Drys Win Again

Charlevoix and Antrim Counties Remain Saloonless.

GOOD ROADS CARRIED

Steffes and Hudson Victors In Local Battle.

By a majority of about 546 the voters of Charlevoix County decreed at the election Monday that saloons should remain outside of the county for at least another two years. On the County Roads System the voters reversed themselves from three years ago when the proposition was defeated, and carried same by a majority of about 875. The Beavers registered the heaviest vote against the question.

Locally the main fight was on local option with the questions of Mayor and Commissioner following closely. R. F. Steffes defeated Geo. G. Glenn for Mayor by a majority of 87, and Charles A. Hudson defeated James Gidley for Commissioner by a majority of 51. Justice Charles McMillan had no opposition, neither did the Supervisors, W. F. Bashaw, Franklin L. Smith and W. A. Loveday.

A remarkable feature of the election was the large vote polled in practically every precinct in the county.

Below is a summary of the two questions voted on in the county:

New 24-page Booklet

"Apples That Taste Right" is the title of a 24-page booklet that has just been issued in behalf of the advertisement of the Western Michigan country. The book is handsomely illustrated with orchard scenes and is a fine specimen of the printer's art. The introduction to the text is, "Michigan grows apples that taste right—that have the smell, the tang, the juice, the sparkle and the texture that nothing but the frosts and the soils of the North—the climate of the North—can put into an apple."

Again the book says, "It took but one apple to open the eyes of Eve, and it takes but one apple with the right taste to complete the education of the man who has been buying his apples with his eyes only."

"The biting frosts, the four seasons, the unforced rainfall, and the sturdy soil, that knows the touch of winter's snows, and of spring's reviving hand, all go into the making of an apple that has character, taste, and the spicy smell that is the Maker's guaranty of the 'goodness' under the apple's skin. Science has never found a way of outwitting Nature on this score—and never will."

Let today's work be your recommendation for tomorrow.

COUNTY CONVENTION

Of Republicans Held at Charlevoix Wednesday.

The county convention of the Republican party was held at Charlevoix Wednesday afternoon with a good attendance from all parts of the county. Utmost harmony prevailed both in the selection of delegates to the state convention and in resolutions endorsing our present state and national administrations.

The convention was called to order by H. I. McMillan, secretary of the County Committee.

Officers of the convention were J. E. Cotter of Boyne City Chairman and Wm. F. Bashaw of East Jordan secretary. The committee on credentials were L. A. Moon, H. L. Olney and J. A. Markhaw. Order of business, W. J. Gallagher, L. A. Butter, A. E. Cross. Nominations, A. G. Urquhart, Jacob E. Chew, H. W. Weddell. Resolutions, R. A. Emrey, W. T. Martin, R. E. Webster.

The delegates elected to attend the State Convention at Bay City, April 11th are: F. A. Kenyon, John Porter, Alden E. Cross, J. M. Harris, A. F. Hayes, Lyle White, R. A. Emrey, Olaf Nordrum, R. W. Paddock, W. J. Pearson.

A WISE MAN

Some years ago a farmer living in this state discovered the now well known fact that there is much profit in a good orchard. He ordered a lot of trees, but when they came into bearing he was disappointed. Some bore a large quantity of good fruit, but other trees in the same orchard were not good, and some were a failure.

HE BEGAN TO THINK

And the consequence was he ordered another lot, but this time he told the nurseryman to get all the "grafts" from the very best trees in the state. He now has a remarkable bearing new orchard.

DIFFERENT FROM MANY OTHERS

In fact, all his last trees are first-class like the ones he cut the grafts from. "I want to tell you," said the man, "if I were to buy any more fruit trees I would have every one grown from the best producing trees that can be found."

The Greening Nursery Company of Monroe, Michigan, are doing this very same thing. They have a Pedigree Nursery, which means trees propagated from the best bearing trees in the state. "Trees With a Record," which means more fruit and better fruit. The orchardist cannot afford to take chances on any old kind of Nursery stock. You can profit by this man's experience and get "Trees With a Record." LARGE ILLUSTRATED CATALOG FREE.

Beverly

Big Attraction At Temple Theatre Next Week.

Perhaps the company appearing in Geo. Barr McCutcheon's "Beverly" at the Temple Theatre next Wednesday, April 10th, contains the names of more prominent players than have appeared here with any other attraction this season.

Eleanor Woodruff who plays Beverly Calhoun although a very young girl has played leading roles with Nat Goodwin and the lead with Cyril Scott in "The Prince Chap" and only recently returned from a starring engagement in Australia under the management of J. C. Williamson. The Charles Frohman of the Antipodes, Lawrence Ewart, who plays Prince Danton, was for six years leading man with Walker Whiteside, and has also successfully starred in romantic dramas. Edith Berwyn who plays Princess Yelive has enacted leading roles with many high class organizations, including David Belasco's "Sweet Kitty Bellairs," and that poetic drama, "The Road to Yesterday." Davidson Clark who plays General Marlaux has been in the support of nearly all the prominent dramatic stars, and has a tremendous following on the Pacific coast, where he is noted for his portrayal of character heavies. Hazel Harroun is a former member of Annie Russell's company and also appeared in Mrs. Fiske's "Toss of the D'Urbervilles." Lillian Allen De Vere who plays Aunt Panny, Beverly's old colored servant, for several seasons played Martha in Morrison's "Faust" and created the negro mammy in "Cumberland 61." Chas. J. Porley, who plays Colonel Quinnox, is a former member of Mr. Belasco's companies; and each and everyone of the members of the large company have played important parts with leading Broadway attractions. As this company has been especially organized for a New York engagement at a leading high priced theatre there is no doubt as to the sterling merit of the cast and the elegance of the production.

Facts About Indigestion and its Relief that Should Interest You

Although Indigestion and Dyspepsia are so prevalent, most people do not thoroughly understand their cause and cure. There is no reason why most people should not eat anything they desire—if they will only chew it carefully and thoroughly. Many actually starve themselves into sickness through fear of eating every good-looking, good-smelling, and good-tasting food, because it does not agree with them.

The best thing to do is to fit yourself to digest any good food.

We believe we can relieve Dyspepsia. We are so confident of this fact that we guarantee and promise to supply the medicine free of all cost to every one who will use it, who is not perfectly satisfied with the results which it produces. Successful Sunday Journalism.

For years the success of the Sunday Magazine of THE RECORD-HERALD has incited other papers to try to duplicate or rival it, but nothing else of the kind can compare for a moment with this remarkable supplement. It was the pioneer in its particular field and it seems to have gotten a start that leaves all younger rivals out of the running.

The Sunday Magazine of THE RECORD-HERALD is a real magazine, full of stories and articles by the best living writers, illustrated by eminent artists, superbly printed, and carrying on its cover each week a masterpiece of color work. Both in the beauty of its pictures and in the entertaining quality of its contents it compares favorably with the best of the independent weeklies or even monthlies. During the last year its readers have been enjoying a special treat in a remarkable series of prize stories secured through an offer of $10,000 in cash prizes. This unique contest attracted the best living writers, and many of them continue to write for the Sunday Magazine of THE RECORD-HERALD. Some of the best stories of Conan Doyle, Jack London, Wallace Irwin, Ellis Parker Butler, Cyrus Townsend Brady and scores of other writers of high-class fiction will be found in its columns. At the same time, Sewell Ford's Inimitable Shorty McCabe and Torchy stories continue to be frequent features. You will also find one of the best novels of the day running serially in its columns at the present moment.

