No. 17

ANNOUNCEMENT OF NEW BULLETINS

To the Editor: Your co-operation in calling the attention of your readers to the bulletins mentioned below will be appreciated. These bulletins are on special topics and are, therefore not sent to the general Experiment Station mailing list. You can aid the people of your community and the Experiment Station very greatly by placing this information in the hands of those most interested. R. S. Shaw, Director.

Small Fruit Culture

The Michigan Experiment Station has just issued a bulletin on "Small Fruit Culture." This bulletin gives, in a brief form, complete and practical information on the culture of strawberries, raspberries, blackberries, dewberries, currants and gooseberries. Specific directions are given concerning planting, fertilizing, cultivation, pruning, control of insect pests, selections of varieties, etc. This Special Bulletin No. 59 may be secured by writing to Director R. S. Shaw, East Lansing, Michigan.

Directions for Spraying Fruit Trees

The Michigan Experiment Station now has the 1913 Spraying Bulletin ready for distribution. It gives in a clear, plain way the times to spray fruit trees, berry bushes and potatoes; the materials to use, how to prepare them at home or use commercial kinds. You can secure a copy free by sending a request to Director Shaw.

Celery Culture in Michigan

The subject of "Celery Culture in Michigan" is very completely and practically covered in the new Special Bulletin No. 60 just issued by the Michigan Experiment Station. The rich muck lands and comparatively cool, moist summers make Michigan conditions almost ideal for producing this crop. This bulletin tells what soils are adapted to celery; what fertilizers to use; when to plant and transplant; how to blanch the plants; and also gives information on varieties, diseases, storing, marketing, etc. This bulletin may be secured free from Director Shaw.

Growing Cucumbers for Profit

Farmers located near pickling stations will be interested to know that the Michigan Experiment Station has issued a new bulletin on growing cucumbers on a commercial scale. The information in this bulletin is given by a man who has had years of experience in the business and will be valuable to any one engaged in cucumber growing. A copy may be obtained by writing to Director Shaw.

Making of Laws

Some valuable suggestions and practical information on the subject of "Making a Law" are contained in a new circular just issued by the Michigan Experiment Station. This Circular No. 20 may be secured by writing to Director Shaw.

ARBOR AND BIRD DAY

A Proclamation Issued by the Governor.

The tremendous commercial value of forests is fast coming to be appreciated. Effort is being made throughout the United States to conserve what remains and so far as possible, reforest large tracts of territory. Trees have a value other than commercial. They are friends to man and beast. Without friends man is a forlorn creature. Every choice tree that is planted not only blesses this generation, but graciously blesses coming generations.

Birds too have an economic value in the distribution of plant life and in the destruction of harmful insects. They also have a higher value. Literature abounds in allusions to birds, their nests, songs, food, flight, migrations, plumage and habits. On account of their beauty countless numbers of our winged friends have been killed to meet the ruthless demands of fashion. May the fathers and mothers and their children of today use their best efforts to preserve and perpetuate the lives of our useful and beautiful birds. Love for birds is akin to love for man.

Therefore, I, Woodbridge N. Ferris, Governor of the State of Michigan, do hereby designate Friday, May 9th, A. D. 1913, as Arbor and Bird Day, and do request that this day be observed by all schools, public and private, and other educational institutions by the planting of trees for beautifying school grounds and parks, and by conducting suitable exercises for promoting the spirit of protection to trees and birds.

Given under my hand and the Great Seal of the State, this first day of April, in the year of our Lord, one thousand nine hundred and thirteen, and of the Commonwealth the seventy-seventh.

WOODBRIDGE N. FERRIS
By the Governor,
FREDERICK C. MARTINDALE,
Secretary of State.

What Kind of Women Do Women Admire?

By MAY ALDEN WARD

It is very difficult to answer in the abstract the question, "What kind of women do women like?" We may, however, have certain illustrations of the qualities that endear them to each other if we recall some of the women of our own day who have received in fullest measure the love and loyalty of their own sex. If we can analyze in some degree their power of winning and holding hearts, it may help to answer the question we have before us.

The name that comes first to the mind in this connection is that of one who for many years has reigned as a queen in the hearts of American women—Mrs. Julia Ward Howe. Why is it that when she enters a room other women rise instantly in recognition of her presence? It matters not whether it is a little group in a parlor or an audience of 3,000. No signal is given, no word spoken; it is simply an instinctive, spontaneous tribute. It is not because of her genius, however great that may be, that she receives this homage. It is not because she stirred the heart of the nation with her "Battle Hymn." It is not for what she has done that Mrs. Howe is so beloved, but for what she is. It is for her personality. It is for the courage which enables her to espouse many an unpopular cause; the enthusiasm and faith which have led her to further every movement for the advancement of woman; the broad sympathies which have caused her to give herself so lavishly in many directions; the sincerity, the nobility which are seen in every line of her countenance and felt in every word she utters. These are the secrets of her power.

Another name that is cherished in the hearts of American women is that of Alice Freeman Palmer. The love for her has been quickened and strengthened by the wonderful account of her life and personality which her husband has given us. Why was it that when she died thousands of women mourned as at the loss of a personal friend? What was it that made her a factor in the lives of so many others? Why was her influence so great even with those who knew her but slightly?

We find in her the same qualities as in Mrs. Howe. Courage she had of the highest kind. The courage which enabled the woman of twenty-six to accept the presidency of Wellesley college and to carry out new theories of education made her strong for all the responsibilities that came to her. She had enthusiasm, without which little of value is accomplished. Hers was the hopeful, contagious enthusiasm which incites others to action. She had a rare degree of faith—faith in the power that governs the world, faith in the world itself. She had faith in womanhood, that is to say, faith in human nature. She not only believed in woman in general, but also in individual women. There seemed to be no room in her nature for suspicion or distrust.

Mrs. Howe and Mrs. Palmer have had one other trait in common which should be mentioned. We find in both a simplicity, a frank humaneness—we may almost call it an every-day-ness—that has helped to make them lovable. They have not been burdened with their own greatness. We have not stood aside and viewed them on pedestals; we have not worshipped them as saints; we have loved them as human beings. We could feel that they were made of the same clay that we are, that they lived in the same world that we live in, and that, therefore, other women may follow in their path, though they may not reach the same heights.

No two women of our day have been more loved and honored by womankind than the two described. May we not conclude then that theirs are the ideals that appeal to women; that the qualities we find in their characters are those that women recognize and admire? Among these qualities are courage, enthusiasm, faith, sympathy, sincerity, simplicity and nobility.

Walking Has Become Newest Kind of Sport

By JOSEPH LEVIN, St. Louis, Mo.

Walking, the oldest means of traveling, has now become the newest sport. It is not only a sport, but an art, and in order to do distance walking you must acquire that art.

People will say, "Walking an art? Why, anyone can walk. There is nothing hard about it." But when they get out and try it they soon find out their mistake.

Distance time walking is the hardest and most strenuous of labor. It requires a well-kept body, with good lasting qualities. In the first place, one must keep in excellent condition. He must take sufficient exercise to keep the muscles from becoming stiff. This requires road work at least once a week.

Each person has a stride and he should stick to this stride and not change it from time to time. A good pedestrian's stride never varies. To make good time one must make about four miles an hour and be able to walk ten hours a day, or forty miles. This is considered to be a good day's walk for amateur pedestrians.

Walking is like all other things—you must stick to it in order to make any progress.

Fifty years ago our fathers thought nothing of walking thirty or forty miles to the next town to spend a day with a friend. But times have changed. Prevailing conditions have taken away all thought of walking and we find ourselves riding from place to place. The modern man gets but little exercise.

If you wish to live a clean life, free from temptations and bad habits, get out and walk all you can. You will soon find that it will improve your health and give you ambition.

People Suffer From Crowding Into Cities

By A. C. PHELPS, Chicago

Any large city is a curious mixture of all the good and bad in this world—all the wealth, beauty and grandeur, the poverty, filth and crime; the palatial homes of the rich, the insanitary hovels of the poor; the pampered, overfed, luxury laden wealthy; the poor, half clad, half starved, hopeless beggar; the high minded philanthropist, and the sordid, heartless miser; the splendid, useful, helpful, honest, manly man; the thief and thug. The larger the city the greater the extremes and the more dangerous the tendency.

Yet people take pride in living in a big city; pride in the great number of its population and, in order to swell the number, the census taker must count people who are not worthy to be classed as human beings. How much better for the population to be more evenly spread over the country, giving each enough fresh air to breathe, enough sunshine to know the day from the night!

Women and girls will work in sweatshops and stores at wages barely sufficient to keep soul and body together, when in a smaller place they could get good wages in comfortable homes and be treated like human beings.

People, like all other animals, suffer from crowding too great a number into a small place.

HOW TO HAVE ROSY CHEEKS

Many Things Better Than Ice, Though That Will Temporarily Give the Glow Desired.

The use of ice as a cosmetic is advocated by many. Its results in many cases are not lasting.

There may be some virtue in ice which a woman wants to make her cheeks rosy for a short while. She can prepare soft pads, lay them on ice until they are very cold, then on the cheeks; they draw the blood to the surface and give a rosy tint. Cold water is better, however, when it comes to the question of making flabby muscles tighten to a normal condition, and the toilet vinegar is better still; such muscles need something that will tone them permanently, not just for the moment. To apply ice to the skin that has been exposed to the wind is all wrong; cold cream, left on half an hour first; then warm water and a good soap; then very cold water to finish with and cold cream rubbed in, with a spray of toilet vinegar last, is the method that answers best for flaccid muscles.—Philadelphia Telegraph.

