LECTURE BY COLLEDGE

High School Entertainment Course.

As the closing number, a lecture will be given at the Presbyterian church, Saturday evening, April 15, by Dr. Wm. A. Colledge—a gentleman of splendid education, world-wide traveler and ripe experience. With a magnetic personality, a full rich voice, a keen sense of humor, and perfect command of the English language, he leaves nothing to be desired. He should be met here with a full house.

Note what others say of Dr. Colledge:—

Dr. William A. Colledge appeared for the first time yesterday afternoon before the Monona Lake Assembly. His lecture, "Second Fiddles," made a tremendous impression upon the audience, as the ovation which was accorded him at the conclusion bore witness.—Democrat, Madison, Wis.

An immense audience, many of whom were obliged to stand, greeted Dr. Colledge at his lecture on the People's course at the Lyceum Theatre last evening. Dr. Colledge is a fluent and graphic speaker, and in the clear and forcible picture he presented of the great prophet of Islam the vast audience was spellbound from the opening to the close of his address.—Detroit Free Press.

Remember the date, April 15.
Price of admission, adults 35c and children 20c.

MORTIMER HITE

East Jordan Pioneer Passes Away Monday Morning

Died at his home in our city Monday morning, April 3rd, Mortimer Hite, aged seventy years.

He was a man of excellent habits, fine moral character and sturdy constitution, and he continued to be active in his accustomed pursuits till long past the age at which men ordinarily drop out of the ranks of the workers. Mr. Hite was born in Toronto, Canada, March 13th, 1841. On August 18th, 1861 he was united in marriage to Miss Armina Cutcher of Hamilton, Ont. They were both 20 years of age at their marriage and had Mr. Hite lived until next August they would have celebrated their golden anniversary. They lived in Blenheim, Ont., until 1879 when they moved to Michigan, locating first at Armada, then going to LaPeer and from there coming to East Jordan 26 years ago last January. Here he purchased a farm and continued his Hite's trade of pot ash manufacturer. Besides a devoted wife he leaves one daughter, Miss Mina; and three sons, Bertram, A. J., and William. All of them being located here and identified with our business interests.

The funeral services were held from the home on Wednesday morning and were conducted by Rev. A. D. Griegsby, pastor of the Presbyterian church. Interment was made in the East Jordan cemetery.

Mr. Hite's life was cheerful and helpful; his devotion to his wife and family and kindness to everyone will long linger as a fragrant memory in the home which his presence brightened and which death has now darkened. Though he is gone his record has been made and will remain with us as a lasting treasure. In his heart of hearts he carried those he loved and his hands were never weary, his step never failed in caring for and ministering to those who were in any way dependent upon him.

Card of Thanks.

To the kind friends and neighbors who so willingly assisted us during the sickness and death of our beloved husband and father, we wish to express our heartfelt thanks, also to those sending flowers and assisting in the music. May the Lord bless you all and spare you such sorrow in our sincere wish.

Foreword

Some one has said, "the true value of a life assurance policy must be gauged by the security of the protection given; if it proves to be a good investment, all the better; when both are shown, there is nothing on earth to equal it."

The security of the protection afforded by the Sun Life of Canada needs no comment, and the profits paid are not exceeded by any company on this continent.

GOOD BUSINESS MEN IN ROME

Book Publishers Turned Out Work Quickly and With Ample Assurance of Profit.

There were in Augustan Rome established publishing houses which not only turned out large numbers of books, but many editions of them, and at an incredibly small price (says Algernon Tassin in the Bookman). That their arrangements were business-like may be inferred from the testimony of Horace. He relates that when an author failed to please the metropolis the publishers shipped the entire edition of his works to the provinces, and if he still failed to go off as writer they made arrangements to bring him back again and sell him as paper to the pastry and spice shops. One great firm in Rome had over two thousand trained slave copyists; and their work was swift and cheap, for Martial writes that they had ready an edition of a thousand copies of his "Epigrams" in just one hour to be sold at ten cents a copy. The exceedingly large reading public which all this indicates must have been many years in growing, and one may assume that Rome had long been a city of readers. Atticus, the publisher of Cicero, had a great many modern methods in the conduct of his business, and the fact that Caesar's "Commentaries" were very quickly dispatched to the outposts of civilization shows that the machinery of distribution was also well organized. Thus we may conclude that the advertising and publicity department was in good shape.

Paying by Check.

The peanut vender had a white elephant on his hands in the shape of a check for $1.05.

"Disa ting no good," he said. "I wanta da mon."

Having ascertained just where the check came from, a sympathetic customer passed over 'da mon' in exchange for the check and then started an investigation of somebody's reasons for buying 5-cent bags of peanuts on time. Finally the woman who had introduced a new wrinkle into the credit system was cornered for an interview.

"I pay for everything by the month," she said, "absolutely everything—groceries, dry goods, drugs, stationery, hair dressing, and church dues, and I see no reason why I should make an exception in peanuts."

The Cardinal's Coach.

A cardinal must not walk in the streets of Rome or in the populous districts beyond the walls. He goes in a closed carriage drawn by ambling and well-groomed black horses. Before the loss of the temporal power the carriages were scarlet, drawn by four or six horses, surmounted by a gilt railing resembling a crown. Valets and coachmen wore gorgeous liveries and three other carriages conveyed the secretaries and chaplains of his eminence. These equipages were laid down in 1870, and some of them may be seen taking farmers and their families to the Roman market. Vegetables are packed on the roof and where the valets stood behind.

Might Spare a Few.

It is said that never was there a gentler critic than Doctor McClintock of Dickinson college. One day a young orator presented his speech for Doctor McClintock's approval. He evidently did not anticipate adverse criticism.

He received it, nevertheless, given in the doctor's gentle, humorous way, which never could offend.

"It's a good speech," he said, "but there is, perhaps, a little too much of a certain sort of rhetoric. For instance, I find in it two midnight owls, two midnight wolves, three American eagles and four unfurled banners. It seems to me that the supply exceeds the demand."—Youth's Companion.

The Vacant Literary Throne.

There is, we must admit, today no monarch in any tongue upon the literary throne no sovereign world-named in poetry or prose, in whom—as has happened before now not so many generations ago, in royal succession, to Scott, Byron, Goethe, Victor Hugo, Tolstoy—all the civilized world, Teuton, Latin, Celt, Slav, Oriental, are interested, for whose new works it looks, or where it seeks the gospel of the day. Nabochish, to use an Irish word that became a favorite with Sir Walter Scott; it does not matter. Do not let us nurse the humor of the dependent editor who mournfully told his readers, "No new epic this month."

For German Monument.

Plans of the national German-American alliance for a monument to commemorate the founding of the first German settlement in this country are to be consummated. The memorial is to be located in Vernon Park Germantown, Pennsylvania, and congress has voted to add $25,000 to a similar amount raised by the alliance.

Afraid of Disfigurement.

"She—Aren't you going to ask papa tonight, George?" "He—No, dear, I think I'd better not. I want to have my picture taken tomorrow."

Worship Success

Business Gives No Chance for Religion

By REV. MADISON G. PETERS

I AM an admirer of success. But I find myself at variance with some in the conception of success itself. One of the worst features of our age is the worship of success by itself and apart from the means by which it has been attained. To be successful is enough, no matter what has gone before. A man is measured according to his success in things material. Some of you feel this bitterly, and you have reason to feel it, for it is a cruel principle.

