JOEL JOHNSTON RE-LEASED BY CT. COURT

Justice Court Had no Authority To Sentence Man

Joel Johnston sentenced by a Boyne City Justice to serve ninety days at Charlevoix under the Michigan Pure Food Law, was discharged Friday last, his time not yet out. It seems the offense was out of the power of the justice court, all said must being employed to do was to blind him over to circuit court. Atty Clink instituted habeas corpus proceedings as soon as circuit court was convened and secured his release.

When the case came up Inspector Mickle, of the State Pure Food and Dairy Department asked prosecuting attorney Fitch to allow him to handle the case, representing that he was a lawyer and familiar with the procedure. As he was a representative of the state and qualified to do so, Fitch acquiesced. He assured him of his willingness to be of assistance if needed and left the matter with Mickle. When sentence was passed Fitch knew it was void but there was nothing to do until circuit court was called. He wrote to the Attorney General regarding this case and his opinion is now on file at the prosecutor's office. It sets forth the same as held by the court.

As Johnson has served all but three weeks of the sentence nothing more will be done about the case in all probability. Had Mickle consulted Fitch the case would have gone to circuit court.

ARE INSTALLING MORE POWER

Our Electric Light Plant Aims of Efficiency.

The East Jordan Electric Light and Power Co. are this week unloading and commencing to install a new "Ideal" Compound Condensing Engine to be used for auxiliary purposes. The new engine is about half the capacity of the one at present in commission and is intended for use where the "load" is light, and during daylight on Sundays. While we are having excellent 24-hour service, it taxed the large engine by continuous running and only during daylight on Sundays was it shut down for any length of time for overhauling.

When the new plant was built plans were made for installing the auxiliary engine but owing to some litigation over the gas engines it was found necessary to leave these engines in position until the matter could be adjusted. A settlement favorable to the Electric Light Co. was recently effected and work of removing these engines has commenced.

President C. S. Abbott is endeavoring to give our citizens the best service possible and there is no question but what East Jordan's electricity service is ahead of any that our sister cities in Northern Michigan possess.

LAST OF DAVID WARD ESTATE

Final Holdings of Mammoth Estate Will be Sold Within a Few Months.

In a few months the last timber land holdings of the great D. Ward estate will be sold at public auction in Bay City. The sale is set for August 4th. The estate yet owns nearly 40,000 acres of land lying chiefly in the counties of Kalkaska, Otsego, Antrim and Crawford. Millions in value have already been divided among the heirs, and when this sale is completed the curtain will be rung down on one of those clear-cut instances of great gains from the monopoly of natural opportunities.

In his youth, during the days of the Civil War, and after, David Ward was a "land-looker." He roamed the Michigan woods "locating" sections of land in which the growth first of pine and afterwards hardwood was dense and accessible. Then he would go to the proper land office and claim ownership at $1.25 per acre.

Afterward lumbermen went to work and the cut logs were either floated down some stream or shipped by rail to the mills. Those who did the cutting often were not concerned whether their operations were all confined to their own land, but if the prospects were good they also cut on the adjoining government land. Occasionally, too, they not only cut their own and government land, but they slipped over into the nearby territory of rival corporations.

So little did these owners of these tree-covered areas think of the actual soil, that after the land had been denuded of timber, they declined to pay the taxes on it, and let thousands of acres revert back to the state.

David Ward was a many-time millionaire; David Ward's heirs were all millionaires. Some of them have wasted their wealth from the unearned increment, but the people of Michigan are the ones who furnished these millions and for many years they will continue to pay toll to the foresight of David Ward and the statutes that allow the monopoly of such a natural opportunity for labor and wealth as nature-grown forests.—Otsego Co. Advance.

THE RETURNING TIDE

For a number of years a strong tide of emigration from all parts of the United States has been flowing into the British Northwest. The development of the great grain fields of Montana and that section has sent the human tide of settlement beyond into Alberta, Assiniboia and Saskatchewan.

This great settler movement was systematically fostered by the Dominion government and the Canadian railroads, and it appeared as if the immigration tide would flow to the great, undeveloped northwest for many years.

The time has now arrived, however, when the tide has reached its maximum and the ebb tide is on. The long, cold winters, the protracted feeding season, the high cost of living, the isolation of the vast thinly populated areas and other causes have combined to cause many of the United States people in the Canadian northwest to dispose of their property there and return to "the States."

The far-away hills are greenest, and, as the poet says, "Distance lends enchantment to the new." The farther away an unknown or little known land is the more alluring it is. The Canadian government in addition to the offer of fertile lands at low prices per acre, offered many other inducements to settlers, such as light taxes, or remission of taxes for a term of years, in some instances, financial assistance, etc.

All these, however, are outweighed by the advantages the pioneers who went there may enjoy in their own land. This they are now realizing and that is why every train eastward brings back to the United States some of our citizens who are glad to get back home and some of their stock and equipment to begin life anew in some one of the many attractive farming sections of our own country.

Many of these returning farmers are settling in the west, others are finding locations in the great middle west, and still others are looking to the eastward. The solid advantages of Michigan are attracting some of them and thousands of them might, with good advantage, come to Michigan and settle on some of the unutilized lands, of which we yet have millions of acres, desirable for farming purposes that have never seen a plow.

We have millions of fertile lands and they lie within easy reach of the great markets and consuming centers of America. Nearly everywhere the settler will find schools, churches, and the other advantages of a pleasant, well balanced social life.

In reaching for new settlers our state might well make an effort to divert some of this returning tide to Michigan. The settlers are of a sturdy, energetic, desirable type, for only that class has the initiative to go as they have done to a new, far country in search of a home.

Stationery printed at this office is giving the best satisfaction. Last week we printed 500 statements for a man and by their aid he collected a small fortune. Two months ago a man bought of us some note paper and envelopes to use when writing to his sweetheart, and now he is married.

Another man forged a name on a check printed at this office, and is in jail. Another stole some of our paper with which to make cigarettes—he is dead. A young lady bought some of our paper to curl her hair on and now she has a beau. (We have only a little of this kind left.) By using our statements a person can collect old accounts, tell fortunes, cause rain, change the color of the hair, have teeth extracted without pain, find out the name of your future wife or husband, be successful in business and get elected to office.

When a preacher tells his congregation that he has a call from another church it may be a "roundabout way of asking for an increase in salary."

Prevent Stock from Eating Dead Bodies of Clover-Leaf Beetle.

From time to time there appears a small, grub-like creature that feeds on clover, a greenish, soft-bodied grub, the immature form of the clover-leaf beetle. It feeds usually at night on red clover, alfalfa, alfalfa, and sometimes on white clover and mammoth clover. Fortunately, nature has provided an agent which is likely to appear during excessive outbreaks of the pest, in the form of a fungus disease which destroys the grub, first impelling the dying insect to crawl up to the top of a grass spear and curl its body around the point. Here the grub dies and its body remains clinging there afterward washed off by the rains. The appearance of the fungus disease has usually been almost simultaneous with the coming of the grub so that the loss from the clover leaf beetle has been almost negligible thus far.

Now if this were the whole story we would be content to let well enough alone, but unfortunately the dead bodies of the grubs when killed, by the fungus disease are poisonous to stock, usually not sufficient to produce death, but often toxic enough to cause serious illness. It is therefore suggested that during the present outbreak of the grubs, stock be restrained from feeding on grass bearing such dead grubs (which will be found curled around the tips of grass spears), until after the weather has washed off their bodies and again made the forage safe.

The Sand Farm Dept.

Conducted By

The Sand Farmer

Mail Suggestions and Inquiries to

Louis P. Haight, Muskegon, Mich.

A Vacation Farm

The "Sand Farmer" would like to ask the readers of this paper two questions:

First, if you live in the country, do you think there are many city men, with families, who would like to spend the summer in a summer cottage outside of the city, where they could have a garden, a dozen hens, a place for the children to play in the sand, and where the style demanded that nothing but old clothes should be worn, and the boy or girl who could get the dirtiest between breakfast and dinner, or dinner and supper, won the prize for that day, that is, where there were no boys scolded because they got dirty if they cleaned up every four hours, this little vacation farm to be situated if possible, near enough to the city, so that the father could spend his evenings and Sundays with his family, so as not to interfere with work?

Secondly, if you live in the city, would you like to spend the summer months on a vacation farm with your family; or if no place was near enough for you to reach each night, would you like to have your family in the country, and you spend your week-ends with them?

What kind of a cottage would you want? (Please give a rough sketch, if possible, showing arrangement of rooms, piazza, sleeping porch, etc.) If this house was provided with running water for drinking and cooking purposes, a shower bath, inexpensive summer furniture, a cook stove, and a fireplace for damp days and chilly evenings, the garden plowed, cultivated and planted in season, so that you would have the season's vegetables as the season progressed, a kindergarten teacher to take the children from the hours of two until four, so as to give the mothers absolute rest during these hours, what rent would you be willing to pay?

Would you be willing to agree to wear, old clothes, or overalls, whenever at Vacation Farm, except on Sunday?

Would you be willing to play big brother to some boy between the hours of four and five, when you were at the farm?

I am asking these questions because I want to get a variety of practical answers for and against the following plan, which the "Sand Farmer" would like to test out at the "Sand Farm," and if practical, after a thorough test, have it adopted by the employers, or any body of men who realize that the future of this country depends upon the children of the so-called middle class. The millionaires and paupers are not producing the leaders in the coming generation, and this country must depend upon the men and women of moderate means for the leaders and workers of the future. Rob a boy of his childhood, either by putting him to work at an early age, or surrounding him by governesses and a retinue of servants, private schools, and more money than he can spend, and you will produce, in a large majority of cases, an anarchist and a spendthrift. The men who are doing the big things in the commercial life of this country today are largely country boys, who have developed strong bodies, active minds, capable of quickly adapting themselves to conditions and circumstances, and seeing far enough into the future to enable them to take advantage of opportunities as they arise.

This kind of young men are not to be found on the farms, and in the villages today, as they were fifty years ago. The city life and opportunities for culture, amusement, and money-making have drained the country of these boys and their parents. The city life with its excitement, cigarettes, late hours, is drawing heavily upon the vital strength of the men and women in our cities, and if one-half of what has been stated above is true, a back-to-the-land movement, which will give our city dwellers a chance to live in the open during the summer months, is desirable—but is it practical? Sometimes those who need medicine most are the last to take it.

It is proposed first, to form a stock company of men who will guarantee that any money subscribed for stock will be properly expended.

Secondly, to sell stock to employers who may wish to furnish their employees with a summer vacation farm at nominal rent, or by those who may be interested in the plan and would like to spend part of the season at the farm themselves, and allow the company to rent their cottage the balance of the time.

Third, that inexpensive cottages shall be built, supplied with good drinking water, a shower bath, a kitchen stove, cheap furniture and a fireplace, also a garden which shall be cared for by the company until the occupant of the cottage arrives, and the ground sowed, that the occupant may have fresh vegetables in his own garden, and gather them himself.