NEW AND POPULAR FABRICS

That They Lend Themselves to the Graceful Draperies Demanded in Their Recommendation.

The touch of the Oriental that is noticed in the spring styles requires that a fabric be used which lends itself readily to graceful drapery. One particularly adaptable material is tulle, which is more popular this spring than it has been for several seasons. The robes of handdrawn tulle are truly beautiful. The draw-work appears in bands of graduated widths, forming a very handsome border for the robe. A narrow band of draw-work is done along the opposite edge of the material to be used for the smaller trimmings. These tulle comes in all the vivid shades that are to be so much used.

Among the silks, fluer de soie, a new form of tulle with an extremely soft finish, falls in the most graceful lines. It comes in very new and unusual tones, in both plain and figured surfaces. The floral designs that appear on many of these new silks seem somewhat stiff at first sight, but one soon realizes how very well suited they are to the period costumes so affected by our best gowned women. Some of the new patterns now in vogue are exact copies of some of those used in France at the time of the empire. Pittsburgh Dispatch.

Double Train.
A new train seen lately consisted of two trains each quite separate, and ending in points. A very lovely evening dress of deep orange charmeuse had this new double tail. One was of the orange charmeuse, and was just a continuation of the dress itself. The second train was of lemon-colored mousseline-de-soie, and started from a drapery at the waist, which came down one side and round the back of the frock, falling into a train the exact size and shape of the satin one. When well down this has a very pretty as well as a very novel effect.

Aids the Complexion.
The complexion seems to be the only thing which benefits from damp weather. One of the reasons for the fresh and colorful skins of English girls is said to be the fogs and mists that sweep over Britain from the sea. Moisture holds the dust prisoner, and dust is the worst enemy to good complexions. Besides that, moisture, while it does not prevent wrinkles, does not produce them; and excessively dry climates are always productive of excessively wrinkled skins.

Oriental Negligees.
For wear beneath the Oriental negligee there is a special Oriental combination garment of brassiere and petticoat. This is what the garment really is, though at first glance it appears to be a winding affair of fine fabric and lace trimming which twists around the figure from shoulder to knee.

Greek Draperies.
The Greek draperies introduced through the winter are so charming that nobody will relinquish them, at any rate for evening wear.

FOR THE EVENING

An evening gown of black liberty satin veiled with black maline embroidered with jet. The tunique is finished by two ruffles of accordeon pleated chiffon.

Sleeves for Day Wear.
For day wear the sleeve of the moment is long and rather tight and may be loose at both elbow and shoulder.

No Little Girl for Him.
The six-year-old son of a well-known Indianapolis family attends a dancing school. He is a chubby little fellow who has not begun to stretch-out yet, and he keenly feels his "shortage." He demands that he be recognized as a little "grownup." Several days ago the teacher planned to instruct her pupils in dancing "the Butterfly." A five-year-old girl who is small for her age, and just a trifle stouter than our hero, but an adept at dancing, was assigned as his partner. He gazed at her in silence. Then he took hold of her hand and, with his mouth set firmly, walked straight over the teacher.

"Don't you think you'd better give me a bigger girl?" he asked.—Indianapolis News.

Slightly Misunderstood.
"I understand that the young man in the house next to you is a finished cornetist?" "Geel is he? I was just screwing up my courage to finish him myself! Who did it?"—Houston Post.

The STOLEN SINGER

By MARTHA BELLINGER

COPYRIGHT 1911 THE BOBBS-MERRILL COMPANY

SYNOPSIS.

Agatha Redmond, opera singer, starting for an auto drive in New York, finds a stranger sent as her chauffeur. Later she is accosted by a stranger who climbs into the auto and chloroforms her. James Chamberlain of Lynn, Mass., witnesses the abduction of Agatha Redmond. Chamberlain sees Agatha forcibly taken aboard a yacht. He secures a tug and when near the yacht drops overboard. Aleck Van Camp, friend of Chamberlain, had an appointment with him. Not meeting Chamberlain, he makes a call upon friends, Madame and Miss Melanie Reyner. He proposes to the latter and is refused. The three arrange a coast trip on Van Camp's yacht, the Sea Gull. Chamberlain wakes up on board the Jeanne D'Arc, the yacht on which is Agatha Redmond. He meets a man who introduces himself as Monsieur Chatelard, who is Agatha's abductor. They fight, but are interrupted by the sinking of the vessel. Jimmy and Agatha are abandoned by the crew. Agatha takes to the water and Chamberlain swims for hours and finally reaches shore in a thoroughly exhausted condition. Recovering slightly, the pair find a chauffeur who assisted in Agatha's abduction. He agrees to help them. Jim is delirious and on the verge of death. Hand goes for help. He returns with Dr. Thayer, who revives Jim, and the party is conveyed to Charlesport, where Agatha's property is located. Van Camp and his party, in the Sea Gull, reach Charlesport and get tidings of the wreck of the Jeanne D'Arc. Aleck finds Jim on the verge of death and Agatha in despair. Dr. Thayer declares his sister, Mrs. Stoddard, is the only one who can save Jim. She is a woman of strong religious convictions, and dislikes Agatha on account of her profession. She refuses to nurse Jim. Agatha pleads with her and she consents to take the case. Hand explains how he escaped from the wreck, though he will say nothing concerning the abduction. Lizzie, Agatha's maid, arrives from New York. The fight for Jim's life goes on. Van Camp hears Agatha's story and gets on the track of Chamberlain, who escaped from the wreck. Chamberlain is finally out of danger. Chamberlain, friend of Van Camp, goes after Chamberlain. Agatha, in her relief at Jim's recovery, goes out into the woods. She meets Melanie Reyner and both are surprised at their remarkable resemblance.

It was not difficult to get on his track, even though the village people were constitutionally reluctant to let any unnecessary information get away from them. A mile or so farther up the shore, beyond the road that ran like a scar across the hill to the granite quarry, Chamberlain came upon a saloon masquerading as a grocery store. A lodging house, a seaman's berth and the reading room were grouped near by; the telegraph office, too, had been placed at this end of the town; obviously for the convenience of the operators of the granite quarry. The settlement had the appearance of easy-going and pleasant industry peculiar to places where handwork is still the rule.

Chamberlain applied first at the grocery store without getting satisfaction. The foreign looking boy, who was the only person visible, could give him no information about anything. But at the reading room the erstwhile yacht owner was known—Borrowing money is a sure method of impressing one's personality.

The Frenchman had been in the neighborhood two or three days, lately becoming very impatient for a reply to his New York telegram. A good deal of money had been applied for, was the opinion of the money-lender. This person, caretaker and librarian, was a tall, ineffective individual, with eyes set wide apart. His slow speech was a mixture of Dr. Johnson and a judge in chancery. It was grandiloquent, and it often took long to reach the point. He informed Chamberlain, with some circumlocution, that the Frenchman had been extremely anxious over the telegram. "I tried to persuade him that it was useless to be impatient over such things," said he. "And I regret to say that the man allowed himself to become profane."

"I dare say."

"But it would appear that he has received his telegram by this time," continued the youth, "for it is now but a short time since he was summoned to the station."

Chamberlain, thinking that the sooner he got to the telegraph station the better, was about to depart, when the placid tones of the librarian again casually broke the silence.

"If I mistake not, the gentleman in question is even now hastening toward the village." He waved a vague hand toward the open door through which, a little distance away, a man's figure could be seen.

"Why don't you run after him and get your money?" asked Chamberlain; but he didn't know the youth.

"What good would that do?" was the surprising question, which Chamberlain could not answer.

But the Englishman acted on a different principle. He thanked the judge in chancery and made after the Frenchman, who was casting a furtive eye in this and that direction, as if in doubt which way he ought to go. Nevertheless, he seemed bent on going, and not too slowly, either.

The Englishman swung into the road, but did not endeavor to overtake the other. They were traveling toward the main village, along a road that more or less hugged the shore. Sometimes it topped a cliff that dropped precipitately into the water; and again it descended to a sandy level that was occasionally reached by the higher tides.

Near the main village the road ascended a rather steep bluff, and at the top made a sudden turn toward the town. As Chamberlain approached this point, he yielded more and more to the beauty of the scene. The Bay of Charlesport, the rugged, curving outline of the coast beyond, the green islands, the glistening sea, the blue crystalline sky over all—it was a sight to remember.

Not far from the land, at the near end of the harbor, was the Sea Gull, pulling at her mooring. A stone's throw beyond Chamberlain's feet, a small rocky tongue of land was prolonged by a stone breakwater, which sheltered the curved beach of the village from the rougher waves. Close up under the bluff on which he was standing, the waters of the bay churned and foamed against a steep rock wall that shot downward to unknown depths. It was obviously a dangerous place, though the road was unguarded by fence or railing. Only a delicate fringe of goldenrod and low juniper bushes veiled the treacherous cliff edge. It was almost impossible for a traveler, unused to the region, to pass across the dizzy stretch of highway without a shuddering glance at the murderous waves below.

On the crest of this cliff, each of the two men paused, one following the other at a little distance. The first man, however, paused merely for a few minutes' rest after the steep climb. Chamberlain, hardened to physical exertions, took the hill easily, but stood for a moment lost in speculative wonder at the scene. He kept a sharp eye on his leader, however, and presently the two men took up their Indian file again toward the village.

