmed out from the forecastle and up the main hatch, ranging themselves about the fore of the forecast, watching me eagerly, and occasionally peering up at Symes, now well above the cross-trees.

"Lads," I cried, bending over the rail of the bridge, and staring down into their upturned faces "I've just figured out our position, and this is the spot we've been hunting after in these seas. I've sent Symes aloft to look out for Tuttle's island. If there's any land in sight, well and good; we'll have a try for looting the Donna Isabel of those Spanish pesos. But if not, then we'll call it a wild-goose chase, and the Sea Queen points her nose north."

There was a faint, half-hearted attempt at a cheer, which ended in a muttering of oaths and a shuffling of feet on the icy planks. The glances of the fellows turned upward toward Symes, now securely posted on the foretopmast yard, the glasses to his eyes. One or two among them, including Anderson, clambered to the top of the forecastle where they could see ahead.

"How the hell," the latter yelled "do we know this is the place, and suddenly from that point of vantage, that you ain't foolin' us just to get back?"

The crowd turned their eyes on me, and I heard a growl of approval.

"Principally because I say so, Anderson. The chart, with our course pricked on it day by day, is yonder in the chart-house. And my figures are there also for this day's reckoning."

"But we don't any of us know anything about that!"

"True enough, but there happens to be one on board who can figure it out for you if you doubt my word. Lady Darlington can do it."

The rising medley of growling voices ceased almost instantly, and if I had felt any question as to what her ladyship would do it was immediately silenced. She slipped to the rail of the stairs, her hood thrown back, her hair blowing in the wind.

"I believe thoroughly in Mr. Stephens," she said, clearly, "but it is true that I know something of navigation, and if you really doubt his statement I will figure it out for you."

"Now you hear that, lads," my voice ringing out stern over the hubbub. "You'll believe this lady if her results are the same as mine. Now stop your growling."

I hollowed my hands for a hail aloft.

"What do you pick up, Symes?"

His words came back in a thread of sound as he looked down upon us from his bobbing perch.

"Not very much, sir, except water. There's a hell of a big field of ice out yonder," pointing with one hand, the other gripping the spar, "but it's mostly flat, an' all glistenin' with snow. There's maybe a dozen bergs ahead an' off the port quarter, mostly medium size, but with the devil of a big fellow a point or so to the north."

"Any land?"

"Not a sign, sir, unless that's it I take for a big berg. The shadows look dark enough for rock."

"Ehse her off two points, wheelsman."

"Two points it is, sir."

THE PROPER PINE TO USE FOR COUGHS AND COLD

Many pine extracts contain resins causing nausea and cramps. For most reliable and quickest results in curing a severe cough or cold follow this formula: "Get two ounces of Glycerine and half an ounce of Concentrated Pine compound. Then get half a pint of good whiskey and put the other two ingredients into it. Take a teaspoonful to a tablespoonful of this mixture after each meal and at bed time." But be sure to get the genuine Concentrated Pine. Each half ounce bottle comes in a tin screw-top case. Any druggist has it on hand or will quickly get it from his wholesale house.

Have Their Troubles.

Samuel Gompers, at the recent convention in Washington of the Civic Federation, said of children:

"Children should be protected from other evils besides the one evil of wage slavery, for, when free as air, they have enough trouble, dear knows."

"Walking along an East side street, I came on two tiny tots, the smaller of whom was bawling as if to break his lungs."

"A window opened and a little girl shrieked:

"Tommy, who's been a-bittin' of ye?"

"Nobody's been a-bittin' of him; the larger tot answered. 'He's swallowed a worm.'"

Nervous Prostration For Three Years

"Dr. Miles' Restorative Nervine cured me of a period of nervous prostration of over three years duration, and the Anti-Pain Pills are as necessary to us as the roof of our house. They have been household remedies with us for many years."

WM. J. LOUGHRAN,
1214 Catherine St.,
Philadelphia, Penna.

Much sickness is due to nervous troubles. Headache, dizziness, epilepsy and insanity are nervous troubles. Then there is a large class of disorders which arise from a weakness of the nerves of an organ or part, as weak lungs, heart, stomach, kidney, bladder, eyes, etc. Dyspepsia and indigestion are usually the result of nervous disorders.

