Primary, Tuesday

A Few Words for the Qualified Electors Benefit.

Hurrah for the Primaries! Next Tuesday is the day. It is important. It is really election in Charlevoix county.

Measure your vote and cast it so that you need be not sorry the next day. Vote for the men who will be of best service to the county.

The primary is simple. A splendid thing. Easily understood if you only give it a second thought. Remember you are at a caucus.

FIRST, designate your party by making a cross (X) in the circle at the head of the ticket you wish to vote.

SECOND, place a cross (X) in the square at the left of the names of as many candidates, in your party column as there are to be nominated for each office.

IMPORTANT—DO NOT VOTE FOR ANY CANDIDATE NOT IN PARTY COLUMN.

If you do so it will void your ballot so far as nominations for THAT PARTICULAR OFFICE are concerned. Is there anything more simple?

"THE SPENDTHRIFT."

"The Spendthrift" which ran for five months at the Hudson Theatre, New York, is a play that appeals because it hits home in a whole-hearted, humorous and healthy way. It tells the story of the wreck of a family's happiness, brought about by the divergence of thought and the different paths followed in the pursuit of happiness by a husband and wife. It is a story of not one home, but of many. Richard Ward is a man of working, saving and home-loving instincts. His wife longs for the luxuries and in his love for her and his efforts to provide her with them he is kept grinding and toiling under a mountain of debt which topples over on him and he is bankrupt. One of the most appealing points in the play is while the wife's extravagance is dominant, it is brought about in a great measure through her sincere endeavor to provide her husband with a home befitting the position in life she believes him big enough to occupy. When she realizes that he is bankrupt she borrows money in an effort to save him. This move on her part leads to dramatic situations, the unravelling of which has made "The Spendthrift" not only a problem play of real life today, with its motive an arraignment of puerile society life, but a drama which thousands who have seen it have declared "strikes home in a most impressive and interesting way."

"The Spendthrift" will appear at the Temple Theatre next Friday evening, Aug. 28th. Our page prepared expressly for our farm readers is so good this week we call your attention to same. You will find a strong article on "Crimson Clover As a Soil Improver," by J.M. Westgate, with the United States Department of Agriculture. After the newly made husband has settled with the parson he might as well keep his pocketbook in hand, for that is merely the beginning. Every time a wise man makes a mistake he learns something.

Good Investment.

No investment pays better than a purchase of space in a live newspaper. This is another fact which has not been disputed up to date. These hard facts ought to count with sensible people. Choose a real newspaper that is wide awake, progressive, up-to-date, has a healthy circulation and enjoys the confidence of the people. Prudent buyers are constantly on the lookout for enterprising merchants. Enterprising merchants are the ones who advertise. The ones who advertise are the ones who sell the goods. No one now on earth can dispute this fact. It is hard to get around cold facts.—Ex.

Among the poor ways of making one's mark in the world is painting the town red.

Remember, girls, that a handy man is better than a handsome one for domestic use.

No, the above is not a picture of "Bill Taft" although his friends call him that owing to the resemblance. It is a picture of John H. Lewis of Boyne City who is asking the support of the Republicans of Charlevoix County for the nomination of sheriff at the Primary Election August 25th.

While the newcomers in our city are probably not acquainted with Mr. Lewis, the older residents know him well as he was a regular visitor to our village in the days gone by.

John H. Lewis is the oldest butcher in Charlevoix County today. He was born in Ionia County in 1864 and came to Charlevoix County when only a lad of 18 years. Locating at Boyne City he started at the butcher trade the following year without any capital. About eighteen years ago he established the "Central Meat Market" and by hard labor and conscientious efforts he built up this business until now his taxes amount to about $600.00 a year.

Mr. Lewis was for years a frequent visitor to East Jordan, coming here on both business and pleasure. He was leader of the Boyne City Band for several years, and being an able cornetist he assisted the East Jordan Band and played for dances at the old Loveland Opera House.

Last October, as a member of the Board of Supervisors from Boyne City, he gave the East Jordan supervisors valuable assistance in securing the thousand dollar appropriation for the bridge here across the area.

John H. Lewis has proven himself a business man and would use the same careful management of finances in the Sheriff's office as he would in his own affairs. He is one of the substantial business men of our neighboring city and fraternally is a member of the Masons, Elks, Moose and Eagles.

He respectfully solicits your support at the August Primary.

HAS CUT EXPENSES.

Pros. Att'y Fitch Has Lowered the Cost of His Office.

To the Voters of Charlevoix County:

It is the duty of every man who is a candidate for public office to give to the voters before the primary and the election a clear, concise and truthful statement of his position on public matters, what he stands for, and if he has held office, a report of his record. I am glad to do this. I have been Prosecuting Attorney of our county two terms. I promised the people at the beginning that I would discharge the duties of the office carefully, diligently and fearlessly. That I would be economical so that our taxes would not be increased because of my office. I promised that I would enforce the law as the people wished it enforced. The salary of the office is not large. It has been the opinion of many that on this account, taken into consideration the public welfare and the more efficient service, a lawyer of experience and training should not be limited to one or two terms in this office but that a re-election should be given him, provided he makes good.

Those in a position to know best tell me I have made good. I have endeavored to be impartial and fair. I have been aggressive against law-breakers, but at the same time I have not been harsh to the unfortunate and the friendless. This is my idea of the office. I have responded with the best in me when called upon to advise the county and township officials. The records will show if you look them up, that the expenses of my administration have been less than those of any predecessor in the past ten years, with as much if not more work to do. These matters are of public record. I invite your inspection. The Committee on Claims of the Board of Supervisors have repeatedly commented upon the reasonableness, fairness and consistency of my expense accounts. I desire another nomination on the Republican ticket. If I did not feel that I deserved it I would not ask it.

The primary election comes just before session of the Circuit Court of this county, and I have, therefore, been unable to make a personal canvass and meet the people because that would be neglecting the duties of my office. I therefore, take this method of presenting the matter to you and I promise that if nominated and elected, profiting by my experience I shall continue to give the office my best effort and endeavor.

Very truly yours,
DWIGHT H. FITCH,
Prosecuting Attorney.

(Political Advertising.)

MISTER VOTER.

YOUR ATTENTION FOR JUST A MOMENT

I had expected to visit all parts of the County before the primary, but at the present time I have no help in the office that I feel that I can safely leave the work in care of, and can only take this means to say a few words to you. Those of you who have transacted business with the Register of Deeds of your County are familiar with the duties of that office, are aware of his responsibilities and know what that office means to the County and the owners of homes. But there may be some of you who have not had the occasion to consider these things, I, therefore, desire to submit to the voters the following:

The Register of Deeds is not a salaried official, neither does the County pay for an assistant. The County merely furnishes the office with the records and the necessary material for doing the work. The Register's compensation is derived entirely from the people who have occasion to use the office, and in accordance with the amount of work that it requires. In order that these be properly served, it is necessary that the Register be not only thoroughly familiar with the thousands of property descriptions, but that he possess the knowledge of where to locate each of them. Several cases have come to light in this office where, in the makings of new abstracts, transfers have been omitted in old abstracts, making them worthless.

If you should call at this office and see the number of records necessary to be kept, you would wonder what an inexperienced man could possibly do should he be called upon to furnish a record or abstract of title. During my first two years as Register, I was fortunate indeed to be able to get the service of one who had handled the business of the office for several years. I am now thoroughly familiar with every detail of the work, as everyone who has had business with office will tell you. Every record in the vault I understand perfectly. I appreciate the strong support I am receiving from those who have had work done in the office and from my friends. It makes me feel proud and stimulates me to further exertion in the line of my duty. To all others let me say that if you are not already the proud possessor of a home, you hope to be, and it stands you well in hand to keep a competent official in this office that the records may be perfectly kept. Experience is of especial value here and is an item that the business man is willing to pay for. The business man raises the salary of the competent employee, from year to year, because he is worth more to the business, I do not ask this, and could not if I would, as mine is not a salaried position. I merely ask that my candidacy be considered as a strictly business matter.

Respectfully,
ROMEO A. EMERY,
Register of Deeds.

SHERIFF'S EXPENSES

McWain's Personal Account Exceeds Robbins by $908.49.

To the Voters of Charlevoix County:

The following is a true statement of the expenses of the Sheriff's office, including bills of the Under-sheriff and Deputies, for the years named:

McWAIN'S TERM	ROBBINS TERM
1907 $ 8377.93	1911 $ 3419.49
1908 4510.93	1912 5697.58
1909 4915.92	1913 4679.13
1910 4282.17	1914 3410.23
Total $16186.94	$17206.53

The above statement includes Janitor's Salary of $300.00 per year for care of Court House, and as it does not effect the issue, I submit it should not be charged in either statement.

Also another item should not be charged against either administration, viz: "BOARD OF PRISONERS." During Mr. McWain's term of office there was paid for prisoners board $974.00. Under Robbins term of office for the same item $1936.52, or practically twice as much. This item also shows the proportionate amount of work done during the two terms. Deducing the extra amount paid for prisoners board during Robbins term, you will find that the difference in cost is only $57.07 for the two terms. In McWain's article (Evening Journal, August 13th) he omitted to state that under the law prisoners cannot now be sentenced to the Detroit House of Correction, while under his term of office nearly all short term offenders were so sentenced. OF COURSE HE WANTED TO BE FAIR BY SUPPRESSING THIS FACT. This is ONE reason why more prisoners were sentenced during his term. Another reason is, the Circuit Judge is each year placing more prisoners under probation.

Mr. McWain also wished to be fair, OF COURSE, when he suppressed the following fact. McWAIN'S PERSONAL BILLS for his term exceeded Robbins personal bills for his term to date $908.49. Why did he not so state. In comparing the expense account of these two administrations, it should be remembered that our County is increasing in population and the work of the Sheriff's office increases correspondingly.

One other fact must be remembered: New laws have largely added to the duties of the Sheriff's office and expenses have necessarily increased with the work of the office. The article by Mr. McWain was intended to discredit my administration of the office of Sheriff. In as much as all my bills were itemized and verified and examined by the Committee on claims of the Board of Supervisors, reported favorably and later passed by the entire Board, I feel that the Voters of Charlevoix County will have confidence in their integrity.

My bills are right and are open to the public and I stand back of them with nothing to conceal. I only ask a SQUARE DEAL and no concealment by my critic in his accounts and no misrepresentation as to mine. I stand ready to prove the above statements. Asking your fair consideration, I am,

Respectfully yours,
F. P. ROBBINS, Sheriff.