Some distance farther on, the road forked, one spur leading up over the steep rugged hill, another dropping abruptly to the main village street and the wharves. A third branch ran low athwart the hill and led, finally, to the summer hotel where Chamberlain and the Reyners had been staying. At this division of the road Chamberlain saw the other man ahead of him sitting on a stone. He approached him leisurely and assumed an air of business sagacity.

"Good day, sir," said Chamberlain, planting himself solidly before the man on the stone. He was rather large, blond, pale and unkempt in appearance; but nevertheless he carried an air of insolent mockery, it seemed to Chamberlain. He glanced distastefully at the Englishman, but did not reply.

"Rather warm day," remarked Chamberlain pleasantly. No answer. The man sat with his head propped on his hands, unmistakably in a bad temper.

"Want to buy some land?" inquired Chamberlain. "I'm selling off lots on this hill for summer cottages. Water front, dock privileges, and a guaranty that no one shall build where it will shut off your view. Terms reasonable. Like to buy?"

"Non!" snarled the other.

Chamberlain paused in his imaginative flight, and took two luscious yellow pears from his bulging pockets.

"Have a pear?" he pleasantly offered.

The man again looked up, as if tempted, but again ejaculated "Non!" Chamberlain leisurely took a satisfying bite.

"I get tired myself," he went on, "tramping over these country roads. But it's the best way for me to do business. You don't happen to want a good hotel, do you?"

Coarse fare and the discomforts of beggars' lodgings had told on the Frenchman's temper, as Chamberlain had surmised. He looked up with a show of human interest. Chamberlain went on:

"There's a fine hotel, the Hillside, over yonder, only a mile or so away. Rest place in all the region hereabouts; tip-topping set there, too. Count Somebody-or-Other from Germany, and no end of bigwigs; so of course they have a good cook."

Chamberlain paused and finished his second pear. The man on the stone was furtive and uneasy, but masked his disquiet with the insolent sneering manner that had often served him well. Chamberlain, having once adopted the role of a garrulous traveling salesman, followed it up with zest.

"Of course, a man can get a good meal, for that matter, at the red house, a little way up yonder over the hill. But it wouldn't suit a man like you—a slow, poky place, with no style."

The man on the stone slowly turned toward Chamberlain, and at last found voice for more than monosyllabic utterances.

"I was looking for a hotel," he said, in correct English but with a foreign accent, "and I shall be glad to take your advice." The Hillside, you say, is in this direction?" and he pointed along the lower road.

"Yes," heartily assented Chamberlain, "about two miles through those woods, and you won't make any mistake going there; it's a very good place."

The man got up from the stone. "And the other inn you spoke of—where is that?"

"The Red House? That's quite a long piece up over the hill—this way. Straight road; house stands near a church; kept by a country woman named Sallie. But the Hillside's the place for you; good style, everything neat and handsome. And fine people!"

"Very well, thanks," cut in the other, in his sharp, rasping tones. "I shall go to the Hillside."

He slid one hand into a pocket, as if to assure himself that he had not been robbed by sleight-of-hand during the interview, and then started on the road leading to the Hillside. Chamberlain said "Good day, sir," without expecting or getting an answer, and turned the hill toward the village.

As soon as he had dropped from sight, however, he walked casually into the thick bushes that lined the road, and from this ambush he took a careful survey of the hill behind him. Then he slowly and cautiously made his way back through the underbrush until he was again in sight of the cross roads. Here, concealed behind a tree, he waited patiently some five or ten minutes. At the end of that time, Chamberlain's mild and kindly face lighted up with unholy joy. He opened his mouth and emitted a soundless "haw-haw."

For there was his recent companion also returning to the cross roads, taking a discreet look in the direction of the village as he came along. Seeing that the coast was clear, he turned and went rapidly up the road that led over the hill to the red-house. When Chamberlain saw that the man was well on his way he stepped into the road and solemnly danced three steps of a hornpipe, and the next instant started on a run toward the village. He got little Simon's horse and buggy, drove into the upper street and picked up the sheriff, and then trotted at a good rattling pace around by the long road toward Lion.

CHAPTER XX.

Monsieur Chatelard Takes the Wheel.

Sallie Kingsbury would have given up the ghost without more ado, had she known what secular and unministerial passions were converging about Parson Thayer's peaceful library. As it was, she had a distinct feeling that life wasn't as simple as it had been heretofore, and that there were puzzling problems to solve. She was almost certain that she had caught Mr. Hand using an oath; though when she charged him with it, he had said that he had been talking Spanish to himself—he always did when he was alone. Sallie didn't exactly know the answer to that, but told him that she hoped he would remember that she was a professor. "What's that?" inquired Hand.

"It's a Christian in good and regular standing, and it's what you ought to be," said Sallie.

And now that nice Mr. Chamberlain, whom she had fed in the early morning, had dashed up to the kitchen door behind. Little Simon's best horse, deposited a man from Charlesport, and then had disappeared. The man had also unceremoniously left her kitchen. He might be a minister brought there to officiate at the church on the following Sabbath, Sallie surmised; but on second thought she dismissed the idea. He didn't look like any minister she had ever seen, and was very far indeed from the Parson Thayer type.

Hercules Thayer's business, including his ministerial duties, had formed the basis and staple of Sallie's affectionate interest for seventeen years, and it wasn't her nature to give up that interest, now that the chief actor had stepped from the stage. So she speculated and wondered, while she did more than her share of the work.

She picked radishes from the garden for supper, threw white screeping over the imposing loaves of bread still cooling on the side table, and was pharring a knife on a whetstone, preparatory to carving thin slices from a veal loaf that stood near by, when she was accosted by some one appearing in the doorway.

"Is this the Red House?" It was a cool, sharp voice, sounding even more outlandish than Mr. Hand's. Sallie turned deliberately toward the door and surveyed the new-comer.

"Well, yes; I guess so. But you don't need to scare the daylight out of me, that way."

The stranger entered the kitchen and pulled out a chair from the table. "Give me something to eat and drink—the best you have, and be quick about it, too."

Sallie paused, carving knife in hand, looking at him with frank curiosity. "Well, I snuff! You ain't the new minister either, now, are you?"

The stranger made no answer. He had thrown himself into the chair, as if tired. Suddenly he sat up and looked around alertly, then at Sallie, who was returning his gaze with interest.

"Where are you from, anyway?" she inquired. "We don't see people like you around these parts very often."

"I dare say," he snarled. "Are you going to get me a meal, or must I tramp over these confounded hills all day before I can eat?"

"Oh, I'll get you up a bite, if that's all you want. I never turned anybody away hungry from this door yet, and we've had many a worse looking tramp than you. I guess Miss Redmond won't mind."

"Miss Redmond!" The stranger started to his feet, glowering on Sallie. "Look here! Is this place a hotel, or isn't it?"

"Well, anybody'd think it was, the way I've been driven from pillar to post for the last ten days! But you can stay; I'll get you a meal, and a good one, too."

Sallie's good nature was rewarded by a convulsion of anger on the part of the guest. "Fool! Idiot!" he screamed. "You trick me in here! You lie to me!"

"Oh, set down, set down!" interrupted Sallie. "You don't need to get so hot up as all that! I'll get you something to eat. There ain't any hotel within five miles of here—and a poor one at that! Thus protesting and attempting to soothe, Sallie saw the stranger make a grab for his hat and start for the door, only to find it suddenly shut and locked in his face. Mr. Chamberlain, moreover, was on the inside, facing the foreigner.

"If you will step through the house and go out the other way," Mr. Chamberlain remarked coolly, "it will oblige me. My horse is loose in the yard, and I'm afraid you'll scare him off. He's shy with strangers."

The two men measured glances. "I thought you traveled afoot when pursuing your real estate business," sneered the stranger.

"I do, when it suits my purposes," replied Chamberlain.

"What game are you up to, anyway, in this disgusting country?" inquired the other.

"Ridding it of rascals. This way, please," and Chamberlain pointed before him toward the door leading into the hall. As the stranger turned, his glance fell on Sallie, still carving her veal loaf. "Idiot!" he said disgustedly.

"Well, I haven't been caught yet, anyhow," said Sallie grimly.

Chamberlain's voice interrupted her. "This way, and then the first door on the right. Make haste, if you please, Monsieur Chatelard."

At the name, the stranger turned, standing at bay, but Chamberlain was at his heels. "You see, I know your name. It was supplied me at the reading room. Here—on the right—quickly!"

The hall was dim, almost dark, the only light coming from the open doorway on the right. Whether he wished or no, Monsieur Chatelard was forced to advance into the range of the doorway; and once there, he found himself pushed unceremoniously into the room.

It was a large, cool room, lined with bookcases. Near the middle stood an oblong table covered with green felt and supporting an old brass lamp. Four people were in the room, besides the two new-comers. Aleck Van Camp was on a low step-ladder, just in the act of handing down a book from the top shelf. Near the step-ladder two women were standing, with their backs toward the door. Both were in white, both were tall, and both had abundant dark hair. One of the French windows leading out on to the porch was open, and just within the sill stood the man from Charlesport.

"Here's a wonderful book—a rare one—the record of that famous Latin controversy," Aleck was saying, when he became conscious of the entrance of Chamberlain and a stranger.