Restorative Nervine

soothes the irritated nerves, and assists the nerve cells to generate nerve force.

Dr. Miles' Nervine is sold by all druggists. If the first bottle fails to benefit, your druggist will return your money.

Rheumatism

I have found a tried and tested cure for Rheumatism. Not a remedy that will straighten the cramped limbs of chronic cripples, nor turn bony growths back to flesh again. That is impossible, but I can now surely kill the pains and purge of this deplorable disease.

In Germany—with a Chemist in the City of Darmstadt—I found the last ingredient with which Dr. Shoop's Rheumatic Remedy was made a perfect, dependable prescription. Without that last ingredient, I successfully treated many, many cases of Rheumatism; but now, at last, it is finally cured all curable cases of this horrid disease. Those sand-like granular wastes, found in Rheumatic Blood, seem to dissolve and pass away under the action of this remedy as freely as does sugar when added to pure water. And then, when dissolved, these poisonous wastes freely pass from the system, and the cause of Rheumatism is gone forever. There is now no real need—no actual excuse to suffer longer without help. We sell, and in confidence recommend

WHAT THE TARIFF ON WOOL COSTS YOU

Cloth Has Advanced Thirty Per Cent. And if Your Summer Suit is Cheap it is Mostly Shoddy.

This Summer the wearers of men's ready-made clothing will pay throughout the United States an aggregate of $120,000,000 more than ever before. Directly after schedule "K" of the Payne-Aldrich tariff bill was settled last August, the woolen manufacturers sent out to the manufacturers of clothing notice of a 30 per cent advance in prices of cloth. The manufacturers of clothing say they cannot afford to pay that advance. They pass it on to the consumer, who is compelled to. It has been distributed through every city and village in the United States. By a marking up of prices, the $10 suit has become $12.50, the $15 suit $18, and the $20 suit $25. The man that has to have it will still find a $10 suit. But most of it will be shoddy.

During the tariff debate Congress received a communication from the Cincinnati Clothiers' Association urging a reduction in the tariff on woolen and worsted goods, which was not granted. The Cincinnati Association said: "Not in five years has the cloth handled in our trade been of so inferior quality for the price as now. The masses, consisting of laborers, mechanics and farmers, the real users of ready-made clothing, are receiving practically no value for their money. The qualities and colorings are so poor that in many instances the colorings fade and crackle, and in the manufacture of garments give positively no satisfaction to the wearer."

Not only the suit of clothes, but everything else that the workingman uses, has gone up in price. The denim overalls that he formerly purchased for 50 cents are now 75 cents, and his cotton shirt has advanced from 50 cents to 75 cents and $1. He is still offered a 50 cent shirt, but it is made of a poor flimsy fabric in which he really cannot afford to invest if he has the price of the better quality.—Mabel Potter Daggett, in the Delimitator for June.

Marion Harland and Dame Curtsey.

For more than half a century Marion Harland has been writing on housewifely themes and answering the questions of women in a clear and kindly way that has made her name beloved from one end of the land to the other. Many who read her cheery and helpful page every week in The Sunday Chicago Record-Herald have no idea that she is 77 years old, for she still writes with all the vigor and discernment of a woman of half her years. Huge as the task may seem, she gives her personal attention to the vast correspondence that her position of expert adviser on household topics involves, and every question is answered directly by her. No other department of The Sunday Record-Herald is more universally popular than hers.

Another department that pushes it closely, however, is Dame Curtsey's "Novelties in Entertainment," which has been hailed with joy by thousands of hostesses who feel the need of new ideas. Dame Curtsey, whose real name is Ellye Howell Glover, seems to have a genius for inventing fresh schemes for decorations, menus, games and all the details that lend zest to dinners and entertainments. She also answers questions pertaining to etiquette and good taste, and otherwise furnishes just the information so often sought vainly by women.

When it is added that the Sunday Magazine of The Record-Herald is full of good stories and articles as interesting to women as to men, it is easy to see why that paper is the favorite among women.