Crimson Clover As a Soil Improver

BY J. M. WESTGATE WITH THE U. S. DEPARTMENT OF AGRICULTURE

When a crop of crimson clover is turned under a large quantity of humus and fertilizing material is added to the soil. This is especially true when all of the crop is plowed under as green manure. Often, however, the field is left standing for hay or seed, thus leaving only the stubble and roots in the field. The stubble and roots appear in many cases, however, to be almost as effective in soil improvement as is the plowing under of the entire crop, except where the soil is rather low in humus. When the crop is cut, about 40 per cent as much nitrogen is returned to the soil as when the entire plant is plowed under. A full crop of crimson clover with a green weight of roots and tops of about 10 tons per acre is ordinarily regarded as equivalent in its effects to an application of fresh barnyard manure at the rate of about eight tons per acre. This estimate seems justified by the relative composition of the clover plants and the manure. A ton of fresh manure ordinarily contains about 7.8 pounds of nitrogen and 500 pounds of dry matter, as compared with about 8.8 pounds of nitrogen and 370 pounds of dry matter per ton of green crimson clover. When the clover is plowed under the soil has really gained only in humus and in the nitrogen abstracted from the air by the nodule-forming bacteria on the roots of the clover. The soil gains, on the other hand, in potash and phosphorus as well as in nitrogen and humus when the manure is applied and, consequently, for ton for ton the manure would appear to be somewhat more valuable than the crimson clover. When crimson clover is seeded fairly early it will accumulate nearly half of its final quota of nitrogen before winter and after most other crops have ceased their growth. It also resumes its growth very early the following spring, so that it is out of the way in time for the regular spring-seeded crops. This characteristic makes it of special value in the economic maintenance of soil fertility, since it is possible to grow a money crop, such as corn, potatoes or tomatoes, each summer and at the same time turn under each year either the stubble or the entire crop of crimson clover. It has been found most desirable to commence plowing under the crimson clover at least a week or 10 days before it commences to bloom. This gives three or four weeks for the plowing under of the crop and for the preparation of the ground for the spring-seeded crops. For early-planted truck crops it is often desirable to turn under the crimson clover when it is only half or two-thirds grown, as the ground at that time is likely to be much less cloddy from baking than if the plants are left until they are nearly or quite in bloom.

Not only is nitrogen in a very available form added to the soil, but the nitrogen, phosphoric acid, and potash already in the soil are caught and kept from leaching during the winter. The phosphoric acid and potash are thought to be rendered more available to the subsequent crops by this process.

The physical condition of the soil is also materially benefited by the growth of crimson clover. The sandy soils are increased in humus, thus being made more retentive of moisture. On the other hand, the stiff, heavy clay soils are rendered more open and friable. Even if the crimson clover be winter killed, there is usually enough fall growth available as a source of soil fertility the following spring to more than pay for the cost of establishing the stand.

It is generally considered that a bushel of crimson-clover seed sown on four acres of ground will increase the succeeding yield of corn about the same amount as would a ton of complete fertilizer applied at the rate of 500 pounds per acre on four acres of similar land. The relative increase of such a crop as corn is greater on poor land than on fields already capable of producing good crops. If the land in question is so poor as to bring only 10 or 15 bushels of corn per acre, a good stand of crimson clover turned under will ordinarily double the yield. To obtain a satisfactory stand of the clover on such poor land, however, manure or commercial fertilizers, and often lime, must be applied. A part of the increased yield of the subsequent corn crop must be credited to the residual effect of the fertilizer used in connection with the crimson clover. On land that will make 30 bushels of corn per acre a yield of 45 bushels may ordinarily be expected following crimson clover. On land richer than this an increase of more than 10 bushels per acre is uncommon. On a soil that was badly run down and not producing more than 12 to 15 bushels of corn per acre, about 300 pounds of bone meal were broadcast when the clover was first seeded on fallow land. The following spring a part was cut for hay and the rest turned under. The entire field was then put in corn, and each summer for nine years crimson clover was seeded in the corn at the last working. The yield from a measured acre the ninth year was 55 bushels. The portion from which a crop of hay was cut annually gave yields of corn essentially the same as where the entire crop was plowed under.

Crimson Clover as a Cover Crop.
Crimson clover in sections where it succeeds is regarded as a most satisfactory cover crop on soils which would otherwise be left bare during the winter. It is especially valuable in orchards, where it is generally plowed under as a green-manure crop. Its rapid growth during the autumn, reduces the moisture and, to some extent, the plant-food content of the soil. This induces the trees to stop growing earlier in the autumn and to ripen their wood well in advance of cold weather, thus rendering them less susceptible to winter injury. The plants retain for the use of the trees the following season much of the plant food which would otherwise leach out of the ground during the winter and early spring. A good stand of crimson clover not only reduces erosion and the gulling of the fields, but on sandy fields the blowing of the soil by the wind is greatly lessened. The plants also serve to hold the snow to a greater extent than if the field was left bare during the winter.

A. G. Gibson, postmaster at Central Lake, Antrim county, who is doing his best to advertise the Central Lake section as a fruit country. He believes that the apples grown in his neighborhood have the "nest" flavor known.

ing the fruits and vegetables and where the work can be carried on free from the heat and muss of the kitchen. When the work is understood, and systematically taken up by willing and interested workers a great deal can be accomplished in a short time.

Next month early apples, sweet corn, tomatoes and other things will be ripening, and everybody knows that the stores will be flooded with the fresh products. Why not plan to save some of them and turn them into money later? By next month, too, the busiest part of the season will have passed and time can be given to canning without neglecting other work on the farm. With the sad experience that many of us have had every year trying to dispose of our surplus produce and finally seeing it rot away, it would seem a sensible thing to do to provide to meet such a condition hereafter. The time will come when the steam canner will be a part of the equipment of every farm, along with the cream separator and other machinery.

The net profit on every thousand cans of produce varies from $20 to near $100. From the experience of those who have gone into canning we are assured that there is no great difficulty in getting a good market for home-canned goods. They are always considered superior to the factory-canned product, and invariably bring a better price when properly graded and guaranteed to be pure and clean and full weight.

Any community that is interested in the canning proposition may arrange to have demonstrations made free of charge. Clubs that are started this year will be able to profit greatly by the experience in planning their work for next year. Boys and girls, and older people too, who would like to look into the proposition further are invited to correspond with Myron E. Duckles, assistant in club work for Michigan Agricultural College and U. S. Department of Agriculture. Home address, Elk Rapids, Michigan.—Circular just sent out by Mr. Duckles to the boys and girls of western Michigan.

BUSINESS AND THE SCHOOLS.

That the present movement for practical education is stimulated from the industrial rather than from the educational side is a fact both promising and disquieting, according to Owen R. Lovejoy, who discusses "Vocational Guidance and Child Labor" in a publication of the United States bureau of education.

"The employers have a very definite program," says Mr. Lovejoy. "They know what they want and are going after it. Let us not delude ourselves by thinking they are actuated by philanthropy. It is simply good business. They want a crop of fresh, young labor furnished them every year that can make a fewer mistakes and more profits."

"This is extremely gratifying, in one sense. It indicates that economic self-interest is attempting to shake off the double burden society has long borne—the burden of using goods worth much less than they cost because poorly and inefficiently made, and of supporting by charity those paid less than their work is worth because of their poverty, inefficiency, and consequent helplessness. But while employers are awake to the need of efficiency, industry is not. Industry still beckons to the inefficient, the immature, the unprepared."

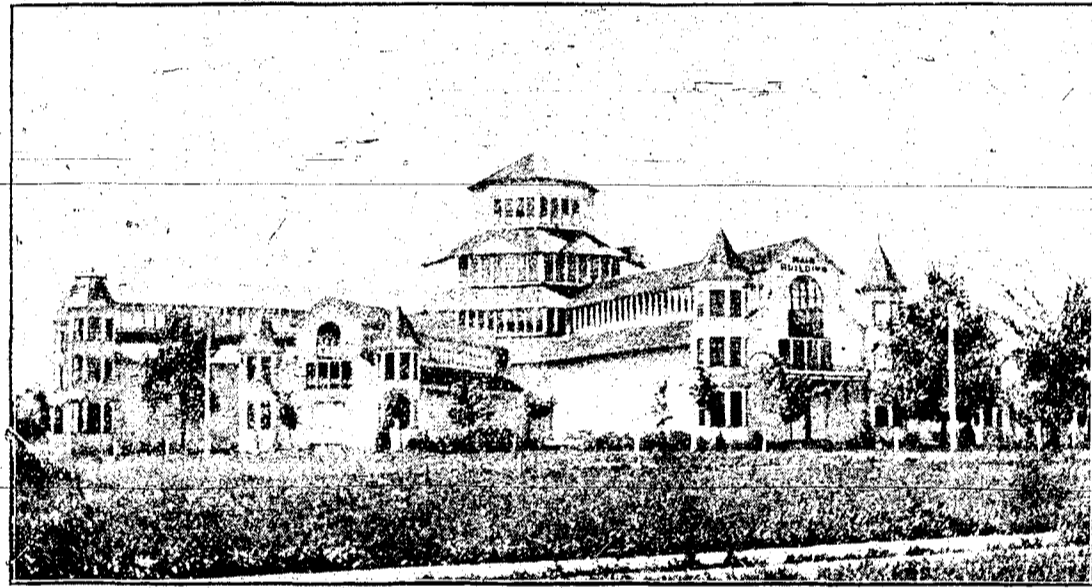

"Society is far from having reached a decision that unskilled labor must be abolished. The occupations which, outside of agriculture, absorb the output of our schools are barren of any element to make them of present interest to the child or to offer any hope for the future. A vocational survey in New York City exhibits in one group 101 boys between 14 and 16 years of age with an analysis of the work they are doing. For only five of them is there any opportunity to advance or improve; 96 are in dead-end occupations."

"Business is now saying that if we had the right kind of schools all this would be changed; that child labor would become a blessing instead of an abuse for children. We are constantly told that, if the schools had the right kind of curriculum and gave the right kind of training, every child would have his natural capacity developed, and we should speedily put an end to the army of industrial misfits."

"In accepting this challenge of the business world our educators have assumed an unwarranted responsibility for the condition that exists. A study of the annual contribution of our city schools to the business interests of the community will show that a considerable percentage is thrown into the discard within the first month; that another large percentage goes drifting from job to job, sometimes advancing, quite as frequently receding, the industries complaining that the children the schools turn out are no good; and that the children lose courage, enthusiasm, and youthful idealism in the various meaningless jobs to which they are assigned. That many drift into casual and thence into permanent idleness is to be expected. The only wonder is that any ultimately rise to positions of efficiency and responsibility."

"Our schools are not fair to themselves in assuming that they or the child are wholly at fault. If the schools need a better curriculum, so does the industrial establishment. If the child needs more definite and purposeful mind, much more does industry. One of the most vital services, vocational guidance can render is to analyze our industries and train our youth to distinguish between a vocation and a job. It is futile to give special training to a child for the purpose of fastening him to a machine on which he shall do purely mechanical labor for life. Business says: 'Here are the jobs; what kind of children have you to offer?' We must reverse the inquiry and say to business: 'Here are our children; what kind of industry have you to offer?'"

"Those who make a success in the poultry business are those who look after every little detail and are in the business—not a half dozen other business enterprises at the same time.