"Ah, hello, Chamberlain, that you?" he cried. Agatha and Melanie, turning suddenly to greet Chamberlain, simultaneously encountered the gimlet gaze of Chatelard. It was fixed first on Melanie, then on Agatha, then returned to Melanie, with an added increment of rage and bafflement.

"So!" he sneered. "I find you after all, Princess Auguste Stephanie of Krolvets! Consorting with these—these swine!"

Melanie looked at him keenly, with hesitating suspicions. "Ah! Duke Stephen's cat's paw! I remember you—well!" But before the words were fairly out of her mouth, Agatha's voice had cut in: "Mr. Van Camp, that is he! That is he! The man on the Jeanne D'Arc!"

"We thought as much," answered Chamberlain. "That's why he is here."

"We only wanted your confirmation of his identity," said the man who had been standing by the window, as he came forward. "Monsieur Chatelard, you are to come with me. I am the sheriff of Charlesport county, and have a warrant for your arrest."

As the sheriff advanced toward Chatelard, the cornered man turned on him with a sound that was half hiss, half an oath. He was like a panther standing at bay. Aleck turned toward Melanie.

"It seems that you know this man, Melanie?"

"Yes, I know him—to my sorrow."

"What do you know of him?"

"He is the paid spy of the Duke Stephen, my cousin. He does all his dirty work." Melanie laughed a bit nervously as she added, turning to Chatelard: "But you are the last man I expected to see here. I suppose you are come from my excellent cousin to find me, eh? Is that the case?"

Chatelard's eyes, resting on her, burned with hate. "Yes, your Highness, I am the humble bearer of a message from Duke Stephen to yourself."

"And that message is—"

"A command for your immediate return to Krolvets. Matters of importance wait you there."

"And if I refuse to return?"

Chatelard's shoulders went up and his hands spread out in that insolent gesture affected by certain Europeans. Chamberlain stepped forward impatiently.

"Look here, you people," he began, "you told me this chap was a bloomin' kidnaper, and so I rounded him up—I nabbed him. And here you are exchangin' howdy-do. What's the meaning of it all?"

As he spoke, Chamberlain's eyes rested first on Melanie, then on Agatha, whom he had not seen before. "By Jove!" he ejaculated.

"Whom did he kidnap?" questioned Melanie.

"Why, me, Miss Reyner," cried Agatha. "He stole my car and dragged me and got me into his yacht—hey-yan knows why!"

"Kidnaped! You!" cried Melanie. "Just so," agreed Aleck. "And now I see why—you scoundrel!" He turned upon Chatelard with contemptuous fury. "For once you were caught, eh? These ladies are much alike—that is true. So much so that I myself was taken aback the first time I saw Miss Redmond. You thought Miss Redmond was the princess—masquerading as an opera singer."

"Her Highness has always been admired as a singer!" burst out Chatelard.

"No doubt! And even you were deceived!" Aleck laughed in derision. "But when you take so serious a step as an abduction, my dear man, be sure you get hold of the right victim."

"She was even singing the very song that used to be a favorite of her Highness!" remarked Chatelard.

"Your memory serves you too well." But Chatelard turned scoffingly toward Agatha. "You sang it well, Mademoiselle, very well. And, as this gentleman asserts, you deceived even me. But you are indiscreet to walk unattended in the park."

Agatha, unnerved and weak, had grown pale with fear.

"Don't talk with him, Mr. Van Camp, he is dangerous. Get him away," she pleaded.

"True, Miss Redmond. We only waste time. Sheriff!"

Again the sheriff advanced toward Chatelard, and again he was warned off with a hissing oath. At the same moment a shadow fell within the open doorway. As Chatelard's glance rested on the figure, standing there, his face gleamed. He pointed an accusing forefinger.

"There is the abductor, if any such person is present at all," said he. "That is the man who stole the lady's car and ran it to the dock. He is your man, Mister Sheriff, not I."

The accusation came with such a tone of conviction on the part of the speaker, that for an instant it confused the mind of every one present. In the pause that followed, Chatelard turned with an insolent shrug toward Agatha. "This lady—and every word had a sneer in it—"this lady will testify that I am right."

Agatha stared with a face of alarm toward the doorway, where Hand stood stoic silent.

"If that is true, Miss Redmond," began the sheriff.

"No—no!" cried Agatha. "He had nothing to do with it!" questioned the sheriff.

Modern Aesop.

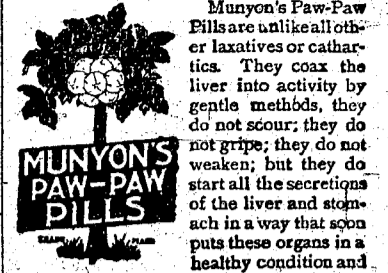

One day, in the presence of the Fox, the Tortoise was bragging to the Hare of his ability as a runner. The Fox was very derisive of the Tortoise's pretensions, whereupon the Tortoise, winking at the Hare, offered to bet the Fox a considerable sum of money that he could outrun the Hare. The Fox lost no time in putting up the money, and off the contestants started. The Hare took a big lead at once, but after getting comfortably out of sight, wandered away from the track and fell asleep. The Tortoise accordingly was the first to reach the winning post. The Fox went off cursing at the loss of his money, and when he had gone the Tortoise divided his winnings with the Hare. Ever since that time betting on races has been an uncertain sport.—Life.

RECORD OF WORK WELL DONE

Anti-Tuberculosis Campaign—Fruitful of Results for the Good of All Mankind.

Some comparisons showing the progress of the anti-tuberculosis campaign in the last eight years and the present needs of this movement are made by the National Association for the Study and Prevention of Tuberculosis in a brief report of its work recently issued. During the eight years of its work, the national association has assisted in the organization of over 800 state and local anti-tuberculosis societies located in almost every state and territory of the Union. Over 500 hospitals and sanatoria have been established, with more than 30,000 beds for consumptives. About 400 dispensaries, with more than 1,000 physicians in attendance and at least 150 open air schools for tuberculosis and anaemic children, have also been provided. Laws dealing with tuberculosis have been passed in 45 states, and ordinances on this subject have been adopted in over 200 cities and towns. An active field campaign of education against tuberculosis has been carried on in 40 states and territories by means of lectures, exhibits, the press, and the distribution of over 100,000,000 pamphlets on this disease.

KNOW WHAT YOUR IDEAL IS

First Step to Real Success, Though Few Seem to Realize Its Importance.

Several years ago when I filled a position which brought me many visitors each day, and many more letters in the same time, I was overburdened with requests for advice from persons who wished "to succeed," "to accomplish," "to attain." But, as strange as the statement may seem to you, I can truthfully say that not one percent—not one in a hundred of these earnest seekers was able to state exactly what he or she really wanted.

They were dissatisfied and discontented, and felt the vague urge of pushing them forward to further endeavor and attainment—but it stopped right there. Ninety-nine out of every hundred did not know what they wanted. They asked not only for advice regarding the means of accomplishment and attainment, but also for information as to what they should really desire.

"Silly," you exclaim. Not a bit of it. I venture to say to you—yes, you who are now reading these lines, are not much better off regarding clear-cut ideas and ideals. You want, and want—and want, of course—but just what do you want? Have you a clearly defined idea, and a clear-cut ideal of the object of your desires? Honor bright now, have you?—William Walker Atkinson, in the Nautilus.

GOOD WORD FOR THE WASP

In Industry He is on a Par With the Bee, Though Not of So Much Value to World.

Wasps appear to be well-nigh as industrious as ants or bees. One authority has declared that the cardinal doctrine of wasps is: "If any wasp will not work, neither shall he eat." Division of labor is clearly seen in the wasp's nest. Some of the workers seem to be specially employed as foragers and soldiers, others appear to be told off as nurses and guardians, while yet others are engaged as papermakers and masons. Wasps are at all times particularly fond of honey. Toward the end of summer, as all beekeepers know, they will force their way into beehives and carry off by force as much as they can gorge of their winged neighbors' honey. The drones of the wasp world, instead of being idle and luxurious, are sober, industrious and well-behaved members of the community. They clean the streets of their town with exemplary diligence, acting as public scavengers and sanitary officers. And they have their reward, for, unlike the bee drones, they live their allotted life in peace and quietness until winter involves them and their maiden sisters in one common cataclysm of death and destruction.—Harper's Weekly.

Planola Within Rat.

The wonders of science will never cease. Paris has received a delicate jolt by the exhibition of a rat which carries around a planola in its internal organism. A touch of its tail produces airs from the operas. M. Bertrand Lebaudy, the French zoological expert and savant, discovered that the ribs of the rat give out rhythmic tones when properly tickled. Making experiments, he found that these tones could be regulated by nerve pressure from an electric battery. The nerves of a rat lead to its sensitive tail, which does many duties besides acting as whisk-broom in rat land. He tamed a fine specimen of the regular Parisian rodent, got it so that it would answer to his least command, fed it on a special diet and then charged its nerves from an electric battery. The rat became exceedingly sensitive and the notes from its body when tweaked by the tail quite audible. This story did not originate in Winsted, Conn., but came from a Paris correspondent.

GIVES BACK WHAT IS GIVEN

Life, in the Main, is Just and Almost Inevitably Returns Good for Good.

The echo is the principle of life. You get back from the world the message you give it.

Nether this nor any other truth is true in all particulars, very often you receive evil for your good and good for your evil, harsh words when you sent forth only kindness, and injustice in return for your deeds honest and well meant, but like all truths it is true in general.