Fourth, all occupants of vacation farm shall agree to wear old clothes, or overalls, and endeavor in every way in their power to simplify the life at the farm, and decrease the living expenses; and they further agree that if they appear on the grounds clad as a city dude, they will make no objections if the other members of the farm throw them into the muck heap, and spoil the looks of their white flannels; as the idea of the plan is to get fresh air and sunshine at the lowest possible cost, and no dudes need apply.

Fifth, it is proposed to engage the services of a woman to care for the children during the hours between 2 and 4 p. m., that the mothers may have a vacation, and not be compelled to work harder than the lords of creation may enjoy themselves.

Sixth, the mothers will be asked to agree to dress their children in overalls or rompers, and not to scold the children if they get dirty, so that the children may play in the sand, slide down the sandbanks, paddle in the creek, swing under the trees, and have a generally free life, under the care and direction of a capable woman.

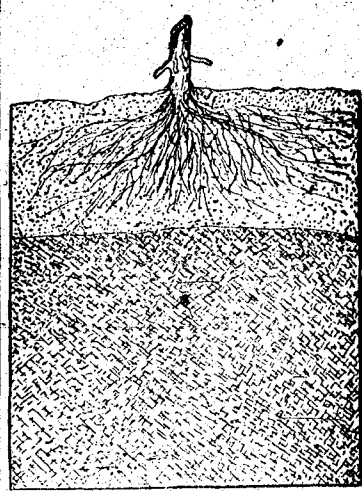

Seventh, every man at Vacation Farm is expected to be a big brother to some of the little fresh-air children who may be taken out of the cities for a little glimpse into country life, and some of God's fresh air and sunshine. The hour between 4 and 5, the big brothers and the little brothers are expected to get acquainted, and have a good play.

If this plan is put into operation it may be because you—and that means YOU, whoever you may be; reading this article—have given some suggestion, or pointed out some difficulty ahead. Whether you live in the city or country, will you not write the "Sand Farmer" your ideas of this plan before he tells you more about "Sam" and the "Sand Farm," which he will do next week?

The Advantage of Deep Drainage

R. J. Baldwin, Supt., Michigan Agricultural College

The advantages of tile drained land are never more manifest than when land is being fitted for spring planting. The water gets away more rapidly, the soil warms up sooner, and the seed-bed can be worked into proper form many days before the land drained by open ditches can be touched at all. Open ditches are an expensive nuisance that interfere with every operation connected with crop production. Unless constant effort is made to keep them dug out they are not operative when most needed.

In wet soil the roots grow near the surface and are left without water supply during drought.

The fact that deep drainage prepares the soil for a healthy growth of roots is even more important than the removal of the excess of surface water in the spring. Roots, as well as all plant tissues, require air, warmth, moisture in order to live and grow. The part of the soil which contains these things in the proper amounts will induce most rapid growth and soon become permeated with an interesting system of rootlets. Unless soil is naturally underdrained by a porous subsoil, or artificially by tile, the lower strata will contain an excess of water, filling up the air spaces and making the soil cold and unfit for root growth. As a result the roots will grow near the surface, where there is air and warmth. In case of drought later in the season, this will result seriously because the top layer of soil, where the roots are, will dry out and the plant, lacking deep roots, will suffer for the water it cannot reach. On the other hand, a plant growing in well drained soil will develop a deep root system little affected by changes in weather.

An additional advantage of a deep-rooted system is that the feeder roots have access to a food supply several feet below the surface, thus not depending entirely upon the fertility of the surface soil. Heavy rains and spring thaws wash much plant food into the subsoil and unless subsoil conditions are suitable for root growth, this fertility is lost. In this way deep drainage makes soils longer lived by increasing their depth, and thus bringing a greater supply of food within reach of plant roots.

GRAND RAPIDS, MICH.

With the Blue Valley Creamery Company in charge of the Dairy Information Service

The Dairy Farm

Perhaps there are those of our readers who contemplate building a barn. What may be offered in the line of general suggestions for the building of a barn for milk cows will apply equally as well to the barn calculated for the use of all the animals on the farm.

One of the most important points to keep in mind is drainage. The cow stable should be located where the drainage is best. Don't hunt out the lowest spot on the farm to erect the barn. On some farms the location of the barn tempts one to believe that the builder did this very thing. The drainage should also be away from and not towards the house or well.

Some farmers are so careless about the drainage of their yards about the stable that the animals must stand in mire up to their knees. The writer once visited a farm where the cows were standing in the mire up to their knees and the yard was located on a steep side hill. The manure had been allowed to accumulate at the lower side of the yard until it formed a dam thus obstructing the drainage. It was an awful mess to expect a milk cow to go through on her way to and from the barn. Of course this was not the fault of the barn's location, but serves to clearly demonstrate how extremely careless some men will be about the drainage of their barns and yards.

The distance of the barn from the house is a matter of choice. A really sanitary cow barn may be very close to the house without being offensive in the least. The other kind should be located at a distance from the house to compare with its condition.

The stable built all above ground is the one generally recommended by practical dairymen. It should have as good a foundation as you would put under your house. Many a good building has been ruined by being placed on a poor foundation. Whether the barn is to be one or two stories is also a matter of choice, the barn of two or more stories being more preferable on account of warmth for the cold weather. Ten feet is a good height for the cow stable. This affords plenty of air space and a higher ceiling is unnecessary.

The question of ventilation is all important. The King system is very satisfactory and can be highly recommended. It consists of air flues in the outer walls of the building opening near the floor, or at the sills on the outside and extending upward as high as the stable ceiling and there opening into the stable. These flues should have a slide by which the amount of air let into the barn can be controlled, as in case of a strong wind too much cold air may otherwise find its way into the stable. The impure air is taken out by flues which extend from near the floor of the stable to the highest point of the stable.

The reader who is contemplating building a stable can very profitably spend a few days visiting some of the best farmers in the vicinity for the purpose of studying the location and construction of their stables.

Cement Floors For Dairy Barns

A cement floor is a pretty damp bed for a milk cow. It is a better plan to use plank or a prepared flooring under the cows, using cement for the gutter and runways. Cement may be used for about 18 inches in front of the gutter where the cow's hind feet rest, laying the plank or other flooring flush with the cement. In case the cows must lie on cement, use lots of bedding.

Just as soon as a man neglects to study the needs of the business he is engaged in, just so soon will his chance for success be on the decline. This applies to the farmer as well as the creameryman.

Many people seem to think that in order to go into the dairy business they must give up their grain raising to a certain extent. Keeping a number of good dairy cows need not cause the farmer to raise less grain. As a matter of fact he can raise more grain with the same amount of labor and expense because his soil becomes richer every year. After he has raised the grain the dairy cow furnishes the best market for it that he can find anywhere. The western farmer, the one engaged solely in grain raising, will sell his grain to the local buyer, the railroad company must have its freight charges, the wholesaler will put the grain on the market and the eastern farmer will buy the same grain at a high price and feed it to his dairy stock. He makes money by doing so as he will testify. If the eastern dairyman can make money by feeding this high priced grain to his cows, does it not stand to reason that the farmer who produced it has a better opportunity for making money than the farmer who buys the grain after it has passed through two or three dealers hands.

Fruit Stems CLIPPED SHORT

By Edward Payson

With Fair Oaks Nursery Co., Traverse City, Mich.

Market your own product, was the keynote of the last State Horticultural meeting. This means higher prices for the producer and lower prices for the consumer. Besides your own gain, there is nothing in the whole field of economics which needs solution worse than that of relieving the stress and strain of the wage earner and salaried man of the cities. These are the ones who have reached the end of the rope in trying to live within their incomes. Give them relief and you can pose as the greatest philanthropist of your day.

In cutting out the middlemen you must know the following facts, say in potatoes: A price of 50 cents per bushel, sacked and on cars here, means 65 cents to the commission man in Chicago. This means a price of 75 cents to the grocer in that city and 85 cents in the suburbs. Then the suburban grocer sells to the consumer at $1.10 to $1.25 per bushel. By opening a store in the city and selling this consumer direct the farmer gets the long price, and can afford to sell as low as 95 cents to $1.

The home orchard ought to get more attention from fruit writers. We inspected one of these recently containing about one hundred trees. The farmer admitted they were good winter varieties such as Grimes Golden, Spy and Wagener, but said he could not spare the time from general farm work to do the necessary pruning, spraying and cultivating. As a result this particular orchard was given over to scab, caterpillars and every known pest. It took a careful search to find an eatable apple. He does not care to market his fruit as a general thing, and then only some fall when fruit is very scarce. Some day it will wake up and raise real fruit, instead of standing as a constant danger to his neighbor who may want to keep free from disease.

Be sure and destroy the egg masses of the tent caterpillars in your orchard at once or you will suffer untold damage to your trees. A little work now will save a hard bitter fight to rid yourself of the worms when they hatch out. Already the neglect of last year will greatly increase and multiply this pest. Act now!

When Michigan adopts the township or unit system of schools some surprises may be in store for the fruit growing sections. What is to hinder laying out experimental grounds, where small plots of strawberries, raspberries, currants, gooseberries, and even quinces and dwarf varieties of apples and pears may be tested under proper soil and cultural conditions. Certainly in sections where there are no experimental stations the public school is the logical place to test and introduce varieties suited to the vicinity. This sounds like a dream, but you have only to arouse the community spirit, in your section to get what true progress demands.

Speaking of school houses, we hope all country school teachers reading this will endeavor this spring to have some shrubs and trees planted in clumps around the school yard. Do this the last of April before the buds start. Scholars will always be glad to assist in this work of improving the grounds. Shrubs should be placed in clumps four or five feet apart and the trees fifteen to eighteen feet.

BORDEAUX MIXTURE

Division of Horticulture
Michigan Agricultural College

Bordeaux mixture is made of copper sulphate, lime and water.

These three substances are combined in various proportions, depending upon the kind of plant to be treated. For apples, pears, cherries and plums (except Japanese varieties) the preparation is usually four pounds of copper sulphate, with about the same amount of lime, to fifty gallons of water. Poison is added as needed. The copper sulphate will readily dissolve in two gallons of hot water, to which should be added enough water to make twenty-five gallons or one-half barrel. Do not use an iron or tin vessel to dissolve this in, as the copper sulphate will destroy it, and besides the iron will spoil the bordeaux. A wooden pail is good. Slake the lime into a thin paste and add water to make twenty-five gallons. Pour or let these run together into a third barrel, and the bordeaux is made. When it is emptied into the spray barrel or tank, it should be strained through a brass wire strainer to catch any of the coarse particles.