THE MAIN BUILDING OF THE GREATER MICHIGAN FAIR.

This building, artistically imposing in appearance, is situated close to the entrance of the grounds and near the grandstand, will be full of interesting, entertaining and instructive exhibits. Among the other attractions will be music furnished by the companies exhibiting their wares, and very attractive displays by some of our leading department stores and other business interests. The class of exhibits this year is one which will appeal not only to visitors from the country but to the city dweller as well, and great care has been taken to insure an artistic arrangement of the goods placed before the people.

The Better Babies Contest, as usual, will have a portion of one wing, and will be the scene of attraction for the ladies. Present indications are that this Fair will break all records for interest and in point of attendance. Entertainment has been provided in many forms, all of it clean, wholesome and reasonable in price of admission. The management of the Fair is exerting itself to please the public and there is no doubt that their efforts will be greatly appreciated by the officers of the Fair.

Something For Nothing

Some people are always looking for something for nothing. They are always expecting the long end of a bargain. It gets to be such a habit with them that they feel as if they had been cheated if they don't get more than an "even break."

It is true in other ways than in mere matters of business. These same people are generally looking for favors, but are not disposed to return them.

Good people enjoy doing kindnesses to those about them, but even they get discouraged in trying to exchange favors with this particular class, who always want more than value returned.

In this way the selfish person loses many of the good things that might come his way if he but indicated a disposition to return in the same kind. So it doesn't pay, even in a material way, to be always looking for the long end of a bargain. In addition one loses friends and the respect of society.

Some people who answer this description mistakably think they are shrewd. They are not shrewd, they are selfish, and selfishness is not shrewdness. There is a wide difference between the two.

The good, shrewd man only allows his shrewdness to insure his getting a square deal nothing more. The selfish man gets all he can at the expense of his neighbor or perhaps his very best friend. It doesn't pay.

CARE OF THE HAND SEPARATOR.

The cream separator is a delicately constructed machine. It is capable of doing excellent work if properly used and cared for, providing it is a good machine. That is, if it does not get the attention it should it may be the means of losing money for the farmer. The lesson is, examine your separator carefully and see that it runs smoothly. Also bear in mind that the temperature of the milk has much to do with the efficiency of skimming. The best temperature at which to skim milk is 90 degrees Fahrenheit. Some separators will do good work at as low a temperature as 75 degrees, but at temperatures lower than that no separator will do as good work as at higher temperatures.

If your separator is not kept clean it will not skim perfectly. To keep it clean, thoroughly wash it after each separation. Wash the bowl first with luke warm water and then a water containing some washing powder and finally give it a thorough rinsing in scalding hot water. Do this twice a day, morning and evening. Do not rely upon one cleaning per day. You cannot get good service from your separator if you do.

NUGGETS.

The man who argues that it doesn't pay to jump at conclusions probably makes his mistakes in a more leisurely manner.

Strong drink has sent many a man to bed feeling like a king, and caused him to wake up feeling like the deuce.

A man seldom knows who his friends are till he finds he hasn't any.

We never quite realize the sting of hard words until we have to take them back.

He who strikes while the iron is hot doesn't always succeed in making warm friends.

It's all right to cultivate a thirst for knowledge, but it brings with it mighty few free lunches.

A good dresser can give a woman almost as much pleasure as a good bartender can give a man.

Of all the manure produced on the farm that from the poultry has the greater value. Air dry hen manure has a value of about $8 per ton as compared with $2.50 per ton for manure from dairy cows or steers in the feed lot. On very few farms is the manure from poultry taken care of as it should be.

Hot weather.
Don't keep eggs too long.
Be careful about eggs you send to market.
Poultry, old, young, large, and small, all need shade these warm days.
Many of the county and some of the State fairs will be held this month.
Feed sparingly of corn and corn meal. It is too heating.
Corn makes fat and heat. Oats, wheat, bran and middlings make eggs.
It is a good time to lay in a supply of road dust for next winter's dust bath.
The Fair gives good advertising cheap. Don't fail to have a string of birds there.
Try and attend a few of your county fairs, taking a pen or two of your best—it's good advertising—you will find it pays.
Sitting hens are lice breeders and this for only one reason you should prefer the incubator if you raise or intend to raise many.

Bran for laying stock, growing stock, and in every pen where there is a chick or fowl at a profit for the owner.

All poultry yards should have shade in them. Plum trees are excellent for this purpose. They will grow on most any soil.

The open front poultry houses are here to stay—many styles—some with better features than others—fresh air is the tonic for all diseases.

It is not possible to make a rule for feeding that may be followed. The idea is that no fowl or lot of fowls will eat or require the same amount of food each meal.

Poets are born, so are layers. They are not fed up as all the feeding in the world will not change a non-productive hen in nature. It's up to the breeder to breed "utility" in his strain, it doesn't come by accident.

The killing of poultry should be done by bleeding in the mouth with a sharp knife. Make a sharp cut lengthwise in the mouth, to make them bleed; then a slot upwards, which penetrates the brain.

The chick is an early riser and the attendant should also be, and if he can not get up with the chicks, better prepare their breakfast the night before, after they have gone under the hover or into the coop for the night.

The trap nest enables the practical user to pick out the best layers, to cat or market the drones, to identify the layer of each egg at any time—be bred only from select layers, to trace the sire and dam of each chick.

Feeding and special care of the pullets this month to develop them early and bring them to maturity in a vigorous condition will more than repay you for the extra care and work by a full egg basket this coming winter.

How many mistakes in mating have already come to light. It is bound to crop out, mistakes always show up where correctness is not noticed. We should take note of our matings that produced the like and those that produced the best and profit by last experience in making our next matings.

You should study to know the value of the food you feed your poultry to get the best results. You may not do this in a way that a scientist would, but you can do it in an experimental way, and experience is far the best teacher; however, it is the most expensive.

The hen gathers, mixes and puts together in organic form 65 grains of water, 120 grains of fat, 108 grains of lime, 120 grains of albumen, 26 grains of sugar, and 10 grains of ash. With her marvelous inside fixtures she puts her humble grist together and shells out the most miraculous of animal products, the egg.

Money In Home Canning

A CANNER SHOULD BE A PART OF THE FARM EQUIPMENT

"It is a lamentable fact that over fifty per cent of the natural production of the average orchard and garden has not only been wasted, but is actually lost for food products to American homes for want of some simple way of taking care of the surplus products." That statement is taken from a paper by Prof. O. H. Benson, specialist in charge of club work for the U. S. Department of Agriculture. Hardly any one would question the truth of it. And yet such waste is really unnecessary.

There are today on the market small home canning outfits that can be bought at from $5 to $15 each. These have a capacity varying from a few dozen to several hundred cans per day. Many a boy or girl with one of these canners could add to his or her savings during vacation by gathering up what usually goes to waste in the orchards and gardens, canning it and placing it on the market later. The work is especially suitable for the girls, and some girls are already making money in this way to help pay their expenses in college.

In many localities clubs have been organized to do this work. These clubs hold regular meetings through the canning season, each member bringing something to can. The meetings are held out of doors under the trees where tables are arranged for prepar-

Poultry In State

Totals 13,654,838

East Lansing—Michigan has a hen population which estimators at the Michigan Agricultural college place at 13,654,838. This includes poultry of all classes and varieties. Their value is estimated at at least $7,678,012, counting only poultry upon Michigan farms. Feathered families in the towns and cities were not enumerated. The count was made by taking the figures gathered during the last census and adding to them a sum equivalent to a 37 per cent increase in the five years since 1909.

The poultry population in the leading counties was found to be as follows: Lenawee, 543,255; Monroe, 450,031; Allegan, 441,079; Hillsdale, 416,214; Washtenaw, 375,170; Wayne, 343,615; Huron, 377,461; Ottawa, 31,746; Saginaw, 401,959; Sanilac,

356,067; Kalamazoo, 225,712; Kent, 358,524, and Ingham, 267,625. According to Dean R. S. Shaw 91.5 per cent of the Michigan farms reported more than half the total valuation of sheep or swine. "The poultry represent a very valuable asset," declared Dean Shaw, "as the returns from the flocks are almost clear gain throughout the year, for they procure a living from what would otherwise be waste material."

NEW VARIETY OF WHEAT SHOWS BIG YIELD IN STATE

East Lansing.—Restoration of Michigan to prominence as a wheat-growing state has become a likelihood as a result of the yields returned by a new variety of wheat which has been developed by Prof. Frank A. Spragg of M. A. C. and tested out by state farmers. The new variety was sent out among state farmers a year ago by the college and the crop produced from this has averaged from 30 to 40 bushels to the acre, while the state average is but 16 to 20 bushels.

This wheat which is yielding so phenomenally is a variety known as "Red Rock." It is a winter wheat which was developed by Professor Spragg to withstand Michigan's severe seasons.

"In the past few years wheat production in Michigan has fallen off 50 per cent," declared Dr. Eben Mumford, head of the farm management department of M. A. C., "but general adoption of this new variety may restore our standing. Such a restoration is secretly to be hoped for with the present varieties which yield only 17 or 18 bushels to the acre."

"Our county agents have reported that farmers who have tested the new Red Rock wheat have had yields averaging from 30 to 40 bushels to the acre, while their neighbors grew only 17 or 18 bushels to the acre."

Some of the counties from which these agents reported were St. Clair, Branch, Kalamazoo, Allegan, Newaygo, Saginaw, Iron and Kent.

GREAT KEEPING QUALITIES MICHIGAN APPLES PROVEN

Ludington.—More evidence of the keeping quality of Western Michigan apples has come to light. George Baylor of Riverton township was showing Russet apples on August 1 that had been kept in a pit since last fall. The apples were wrapped in newspapers before being put into the pit, and at about Christmas time they were taken out and those apples which showed signs of becoming soft, removed from the lot. The apples returned to the pit and removed on the first of August were in fine condition, and have an abundance of the flavor that is causing such a demand for the Western Michigan "King of Fruit."

STATE FOOD DEPARTMENT WILL ENFORCE THE LAW REGARDING COVER ON FRUIT

Lansing.—The dairy and food department has served notice on local dealers in fruit and vegetable products that all sidewalk displays should be sufficiently elevated from the walk and covered.

The department will make the matter state wide. Chief Clerk Smith says:

"The law is explicit in its requirements that food products shall be kept and handled in a clean and sanitary manner. The public is demanding that its food products be furnished in as cleanly a condition as it is possible to have them. There is absolutely no excuse for the retailer to display several baskets of huckleberries on the sidewalk and to permit them to remain there for hours covered with flies. The same rule applies to every other food that can be and is eaten before it is boiled or peeled. A few cents worth of mosquito netting will take care of it all."