In fact, the essence of every truth is a generalization which the mind is able to pick from a mass of confusing particulars.

Is it a cold, hard-hearted, unfeeling world to you? Then I very much fear that you have given to it a selfish, narrow, egotistic heart.

Is it a tolerably good sort of place, and do you find men and women as a rule just and kindly disposed? You must have been yourself an honest and generous nature.

Haven't you had days when everything seemed to go wrong? You said you must have gotten out of bed with the wrong foot first. You have fumbled all you undertook, your fingers have been all thumbs, and everyone about you has seemed smitten with the grouch.

In all this you have been but seeing yourself as in a glass. It is your ugly mood that dims the shining surface of a really pleasant world.

Nothing is so unerring as the total universe. Time and nature seem now and then aliphod, and do things unjust and uncalled for, but they always make it up in the long run and pay every soul back a hundred cents on the dollar.—Woman's World.

Marshmallows.

In a mountain camp this summer the cream ran short. The campers simply couldn't get it. They didn't even have the canned variety. A box of marshmallows was on the table when the campers sat down to lunch and one of the women looking into her cup of chocolate minus cream, began to eat a mallow. It didn't exactly go to the spot. Neither did this watery chocolate. In disgust she put the two together. The marshmallow went floating in the cup of chocolate, when, presto! there was something white and foaming! There was cream! Necessity and accident are indeed the mother and the father of invention. Those people learned before their lunch was over that marshmallows take the place of cream. They do! They do indeed!

Stranded.

A negro, with an old gray mule hitched to a ramshackle wagon, stood on the incline of Capitol hill, in Washington, during one of the worst sleet storms in January.

The old man huddled in his rabbit-skin cap, shivering; the mule was trembling with the cold. According to Everybody's Magazine, two congressmen, waiting for a belated car, were attracted by the strange outfit and wondered, as time went on and the negro made no effort to depart, what ailed the old fellow.

One of the congressmen walked over and said, "Why don't you move over, uncle?"

The old negro pointed a trembling finger at his "team" and replied, "Cause dis yere mule won't go 'less I whistle at him, and it's so cold I cya'n't whistle!"

Presbyterian Church Notes

Rev. A. D. Grigby, Pastor.

Divine worship in the Presbyterian church at 10:30. There is room for all who come and a hearty welcome. The pastor will preach on "Patience and her perfect work." In the evening he will say a word or two on "After revival, what?" Service begins at 7:30. Come thou, with us, and we will do you good.

Sunday school assemblies at 11:45 and the superintendent looks to all teachers and scholars to be in their places and new scholars with them.

The Y. P. S. C. E. will heartily welcome any young person who may wish to meet with them at 6:45.

The annual meeting of the Presbyterian church and society was held in the chapel on Monday evening. After the formal call to order, prayer and remarks by the pastor, Mr. J. Malpass was elected Moderator. The report read by Mr. Bisbee, church treasurer, was admirable in its clearness and fulness, and showed a healthy financial condition, claims being duly met and the pastor's salary paid in full, when due, and up to date.

Trustees were elected for 3, 2, and 1 year. Mr. W. L. Peck being elected in place of Frank Porter, deceased. Refreshments were served by the ladies after all formal business affairs had been disposed of, and a delightful time passed in visiting and becoming better acquainted. About 50 persons were present.

COMING BACK TO EAST JORDAN

UNITED DOCTORS SPECIALISTS will again be at Russell House WEDNESDAY, APRIL 30TH ONE DAY ONLY.

Hours 11:00 A. M. to 8:00 P. M. Remarkable Success of These Talented Physicians in the Treatment of Chronic Diseases.

Offer Their Services Free of Charge for the Last Time.

The United Doctors, licensed by the State of Michigan, for the treatment of deformities and all nervous diseases of men, women and children, offer to all who call on this trip, consultation, examination, advice free making no charge whatever, except the actual cost of medicine. All that is asked in return for these valuable services is that every person treated will state the result obtained to their friends and thus prove to the sick and afflicted in every city and locality, that at last treatments have been discovered that are reasonably sure and certain in their effect.

These doctors are considered by many former patients among America's leading stomach and nerve specialists and are experts in the treatment of chronic diseases and so great and wonderful have been their results that in many cases it is hard indeed to find the dividing line between skill and miracle.

Diseases of the stomach, intestines, liver, blood, skin, nerves, heart, spleen, kidneys, or bladder, rheumatism, sciatica, diabetes, bed-wetting, leg ulcers, weak lungs and those afflicted with long-standing, deep-seated, chronic diseases, that have baffled the skill of the family-physicians, should not fail to call.

According to their system no more operations for appendicitis, gall-stones, tumors, proster, piles, etc. By their method these diseases are treated without operation or hypodermic in-

You can tell the difference at a glance

Things have changed since Hannah died. Women are not satisfied with just a suit, coat or dress. It's a matter of style with the fashionable woman of today.

This store has long ago ceased to buy ordinary garments, and has turned all its energy to the 20th century way of garment merchandising—the showing and selling of the exclusive.

Tailored After Uncommon Fashion

One store excels, its nearly always so in every city. Weisman's store shows vastly greater assortments of women's misses' and children's garments than any other store in this section, and because of its policy to show only the distinctive apparel.

PROBATE ORDER—State of Michigan. The Probate Court for the county of Charlevoix.

At a session of said court, held at the probate office, in the city of Charlevoix, in said county, on the 7th day of April, A. D. 1913. Present: Hon. Servetus A. Correll, Judge of Probate.

In the matter of the estate of Harriet B. Barrett deceased.

Florence Barrett, having filed in said court her petition praying that a certain instrument in writing, purporting to be the last will and testament of said deceased, now on file in said court, be admitted to probate, and that the administration of said estate be granted to Florence Barrett, the executrix named in the will or to some other suitable person.

It is ordered, that the sixth day of May, A. D. 1913, at ten o'clock in the forenoon, at said probate office, be and is hereby appointed for hearing said petition.

It is further ordered, that public notice thereof, be given by publication of a copy of this order, for three successive weeks previous to said day of hearing, in the Charlevoix County Herald a newspaper printed and circulated in said county.

SERVETUS A. CORRELL, Judge of Probate.

CHANCERY ORDER.

State of Michigan, Thirteenth Judicial Circuit, in Chancery.

Suit pending in the Circuit Court for the County of Charlevoix, in Chancery.

WE WANT YOUR BUSINESS.

AN OLD SEA CHEST

It Contained Treasure Which Brought Happiness to Both Old and Young.

By GENEVIEVE ULMAR.

"It's the law or poverty—take your choice," was the stern dictum of obstinate, self-opinionated James Ross, uncle of Philip Carle, who stood before him.

"I am sorry, uncle, but it's not the law for me," came the clear, definite response. "I'm not cut out for it, the business is distasteful to me, and I would rather have a crust of bread and my artistic ambitions, than the solemn judicial sense and a fortune."

"So much the poorer you, so much the richer I," quoted the old money grabber. "You need bank on no dependence on me hereafter. Wait." And the speaker snapped open a drawer in his desk and took from it a small package. "That belonged to your father. It is legally mine, but I give it to you, as a memento or to waste, as you like. I wash my hands of you."

Philip Carle made his exit feeling that he had made a pretty bad mess of his affairs. There was no help for it, however. The artistic impulse in him was strong, and uncertain as seemed the field he was bound to stick to.

He had not gone to his self-centered relative to ask money for himself. While he had very little of that commodity personally, the needs of another had urged him to apply for assistance. He undid the wrappings of the little parcel. It contained a diamond ring, probably a remnant of the wealth he knew his dead father had once possessed.

"I will never sell it," he said, walking on thoughtfully, "but—and he stopped at the first pawnbroker's shop he came to.

"I will loan you three hundred dollars," its proprietor said, and Philip nodded with a lump in his throat.

"What About This?"

trying to believe that what he was doing was right. He at length turned into a small tailoring shop. Its show windows were neat as a pin. A rather unique sign swung over its doorway. It read: "Only the lilies of the field can clothe themselves cheaper than you can in this shop."

"Well, how is business, Mr. Garland?" inquired Philip of an old man with the worried yet expectant face of a person waiting and hoping for work.

"Getting worse, if possible, all the time," was the reply. "I am afraid my venture is a poor one. Locality bad, or else I do not know how to win trade. There's the mortgage, too. They have given me a bare twenty-four hours to settle or give up possession. Why does not my brother come on?"

"There is the money to relieve your present necessities," said Philip, handing over the proceeds of the loan. The old man stared; quick tears arose to his eyes. He waved back the generous hand extended, but Philip persuaded him with success. He induced his friend to make one more trial of his business experiment, and left him with encouraging words.

"I had to do it," Philip told himself. "I can't see Mr. Garland lose his all; if it is only for her sake—dear Isabel! How he has struggled to give her a musical education. So near to acquiring it, too. I won't regret a good act."

It was Philip's first picture, the portrait of this Isabel, that smiled down from an easel as the young artist entered his studio. Quite incidentally he had become acquainted with Mr. Garland and then with his ward, Isabel was the daughter of the closest friend of the old man who had started him in life, lost his own wealth, and a more loyal guardian never lived.

Isabel was perfecting a musical education and Garland never let her know how hard he was pressed. For over a month he had been in an optimistic mood. He had received a letter from a brother, a sea captain who had been off on a two years' cruise. It came from a distant city and on its heels a large seaman's chest. The letter announced that very soon its writer would follow, and that he had come to share a royal fortune with his brother.

received from the sea captain. Business had fallen away, and now the generous-hearted artist had sacrificed his all to assist his friends.