Whenever it is necessary to use a quantity of the mixture, it is desirable to have the lime and the copper sulphate in "stock solutions." A quantity of lime is slaked to a paste and held so by being covered with water. The copper sulphate, say fifty pounds, is placed in a clean gunny sack and suspended in a barrel (one with wood hoops is much to be preferred) containing twenty-five gallons of water.

This will dissolve in about a day. One gallon of this "stock solution" is equal to two pounds of copper sulphate. Always stir this solution before dipping any out, in order that what is used may be full strength.

A good quick way to combine these three substances is as follows: Put the amount of the "stock solution" of copper sulphate required in a barrel, and add enough water to make 25 gallons, or one-half barrel. Put about seven pounds of the lime paste in a barrel and add 25 gallons of water, making a thin whitewash. Pour or let these two run together into a third barrel, or directly into the spray barrel or tank, being sure to strain. When partly run in, test with ferro-cyanide of potash to make sure enough lime has been used. If Paris green, arsenate of lead, or any other poison is to be used, make it into a thin paste with a little water and add it to the bordeaux mixture, which is now ready to be used.

This chemical can be secured of any druggist. Ten cents worth dissolved in a pint of water will be enough for a season. Drop a very little in the bordeaux, if a reddish brown color appears more lime must be added. If there is no discoloration, there is enough lime. Ferro-cyanide of potash is extremely poisonous, so observe great care in its use.

Copper Sulphate Solution
Is copper sulphate dissolved in water. It is used by some growers to spray peach trees to prevent the leaf curl where a spraying for scale insects is not required. Two pounds of copper sulphate to 50 gallons of water is strong enough for this purpose.

FOREST SERVICE

U. S. Department of Agriculture

LIVESTOCK INCREASES ON NATIONAL FORESTS.

Figures showing the number of livestock for which the secretary of agriculture has authorized grazing permits for the ranges on the 160 national forests during the year 1914 have just been made public. Nearly 11 million animals can be grazed, including nearly 2 million head of cattle and horses, nearly 9 million head of sheep and goats, and about 65 thousand hogs. This means an increase for the current year of about 28 thousand more cattle and horses, and 347 thousand more sheep and goats, although the gross area of the national forests at the beginning of 1914 is almost a million acres less than at the beginning of 1913.

During 1913, according to the reports just compiled, more than 27 thousand stockmen paid the government for grazing permits on the national forests. For several years past the carrying capacity of the national forest ranges has been slowly rising, which, forest officers say, indicates an improvement in general grazing conditions and a better utilization of the forage resources. They claim that this is due mainly to the enforcement of better methods of distributing and handling stock.

On the lands recently acquired by the federal government within the Appalachian region of the east, regulated grazing has been undertaken this year on six distinct areas. The local stock owners who had previously used the land under lease from the former owners have readily accepted the change of ownership and appear to be favorably impressed with the methods employed by the forest service for grazing purposes. While the number of all animals authorized to graze upon these southern Appalachian forests is not large, it is the belief of the forest officers in charge of them that under careful supervision the lands will support more stock than they have in the past and that there will be considerable improvement in the individual animals, with a constant increase in meat production.

GRAND RAPIDS • MICHIGAN

It is profitable to have everything as near right as possible in raising chicks, as the number saved and extra growth will pay all extra cost necessary to give them the proper care and protection.

Air-slacked lime scattered about the house and yards is a splendid disinfectant, and will help to keep it sweet and clean and the flock healthy.

One of the most important points in chicken growing is to keep them growing. Every condition must be at its best and you must keep them so.

F. C. Ahlquist, a Barred Rock breeder, in an article in the Barred Rock Journal, we quote one paragraph. He hits the nail on the head and hits it hard all in favor of that grand old breed, when he said: "Beauty is great, but nothing succeeds permanently like the practical. America is proud of the Barred Rock hen. Of all our utility fowls and feathered beauties, none are as peculiarly American as our own Plymouth Rock and for that reason, if for no other, her standard requirements have been guarded zealously, only changes being allowed that would tend to make her a fowl of greater commercial possibilities, with a gradual development of her beauty. Today we have the most beautiful and practical fowl in the world. It will thrive and do well during any season in any climate."

The Michigan Poultry Breeder asks its readers to express their views on the best general purpose fowl, and one reader, a breeder of B. I. Rocks, we quote a paragraph from his article. It reads: "There is no argument on Reds being the best breed for the poor man or the man who must make his poultry pay. All he has to do with his breed is give them a reasonable amount of care and feed, they will do the rest."

Did you ever notice that the June or July hatched chicks are often marvels in the way of color, though not so large in size until perhaps their second year? I would just as soon have a fall hatched chick as one hatched in spring. Hens sit in the fall as well as in the spring, and so it must be nature's way. When the hen sits she usually does so through a desire to increase her family. Let nature take its course.

Third Annual Trip Of West Michigan Press Association Will Be Made On June 18, 19, 20, 1914

The Pencil Pushers and Wives Will Be Guests of Spring Lake Improvement Association and Grand Haven Commercial Club. Special Steam Boat Chartered For Eventful Trip Down Beautiful Grand River.

Grand Rapids—President Ernest B. St. of this city, and Vice President Albert E. Barden, of Conklin, officers of the West Michigan Press Association, have made the final arrangements for the third annual outing of the press-association.

All work and cares will be forgotten by the newspaper men and those who are the whole works of their plants will get out their papers a day earlier, others who have helpers will leave it in charge of them and hie away for the annual outing which promises to outdo, outclass and be the best trip ever taken by the association.

—We are to be the guests on this trip of two live Western Michigan towns, who entertain and will do it right. These two towns are side by side and they are not rival towns either, but work hand in hand and what one town lacks the other has, so we are assured of the best and not an idle moment will be spent. These towns are Grand Haven and Spring Lake. Grand Haven on the shores of Lake Michigan and at the mouth of beautiful Grand River while Spring Lake is at the mouth of Grand River and on one of the most beautiful lakes in the state. The Spring Lake Improvement Association and the Grand Haven Commercial Club, with their manufacturing interests will entertain us in the grandest and most interesting way.

The newspaper men are to meet in Grand Rapids on Thursday, June 18th, promptly at 1:00 p. m. we will be welcomed by our entertainers aboard the steamer, May Graham, which will be at the docks near the ball park on Market Avenue, Grand Rapids. The boat is a large river steamer with a capacity of 250 passengers which has been chartered by our entertainers and here with a 14 piece band they will entertain us down the beautiful Grand.

It is now expected that Governor Ferris and his private secretary, Wm. P. Nisbett, Senator Wm. Alden Smith, Secretary of West Michigan State Fair, Hon. Chas. F. Kennedy and publicity manager Paul Leake will accompany the Editors. Arrangements have been made for a moving picture man to accompany the Editors on the entire trip for the movies.

Imagine yourself on board the May Graham with everything in readiness for departure. The paddles swish and the May Graham swings out into the stream for a picturesque trip down Grand River. The steamer with broad, open decks, amply provided with comfortable chairs, affording every opportunity of viewing the ever changing beauty of the river scenery. Each mile brings forth new charm as the landscape swiftly changes and from beautiful banks adorned with nature's new carpet and plenty of large trees to high banks of white marl, clay and sand; from that to miles of waving march grass as we near the mouth. Some old and historic towns will be viewed from the steamer decks, among them are: Grandville, Jennison, Eastmanville, Lamont and many new towns that have sprung up of late years by resorters as this entire outing is in the paradise of the resort section of Western Michigan.

The first night will be spent at the Spring Lake Hotel, which is situated on high and dry ground, shaded by mammoth maple trees commanding a fine view of Spring Lake. Here is the famous Magnetic Mineral Springs in connection with the hotel. The evening will be spent with entertainment by the Glee Club, speaking and our first banquet. Friday evening will be spent in Grand Haven, as guests of the Grand Haven Commercial Club. The afternoon will find us on the banks of beautiful Spring Lake enjoying a motor boat race, which is being put on expressly to entertain us. The evening will be spent in Grand Haven, where all will do justice to a banquet, fit for kings. Saturday morning is arranged for and the time will slip away too fast when the ending of the trip will come and the Editors will begin to take the first trains out so as to reach their various

U. S. Agricultural Dept. Engineers To Study Road Conditions In Michigan

Washington, D. C.—Detailed studies of local road building systems in one hundred counties are now being carried on by the Department of Agriculture in co-operation with State highway departments and local authorities. The following counties in Michigan have been designated by the state-highway officials as those in which the investigation should be made: Dickerson, Kalamazoo, Monroe, Saginaw and Wayne.

The purpose of this study is to discover the points of excellence and defects in existing local methods of building and maintaining roads which will aid the state authorities to put local road management on a systematized basis. The co-operating state authorities have been asked to designate counties that present typical and exceptional features as to topography, character of road materials, methods of construction and maintenance, administrative organization, methods of road financing, and traffic conditions. From these lists 100 counties will be selected, and in these counties the division of road economics will make intensive studies.

This investigation is prompted by the fact that there is at present very little knowledge as to the most effective and economical methods by which a county can develop its roads. At present the methods of financing local road improvements vary from calling on farmers for a certain number of days labor in lieu of a road tax, or the use of county prisoners in road construction, to bond issues or maintenance of roads from dram-shop license funds.

The department will study all of these systems with the view to determining what system or combination of systems works best in actual practice.

There is, moreover, at present no standard system of keeping accounts for road building and maintenance, and as a result, while some counties know to a penny the purpose for which money was spent, others have no definite check or reporting system. Among various counties with the same conditions, cost for excavation or other labor is anything but uniform, and many counties, because of the absence of definite knowledge, fail to use local and cheap materials and construct roads which are unnecessarily expensive for their purpose, or which will wear out before the bond issues are redeemed. The investigation will include a careful study of the use of convict labor in road construction.

In connection with the scientific study, the department's highway engineers will advise freely with local officials as to improvements, and thus give each county visited the advantage of direct co-operation, engineering supervision and assistance.

These investigations, it is believed, will yield important economic data bearing especially on the benefits and burdens of road improvement, and showing the extent to which financial outlay under given typical conditions is justifiable.

The heads of state highway departments are manifesting great interest and are co-operating cordially in this work. These data when obtained will be published and thus made accessible to all county and state road officials.

WEST MICHIGAN BANKS MAKE AGRICULTURAL DISPLAYS

Traverse City—The idea of agricultural exhibits by the banks of Western Michigan is getting a firm foothold. Last year no less than a dozen different institutions conducted exhibits of more or less pretensions. A Western Michigan man who had occasion to inspect a number of these exhibits, noted the success with which they were received by the people, and prophesied that the time is near at hand when the idea of agricultural exhibits by financial institutions will have an influence upon bank architecture. That is, that banks putting up new buildings, will make provisions which will permit the making of displays of farm products. Now comes word from Fremont, that the Old State Bank of that city is about to rebuild its home that there may be more room in which to carry on the extensive work that has been undertaken in behalf of the agricultural development of the surrounding country. This bank has been putting on fruit exhibits for five years, and with great success.