There is a success that is not worth the having and there is a failure that is more to be desired than success.

We find that the word "success" is used only once in the Bible:

"Be strong and of good courage; this book of the law shall not depart out of thy mouth, but thou shalt meditate therein day and night, that thou mayst observe to do all that is written therein: for then shalt thou have good success."

These conditions laid down for Joshua are binding still; an inflexible purpose at all hazards to obey the will of God and to do the right regardless of consequences has been the real secret to the best success in life. Business itself gives no chance for getting religion, but abundant opportunity to exercise it. A business man was accosted by a newsboy, "Don't you want to gimme a dime and set me up in business?" He related how a streak of bad luck had left him strapped, and how many papers he could buy for a dime and what his profits would be. The man gave him a quarter. The boy said: "Shake for luck." Now I call that bringing religion into business.

You will need religion not only for others but for yourself. If you are an employee it will enable you to maintain good cheer under discouragement and work towards your ideal in spite of a headache. If you are an employer you will give a fair day's wage for a fair day's work. It is more important that good wages should be paid than that an office prayer meeting should be established. The business into which you cannot carry your religion you would better get out of.

I have very little faith in the religious employer who lives in a palace, while those who work for him live in shanties. I know men whose tables bend and groan with luxuries, while their workmen have to be content with ten-cent meals. The hard-headed man of business need not be hard-hearted. Un-Christian competition absolves none from the duty of Christ-like living.

Other things being equal, the man who enters business life thoroughly imbued with the purpose ever to act under his eye and gladdened with the joys and hopes which religion inspires, has immense advantages, even as regards his worldly prospects, over the man who throws conscience to the winds.

"The righteous shall hold onto the way and stronger."

France Leads the World in Thrift

By H. C. BEAR, Wilmington, N. C.

But it was her knack of saving money that opened my eyes and brought a realization of the tremendous deficiency of the wage-earning class of my own country.

The pay of this young woman, as fixed by herself, was 80 francs a month, or $16 in our money.

Of course all her traveling expenses were paid and from time to time she was given small sums in recognition of her faithfulness and skill.

Well, at the end of ten months, when the time came for us to return home and settlement was made with the nurse, how much money do you suppose I paid her? Just 800 francs.

Not a dollar of her pay had she drawn in all that time, and so I just added 200 more francs to express my appreciation of a young woman who could be that provident.

The counterpart of that French girl hardly exists in the United States, but if we had plenty of her kind the nation would be in far more fortunate fix.

Good Reason For Many Small Things

By WILLIAM E. MOONEY, Chicago

It has often been said that "technicalities are the safeguard of the law," and so much has been heard about technicalities in these so-called bribery cases that it might be well to explain some of the reasons for technicalities. In all criminal cases the accused has the right by constitution to be informed of the nature and cause of the accusation. The indictment must set forth the offense with clearness and all necessary certainty; and every ingredient of which the offense is composed must be accurately and clearly stated. It is the privilege of the accused to raise any question as to the validity of the indictment and it is the duty of his counsel to prevent his being tried on an invalid indictment, and from taking up the time of the court with a sham case. If a crime has been committed and the indictment upon that crime states no crime it is the fault of the state's attorney, the representative of the people, as he has clear knowledge of what the indictment must contain. Where a crime has not been alleged the quashing of the indictment is but the vindication of that fundamental principle of a republic that no person shall be deprived of life, liberty or property without due process of law. To convict a man for an act which by the record of the court does not constitute a crime would be the act of despotism.

Sometimes it may seem that delay is given by such procedure, but the accused has the right to be heard on any objections or defenses he may have. Is it not better to delay a matter a little while to find the truth than to go swiftly ahead on the wings of falsehood?

Shapes for Spring

BY JULIA BOTTOMLEY.

THREE of the prettiest shapes among the new hats for spring are shown here. One might choose with the eyes shut and be sure of possessing grace, style and real beauty in any of these. They fit well and are only moderately large.

Hemp and milan appear to lead in the point of popularity, but there are innumerable lovely models in other braids as well—hair braid, pyroxylin, chip, leghorn, tuscan, in fact every braid, including the rough Japs, finds a following, and there is no lack of variety in size or shape.

The hair braids and hems are greatly favored for dress hats to be trimmed with French plumes and lace or ribbon—or both. Milans and hems are liked for big masses of flowers. Many of these trimmed with big bunches of lilacs are blooming in triumph at Palm Beach just now.

A great many shapes are shown with borders (called "flanges") of velvet, and some are faced with velvet. Small shapes with upturned brims nearly always are improved by a velvet facing on the brim or coronet. The velvet flange is an undoubted advantage, adding finish and distinction to the shape. Its placing is a matter of perfect workmanship.

It will be noticed that crowns in the hats are conservative; they are not specially large or high or noticeable in any way. The achievement of grace in outline is the paramount idea in spring shapes and is more highly regarded than any other feature. This is a good sign. So far there seems to be an absence of freakishness this season, in any direction.

It looks as if flowers were to catch the fancy of all women young enough to wear flower-laden shapes. They are so pretty. Both the hats and flowers come in great ranges of lovely colors. Milans in the yellow or natural color and hems in all colors give a choice from grave to gay and all the notes between.

There is a shape for every face. It is very essential to pick out the most becoming one and this is a serious matter.

FOR CHILD'S WEAR IN SPRING

Dress of White Dimity Is About the Most Dainty That Can Possibly Be Devised.

Tige and I are sweethearts—all that troubles me is that his old brown coat never gets too old to wear, so I can't make him nice new clothes like what mamma makes for me. This is my new white dimity for spring. Mamma says she likes to have all her sewing done by the time hot weather comes. The dress has a long blouse and double ruffle on the skirt and this is my blue sash. I wear it when I have the blue ribbon in my hair and usually I wear pale blue or white stockings. Mamma says these are "Gibson" plaits over my shoulders, and there are two narrow insertions of lace down the middle of my blouse. Mamma considers short sleeves the best for summer or winter, and she says she likes to have the skirts of my dresses solid embroidery because they are so fluffy. Sometimes I wear kid shoes, but usually black slippers—they're so sensible—and pretty, too. I'm six years old. Anna M. Denniston in the Chicago News.

Handsome beaded bags show no signs of waning in popularity, but the ones done with tiny beads are the thing.

MEDIUM STYLES FOR SPRING

Coming Millinery Will Offer Many Choices, So That Surely All May Be Suited.

The woman who cannot find millinery to suit her this season will indeed be very difficult to please. Not in many years has it been made possible for women to be so sanely and, at the same time, so fashionably hatted as at present.

The styles are medium in all things. Crowns are moderately high, brims are neither too wide nor too narrow, and trimmings are in no wise exaggerated.

The smart-looking turbans are most attractive and come in a variety of models and colorings to suit every type of face. As a rule, two colors are combined, and not infrequently two fabrics besides the trimmings. A soft, coarse, rather wide straw and the fine braid of crinoline are a favored combination. The crown in folds will be of the heavier straw and the crushed brim of the crinoline or hair. The golden shades, which include lemon, ecru and leghorn, are preferred for the crown, while the brim will be of a contrasting color, as blue, dark red, green or black.