No love word had been spoken between Philip and Isabel. Evenings when he visited the neat parlor behind the little shop, however, and the happy twain conversed of art, music and of all things beautiful, both felt that their souls were in complete harmony.

One week later Philip visited the Garland place to find the old man immersed in the deepest gloom. He had received a telegram announcing the death of his brother in a hospital. The last words he spoke were transmitted: "Tell my brother that the chest and its treasure is all his own."

Its "treasure," according to Garland, consisted of some sailor clothes, a few nautical instruments and a keg containing some oily compound of the deep.

"It's the end," said the old man dejectedly. "My main worry is, that your generous loan is lost. They threaten to sell me out tomorrow."

Philip could do nothing further in a money way. He was resolute not to abandon his friends, however. That afternoon he made a contract with a picture house to do some copying. The recompense was not large, but it would fit into a plan he had for taking care of Garland until the latter could find new employment.

He was greeted with a sad spectacle when he reached the Garland place that evening. The old man was pacing the floor distractedly. Isabel, pale and distressed, was seated on all that had been left in the place by the ruthless creditors—the old sea chest.

"It will be easy to arrange for your care until you get on your feet again, Mr. Garland," said Philip cheerfully. "What are we going to do with the chest, though? Let us open it and select what is worth while."

They set aside a compass and some other few things out of the heterogeneous contents of the chest.

"What about this?" inquired Philip, lifting out the keg. "Why, Mr. Garland,

Reversing the keg, the young artist uttered a very startled exclamation. Across one end there was traced in ink the word: "Ambergris."

One hour later the happy old man knew that the old sea chest had contained treasure, indeed. Worth more than its weight in gold, the ambergris, rare and readily salable, represented over twelve thousand dollars.

"Now Isabel can finish her music!" cried the old man joyfully, "and you, oh, my dear friend! command the fortune you have discovered to assist you in any way in your artist's career."

"Isabel clung close to the arm of the young man who had so loyally shared their troubles, as he escorted them to a near hotel. The pressure of that dear hand thrilled Philip Carle. The old man walked proudly ahead of the happy pair.

And when they parted for the night, the decision had been reached that the musical and the art careers should be pursued—together. (Copyright, 1913, by W. G. Chapman.)

CAME OUT OF HIS TRANCE

But It Took Some Language by the Motor Bus Conductor to Arouse Him.

"Fares, please."

But the passenger on top of the Fifth avenue motor bus gave no heed.

"Fares, please." This time a little louder.

Still the passenger oblivious.

"By the ejaculatory term 'fare,'" said the conductor, "I imply no reference to the state of the weather, the complexion of the admirable blonde you observe in the contiguous seat, nor even to the quality of service vouchsafed by this philanthropic corporation. I merely allude, in a manner perhaps lacking in delicacy but not in conscientiousness, to the monetary obligation set up by your presence in this conveyance, and suggest that, without contemplating your celebrity with enunciation, you immediately proceed to liquidate or—"

And at this point the passenger, emerged from his trance.—New York Mail.

Bibles in Bristol.

A hint of ancient Bibles in the neighborhood of Bristol has brought many other confessions of concealed treasures. There is a "Breche's" Bible of 1610, a "Bishop's" Bible of 1555 in a country cottage, a Bible in good condition dated 1590, and another dated 1594, which the owner, being a poor man, would like to sell. That also is in good condition. They bound their Bibles well when printing was young, and that is possibly the secret of their preservation.

Those long-preserved west country Bibles remind one of the peculiar sanctity which the Bible attained among those who never opened it. "We always keep a Bible in the house in case of illness," said a pious village, "but, thank heaven, we've had no use for it since poor old grandfather was took!"—London Chronicle.

The Mimosa.

The mimosa, or wattle, which patriotic Australians wore recently in celebration of the anniversary of the landing of the first colony of English draws its name from its supposed mimetic powers. Its leaves were thought to assume the shape of animals. Shelley knew it as "the sensitive plant, and other poets have represented the mimosa as curling up when the sound of a horse's hoofs came within a mile or two. Southerly imagined the mimosa as a giant tree, and saw men reclining "beneath its shade." But the mimosa Australians know is of moderate dimensions.

PRETTY LITTLE GARDEN IN THE WINDOW

House Plants Used to Fill a Veranda Box.

(By L. M. BENNINGTON.)

Dust is a great friend to the insect tribe, as it weakens the plant. Shift the pots about occasionally, to give all sides of the plant a chance at the light.

Admit air from a door or window at a distance from the plants. A draft of cold air often does much damage. Stir the soil in the pots every few days with a table fork to admit air to the rootlets. This will prevent green mold.

Chinese hibiscus should be kept merely moist during winter, at which time they lose most of their leaves. They are summer bloomers.

Give the plants all the fresh air possible every pleasant day, and with it, give the sunshine. Roll the shades up and take down the curtains.

Don't fertilize until the plant shows signs of growth. Plants at a standstill cannot bear strong food. Give all root-bound plants a little weak manure water.

There can be no regular rule for watering plants, because of the varying conditions in the living room. Water when the soil looks dry and the pot feels light.

Give enough water to saturate the soil. This can best be done by setting the pot in a vessel of water, leaving it until the surface of the soil shows wet. The inside of the ball of soil and roots must be saturated.

Palms, unless kept in a hot, dry at moisture where red spider has appeared, has but one insect enemy—the scale. These can be seen and pushed off, and the plant washed and scrubbed all over with soapsuds, then well rinsed in clear water. The English ivy should be treated the same way.

GUINEA FOWLS ARE POOR EGG LAYERS

Number Conservatively Estimated at 30 to 70 During Season—Great Rustlers.

By A. J. LEGG.

I have read a number of articles on the guinea fowl and they all commend them as great rustlers for insects and they are also commended as egg producers; usually, however, there is no reliable data as to how many eggs a guinea hen will produce in a year. I see it stated in a prominent farm paper that a guinea hen will lay from 30 to 70 eggs in a season. This is quite a variation, but my observation leads me to conclude that it is not too much. A few guinea hens have proved to be very poor egg producers and 30 eggs is not likely too low for the minimum production, while 70 for the maximum is a very conservative estimate. Once I kept an account of the eggs laid by a white guinea hen and I got 65 eggs from her that season, but I felt sure that she laid a few eggs that I did not get.

Last spring I undertook to keep an account of the eggs laid by one white and two pearl hens. The white one proved to be a very poor egg producer and I do not think that she laid more than 30 eggs. The pearls laid well. They both laid in the same nest and I found them with 30 eggs in the nest on two different occasions. Once they laid a full nest of eggs and both got broody, so I did not get an account of these, as they got broken up without me finding the nest. Another time they got broken up and I did not know how many eggs were lost. I got an account of 186 eggs and I estimate that 40 eggs were lost in the two break ups, this would make 226 eggs for the three hens, and I feel sure that the white hen did not lay more than 30 of them. The two pearl hens laid very near 100 eggs each. On account of the very cold wet spring they did not commence laying until about June 1. When the season is favorable the guineas begin laying in April. Young guineas are rather tender and hard to raise, but if they are not caught away from a shelter in a hard rain, they will take care of themselves if allowed free range. We had about 75 young guineas hatched last spring, and have got more than 50 of them through October in spite of the very unfavorable season. They took care of themselves and grew fat and plump.

There was two pure white guineas hatched, but both of them died. The others are all a cross between the white and the pearl guineas, except one full blood pearl guinea. The hybrids are larger than the pure pearl of the same age.

The Disk Plow.

It is quite evident that the disk plow is to be a part of the equipment of the progressive farmer of the future. The double disk, or gang, is the style in most demand, for the reason that a double-disk will cut from 24 to 26 inches with the same horsepower that it takes to operate the 18-inch mold-board sulky, and the cost is but a few dollars more. The disk plow is to be a very conspicuous factor in the future trade of the implement dealer, for it must be remembered the disk drill, the disk harrow and the popular with the farmers and give evidence of remaining so, were a long time proving that they had come to stay.

Screen Tile Drains.

One of the most important features of having tile drains is to keep the outlets open, and, lest muskrats and other small animals crawl in and clog them, they should be screened. When putting down tile drains it is a good plan to make a map of the field, with lines which show where the drains are, then, if the outlets of any get covered up and hidden, they can be more easily found.

MAKE CORNERS BEAUTIFUL WITH FERNS.

A Bit of Nature's Fern Garden.

Brighten up the deep, shady corners on your lawn by starting a fernery. A dark corner by the porch is a good place for the wild, hardy ferns, and you may find low, wet places here and there which will prove hospitable homes for beautiful ferns transplanted from the woods. It is not a difficult matter to transplant ferns from the woods, and if they are put in a well-shaded spot they will flourish without much care.

OUT OF PRISON;

SETS BIRDS FREE

Liberated After 15 Years, Turns Sympathetic Toward Animals.

BUYS THREE CANARIES

Pays $9 for the Birds and Then Gave Them Their Liberty — Started Storekeeper Protests, but Ex-Convict Says It's God's Way.

Chicago.—It was five o'clock the other afternoon. A man whose hair about the temples and nape of his neck was almost milky white, and whose shoulders bent with a slight stoop, walked down the east side of South Western avenue toward the barber shop of "Big Mike" Connolly at 527. His was a peculiar gait—an involuntary shuffling of the feet and a laxness of the knees—which he seemed to be trying to conceal.

