Fall Election Next Tuesday.

Party Issues Will Predominate In This Election

For the first time in a number of years the Republican ticket will appear in second place on the ballot of next Tuesday; this is because the "Progressive" party won out in the State two years ago and not because the Republicans of Charlevoix County were not loyal to their party. All should bear this in mind and examine the head of the different tickets carefully before marking their ballot.

When Governor Ferris was campaigning in our city a few weeks ago he asked the voters to cast their ballot straight—that there was not much difference in the men, but in the principles of the party. The Republicans of Charlevoix County are urged to vote their ticket straight in order that the principles of Republicanism may be perpetuated.

The candidates on the Republican ticket have been placed in nomination by the people and every man is able and worthy of the office he aspires to. There isn't a weak man on the entire ticket and every true blue Republican will not hesitate to support his party by "voting in the circle."

FOR STATE REPRESENTATIVE H. I. McMILLAN

Elsewhere in this issue we publish a political advertisement for the "Progressive" candidate for State legislature. This is used merely as advertising matter, to be paid for at advertising rates.

This paper is Republican in principles, first, last and all the time, and if for no other reason we believe that H. I. McMILLAN should be returned to the State Legislature. No man can ever question where "Mac" stands on a political issue, and no man can point out a flaw in his record at the last legislative session.

Herman I. McMILLAN is a man who is above board in all dealings; he believes in a square deal and a majority rule. He carried these principles with him into the legislature two years ago, and battled royally some of the "interests" who tried to sneak through questionable legislation.

"Mac" is a dyed in the wool Republican, and the Republicans of Charlevoix County want a Republican representative in a Republican legislative body.

HAD TOO MUCH OF THIS WORLD'S GOODS

So an Unfeeling Sheriff Gathered Them In.

Upon request of Kalkaska officers, Deputy Sheriff Cook located a drayload of household goods which were taken from a residence at Leetsville, near Kalkaska, and were in the possession of Thomas Crotty and Miss Elizabeth Drew, located on the West Side. Sheriff Cook placed them under arrest, and when taken before Justice Blount, told conflicting stories, as to how they came into possession of the property. They were locked up and Sheriff White of Kalkaska came up and took them back Friday morning for trial.

The goods were valued at from $250 to $300 and included furniture, blankets, clothing, etc.

Bad Fire on State Street

Three Store Buildings Destroyed Sunday Night.

In a fire on State Street Sunday night three frame buildings were destroyed and the energies of our fire department were taxed to the utmost to keep the fire from spreading through the entire block.

The fire originated in the L. C. Madison building occupied by Fred Bissonette with a restaurant. An alarm was immediately turned in and the fire department responded. The buildings were grouped together, however, and in spite of the efforts of the department, the building owned by Joseph Votruba, and occupied by Ed. Alexander with a soft drink parlor, and Lee Murphy, cigar factory, was destroyed as was also the building owned by Mr. Madison's occupied by Miss Genevieve Senecal with a stock of ladies' furnishings. Mort Tyner's barber shop, occupying a part of the building in which the restaurant was located, was also destroyed.

The contents of the restaurant, barber shop and ladies' furnishing store were all completely destroyed. Part of the stocks of the soft drink parlor and cigar factory were saved.

The losses to all are quite heavy, as the rate of the insurance in these frame buildings was high and the property owners carried as little as possible. We understand Miss Senecal was about to close out her stock of goods and allowed her insurance to expire.

BEAT SALOON DANCE BAN.

Fake Weddings Held Nightly to Defeat Jersey Barroom Law.

By having fake wedding ceremonies performed by professional brides and bridegrooms, certain saloonkeepers in Jersey City have been able to hoodwink the police for many months, and have dances every night. So stated Frank Hague, director of public safety, in a report to the commission government.

A crusade last winter against barroom dances put a stop to such except in the cases where the dance was the part of a wedding celebration. Hague noticed several weeks ago an unusual number of applications for wedding licenses poured in from the saloons in the Polish quarter. He investigated and found the number did not tally with the actual marriage licenses issued. He sallied forth to attend several of the weddings.

He found about fifteen young men and girls whose nightly duty it was to sit under fancy canopies in the back rooms adjoining the various saloons, and simulate the joy and shyness of the newlyweds. It was worth 75 cents a night to one husky youth to be a "bridegroom." He had been on the job about a month.

Kegs of beer and sandwiches for sale at one of the nuptial fetes convinced the investigators of the fraud being practiced on the police. The saloonkeepers supplied wedding bells of artificial flowers, white gowns for the "brides" and evening clothes for the "bridegrooms." The principals in the fake weddings were not required to pay for their drinks, and the brides were supplied with artificial bouquets.

"Brides" were plucked out because of their beauty. Many of them became real brides by reason of their fake positions. One girl received more than 20 proposals from dance hall admirers. She finally quit her job because she had to wash her wedding finery and replenish her nuptial flowers. In several instances the mated pair sitting under the same canopy did not even know each other.

SNAKE HUNTING IN EGYPT.

Gen. Kitchener Found It a Diverting Way to Put in Some Idle Time.

As a relaxation from the cares of his duties as British agent-general of Egypt, Lord Kitchener has taken up snake hunting. A few days ago, when it was reported that a 12-foot cobra had been seen near the Gezira Sporting club's grand stand, the native police and keepers were ordered to kill it. They made one attempt, but fled before his snakeship. Lord Kitchener heard of it and sent for a snake charmer. On the promise that the famous soldier would personally attend to the snake when it should appear, the native began his whistling. Soon, to the horror of the bystanders, not one reptile, but six, crawled from under the stand. The natives promptly bolted, but Lord Kitchener, with four of his aides, waded in with stout cudgels, and after an exciting fight despatched the snakes. Kitchener was so pleased with the afternoon's sport that he has permanently retained the snake charmer on his staff and has spent many "pleasant" afternoons hunting cobras.

By keeping our face closed today we shall have no occasion to offer an apology to-morrow.

ENGLISH CUSTOMS.