DIDN'T TAKE TO THE GAME

That There Was Good Football Material in Ole Was Not at First Apparent.

No wonder Ole was a sensation. He didn't look exactly like football material to us, I'll admit. He seemed more especially designed for light derrick work.

Bost went right to work on Ole in a businesslike manner. He tossed him the football and said: "Catch it. Ole watched it sail past and then tore after it like a pup retrieving a stick. He got it in a few minutes and brought it back to where Bost was raving.

"See here, you overgrown fox terrier," he shouted, "catch it on the fly, here!" He hurled it at him.

"Aye, ent seen no fly," said Ole, allowing the ball to pass on as he conversed.

"You cotton headed Scandinavian cattle ship ballast, catch that ball in your arms when I throw it to you, and don't let go of it!" shrieked Bost, shooting at him again.

"Ole right," said Ole patiently. He covered the ball after a short struggle and stood hugging it faithfully.

"Toss it back, toss it back!" howled Bost, jumping up and down.

"Yu tal me to hold it," said Ole, reproachfully hugging it tighter than ever.

"Drop it, you Mammoth Cave of ignorance!" yelled Bost. "If I had your head I'd sell it for cordwood. Drop it!"

Ole dropped the ball placidly. "Das ban fule game," he smiled lazily. "Aye ent care for it. Bny feller got a Yewsharp?" George Fitch, "At Good Old Swish."

Pins and Pincushions.

In an interesting history of pins just published under the title of "Pins and Pincushions," one learns that there was actually no factory in England for the manufacture of pins until 1625. Up to that period supplies all came from abroad. But having established itself the industry has flourished and now the English pin is regarded as the best the world produces. Another interesting fact gleaned from this book is that the fancy box into which we now put pins can boast of more ancient lineage than the pincushion.

It was somewhere about Queen Elizabeth's time that the pincushion came into vogue. Then it was a positive thing of beauty adorned with exquisite needlework and painting. It was in early Victorian days that the pincushion cut reached its zenith. We now prefer the fancy box as a receptacle for our varied assortment of pins.

Those "Sooner" Basques.

The Norsemen are not the only people credited with the discovery of America before Columbus. Francois Michel, in "Le Pays Basques," maintains that the Basque sailors who went north for whales and cod were familiar with the coast of Newfoundland for centuries before the birth of Columbus, and that it was probably from one of their countrymen that the navigator learned of the existence of another continent. There is also a mystery about the origin of the Basque people and the strange resemblance between their language and North American dialects. Whitney, the American philologist, declares: "No other dialect in the old world so resembles the American language in structure as the Basque." Did the Basques come from America to Europe.—London Chronicle.

Fall Killed Sombambulist.

A tragic death was that of Eric Zimmerman, a German sailor on board the steamer Vandalla, which has just been reported. While the Vandalla was in the Red Sea, Zimmerman, walking in his sleep, climbed the rigging of the foremast and fell to the deck, fracturing his skull. The mates said that he had always been a somnambulist. He was a wealthy man once and owned a schooner of his own in Hamburg. Three years ago he took his wife and children for a trip from Hamburg to Hull. During a gale they were swept overboard and lost. After that he shipped before the mast.

Discouraging a Student.

"Nobody can learn all there is that's worth knowing in a lifetime," said Mr. Meekton wisely, "and a man ought never to assume that his education is finished. I'm going to keep right ahead with mine. I'm going to study astronomy."

His wife looked at him sharply, and then in a cold, hard tone exclaimed: "Leonidas, you'll have to think up some better excuse for staying out at night!"—Youth's Companion.

Immensely Rich.

"Do you see that corpulent old gentleman ricketing from a big red automobile?" "Yes. He seems to be prosperous." "I should say so! He has yard eggs every morning for breakfast."

Profane Language Advance of Culture Causes Its Decline

By P. EVAN JONES

OWING to the extensive use of profane and blasphemous language having become so common seemingly among people in all walks of life, many have been trying to solve the problem why this should be in our advanced stage of civilization. Some time ago I noticed an explanation coming from Prof. Thomas R. Launsburg, which is as follows:

Profanity is a brain test. The habit is in consequence subject to the general laws governing intensiveness. To a very great extent the practice of swearing is specially characteristic of a rude and imperfect civilization.

With the advance of culture profanity declines. It declines not so much because men become peculiarly sensitive to its viciousness, but they do to its ineffectiveness, with the growth of refinement, both in the individual and in the community.

Much must always be allowed in the case of particular persons for the influence of early training and association. Exceptions are, therefore, too numerous to lay down any positive rule; still, it is safe to say in general that a man's intellectual development is largely determined by the extent of his indulgence in profanity.

I fully indorse the professor's remarks as to profanity being a brain test, and that it can show but a mental weakness amongst those who allow themselves to fall into the habit; but I beg to differ with him as to the possibility of its diminishing with modern culture and education, which has fully been demonstrated in the past, as there is no time in our history where the opportunities were greater for education and culture and where we should be at the height of perfection in this respect.

And if this should be a mark of the decrease of profanity it should be a lost chord in our present age; but, on the other hand, there is no period of our advanced civilization or could there be, even in the dark ages, where the use of profane and bad language has existed to any greater extent than at the present time. As to its being checked among the youths in their early training, this seems to be impossible under the present conditions, when it has permeated among the parents, even in their own homes, and where the children cannot avoid learning it before they leave the cradle.

What is needed to rid the country of profane language is to start in our schools and colleges an education of clean speech, and respect for reverence, which is fast being driven out by blasphemous and filthy tongues, and to assist this the laws of the land that exist throughout the country and which were made to protect us against blasphemy and other forms of low language should be vigorously enforced.

Since my arrival in this country just one year ago one of the most striking features of the daily press has been the large amount of space devoted to the vice problem and of the many causes discussed.

It seems to me that one of the most prominent is the dance hall. A great many of them are practically the recruiting station for the army of the unfortunates.

Comparisons, we are told, are odious, but the conclusions to which they sometimes lead are anything but odious. In Dublin (my native city) there are no such public dance halls; that is, halls that can have dancing galore. How do they manage? By the formation of what they call dancing clubs.

A number of young men and women get together and draw up a winter programme. They then go among all their friends and get as many of them as possible to join. When a reasonable number are secured they make arrangements with the proprietor of a ballroom—most of the hotels have ballrooms attached—for the right of occupation for a certain night every week.

The general rule with these clubs is to give a "small and early" once a week and one big dance once a month. Expenses are paid by a weekly or monthly subscription levied on the members.

The advantages of the system are apparent. Every one knows every one else, which tends to make the affair far pleasanter than if all the participants were strangers, as is generally the case in a public hall. Secondly, it does away with the attendance of unescorted girls, probably the greatest source of danger.

I do not see why the young men and women of the cities of the United States should not adopt this plan. Upon them rather than upon their elders rests the duty of preserving the clean name of their city.

Many Evils of Public Dance Halls

By James Flynn

When a man thinks enough of a woman to ask her to be his wife—he means a companion and helpmate for life, for better or for worse. And when he marries his choice does he know what is before him, the obstacles he has to overcome? I think the marriage question is looked at too lightly, especially when people are too young and unable to realize what they are going into.