DEVELOPMENT BUREAU PROMISES WONDERFUL DISPLAY OF FRUIT FOR GREATER MICHIGAN FAIR

Traverse City, Aug. 5.—The largest and finest showing of apples yet made in the State of Michigan is being planned by the Western Michigan Development Bureau for the Greater Michigan Fair scheduled for Grand Rapids for the first week in September. Between four and five hundred bushels of the best apples obtainable in the Western Michigan orchards will be secured, and each variety picked and sent to storage as it ripens. These apples will be arranged into one big bank that will strike the visitor to the fair, between the eyes, causing him to fall but fall over backward.

In addition to the big showing of apples the Development Bureau is arranging a much larger and more attractive display of fruit in glass than has ever before been put up, and its field men are now scurrying over the Western Michigan country in search of grains and grasses that are of exceptional height and in prime condition. These grains and grasses, along with the fruits in glass will be used for trimmings in connection with the display of apples. The fruit in glass will be placed in a big central pyramid which will form a sort of crown to the Ann Arbor.—Chester Erswell, 15 years old, of Toledo, drowned at Lakeside when a canoe in which he was riding tipped over. The body has not been recovered. Erswell came to the lake several days ago with his mother.

Grand Haven.—James Ira Cramer, 82 years old, pioneer of Ottawa county, died at his home in Wright township. The shock of a fall received about three weeks ago hastened his death.

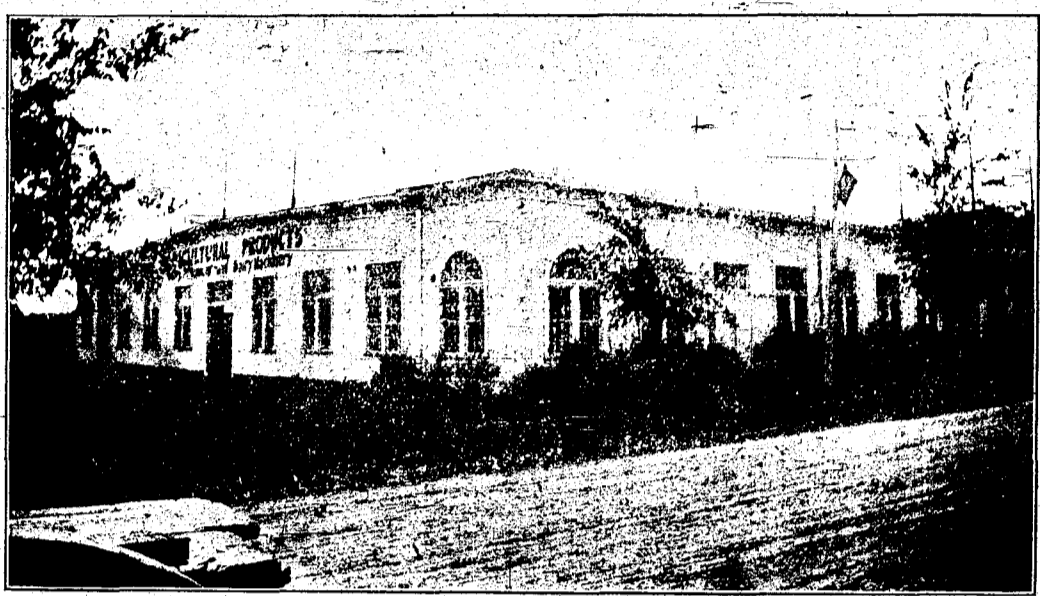

Flint.—Relatives of Flint tourists traveling abroad are beginning to be concerned over the plight in which the latter have been placed as a result of the suspension of the transatlantic travel, owing to the war situation in Europe. Among those abroad from Flint are John C. Carlton, former speaker of the Michigan house of representatives, and his wife, who were heard from recently while in Germany.

Kalamazoo.—"If you take the automobile, I'm going with you," John Hinkle's daughter told a constable when he attached her father's automobile. She refused to leave the machine and remained in it as another automobile pulled it down the street to a garage. The girl had hidden the switch key so that the machine could not be started.

White Cloud.—Dr. W. E. Fowler died of appendicitis and peritonitis, aged 47 years. He had resided here since 1908.

Lansing.—Several fights occurred in Lansing's foreign colony over the war in Europe, and the police station holds most of the warriors. One giant Russian who mistook a crowd of Poles for Germans, was badly beaten up. The police have been called to the district on an average of every hour.

Port Huron.—Wellington London of Smith's Creek is at the hospital with three fractured ribs, one of which pierced his lung, and Mr. and Mrs. Edward Turner and Fred Marx, who is in London's employ, were badly bruised in an automobile accident.

GREAT FRUIT EXHIBIT.

The above picture is that of the Agricultural Building which this year will contain the greatest exhibit of fruit ever gotten together in the middle west. The apples alone entered in the contest for the silver cups donated by the Grand Rapids Savings Bank will occupy one whole side of that long building. It will take fully 650 or 700 boxes of apples to make this display. Besides that the Western Michigan Development Bureau will have a comprehensive exhibit of the products of Western Michigan—and this in itself insures a display worthy of the attention of any one.

The building will be artistically and handsomely decorated, the color scheme being green and white. The pillars of the hall will be festooned with bunting as well as the outside walls. This building will present an appearance the like of which has never before been seen by anyone who attended the Fair.

On one side of the building there will be an extensive exhibit of grains and grasses grown upon pine barren sand lands by Mr. L. P. Haight. This exhibit will consist of a series of tables which will show the pine barren land in the wild, the first stages of preparation and cultivation in the growing of vetch and alfalfa and so on up to the growth of rye standing five or six feet high. Then will follow a series of tables showing the soil preparation which brings about these results and explanations given therefor.

Another most interesting exhibit in this building will be the United States Government Good Roads demonstration. This will show the roads as they were built in ancient Rome and the various steps in road-making up to the present time and will show how the modern roads are being built. It is probable that Mr. Eldridge of this department of the Government will be on hand with illustrated lectures which will be most interesting, entertaining and instructive.

SHORT STATE STORIES

Saginaw.—Mrs. Cordelia N. Sawyer of Chicago, who has been visiting her daughter, Mrs. Charles S. Wheeler, in this city for a month, is dead. She was 85 years old and had lived in Chicago since 1857.

Petoskey.—Miss Chloe Seymour, 80 years old, a Grand Rapids resident for 72 years and a Bay View summer visitor 25 years, is dead at Bay View of old age.

Kalamazoo.—Because she refused to give up her religious beliefs at the command of her husband, Mrs. Ira T. Ferring and her spouse had considerable trouble. Their differences led to the divorce court, and she was granted a divorce.

Petoskey.—It is learned here that Peter Henkel, who went to Oberramstadt, Germany, for a visit has been pressed into service in the European war, as no word has come from him in three weeks.

Sault Ste Marie.—William Malmberg, aged 69 years, a former warden of Marquette prison and a resident of the Upper Peninsula for 50 years, died of apoplexy.

Northport.—The Congregationalists of Northport, Omena and Sutton's Bay have issued a ministerial call to Rev. Morris of Frankfort. Rev. Morris was for 10 years pastor of the Second Congregational church of Grand Rapids.

Marshall.—Paul Billhardt sent a cablegram from Bremen, Germany, to City Marshal Noneman, stating he was unable to leave there as the German government held up the steamer on which he was to sail.

Hastings.—A. B. Strimbach, aged 70 years, farmer, south of Hastings, fell from a wagon where his horse suddenly started, sustaining a broken hip and arm.

Hastings.—Receipts so far for the fourth annual Chautauque, which just opened here are $1,900. At least $100 will be donated to the city park fund.

Ionia.—Andrew Courtan, Russian, who has been employed in the Ionia cafe for some time, has gone to Montreal on his way back to Russia, where he says he will join the czar's army.

Royal Oak.—Mrs. Goodman, who lived with George Nicely, near this village, died as a result of drinking poison. Relatives say that the poison was taken in mistake for medicine. Judge Rose had impaneled a jury, and an inquest will be held today.

Petoskey.—Mrs. Anthony Wabash appeared before Prosecutor Sweeney, asking for the arrest of a neighbor woman on the grounds that she has said "gol-darn to my children three times in the last three years." The arrest was not made.

Jim Nogude says its a shame the way we waste money in building chimneys these modern times, where common stove-pipe stuck through the roof does just as well.

Jim always has been over-burdened with eric pride.

Mrs. Clubb gave a remarkable lecture on "Public Improvements" at a meeting of the Cleaner Town society last week. It was hinted by other members that the alleys behind Mrs. Clubbs house would be an ideal starting point for a campaign along this line.

A rather unusual co-incidence in medical science has developed in Ike Lofler. Inst at potato planting time last spring he was attacked by an unknown disease affecting his back. It disappeared just after the planting season and has not bothered him since. But now, that the potatoes are ready to dig Ike says he feels the same symptoms coming on and is sure he is going to have another attack.

On our state news page we are printing the photo of the building at Greater Michigan Fair, where the greatest fruit display ever brought together in our state will be displayed during fair week.

John H. Lewis of Boyne City, Candidate for Sheriff at the primaries next Tuesday, he has been a resident of this County for twenty years, and has never before asked favors, politically. (adv.)

The birthday of Mrs. John Hackett Aug. 15th, age 74 years; and Sept. 7th, Mr. Hackett, age 74, were celebrated at their home Aug. 15. About fifty neighbors and friends were present. The well filled tables attested the prosperity of the well deserving couple, who have undergone the privations of a pioneer life and are now enjoying the prosperity of long years of well earned success.

East Jordan has just two candidates in the field on the Republican ticket at the primaries next Tuesday and we believe every voter in this city should cast their ballot for these two men. Hon. H. I. McMillan has served one term in the State Legislature and is entitled to a renomination and election by every rule of politics. He is a man who is square and above-board with everyone and made an enviable record at the last legislative meet.

Att'y Dwight H. Fitch is East Jordan's other candidate and the only one we have for a strictly county office. East Jordan has for years had the honor of retaining the Prosecuting Attorneyship of the county and we believe every loyal citizen will cast his ballot to retain the office here. Att'y Fitch has been conservative in his administration and has not only given satisfaction, but has reduced the costs of the office to a minimum.—The Editor.

Keenholts-O'Connor Nuptials.

A very pretty wedding took place on Wednesday evening at the home of Mrs. H. Keenholts when her daughter, Miss Grace, was united in marriage to Mr. John O'Connor of Boyne Falls, in the presence of about eighty friends and relatives. The wedding ceremony was performed by Rev. T. Porter Bennett, pastor of the Methodist Episcopal church. The ring ceremony was used. Berl and Ardis Milford acted as ring bearers. The bride wore white and carried a bouquet of roses and sweet peas. They were unattended.

The bride is one of the popular young ladies of our city, being a school teacher while the groom is an influential man of Boyne Falls. After refreshments were served Mr. and Mrs. O'Connor left by auto for Charlevoix and then to Chicago, Detroit and Grand Rapids, after which they will reside in Boyne Falls. Their many friends wishes them a happy voyage through life.

Rodewald-Barkley.