Flint—Patrons of Flint banks will be the only qualified electors in a straw vote to be taken to decide the question of whether banks will close Saturday afternoons. The bank employes have petitioned directors for the half holiday and the directors decided on the referendum.

METALLURGY BUILDING, COLLEGE OF MINES.
The work in Metallurgy and Ore Dressing are given in one main building, known as the Metallurgy Building, erected in 1905, and in two smaller buildings, the mill and the roasting plant. The advanced practice courses in this department are given during the first six weeks of the summer term, which begins this year on June 9. In the course in Metallurgy, a roasting test is run on sulphate ores, and then two weeks are spent in running tests on reverberatory and blast furnaces at the works of the Michigan Smelting Company, two miles out of Houghton. In the Ore Dressing course, a run is made on a supply of gold ore from the Porcupine district in Ontario, Canada.

FLY SCREENS, FLY TRAPS AND FLY POISONS.

In spite of the fact that Mr. Fly has been the subject of thousands of bulletins, lectures, press notices, moving picture shows, etc., we will have thousands of them next summer. The next best thing after preventing the fly is to keep him out of the house, catch him or kill him. Following are some suggestions as to how this may be done:

Keep garbage cans closely covered unless you have a fly-trap attached to them. Such traps may be obtained at most hardware stores.

Screen the doors and windows of your home especially those of the kitchen, dining room and pantry. If you cannot do this, at least screen the food itself, especially the milk in which germs multiply with more than ordinary rapidity.

Screen sick rooms, or at least the bed of the patient, and do not allow flies to have access to his excreta which should be treated with chloride of lime or some other disinfectant.

Screens are especially needed in towns which have no sewer system, or in which the sewers drain into a stream on the banks of which flies swarm attracted by the filth from the sewers.

If flies do get into the house in spite of screens, kill or trap them. Sticky fly-paper and a variety of traps may be used, as well as poisoned fly-paper.

A cheap and reliable fly poison, which is not dangerous to human life, is bichromate of potash in solution. It may be bought at any drug store. Dissolve one dram in two ounces of water; add a little sugar and place about the house in shallow dishes.

To clear rooms of flies, use carbolic acid, heating a shovel and pouring on it 20 drops of the poison. The vapor will kill the flies.

Flies pass the winter hidden in cracks and holes in attics and cellars. Many of these may be killed in the spring by the two methods just described.

SHORT STATE STORIES

Traverse City—John Warket speared a rainbow trout in the Boardman river and his act was witnessed by Deputy Game Warden William Kettle, who was standing on the bank, unknown to the fisherman. The sport cost Warket $7.75.

Port Huron—It is probable that the Indian reserve a few miles south of Sarnia will be purchased by the Canadian government immediately and then sold to manufacturing interests for the erection of factories. The Solvay company of Detroit is said to be negotiating to secure land on the reserve.

Saginaw—John Brownlee, 45 years old, who has been working for the American Smelting and Refining company at Aguas Calientes, Mexico, for the last eight years, has arrived here after an exciting trip through disturbed Mexico. He says his company had to pay the federal government $250,000 for a special train to take out refugees.

Muskegon—Scores of farmers in this county have signed their willingness to make the experiment in forcing apples this year for the West Michigan Development bureau, the officials of the booster organization figuring that by forcing apples Western Michigan will be able to make much better showings in exhibits at the early shows staged in various parts of the country.

Lansing—Governor Ferris has appointed James V. Cunningham, state labor commissioner, and Charles H. Hogadone, deputy commissioner, delegates to attend the joint meeting of the International Association of Factory Inspectors and the International Association of Labor Commissioners, to be held at Nashville, Tenn., June 8-12. State Superintendent of Public Instruction Fred L. Wright and Deputy John M. Munson have been appointed as delegates to the fourth international congress on home education, to be held in Philadelphia September 22-29.

Flint—After being traced all over the United States for a year, George W. Ferris, formerly engaged in newspaper circulation work here, has been arrested in Billings, Mont., charged with embezzling $900. Under Sheriff Crego has gone to bring him back.

Lansing—The state railroad commission has fixed June 3 for the final hearing on freight rate increases. The hearing will begin at 9 o'clock in the morning. Those cities which have intervened are given until May 26 to file their briefs.

Lansing—Thomas Evison, sentenced from Detroit, February 11, 1911, to serve from three to six years in Jackson for assault, has made application for a parole, and the state board of pardons is investigating the case for the governor. Judge Phelan of Detroit recommends the man for parole.

THE LESSON OF MEMORIAL DAY

Since Alexander crossed the Hellespont the grandest army that ever assembled under a flag was that which carried "Old Glory" to victory from 1861 to 1865. It was not only great in numbers and valor, it was great in its intelligence and its loyal devotion to a just cause. Gen. Sherman, one of the greatest military strategists in the world's history, said that he could find a brigadier general in the ranks of any regiment of his great army.

Decimated by bullet and shell it was still a great army that marched in review before the president after Appomattox. Today it is but a remnant of that phalanx that remains. By these will be borne next Saturday to the Silent City of the dead the flag which they carried in battle.

Their heads are now bowed, but they carry the flag proudly—the flag that typifies the power of a united and mighty nation. To the battles of Lepidus, the day have been added Santiago, Manila and Vera Cruz—battles fought for the vindication of national honor and the enfranchisement of enslaved races appealing to high heaven for justice.

Veterans, walk erect again! Square your shoulders as you did in '61! Bear the flag aloft! Yours is a noble heritage—the love and devotion of a Nation. Your days are numbered in the land for which you fought, but a grateful people will long remember your valorous deeds.

God bless the Grand Army of the Republic.—Charlevoix Sentinel.

$100 REWARD FOR WOMEN'S BRAINS

Every Housekeeper in America has a Chance to Win It.

We are continually seeking ideas to develop a new Quaker Valley Household Labor Saver or improve an old one. We have recently just recently we confess it—learned to turn to women.

Instead of men for this sort of assistance. And that's the story in a nutshell of how the Clara Kling Clothespin Bag came into being. We paid a woman a handsome sum for this invention. And yet it's such a simple notion! You'll wonder why you did not think of it yourself. The reason probably is that you have never been properly encouraged to use your inventive talent.

It is for you—it is for every woman in America. Now we are looking for a STANDBY SCRUBBER—that wonderful little machine that takes all the hard work out of keeping the house clean—no more lame backs, no more sore hands, no more crouching and wading the line out on the hands and knees to clean a floor.

The Standby Scrubber is a man's invention. We wouldn't it be a woman's achievement to the credit of womankind if YOU could improve it? We believe it is possible for you to suggest some little thing that would make it more perfect. Now for every such suggestion that you send us, and that we accept, looking to the improvement of the Standby Scrubber or the Clara Kling Clothespin Bag, or for any other idea that you may have, we will give you $100.

We know you will be delighted with the Standby Scrubber, and you may be possible for you to suggest some little thing that would make it more perfect. Now for every such suggestion that you send us, and that we accept, looking to the improvement of the Standby Scrubber or the Clara Kling Clothespin Bag, or for any other idea that you may have, we will give you $100.

One Hundred Dollars in Gold

Every lady purchasing a Standby Scrubber is entitled to share in this distribution of $100 prizes. With every Scrubber a Clothespin Bag will be included free. When you send in your suggestion you must give us the date of the patent stamped on each article and the name of the dealer from whom you purchased them. Mail your suggestions to L. E. STEVENS, president, Quaker Valley Mfg. Company, Aurora, Illinois. Buy your Standby Scrubber and get your Clothespin Bag free from your local dealer. The price is $1.50.

Not all dealers sell the Standby Scrubber, so, if you wish, upon receipt of the price, we'll ship you one by parcel post, prepaid, and include a Clara Kling Clothespin Bag free of charge. Remember, if you have any good labor-saving notion for the home, it is worth $100 dollars in gold, provided you are an owner of a Standby Scrubber. QUAKER VALLEY MFG. COMPANY, AURORA, ILL.

There is an interesting story in connection with the introduction of a four year course in agriculture to the Manton high school. It is said that one of the Manton barbers turned the scales, when the subject was under discussion by the school authorities. There were those who questioned the wisdom of introducing scientific methods and others who were anxious to see an agricultural course established. The barber however, whose name is Geo. Rusk, assured the school men that he had tried scientific methods upon his alfalfa field on the outskirts of the village and the results had been so wonderful that there could be no question about scientific methods, inasmuch as his alfalfa field was considerably better than those of his neighbors who had not tried scientific methods. Thereupon the school board voted for a teacher of agriculture.

Ridiculing an Explorer

The explorer has ever had a hard time convincing his contemporaries of the truth of the stories he has brought back from his long and arduous travels. Marpo Polo was set down as a prince of liars by his fellow countrymen. Centuries later the stories of the people of the thirteenth century questioned most were discovered to be true. Paul Du Chailly encountered open skepticism when he described the gorilla. Sir John Mandeville had a unique experience. The facts he related about the shape of the earth were ridiculed. But he garnished his truth with lies which his contemporaries swallowed without question.

Consequently it is not surprising that some learned geographers of London have greeted the announcement of Col. Roosevelt's discovery of a Brazilian river with skepticism, mingled with a suspicious amount of ridicule. There is evident malice in some of their comment, compelling the inference that they recall the colonel's severity on alleged nature fakers. They insist that the unknown stream brought to publicity by the colonel, must cross many other charted streams and that it must run up hill if it follows the course described in the explorer's preliminary statement. In proof of their contentions they point to maps which have long been accepted as authoritative. Being expert geographers they resent an invasion of their domain by the great specialist of things in general, things past, things present and things to come. Too much of professional hostility appears in their strictures. They would be more effective if the assumed pretence of an open mind and were more mildly skeptical.

But the colonel will accept the challenge. What will he do to the armchair geographers will be a plenty. He will doubtless refer to some of the authoritative maps of the fourteenth and fifteenth century, showing the gobline and griffins that hovered about the jumping-off place of the world. He will not have to depend on a few unstable Eskimos for verification of his story. He had a goodly company of civilized beings and they doubtless kept accurate records. He will show that the English maps are worthless, representing the guesses of men who had not been within hundreds of miles of the places they charted. He will demand a detailed account of the map-makers' explorations. He will want to know how many men they lost in the rapids, how many pounds they lost from fever and how many of those peculiar boils that interfere with a man's comfortably standing they suffered from. He will also argue that the river may have changed since the maps were made. He will have Americans with him in the contest, with the single exception of Dr. Cook, whose claims the colonel repudiated. And even Dr. Cook may remain silent, for the colonel's dear friend, Senator Poin dexter, has taken up the cudgels for Cook in the United States Senate, asking that congress give him a medal for discovering the North Pole. Those British geographers have rushed in where angels would fear to tread.