It is easy enough to get married and easy enough to stay married, if people do not form the idea that they are slaving for one another. When they once form that idea they might as well call it off, because then all faith and harmony are a thing of the past.

I was married and know whereof I speak. My husband used to be fond of shouldering a gun and going hunting occasionally. Some young women would say to me: "And you here all alone; why, I would not stand it!" Just as though that man had to hang to my apron strings all the time! I would answer them that he could do a lot worse. That's the idea most young girls and married women labor under, just as though a man had no rights left after marrying.

Yet when a wife is sick a man ought not to think too much of himself to tie on his wife's apron and get busy when they can't afford any help. I say "they" and not "he" because people when they are married ought to be equals in all things, but the man ought to be the provider and until he can make a home for a wife he ought not to think of matrimony.

PERILS OF THE SUBMARINE

LATEST TYPE OF U.S. SUBMARINE

THE recent sinking of the British submarine A3 and the drowning of every one on board again calls attention to the hazards faced in craft of this sort. Compared with the total number of under water boats built and in service today, the loss of life incident to the development of these vessels is perhaps not so great, but the circumstances surrounding death in a submarine are such as to make a deep impression.

Much has been done to make the submarine safer than it was 15 years ago, but the ingenuity of man may never succeed in making these boats as reasonably secure from sudden destruction as other vessels. The nearest approach to a submarine in strength of hull is the battleship, and the very size of the battleship makes it possible to minimize the consequences of damage by subdivision of the ship's interior, especially the space lying between the outer and the inner skins. In a submarine, however, an outer and an inner bottom, with intervening air space, would impose conditions which would seriously cripple the efficiency of the craft. In effect there are double hulls in boats of this description, but the steel skins form the bounding walls of ballast tanks into which water is admitted to increase the dead weight of the vessel and to cause them to lose just so much buoyancy. To be sure when running in surface trim the ballast tanks are a factor of safety, and if damaged in that condition the submarine is as well off as any ordinary craft of similar seaworthiness. Unfortunately all the accidents that have happened to submarines have occurred when these boats were either running submerged or were being trimmed, that is, taking water ballast aboard for under water work or when they were deficient in reserve buoyancy.

Like a Corked Bottle. Take a bottle and put some shot into it, just enough to make it float upright, and then cork it. It will never sink unless it is punctured so that entering water can expel the buoyant air. If you made a small hole in the under side of the bottle, the flask would sink deeper, but it would not go to the bottom. It would be more sluggish in response to surface disturbances, in fact seem less disposed than ever to capsize.

Suppose now on the other hand that you loosen the cork so that air may escape then the flask will all quickly and it will be only a short while before the bottle disappears. In a general way this is parallel to the function of filling the ballast tanks of a submarine, water taking the part there of shot in the bottle, and the puncture being a duplicate of the valves which a submarine opens to allow water to pass similarly upward into the ballast tanks. But not enough water from the sea would enter the tanks if air were not permitted to escape from them, and so vents are opened in the tops of the tanks, and the expelled air generally mingles with that in the free space inside of the vessel. Of course this produces a slight atmospheric pressure, but it is not objectionable.

So far the submarine is like the corked bottle, all of her hatches being sealed. Now in order to bring the under water boat down deeper in the water, so as to make her responsive to her diving rudders when she is in motion, more water is admitted to a special tank, and the cork of this tank is drawn, the air escaping, but the hatches still remain tight. As a result the little craft has still a buoyant margin which holds her at the surface; two or three hundred pounds added weight would make her sink, and it is the commanding officer's particular care to see that leakage does not destroy this reserve.

How They Dive. The diving rudders compel the craft to go under water against an impulse of only a few hundred pounds of buoyancy, and this buoyancy is always exerting a lifting force to bring the vessel to the surface when the engine stops. To increase the measure of this safety factor would mean that the diving rudders would have to be set at a greater angle to drive the boat downward and to keep her under the surface, and more of the power of the engines would be absorbed in this work, reducing the speed forward.

One gallon of sea water weighs about eight and one-half pounds, and the admission of 25 gallons would subsequently destroy the working reserve of buoyancy of most submarines. It would not take much of a hole to let in that quantity of water in a few moments. If overrun and pierced by a surface craft the submarine would be sent to the bottom like the loaded, perforated uncorked bottle. This is just what happened the other day to the A3. This brief outline of the general principle upon which an under water boat is made ready to submerge and is controlled below the surface makes it easy to understand some of the accidents that have happened to submarines.

The American navy has been fortunate so far in its experience with submarine boats, although there has been more than one narrow escape from disaster. The most thrilling of these was the case of the Porpoise, which went to the bottom in 120 feet of water off Newport in August, 1904.

Structurally she was not designed for a submergence of this character, and her ballast tanks, some of her piping and other parts of the boat leaked. For nearly three-quarters of an hour her crew struggled with the hand pump, and finally obtained a buoyancy of something like 100 pounds, which lifted the bow. At once the electric motor was started, and the boat driven to the surface. That accident made naval officers cautious, and for several years afterward American submarines were somewhat coddled. Today American under water craft are vastly improved and they are being exercised with much success.

From the very beginning service in submarines has been voluntary. No man is ordered to duty aboard one of them unless he asks for such a detail, and in this manner alone is the service recruited.

WIFELY DUTIES OF WOMEN

Mme. Maeterlinck Sets Out Ten Rules for the Guidance of Her Married Sisters.

- 1. Remember always that the true wife is the inseparable half of the only complete human unit, in which two small and imperfect individualities have become merged into a large and perfect one.
2. Each half of the wedded whole retains special functions; yours are to discern, to anticipate, to yield, to cheer, to soothe—and thus to strengthen.
3. Never trust to hirelings the essentials of your husband's physical well being; understand and frequently practice the art of selecting and preparing his food.
4. Be sure each day that his garments are whole, clean and suited to the season.
5. Constitute yourself on infallible bargainer whereby to forecast and render harmless those electrical disturbances peculiar to the married state.
6. Be to your husband's dark moods the subtle, unsuspected antidote; to his joyous mood the companion spirit of joy.
7. Save your caresses until you perceive that his dinner has been without a flaw; kisses to a hungry man are like froth to a parched tongue.
8. Your tongue for a parent; for argument use only your eyes.
9. When your husband has an attack of gout, depreciate the art of dancing.
10. If you would convince your husband that you are a better actress than Bernhardt, a better dancer than Pavlova, prove to him that you are a better cook than M. Escoffier.

Counterfeiter Gets Stiff Sentence. William Fink, a Brooklyn, N. Y., dealer in drugs, was sentenced by the New York Court of Special Sessions, to imprisonment in the penitentiary at hard labor, for four months. The charge was counterfeiting the trade-mark for Carter's Little Liver Pills, in violation of the penal law. The Carter-Medicine Company detected the counterfeiter before any quantity of the spurious goods had been placed upon the market. In sentencing Fink, Judge Deget laid special stress upon the injury done to the public when a remedy so well known as Carter's Little Liver Pills is counterfeited and put on the market. He imposed the sentence not only as the proper punishment of Fink himself, but in order to deter others from the commission of like frauds in the future.