A quiet wedding ceremony was solemnized at the Methodist parsonage last Sunday noon when Rev. T. Porter Bennett united in marriage Mrs. Lola Rodewald and Alvin D. Barkley. The contracting parties are well known in our city and best wishes are extended to them. They will make their residence in Echo township.

VOTE FOR

Geo. E. Ellis

(Mayor of Grand Rapids)

for Governor

The Man OF THE Common People

Primaries August 25, 1914

George E. Ellis is a candidate for the Republican nomination for governor of Michigan. He has been elected mayor of Grand Rapids five times by the votes of the common people, is distinctively a man of the people and the friend of the man who toils.

Mayor Ellis has kept faith with the laboring men of Grand Rapids. He has recognized them in government affairs for the first time in the history of the city. That is why Mayor Ellis has been five times elected. The common people, the men who toil, have backed him to the limit. Do you want that kind of a governor? If you do, vote for GEORGE E. ELLIS at the primaries Tuesday.

Author of "A Heart of the North," "Ishmael of Grand Lac," Etc.

"Thou canst still have all the happiness of the world!" exclaimed Mashkaugan. "I am the only one who is doomed to misery. How terrible must have been thy journey in the woods! There are few men who could have made it. I see now that I followed thy track, made yesterday, that was as the path of a drunken man. I would that I knew I may some time reach a place of safety, as thou hast, and the child I sought for yesterday when I saw thee and fled, thinking it was thy ghost!"

"Upon earth a man's soul is within his own keeping, Mashkaugan. The only way to find happiness for it is to keep it clean and undefiled."

At this moment the hunchback felt that he was no longer master of his own words. He could no longer pick and choose to tell whatever he was minded to. Compulsion stronger than his will swayed him now and the flood of his words came unrestrained.

"I am accursed!" he cried. "I sought thy death! For days and more days, for a week and still other weeks I watched and watched, looking for some way to send thee to thy doom, so that no other man might ever know that I had done it!"

"Traveling up the river, I studied the White Rapids, that had already been the death of one man, and when we returned I followed thee, ready to push thee into that awful place!"

"Not another man could have gone through it and lived, but thou wert saved to bring me to punishment. I will not go to that prison again. But of that thou knowest nothing. There is Atuk's gun—in that corner—and thou canst shoot me if it is thy will, for I will not hold up a finger to hinder thee. Or an ax may serve, or this sheath-knife that is sharp and keen in the point."

"If swift death seems to good for me, thou canst drive it slowly, and thou shalt see that I will not move. Kill me, Yellow Hair—kill me! I have deserved death at thy hands, and the Manitou bade thee pull me from the water in order to place vengeance in thy hands!"

His hands shook as he spoke. His voice was harsh with emotion.

But at this moment they heard steps outside. It was Atuk's wife returning.

"Thou hast taken up the little one," she said. "He is surely hungry again. Fortunate am I that I have enough for thy son and mine. Give him to me. The little Yellow Hair is surely a sturdy one who will guide thy footsteps when thou art become old."

Lorimer gave her the child. For some time there was silence in the tent. Finally the woman laid the child down again.

"He will sleep now. I go out once more. The net has suffered little and is full of whitefish. The storm has gone down. It brought us luck rather than harm."

When she went away again Lorimer had lain down, feeling much oppressed. There was a sharp pain in his side and a shrewd was beginning to rack his chest.

"Come nearer to me, Mashkaugan," he said quietly. "Thy tale bears the sound of truth. I cannot tell why such a hate was in thy heart. We had hard words together in days gone by, but if thou hast been in my place what wouldst thou have done to one who did the things I blamed thee for?"

He coughed and went on:

"I think I care little to hear thy reason. They must have been poor ones or thy regret would not be so great. Now thou shalt take my hand in friendship and let bygones be bygones."

"I bear no enmity. Life would be impossible for us two at the post as enemies. Try and be a friend instead, as I shall."

"I do not feel well, and think the cold has done me some harm. I will rest a while and try to sleep. Since Ameou no longer lives I have often been sorry I did not remain in the rapids."

"I saw Ameou a few hours ago!" cried Mashkaugan. "She lives and is longing for thee!"

Lorimer sank senseless on his couch. The toil of his journeying, his efforts in the waters of the lake, and now this sudden news proved too much for him.

When the Indian woman returned to the tent she found that Lorimer was unconscious and that Mashkaugan sat by him, holding one of his hands and weeping bitterly while he watched every breath.

Then she also knelt by the sick man, asking questions of the hunchback, after which she took from her pack a bundle tied in birch-bark, from which she obtained dried herbs and roots and bark gathered in the spring-time when the sap is pushing upward, and set them in a cooking-pot to simmer on the stove.

In a few moments their dreadful odor filled the tent.

Lorimer soon revived, only to chatter in a tongue unknown to the woman, but which Mashkaugan understood, for it was English. The wife fed her brood, after giving the hunchback and her husband something to eat. The night had come and the wind had died down, while myriad stars were shining very bright and close at hand, as they do in the far north.

Then she poured the liquor of her brewing into a tin vessel, allowing it to cool, and compelled the patient to swallow a big dose, in spite of his protestations.

"He should have some of this about six times during the night," she said. "I hope I may wake up often enough, but I am sleepy with hard work."

"Sleep on quietly," said Mashkaugan. "I promise that my eyes will never close tonight. I will watch the seven stars that turn about the star of the north, and he shall have the medicine as thou sayest."

During the long night the man kept his word, not even a nod coming to allow his head to drop upon his breast.

He gave the drug faithfully, keeping very near the sick man and listening to his labored breathing.

From time to time he raised the flap of the tent and looked at the seven stars, as he called the Great Bear. On several occasions during his long vigil his long, gnarled hands came together, and he repeated the prayers the missionaries had taught him when he was very young.

CHAPTER XIV.

Light from Darkness.

Early in the morning Curran arose after a night filled with restless dreams. His first care was to inquire whether Mashkaugan had returned. When he learned that the man had been gone during the whole night he was greatly disturbed.

As happens with most individuals who are engaged in iniquitous schemes, the chief agent felt that all men's hands might suddenly be raised against him. What business had the hunchback to be away from the post without permission? He was in the company's pay and under the agent's orders.

It really looked as if the fellow were concocting some queer scheme of his own. Most likely, however, he was still hunting for the child.

Curran was greatly disappointed at his failure to find the baby, but he took it with a certain degree of equanimity. After all, he had meant to get rid of it at some time or other. If it was gone for good so much the better. Yet he saw trouble with prying lawyers who might insist on valid proofs of the child's death, or, at any rate, on reliable circumstantial evidence.

"After all," he cogitated, "I should have little trouble in satisfying them. I'm smart enough to find some way out of it. That fool, Scarface, was angrier than I thought. I suppose he drank more of that stuff when he went ashore with the baby, and at the last moment he decided to take it farther and let it die. Or else he took it to some Indians, hoping to get a reward for it later on."

With this idea, Curran began again to worry a good deal. He was calm one moment and excited the next.

"If that kid is still alive, it may turn up some day and cause a peck of trouble. All the Indians will know who he is. What I've got to do is to marry that girl just as soon as I can and take her south with the spring brigade—or even on a special trip."

"I'll find some way to keep silence about the child. I can persuade Ameou to keep her mouth shut about it after I'm her husband. Then I'll get to work about that money, and as soon as I lay my hands on it I'll get out of the country."

"The world's full of good places where a man can have a good time with lots of cash and no one to know him; but I'd give ten skins to find out what that fellow Mashkaugan is up to."

He busied himself that morning with odd matters requiring his attention around the post, though he constantly interrupted his work to look over the river lest the hunchback might be returning.

He had made up his mind to teach that fellow something, for he was getting too cheeky altogether. A good beating would do a lot of good, yet when Curran thought about administering the punishment an uneasy feeling came to him that it might be easier to think of than to accomplish.

"Of course, he's the very deuce of a fighter. I bet those big monkey arms of his would come near busting a bear's ribs, and even if he was whipped he'd always be looking for a chance to get square. But something's got to happen to him, for he knows too much. Some day I'll plug him full of lead in a corner where no one will ever look for him. Who would have thought he'd turn so rusty after that—that White Rapids business? Wonder if he's got an idea I'm not going to deal square with him?"

The forenoon passed slowly. The more Curran thought the shorter his temper grew. He stormed at old Cyprien and his wife, and roared at some Indians who had dropped some fish off near the landing-place on the river.

"Here! You fellows clean this up! Do you think I'm going to have all this mess around here? Set your kids at it, and don't let me catch you doing such things again, or you'll see what debt I'll allow you next week when you start off trapping!"

He went among the tents and scolded about real or fancied grievances until the Indians were muttering and casting evil glances in his direction.

Finally one, more decided than the rest, went up to him. The man was a six-footer, who could juggle with hundred-pound bags of flour.

"We know what is right," he said; "we were not through with cleaning our fish. Yellow Hair taught us the proper way, and we did what he said, because he was a man talking to men. Now we shall do as we please, or thou canst look for us a long time before we will bring thee our fur."

Curran's first impulse was to knock the man down, but he thought better. In the first place he would probably get badly mauled, and it would be a serious matter to have the Indians turn against him.

Curran turned on his heels and went off toward the river, anxious to look again for any sign of Mashkaugan's return. He was glad to find that a canoe was in sight.

"Three men paddling," he said. "Wonder where Mashkaugan got the others? But, no, this is a long-traveling canoe. Sure enough, it must be Father Gregoire."

"Hey!" he shouted. "Here is the old Father White Beard returning, the Manitou line of the white men. Burn some powder, you fellows! Show him a welcome! Be on hand to help him and unload his canoe!"

He was very eager to show the old priest much attention. A few guns were discharged, and the loud detonation of Father Gregoire's ancient fowling-piece resounded.

Presently the good man landed, smiling at every one, his kindly, grizzled old face bespeaking his pleasure.

"I will only stay until the morning," he said. "I must soon hurry north to James Bay, where I am to winter. Already at night the dead waters are beginning to film over with ice, and I don't want to be frozen in on the way. Are there any children new born or dead whose souls are to be prayed for? Any couples awaiting marriage?"

Ameou had come from her tent and stood near the old man.

"There is one man who is dead and whose soul needs thy praying," she said. "Yellow Hair, my husband, whom the white people called Lorimer, is dead. My child, also I have lost."

The missionary placed his hand on her shoulder.

"Indeed, my poor daughter, I will pray for them," he assured her. "Also will I pray for thy comfort in thy bereavement."

Curran then took the old man into the post building, bidding him sit in the best chair, and ordering food to be prepared at once.

"I have it in mind, father," he began, "that there are people across the seas belonging to Lorimer who would be glad to hear that prayers have been offered for his soul. Would you give me a little paper telling that you have done so, which I will send to those who will mourn for him?"

"I believe his people are not of our faith," said the priest.

"Yet, they may be glad, nevertheless," insisted Curran. "Here is paper and pen and ink. If the pen is rusty there are plenty of good wild-geese and geese of the soul of prayers, by whomsoever ever offered," said the missionary.