YOUNG MAN A WHITE PLAGUE VICTIM

Lavater Meech Passes Away at his Home, Wednesday Night

Tuberculosis that dread disease, claimed another victim in our city this week when Lavater Meech, son of Mr. and Mrs. A. E. Meech succumbed to the disease Wednesday night.

The young man was first taken with the disease a couple of years ago. In spite however of good medical attendance he gradually grew worse and several months ago he went to Texas and other southern states where he hoped the climate would be beneficial. He found the climate there not what was expected and gradually grew worse. A few weeks ago he returned home, Mrs. Meech going to Chicago to accompany him the balance of the trip. He seemed to recover somewhat upon his return and it was hoped by his many friends that he was on the road to recovery.

Deceased was born at Norwood May 20th, 1893 being a little over twenty years of age. He was well known and a popular young man at Charlevoix where he attended the High School there. Funeral services will be held at his late home this Friday noon conducted by Rev. A. D. Grigsby, pastor of the Presbyterian church. Interment will be made at the Charlevoix cemetery.

When a man starts down hill he finds everything greased to assist him.

The more dollars a man has behind an argument the more convincing it is.

Briefs of the Week

The Banks of our city will be closed this Saturday—it being a legal holiday.

County High School Athletic meet in this city this Friday forenoon and afternoon.

The Champion—Richmond Players at the Temple Theatre first three nights next week.

On Saturday the 23rd, Edward Gerner and Miss Phoebe Akins were united in marriage at the Presbyterian parsonage by Rev. A. D. Grigsby. Misses Ethel Northon and Violet Grigsby attended the happy couple.

Pomona Grange will meet with Boyne River Grange at the Town Hall on Thursday, June 11, 1914. State Master J. C. Ketcham has promised to be present and give an address. All members should be present and hear this.

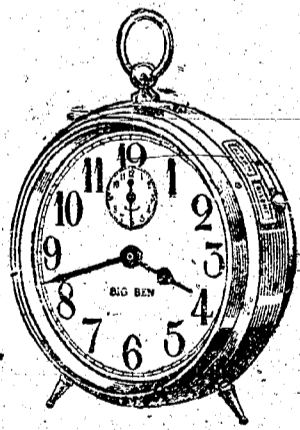

Ladies, we know you will be interested in the fashion department this week and for this reason we call your particular attention to the offerings. Expressly for our paper, direct from the style centers comes this week's offerings.

Earl Batterbee and Miss Aura Keller were united in marriage at Charlevoix, Wednesday at the Methodist parsonage by the pastor, Rev. Walker. Mr. and Mrs. Mason Clark accompanied the couple to Charlevoix. Mr. Batterbee has been employed at the Malpass hardware a number of years, and the newly-weds will make their home in this city.

This Saturday will see Memorial Day observed in East Jordan. Features of the day's program will be the East Jordan Military band in their new uniforms and East Jordan Company X militia also in uniform. Company X is in charge of the day. Hon. Frank D. Scott of Alpena—our former state senator and candidate for congressional honors—will deliver the Memorial Day oration at the cemetery in the afternoon.

Elmer Middleton, aged forty, was electrocuted while cleaning up a yard at Northport, Tuesday. He had just completed building a cottage and was clearing away the debris when he grasped an over-hanging wire which had blown down. The recent storm there blew a tree over the high tension wires of the Electric Light Co., crossing the lines and throwing the heavy voltage into the house wiring. Over and over people are warned to leave wires alone that have been blown or torn down in a storm. Notify those in charge of the wires at once, and they will take care of the break. In our city alone there are several hundred miles of copper wire stretched, and in a storm like we had Tuesday night, more or less damage is done to this wiring and neither the Electric Light nor Telephone Co. can tell where the different troubles are without someone reporting same. The only other way is to patrol the entire lines and this takes considerable time. SAFETY FIRST.

Thrilling, Mysterious and Interesting

"I have traced that wad to Crewe," Shaughnessy told the inspector when they were in the street. He had already related the story of it that concerned the happenings on the train, and at Monterey. "Branton wanted it kept quiet, and it has been, but it's a cinch that Shannon was on that car, and got it, and it's a cinch that Crewe's got it now."

"I wouldn't know it any better 'n I do if he shook it under my nose. It isn't any pipe-dream, either, to guess that maybe Crewe was on that train with Shannon when he got it, and that Crewe worked that extra-Herald-in-the-car-seat act."

"Nonsense. If he had been there, if he had known that Branton had the money with him pinned inside of a Herald, he wouldn't have known which seat in the car Branton would occupy."

"I don't know about that. Men mostly take the same seats in cars when they're vacant. You'll see it done day after day in the Subway and also on the L."

"Admitting that, then, he couldn't have known that Branton would move away from the window and sit on his own paper, uncovering the other one."

"Maybe not; but Crewe is slick enough, and catlike enough in his motions, to have slipped forward from the rear end of the car and to have swiped Branton's paper and left the other one in its place when Branton was looking out of the window. Anyhow, inspector, Crewe's got gall enough to accept that invitation you left him with Christy."

"If he does show up, I wish you'd keep him long enough to send for me. I'd like the pleasure of going through his clothes just once to see what he's got on him."

"Who is Crewe, anyway, Shaughnessy?" the inspector asked in a manner that implied more than the words meant. "If I were your chief, I'd put you on him and tell you to look him up, thoroughly."

"I've tried that. He hasn't got any record—that anybody can find. He's the smoothest proposition that ever came over the ridge, and that's no dream."

They parted at the next corner. Shaughnessy returned to the flat on the East Side. He found the woman still reading the book that had absorbed her when Crewe made his unexpected call, but she put it aside and raised her boldly handsome eyes to his when he stood beside her.

They were man and wife, but Shaughnessy was a headquarters detective, and "Shannon's Jess" had a police record. So it hadn't been deemed wise to take the public into their confidence.

"Well," she said, "was it Crewe?" "Without a doubt, Jess."

"Did you get what you went after?" "I got nothing—not even Crewe himself."

"What did you have in those weights that sent Crewe here to get them, and that shot you off on his trail like a sky-rock?"

"Some papers, Jess, but important ones."

"Come off the perch, Brian. Paper money, more likely, and a wad of it. How much, Brian? You're pretty smart, but you ain't smart enough to let me play the game with you, when you really need me. We'd have had the wad yet if you'd let me in on the deal. How much was it?"

"Fifty thousand dollars in ten thousand-dollar bills in one of the brass weights, and—"

"Stop the swing, Brian. I'm dizzy."

"It's the truth. And there was thirty thousand in the other one."

"For the love of Pete, Shaugh, where'd you get it?"

"Never mind that. The point is that I haven't got it now, and that Crewe has. The big bills won't be any good to him unless he can find a way to echre Branton into buying 'em back. But the rest of it—"

"What's the matter with the big ones?"

"The banks have got their numbers, and they're Oh, let's forget it for a while. Oh, my, near crazy with it all. What have you been up to, Jess, all day?"

"I've had a fall—from one of the real things, too; one of the swells, from Swelltown, and I'm to have my portrait painted in oils. My, but he was some ginger! Here's his card—Mr. Birge Moreaux, Um-tee-um."

"I'm to sit for him as a model for Juno in a work of art that he is creating," she added with fine mimicry. Shaughnessy sat staring without answer, and she went on: "I saw me in the street and realized instantly that I fulfilled his dream of Juno—anyhow, that's what he said. And he followed me home. And when he saw the address, he made bold to come inside. And when he saw the way the flat is furnished, he wasn't s. flo about it."

"But he remembered the street and number again, and offered me a hundred dollars for three sittings—fifty down, and fifty when he calls three strikes, and out. Did I take it, says you?" She bent toward him. "He's a swell, all right, with money and jewels, and other things worth having; and if I don't get the lay of the land, and a few wax impressions, and so forth, while those sittings are going on, you can say that I'm as dead as Shannon is, believe me! Say, Brian, it's a pity that Shannon's dead, ain't it, honey?"

"You'd do nothing of the sort, Jess," the man said savagely. "Want I? You watch my smoke, mister. There's another thing that I haven't told you. Mistuh Boige Moreaux told me where you got that wad, Brian."

"Wh-a-a-t?" "Well, he told me all about how it was lost yesterday, and when you told me just now what was inside of those weights I could guess where you got that, couldn't I? Gee, but it's too bad that Shannon's dead! I wondered what killed him."

She laughed aloud.

CHAPTER XVI.

Postmarked 5 P. M.

"Shannon passed it up to somebody," was Shaughnessy's greeting from the inspector at headquarters the following morning. "Branton's secretary, Bingham, had me on the phone half an hour ago. They've had a letter offering to return the five ten-thousand-dollar bills for an even ten in smaller bills, and no questions asked."

"Crewe. He's been quick about it," was Shaughnessy's thought, but he did not speak.

"I sent Holderness down to get the letter, and to look up the postmark, and letter-box, where it was dropped, and all that. The envelope was addressed with printed letters cut from a newspaper and pasted on. Just sent to G. Mortimer Branton, New York City. The down-town address was added in the postoffice station, and the red stamp which says: 'Deficiency in direction' supplied by the New York postoffice, so there should be no difficulty in discovering from what box it was collected."

"I could tell you who sent the letter, now," Shaughnessy said boldly. In that moment he had made up his mind to play the game for the limit. "It was Crewe."

"Holderness made that gallery play, too. But you've got to prove it."

"I'd like to have your authority to tell Crewe to come here to see you, inspector."

"I'll give you the authority when you show me a reason for it. We're not working off personal grudges in the matter, Shaughnessy. That reminds me that I might drop you a word of warning on that very point."

"Yes, somebody's knocking you, probably it's Crewe. You seem to have it in for him, and so he's getting back at you."

"What about?" "Clearly, at the telephone, received a message for me a little while ago. It was 'Tell the inspector to ask Shaughnessy what he was doing at the flat of Shannon's Jess last night, and what was inside of the two brass clock-weights he had there. What about it, Shaughnessy?'"

"Oh, that was a frame-up of mine, inspector." Shaughnessy laughed aloud. "It came mighty near working, too. Only I didn't get there quite soon enough. If I had, I'd have got Crewe all right. I dropped enough to lead Crewe to think that Shannon might have passed the stuff on to his former wife, and I told him that once we found some swag at her place, when she lived in Houston Street, inside of some hollow clock-weights."

Shaughnessy lied glibly. "Then I went to see Jess and framed it up with her. But it didn't work. I got there too late."

The inspector did not appear to pay much attention. "You'd better call up Branton's office and connect with Holderness," he said; and Shaughnessy saluted and went out.

But he was cold to the finger-tips, although the morning was hot and sultry. He was cold inside, with a sudden fear of Crewe and Crewe's methods. He had warned Crewe last night that he would "get him," and the saloon-keeper was evidently not letting grass grow under his feet in an effort to "get" the operative first.