The sun was sinking in a clear sky and its last rays, suddenly finding a pathway through a forest of buildings, fell with vividness of limelight on a sign that hung in "Big Mike's" window. This sign read:

SINGING CANARIES FOR SALE.

The man stopped before the sign and considered it. Then his glance fell on a bench built into the window, on which in neat wicker cages a dozen or more bright yellow canaries preened themselves in the sun. The birds blinked in the light as though astonished. They did not sing.

The man studied the birds for a long time. He moved uneasily and thrust his hands in and out of his trouser pockets nervously. At last one of the hands came forth clutching a crumpled bill. The man looked at the corner of it with secrecy. It was $10. He went into the store.

"You sell these birds?" he asked Connolly.

"Yes, sir," replied the barber. "How much are they worth?"

"I get $3 for them."

The man took the $10 from his pocket and handed it to Connolly.

"I'll take three," he said.

"Big Mike" was surprised. He couldn't figure out what this man could want with three canaries. However, he concluded the vagaries of customers was none of his business.

"Won't you pick out the birds you want?" he inquired.

The man hesitated. "No," he replied, "you select 'em."

"Those are three fine birds," said "Mike." "A friend of mine who has a big store down town, and buys a lot of 'em, picks out a few of the best for me. They are superior goods."

The man took the birds without reply. He walked to the door. He opened the cages one by one. The canaries, frightened at first, hesitated on their wicker thresholds. Then, with shrill chirps, half of fear and half of delight, they spread their wings and darted up and away into the clear sky, flashing their pinions in new-found liberty, and fading at last like specks of gold into the sunset. The man watched them until the last had disappeared. He dropped the cages

OH! MY BACK!

A stubborn backache that hangs on, week after week, is cause to suspect kidney trouble, for when the kidneys are inflamed and swollen, bending the back brings a sharp twinge that almost takes the breath away.

It's hard to work and just as hard to rest or sleep.

Doan's Kidney Pills revive sluggish kidneys—relieve congested, aching kidneys. The proof is an amazing collection of backache testimonials.

AN INDIANA CASE

S. B. Beckolt, 662 E. Meridian St., Portland, Ind., says: "My back ached terribly, my hands and feet were badly swollen, I had terrible headaches and morning sickness. I was so bad I had to get out of bed on my hands and knees, doctored without success until I began taking Doan's Kidney Pills. I improved steadily and before long was entirely cured."

Personality. Personality is just one's centralized experience of the world, and there is no way of making it greater except by making that experience greater and more centralized; in other words, being a bigger, broader, better man or woman. Every intellectual achievement, every moral victory, every bit of solid work, will leave personality richer, profounder, more delicate. In fact, to cultivate it, the plan is don't cultivate it. Profound Criticism. Kin Hubbard, the Indiana humorist—one of them, that is to say—once was assigned to cover a performance of "Uncle Tom's Cabin." HEARTS THAT BREAK
BY GENE WARD.

Hazel Manners was a very popular school teacher in working hours and a heartless coquette at her leisure. Her personality was magnet-like. It was not only that Hazel was pretty, that men were attracted to her. Her indifference to their lovmaking and her daring in conduct had much to do with her yogue.

Withal, Hazel was designing. To her men were mere instruments to carry out her will, to arrange her pleasures. And she used them freely and recklessly. She was not discreet. She made little effort to conceal her motives. Her suitors were constantly changing. They paid gallant court to her at first, but they did not remain long. But Hazel only laughed and tossed her blonde head smartly, "The world is full of men! What care I!"

When Ellis Wingate laid siege to Hazel's heart, it was said that he gave his soul to her. He was her slave. No cut was unkind enough to lessen his devotion. He bore his cross bravely, and Hazel was pleased. Here was one with whom she could "show off" her power. Here was one who would always be at her service. Here was one upon whom she could depend in any crisis. Her friends said that she "would break his heart." Never would he recover from her cruelty, they declared. Some went so far as to say that he might be a suicide when she finally discarded him.

"Why in the world do you hang about me?" Hazel asked in contemptuous tone one day before a group of admirers. "Can't you see that you annoy me?"

"Yes, I see that," replied the faithful Ellis, "but I love you."

Hazel laughed as if it were a joke. "I want you to stay away from here until I send for you."

"Very well," answered Ellis, and went away.

From that day on, the tide in Hazel's fortune began to ebb. She was losing her control over her pupils. They did not regard her with the same respect and love. There were difficulties with the school board. Rumors were afloat that she was seen too much with gay companions.

One evening when Hazel was motoring very late with a merry party along a lonely road at high speed, something unfortunate happened. Their automobile collided with another automobile, and a prominent man was killed. They tried to suppress the story, but were unsuccessful. All the details were headlined in the newspapers. Hazel was asked to resign from the teaching staff of the school.

She turned to her men friends to exorcise her from the blight of the unsavory publicity. One by one, she asked for advice and help. But none was interested. None was ready to help her in her extremity. Hazel in tears was quite another girl from Hazel in a coquette's mood. She thought of Ellis Wingate.

"Ah, why didn't I go to Ellis before! He is the one to help me!"

Then Hazel began to think. Ellis Wingate took on a new light in her eyes. She was cured of flirting. She had had enough of gay companions. She was afraid of the future that stretched so menacingly before her. She needed a strong man's arm to lean upon. What arm was there so strong as Ellis Wingate's? Was he not a splendid type of man? Would he not make an excellent husband? Would he not shield her from the voice of scandal? And she liked him. She had always liked him. Now that she was tired of trifling, she was ready to love him. Yes, to love him!

She telephoned to him. The answer came that he had moved. Where? He did not leave a forwarding address. Hazel was surprised. Ellis Wingate had lived in the same room for ten years—ever since she had known him. It wasn't like him to change—not even in the matter of residence. She telephoned his business address the next morning.

"Mr. Wingate is out of town for a few days. Will you leave a number?"

Here, indeed, was a changed Ellis! Several days passed, but Ellis Wingate did not answer her summons. Hazel cried. She did not sleep at night. Money matters were crowding her. She must have help. In desperation, she called Ellis Wingate again.

"Is this you, Ellis?"

"Yes."

"This is I—Hazel."

"Yes."

"Why—don't—you—re-remember—Ellis?"

"I remember perfectly, Hazel."

"Ellis—dear—I—I—can't—want—you—to—to—come—to—see—me. I need you."

"I'm sorry. Perhaps you didn't know that I have just returned from my honeymoon, and—"

But the telephone receiver had fallen from Hazel's quivering hand. And no friend was near to mend the break in her heart.

FLOWERS IN THE HOUSEHOLD
Simple Methods That Will Keep Them Alive, Fragrant, and a Pleasure for Many Days.

To make flowers last a week or more, four things are necessary. First, do not try to arrange them the moment you get them, but put them in a pail of water for a few hours, so that every stem will be under water up to the flower. Second, cleanse the vase thoroughly before putting in the flowers and change the water every day. Third, the cooler you keep the flowers the longer they will last. If you are too busy in the morning to enjoy them or have to go out for the afternoon, do not leave them in the living room, for they are not used to such a temperature. Every night put the vase in a cool place, or better still, plunge the stems up to the flowers in a pail of water. Fourth, cut about a quarter of an inch off each stem in the morning. It is more trouble to do this under water, but it pays. If you cut the stems in the ordinary way air bubbles get into the stems and impede the taking in of water.—Delineator.

Queer Ironing.
A writer in the Wide World magazine says that the most curious sight he saw at Cairo was men ironing clothes with their feet! The men were employed in the native tailoring establishments.

Except for the long handle, the iron were shaped like the ordinary flat-iron, only larger. A solid block of wood rested on the top of the iron, and on this the men placed one foot, guiding the iron in the desired direction by means of the handle. For the sake of convenience, ironing boards were raised only a few inches from the ground, and, however strange the method may seem to us, the work was done very well and very expeditiously.

BABY IN MISERY WITH RASH.

Monroe, Wis.—"When my baby was six weeks old there came a rash on his face which finally spread until it got nearly all over his body. It formed a crust on his head, hair fell out and the itch was terrible. When he would scratch the crust, the water would ooze out in big drops. On face and body it was in a dry form and would scale off. He was in great misery and at nights I would lie awake holding his hands so that he could not scratch and disfigure himself. I tried simple remedies at first, then got medicine, but it did no good.

"Finally a friend suggested Cuticura Remedies, so I sent for a sample to see what they would do, when to my surprise after a few applications I could see an improvement, and he would rest better. I bought a box of Cuticura Ointment and a cake of Cuticura Soap and before I had them half used my baby was cured. His head is now covered with a luxuriant growth of hair and his complexion is admired by everybody and has no disfigurements." (Signed) Mrs. Annie Saunders, Sept. 29, 1911.

Cuticura Soap and Ointment sold throughout the world. Sample of each free, with 32-p. Skin Book. Address post-card "Cuticura, Dept. L, Boston." Adv.

A Nervous Woman Finds Relief After Many Years

Women who suffer from extreme nervousness, often endure much suffering before finding any relief. Mrs. Daniel Kintner, of Defiance, O., had such an experience, regarding which she says:

"I had stomach trouble when I was eighteen years old that broke down my health, and for years I suffered with nervousness, headache, indigestion and nervous spasms. The spasms got so bad I would have them three or four times a week. After trying nearly every remedy I began taking Dr. Miles' Nervine, and I must say it helped me wonderfully. I have had no nervousness for several years."