"It is true that his people may be made happy knowing that we all had kindly thoughts of their dead."

After much searching in the many pockets of his coat, the old man found his spectacles and wrote as follows:

My friend Lorimer was a very good man, whose kindness and gentleness of character I had several opportunities of appreciating in the last four years. He had also endeared himself to the Indians. His wife is left very desolate, and needs consolation. I have prayed for the soul of Lorimer and of his little son, whom I hear is also dead. Also I shall pray that those he leaves behind may be comforted now and granted peace everlasting in the greater life to come.

FATHER GREGOIRE.

"Send this paper to the young man's friends," he said. "It can do no harm, and may in some measure serve to alleviate their grief."

Curran folded it carefully and locked it up in a box where he kept a few other papers and trinkets. It was a good document to have, serving at least to some extent, as proof of the death of the man and his child. To any but the most prying it must be good corroborative evidence.

"The young woman is a widow," said Curran as they sat down to eat. "She is a fine young woman and used to better care than she can have among her own people. I would like to acquire the right to care for her and look out for her old father, for the man is old and cannot hunt much longer, and yet has young children. I have spoken to him, and find that he is not averse. I want very much to marry Ameou."

"But this is surely very soon," objected the missionary, "and I am very certain that this young woman is still sore distressed at her loss. Is she, also, willing? I must say that I should be surprised if she were."

"These savages cannot be judged altogether from the standpoint of white people, father," said Curran hurriedly.

"Since I was a young man I have traveled much among wild people of many countries," replied the priest. "Everywhere I have found that beneath the surface manhood and womanhood are much the same in all races. Everywhere there are souls to save and suffering to be relieved. I shall speak to the young woman. I do not intend to seek to dissuade her, as another marriage might be best for her and her people; yet I must learn the true state of her mind."

He was looking at Curran authoritatively. The agent's eyes lowered. Curran now considered that he had been in too great a hurry. What he thought a help might turn out to be a hindrance. There was something in the old man's clear blue eyes that disconcerted him; they seemed to penetrate into his soul and see things that must at all costs remain concealed.

The two were eating silently, for men of the wilderness grow chary of conversation from mere lack of practice. The priest enjoyed his food quietly, while Curran sometimes forgot to eat, so worrying were his thoughts. He seemed to be traveling on a road that was constantly filled with obstructions.

The repast was soon over. Father Gregoire arose, giving thanks, and went out among the tents. An Indian child directed him to that of Nimissuts.

"Peace be with you, all," he said to the chief's wife, who met him at the entrance. "May I come in?"

He was made welcome, for all the Indians loved him, even those he had not yet been able to gather entirely to his fold. They knew him to be a good man, always eager to help and succor, knowing a little of medicine, and ever ready to give advice.

Ameou had been sitting in the tent, but she arose when the priest entered.

"I thank thee for comrign," she said. "Indeed, I am happy for the prayers thou are going to say. It seems to me that thy voice will be harkened to, and that good may come. Sit here, good father, on this caribou skin."

Nimissuts greeted him, and the young children kept very still, looking at the long, white beard with much interest. It always was a sight that puzzled them.

It took but few questions to show the priest that the thought of a second marriage was abhorrent to the young woman. When he mentioned it she bent her head hopelessly, as if she thought him also in league with the powers that were treating her so harshly.

"The man Curran wants to marry me," she finally said. "If my child were alive I might be willing, because it might have helped my little one to become a man like his father. But now there is only the thought of Nimissuts, my father, and his wife, with the little ones. I must do it if my father insists, but I have it in mind that death would be a better thing for me."

After supper that evening, Father Gregoire went again to see Ameou. The interior of the tent was dark, for night was falling fast.

"The young woman was sobbing bitterly, and the old man took one of her hands.

"I wish now to hear all that has happened," said Father Gregoire. "I want to know everything, that I may the better advise thee. As to thy marrying Curran unless the wish to do so is in thy heart it would be a shameful thing."

The words came very slow at first. Ameou's heart was near to breaking when she spoke of her hopes of the home-coming of her man, and when she told of the joy that had been hers at the birth of little Yellow Hair. Then she related the news of the awful disaster in the White Rapids, and of the disappearance of the child and her vain quest.

"Oh, father!" she cried. "Thou art the Manitou line of the white people, and the words thou speakest to thy Manitou are answered sometimes—thou hast said. Speak to Him now, and ask Him to relieve my pain, and be good to the spirit of Yellow Hair, my husband, and give me back my little one if he still be living!"

She knelt imploringly before him. Then the others, also, knelt in silence. Nimissuts listened, profoundly impressed, and the wife and children watched in wonder.

The priest's voice rose in rapid utterance of prayers for the dead and in slower words of consolation for the living. After these came more broken, halting sentences, in which the missionary implored mercy for the poor broken reed at his feet and humbly begged divine compassion whereby her awful burden might be lightened.

The priest's spoken prayers were ended, yet his hands were still joined together and his lips moved.

Then, outside the tent, and very near, the subdued cry of a wailing infant was heard.

The flap of the tent was opened and a great pair of shoulders surmounted by a deeply inset head became darkly limned against the rising glow of the soft moonlight.

The man entered, hearing something in his arms.

"Here is thy little man-child that was lost," he said. "I have brought him to thee with a message."

But Ameou had not listened. There came from her a wild cry, a staggering effort to rise to her feet and grasp her treasure.

Her head bent over the precious thing whose tiny face was soon covered with its mother's tears. The little head was pressed to the bosom that had suffered such agony, and to the heart that had been so overburdened.

Mashkaugan kept silent, and so did all the others. They were amazed at the swift answer to the missionary's beseeching words.

Finally Ameou looked up with a wonderful deep sigh of happy relief.

"Didst thou speak of a message, Mashkaugan?" she asked.

"The message is that one is very ill in whom thou art greatly concerned. He cries out thy name, fearing to die without beholding thee."

"There is no one in the world in whom I am concerned," she cried, "now that my little Yellow Hair is given back to me."

"There is one, Ameou," repeated the hunchback. "His lips have touched those of the little child, who has also rested in his arms. He bids thee come to him, for ever in his sickness he is crying out for thee and despairing because thou art not near. Indeed, the man I thought dead has come to life."

"Swiftly the hunchback clasped his hand over the young woman's mouth.

"No! Do not cry out! In silence must thou come! There is one whom I do not want here. In silence must we depart. We will start at once, for I can travel but slowly, having done my uttermost to get here swiftly and lay thy little one on thy breast. I must have a few moments' rest, for I am nearly done."

"My two lads are strong," said Father Gregoire. "I will call them at once and we will start in the canoe. I can paddle, also."

In a very short time they were afloat on the now placid river, paddling down the scintillating path of moon-rays.

For a time Mashkaugan rested quietly, like one who knows he has done all that can be of aid to the things of a man; but after a while he felt strong again and once more took up his broad paddle.

Ameou was kneeling in the bow, with the precious little bundle of humanity lying before her, comfortably ensconced in the narrowing point. She also, was paddling with a magnificent sweep of her arms, and behind her the missionary, the hunchback, and the two men followed her stroke.

The canoe dashed ahead so fast that the thwarts groaned against the long bindings of spruce root, and the thin cedar ribs cracked and the birch-bark complained. The breaths of the strong men began to come out in sobbing grunts, as when one smites with all his force with a nine-pound ax.

Thus they heard nothing of the splashing of muskrats or the cries of nightbirds; none of the whispers of the gentle breeze through the reeds of the dead waters. The rapids were easy, and the craft flew upon them until the affluent river was reached, and the paddles struck the calmer water as with one blow.

At the outlet they were compelled to slow down for a moment. At that point the river curved sharply and the canoe grated for a second on the sandbar until it passed on to deeper water.

"A journey to be remembered," whispered one of the priest's men. "We have traveled through the water as Uapishk, the wild goose, wings her way through the sky."

They had reached the place of Atuk's fishing-camp, and ran into the beach between the high jutting rocks.

Leaping out, the men dragged the canoe ashore, and Ameou jumped out with her baby and followed Mashkaugan to the tent that was concealed among the trees.

"We will wait here," said Father Gregoire. "Too many mourners are bad in sorrow, too many witnesses also in happiness. We will pray here that the sick man may become well again, and then ye two may light your pipes. Soon I will go up and see whether I can do anything for this man who is so ill. Get me the little box of medicines from my pack."

In the meanwhile Ameou had entered the tent where a man was tossing upon blankets resting on balsam-boughs.

To the young wife neither the long hair nor the straggling beard, nor the face that was so worn with suffering, mattered a whit. She bent over, and kissed them tenderly and reverently.

"Ameou! Ameou! My wife!" cried Lorimer without looking at her.

"I am here," she said softly. Then his eyes opened and he looked at her blissfully.

"I had such evil dreams—thou wert being taken away—away from me," he whispered hoarsely.

"I am with thee now—never to leave thee," she answered.

Lorimer smiled at her, and his head fell back contentedly in peaceful sleep.

Talks to Mothers

Mrs. Mary Wicks, Editor

Order, Heaven's First Law

During a long life I have known a few people with a remarkable memory for things they have put away. I recollect one man who when asked for a paper from a desk which was apparently in inextricable confusion would meditate for an instant—no longer—and then reach in and draw out of the piled up mass just the thing he wanted. But he was a wonderful exception and I put him alongside of those librarians who know the number of a book as soon as they hear its name.

On the other hand, we have all of us seen and known countless examples of the other sort of thing.

"When your mother says she has put a thing away safely, I know that she'll never find it again," I heard a man say of his wife, and there is a degree of truth in it as applied to her and to many of the rest of us.

"I know it is somewhere in the house," a woman said to me the other day. "I put it away myself and it is entirely safe. It's not lost—only I can't find it!"

I was reminded of the old woman who declared the tea kettle was not lost—she knew exactly where it was—at the bottom of the well! My friend's possession did her little more good than the kettle did its owner.

Some women are born orderly, some achieve orderliness, others have orderliness thrust upon them by the necessity of saving time and effort which the lack of regular habits takes from them. The persons who are born with a tendency to put things in place have little patience for or understanding of those who were made up without the bump of tidiness, and the latter are prone to call the neat ones "fussy," "old maidish," and harsher names.

"What difference does it make if I don't keep my room looking right and leave my things lying about?" queried a lad impatiently. "It hurts no one but myself."

That might be the case with him, but when the woman at the head of the house yields to a weakness for untidiness she not only offends against heaven's first law and sets an example to her children which is bound to harm now and in the future, but she also lessens her own ability to do good work and establishes a habit of disorderly living and thinking which if not checked will run through and injure her whole character.