WHY SHOULD I USE CUTICURA SOAP?

There is nothing the matter with my skin, and I thought Cuticura Soap was only for skin troubles. True, it is for skin troubles, but its great mission is to prevent skin troubles. For more than a generation its delicate emollient and prophylactic properties have rendered it the standard for this purpose, while its extreme purity and refreshing fragrance give to it all the advantages of the best of toilet soaps. It is also invaluable in keeping the hands soft and white, the hair lustrous and glossy, and the scalp free from dandruff and irritation.

While its first cost is a few cents more than that of ordinary toilet soaps, it is prepared with such care and of such materials, that it wears to a water, often outlasting several cakes of other soap, and making its use, in practice, most economical. Cuticura Soap is sold by druggists and dealers everywhere, but the truth of these claims may be demonstrated without cost by sending to "Cuticura," Dept. L, Boston, for a liberal sample cake, together with a thirty-two page book on the skin and hair.

Father Now in Second Place.

She was a prim miss of thirteen who stood before the rector of a well-known New York Episcopal church and looked him squarely in the eye. "Please repeat that fifth commandment again," he said, for he was catechizing her with regard to her knowledge of the Scriptures apropos of the coming confirmations. "Honor thy mother and thy father, that thy days may be long in the land which the Lord thy God giveth thee" was the response. "Honor thy mother and thy father," mused the rector. "Who taught you that?" "Mother," was the response. "These are certainly surfragat days upon which we have fallen," remarked the minister. "Father used to come first."

A local doctor once sent his man with a box of pills to a patient, and a hamper containing six live pullets to be left at the house of a friend. Bill Pearson In Limelight.

The following dispatch in the dailies first of the week, indicates that Charlevoix county's representation in the state legislature is alive to the desires of the big people of Michigan.

"Liquor men tonight are downcast. In what happened to the legislature today they see the victory of Governor Osborn, so far as the legislation he demands is concerned, and defeat for themselves.

The liquor men had fought woman's suffrage most vigorously. They lost overwhelmingly.

The senate had passed the anti-brewery control bill and it was up to the house to resolve itself into a smotherbund. Up to the time Representative Bill Pearson of Charlevoix doubled up his fists and gritted his teeth to start something it looked all favorable for the smother act.

The house bill has been referred to the liquor committee. Pearson is a member of this committee. So is Representative Waters of Saginaw, chairman. This committee, in spite of the protests of Pearson and Representative Straight, refused to meet to consider the bill. The senate bill came over this morning. Representative Ball, whose name appears on the bill with Senator Taylor, promptly moved that the bill be placed on the general order rather than go to the liquor committee, the normal course.

Representative Ogg of Wayne promptly objected, declaring it was not proper, and that attempts were being made to run it through hastily. It took 63 votes to place the bill on the general order and Ogg was getting on fairly with his argument when Bill Pearson arose. Now, there was a time when Bill Pearson, as sheriff of Charlevoix county, used to go out

COMPOSER FOND OF SOLITUDE

So. M. Massenet Discourages Long Visits From Friends, but Without Giving Offense.

The composer, M. Jules Massenet, has a beautiful estate at Egreville, and he does most of his work there, because in Paris he is rarely free from visitors. But Egreville is not so very far away from Paris, and occasionally his friends go out there and with the best intentions in the world disturb Jules Massenet at his work.

Massenet, however, never lets his friends disturb him very long. He has a neat way of suggesting their departure. He receives them cordially and in answer to the inevitable phrase of admiration for his house and grounds he always says exactly the same thing. "Yes," says M. Massenet, "the principal charm of this place is that the railway communications are so bad. The only decent train to get you out here brings you here at 1 o'clock, and to get back to Paris with anything like comfort you will have to leave again at 2 o'clock."

But one day a friend who had taken a country house ten or twelve miles away arrived on a visit. He and his son had come on bicycles. "My dear friend," said Massenet, "in these days of the motor car bicycling is horribly dangerous. I wish you would promise me to give it up."

Way to Remove Tattoo Marks.

Once tattooed, always tattooed, was formerly the rule, but a French army surgeon, Dr. Tranchant, has discovered a method of removing tattoo marks, whether made with India ink or lampblack. According to La Nature, the process consists of first rubbing the skin until a thin layer of the surface is worn away, then applying a mixture of lime, slacked just before use, and powdered phosphorus. The tattooed part having been coated with this paste, a piece of gauze is laid over it, covered with a bandage. The dressing is removed after 48 hours. The scab is allowed to dry in the air, and comes away in about a fortnight, without leaving a scar. If any trace of the tattooing then remains, the treatment is repeated. Dr. Tranchant claims to have applied this treatment in a great many cases with perfect success.

looking for a fight. The bigger the man and the more of them, the better Bill liked it and it was said Bill "could heck a stack of wild cats single-handed."

When Bill arose in his place, a rather uncommon occurrence, it was manifest he had his fighting clothes on.

"You needn't talk to me about fair play on this liquor bill," said Bill. "That all any of us want. We haven't been able to get it. We have a bill in our committee. The chairman of that committee has refused to call the committee together. He promised us he would consider the bill last night. I was here waiting for the meeting but there was none. They told me we would have a meeting this morning at 8:00 o'clock. I was here at that time. They refused to have a meeting. Now, I tell you that is not fair play, and I tell you further it is time that 'kind of business' was cut out. This bill ought to be considered by this house. I am here to say it is going to be if I have to carry the chairman of this committee into that committee room. You can bet your life on that, and you can further bet your life he'll go there when I say so."

Bill was greeted with wild cheers. Representative Ogg complained that this was not fair play to the chairman of the committee, who, he said, was not present.

"Don't you worry about him," said Bill, again rising. "He's right here, where I want him." And he pointed to Representative Waters, sitting close at hand.

The question of placing the bill on the general order was put. It required 63 votes to do the business. Pearson had just 63 votes, and the house must consider the bill now. There is no chance for smoldering it.

The test was also most important, for it is generally much more difficult to practically take a bill away from the committee than it is to pass it.

Above bill was passed by the House on Wednesday and is now up to the Governor for signature.

An Oregon Woman's Conscience.

Confessing that she had told a train ticket agent her child was under five years of age, when in fact she was over six years old, and under such pretence succeeded in securing free transportation for her, a woman appeared at a local Southern Pacific ticket office this morning and tendered the agent $3. She said the incident occurred about three years ago, and that she had since been troubled by her conscience.

"I do not think I could right myself with God until I had paid the debt," declared the woman as she hastened from the ticket office.

The woman refused to give her name. Southern Pacific officials here declare that today's donation is the first "conscience" money ever received at this office.—Roseburg correspondent, Portland, Oregonian.

A Modern Bookshop Now.

At Chiswick is a little, old-fashioned bookshop which has lately changed proprietorship and is being "modernized," one-half now given up to stationery and the old books being "cleared," no reasonable offer refused. The writer thought it a likely place to pick up a good edition of Pepy's Diary, and asked the dapper little proprietor if he had one. "No, sir, but we have Lett's." "Oh, I can assure you they are vastly superior to the old-fashioned sort." And as the writer fled he heard shouts of "Insurance coupon" and "Wages table" hurled after him.—London Chronicle.