No less attractive than the shapes are the trimmings. The cockade of chamois red velvet decorating a hat of golden and black tones is an example of smart, becoming lines. A modified sugar loaf hat, the crown entirely concealed under tiny rosebuds, and the brim of black flexible straw, is another pretty model. A tiny blackbird nestling on the left side is the only trimming.

The fashionable trimmings are small flowers, single quills, small birds, medium wings, soft ribbons and velvet.

Now for Turned-Up Hats.

Once more will it be possible to see women's eyes and hair. Hat brims still will be large, but they are to be turned up. Hats with straw brims that turn up boldly in front, at the side or front and back are seen among the models for the fast coming spring time. They come in all sizes. One of the new forms is 18 inches long and 23 inches wide. Extra large hats, however, will be worn only by the extremists. Even women are weary of them, for they have been carried to such absurd measurements that they no longer are picturesque.

Novel Collar.

The string ties which women are wearing with their tailored shirt waists come in the loveliest of colors. The materials used are innumerable, but all, of course, have the silky finish.

A novel collar shows to good advantage a string tie of ciel blue corded silk. The high, straight, turn-down collar flaps in front. Wide, vertical eyelid slits appear around the collar at intervals of about two inches, and through these is run the tie, which is knotted in front in four-in-hand fashion.

THE HAPPY MAN.

First Lady—How very happy the bridegroom looks! Really it is pleasant to see a young man looking so joyful.

Second Lady—Hush! That's not the bridegroom; that's a gentleman the bride jilted six months ago.

Exhorting the Ducks. There are two tiny boys in this town whose mother sings often to them at their request, and as she is an ardent church woman, the children hear as many hymns as anything else. The other day they were playing with their wooden ducks in the bathtub, and strangely enough the ducks were more inclined to float sideways than in the approved manner. After several attempts to keep the misguided ducks straight the older boy shouted:

"Stand up, duck, stand up!" Then two-year-old, noting the familiar phrase, leaned over the tub and exhorted: "Tand up, duck! Tand up for Jesus!"

EDITOR BROWNE Of The Rockford Morning Star.

"About seven years ago I ceased drinking coffee to give your Postum a trial.

"I had suffered acutely from various forms of indigestion and my stomach had become so disordered as to repel almost every sort of substantial food. My general health was bad. At close intervals I would suffer severe attacks which confined me in bed for a week or more. Soon after changing from coffee to Postum the indigestion abated, and in a short time ceased entirely. I have continued the daily use of your excellent Food Drink and assure you most cordially that I am indebted to you for the relief it has brought me.

"Wishing you a continued success, I am Yours very truly, J. Stanley Browne, Managing Editor."

Of course, when a man's health shows he can stand coffee without trouble, let him drink it, but most highly organized brain-workers simply cannot.

The drugs natural to the coffee berry affect the stomach and other organs and thence to the complex nervous system; throwing it out of balance and producing disorders in various parts of the body. Keep up this daily poisoning and serious disease generally supervenes. So when man or woman finds that coffee is a smooth but deadly enemy and health is of a value at all, there is but one road—quit.

It is easy to find out if coffee be the cause of the troubles, for if left off 10 days and Postum be used in its place and the sick and diseased conditions begin to disappear, the proof is unanswerable.

Postum is not good if made by short boiling. It must be boiled full 15 minutes after boiling begins, when the crisp flavor and the food elements are brought out of the grains and the beverage is ready to fulfill its mission of palatable comfort and renewing the cells and nerve centers broken down by coffee.

The Third Degree

SYNOPSIS.

Howard Jeffries, banker's son, under the evil influence of Robert Underwood, a fellow-student at Yale, leads a life of dissipation, marries the daughter of a gambler who died in prison, and is disowned by his father. He tries to get work and fails. A former college chum makes a business proposition to Howard which requires $2,000 cash, and Howard is broke. Robert Underwood, who had been repulsed by Howard's wife, Annie, in his college days, and had once been engaged to Alicia, Howard's stepmother, has apartments at the Astoria and is apparently in prosperous circumstances. Howard recalls a $50 loan to Underwood that remains unpaid, and decides to ask him for the $2,000 he needs.

CHAPTER III.

The handsome townhouse of Howard Jeffries, the well-known banker, on Riverside drive, was one of the most striking among the many imposing millionaire-homes that line the city's splendid water front. Houses there were in the immediate proximity which were more showy and had cost more money, but none as completely satisfying from the art lover's standpoint. It was the home of a man who studied and loved the beautiful for its own sake and not because he wanted to astonish people with what miracles his money could work. Occupying a large plot on slightly elevated ground, the house commanded a fine view of the broad Hudson. Directly opposite, across the river, busy with steam and sailing craft, smiled the green slopes of New Jersey. In the purple north frowned the jagged cliffs of the precipitous Palisades.

The elder Jeffries, aristocratic descendant of an old Knickerbocker family, was proud of his home and had spent large sums of money in beautifying it. Built in colonial style of pure white marble with long French windows and lofty columns supporting a flat, rounded roof, surrounded by broad lawns, widespread sliding trees and splashing fountains, it was a conspicuous landmark for miles. The interior was full of architectural beauty. The stately entrance hall, hung with ancestral portraits, was of noble proportions, and a superb staircase, decorated with statuary, led off to tastefully decorated reception rooms above. To-night the house was brilliantly illuminated and there was considerable activity at the front entrance, where a footman in smart livery stood opening the doors of the carriages as they drove up in quick succession.

Mrs. Jeffries' musicales were always largely attended because she knew the secret of making them interesting. Her husband's wealth and her fine house enabled her to entertain on a liberal scale, and she was a tactful and diplomatic hostess as well. She not only cultivated the right kind of people who were congenial to each other, but she always managed to have some guest of special distinction whom every one was eager to meet. Her own wide acquaintance among the prominent operatic artists and her husband's influential position in the world of finance made this policy an easy way of furthering her social ambitions. She would always invite some one whom she could present as the lion of the evening. One week it would be a tenor from the opera house, another time a famous violinist. In this way she managed to create a little artistic salon on the lines of the famous political salons in which the brilliant women of the eighteenth century molded public opinion in France.

Alicia knew she was clever and as she stood admiring herself in front of a full length mirror while awaiting the arrival of her guests she congratulated herself that she had made a success of her life. She had won those things which most women hold dear—wealth and social position. She had married a man she did not love, it was true, but other women had done that before her. If she had not brought her husband love she at least was not a wife he need be ashamed of. In her Paquin gown of gold cloth, with sweeping train and a jeweled tiara in her hair, she considered herself handsome enough to grace any man's home. It was indeed a beauty which she saw in the mirror—the face of a woman not yet 30, with the features regular and refined. The eyes were large and dark and the mouth and nose delicately molded. The face seemed academically perfect, all but the expression. She had a cold, calculating look, and a cynic might have charged her with being heartless, of stopping at nothing to gain her own ends.

To-night Alicia had every reason to feel jubilant. She had secured a social lion that all New York would talk about—no less a person than Dr. Bernstein, the celebrated psychologist, the originator of the theory of scientific psychology. Everything seemed to go the way she wished; her musicales were the talk of the town; her husband had just presented her with the jeweled tiara which now graced her head; there seemed to be nothing in the world that she could not enjoy.

Yet she was not happy, and as she gazed at the face reflected before her in the glass she wondered if the world guessed how unhappy she was. She knew that by her own indiscretion she was in danger of losing all she had won, her position in society, her place in the affections of her husband, everything.