Two Just Heard About in the Village of Quadring.

There are some interesting customs still in existence in the little village of Quadring, near Spalding, in Lincolnshire. One is the employment of a dog whipper at the church. It was customary at one time in most villages to have a dog whipper, whose duty it was to drive away the dogs that yelped around or tried to enter the church. Mr. Eley, the Quadring sexton, still receives a salary of 10s a year in respect to this important function. Mr. Eley is a happy man, for he holds a triple office in connection with his church—that of sexton, verger and dog whipper.

It is also the custom to present the oldest widow in the village with a brand new gown every other year. Some kind-hearted old soul, who evidently knew what it was to be cold in winter, left a sum of money for this purpose, goodness knows how many years ago. The thoughtful donor, however, made one rather awkward stipulation. It was that the name of the wearer should be legibly worked on the gown.

So for many years when an old lady became the worthy recipient of the biennial gift, the name "Sarah Ann Smith" or "Jane Emma, Kezzy" appeared prominently on either the back or the front of the cloak. Some few years ago, however, a very ingenious person suggested the name should be placed underneath the sleeve, and this has been done ever since. At the present Mrs. Peach is the lady of the gown, and she is able to enjoy the benefits of the charity without being placarded wherever she goes as were the recipients of long ago.

HARD ON AUTHORS.

Some Have Been Compelled to Eat Their Own Books.

Some authors have been compelled to destroy their books in a singularly unpleasant fashion. When Bernard the Great, Duke of Saxony, learned that he was criticized in some pamphlets he had the author arrested and after putting him in the pillory for an hour, with one of the objectionable works between his teeth, made him swallow it.

In 1668 Philippus Oldenberger, a German jurist, published a description of his travels through Germany. A passage in this offended his liege lord and Oldenberger was soundly flogged and then ordered to eat a copy of his book. It was only a duodecimo, but he found the task beyond his powers, and after five pages pleaded successfully for a remission.

Cases have also been known of voluntary book eating. Ogier de Busbecq states that the Tartars used to eat books in order to acquire knowledge, this being the only way in which they were capable of assimilating printed matter.

EXPATRIATES IN BRAZIL.

Condition of Southern Families That Emigrated From This Country.

The presence of thousands of Confederate veterans—prosperous and citizens of a united nation—at the Gettysburg anniversary exercises calls to mind the pathetic story of the Confederate expatriates in Brazil, says the Chicago Inter-Ocean.

Among the thousands of discouraged and disheartened families who had to take up a new life at the close of the Civil War, some were so dispirited that they felt they could not face the new conditions. They decided to leave it all and to begin over again in a new land.

Brazil appealed to them, because the plantation system was similar to the one with which they were familiar, and slavery was still legal in the land. So a few of the hundreds who were to follow went ahead as an advance guard and selected a site about 100 miles west of the city of Sao Paulo. It was not long until several hundred men who had fought under Jackson and Lee and Johnston were on their way to make new homes under the Southern Cross. It is estimated that at least 500 families from Texas, Georgia, Alabama and Tennessee located near Sao Paulo between 1865 and 1870.

Some of the original members of the colony became dissatisfied and returned to the south, but there are even now today some four or five hundred of them, with their descendants, living in the colony. Not a few of them have moved to other parts of Brazil, some have married Brazilians, some have prospered and others have just managed to get along.

These American colonists are now Brazilian subjects, but few of them actually take any part in the politics of the land, and all are Americans at heart. They use the Portuguese language in their business and social relations with the Brazilians, but speak English in their homes.

When Ellihu Root visited Brazil as Secretary of State, he stopped off at the "Villa Americana," as the little town where these American colonists reside is known, and later, in speaking of his meeting with the grizzled veterans and their families, said it was the most pathetic incident of his trip. Some of them asked the secretary if it would be wise for them to return to this country, and he said:

"No; stay where you are and be good Brazilians. You will find the states so changed that they will no longer seem like home."

Such is the pathetic story of our Confederate expatriates in Brazil.

The Man In The Well

By Pierre Sales

Interesting From Start to Finish. "The Story Now Being Played In America."

"He might do that if he wanted to get rid of us. But we are nothing to him; so we have nothing to fear."

"Suppose he should find out who we are and why we are here?"

"Who would tell him? No one knows why we have come here. We don't know yet that this Smith is Callesse's accomplice. He may be merely an acquaintance; but then, on the other hand, they may belong to a gang of crooks who operate between India, London and Paris. If this is the case, it is here we shall solve the mystery. If we want to get friendly with Smith, we must make up our minds to lose some money, and a fair sum at that. Are you willing to do so?"

"How much do you think?"

"Five thousand apiece will do. We will place it with him; but we may make up our minds in advance that we shall never see it again."

The next day was scorching. There was not a breath of air. Few people in Calcutta cared to brave the torrid heat; but Jacques was all eagerness to see John J. Smith and have a talk with him. Five minutes before, from the windows of their hotel they had seen him pass down the street.

"We can never go in such heat," groaned Mersins. "I am sure he won't be doing any business today."

"I bet he has gone to his office to get his mail. The letters came in on our boat last evening," said Jacques.

On the veranda of the hotel they saw Mr. Harcourt. He was lying on a lounge, his head covered with a wet cloth. A small colored boy kept off the flies with a large fan. Someiced drinks stood on a table near by.

"You mean to say that you are going out in this heat?" he cried, when he caught sight of the two friends leaving the hotel.

"Business," said Jacques laconically.

"No one does business in Calcutta at this hour."

"Excepting ourselves."

A quarter of an hour later they reached the building where John J. Smith & Co. had their offices. They went up to the second floor and found the name on a brass plate. In the various offices there were no signs of life. The doors were all open; but only a porter or an office boy was left in charge.

It was the same in Smith & Co.'s office. In the first room, where there was only a desk and a chair, they found an office boy fast asleep.

"If Smith is in his office at this hour, it is evidently something interesting that takes him there," said Mersins. From the looks, it seems that he is the only man about here who works."