He telephoned to Holderness, heard what his side-partner had to offer and then brought Rat from one of the cells and took the youth outside on the street with him. He signaled, unseen by Rat, to one of the new men of the bureau, and the new man trailed after them.

"Rat, me loose, are you?" Rat said to Shaughnessy, with a furtive but shrewd glance from the corners of his eyes. "You want something for it, what is it?"

"I know that you were stalling last night when you led me that chase down Second Avenue, Rat, and kept me from getting to the place where I was going. I had to collar you and send you down here and that took time, and that was what you were playing for. Well, you got it. Now take your choice between joining a year on the Island, and telling me all about it. Take it or leave it, Rat."

There was another furtive glance from the corners of those bright, ferret-eyes.

"Crewe sent me to watch for you, and lead you off. That's all I know. I dunno where he was going. What his lay was."

"Who did Crewe have with him?" "Jes, me."

"There were two of them, Rat. Who was the other one?" "Search me. 'T other one must 'a joined him after he sent me away," Rat lied. "Crewe ain't takin' too many boozim friends into his think-works. You know that."

Shaughnessy nodded. "You can beat it now, Rat," he said. Then he stood still and watched the youth as the latter shot around the nearest corner, with the new man from headquarters following him. "Harper's got his work cut out for him, trailing that kid," he commented.

He went into the Subway, then, and twenty minutes later met Holderness in the street near Branton's office.

"I guess it's Crewe all right," Holderness said, and gave Shaughnessy the letter. It was well that Holderness's eyes were directed elsewhere at the moment, for one glance at the postmark on the envelope gave Shaughnessy the hardest shock he had yet received in connection with the missing $81,500.

The envelope was stamped 6 p. m. the preceding day—five hours, at the least calculation, before Crewe obtained possession of the brass weights.

CHAPTER XVII.

Shannon's Jess.

Birge Moreaux called out: "Come in!" without turning his head to discover who would take advantage of the permission. "Don't move—not even the direction of your eyes," he added hastily to the model who was posing for him.

He wore a loose blouse that had been made stiff by paint where he had wiped his brushes against it. The thumb of his left hand was grasping a palette—his right hand held a brush that was performing wonders upon a canvas in front of him.

Shaughnessy entered, closed the door, and stood still, waiting. He seemed to have dropped the bearing of a plain-clothes man outside the door. He was the courteous, gentlemanly operative who had gone out to The Fells, at Monterey, with Bingham.

He shot only one comprehensive glance toward the model whose back was turned to him. That was, perhaps, why he thought it wise not to speak until Moreaux's eyes had been withdrawn, and turned in his direction. He did not care to startle her by the sound of his voice so long as the eyes of the artist were upon her.

Moreaux seemed equally determined not to speak, or else his interest in the work he was doing made him forget. Shaughnessy became uneasy and cleared his throat tentatively, but softly. Moreaux turned.

"Hello, Shaughnessy," he said with cordiality, and went forward with extended hand. Over his shoulder, but without turning, he added: "You may rest, Miss Stacey."

Stacey was the name over the bell at the flat where Shaughnessy's wife, "Shannon's Jess," wore diamonds and expensive gowns while she read trashy novels.

"Is there something new in regard to the lost fortune? You wouldn't have looked me up otherwise, would you?"

Jess, relieved of her uncomfortable attitude, walked around behind the artist, and then looked past him toward Shaughnessy, closing one eye in a definite wink as she did so. Then she paid no more attention to either of them, but strolled about with apparent aimlessness, looking at the paintings and curios until at last she passed into another room and disappeared.

"Mr. Branton has received a letter offering a return of the stolen money upon conditions. I thought you might care to see it. Here it is. It was stamped Madison Square at five o'clock yesterday."

The operative spoke loud enough for Jess to hear him in the adjoining room.

Moreaux read the letter through and gave it back.

"You will respond to it, of course," he said. "You've only to insert two words in the newspaper named, tomorrow morning, to do that. But, really, Mr. Shaughnessy, I have no interest in the matter, you know. And—er—I'm very busy."

It was plainly a dismissal, but Shaughnessy came a step nearer to the artist. He jerked his thumb toward the open doorway, past which the model had disappeared.

"Where did you get her?" he asked.

"Her? Oh, you mean Miss Stacey. That's rather an impertinent question, isn't it, Shaughnessy?"

"Do you know who she is, and what she is—was, rather? Her name isn't Stacey, it's Shannon. She was Shannon's Jess. She's the woman I referred to when you heard me say, in speaking of Shannon, that even his wife went back on him. She was Shannon's wife all right, and she's been on the level, so far as we know, since she left him. But that's who she is, all the same."

"How did you know that she was here posing for me?" "I didn't, till I walked in and saw her. She's a handsome woman, all right, and I don't wonder that you wanted her for a model—and I guess she's quit the graft for good. You needn't tell her."

He stopped abruptly in what he was saying, and crossed the room, swiftly toward a small table that was littered with a confusion of things, among which were two shining brass clock-weights. He took them in his hands and turned.

"Where did you get these?" he asked sharply and in a tone that was a demand rather than a question.

"Now that's odd," Moreaux replied, shrugging his shoulders. "Miss Stacey asked me the same question. I don't see anything remarkable about them; do you?—except that it's remarkable that they should have been thrown away."

He stepped forward and took them from Shaughnessy's hands.

"They're rather curious, too. Look." He twisted one of them between his hands and so unscrewed the bottom of it, revealing the fact that it was hollow within. "I discovered that quite by accident, too," he added.

"Do you mean to say that you found those weights?" Shaughnessy asked, with difficulty controlling his eagerness. "Where? And when?"

"Exactly what Miss Stacey asked me when she saw them. Today is the 6th of August, Transfiguration day—as you should know. Sometimes I go to church, and I prefer the early morning for it. This morning I went to St. George's, Stuyvesant Square, and when I came out I crossed one half of the old square to Second Avenue, and walked some distance. I saw those weights in the gutter and picked them up. Perhaps, now that I have been so explicit, you will be good enough to tell me why they interest you."

"Miss Stacey claims them as her property. She says that her apartment was entered last evening while she was temporarily absent, and the brass weights were stolen. Odd things for a burglar to select for spoils; eh, Shaughnessy? I have given them back to her. But your apparent interest in them amazes me—really."

"It's easily explained. Mr. Moreaux, by the fact that they belong to Jess. She was Shannon's wife, and the last time I saw them, Shannon had them. He used them to hide away his hope before anybody got onto the fact that he was taking it. When she left him and got her divorce, she probably kept them—with the clock. Was there anything inside of either of them?"

"Not a thing, Mr. Shaughnessy. They were empty, even of dope, as you call it."

"How did you find out that they were hollow?"

"Well, you see, one of them was partly unscrewed at the bottom; so, naturally, after I had searched that one I tried the other one. Going? Thank you for bringing the letter. I hope you'll continue to keep me posted."

"Of course," thought Shaughnessy, waiting for the elevator outside of the studio. "Crewe flung them away the moment he got his claws onto what was inside of them; and I was mistaken about thinking that he had dropped them through that grating. Those marks on the coal-stove were made by something else. I wish I could explain that postmark as easily."

Inside the studio, the model came from the retiring-room as soon as Shaughnessy had gone. Before she stepped into her pose, she said:

"He told you who I really am—or was, didn't he, Mr. Moreaux?" "Yes, Miss Stacey. But it would have made no difference even if you had not already informed me yourself."

"Thank you, Mr. Moreaux, did you ever hear of a double cross?" "Why, yes. 'It's a slang term, isn't it?'"

"Sometimes it is, but that man who just went out is a live one."

CHAPTER XVIII.

Birge Moreaux's Sketches.

Shannon's Jess—Miss Stacey—divorced wife of a professional crook—no matter what she might have been in the past, was at the time of these passing events undeniably the wife of Brian Shaughnessy, expert operative at the detective bureau, tied by Church and State. She had regretted the fact more than once, but never quite so forcibly as in her thoughts while she posed for Moreaux that day after Shaughnessy had gone.

She had been in the past all that her associations had made her. Her instincts were predatory. She was an enemy to society, and she had lost the discriminating power between right and wrong as between the world as we know it, and the underworld to which she belonged.

But she believed in being on the level with her kind, and in breaking even with her pals. In a different environment she might as a girl, have developed into a splendid woman, as born in her, warped and misshapen though it had become.

Once when Moreaux told her to rest, she retained the pose, replying only:

"You'd best make the most of it today, Mr. Moreaux. I'm not coming back."

He worked on without answering her, thinking while he worked. Then, when he finished and she had gone to the retiring-room to change the Olympian draperies for her street costume, he covered the canvas upon which he had been employed, and from the large portfolio brought forth the crayon sketches he had made after his visit to the morgue.

The first effort after his return to the studio—that one which represented what Shannon might have been in perfect health—he stood upon easel.

He met her when she came through the doorway and led her toward the easel, facing her around within view of it suddenly, watching her with apparent listlessness.

"Why, it's—," she began, and stopped. Then she turned a pair of startled eyes upon the artist. He nodded gravely.

"Is it like what he was when you first knew him?" Moreaux asked.

"A little. But he was never so good looking. You have made a man of him; and he was never that. He was always a sneak, even when he was a kid. His cheeks were always yellow and his nose always stuck up. You've changed both. And he never in his life looked anything but scared at his own shadow. He looks here as if he'd fight a windmill—and there wasn't any fight in him."

"Do you see any resemblance there to any one else, Miss Stacey?" The question was asked as gently as he might have fanned her with a palm-leaf, but she turned on her heel and faced him, her eyes suddenly cold and hard.

"No," she said. Then: "Why did you make it?"

Moreaux shrugged. "An artist's whim," he said. "Curiosity took me to the morgue to see him, and I made this." He showed her the small sketch made at the slab.

"Then I got to wondering how he might have appeared before he became addicted to cocaine and morphine and the others—and I made that. Then I thought I detected a vague resemblance to some one I had seen the preceding day, and I made this." He pulled a second easel around.

"My goodness!" she exclaimed. "It's Shaughnessy! Well, what have you to say about that?"

"You know him, then, Miss Stacey, more than by sight?"

"Know him? And him a bull? And me—what I have been? Faith, he tapped me on the shoulder more'n once." She was all boldness and self-assurance again, and Moreaux restored the easels to their former positions.

"I am sorry that you won't pose for me again," he said. "If you should change your mind, let me know." He passed her, going to the door and opening it. She did not move. "Don't forget your brass weights," he admonished her.

"I'll make you a present of them," she replied, crossing to the doorway. But she stopped at the threshold and turned. "Why did you do it, Mr. Moreaux?" she asked. "Make those pictures like that, I mean?"

"I have told you," he replied. "Well, all my life I've been accustomed to plain speech, so I'll tell you that what you've told me about it are lies. You didn't want to paint any Juno. You wanted to get me here to see those pictures. Why?"