When she married Mr. Jeffries it was with deliberate calculation. She did not love him, but, being ambitious, she did not hesitate to deceive him. He was rich, he could give her that prominent position in society for which she yearned. The fact that she was already engaged to a man for whom she did care did not deter her for a moment from her set purpose. She had met Robert Underwood years before. He was then a college boy, tall, handsome, clever. She fell in love with him and they became engaged. As she grew more sophisticated she saw the folly of their youthful infatuation. Underwood was without fortune, his future uncertain. While, in this uncertain state of mind she met Mr. Jeffries, then a widower, at a reception. The banker was attracted to her and being a business man he did things quickly. He proposed and was accepted, all in the brief time of five minutes. Robert Underwood and the romance of her girlhood were sacrificed without question when it came to reaching a prompt decision. She wrote Underwood a brief letter of farewell, telling him that the action she had taken was really for the best interests of them both. Underwood made no reply and for months did not attempt to go near her. Then he met her in public. There was a reconciliation. He exerted the old spell—on the married woman. Cold and indifferent to her husband, Alicia found it amusing to have her old lover paying her court and the danger of discovery only poCKETED the money, forgetting to account to the owners for the sums they brought. The dealers demanded restitution or a settlement and Underwood, dreading exposure, had to hustle around to raise enough money to make up the deficiency in order to avoid prosecution. In this way he lived from day to day borrowing from Peter to settle with Paul, and on one or two occasions he had not been ashamed to borrow from Mrs. Jeffries herself.

Alicia lent the money more because she feared ridicule than from any real desire to oblige Underwood. She had long since become disgusted with him. The man's real character was now plainly revealed to her. He was an adventurer, little better than a common crook. She congratulated herself on her narrow escape. Suppose she had married him—the horror of it! Yet the next instant she was filled with consternation. She had allowed him to become so intimate that it was difficult to break off with him all at once. She realized that with a man of that character the inevitable must come. There would be a disgraceful scandal. She would be mixed up in it, her husband's eyes would be opened to her folly, it might ruin her entire life. She must end it now—once for all. She had already given him to understand that their intimacy must cease. Now he must stop his visits to her house and desist from trapping her friends into his many schemes. She had written him that morning forbidding him to come to the house this evening. She was done with him forever.

These thoughts were responsible for the frown on the beautiful Mrs. Jeffries' bejeweled brow that particular Saturday evening. Alicia gave a sigh and was drawing on her long kid gloves before the glass, when suddenly a maid entered and tendered her mistress a note. Alicia knew the handwriting only too well. She tore the letter open and read:

Dear Mrs. Jeffries: I received your letter telling me that my presence at your house to-night would be distasteful to you. As you can imagine, it was a great shock. Don't you understand the harm this will do me? Everybody will notice my absence. They will jump to the conclusion that there has been a rupture, and my credit will suffer immediately with your friends. I cannot afford to let this happen now. My affairs are in such condition that it will be fatal to me. I need your support and friendship more than ever. I have noticed for some time gave the intrigue additional zest and charm. She did not lead Underwood to believe that he could induce her to forget her duty to Mr. Jeffries, but she was foolish enough to encourage a dangerous intimacy. She thought she was strong enough to be able to call a halt whenever she would be so disposed, but as is often the case she overestimated her powers. The intimacy continued his deprecations until he became a sort of social highwayman. He had no legitimate source of income, but he took a suite of apartments at the expensive Astoria and on credit furnished them so gorgeously that they became the talk of the town. The magazines and newspapers devoted columns to the magnificence of their furnishings and the art treasures they contained. Art dealers all over the country offered him liberal commissions if he would dispose of expensive objects d'art to his friends. He entered in business relation with several firms and soon his rooms became a veritable bazaar for art curios of all kinds. Mrs. Jeffries' friends paid exorbitant prices for some of the stuff—and Underwood had ended it now, before it was too late. There might have been a scandal, and that she must avoid at any cost. Mr. Jeffries, she felt certain, would not tolerate a scandal of any kind.

All at once she felt something brush her cheek. She turned quickly. It was her husband who had entered the room quietly.

"Oh, Howard," she exclaimed, peevishly; "how you frightened me! You shouldn't startle me like that."

A tall, distinguished-looking man with white mustache and pointed beard stood admiring her in silence. His erect figure, admirably set off in a well-cut dress coat suggested the soldier.

"What are you doing alone here, dear?" he said. "I hear carriages outside. Our guests are arriving."

"Just thinking, that's all," she replied, evasively.

He noticed her preoccupied look and, with some concern, he demanded: "There's nothing to worry you, is there?"

"Oh, no—nothing like that," she said, hastily.

He looked at her closely and she averted her eyes. Mr. Jeffries often wondered if he had made a mistake. He felt that this woman to whom he had given his name did not love him, but his vanity as much as his pride prevented him from acknowledging it, even to himself. After all, what did he care? She was a companion, she graced his home and looked after his creature comforts. Perhaps no reasonable man should expect anything more. Carelessly, he asked:

"Whom do you expect to-night?"

"Oh, the usual crowd," replied Alicia, languidly. "Dr. Bernstein is coming—you know he's quite the rage just now. He has to do with psychology and all that sort of thing."

"So, he's your hon to-night, is he?" smiled the banker. "Then he went on: 'By the by, I met Brewster at the club to-night. He promised to drop in.'"

Now it was Alicia's turn to smile. It was not everybody who could boast of having such a distinguished lawyer as Judge Brewster on their calling lists. To-night would certainly be a success—two lions instead of one. For the moment she forgot her worry.

"I am delighted that the judge is coming," she exclaimed, her face beaming. "Every one is talking about him since his brilliant speech for the defense in that murder case."

The banker noted his wife's beautiful hair and the white transparency of her skin. His gaze lingered on the graceful lines of her neck and bosom, glittering with precious stones. An exquisite aroma exuding from her person reached where he stood. His eyes grew more ardent and, passing his arm affectionately around her slender waist, he asked:

"How does my little girl like her tiara?"

"It's very nice. Don't you see I'm wearing it to-night?" she replied almost impatiently and drawing herself away.

Before Mr. Jeffries had time to reply there was a commotion at the other end of the reception room, where rich tapestries screened off the main entrance hall. The butler drew the curtains aside.

"Mr. and Mrs. Cortwright," he announced loudly.

Alicia went forward, followed by her husband, to greet her guests.

DANGER IN LICKING STAMPS

Practice Has Been Known to Cause Acute Inflammation of the Tongue.

Do the people who jeer at the cautious ones who refuse to lick a postage stamp as "cranks" know that there is a defined disease known as "the postage stamp tongue?"

This is an acute inflammation of the tongue, directly traced to the germs to be found on the gummed side of stamp or envelope.

Other and more serious diseases have been caused by this habit that is so universal and seems so harmless. One throat specialist in a hospital declares that many chronic affections of the throat are found among persons who have as their livelihood the addressing and stamping of envelopes.

Bad skin diseases have been known to follow this habit, and it has even caused pulmonary troubles.

It is after all but a habit, and a bad one. It takes no more time and is quite as easy to moisten the stamp with a damp sponge or rag.

Where many letters must be stamped and sealed there are good patent inventions by which the sponge is kept moist.