John A. Barton, Supt. of Williams Bros. Pickle Co. of Detroit, was an East Jordan visitor this week, going over the matter of a cucumber salting station in this city. A site was selected for the proposed station. Already our Board of Trade has contracted some acreage and has considerable more promised. Blank contracts may be secured at either of our local banks, at Loveday's office or Stroebel Bros. Store. The time for making these contracts is limited and we urge everyone who can do so to contract for at least an acre. The Company offers a good proposition to the grower.

The Charlevoix Courier is authority for the following: After between 15 and 16 years, an East Jordan resident, at that time probably a young man, has become conscious stricken and wants to pay for a pair of articles he stole from a merchant in that city, who later removed to Charlevoix. The letter was received by the son of the merchant in question, and is as follows: "East Jordan, Feb. 23. I am dropping you a few lines this morning to see if you are still in Charlevoix. Quite a number of years ago, when you kept store in East Jordan, I stole a small pair of articles from your store, valued at either $1.00 or $1.25. HOW WEAK WOMEN
May Be Made Strong at Small Expense and No Risk

There are hundreds of women in this vicinity, weak, thin, run-down, tired out and nervous. Such women need Vinol just as much as did Mrs. Jane Pepper, of 2307 Howard street, San Francisco, Cal., who says:

"I have used Vinol for some time with particularly gratifying results. I was run down, weak and debilitated, and my appetite was gone. After taking several bottles of Vinol I found my condition greatly improved, and do not hesitate to recommend Vinol to anyone similarly affected."

Vinol is not a secret nostrum, but a delicious cod liver and iron tonic, without oil, which will create an appetite, tone up the digestive organs, make pure blood and create strength. Try a bottle of Vinol with the understanding that your money will be returned if it does not help you.

ELECTRIC HOTEL FOR PARIS

Current Will Do Everything in the Proposed Structure Except Pay Guest's Bill.

The interesting news comes from Paris that a hotel will be built there in which all the domestic service will be performed by electricity. If the promoters of the scheme keep their promises, everything will be done by electricity except the guests' payment of their bills. Even then they can give the cashier a shock by refusing to pay.

There will be no waiters, no bell boys, no coat boys, no chambermaids, and consequently no tips. If a guest arrives home at 3 a. m. all he will have to do is to touch a button, which will turn an electric sun, and then he can say to his wife:

"My dear, you're really getting lazy. Look at me. I'm up and dressed!"

If he feels that he needs a cocktail, he can touch another button. One touch brings a martini, two whiskey, three a Manhattan, four vermouth, five an ambulance. In answer, a dumb waiter rises through the floor either to bring the desired "bracer," or, when need be, to lower the guest to the ambulance.

The hotel promoters lay much stress on the fact that all their waiters are dumb. In place of the ordinary Swiss who only stand and wait, instead of running and serving, there will be automata run by electricity and guaranteed not to spill soup down your back or creamed asparagus in your lap. The dining table will be decorated with flowers raised by intensive electrical culture in both winter and summer, for there will be no seasons in this hotel; push a button and you're warmer than when you see another fellow walking with the "only dear one on earth," push another button and you're colder than when the other fellow frigidly asks, "What the devil are you doing here?"

One of the features of the hotel will be an electric orchestra, in which all kinds of stringed instruments will appear to play of their own accord.

The inventor, a Frenchman named Georgia Knap, who has spent years experimenting with the various devices, asserts that they are now all absolutely perfect, and has formed a company under the name "Societe des Hotels Electriques" for the purpose of building electric hotels in every big city throughout the world.—New York World.

Poor Day for Trade.

"Rainy day trade ain't what it was before that moving picture show started up next door," said the umbrella dealer sadly. "Used to be when people got caught in the rain they came in and bought umbrellas; now when they get caught and the Barker for the show sees 'em heading for my door he says—"

"Step right in 'till it stops raining. Costs you less to see the show than to buy an umbrella, and, by cricky, if that ain't what most of 'em do."

Defective Education.

"There must be a bad way of teaching the elementary branches in this city."

"What makes you think that?"

"Because this election request shows that so many of the election officials can't count."

Suspicion.

"Didn't your queer friend tell you he had taken a degree in several cities?"

"Yes."

"Then I'll bet it was the third degree."

THE SHEPHERD BOY'S FAITH

by O. HENRY

FOR five days David, the shepherd boy of Verney, traveled the road to Paris, sleeping upon nature's balsamic beds or in peasants' ricks, eating of their black, hospitable bread, drinking from streams or the willing cup of the goat herd.

At length he crossed a great bridge and set his foot within the smiling city that crushed or crowned more poets than all the rest of the world. His breath came quickly as Paris sang to him in a little undertone her vital chant of greeting—the hum of voice and the foot and wheel.

High up under the eaves of an old house in the Rue Conté, David paid lodging, and sat himself in a wooden chair, to his poems. The street, once sheltering citizens of import and consequence, was now given over to those who ever follow in the wake of decline.

One afternoon he was returning from a foraging trip to the lower world, with bread and curds and a bottle of thin wine. Half way up his dark stairway he met—or rather came upon, for she rested on the stair—a young woman of a beauty that should back even the justice of a poet's imagination. A loose, light cloak, flung open, showed a rich gown beneath. His eyes changed swiftly and every little shade of thought. Within one moment they would be found and artless like a child's; and long and cozening like a gypsy's. One hand raised her gown, unfastening a little shoe, high-heeled, with its ribbons dangling. So heavenly she was, so unfitted to stoop, so qualified to charm and command!

Ab, would monsieur pardon that she occupied the stairway, but the shoe!—the naughty shoe! Alas! it would not remain tied. Ah! if monsieur would be so gracious!

The poet's fingers trembled as he tied the contrary ribbons. Then he would have fled from the danger of her presence, but the eyes grew long and cozening, like a gypsy's, and held him. He leaned against the balustrade, clutching his bottle of sour wine.

"You have been so good," she said, smiling. "Does monsieur, perhaps, live in the house?"

"Yes, madame. I—I think so, madame."

"Perhaps in the third story, then?"

"No, madame; higher up."

The lady fluttered her fingers with the least possible gesture of impatience.

"Pardon. Certainly I am not discreet in asking. Monsieur will forgive me? It is surely not becoming that I should inquire where he lodges."

"Madame, do not say so. I live in the—"

"No, no, no; do not tell me. Now I see that I erred. But I cannot lose the interest I feel in this house and all that is in it. Once it was my home. Often I come here to dream of those happy days again. Will you let that be my excuse?"

"Let me tell you, then, for you need no excuse," stammered the poet. "I live in the top floor—the small room where the stairs turn."

"In the front room?" asked the lady, smiling her head sidewise.

"In the rear, madame."

The lady sighed as if with relief. "I will detain you no longer, then, monsieur," she said, employing the round and artless eye. "Take good care of my house. Alas! only the memories of it are mine now. Adieu, and accept my thanks for your courtesy."

She was gone, leaving but a smile and a trace of sweet perfume. David climbed the stairs as one in slumber. "Poet he must have been," for Yvonne was forgotten; this fine, new loveliness held him with its freshness and grace. The subtle perfume about her filled him with strange emotions.

On a certain night three persons were gathered about a table in a room on the third floor of the same house. Three chairs and the table and a lighted candle upon it was all the furniture. One of the persons was a huge man dressed in black. His expression was one of sneering pride.