They took care not to wake the office boy; they crossed a passage, then passed through to offices, and stood before a door bearing the words:

Private Office JOHN J. SMITH

Jacques had no scruples; he deliberately stooped down and glued his eye to the keyhole. Smith was seated with his back to the door. He was carefully reading a long letter. Suddenly he struck his fist on the table in anger.

"The fool!" he cried. Beside him on the table was a cablegram. "I'd like to know what that letter contains," whispered Jacques. "I'll continue to watch him, and you knock on the door."

Mersins knocked. Smith jumped from his seat. He thrust the letter and cablegram quickly into his pocket, and then called out:

"Come in!"

The two friends entered the room, bowing affably. Smith stared hard at them, as though trying to recognize them.

"To whom have I the honor of speaking?" he inquired.

"We knocked at your door without being announced, because your office boy was asleep and it seemed a pity to wake him," said Jacques.

"One does not expect any one in the offices at this hour. The business men of Calcutta knock off work during the hottest part of the day."

"They are lazy; but I see that you are an exception to the rule."

"To whom have I the honor of speaking?" asked Smith for the second time.

"Let me introduce my friend to you—Mr. Paul Mersins, on the Paris Bourse," replied Jacques. "And my name is Jacques Velizay, also from Paris."

"In what way can I serve you?"

"My friend is accompanying me on a trip. We are going through central India."

Smith interrupted him.

"Are you not the buyer who does a great deal of business in India for an important house in Paris?"

"The same, sir."

"I have heard of you, and am very pleased to make your acquaintance."

The Englishman seemed more agreeable. He asked his visitors to be seated.

"I can return the compliment," replied Jacques, smiling. "We have often heard friends in Paris speak of you. This is why we called."

"Who are they, may I ask?"

"Some good friends of yours, I believe—M. and Mme. Callesse—Andre Callesse."

"Indeed! You know them?"

There was an ambiguous smile on the Englishman's face as Jacques replied:

"Oh, yes; we spent several evenings with them before we left France. I intended to ask M. Callesse to give me a letter of introduction to you, but I had not the time."

"You came away hurriedly?"

"Yes. At first I had no intention of coming with my friend. I thought that I should be coming to India again for my firm, but certain concessions that I asked have been refused me, so I decided to tempt fortune on my own account.

"At first I thought of going into partnership with M. Callesse, but our business relations for the time being have been broken. It is a question of capital upon which we cannot quite agree."

"If my commercial influence can be of any use to you, you have only to command me," said John J. Smith.

"You are very obliging."

They talked for some minutes about the commerce in India; then Mersins interrupted to say:

"Mr. Smith might advise us about our money."

Smith wheeled around in his chair and looked at Mersins.

"As we are going through Central India," continued Paul, "we do not want to take with us more money than is strictly necessary. So we thought of leaving some with you."

"How much?"

"Five thousand francs apiece. Isn't that it, Jacques?"

"I suppose you have an agent or banker in Kashmir who could reimburse this sum to us when we get there? You could give us a letter of credit to that effect?"

"Oh, certainly. I have an agent in Kashmir. The matter can be easily arranged," replied Smith.

Jacques opened his note book and took out five notes of one thousand francs. Paul did the same, and the ten thousand francs were handed to the commission agent, who beamed on these new clients who were ready to confide such a respectable sum into his keeping.

"Then that is all right," said Jacques. "We shall be in Kashmir about two or three weeks from now, and we can get the money there to continue our journey. I do not like carrying large sums of money with me."

"We are expecting some more cash from France. Our families are sending about fifteen thousand in all. Now, as we shall have left Calcutta, we thought of telling our people to address the letters to us here in your care."

"Why, certainly! You say about fifteen thousand will come? Very well, I will give you a receipt for this ten thousand," said Mr. Smith.

"The letter of credit on your agent in Kashmir will be sufficient."

"I'll write it at once."

Smith sat down at his desk, acknowledged the receipt of the money, and wrote the letter to his agent. He showed it to his clients, then put it in an envelope and handed it to Jacques.

"I hope, gentlemen," he said affably, "that you are not leaving Calcutta at once."

"No; we shall spend a few days here. We are leaving the end of the week."

"Then, until you start on your travels, you will permit me to do the honors of Calcutta?"

Mersins and Velizay looked very flattered and pleased.

"I do not ask you," exclaimed Smith, "to leave your hotel, because I know young men like their liberty; but I insist that you make use of my house, and make yourselves quite at home there."

The two friends thanked him, but assured him that they would not like to put him in any trouble. In the middle of his polite talk he said casually:

"If you want to write to France, you can do it here at my desk."

"Write? What for?"

"For the rest of the money that you are having forwarded here."

"Oh, there is no occasion just now; we can do that later."

Smith smiled, but it was easy to see that this reply did not please him.

"I hope you will dine with me tonight," he continued. "I have a little business to finish, and then I will come round to your hotel. You are probably at the European?"

"Yes," replied Jacques; "I always stay there."

"Very well; I'll come around after business, and we will dine at my home. I have a villa on the Ganges, and Jacques and Paul had expected this invitation, and they were pleased to be alone to talk it over. At the foot of the stairs Mersins took out his handkerchief and wiped his eyes.

"Good Lord! What's the matter?" asked Jacques.

"It's nothing for the loss of our ten thousand francs. We'll never see them again."

"Did you notice how eager he was to have that letter sent off to France?" inquired Jacques.

"Parbleu! Once this letter is sent, he has got us."

"Yes; he has only to give us a little of his Chartreuse to appropriate the ten thousand francs already given and the fifteen thousand that is coming."

"A practical man is Smith," said Jacques.

"Yes, but we have not yet proved that he is Callesse's accomplice."

They went to their hotel and changed into their dinner suits. Jacques took the receipt that Smith had given them out of the coat that he had just thrown off, and placed it in a tiny pocket in the lining of his vest.

"It is safe there," he remarked to Mersins.

Night was falling when Smith strolled into the gardens of the European Hotel. Jacques and Paul were waiting for him.