Hanging on the Wall. "The way pictures are hung makes such a lot of difference in the appearance of a room," said an interior decorator a few days ago. "That fact is thrust upon me nearly every day. I go into some parlors where the pictures are hung so high that all perspective is lost, and the ceiling seems to be hopelessly high. Other folks hang theirs so low that it hurts your spine to look at them, in addition to straining your eyes, spoiling the beauty of the room and taking from the value of the picture."

All pictures should not be hung on the same level, as they so often are, yet all should be as nearly on the level with the eyes as possible. If square and oblong pictures are alternated irregularly with round and oval ones the best possible effect is gained.

Accounting for It. Art lover (standing before "The Bath")—"Did you ever see such color?" Philistine—"No wonder. You must remember that the lady ain't through washing herself yet." Judge.

POULTRY

SOME POINTS ON INCUBATOR

Beginner Will Be Greatly Aided in Management of Machine by Observing Rules Given Herewith.

The following points in the management of an incubator may be helpful to the beginner:

Set the machine perfectly level to insure perfect ventilation and efficient working of all the heating apparatus. Do not place the working machine in a north or west room, if possible. A south or east room is preferred.

The incubator should be in a room where there is fire at no time or fire at all times. In a cold room the eggs must be aired when the temperature is above 60 degrees or chilling will result.

Fresh air and some moisture are necessary for successful incubation, and these are supplied by the ventilated device of every incubator. Incubator doors should be made of double glass and fit neatly to avoid loss of heat.

A machine of from 50 to 120 egg capacity is about right for the beginner. It is large enough for practical purposes and not so large as to cause confusion.

Avoid excess of temperature and absence of moisture in the room in which the incubator is located. Fill and trim the lamp daily and use a wick of sufficient width so that a low blaze will produce the necessary heat.

Let one person only attend to the incubator and give it attention at least twice each day. Keep the lamp burner and bowl free from oil and other foreign matter.

Eggs are overheated at 110 degrees, but it will take ten to twenty-four hours to kill them, according to how near the hatching point they are.

Eggs can be considered chilled when the heat falls to 50 degrees or below. They will still hatch, however, if not kept cold too long—say not over twenty-four hours—but it always hurts them more or less, and it is best never to let them cool below 70 degrees under any circumstances.

Investigation shows that the sitting hen imparts a temperature to the eggs varying from 110 degrees at the outside of the nest to 105 degrees in the center, the average temperature being 103 degrees, hence 103 degrees is the temperature at which an incubator should be run.

Many of our choicest market fowls, as well as show prize winners, were incubator hatched, which disproves the notion that artificial incubation produces weak chicks.

Turn the eggs daily, yet it is not absolutely necessary to turn them all exactly alike.

The attachment which gives a warning signal when the temperature runs beyond the danger limit is a good device and relieves one of much care.

When the chicks are nearly ready to hatch the inside temperature of the machine will rise and the heating apparatus must be regulated, as less heat is needed than at the beginning of incubation.

Give attention to details, learn the workings of your machine, and don't worry. Let the machine do the work.

Let the chicks stay in the incubator without food from twenty-four to forty-eight hours after they are hatched.

WOULD LIE AWAKE ALL NIGHT WITH ITCHING ECZEMA.

"Ever since I can remember I was a terrible sufferer of eczema and other irritating skin diseases. I would lie awake all night, and my suffering was intolerable. A scaly humor settled on my back, and being but a child, I naturally scratched it. It was a burning, itching sensation, and utterly intolerable, in fact, it was so that I could not possibly forget about it. It did not take long before it spread to my shoulders and arms, and I was almost covered with a mass of raw flesh on account of my scratching it. I was in such a condition that my hands were tied.

"A number of physicians were called, but it seemed beyond their medical power and knowledge to cure me. Having tried numerous treatments without deriving any benefit from them, I had given myself up to the mercy of my dreadful malady, but I thought I would take the Cuticura treatment as a last resort. Words cannot express my gratitude to the one who created 'The Cuticura Miracles,' as I have named them, for now I feel as if I never suffered from even a pimple. My disease was routed by Cuticura Soap and Ointment, and I shall never cease praising the wonderful merits they contain. I will never be without them, in fact, I can almost dare any skin diseases to attack me so long as I have Cuticura Remedies in the house. I hope that this letter will give other sufferers an idea of how I suffered, and also hope that they will not pass the 'Cuticura Life Saving Station.'" (Signed) C. # TWENTIETH-CENTURY PIONEERING

By GEORGE SHERMAN

COPYRIGHT BY FIELD AND STREAM

THE creative genius and the constructive ability of Robinson Crusoe, as portrayed by the vivid imagination of Defoe, have been paralleled in the real life of the pioneer, even during this final period of frontier reclamation. It is satisfying to undertake to verify the proverbial ingenuity of our forefathers in a story that tells of what is being done in this very day by a few industrious homesteaders in Uncle Sam's remaining wilderness. "Fifty miles off the railroad," in either direction, describes but a few isolated spots that may be pointed to on a very modern map of the United States. One of these is in Arkansas, among those extremely southern rugged spurs of the Ozark mountains. It is of the very little territory yet remaining to be taken up under the homestead laws. Its boundary is Hot Springs to the east, Mona to the west, Guda to the south and Waldron to the north. In the heart of this territory, in a jumble of the Brushy range, you may still build a house and boast of your isolation, for, indeed, it is possible to reside from eight to ten miles distant from your nearest neighbor. If you should so choose to settle among a group of steep up-and-downs, quite removed from a wagon road, a little nearer to a trail, and see a greater and laborious overland distance from a sawmill, it is obvious that you will have to depend, to a great degree, upon your own resources and upon your ability to create with your own hands from those things which nature has provided in a well-wooded country.

Imagine yourself placed in one of these valleys or upon one of these foothills, with no greater amount of baggage, tools and provisions than could be conveyed over a country of this character with a yoke of oxen. Then, to be commanded, "Here is the forest and all it contains; so, prepare for yourself your future abode."

This is a story of home making under such conditions. The progress of the work is illustrated and in its completion no other than the raw materials of the forest entered into the structure or its furnishings, save a small amount of hardware and incidentals forming a portion of the initial supplies brought in as a settler's outfit. Two young men, homesteaders, both city bred, completed the entire work, unassisted.

Of the tools used the double-bit ax performed the greater portion of the heavy work. It followed in the wake of the cross-cut saw after the felling of the trees, and, from then on was the chief implement of construction. With it every duty of preparing the logs for raising them into their positions in the building was most adequately performed. First it scored the logs lengthwise, on two opposite sides, ready for wedging and splitting into semicircular halves. Then it followed as the tool for hewing the flat surface of the half-logs, which, completed, formed the smooth inside walls of the dwelling. After each log had been raised into position came the task of "notching down," which required even more skill in the use of an ax. Those few of the native inhabitants of the forest who are most proficient in making the dovetailed notches which are necessary in completing a perfect set of interlocking timbers are known as "corner men."

At a native house raising the ones chosen for the work are usually skilled woodsmen residing in widely separated settlements among the hills. How well this part of the work was done by two young men totally unaccustomed to pioneer life is better illustrated in the series of photographs which show each successive operation of preparing the logs and raising the framework of the structure.

In going on to the flooring, shingling, window framing, partitioning, finishing and furnishing you would know how it was all accomplished in the absence of the products of a saw and planing mill or any of the manufactures so essential to building construction and home making.