Moreaux was silent.

"I wonder how much more you know, or think you know?" she said, and again he did not answer her. She hesitated a moment and came back into the room, closing the door.

"What's eatin' you, anyway?" she demanded. "Did you look me up in my flat because you knew that I was Shannon's widow, or was it because you knew that I was Shaughnessy's wife?"

"Are you Shaughnessy's wife?" "Sure I am, though I'm sorry for it."

"Since when have you been his wife?" "Since I divorced Shannon."

"People of your faith do not believe in divorces."

"Don't they? Well, I haven't got any faith—much. Say, what are you, anyhow? One of them fly-cops that tell your profession by looking at your breath on a cold day, and that call themselves criminologists?"

"I'm merely an artist, Miss Stacey. I see characteristic lines in faces that would escape your notice. When I made that sketch at the morgue, it suggested the second one; and that suggested the third one."

"There isn't any doubt about your being an artist, whatever else you are," she said sharply, and went out.

CHAPTER XIX.

But Jess turned about the instant she had passed the door and re-entered the studio. Moreaux was standing as she had left him. He raised his head and smiled at her. She stopped and stood with her back against the door.

"Do you know a man named Crewe?" she demanded shortly.

"I don't think so," he replied, shaking his head. "Who is he?"

"He's a gin-mill operator, if you know what that is. He runs a saloon where crooks hang out when there isn't anything particular against them, and he does it to cover his real business of being director-general to the cleverest bunch of thieves in New York."

"What about him?" "If you happened to know him, I was going to ask you to make me one of those pictures of him—like you made those of Shannon."

"Why?" "Something that you said to me gave me an idea. I used to draw some myself when I was little. Free hand, they called it. I used to copy all the pictures I could find. Later, I took to copying names in the same way—till I got pinched for it and was sent away. I gave it up after that. But I used to draw faces of people I knew. I could do it yet, if I tried. Have you got another one of those paper things stretched on frames? I'd like to have a try at it. This being an artist, gets me all right."

Moreaux arranged a stretcher of clean drawing-paper on one of the easels for her and put a tray of crayons beside it for her selection.

"Now you stand over there and pose for me," she said. "I just want to see if I can do it. I won't keep you more'n five minutes."

"So, it's to be a portrait of me, is it?" he asked as he took the place assigned to him.

"You wait," she replied, and began to work, lifting her eyes sharply to his face and delivering rapid strokes with the gray which told him that she at least felt assurance in what she was attempting.

The five minutes' time she had asked for lengthened into ten, and then fifteen, but at last she tossed the crayon upon the tray and stepped backward to view what she had done. Moreaux came around to her side and a trifle behind her, and looked at it also.

"But that isn't a picture of me," he told her.

"No. It's a picture of Crewe—the man I was talking about. I've got the artist's eye, too, and I can see lines of character that escape others. I have done what you did. You made a picture of Shaughnessy from two pictures of Shannon. I have made a picture of Crewe, the master-thief, from the original of Moreaux, the master-artist. If Shaughnessy's Shannon, you're Crewe. See the point?"

"It's a trifle vague, but I think I understand what you mean."

"And if you had a pair of aluminum plumpers in your cheeks, I guess it would make your voice sound cracked, too. Do you get me?"

"I don't in the least know what you are talking about, Miss Stacey; but if you will be good enough to explain, perhaps I may."

"Oh, stop rocking the boat or you'll fall out. Besides, the wind is rising. You're the real elegant swell up here, aren't you? Say, when you want to call on me again, rap on the door and I'll let you in—only be sure that Brian isn't there when you do it." She crossed to the door, and opened it. "And to think that you came mighty nigh getting away with it!" she added, and laughed aloud as she banged the door behind her.

Talks to Mothers

Mrs. Mary Wicks, Editor

Children May Be Easily Entertained

So much is heard nowadays about extravagance at children's parties that many women are afraid to attempt to arrange simple entertainment for the little folk, thus depriving them of some of the greatest delights of child life.

Yet it is very easy to please children, and if a little time and thought are given to the task of preparation, the question of expense need not deter any mother who wishes to provide a happy afternoon for her children and their little friends.

To prove it is not difficult to entertain in a simple way, let me tell you what was done by a suburban hostess recently. The story has just come to me from a mother of one of the little guests:

"At a suburban party the other day I was surprised at the interest shown by the children in the small cakes that were served with the ice cream. They were pretty little homemade cakes, some covered with pink frosting and others with white. They certainly looked delicious, yet I could not quite understand why the children were so eager about getting them until I broke one open. Then I saw that each little girl had found a dolly baked in her cake and every boy a china rabbit, dog or other small animal. Warning had been given to break the cakes open carefully, as there was something hidden inside; so when the plates were passed around there was great excitement. The dolls were the kind we used to buy at the corner toy shop, about an inch long, sold at the rate of two for a cent. The animals were bought by the dozen. That clever mother knew the child heart, and how dearly surprises are loved, so when she baked the cakes she put a toy in each one. Thus, for about 30 cents she provided fun for as many children and occupation for the rest of the afternoon.

The Stars In June

By LeRoy Scott, East Jordan, Michigan.

As I sit alone in the moonlight, in the balmy evening air,
I gaze aloft to the heavens at the diamonds sparkling there.
Faithfully their virgils keeping they ever seem to be.

As they twinkle a silent greeting from the depths of the Turquoise Sea.
Each time, with wonder renewing, as I search for a favorite star,

Among hundreds of thousands of others, shedding their light from afar,
I find a new pleasure in searching, knowing my favorite I'll see,
Surrounded by friends that are olden, and others are strangers to me.
Jupiter hangs low in the southward, in Scorpius, most wondrous of all,
While Arcturus, up near the zenith, holds me in rapture's thrall.
Then come the Constellations, of deepest interest to me,
Hercules, The Eagle, The Archer,

and Carona riding free.
The Bears, The Arsay, The Dolphin and the beautiful Northern Cross,
And high above The Pole swings The Dragon, glowing like silver floss.
Then, near Libra, The Serpent in mighty Ophinchus' hold,
But the star that to me is dearest is Queen of the Realms of cold.
The one that safely pilots many great ships from afar,
That glimmering Northland Beauty, the rose-tinted Northern Star.

True and Tried Recipes

Fancy Work and Cooking for the Season

Butter Curls.

Instead of making round butter balls, it is possible to make attractive curls of butter with a hooked-shape knife which comes for the purpose. It has a saw-tooth edge. Have a bowl of ice in your lap. Plunge the curls into hot water, run it over a large cake of butter, drawing the knife toward you, from the cake which is on the table. Let the curl roll off into the bowl of ice.

Florentine Eggs.

To use bits of left-over vegetables. French cooks have devised many ways worth trying by home cooks. Florentine eggs make a delicious entree or luncheon dish. If prepared in individual ramekins, which is preferable for serving, place a spoonful of cooked spinach in the bottom of the dish, with seasoning of salt, pepper, butter and a few grains of mace. Over this break an egg, and allow it to cook as if poached. Sprinkle a little grated cheese over the top, and brown before serving.

Fruit Salad.

Mix together the pulp of one grape fruit, one orange, one-half pineapple or two apples, with one-half teaspoonful of chopped nuts, preferably walnuts and pecans. Serve in glasses with slightly sweetened whipped cream to which a pinch of salt has been added. Two or three candied cherries on the top add to the attractive looks of this delicious dessert.

Strawberry Blanc Mange.

Thicken one pint of milk, brought to the boiling-point in a double boiler, with three tablespoonfuls of corn starch dissolved in another pint of cold milk. Add one-half cup of sugar, and stir constantly for ten minutes. Stir in lightly the beaten whites of three eggs, when taking mixture from the fire. Add vanilla or almond flavoring—and pour into individual cups or molds. When ready to serve, turn each out, and cut a hole from the center, into which put fresh, ripe berries. Put a spoonful of whipped cream on the top, and add sweetened strawberry juice at the base.

Steak Roll.

A steak which is too tough to cook any other way may be used for this. Begin by pounding it flat and tender. Spread with highly seasoned stuffing, roll into shape and sew tightly in cheese cloth. Boil for three hours in salted water. Take out and press under a heavy weight until cold. Take off the cloth, cut in thin slices and serve with horseradish or made mustard.