"Why did you change your suits?" he exclaimed. "There's no ceremony. We shall be quite alone."

"The tuxedo is much cooler than our day coats," said Jacques.

"I advise you not to leave any important papers round your rooms," he said. "It is not safe in a hotel."

"Oh, we have not done so!" replied Jacques.

They walked down the street toward the quays.

"My villa is on the other side of the river," said Smith. "We will cross in my boat. I have it here."

When they reached the quays he pointed out to them an elegant little junk covered with an awning, upon which the letter "S" stood out in a decorative motive in red and gold. Hindus in white costumes held the oars. Standing in the bow of the boat was a man giving orders. They recognized him as the man who had been with Smith the night before. They took their seats along the comfortable cushions and began to chat upon the customs and habits of the Hindus. The junk glided between the numerous boats on the river.

"You see I live outside Calcutta," said Smith; "here we are now."

He got up so suddenly that the canopy under which they were sitting turned completely over and fell on Jacques and his companion. Smith was outside the awning, but the two friends found themselves entwined in canvas, cord, and silk hangings.

"Wait a minute—I'll get you out!" cried Smith.

But suddenly the boat began to rock violently. Jacques and Paul both tried to throw off the canvas that covered them; then there was a cry and the boat capsized. The oarsmen and the two passengers were soon struggling in the water.

The two friends could hear the commission agent speaking quickly to his men in the Hindu patois. Then it seemed to them that their arms and legs were seized beneath the water.

"What the deuce!" cried Jacques. He kicked out violently and struck with his fist. Mersins did the same to the Hindu who seemed to be trying to pull him down.

"Strike out to midstream," cried Jacques. In a few swift strokes, which did them credit, they reached deep water. Here there was nothing to pull at their hands and feet.

"That was an odd sort of accident," said Mersins. "I'd like to know what has become of Smith."

"There he is, coming out of the water."

It was so. The commission agent was just emerging from the water. He looked about him and questioned his men, who began to gather about him. Then he caught sight of his two guests in midstream. He quickly gave orders for the men to row out to them. He got into the boat. Mersins and Velizay saw him coming toward them with some little apprehension.

When they were near the commission agent called out gaily:

"What are you two playing at out there? You know I am responsible for your lives. When my boat capsizes you go and swim out at large. If the current had drawn you in we should never have seen you again."

He held out an oar to each of them; in a few seconds they were back in the boat.

"This reed grass on the river is terrible," said Smith.

The two friends made no reply. This time they landed without mishaps.

"You see," remarked Smith, "there was no occasion for you to have changed your suits; now you will have to wear what you can get. It is too late for you to return to your hotel. I'll lend you something to put on."

He pushed open a large iron gate which was covered with climbing plants. In the distance they could see the house. It was a curious mixture of English and Hindu architecture.

Before the wide veranda stretched a beautiful green lawn; the garden sloped gently from the house down to the Ganges. It was ornamented with rare flowers and plants. In a stream which came from the river, winding in and out of the grounds, were some aquatic birds; ducking their quady plumage.

"Why, you live like a raja!" exclaimed Jacques.

"Pretty place, isn't it?" said Smith carelessly. "I could not have this if I lived in the city. That is why I prefer to live outside. I am not married, so I prefer to live like an Indian prince. My life is free. When business is over I come down here. I am never dull, I assure you. Everything is to my taste here."

He pointed to a row of windows that were entirely enclosed by matting.

"We will dine there presently in true Indian style," he said; "now we must change our wet clothes."

He took them to his private rooms, which were handsomely furnished. He opened a closet filled with Hindu costliness.

"Select which you like," he said; "help yourselves to anything you want."

They were in a hurry to get out of their wet clothes, so their host left them. As soon as they were alone Jacques took the receipt out of his waistcoat pocket.

"The rogue!" he said.

The water had commenced to efface the ink; if their receipt for ten thousand francs had remained a little longer under water it would have been nothing but a piece of pulp.

"I wonder if his intention was to drown us?" said Paul thoughtfully.

"I don't think so. He is too sharp to do that. He has not yet got the fifteen thousand francs from France."

"I am sure that his men were trying to pull us under," said Paul gravely. "Apart from getting our money, he may for some other reason want to get rid of us; but I don't see why. Those men were trying to drown us."

"He has no reason to do that yet," insisted Jacques. "But I'm going to hang on to this receipt all the time."

"It is his dinner that I am afraid of," said Paul.

"We shall have to take pot-luck," replied Paul. "Be careful and only eat after he begins."

They left the dressing room. A servant was waiting for them outside the door. He led the way to the dining room. On the walls were brilliant tapestries, the principal designs of which stood out in arabesques of silk.

In place of chairs there were low divans and immense cushions. In the middle of the room stood the table, richly set. Smith, clad in a superb costume of red silk, stood waiting for them at the entrance.

"Ah, here you are clothed and in your right minds!" he said, smiling.

"Yes, we thought we would garb ourselves in Oriental costumes like you," replied Jacques.

Smith struck a gong. Dinner was served immediately. During the first courses nothing unusual happened. Now and again they lightly referred to the accident.

As the dinner drew to an end they heard delightful music coming from the garden. The matting on the windows was drawn aside and invisible hands threw gorgeous flowers into the room, strewn the carpet with the fragrant blossoms.

"My compliments, Mr. Smith. You are certainly a good stage setter," said Mersins.

"When one no longer lives in Europe, if one wishes to enjoy life, one must adopt the habits and the customs of the country in which one lives," he said.

Two young girls dressed in blue gauze came into the room, carrying a tray which held a coffee service. A young negress followed them, and placed before each guest a pipe that was already filled.

"You will pardon me if I do not follow your example in this?" said Jacques.

He made a sign to his friend not to touch the pipe. He got up from his seat. Smith wanted to stop him.

"Excuse me. I'll be back in a minute. I'll get my own cigarettes. I am so accustomed to French tobacco that I do not think I could smoke anything else."