Five very common tools constituted the board-making outfit. This primitive substitute for a sawmill included an ax; two or three steel wedges and as many hand-made, of hickory; a frow, with hickory handle, the blade made of a section of iron tire; a mallet and a maul, each cut from unseasoned hickory timber.

The selection of perfect "board trees" is given work to a degree, as practiced by the natives. Out of every four trees chosen by the woodsman's system of identifying marks, usually only one is perfectly adaptable to board making by the method of splitting with mallet and frow. The most reliable way to select the right kind of timber is to observe the general trend of the crevices in the bark. The course of these lines should be nearly perpendicular with the trunk. Another good method of judging a straight-grained trunk is to note the distribution and the general design of the scaly, turtle-shell patches of bark. These scales should be long and narrow, and their design should show a reasonable amount of regularity. The trend of these patches of bark scale should deviate but slightly from the perpendicular. It is impossible to split a perfect board from a log in which the markings and bark scales are inclined to encircle the trunk like a corkscrew. Nor is it always possible to make perfect boards, even if the markings of the bark are in accord with governing rules. Native intuition, difficult to define, aids considerably in selecting the best trees. The practice of "chipping" is a final test. In the most remote forests, many miles from a railroad, it is difficult to find an area, even on the crest of a mountain, that has not been penetrated by the pioneer in search of splitting timber. Far from the nearest settlement, in the depth of a virgin forest, the intrepid hunter frequently observed these notches for board trees, even when there is entire absence of other signs of advancing civilization.

Out of 21 trees selected and chipped, while observing these rules, 17 were discarded. The remaining four supplied all the lumber necessary to complete the building operations and a sufficient quantity of choice boards for the mission furnishings. After sawing into eight and ten-foot lengths the logs were rolled into position for splitting. Then followed the scoring preparatory to splitting with mallet, maul and wedges. In the diagram of a cross-section of a piece of pine-board timber the entering wedge points the line of the first seam which separates the semi-circular halves. The timber is then quartered and again split the third time. An 18-inch log will produce eight well-shaped bolts, the most practical and convenient size for splitting with a frow. Each of these bolts is placed upright into an oak notch, which is struck firmly to the ground to act as a support in prying. The cutting edge of the frow blade is the lower side of the tool when the handle is held upright with the blade resting across the V-shaped end of the bolt. The heart is waste, which is split from the bolt with a wedge. When the cutting edge of the frow blade is placed across these markings the upper or broad edge of the blade is tapped gently with the mallet. This operation starts the board. By rocking the upright handle to and fro the blade opens a seam and is entered deeper with little exertion. Ten or fifteen seconds of this prying operation will release a perfectly smooth board from the bolt. All of the lumber used in the building operations was produced by this method.

The same process was applied to chindle making. The 5,000 1/4-inch boards required for roofing purposes, all split from 18-inch log lengths, were turned out by two operators with mallet and frow in a day and a half.

Other timbers required, such as the solid oak foundation sills, the pine sleepers, or flooring supports, the joists and the rafters, were all hand-hewn with a broadax from unseasoned trunks.

The work bench for hand planing and finishing lumber was improvised from a half-log, 24 inches in diameter, mounted on two large stumps and held in position with wooden pegs. Smaller wooden pegs were used also, to an extent, as a substitute for nails and screws in the building operations. An abbreviated assortment of carpenter's and cabinet maker's tools constituted the outfit.

The main living room is most ingeniously arranged for both convenience and comfort. It is at once convertible into either a sitting room, a dining room or a bachelor's den. In one corner of this room is a broad, turning stairway, easy to ascend, with a rustic balustrade, artistically designed—all made of young hickory. The variegated colorings of the natural bark appear as if oxidized, which lends a feeling of soft warmth and comfort. The cozy corner is diagonally opposite the stairway. Its overhanging shelves are at once a gallery of interesting photographic studies and a miniature museum of natural history. They are a repository for a collection of Indian pottery, flint arrow heads and implements, queer freaks of vegetation, fascinating bits of strange mineral formations, brilliant plumage of rare birds, hawk's claws, antlers and a variety of

To Incline Toward Mercy. Jim had been far from a good boy during the day and toward nightfall he realized the fact fully. Being well acquainted with the workings of family discipline, he assayed a little diplomacy.

"Shall you tell father about me?" he inquired of his mother.

"Certainly I shall tell him," responded his mother, with sorrowful firmness.

"Shall you tell him before dinner or after dinner?" asked the culprit.

"After dinner," was the announcement.

When the Hare Won

By M. DIBBELL

"Mother, I am going to try to write stories."

Little Mrs. Harrison breathed a patient sigh and answered, "Yes, dear. Do you think you can find a market for your stories?"

This tall, handsome, impetuous daughter had always been a problem too deep for her to solve. Why any whose family was in comfortable circumstances should persist in efforts to be self-supporting was utterly beyond her comprehension. But, also, since it was Ruth who was attempting it of course it must be right.

"Yes, mother," continued the girl. "I really think I can write quite as interesting tales as the general run of those with which the papers and magazines are filled—at least I mean to."

Later when Ruth informed her father of the new field of labor she intended to enter he simply laughed and wished her every success in her undertaking. At once she set to work and her first effort in the literary field was sent out to all the available markets. And the regular return of the manuscript at her own expense, with unfailing regularity, did not discourage her.

When over six months of unrewarded effort had passed Mrs. Harrison said to her daughter:

"Ruth, child, don't you think you might succeed better with your homemade candles than you do with the writing? You know that everyone who has ever tasted your candles always longed for more and I am sure you could get any number of orders for them."

Ruth smiled at her mother's suggestion—as to her change of occupation, but answered:

"No, mother, I mean to keep on trying; I have just finished a dear little love story which I am sure will be the very thing for Up-to-Date Romance and I shall start it at once. I have never sent the editors anything."

At last her patience and perseverance were rewarded. After a short time, instead of the usual bulky envelope, came one of the ordinary business size with Up-to-Date Romance printed on its corner and enclosing a check for her story. The letter contained also the encouraging information that if she could send them anything equally good they would be pleased to see it.

"She Was Wandering About the Garden"

After this the regularity with which Up-to-Date Romance accepted and printed everything coming from her pen seemed remarkable. Ruth thoroughly enjoyed this new work and devoted all her spare time to the production of some very readable stories.

For nearly a year this state of affairs continued. Then, upon entering her daughter's room one afternoon, Mrs. Harrison found Ruth dissolved in tears.

"Why, Ruthie, what is the matter?" queried her mother.

"Mother, I shall never write another word," answered a doleful voice. "It has been a farce all through. Frederic Mortimer owns a large interest in Up-to-Date Romance and he has made them accept my stories just because he thought it would please me—I shall never forgive him."

"Why, child, how did you find that out? And if it is so surely it was kind of Frederic to want to make you happy. Why should you be angry with him?"

But Ruth was not to be comforted. "I would much rather have won on my own merits," she said miserably. "I know it is true, for I heard John Carlton ask him only an hour ago how he liked the magazine business and if he were making a fortune out of Up-to-Date Romance. Frederic told him it was the best paying investment he had ever made. They did not see me, for I was down at the dark end of the news store by the magazine counter. When they left I started for home, but Frederic overtook me part way out. Then I taxed him with his duplicity and he had to acknowledge that it was true."