Michigan State Sanatorium Howell, Michigan

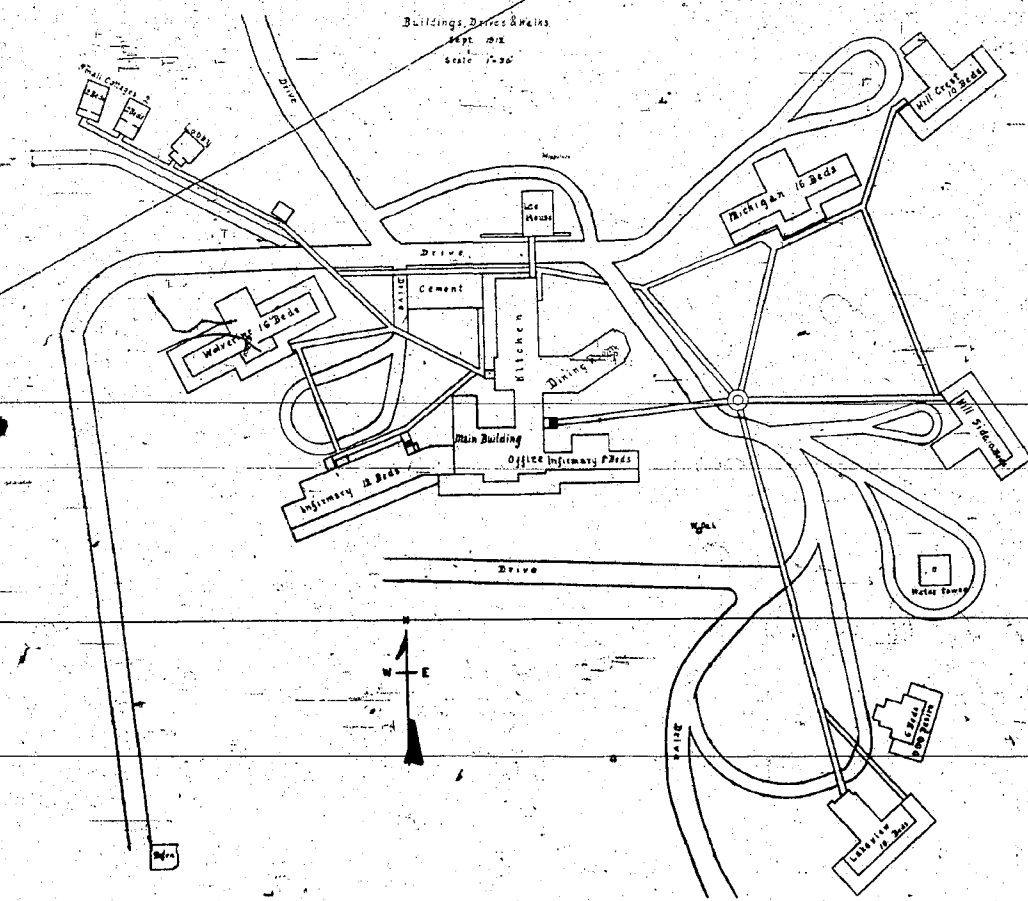

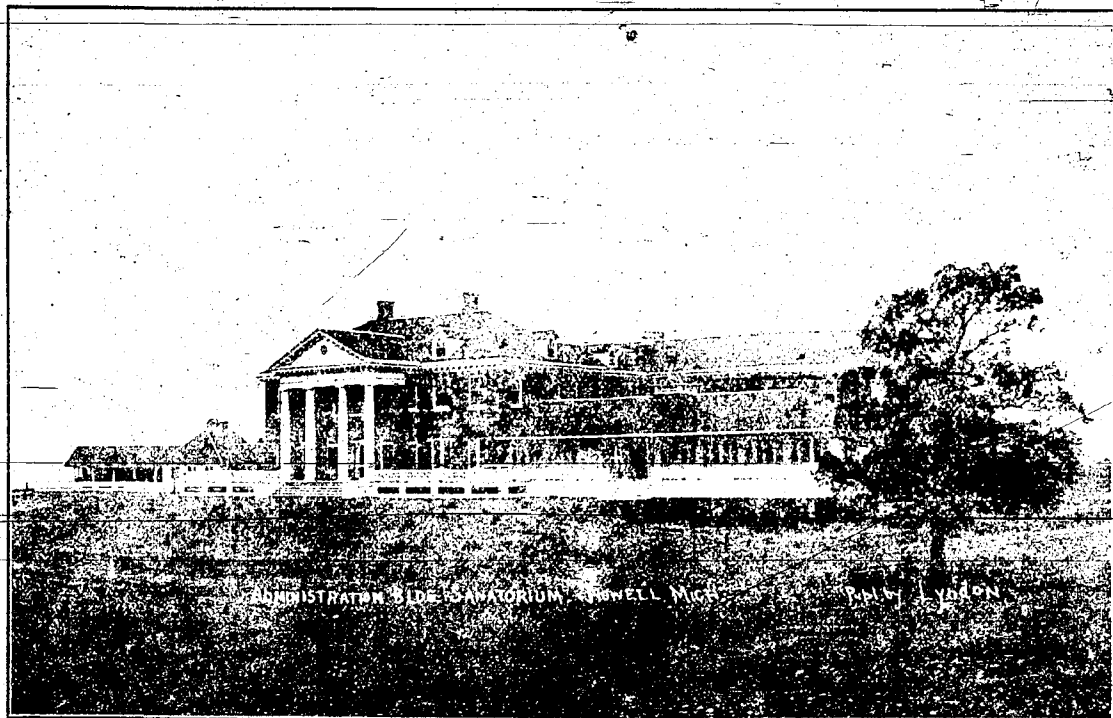

The legislature of 1905 passed an act to establish a state sanatorium.

The appropriation therefore became available later in that year and a board of trustees, appointed by the governor, immediately began to seek a suitable site. Finally the one offered by the citizens of Howell was selected and work begun to prepare the buildings. The site selected is situated on the height of land in the southern part of the lower peninsula. An extensive view is obtained in all directions over a radius of about twenty miles. The general elevation is 1,080 feet above sea level. In summer the fresh breezes keep the air from becoming as humid as in the valleys below and in winter the dry air is less cold than the surrounding country.

The funds available at that time, together with the appropriation of 1907 allowed the construction of two sixteen bed cottages, one six bed cottage, and an administration building which contains the kitchen, dining room, rooms for the staff and help, drug room and offices. Water and sewerage systems were installed, an ice house built, a temporary infirmary constructed and numerous repairs made to farm and buildings. The legislature of 1907 also appropriated $8,000.00 for each year of the biennial period for maintenance.

The legislature of 1909 appropriated $10,000.00 to build six cottages, thus increasing the capacity from 46 to 80 and at the same time reduced the maintenance for the biennial period to $15,000.00. The $8,000.00 of the first year proved too small and so for two years there was no opportunity for progress. The foundation for a dairy barn was laid and some improvements made to the grounds.

In 1911 there was given a sum sufficient to maintain the institution at its full capacity and to make some important additions, i. e. to kitchen, to dairy barn, and to build infirmary wings. These additions have completed the plant to such an extent that it can now care for the patients with greater economy and efficiency. The diagram shows the present arrangement of the grounds and buildings and in future issues we will print photos of the different buildings.

FOR STOMACH TROUBLE

John W. Skellen of Sidney, Ohio, Has Found a Remedy.
Experts declare that the reason stomach disorders are so common in this country is due to hasty and careless habits of eating. Stomach troubles and run-down conditions usually go together.
John W. Skellen of Sidney, Ohio, says: "I had a bad stomach trouble for years, and became so weak that I could hardly walk or do any work. My appetite was poor, and it seemed impossible to get any relief. Since taking 'Vinol' I find a remarkable improvement in my health, my digestion is much stronger, and I have gained in weight. I would not be without 'Vinol'."
"Vinol makes weak stomachs strong because it strengthens and tones up the weakened, tired and overtaxed nerves of the digestive organs. Vinol is easily assimilated by the weakest stomachs, and is delicious to the taste. Try a bottle of Vinol with the understanding that your money will be returned if it does not help you."

OLD SETTLERS PLAN REUNION

Will Gather at Suttons Bay June 19

The thirty-third annual meeting and picnic of the Old Settlers' Association of the Grand Traverse region will be held on the fair grounds at Sutton's Bay on Friday, June 19, 1914.
Committees are already making arrangements for what is hoped will be the largest annual gathering in the history of the association. Everything that is possible will be done by the citizens of Suttons Bay to give the old settlers a hearty welcome and a royal good time. The Suttons Bay Concert Band will furnish music.

Take your baskets well filled. Tea, coffee, sugar and cream will be furnished free to all.
Short talks and reminiscences of early days in the development of this favored region will be given by several of the older residents at the meeting which will be held immediately after the dinner is over.

The officers are making an extra effort this year to add to the membership list and perfect the records of the association. To this end all those who have lived in this region for fifteen years or more are urged to become members of the association. Application blanks should be filled out and filed with the secretary along with the annual fee of fifty cents. These application blanks will be furnished by and may be left with any of the officers of the association as follows: Dr. D. W. Payne, Suttons Bay, president; E. O. Ladd, Old Mission, secretary; Mrs. Wm. Love, Traverse City, historian; O. J. Powers, Elk Rapids, treasurer.

County vice presidents—W. S. Anderson, Grand Traverse county, Traverse City; John White, Leelanau county, Solon; George Smith, Benzie county, Beulah; E. S. Noble, Antrim county, Elk Rapids; Capt. O. E. Wilbur, Charlevoix county, Charlevoix; R. A. Campbell, Emmet county, Petoskey; Cornelius Cronin, Kalkaska county, Kalkaska.
The following is the program for the day:

The rest of the afternoon will be devoted to social meeting and a general good time.

Dreamland—A Bit of Verse

When life is glum and on the bum and filled with care and worry, let's pack our grip and take a trip away from care and hurry. It does not pay to mope all day, so let's be gay and jolly; let's take a ride and smoothly glide upon the Dreamland trolley. When life is puny and mostly bunc and all our woes seem double, let's take a jaunt to see our aunt, away from grief and trouble. It is not wise to dim our eyes, so let's be glad and merry; let's take a raft and sweetly waft across the Dreamland ferry. When life is dark and full of bark and sorrow comes to grind us, let's pack our trunks with books and junk and leave dull care behind us. 'Tis no good bet to fuss and fret, so let's rejoice and rally; let's take a car and honk afar across the Dreamland valley. When life is grim and faith is dim and hope's inclined to waver, let's throw our pack across our back and hike away off yonder. It is not great to wall at fate, so let's be like a fountain; let's take a train or aeroplane and seek the Dreamland mountain.

WARNS AGAINST WHITE PLAGUE

State Health Board Issues Bulletin to Prevent Spread of Disease

"Prevention of tuberculosis is possible: it is cheaper and easier than cure." This is the keynote of a state board of health bulletin, issued this week, that is being spread broadcast over Michigan. The bulletin is the first of a series which the board believes will play an important part in the campaign against the white plague.

A warning against the use of patent medicines by persons afflicted with the disease is contained in the bulletin. Dr. Burkhardt, secretary of the board, was responsible for the warning.

"Never administer patent medicines for tuberculosis," he said. "They cannot possibly cure and the stimulants they contain give the patient a false sense of security while the disease is actually getting further from control."

Dr. Burkhardt urged a more earnest co-operation between tubercular patients, their physicians, health officers and the Anti-Tuberculosis society.

The law requires a physician attending a case of tuberculosis to report the same promptly and fully to the local health officer of the jurisdiction in which the case occurs. For the good of the patient and the safety of the public, physicians should instruct tubercular patients in the means of preventing the spread of tuberculosis. They should at all times co-operate with the recommendations of the local board of health or the local health officer, when made in accordance with the recommendations of the state department of health. While it is the privilege of the physician to instruct, it is the duty of the health officer to do so; and the official performance of his duty should at all times be recognized in order that the interests of the public may be subserved. Co-operation between all interests, the sick person, the physician, the health officials and the anti-tuberculosis society will best work for suppression of tuberculosis in Michigan.

When poverty comes in at the door love makes a noise like a flying machine.

BETTER POTATOES

The Crops Should be Improved in Michigan With Proper Attention

Although Michigan ranked first among the states of the union last year in the production of potatoes, a crop of even higher yield per acre, as well as of better quality, could easily be grown in the state if farmers would follow more closely the methods of growing recommended by the Michigan Agricultural College, in the opinion of F. A. Spragg, research assistant in farm crops at the college. In an interview Mr. Spragg outlined the efforts that are being made to obtain a bigger and better yield.

"According to estimates made by the U. S. Department of Agriculture, Michigan ranked first among the states in the production of potatoes last season," Spragg declared.

"The Michigan Potato Association, with headquarters at the Agricultural college has been organized for the purpose of advancing the potato industry. Several of the states in which large areas of potatoes are grown have active organizations, and if Michigan is going to keep its place in the procession, she must not lag in this respect. The advancement of the potato industry in Michigan is a matter which concerns every person in the state and many in other regions who depend upon us for seeds and supplies. C. W. Waid, field representative in horticulture for the college is rapidly getting in touch with the potato growers, and, as secretary of the new association, expects to accomplish much during the first season. We can suggest no better slogan than "Better Potatoes in Michigan."