He was already at the other end of the room and disappeared under the passage by which he had entered.

Jacques found the dressing room where they had changed their clothes. The door was slightly ajar, and he could see a man whom Smith had previously called Girodet, and who had been in charge of the boat, turning over his garments. The pockets were inside out.

"Sapristi! That scoundrel is giving too much attention to our wet clothes," said Jacques. Thinking that it would be best to pretend not to have seen him, he knocked lightly on the door before entering.

At once the man began to spread out the garments as though to dry them. Jacques had laid his cigarette on the dressing table. He picked it up and returned to the dining room.

Although he had only been out of the room a few minutes, he saw at once that Smith was imbibing too freely. The old port had turned his bloated face to a dull purple. He now reclined on his cushions, holding a glass in one hand and a decanter of whisky in the other. He was describing in grandiloquent phrases the delights of Asiatic life.

"No girls can beat the girls here," he said. "Here's to them!"

He drained his glass after having pushed the decanter to Paul.

"I want to get Paul drunk," thought Jacques. But Mersins had adroitly spilled his wine and his whisky down the back of the cushion. He made a sign to Jacques to get rid of his in the same manner.

Paul had not touched the pipe. He now took a cigarette from Jacques's case.

The two friends had suspected, and with reason, that the tobacco in their pipes might have been tampered with. They had taken the precaution not to touch any wine or eatables until their host had done so first. The table had been cleared. All that remained was the coffee and liquors. Some white forms appeared before the open windows. They whirled round giddily. The music in the garden that had ceased now burst forth, and there was a loud din of tambourines. Some veiled dancing girls came into the room, dancing on the tips of their toes.

"You are not drinking, gentlemen!" cried Smith in a thick voice. He filled up the glasses.

Three beautiful women came in and reclined at their feet. Jacques and Paul stared at this scene in amazement. They drank a little from their glasses and managed to spill the rest.

Some Oriental perfumes were thrown into braziers and placed about the room. The heavy, subtle aroma mingling with the fumes from wine and the smoke was enough to intoxicate any man. Jacques began to feel his head whirl. He got up nonchalantly and, with his hands in the pockets of his wide pantaloons, he walked over to Smith. He gave him a smart clap on the shoulder. The commission agent looked up and laughed foolishly.

"Come, both of you, and sit down beside me," he added thickly, and the girls will dance before us."

Smith sat on his divan, swaying to and fro; the two friends sat beside him, but slightly at his back so that they could exchange signs.

"He is getting terribly drunk," said Paul in a low voice.

"No whispering!" cried Smith; he was sober enough to see that his guests had not consumed as much as he. "Fill your glasses," he said; eat, drink, and be merry; for tomorrow we die."

How Did Mary Know?

The teacher had given the class a talk on household pests.

"What, now, is the greatest foe the housewife has?" she asked.

"Up went one little hand. 'All right, Mary, what is it?'"

"A husband," was the quick reply.

AUTOMOBILE REPAIRS

Talks to Mothers

Mrs. Mary Wicks, Editor

When Vice Masquerades As Virtue

Virtuous and self-satisfied wives are those whose jealousy masquerades as a sense of justice, who taunt husbands with misdemeanors which were better forgotten. They suspect evil, and voice their suspicions. The less complacent woman would condemn herself for her doubts, or if certain that they were well founded would appreciate that in talking of them and saying bitter things she was but making a bad matter worse.

Virtuous fathers are the ones who insist that the collegian son shall report at home at "10 o'clock sharp or find the front door locked." Many wives have been forced into the sin of deception by such husbands—for what mother would not creep downstairs quietly after the house is dark to unlock the door and wait for the boy returning late for an evening of innocent fun? Of course, theoretically, she should not do this, for it shows the boy that she and his father do not "pull together" and alienates him from the sterner parent. But the mother feels that this is better than to have him turned from his father's house at midnight to seek shelter she knows not, and the lad cares not where.

And if the wife is wrong, and if the boy aids and abets her in her deception, whose fault is it primarily? Should not the blame for the condition of affairs rest upon the father, who, secure in his faith in his own virtue, sleeps while the mother suffers for his mistakes?

Some one must suffer for the errors of the self-satisfied, as some one must pay for everything in this world.

THE CHILDREN'S STORY TELLING CLUB

Essilyn Dale Nichols, Editor

1527—35 St., Rock Island, Ill.

Send Manuscript and Letters for this Department Direct to the Editor of this Department.

Hello, Dearies! I hope you are getting read to write me a lot of beautiful letters and stories. You can write them, I know—if you just think you can, and I hope you'll begin right away. I have one for this week from Mary Bridges, Bitley, Mich. Here it is:

Dear Editor:—I was reading the Children's Story Telling Club. Thought I would like to join the club. So I will write a little story of my home and where I live. I live a mile and a half from Alderson, and a mile and a half from the P. M. river, where many beautiful trout are caught. I live a mile and a half from school. I have many friends and a few pets. I have three cats—an old cat and two little kittens, and I have a pet dog named Pedro. If this is not too long I would like to see it in print, and I will write more next time.

From Mary Bridges, Bitley, Mich.

Thank you, Mary, for a very nice letter, and we would certainly like to have you write again.

And now I suspect—yes, I really do suspect that I will have to tell you another story. Just think of that! And I've just finished telling you about Winona, and her bare feet. Don't you think turn about is fair play? Why, I'd just simply love to have you tell me a story, Dearies—every one of you.

But—never mind—I've thought of a plan. I am going to let you children name the story I shall begin this week. I don't know how long it will be for I haven't finished it yet. But when you read it ALL I want you to send me a name for it. And to the one sending in the best name I will send a nice present. I won't tell you what the present will be—NOW; but I am sure that it will please you. So don't forget to send in a name. Every one has an equal chance, and the BEST one wins. Here it is:

The Story That YOU Can Name.

Mrs. Tabby Cat and her three daughters lived in a cozy corner of the back porch and enjoyed life in the usual cat way until a disturbing el-ment appeared on their horizon.