Mrs. Harrison gazed at her daughter in perplexity. What could one say to such an unreasonable young person as this? The desire of her heart had long been that Ruth would wed the son of her dearest friend, Jane Mortimer, and settle down to a life of peace and happiness. And now, because Frederic had tried his best to do what would give her pleasure, every thing apparently was at sixes and sevens.

Finally she said, "Well, since Frederic says the magazine is the best paying investment he has ever had he cannot be losing money even if he is printing your stories. People must like them or they would not read them."

Frederic himself had presented this view of the subject to Ruth, but she was too angry to hear reason from any one; and now with the reckless abandon of youth she promptly put all her remaining manuscripts in the fire.

For four years Frederic Mortimer had been trying to win Ruth Harrison's promise to become his wife, but her reply was ever the same—that she wanted to have her own share in the battle of life, not become merely an onlooker.

The incident of the stories was only half as bad as Ruth considered it, for unless they had been worth printing they never would have been published in Up-to-Date Romance, even with Frederic's influence.

It took time and patience for him to make his peace with the offended young woman, but before many weeks they were apparently on their usual terms—all a lover's devotion on Frederic's part, friendship on Ruth's.

Not long after Ruth's sad fall from the pinnacle of fame a cousin of Frederic Mortimer's arrived to spend the summer with him. This was the cousin's first trip east, for he had been born and reared on a big ranch in California. He was a fair type of the breezy west, tall, straight, handsome, full of life and vigor and with a happy disposition.

From their first meeting there seemed a mutual attraction between Ruth Harrison and Guy Atkinson. Guy Atkinson had heard of his cousin's love for Ruth, for Frederic could not keep some mention of her out of his letters and the cousins had corresponded for years. He was prepared to admire her as Frederic's sweetheart, with no thought of danger to himself.

There were many picnics and other social gatherings during that summer and Ruth often met the Californian.

Mrs. Harrison was delighted with the way in which her daughter had changed. She said to her husband:

"The child really seems to be growing fond of household duties and I never hear a word about any new effort at earning money. I believe Frederic's faithfulness is beginning to touch her heart."

Toward the end of the season a party of young people planned for a sail down the river; the party to have a picnic supper on a small island which was a favorite resort for such affairs, and take the homeward sail by moonlight. The program was carried out perfectly until the point of getting supper on the island. Here some of the number wanted to make a fire to boil the kettle for a pot of tea. They all set to work collecting sticks and soon had a merry blaze.

Ruth and Guy were left to tend the fire while the other were busy spreading their repast on a convenient knoll. After a few moments Ruth, with the impatience of youth, bent over the fire to see if the kettle was heating as rapidly as it should. Suddenly, the hem of her dress touched an outlying brand and at once blazed up. Guy was a few feet away and saw the accident. Tearing off his coat he quickly wrapped it about her, and in a few seconds the flame was smothered. He had fallen to his knees to reach her flaming skirt, and now looked up into her white face.

"Darling, you are safe," he said simply—then he realized the term he had used and a slow flush spread over his face. It was matched by the scarlet of Ruth's own.

He rose to his feet and their friends came rushing up. Guy donned his slightly scorched coat and Ruth's friends assisted her to make repairs. The girl herself felt as if she were in a dream, and both she and Guy Atkinson were unusually quiet and subdued for the remainder of the evening.

The next morning Ruth received an early call from the Californian. She was wandering about the beautiful rose garden which was the pride of her father's heart when Guy found her.

"Miss Harrison, I wish to apologize for speaking as I did to you. I have known all along that you were to become Frederic's wife and I did not know until I saw your danger how I loved you. Forgive me—I wish you and Frederic every joy."

For a moment Ruth did not answer, then she said slowly: "I shall never marry your cousin. I do not care for him except as a friend." She hesitated. "I, too, made a discovery yesterday."

Poor Frederic was forgotten by them both; the light of hope and happiness came into Guy's eye, while he asked, trying to speak calmly:

"Can I dare to ask what that discovery was?"

Ruth lifted her gaze to his without any of her old timidity—and the answer must have been in her eyes, for she spoke no word.

PROFIT IN OSTRICH FARMING

Industry in United States Only in Its Infancy, but Promises to Be Successful.

Flagstaff, Ariz.—"Does ostrich farming pay?" This question is asked by almost everyone who visits an ostrich farm. When an acre of alfalfa will furnish a home for four birds, with food enough to maintain them; when an ostrich will yield annually one and one-half pounds of feathers, with an average value of $20 a pound, and from thirty-six to ninety eggs, which may be used for incubation, or may furnish food at the rate of three and one-half pounds each if the owner doesn't wish to increase his troop, one may be left to judge as to the profitability of the industry.

Ostrich farming in the United States is only in its infancy. It has been only twenty-three years since the first American ostrich farm was started.

Harvesting Ostrich Feathers.

The early attempt met with varying degrees of success. The pioneer breeders in this country had to get most of their knowledge from their own experience. In fact, more than half the ostriches now in the United States are the progeny of a single pair owned in Arizona in 1891.

At plucking time the ostriches are driven in from the pasture and placed in a small pen surrounded by a tight board fence five or six feet high. The plucking box is about four feet high, twenty inches wide, and three feet long, opened at one end and closed with a door at the other. An ostrich is caught and a hood placed over its head. An old black stocking makes a very good hood. The hooded bird is very easily handled. It is placed in the plucking box with its head toward the door. The plucker stands behind while removing the feathers. This is necessary, because the ostrich kicks or strikes very hard, but always out in front and never behind.

Manufacturers in this country usually request that the feathers be graded as nearly as possible as they are in the London market, where nearly all the feathers of the world are marketed. A London report shows the following classification: White, fenta, bayocks, black, drabs, floss, spadones and boos, with numerous subdivisions and grades.

The value of the American feathers depends on the London market. In an American factory they bring 15 per cent. more than the London price plus the freight charges. In October "white primes and blood feathers"—the most valuable—sold in London for $146 per pound. It takes ninety of these feathers to weigh a pound. The "white prime" and "blood feathers" are taken from the males, as well as most of the "white firsts," though occasionally a female bird will have what the feather men call a "first white." The black feathers are plucked from the male bird, and the drab from the female. "Spadones" are chick feathers, the first plucking. "Boos" are tall feathers. "Bayocks" come mostly from the male birds. The shortest drab feathers, which are frequently used in making feather dusters, are worth $4 per pound. An average ostrich will yield one and one-half pounds annually.

A Helpless Invalid

Restored to Health by Lydia E. Pinkham's Vegetable Compound

A woman who is sick and suffering, and won't at least try a medicine which has the record of Lydia E. Pinkham's Vegetable Compound, is, it would almost seem, to blame for her own wretchedness. Read what this woman says:

Richmond, Mo.—"When my second daughter was eighteen months old I was pronounced a hopeless invalid by specialists. I had a consultation of doctors and they said I had a severe case of ulceration. I was in bed for ten weeks, had sinking spells, and was pronounced to be in a dangerous condition. My father insisted that we try Lydia E. Pinkham's Vegetable Compound, and brought me six bottles. I soon began to improve, and before it had all been taken I was as well and strong as ever—my friends hardly recognized me so great was the change."—Mrs. Woodson Branstetter, Richmond, Mo.