This man struck the table with his fist and said, with controlled violence:

"Tonight, tonight as he goes to midnight mass, I am tired of the plotting that gets nowhere. I am sick of signals and ciphers and secret meetings and such baragouin. Let us be honest traitors. If France is to be rid of him, let us kill him in the open, and not hunt with snares and traps. Tonight, I say, I hack my words. My hand will do the deed. Tonight as he goes to mass."

The lady turned upon him a cordial look. Woman, however wedded to plots, must ever thus bow to rash courage. The big man stroked his upturned mustache.

"Dear captain," he said, in a great voice, softened by habit, "this time I agree with you. Nothing is to be gained by waiting. Enough of the palace guards belong to us to make the endeavor a safe one."

"Tonight," repeated Captain Des-

"I would be a poet, sire."

rolls, again striking the table. "You have heard me, marquis; my hand will do the deed."

"But now," said the huge man, softly, "comes a question. Word must be sent to our partisans in the palace, and a signal agreed upon. Our staunchest men must accompany the royal carriage. At this hour what messenger can penetrate so far as the south doorway? Ribout is stationed there; once a message is placed in his hands all will go well."

"I will send the message," said the lady.

"You, countess?" said the marquis, raising his eyebrows. "Your devotion is great, we know, but—"

"Listen!" exclaimed the lady, rising and resting her hands upon the table; "in a garret of this house lives a youth from the provinces as guileless and tender as the lambs he tended there. I have met him twice or thrice upon the stairs. I questioned him, fearing that he might dwell too near the room in which we are accustomed to meet. He is mine, if I will. He writes poems in his garret, and I think he dreams of me. He will do what I say. He shall take the message to the palace."

The marquis rose from his chair and bowed. "You did not permit me to finish my sentence, countess," he said. "I would have said: 'Your devotion is great, but your wit and charm are infinitely greater.'"

While the conspirators were thus engaged, David was polishing some lines addressed to his amorette's desecrated. He heard a timorous knock at his door, and opened it, with a great throb, to behold her there, panting as one in straits, with eyes wide open and artless, like a child's.

"Monsieur," she breathed, "I come to you in distress. I believe you to be good and true, and I know of no other help. How I flew through the streets among the swaggering men! Monsieur, my mother is dying. My uncle is a captain of guards in the palace of the king. Some one must fly to bring him. May I hope—"

"Mademoiselle," interrupted David, his eyes shining with the desire to do her service, "your hopes shall be my wings. Tell me how I may reach him."

The lady thrust a sealed paper into his hand.

"Go to the south gate—the south gate, mind—and say to the guards there: 'The falcon has left his nest.' They will pass you, and you will go to the south entrance to the palace. Repeat the words, and give this letter to the man who will reply: 'Let him strike when he will.' This is the password, monsieur, entrusted to me by my uncle, for now when the country is disturbed and men plot against the king's life, no one without it can gain entrance to the palace grounds after nightfall. If you will, monsieur, take him this letter so that my mother may see him before she closes her eyes."

"Give it me," said David, eagerly. "But shall I let you return home through the streets alone so late? I—"

"No, no—fly. Each moment is like a precious jewel. Some time," said the lady, with eyes long and cozening, like a gypsy's, "I will try to thank you for your goodness."

The poet thrust the letter into his breast and bounded down the stairway. The lady, when he was gone, returned to the room below.

The eloquent eyebrows of the marquis interrogated her.

"He is gone," she said, "as fleet and stupid as one of his own sheep; to deliver it."

The table shook again from the batter of Captain Desroches' fist. "Sacred name!" he cried; "I have left my pistols behind! I can trust no others."

"Take this," said the marquis, drawing from beneath his cloak a shining, great weapon, ornamented with carved silver. "There are none truer. But guard it closely, for it bears my arms and crest, and already I am suspected. Me, I must put many leagues between myself and Paris this night. Tomorrow must find me in my chateau. Adieu, dear countess."

David sped. At the south gate of the king's residence a halberd laid to his breast, but he turned its point with the words: "The falcon has left his nest."

"Pass, brother," said the guard, "and go quickly."

On the south steps of the palace they moved to seize him, but again the mot de passe charmed the watchers. One among them stepped forward and began: "Let him strike—," but a flurry among the guards told of a surprise. A man of keen look and soldierly stride suddenly pressed through them and seized the letter which David held in his hand. "Come with me," he said, and led him inside the great hall. Then he tore open the letter and read it. He beckoned to a man uniformed as an officer of musketeers, who was passing.

"Captain Tetiveau, you will have the guards at the south entrance and the south gate arrested and confined. Place men known to be loyal in their places." To David he said: "Come with me."

He conducted him through a corridor and an anteroom into a spacious chamber, where a melancholy man, somberly dressed, sat brooding in a great leather-covered chair. To that man he said:

"Sire, I have told you that the palace is as full of traitors and spies as a sewer is of rats. You have thought, sire, that it was my fancy. This man penetrated to your very door by their connivance. He bore a letter which I have intercepted. I have brought him here that your majesty may no longer think my zeal excessive."

"I will question him," said the king, stirring in his chair. He looked at David with heavy eyes dulled by an opaque film. The poet bent his knee.

"From where do you come?" asked the king.

"From the village of Verney, in the province of Eure-et-Loir, sire."

"What do you follow in Paris?"

"I—I would be a poet, sire."

"What did you do in Verney?"

"I minded my father's flocks of sheep."

The king stirred again, and the film lifted from his eyes.

"Ah! in the fields?"

"Yes, sire."

"You lived in the fields; you went out in the cool of the morning and lay among the hedges in the grass. The flocks distributed themselves upon the hillside; you drank of the living stream; you ate your sweet, brown bread in the shade, and you listened, doubtless, to the blackbirds piping in the grove. Is not that so, shepherd?"

"It is, sire," answered David, with a sigh, "and to the bees at the flowers, and, maybe, to the grape gatherers singing on the hill."

"Yes, yes," said the king, impatiently; "maybe to them; but surely to the blackbirds. They whistled often, in the grove, did they not?"

express their song in some verses that I have written.

"If it please your majesty," interrupted a harsh voice, "I will ask a question or two of this rhymer."

"The loyalty," said the king, "of the Duke D'Anmale is too well proven to give offense." He sank into his chair, and the film came again over his eyes.

"First," said the duke, "I will read you the letter he brought."

"Tonight is the anniversary of the duchess's death. If he goes, as is his custom, to midnight mass to pray for the soul of his son, the falcon will strike, at the corner of the Rue Esplanade. If this be his intention, set a red light in the upper room at the southwest corner of the palace, that the falcon may take heed."

"Peasant," said the duke, sternly, "you have heard these words. Who gave you this message to bring?"

"My lord duke," said David, sincerely, "I will tell you. A lady gave it me. She said her mother was ill, and that this writing would fetch her uncle to her bedside. I do not know the meaning of the letter, but I will swear that she is beautiful and good."

"Describe the woman," commanded the duke, "and how came you to come to be her dupa?"

"Describe her," said David, with a tender smile. "You would command words to perform miracles. Well, she is made of sunshine and deep shade. She is slender, like the alders, and moves with their grace. Her eyes change while you gaze into them; now round, and then half shut as the sun peeps between two clouds. When she comes, heaven is all about her; when she leaves, there is chaos and a scent of bay-thorne blossoms. She came to me in the Rue Conté, No. 29."