—This disturbing element was the advent of Mistress Dog and her two sons, who promptly took up their abode in the back yard under a big apple tree.

Mistress Dog was very stylish and wore the silkiest of gowns every time she went for a stroll, and was rather given to putting on airs every time she met Mrs. Tabby Cat.

But these airs didn't bother Mrs. Tabby Cat a bit for she was a sensible tabby cat and not easily worried; but the rudeness of Mistress Dog's two sons was another matter.

"They are quite the rudest puppies I ever saw," said Mrs. Tabby Cat, to her two daughters one evening. "If Mistress Dog would just give them one-half the attention she gives to her silk gowns they would have much better manners."

"The youngest son is very rude," said Fluffy the white kitten. "For while I was playing on the grass this afternoon with little master's rubber ball he bounced up and grabbed the ball and ran off with it."

"Very rude indeed," sighed Mrs. Tabby Cat.

"Mabe he wanted to play too," said Goldie the yellow kitten who was always ready to make excuses for everybody. "Ponto loves to play."

"He should have brought the ball back then," remarked Silver, the grey kitten. "For Fluffy couldn't play with him after he ran away with the ball."

"Mabe he wanted her to chase him," ventured Goldie timidly.

"Fie!" scoffed Fluffy. "He just wanted to be rude."

"Well—Dear me, there he comes now," cried Silver, arching her back. "I wonder what he wants?"

There sure enough was Ponto bounding up the back steps and wagging his stub of a tail with great joy.

Well Dearies, this is all for this week. Next week I shall tell you some more about Mistress Dog and Mrs. Tabby Cat and Fluffy and Goldie and Silver and Ponto. Don't forget to send in a name—after you read it all.

The Writhing Mass

By Omar W. Russell, Casnovia, Mich.

If we could travel high over the European territory where the nations are in deadly conflict and take one bird's eye view of the armies as they go backward and forward the scene would appear to us as one writhing mass. Thousands of human souls, who without any hatred or enmity toward any living man, have been called to battle and to help bring bloodstains upon their own life on account of the rights of king's.

Ten men declared war and throughout the continents thousands lie in scattered graves; many piled a score high, just gave their lives that their country could win a just cause.

How many homes are wrecked? How many children left without support? How many widows made through this just cause?

How that one man, mere man, might say the word that would cause 10,000 men to sacrifice their lives and pass into the great unknown. How great to make cripples of thousands.

Is it a noble cause to send men forth to battle in honor of their fatherland, just to do justice to their king?

The king, sitting amid luxury and giving orders for the movement of his helpless men, who are suffering and bleeding that the king's rights may be fulfilled.

These rights of kings is an injustice to humanity. The men of the nations are brothers and they should have the say of whether they wished to go forth to slay and not be driven by the commands of one mere man.

After the chaos of the great conflict, we hope men will see their own divine rights, and refuse to be driven to the human slaughter houses, and insist upon the great call of freedom.

If the conflict had been waged between the true callers for war, there would long ago been peace, while ten bodies slain in battle would of been bleaching upon the foreign battle ground. But as it now stands, men are being mercilessly slain each day, still more are called to fill the broken gaps and the kings are enjoying their so-called divine rights.

How great and glorious to defend one's nation's cause by putting the bayonet through a brother's flesh. How humble and honorable to send a bullet through some fellowman just to be a nation's patriotic citizen. It is a just cause to go forth for your nation and make widows and cripples.

Shame on you brothers, who have willingly went forth and caused bloodshed upon the battlefield. I would rather be branded a coward and have my life free from bloodstains, than to be a hero from the battlefield, for in my cowardice I can honorably sing a song of brotherly love and peace to the great wide world. I wish to make no battlefield charge to fulfill a nation's rights.

How sweet the thoughts that after a sojourn of trials and bloodshed there is coming a long reign of peace.

True and Tried Recipes

Fancy Work and Cooking for the Season

Snow Pudding

One pint of boiling water, two tablespoons of cornstarch, one-half cup of sugar. Mix sugar and cornstarch together, wet with two tablespoons of cold water and stir into boiling water. Cook ten minutes. Take off fire, add one tablespoon lemon extract. Pour into very shallow dish and set on ice until it slightly jells, or thickens. Beat to a stiff froth the whites of two eggs and a pinch of salt, then beat in the above mixture until light and frothy. Put on ice until ready to serve.

Banana Pie

Line pie plate with a nice short crust, the same as for custard pie. Prick with a fork in several places and bake. When done and cold cover the bottom with a layer of sliced bananas then a layer of whipped cream sweetened. Then another layer of bananas and a good top layer of cream.

Javelle Water.

Take three pounds of washing soda and one gallon of water. Let boil fifteen minutes, then remove from fire and add one can chloride of lime, free from lumps. When cold strain through cloth, bottle and it is ready for use. Nothing like it to take brown spots off sink, bathtub, burned kettles or to bleach dish towels and other white goods. A tablespoonful in the weekly wash improves the looks of the clothes.

Boned Stuffed Ham.

Carefully remove the bone from a good ham, keeping it perfectly whole; fill the space with pork sausage meat, tie up in a cloth and boil for two hours. Take it out of the water, remove the rind, butter a paper, form into a bag and wrap the ham in that and bake for another one and a half hours in a good hot oven. Remove the paper and brush with a nice brown glaze.

Potato Yeast.

Two mashed potatoes, one tablespoonful of flour, one-quarter cupful of sugar, one and one-half cupfuls of boiling water, one yeast cake in cupful of cold water soaked an hour. Let this stand in a warm place twenty-four hours, then put in fruit jar. One-half pint will make three loaves of bread.

Cocoanut Cake Filler.

A cupful of cocoanut beaten into a pint of cream that has been whipped light and dry and flavored with a little extract of bitter almond makes a delicious filling for layer cakes or may be served in a cake that has had the inside part taken out and the outside left for a shell.