Dear Little Friends—I have been invited to tell you stories—all kinds of stories. Beautiful stories that will make you feel good. Funny stories that will make you laugh. Exciting stories that will thrill you. Mysterious stories that will be so interesting you can hardly wait until you finish them; and best of all—I am going to invite YOU to tell me stories. Stories of your pets. Stories of your toys, your games, and yourselves. Stories of your friends. I know that you can do this, and I know that your stories will be very interesting. Maybe they will be even more interesting than mine. You must do your best; and when your stories are good enough to print I shall put them on this page for other little boys and girls to read, and your name will be signed to your story. And then I shall send you a post card (Oh, a very pretty post card) which entitles you to membership in the Children's Story-Telling Club! Won't that be fine? And don't you think it will be jolly to belong to a REAL story-telling club? Of course you do!

And now who is going to send me the very FIRST story? Write your name and address very plainly so I won't make any mistake in sending that post card. Send your story to: Editor The Children's Story-Telling Club, 1527 Thirty-fifth street, Rock Island, Ill.

Ice Cream.

Its Origin And Its Development Into One Of Our Great Industries.

ARTICLE II.

Extent of Industry.

The importance of the ice cream industry from 1900 to 1910 and particularly during the year 1909 has been a subject of much interest and comment. Only in the last few years has ice cream been regarded as more than a local business. Its value as a country-wide industry has grown slowly and unobtrusively until the last year or two. In that respect it was like the candy and it was not until wholesale candy factories were put up that candy-making became an industry.

"Ice cream has repeated the history of candy. It had the additional handicap, however, of being a perishable product and one hard to ship any distance. That fact localized the making of ice cream. But gradually important business men interested themselves in ice cream manufacture, and, by applying their talents to the needs of the business, they have developed it into its present stage as one of the fastest growing industries of our commercial life.

"The brains and money that have been expended in this business have worked wonders. From being a merely retail proposition, ice cream has become a wholesale one. Where once a retailer only covered the section immediate to his store, the wholesaler now covers a city. There are now several score wholesalers who cover wide stretches of territory, shipping for 200 miles.

"The problem of economical and perfect shipment of goods has been a hard one to solve, and it by no means has been solved yet, but the ingenuity of the American has applied itself to this phase of the industry, and the future holds out glowing prospects. This year or the year after may see ice cream shipped great distances in special containers that shall insure its arrival in the same condition as when packed. Already ice cream has been shipped across the country in perfect condition, and a week in transit has not deteriorated its hardness.

"The last important problem will be that of long shipment, and that is being solved. Several persons think they have the answer already, but the ideas must undergo the inevitable development of all important inventions before perfection is obtained.

"The question has been asked as to the total output of ice cream in the United States last year. That is impossible to answer. It can be said with more or less certainty that the factories sold as much as 80,000,000 gallons of ice cream in the country. That means a gallon per capita. But there are countless thousands of individuals, hotels, restaurants, clubs, soda fountains, drug stores, etc., which went on grinding out daily supplies that no one can reckon on as to amount. Twenty per cent additional to the factory output might be the amount, or nearly 100,000,000 gallons, for the year.

"The value of this output also is problematical. The factories probably got on an average of 85 cents a gallon, which would mean $68,000,000. The actual cost of the remaining 16,000,000 would be around $8,000,000, or a total of $76,000,000. The retail value of the 100,000,000 gallons would be about $140 a gallon or a grand total of expenditure by the people of $140,000,000 to satisfy their taste for the national dish. That shows the value and importance of the ice cream industry. To this must be added the cone business, and cakes that are served with orders for cream and the soda fountain business. Probably $150,000,000 would no more than express the total value of the ice cream business as the consumer looks at it.

"The investment in all these lines of ice cream serving amounts to a huge sum; no one can tell how much. Perhaps $30,000,000 would hardly cover it.

"An interesting feature of the industry to the average business concern is the supply buying. The dairy interests now count the cream demand for ice cream as being second in importance to butter and better than the cheese requirement. It is sure that the requirements of the ice cream industry this year has hit the butter business hard and has lifted the price of the latter. In great sections the butter men have been put out of business by ice cream manufacturers.

"Then, too, the ice cream business has created a great demand for machinery. The modern ice cream factory demands high grade and valuable machinery. From the delicate brine freezer to the ponderous ice machine the total investment of a large ice cream factory mounts to impressive figures. Those ice machine and cold store specialty manufacturing companies, who are actively bidding for the ice cream man's trade, are doing so because they realize here is a marvelously growing field.

"Last January it was said that there were 100 ice cream factories equipped with ice and refrigerating machines. Since that time the number has more than doubled. It has been recorded that 108 ice and refrigerating machines had been installed or contracted for by ice cream men. Fully twenty must be added to this number of those not coming directly under the cognizance of the editor, or 128 in all. Thus there are in use in this field 228 refrigerating machines—pretty good for a new industry, everyone must admit.

"Next year will see even greater strides in the growth of the industry, for ice cream has the country in its grip, and probably more than 100 manufacturers will install ice and refrigerating machinery."

True and Tried Recipes

Fancy Work and Cooking for the Season

Irish Stew.

Take 1-2 pounds of neck of beef, cut in pieces about an inch square. Put a bit of fat in the bottom of a saucepan over the fire and in it as it fries out slice an onion or two. Put the sliced meat into this and shake the pan so that the individual pieces may brown. Then cover the meat with about 3 cups of boiling water and let it simmer for half an hour. Then add 2 or 3 small carrots cut into inch squares, stew about an hour longer, slowly, then add 4 or 5 potatoes cut into halves. When the potatoes have cooked thicken the stew with a little flour or dumplings. Season with salt and pepper.

Lima Bean Soup.

Soak one pint of lima beans over night in cold water and in the morning boil in water until soft. If the water boils away very much add a little milk or water. Add salt, pepper and cayenne to taste. If you like add a little onion juice. Melt one tablespoon of butter and rub into it until it is perfectly smooth one tablespoon of flour. Pour on this one cup of boiling water and stir hard. Stir the two mixtures together. Slice 2 or 3 very thin and put in the soup. It will be ready to serve as soon as it boils.

Celery Soup.

Scald one quart of milk in a double boiler and thicken with 1-2 cup of flour, creamed with 2 tablespoons of butter. Boil slowly for an hour, using the salted leaves, roots and tough stalks of a root of celery. Take from fire and strain. There should be about a pint of the celery water. Add the milk. Have ready 2 eggs, hard boiled, mash the yolks and mix thoroughly with the soup. Cut the whites in rings and put in the soup. Season with salt and pepper.

Swedish Sponge Cake.

Four eggs, big cup of sugar, 1-2 cup potato flour, 1 teaspoon of baking powder. Stir yolks of eggs and the sugar, put in first mixture, then beat the white of the eggs stiff, mix it all together. Can use only two eggs, if eggs and sugar are beaten till, almost creamy. Bake in a rather hot oven. Don't open the oven door for the first 15 minutes.

Lemon Pudding.

Sauce—One and one-half cups of sugar, 1-2 cups water, butter the size of egg, juice and rind of one lemon. Batter—One cup sugar, 1 cup water, butter size of egg, 1 teaspoonful baking powder, flour enough to make batter like cake.

Mix the sauce in granite pan and let stand till sugar is dissolved, then pour batter over sauce and bake in a medium oven. Good either hot or cold.

Eggs, Creole Style.

Stew 1-2 can tomatoes and turn out on a hot dish. Lay on the tomato squares of toast, and upon each square a nicely poached egg. Season to taste.

Teaching a Lawyer.

A Cleveland attorney took the Mediterranean trip a month ago, says the Plain Dealer. It was his first time across the water, and he stated on his return that he would have had a perfectly glorious time but for the silly questions asked him by customs officials.

It was on the pier at New York that his woes came to a climax. "Open your trunks, please," commanded the custom house officer. "Have you anything in here but personal property?" he continued.

"What do you mean by personal property?" countered the lawyer. The officer looked up in amazement.

"For heaven's sake, don't you know what personal property is?"

"I thought I did," answered the attorney. "And I can assure you that there is no real estate in my trunk."

Address all Pattern Orders to this Paper

1017.

A Group of Stylish Collars.

These models are smart and up-to-date. They are suitable for any of the prevailing dress or lingerie materials. No. 1 would be pretty in cool, dotted net or in batiste or lawn; No. 2 is very appropriate for pique or linen; No. 3 could be made of cloth, silk or velvet, also of any wash material, while No. 4 is also good for such fabrics. The pattern includes all styles illustrated, and requires for No. 1, 3/4 yard, for No. 2, 3/4 yard, for No. 3, 3/4 yard and for No. 4, 3/4 yard of 24-inch material for a medium size. It is cut in three sizes: Small, medium and large.

A New and Practical Apron.

This model affords protection and covering to the dress and is comfortable and neat in appearance. It is fitted by a dart under the arms, and has ample pockets in front. Gingham, chambray, percale, lawn, cambric, muslin, alpaca or denim may be used for this design. It is easy to make and may be trimmed with edging, or the free edges may be scalloped and embroidered. The pattern is cut in three sizes: Small, medium and large. It requires 3 1/2 yards of 36-inch material for a medium size.

Boys' Suit With Knickerbockers.

This model has raglan sleeve portions that form a yoke over the fronts. The blouse is made with coat closing and sailor collar, the sleeve is finished with a neat cuff. The Knickerbockers are in regulation style, with the fulness at the leg held in place by an elastic band. Suits of this fashion are fine for little boys, and are appropriate for Devonshire cloth, linen, drill, linene, pique, galatea, seersucker, percale, serge or gingham. The pattern is cut in four sizes: 3, 4, 5 and 6 years. It requires three yards of 44-inch material for a five-year size.

9827.

A Neat and Servicable House Dress.

This model is cut on popular and becoming lines. The fronts show a neat tuck below the collar. The neck is finished with tiny revers. The sleeve may be long and close fitting, or in shorter length, with a shaped cuff. The skirt is cut on simple lines, and the back has gathered fulness at the waistline. The design is suitable for serge, percale, galatea, seersucker, gingham or chambray, linen or lawn. The pattern is cut in six sizes: 32, 34, 36, 38, 40 and 42 inches bust measure. It requires seven yards of 27-inch material for a 36-inch size.

A Dainty Summer Frock.

This neat little model is cut in kimono style, with the fulness of the waist confined by a sleeve-band. The sleeve is made with square neck outline, and is lengthened by a full skirt portion. As here shown white dimity was used, with trimming of swiss insertion. The new crepe will combine prettily for this style, with lawn or batiste. For gingham, percale, voile, silk and linen this style is good also. The pattern is cut in four sizes: 2, 4, 6 and 8 years. It requires 2 1/2 yards of 44-inch material for a 4-year size.

1015.

A Dainty Summer Gown.

This design, as here illustrated, was developed in blue crepe, with trimming of dotted silk, and white net for the vest. The collar of the waist was prettily embroidered in colors to match the material. The waist is cut in loose blouse style, with sleeve and body combined. The skirt has a gathered tunic, and a trimming of two ruffles. The tunic may be omitted. This model is adapted to silk, moire, linen, rice cloth, ratine, lawn, voile, chambray or batiste. It is graceful and stylish. The pattern is cut in six sizes: 34, 36, 38, 40, 42 and 44 inches bust measure. It requires 8 3/4 yards of 44-inch material for a 36-inch size. The skirt measures 1 1/2 yards at its lower edge.