"It is the house," said the duke, turning to the king, "that we have been watching. Thanks to the poet's tongue, we have a picture of the infamous Countess Quebedaux."

"Sire and my lord duke," said David, earnestly, "I hope my poor words have done no injustice. I have looked into that lady's eyes. I will stake my life that she is an angel, letter or no letter."

The duke looked at him steadily. "I will put you to the proof," he said, slowly. "Dressed as the king, you shall, yourself, attend mass in his carriage at midnight. Do you accept the test?"

David smiled. "I have looked into her eyes," he said. "I had my proof there. Take yours how you will."

Half an hour before 12 the Duke D'Anmale, with his own hands, set a red lamp in a southwest window of the palace. At ten minutes to the hour, David, leaning on his arm, dressed as the king, from top to toe, with his head bowed in his cloak, walked slowly from the royal apartments to the waiting carriage. The duke assisted him inside, and closed the door. The carriage whirled away along its route to the cathedral.

On the qui vive in a house at the corner of the Rue Esplanade was Captain Tetreau with 20 men, ready to pounce upon the conspirators when they should appear.

But it seemed that, for some reason, the plotters had slightly altered their plans. When the royal carriage had reached the Rue Christopher, one square nearer than the Rue Esplanade, from it burst Captain Desroches, with his band of would-be regicides, and assailed the equipage. The guards upon the carriage, though surprised at the premature attack, descended and fought valiantly. The noise of conflict attracted the force of Captain Tetreau, and they came pelting down the street to the rescue. But in the meantime the desperate Desroches had torn open the door of the king's carriage, thrust his weapon against the body of the dark figure inside, and fired.

Now, with loyal reinforcements at hand, the street rang with cries and the rasp of steel, but the frightened horses had dashed away. Upon the cushions lay the dead body of the poor mock king and poet, slain by a ball from the pistol of Monsieur, the Marquis de Beaupertuya.

Backache is only one of many symptoms which some women endure through weakness or displacement of the womanly organs. Mrs. Lizzie White of Memphis, Tenn., wrote Dr. R. V. SERIAL STORY

THE GIRL from HIS TOWN

By MARIE VAN WORST
Illustrations by M. C. KETTNER

(Copyright, 1910, by The Bobbs-Merrill Co.)
19 SYNOPSIS.

Dan Blair, the 22-year-old son of the fifty-million-dollar copper king of Blairtown, Mont., is a guest at the English home of Lady Galorey. Dan's father had been courteous to Lord Galorey during his visit to the United States, and the courtesy is now being returned to the young man. The youth has an ideal girl in his mind. He meets Lily, Duchess of Breakwater, a beautiful widow, who is attracted by his immense fortune and takes a liking to her. When Dan was a boy, a girl sang a solo at a church, and he had never forgotten her. The Galoreys, Lily and Dan attend a London theater where one Letty Lane is the star. Dan recognizes her as the girl from his town, and goes behind the scenes to introduce himself and she remembers him. He learns that Prince Pontotowick is a solo and about to leave. Lord Galorey and a friend named Buggles determine to protect the westerner from Lily and other fortune hunters. Young Blair goes to see Lily, he can talk of nothing but Letty and this angers the Duchess. The westerner finds Letty in from Paris, but she refuses and Buggles and Dan write her to supper. She asks Dan to build a home for disappointed theatrical people. Dan visits Lily, for the title forgetting Letty, and later announces his engagement to the duchess. Letty refuses to sing for an entertainment given by Lily. Galorey tells Dan that all Lily cares for is his money, and it is disclosed that he and the duchess have been mutually in love for years. Letty sings at an anticostume function.

Dan felt his heart grow cold. If she had awakened him when he was a little boy, she thrilled him now; he did leave wept. Lady Calworn did wipe tears away. When the last note of the accompaniment had ended, Dan's friend at his side said: "How utterly ravishing! What a beautiful, lovely creature!"

He scarcely answered. He was making his way to Letty Lane, and he wrung her hand, murmuring, "Oh, you're great, you're great!" And the pleasure on his face repaid her over and over again. "Come, I want you to meet the Duchess of Breakwater, and some other friends of mine."

As he let her little cold hand fall and turned about the room, as by magic had cleared. The prime minister had arrived late and was in the other room. The refreshments were also being served. There was no one to meet Letty Lane, except for several young men who came up eagerly and asked to be presented, Gordon Galorey among them.

"Where's Lily?" Dan asked him; "I want her to meet Miss Lane."

"In the conservatory with the prime minister," and Galorey looked meaningly at Dan, as much as to say, "Now don't be an utter fool."

But Letty Lane herself saved the situation. She shook hands with the utmost cordiality and sweetness with the men who had been presented to her, and asked Dan to take her to her motor. "He waited for her at the door and she came down wrapped around as usual in her filmy scarf."

"Are you better?" he asked eagerly. "You look awfully stunning, and I don't think I can ever thank you enough."

She assured him that she was "all right," and that she had a "lovely new role to learn and that it was coming on next month." He helped her in and she seemed to fill the motor like a basket of fresh white flowers. Again he repeated, as he held the door open:

"I can't thank you enough; you were a great success."

She smiled wickedly, and couldn't resist:

"Especially with the women."

Dan's face flushed; he was already deeply hurt for her, and her words showed him that the insult had gone home.

"Where are you going now?"

"Right to the Savoy."

Without another word, hatless as he was, he got into the motor and closed the door.

"I'm going to take you home," he informed her quietly, "and there's no use in looking at me like that either! When I'm set on a thing I get it!"

with leaves of smilax, the open piano with its scattered music the dark rosewood that had served for a reg for Letty Lane's white hand. Galorey and the duchess turned their backs on the music-room, and went into a small conservatory looking out over the park.

"He's nothing but a cowboy," the lady exclaimed. "He must be quite mad, going off bareheaded through London with an actress."

"He's spoiled," Lord Galorey said peacefully. "She carried a bunch of orchids Dan had given her, and regarded them absently. 'I've made him angry, and he's taking this way of exhibiting his spleen.'"

Galorey said cheerfully: "Oh, Dan's got lots of spirit."

Looking up from the contemplation of her flowers to her friend, the duchess murmured with a charming smile: "I don't hit it off very well with Americans, Gordon."

His color rising, Galorey returned: "I think you'll have to let Dan go, Lily!"

For a second she thought so herself, and they both started when the voice of the young man himself was heard in the next room.

"Good-by, I'll let you make your peace, Lily," and Gordon passed Dan in the drawing-room in leaving, and thought the boy's face was a study.

The duchess held out her hand to Dan as he came across the room.

"Come here," she called agreeably. "Every one has gone, thank heaven! I've been waiting for you for an age. Let's talk it all over."

"Just what I've come back to do."

There had been royalty at the musicale, and the hostess spoke of her guests and their approval, mentioning one by one the names of the great. It might have impressed the ear of a man more snob than was the Montana copper king's son. "I did so want you to meet the Bishop of London," she said. "But nobody could find you."

quietly. "She wouldn't touch a cent." The duchess exclaimed in horror: "Then she did mind."