MRS. DAN KINTNER,
1002 Pleasant St., Defiance, O.

Many remedies are recommended for diseases of the nervous system that fail to produce results because they do not reach the seat of the trouble. Dr. Miles' Nervine has proven its value in such cases so many times that it is unnecessary to make claims for it. You can prove its merits for yourself by getting a bottle of your druggist, who will return the price if you receive no benefit.

METHOD OF LOSING FRIENDS

Chronic Grumbler Quickly Becomes Known as a Person Whom It is Well to Avoid.

The chronic grumbler is not a good companion nor in any way an admirable person.

We fly from her as from a contagious disease. Nothing so certainly affects one's spirits as being in the constant company of a person who has a grievance.

The cherishing of discontent with our circumstances, business, dress, or any other thing in life soon robs us of beauty and marks the countenance with the lines of worry and ill temper that tell their own unhappy story.

Why anybody who is young should indulge in grumbling as a pastime is one of the puzzles that never are solved, yet such people there are, and we meet them in our sorrow almost every day.

If they happen to be passengers on a railway train they pile their bags and bundles on an extra seat for which they have not paid, are conveniently blind to the weariness of other passengers who are standing, and assume the aspect of martyrs when the conductor courteously but peremptorily informs them that they must make room.

On a street car they object to having the windows open, though the air may be laden with impurities from the congestion of the crowd; they scold and fret at the throng or the conductor and rail at Providence in general because everything in life is not arranged with a view to their comfort.

Don't be a chronic grumbler. It doesn't pay to waste one's precious energies that way.—Exchange.

SOLVED BY A COMPLIMENT

Natural Indignation of Adelaide Neilson Quieted When James O'Neill Made His Explanation.

Adelaide Neilson, who was universally acclaimed the greatest of Julietes, said that James O'Neill was the most gifted of all Romeoes, despite the fact that the American actor once did an indiscreet thing, which riled the actress and which might have lessened their friendship had it not been for the quick and superlative wit of O'Neill.

It was immediately following a performance of "Romeo and Juliet," after the principals in this immortal drama had made the customary end to their miserable existence. Miss Neilson, somewhat flushed, accosted O'Neill, who was walking toward his dressing room.

"Mr. O'Neill!" exclaimed the actress. "I think you did an awfully impolite thing in that last scene."

"What did I do?" asked the actor, trying hard to hold back a smile.

"What did you do? You know well enough what you did. When you pretended to kiss me you not alone kissed me, but you bit me."

"When did I bite you?" asked the actor.

"In my sleeping scene," said the actress, still ferocious, but losing ground.

"Ah, in the sleeping scene," said O'Neill. "Madam, the realism for your superb acting is appalling. I didn't bite you. You were dreaming!"

Browning's Disappointment.

Robert Browning's great hopes for his son were not fulfilled. One of the poet's disappointments was the rejection of a statue by "Pen" sent to the academy in the '80s.

Though Pen Browning's statue was rejected, two or three pictures painted in Belgium, clever in a hard, realistic technique, but very far from beautiful, were hung at the academy. Browning was sensitively anxious about the reputation of these works. On one occasion, when he was showing his son's pictures on a studio. Sunday, he said to a friend who mentally noted the saying with its rather strained modesty: "You see, people expect so much from him because he had a clever mother." One of the pictures, by the way, represented an exceedingly large pig. There was no kind of impression about it. It was a pig seen through no temperament at all.

Some Quaint Hotels.

The hotel that stands out most prominently in my recollection is one in Iquique, where, even while you are sitting at the dining tables, vendors come in from the streets to sell you food. At this same hotel they have two charges for baths—eight shillings if you insist on clean water and about four shillings if you are willing to take a second turn at the tub.

Another instance of a quaint hotel is in the town of Africa, in Peru. Here they are using at the present time the hull of an old American man-of-war which was taken inland by a great tidal wave many years ago and has since been fitted up as a hotel and is in great demand.—Philadelphia Inquirer.

Head the Cough That Hangs On. The seeds of consumption may be the cause, and a cough that hangs on weakens the system. Foley's Honey and Tar Compound checks the cough, heals the inflamed membranes and strengthens the lungs. E. D. Rountree, Stillmore, Ga., says: "Lagrippe left me a deep seated, hacking, painful cough which Foley's Honey and Tar completely cured." Hites Drug Store.

HOW TO RESIST

Chronic Coughs and Colds.

Stroop, vigorous men and women hardly ever catch cold; it's only when the system is run down and vitality low that colds and coughs get a foothold.

Now isn't it reasonable that the right way to cure a cough is to build up your strength again?

Mrs. Olivia Parham, of East Durham, N. C., says: "I took Vinol for a chronic cough which had lasted two years, and the cough not only disappeared, but it built up my strength as well."

The reason Vinol is so efficacious in such cases is because it contains in a delicious concentrated form all the medicinal curative elements of cod liver oil, with tonic, blood-building iron added.

Chronic coughs and colds yield to Vinol because it builds up the weakened, run-down system.

You can get your money back any time if Vinol does not do all we say. P. S. For Eczema of Scalp, try our Sazo Salve. We guarantee it.

Damage by Big Guns.

Six years firing of the big guns of the army posts has resulted in the submission of many curious claims for damages on the part of the farmers, cottagers and fishermen, aggregating no less than $92,618, and these claims, distributed among 220 persons, are now being settled by the disbursing office.

Naturally the largest items are for smashed window glass in cottages and farmhouses, but included in the list is one item of 46 cents for damages caused by the passage of artillery through a Filipino rice field. The largest claim is for $5,000 for damages inflicted by the blast of the guns of Fort Baldwin, Me., upon a summer home.—Lewiston Journal.

Willing to Oblige.

"I have had 20 offers of marriage in my short career," cooed the fair applicant.

The theatrical manager looked at her reflectively.

"I don't dispute you," he said. "And I don't object to the phrase, short career. But it will be a good deal better for my purpose if you make it 20 divorces and lengthen the career."

"Very well," said the fair one.

George Pattullo Tells of His Experiences Among Cowboys on the Mexican Border.

George Pattullo, the author of "The Sheriff of Badger," is a cowboy part of the year and works among the men of a Texas ranch. He tells a story of a time when he did not wear his literary laurels too conspicuously.

"A rather amusing thing happened at Naco, which is a town straddling the Mexican border," he said. "I had been working on the Turkey Track range as the guest of the owner while they were branding 5,000 head of cows and steers that had been sold. Some of us went to Naco at the end of the work for a little fun, and Lee Hardie, the boss, introduced me to the proprietor of the Fashion. An inebriated gentleman standing near seemed to ponder the name, as though trying to recall something. At last he came over to me.

"Are you," he said, "the guy that writes stories?" I admitted it, upon which his manner became very grave.

"Well," he continued, "you done put my brother in one of them pieces and I want to see you about it."

"I hastily assured him that his brother was wholly unknown to me. He looked doubtful and appeared to nurse a grievance, but allowed the matter to drop.

"Fred Hall, one of the cowboys who had worked with me on the squeezer, which holds each animal that is to be branded—it takes two lusty men to handle a squeezer when the steers are wild—led Lee Hardie aside, and I could hear them in hot debate.

"Aw, Lee," said Fred in much disgust, "what's the use of trying to tell me that? I tell you Pat ain't got enough sense to write stories."

THEY MILK ALL DAY LONG

Employees on Eastern Dairy Farm Are Specialist, Each Handling 35 Cows Daily.

On the average dairy farm the man who can milk fifteen or twenty cows twice a day is ranked as an excellent milker. Yet on a milk company's farm in New Jersey, ten operators are milking 350 animals twice daily, an average of 35 cows per milker. Ever since modern dairy husbandry began to approach an intensive development the problem of the milk farm has been how most efficiently to utilize the labor of the milking force between milkings. In the winter time especially this was a hard nut to crack.

The manager of this eastern dairy farm got his mind to working overtime and devised the plan of developing his milkers into specialists who milked for ten hours a day and performed no other labor. He corresponded with the managers and owners of other large milk farms in order to obtain their opinions concerning his new method, and found they did not believe it would work. In no wise discouraged, this progressive manager put the proposition before his milkers and asked them if they would be willing to test out the plan. They enthusiastically assented. His plan was successfully carried out is explained in the Popular Mechanics Magazine.

Strange Curiosities of Pain.

Pain sometimes behaves in a curious fashion. There was a soldier after the Boer war, who complained of excruciating neuralgic pains in his right foot. This very much amused his friends, for he had lost his right leg. The explanation was that the pain happened to be in the trunks of those nerves, which had sent branches to the foot. The other day a patient went to a doctor complaining of pain in the knee, and he was greatly surprised when the doctor told him, that the site of the affection is not the knee but the hip. We are all familiar with the pain under the shoulder blade which comes from an affected liver. The stomach, too, can produce pain in many parts of the body. A disordered stomach will give us pain as far away as the head, and, when one gets a cramp in his toe, it is often due to acidity of the stomach. Swallow a pinch of bicarbonate of soda and the cramp will disappear. An aching tooth will produce neuralgic pains in the face, and very often a violent pain at the back of the head is due to the faraway kidneys, which themselves may suffer no pain at the time.