A Becoming Frock for Mothers' Girl.

This attractive model was developed in white linene, with blue and white dotted percale for trimming. The yoke on the fronts may be omitted. The dress is also suitable for lawn, crepe, voile, challie, gingham, chambray or galatea. The waist portions are joined to a two-piece skirt-portion, under the broad belt. The sleeve in either style is comfortable and pretty. The pattern is cut in four sizes: 6, 8, 10 and 12 years. It requires 3 1/2 yards of 36-inch material for an eight-year size.

A pattern of any illustration mailed to any address on receipt of 10 cents in silver or stamps.

Knew She'd Come Back.

A young man who looked as if he might be 25 years old was sitting in the waiting room of the railway station. On his knee was a year-old baby. Presently the baby began to cry, and the awkwardness and helplessness of the young man were so marked as to attract general attention.

At this point a waiting passenger, a fat and amiable looking man, crossed the room and said to the distressed baby tender:

"A young woman gave you that baby to hold while she went to see about her luggage, didn't she?"

"Yes."

"You expect her back, I suppose?"

"Of course!"

"Ha, ha! Excuse me, but I can't help laughing. A woman once played the same trick on me. You're caught, young man. She took you for a greenhorn."

"Oh, she'll come back," answered the young man, as he looked anxiously around.

"She will, eh? Ha, ha, ha! What makes you think so?"

"Why, because she's my wife, and this is our first baby!"

"Oh—um—I see!" muttered the portly individual, and he was in such haste to get back to the other side of the room that he nearly fell over a passing dog.—Pearson's Weekly.

PRIMARY ELECTION NOTICE

Notice is hereby given that a General Primary Election will be held in the several Wards or Precincts of the City of East Jordan, State of Michigan, on Tuesday, Aug. 25, 1914, at the places in each of said Wards or Precincts as indicated below, viz:

- First Ward, at Bisnett Building
Second Ward, at Town Hall
Third Ward, at City Hall

For the purpose of nominating by direct vote candidates by each of the several political parties for the following offices, viz:

National—One candidate for Representative in Congress for the Congressional District of which said City forms a part.

State—One candidate for Governor, and one candidate for Lieutenant-Governor.

Legislative—One candidate for Senator in the State Legislature for the Senatorial District of which said voting precinct forms a part; one candidate for Representative in the State Legislature for the Representative District of which said voting precinct forms a part.

County—One candidate for each of the following County offices, viz: Sheriff, Clerk, Treasurer, Register of Deeds, Prosecuting Attorney, Surveyor, Drain Commissioner; also one candidate for Circuit Court Commissioner, two candidates for Coroner. Candidate for County Auditor.

Delegates to County Convention—There shall also be elected as many delegates to the county conventions of the several political parties as said ward, precinct or district is entitled to under the call of the county committees of said political parties, which number will be indicated by the number of blank lines printed on the official primary ballots used at said election under the heading, "Delegates to County Conventions." The Board of Primary Election Inspectors will furnish delegates with credentials, entitling them to seats in the county conventions, except that where there is more than one precinct in a ward or district and the county committee require the selection of delegates from the ward or district as a whole, such delegates should be admitted without credentials. Names of candidates for delegates to county conventions will not appear on the official primary ballots, but will be written or pasted in by the voter, in the place designated on said ballots.

SUGGESTIONS, RELATIVE TO VOTING

First find the column on the ballot containing the name of YOUR political party. Then mark a cross in the circle under the name of your party. If you stop here, you will have voted for NO ONE, and your ballot will be THROWN OUT. To make your vote count you must put a cross in the square before the name of such candidate as you wish to vote for. If you wish to vote for someone whose name is not on the ballot, write it in, and put a cross before the name. No votes will be counted unless there is a cross before his name.

If you neglect to make a cross in the square under the name of your political party, but do make a cross before the names of a number of candidates in any column, your vote will be counted as to candidates having a cross before their names, provided they are all contained within one party column, but if candidates are voted for in more than one party column, in such case the whole ballot will be thrown out.

Your vote will not be counted for any one unless you mark a cross (X) in front of his name.

REGISTRATION

All party enrollment is done away with, but every person must be registered, same as required for other elections. If your name is not already registered in your precinct, you can have it registered any day before primary day by applying to your city clerk or whoever is in charge of the registration books making a written request accompanied by an affidavit. See City Registration Notices.

The Polls of said election will open at 7 o'clock in the forenoon and will remain open until 8 o'clock, standard time, in the afternoon of said day of election.

OTIS J. SMITH, City Clerk.

Dated the 12th day of Aug., A. D. 1914.

Candidate for the Republican Nomination for Prosecuting Att'y At the August Primary.

Why YOU Should Vote for Joseph H. Bayliss for Congressman

SCOTT'S RECORD.

1911 session consisted of 72 days. Scott present 45 days; absent without leave, 13 days. Total, 27 days. Percentage of non-attendance 38-62, 72 per cent. 609 Roll Calls on vote taken during session. Voted on 431; failed to vote on 178. Percentage of votes missed, 29-1-3 per cent.

BAYLISS'S RECORD 1913.

86 days in session; present—79 days. Absent with leave, 5 days; without leave, 2 days. Total, 7 days. Percentage of non attendance, 8 plus per cent. 785 Roll Calls on votes during session. Voted on 733; number of votes missed, 52. Percentage of votes missed, 6 plus per cent.

NOTE.—If you wish to verify this, consult the House and Senate Journal at your county clerk's office.

CALLAGHAN BILL.

A matter of legislation in the last session of legislature, which attracted the attention of the laboring people, did not help Scott's record.

The Callaghan Publishing Company—an Illinois concern, made a new compilation of the Michigan Statutes, and asked the Michigan legislature to legalize their compilation. This would have deprived Michigan printers of the opportunity of doing the work. The State Typographical Union opposed it. The Callaghan concern had two or three representatives in Lansing lobbying for their bill. The newspapers denounced it.

Senator Scott voted for it, and Representative Joseph E. Bayliss voted against it and helped to defeat this bill. He now has the endorsement of the State Typographical Union of Michigan for his candidacy.

CANDIDATE BAYLISS FAVORS GOOD ROADS.

Congressional candidate Bayliss is right on the road question. He says: "I firmly believe in good and better roads, but I do not believe that the burden of building these roads should rest too heavily upon the local districts but should be borne in a large measure by the national government. I am greatly in favor of the Good Roads Bill, which was originated in the Post Office and Post Roads Committee, authorizing an appropriation of one billion dollars for construction of good roads throughout the country. The bill provides for the division of this money among the states, according to population, assessed value road mileage and area. The bill is logical and timely, and with proper support, should become a law. Just think what a vast benefit to the rural communities, such a law would be, with its billion dollar appropriation and detailed plans for road construction."

LARGE MAJORITY OF THE NEWSPAPERS OF THE DISTRICT SUPPORTING BAYLISS.

Newspapers in a large sense show public opinion. If they have any bearing upon Congressional race, Bayliss should be easy winner.

Twenty-three (23) newspapers of the district are actively supporting Bayliss. Ten (10) above the Straits and thirteen (13) below the Straits.

Thirteen (13) newspapers of the District are actively supporting his opponent.

Three (3) above the Straits and ten (10) below.

And five (5) papers are neutral.

BESIDES THIS

The Press of the State, particularly at Lansing where both candidates served in the Michigan Legislature, is with BAYLISS, and because of his record, picks him to win.

This statement by UNBIASED NEWSPAPERS SHOULD BE WELL WEIGHED BY THE VOTERS.

CAPITOL CITY PAPERS FOR BAYLISS

What they say at Lansing, Capitol City Papers' Opinion.

"Rep. Joseph E. Bayliss of the Soo, and Senator Frank D. Scott of Alpena, are the principal contenders for the Republican nomination for congress in the eleventh district, and the outcome of the primary battle is being watched with considerable interest by those who observed the work of the two candidates at the last session of the legislature. If the legislative records of the two men are carefully measured by the voters of the eleventh district, Rep. Bayliss should have little difficulty in winning the nomination by a handsome plurality."—Lansing State Journal.

Bayliss by reason of his progressive legislation in the last session of the House, particularly the bill which he fathered and forced through for physical connections of telephones, is picked as next congressman by Lansingites. Most of the people at the capitol are favorable to this candidacy and judging from his record here in the state legislative halls, he unquestionably should make a good congressman. He was sincere in his dealings and actions, and was one of the best liked men in the entire legislature.—Lansing Evening Press.

M. P. BAYLISS WAS THE AUTHOR OF MANY

Bills in the 1913 legislature which were designed to place the party machinery squarely in the hands of the rank and file of the parties and thus clip the power of party bosses.—Grand Rapids Press.

UNBIASED OPINION OF OTSEGO COUNTY MAN

The favorite and leading candidate on the Republican ticket for the office of Congressman of the Eleventh District, is Hon. Joseph E. Bayliss of Sault Ste. Marie.

Founded upon personal investigation in some of the counties of the District, Mr. Bayliss is making a much better race than his opponent, and no candidate's chances ever looked better than Mr. Bayliss's. More surprising of all is the fact that Mr. Bayliss's strength in the lower peninsula is growing rapidly, and there is but little doubt that he will carry the majority of the lower peninsula counties. In Otsego County Mr. Bayliss undeniably leads the race. A poll of the business men in Gaylord discloses fully 75 per cent Bayliss supporters, and among the rural districts the percentage will run even higher.

Antrim and Kalkaska Counties will both turn out a big Bayliss majority. Five of the leading newspapers of Antrim are supporting him; two are neutral, and only one is opposing him.

In Emmet County Mr. Bayliss will make an exceptionally good race. His strongest supporter there is D. H. Hinkley who was formerly a congressional candidate, but was forced to withdraw by unseemly circumstances.—Otsego County. Otsego County Advance.

IS SCOTT "WET" OR "DRY"?

Scott did not vote, though present, on a bill to prohibit sale of liquor on fair grounds, INCLUDING STATE FAIR; Page 187—Senate Journal, 1911.

Two votes taken on a resolution for appointment of a Committee by the Governor without expense to investigate the liquor traffic in Michigan. Resolution was defeated; SCOTT VOTED AGAINST RESOLUTION EACH TIME.—Page 1187, Senate Journal, 1911.

NOTE.—BAYLISS IS NOT A MEMBER OF 1911 LEGISLATION.

SCOTT VOTED AGAINST a resolution tion in the last legislature urging congress to call a convention to propose an amendment to the United States Constitution, PROHIBITING THE MANU-FACTURE AND SALE OF INTOXICATING LIQUORS.

BAYLISS VOTED FOR IT. Vol. 11, Michigan Senate Journal, 1913, Page 1841-3.