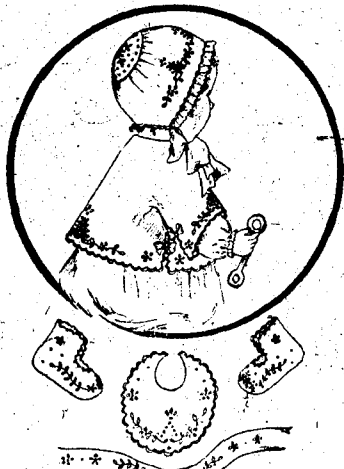

Lemon Jelly Cake.

One-half cup butter, two cups sugar, two or three eggs, one cup milk, one-half teaspoon soda, one teaspoon cream of tartar, three cups flour.

Filling—Beat one egg, add one cup hot water, grated rind and juice of one lemon. Pour slowly over one cup sugar mixed with two tablespoons flour. Cook till thick in double boiler.

Neighborly.

A South Dakota State senator recently gave a new illustration of that fine saying of an ancient philosopher, "Man was born for mutual assistance."

A customer entered the small town barber shop.

"How soon can you cut my hair?" he asked of the proprietor, who was seated in an easy chair, perusing the pages of a dime novel.

"Bill," said the barber, addressing his errand boy, "run over and tell the editor that I'd like my scissors if he's got done editin' the paper. Gentleman waitin' for a hair cut."

TOW TO BE HAPPY.

One of the Secrets is to Be Found Doing of a Single Thing.

Leigh Mitchell Hodges writes: "What would you think if you should see, in some newspaper some day, an advertisement like this:

A recipe for happiness and long life will be sent free to anyone promising to make use of it, as this recipe consists of only one word. It is neither costly nor hard to use.

Perhaps you would smile incredulously. Maybe you might disregard it as a fake. Possibly you'd take the matter seriously and send in your name and address—wondering meantime what one word could be a cure for such common and universal ailments as discontent and early death.

Undoubtedly, you would do some thinking when the answer came, "WORK!"

Not long ago Sir Andrew Clark, the distinguished physician, said to Lord Strathcona, one of England's grand old men, "There is no reason why you should not live to be a hundred if only you will keep on working."

I capitalize the "if" because he emphasized it.

And it would be a mighty fine thing for the general run of humanity if to each young man and woman should come someone whose word is respected, to say "You can be happy and live a long time if you will work steadily and keep cheerful!"

Of course, there are tens of thousands so born or placed that they don't have to be advised to work. They are forced to go to work before they should and it is a fact that there is a vast amount of good cheer current among just such overburdened and underfed persons.

But there are other tens of thousands who, just because they happen to be born to a living, decide wrongly and foolishly that there is no need for them to work.

And as a matter of fact, these latter are not so happy as the former, though their bodies are well nourished and their minds entertained in a variety of ways.

SANITARY SINKS.

Sanitary Strainer Advocated for Sinks is Here Illustrated.

One of the main problems of the manager of the household is that involving the keeping clean and sanitary her sinks, washtubs, bathtubs and washbasins, says a writer in a household magazine.

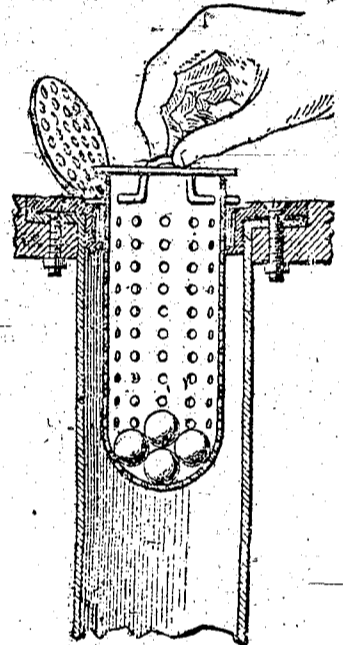

The sink is constantly liable to become clogged with unhealthy secretions, as are also the bathtubs, the washtubs and the drains in the yard, and to disinfect them and keep them clean and healthy is one of the main objects of scientific plumbing. The sanitary strainer, recently invented, is a device for accomplishing these objects. The strainer can be used on the sink trap and the washtub.

Of course disinfectants are used in the operation of the strainer. The mere catching of the refuse without destroying its powers as a breeder of disease would be but a very imperfect solution of the problem.

The objects must not only be secured, but the germs contained in them must be destroyed, and this is done by the disinfectants used in connection with the strainer. By placing any suitable disinfectant in lump form in the brass basket of the strainer, the hot and cold water which runs through the strainer will dissolve the refuse and kill all bad odors which may arise through the pipes from the traps. If used in the sink it will catch up all the refuse that may clog up the traps, such as coffee grains or matches which have a tendency to stop up the trap. The strainer can easily be taken out by simply lifting the perforated disc, emptying it, and replacing it in position to continue its work.

Ashes of Cigar Petrified.

William Jack of Terry S. D., is the owner of a cigar which in its way is something of a curiosity. On September 13 of last year he smoked the cigar, smoking it so closely that he was unable to hold it longer without burning his fingers. A glance showed him that the ashes were still on the cigar, none of the ash having been dislodged, and in this condition he laid it on a shelf. To-day the cigar is in exactly the same condition, and no amount of handling has divorced the ashes from the stub. To all intents and purposes the stub and ashes have become petrified.

Cause for Suspicion.

Tailors Sympathize with Doctors.

The doctor is the last person whom the average man thinks of paying, and if this he has the entire sympathy of the tailor, who stands just next to him at the bottom of the bill file.—London Outfitter.

GETTING A DRINK IN SWEDEN.

Peculiar Methods and Regulations Under Which Whiskey is Sold.

From Gothenburg Sweden, a correspondent writes: "The difficulties under which wine and spirit merchants labor nowadays here may be judged from the following incident: When I went to buy a bottle of whiskey the other day I was told, 'We are not allowed to sell wine or spirits over the counter.' 'What in the world do you mean?' I asked. 'No, it must be ordered in advance.' 'But I want the whiskey at once!'