MAKES RAPID HEADWAY.

Add This Fact to Your Store of Knowledge.

Kidney disease advances so rapidly that many a person is firmly in its grasp before aware of its progress. Prompt attention should be given the slightest symptom of kidney disorder. If there is a dull pain in the back, headaches, dizzy spells or a tired, worn-out feeling, or if the urine is dark, foul-smelling, irregular and attended with pain, procure a good kidney remedy at once.

Your townspeople recommend Doan's Kidney Pills. Read the statements of this East Jordan citizen.

Mrs. J. Litney, Easterly Ave., East Jordan, Mich., says: "I have no hesitation whatever in recommending Doan's Kidney Pills for I found them to be a remedy of great merit in cases of kidney trouble. I was afflicted with this complaint for several years and suffered greatly from backaches and distressing pains through my kidneys. Doan's Kidney Pills, which I procured from Gannett Co's drug store, have never failed to give me prompt relief, strengthening my back and regulating the passages of the kidney secretions."

Food Values in Vegetables.

The mullioned onion belongs to the lily family and contains priceless elements of health and nourishment, especially to nerves and blood. The turnip, also has medicinal and food virtue, though it is not so nourishing, containing, like cabbage, over ninety per cent of water. The yellow turnip is considered a mild nervine. The unpopular carrot is almost miraculous as a blood purifier, and French women consider it as important as any cosmetic. It has, also, undreamed-of possibilities of preparation. Calling things by other names sometimes helps matters, or making fashionable by favor of the famous. In Ceylon they term okra "ladies' fingers;" the vegetable marrow of Europe is virtually the same as our Summer squash, but is used in, to us, unheard-of ways. Mr. Luther Burbank has improved the "pieplant," and his new crimson Winter rhubarb is a wonderful thing. But in the ordinary type of these stalks there are riches of oxalic and malic acids, the value of which the physicians of the world have always recognized.

MARINE SUPPLIES.

GEORGE H. SPENCER.

The Stark Year Book for 1910

is ready to mail. It will be sent to any person interested in fruit-growing on receipt of 7 cents to cover postage.

The Stark Year Book for 1910 represents an entirely new idea in nurserymen's literature—it is a work of art as well as a catalogue of Stark Nursery products. Within its covers are 32 full-page illustrations of fruits and flowers, representing 175 varieties, done in four colors, and exactly reproducing nature. 84 pages are devoted to descriptions, prices, and records.

Stark Delicious, the apple that has revolutionized orchard planting and established a new standard of apple values (selling at $10.00 per bushel box this year); Stark King David, another apple of wondrous quality and merit; Stark King Philip, a hardy black grape of California grape quality, and dozens of the very best things in the horticultural world are fully described, illustrated, and priced.

To any one planting one tree or many, of fruits or ornamental, this book is of inestimable value—a horticultural text-book—a guide to proper selection.

Stark trees have stood the supreme test of actual planting for 85 years—they are the yard-stick by which all other nursery products are measured—they are the first choice of this country's most successful orchardists. The success of the orchard is dependent on the kind and quality of tree planted. Stark varieties are the best of the best. Our record of 85 years of successful selling is a positive guarantee of tree quality.

Before you decide to buy, send 7 cents for the Stark Year Book—do it today before the edition is exhausted.

ASK YOUR NEIGHBORS

And you will generally find that they know of more good, intelligent people, those of good sense and discernment in your vicinity who have been cured by Dr. Pierce's World-famed Family Medicines than by all other proprietary medicines. They have been making these cures right along for over forty years and altogether likely you will easily find people all about you who will be only too glad to say a good word for them. These old reliable curatives are not exploited or urged upon the afflicted by extravagant and false promises but have a record of real, genuine cures to sustain them.

Among women Dr. Pierce's Favorite Prescription is truly a favorite by reason of its remarkable cures which, for over forty years by far exceed those which can be credited to any medicine extant. By a little inquiry you will no doubt find some of these cured and grateful cases in your immediate neighborhood, for they are to be met with practically EVERYWHERE. They are Dr. Pierce's best advertisements.