There are literally hundreds of thousands of women in the United States who have been benefited by this famous old remedy, which was produced from roots and herbs over thirty years ago by a woman to relieve woman's suffering.

Read what another woman says:—

Jonesboro, Texas.—"I have used Lydia E. Pinkham's Vegetable Compound for myself and daughter, and consider it unequalled for all female diseases. I would not be without it for anything. I wish every mother in America could be persuaded to use it as there would be less suffering among our sex then. I am always glad to speak a word of praise for Lydia E. Pinkham's Vegetable Compound, and you are at liberty to use this testimonial."—Mrs. James T. Lawrence, Jonesboro, Texas.

Since we guarantee that all testimonials which we publish are genuine, is it not fair to suppose that if Lydia E. Pinkham's Vegetable Compound had the virtue to help these women it will help any other woman who is suffering from the same trouble?

For 30 years Lydia E. Pinkham's Vegetable Compound has been the standard remedy for female ills. No sick woman does justice to herself who will not try this famous medicine. Made exclusively from roots and herbs, and has thousands of cures to its credit.

If the slightest trouble appears which you do not understand, write to Mrs. Pinkham at Lynn, Mass., for her advice—it is free and always helpful.

How To Stop Stubborn Cough

We don't mean just stop the irritation in your throat—but cure the underlying cause.

Cough syrups cannot do this. It takes a constitutional tonic body builder to do the work properly—and cure you to stay cured. Vinol is the remedy you need.

Mrs. Minnie Osgood, of Glens Falls, N. Y., writes: "After trying several remedies for a bad cough and cold without benefit, I was asked to try Vinol. It worked like magic. It cured my cold and cough and I gained in health and strength. I consider Vinol the most wonderful tonic and invigorator I ever saw."

If we cannot stop that cough with VINOL—our delicious cod liver and iron tonic—which is made without oil—we will not charge you a cent for the medicine you buy. This seems like a pretty fair proposition—and ought to be accepted. Don't you think so? With this understanding we ask you to try a bottle of VINOL.

The Girlhood of Frances Willard

There were good times on the long winter evenings, when the dear mother, (who had taught school and attended college, too) acted as their school teacher in the pleasant "evening school." They learned to love study, and to read the best books. They early tried to put their thoughts in writing, and often composed little essays, and even verses.

When Frances was twelve, real schooldays began in the little district schoolhouse. When she was seventeen she went to Milwaukee, and became a student in the Milwaukee female college. In the spring of 1858 when Frances was in her nineteenth year, the family moved to Evanston, Ill., where the two farmer's daughters entered the Woman's college.

The story of Frances E. Willard after that is the story of a great teacher and a great leader. She was well trained, and she began by training others. From teaching a little district school on the Illinois prairies she rose in a few years to the "dean" or head, of the Woman's college in Evanston, of which she was a graduate. The great work of her life however, was that of a public leader and reformer.

When Frances was a girl of sixteen she cut a temperance pledge from a children's paper, pasted it in the family Bible, and insisted upon its being signed by every member of the family father, mother, brother, sister and self.

Looking back the fifty years since that incident seems prophetic—for in 1874 Miss Willard resigned as dean of the Woman's college in Evanston, and entered upon the temperance work which was the great work of her life. That year she became president of the Chicago Woman's Christian Temperance union; later she became state president, and national secretary. In 1879 she was made president of the National W. C. T. U. Four years later she founded and became president of the World's W. C. T. U., now established in more than fifty countries.

For nineteen years Miss Willard was the organizer and leader of the greatest temperance movement the world has known. She also worked for woman suffrage and the equal rights of women and men. And when her work ended in 1898, she was one of the most loved and honored women of her time.

One notable tribute has been paid to the memory of this famous woman, who sixty years ago was an unknown girl in a Wisconsin farmhouse. In the Capitol at Washington is the National Hall of Statuary, in which each state may place two statues of distinguished citizens. The state of Illinois has placed in this hall a marble statue of Frances E. Willard. It is the only statue of a woman in the gallery—and it stands by the side of the statue of George Washington.—Jane A. Stewart in Little Folks.

A Reliable Medicine - NOT A NARCOTIC

Mrs. F. Martie, St. Joe, Mich., says: "Our little boy contracted a severe bronchial trouble and as the doctor's medicine did not cure him, I gave him Foley's Honey and Tar Compound in which I have great faith. It cured the cough as well as the choking and gaging spells, as he got well in a short time. Foley's Honey and Tar Compound has many times saved as much trouble and we are never without it in the house." Hite Drug Co.

Sinking Spells Every Few Days

"At the time I began taking Dr. Miles' Heart Remedy I was having sinking spells every few days. My hands and feet would get cold; I could scarcely breathe, and could feel myself gradually sinking away until I would be unconscious. Those about me could not tell there was life in me. After these spells I would be very weak and nervous, sleepless and without appetite; had neuralgia in my head and heart. After taking the remedy a short time all this disappeared and in a few weeks all the heart trouble was gone."

MRS. LIZZIE PAINTER
803 1/2 3d Ave. Evansville, Ind.

For twenty years we have been constantly receiving just such letters, as these. There is scarcely a locality in the United States where there is not some one who can testify to the merits of this remarkably successful Heart Remedy.

Dr. Miles' Heart Remedy is sold by all druggists. If the first bottle fails to benefit, your druggist will return your money.

An Ideal Sunday Newspaper.

Recent issues of THE SUNDAY RECORD-HERALD remind one that Chicago may fairly lay claim to producing the best newspapers in the world, not excepting those of New York. THE SUNDAY RECORD-HERALD, in foreign news alone, has its own special cable service in addition to those of the New York Herald, World, Journal of Commerce and Associated Press. This is a fair example of the completeness of the paper in every department.

Aside from the regular news features, there is something in THE SUNDAY RECORD-HERALD for every member of the family. The special articles by William E. Curtis and Walter Wellman are always interesting. The sporting section offers four whole pages of fresh and authentic news in every line of sport. The woman's section is filled with illustrated articles on the latest wrinkles in fashion and domestic science, with Marion Harland as a regular contributor and Dame Curtsey's "Novelties in Entertainment" as a valued feature. The dramatic page, written by James O'Donnell Bennett, is admittedly without an equal in the West. The array of splendid special articles by skilled writers, finely illustrated, also is typical of the high literary quality of THE RECORD-HERALD. In the way of humor there is the comic colored supplement for children besides Charles Lederer's cartoons and laughable articles for adults and S. E. Kiser's delightful "Alternating Currents" for everybody.

But the thing that lifts THE SUNDAY RECORD-HERALD most emphatically above all its rivals is its magazine section. There is nothing else that can touch this in American journalism. The Sunday Magazine of THE RECORD-HERALD is a real magazine, full of stories and articles by the most famous writers of our day illustrated by celebrated artists. In quality and beauty it compares favorably with the best monthlies. No wonder THE RECORD-HERALD is regarded as the ideal Sunday newspaper!

There is no reason whatever why you should wear out your life in a heart-sickening grind of toil without advancement. A thousand jobs await the man able to "produce." Employers want—are always eager to secure his services.

Every month there are received at the I. C. S. upwards of 800 voluntary letters from men that spare-time study has qualified to "produce." These letters prove conclusively that there is a way for every man—for you—to get ready to "produce." The I. C. S.