And he turned slowly: "She's eaten and drunk with kings, and if the king hadn't gone so early you can bet he would have set the fashion differently. Let's drop the question. She's sent you back your check, and I guess you're quits."

With a sharp note in her voice she said: "I hope it won't be in the papers that you drove bareheaded back to the hotel with her. Don't forget that we are dining with the Galoreys, and it's past seven."

After Dan had left her, the duchess glanced over the dismantled room which the servants were already restoring to order. She was not at ease and not at peace, but there was something else besides her tiff with Dan that absorbed her, and that was Galorey. She couldn't quite shake him off. He was beginning to be imperious in his demands on her; and, in spite of her cupid and her debts, in spite of the precarious position in which she found herself with Dan, she could not break with Galorey yet. She went upstairs humming under her breath the ballad Letty Lane had sung in the music room:

"And long may his lady look from the castle wall."

CHAPTER XIX.

Dan Awakes.

The next night Dan, magnetically drawn down the Strand to the Galety, arrived just before the close of the last act, slipped in, and sat far back watching Letty Lane close her part.

After hearing her sing as she had the afternoon before in the worldly group, it was curious to see her before the public in her flashing dress and to realize how much she was a thing of the people. Tonight she was a completely personal element to Dan. He could never think of her again as he had hitherto. The sharp drive through the town that afternoon in her motor had made a change in his feelings. He had been hurt for her, with anger at the duchess of Breakwater's rudeness, and from the first he had always known that there was in him a hot championship for the actress. Tonight, whenever the man who sang with her put his arms around her, danced with her, held her, it was an offense to Dan Blair; it had angered him before, but tonight it did more. One by one everything faded out of his foreground but the brilliant little figure with her golden hair, her lovely face, her beautiful graceful body, and in her last gesture on the stage before the curtain went down, she seemed to Blair to call him and distinctly to make an appeal to him:

"You might rest your weary feet if you came to Mandalay."

Well, there was nothing weary about the young, live, vigorous American, as, standing there in his dark edge of the theater, his hands in his pockets, his bright face fixed toward the stage, he watched the slow falling of the curtain on the musical drama. Dan realized how full of vigor he was; he felt strong and capable, indeed a feeling of power often came to him delightfully, but it had never been needed for him to exert his forces, he had never had need to show his mettle. Now he felt at those words:

"You might rest your weary feet"

how, with all his heart, he longed that the dancer should rest those lovely tired little feet of hers, far away from any call of the public, far away on some lovely shore which the hymn tune called the coral strand. As he gazed at her mobile, sensitive face, whose eyes had seen the world, and whose lips—Dan's thoughts changed here with a great pang, and the close of all his meditations was: "Gosh, she ought to rest!"

It boasts a young man wonderfully in the estimation of a girl if his front name is the same as that of the hero in a romantic novel or play.

No Chance About It. "I'm awfully sorry it happened," apologized the abject young man, after the stolen kiss. "Happened!" she exclaims. "Happened! That is worse than the kiss! If you didn't have it in mind when you asked me to stroll away back here in this quiet corner of the conservatory I shall be offended, after all."—Judge.

Romance of the Rail. It was on a Pullman car. The man who traveled for gents' furnishings had succeeded in working up a conversation with the lonesome-looking young woman. He leaned over her and breathed in her ear:

"Peaches, I'm taking a little trip to New York. Don't you want to go along?" "Sir," she said, angrily, "you are going too far!" But she didn't object to accompany him as far as Schenectady.

FROM THE NORTH COUNTRY Where the Winters Are Cold and the Snows Deep.

Writing from the vicinity David Harum made famous, a man says that he was an habitual coffee drinker, and, although he knew it was doing him harm, was too obstinate to give it up, till all at once he went to pieces with nervousness and, insomnia, loss of appetite, weakness, and a generally used-up feeling, which practically unfitted him for his arduous occupation, and kept him on a couch at home when his duty did not call him out.

"While in this condition Grape-Nuts food was suggested to me, and I began to use it. Although it was in the middle of winter, and the thermometer was often below zero, almost my entire living for about six weeks of severe exposure was on Grape-Nuts food with a little bread and butter and a cup of hot water, till I was wise enough to make Postum my table beverage.

"After the first two weeks I began to feel better and during the whole winter I never lost a trip on my mail route, frequently being on the road 7 or 8 hours at a time.

"The constant marvel to me was how a person could do the amount of work and endure the fatigue and hardship as I did, on so small an amount of food. But I found my new rations so perfectly satisfactory that I have continued them—using both Postum and Grape-Nuts at every meal, and often they comprise my entire meal.

"All my nervousness, irritability and insomnia have disappeared and healthy, natural sleep has come back to me. But what has been perhaps the greatest surprise to me is the fact that with the benefit to my general health has come a remarkable improvement in my eye-sight.

"If a good appetite, good digestion, good eye-sight, strong nerves and an active brain are to be desired, I can say from my own experience, use Grape-Nuts and Postum." Name given by Postum Co., Battle Creek, Mich.

LIFE IS GROWING LONGER

Present Rate of Increase is Found to be Greater Than Ever Before.

Life is not growing shorter, but Dr. O. H. Howe, a Massachusetts physician, finds that the world's statistics indicate a steady lengthening for 350 years, with a present rate of increase greater than ever before. Records for Geneva show an average increase in the average age of all deaths from 21.2 years in the sixteenth century to 39.7 years in the nineteenth. In Massachusetts life is now lengthening about fourteen years in a century, the average length at the time being about forty-five years; in Europe the increase per century is about seventeen years, and in Prussia, the land of medical discovery and its application, about twenty-seven years. In India, which has neglected medical science, the life span has remained stationary at only about twenty-five years. The lengthening of life in Massachusetts has been promoted by the diminution of infant mortality, by the almost complete disappearance of small-pox and by the lessening of the mortality from scarlet fever and especially from diphtheria to a small fraction of what it was a few years ago. Continued study of disease germs, of which the number has increased in twenty-five years from only two to between twenty and thirty now known, will further lengthen life. Modern conditions, however, partially offset the beneficent work of medicine, and Massachusetts statistics show five times as many deaths from heart disease in 1895 as in 1850, with Bright's disease and other kidney disorders and cancer more than doubled.

WAGES IN UNITED STATES

Large Proportion of American Workmen Unable to Maintain Efficient Standard of Living.

An estimate was made some time ago that a New York family consisting of a man, wife and three children under fourteen, could maintain a normal standard of living on an annual income of $900. Then the question arose as to the number of families whose income equaled that sum.

Scott Nearing, the economic writer of the University of Pennsylvania, studied the question for many months and in a book, "Wages in the United States," which was published recently, he states the conclusion that a large proportion of American workmen are unable to maintain an efficient standard of living. Three-fourths of the adult men and nineteen-twentieths of the adult women, he says, actually earn less than $800 a year, or to give his conclusions more in detail, one-half of the men are earning less than $500 a year, three-fourths less than $600, nine-tenths less than $800, while less than ten per cent. receive more than that figure. Of the women, one-fifth earn less than $200 annually, and three-fifths less than $325, while only one-twentieth earn more than $600.

To arrive at these figures Doctor Nearing takes up various state wage statistics: Massachusetts, New Jersey, Kansas, Michigan, New Hampshire, Rhode Island and Pennsylvania are considered, while special wage reports from Wisconsin and Illinois are included.