"The assistant meditated and then said, 'If you go across the street and telephone to us from the cigar shop we can supply you.' I telephoned, and five minutes later I had the whiskey. I went for another bottle the next day and found that the regulations had become more stringent. Although I had ordered it by telephone, I was not allowed to take it home myself.

"I expostulated and the wine merchant said, 'But if your son here with you will accept sixpence for delivering the bottle at your house, I could let you have the whiskey at once.' My son had no objection."

Where Inspiration Sits.

Mrs. Quilluser came tiptoeing softly into her husband's study, rested a hand lightly on his shoulder and peered over at the sheaf of half-written sheets on his desk.

"What are you working on now, dearest?" she asked gently.

"On Mary's mittens," he answered pleasantly, but without looking up.

Mrs. Quilluser studied a moment, as if planning. "Dearest, Willie needs a pair of shoes more than Mary does the mittens. I have already promised them to the poor boy. Hadn't you better work on Willie's shoes first, dear?"

"All right, Nellie, all right," he replied kindly, turning his eyes up into Nellie's great patent ones.

Then he pushed back "An Ode to the Dancing Leaves" and cheerfully began to write a Sunday special on "A New Substitute for Coal."—Puck.

An Aerial Hobo's Diary.

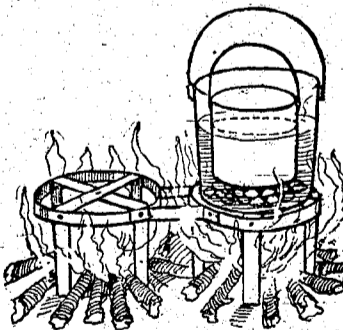

Oct. 7, 2909.—On the bum again. Beat it out last night under the right forward wing of the second coach of the Owersky Limited, but the crew got hep and ditched me here on this out-of-the-way star. Not even a station here, and it looks like nothing will ever stop. Everything was lovely too, as the chorus girls say, till the panic hit Saturn. The employees of the Radium Works were the first to go. Just my luck to be working there too. Wonder what the chances are for a handout on this star. Oct. 8—Great luck. Fell in with a pal, and we had a cook-up together. We were just done feasting at the expense of the country when the first section of a fast aeroplane log train was laid up here with a hot box. The shacks let us ride when we agreed to help them feed the hogs oxygen twice a day.

Letter of a Fastidious Pauper.

Much amusement was caused at the meeting of the Amesbury Guardians by the reading of the following letter from a former inmate of the workhouse who wished to return to the institution subject to the conditions stated: "I desire to have a ward to myself, to sleep and take my meals in, with the liberty of walking in the yard and in the gardens and sitting in the day room when I think fit; to take my breakfast in bed; to be allowed 10 o'clock lunch—bread and cheese and ale; to see my husband every day; to be exempted from taking a bath only when quite necessary, and on a day when the weather is favorable; and not to be compelled to do any work whatever." The guardians decided that the workhouse was not the proper public institution for the writer of this letter.—London Standard.

A Camper's Double Boiler.

A double boiler can easily be made from two pails, which differ in size, by placing pebbles in the larger pail, and allowing the smaller one to rest on them. The food is placed in the smaller pail and water in the larger one. A fierce fire cannot scorch the food as long as water is kept in the outer pail.—H. J. Holden.

Not Fond of His Cat.

TITLES ON BARGAIN TABLE.

Something on the Commercial Side of Aristocratic Affixes Abroad.

Although foreign countries do not openly advertise their readiness to do business with those who aspire to affix a handle to their names, the fact is generally recognized that a considerable traffic in titles is carried on, says Stray Stories.

The tiny republic of San Marino, which does a roaring trade in titles of nobility at fixed rates, devotes a greater part of the profits to the maintenance of its foundling and orphan asylum. It will make you and all your heirs or only your heirs male, if such is your desire, a duke for $5,000, or an earl for $3,750.

An idea of the traffic done in titles may be gathered from the fact that a German firm trading in Sweden sends out a circular, marked "Private and Confidential," offering to secure any orders and decorations required.

The orders of St. George vary in price in different countries. In Sicily it costs $375, and in Bavaria more than twice as much, but you may become a knight of Montenegro for as little as $75.

The King of Greece does rather a prosperous business with the Order of the Redeemer, which can be had for $250, while Serbia bestows the Order of Takova for a like sum. The Prince of Monaco has for disposal the Order of the Star, for which he asks $175, and for $50 less one can secure the Order of the Sun of Nasr-ed-din from the Shah of Persia.

Although titles cannot be bartered in England it is, of course, an open secret that a generous contribution to a political fund often pays the way to a place in the peerage. Apropos of this it is interesting to note that Frank Kossuth, the son of the famous patriot, charged the Hungarian government with receiving no less than $1,450,000 by selling baronies.

Another phase of this traffic in titles is revealed by carefully worded advertisements which have appeared in London papers from time to time, offering for sale the titles of impoverished noble families of France. It is not so long ago since three titles, two of which were French—one a count and the other a marquis, respectively, and one of an Austrian prince—were put up for sale in London, the prices ranging from $200,000 to $500,000.

POLYGAMY IN TURKEY.

An English Authoress Who Regards It as a Good Thing.

That polygamy is really a commendable institution for Turkey, and that it might even be adopted with profit in England, was the rather startling declaration recently of Miss Grace Ellison, well-known English writer, who has just returned from a protracted visit in and about Constantinople.

"It is far better," she said, "to have four women supported and protected than to have one well cared for and three sent out to struggle and starve under present conditions. Either put us in harems or give us freedom and equality with men. England condemns polygamy without stopping to consider its advantages for womanhood, while on the other hand she turns women adrift in the world and closes to them all the professions and trades she can. In other words, the Englishman won't support more than one female, and he won't help others to support themselves. Only the other day I met a woman of 55, the old maid daughter of a country parson, a semi-invalid, unfitted for work. She hadn't a single soul in the world who was disposed to support or even materially aid her. Such a thing could not happen in Turkey, which we think so benighted. A man supports all female relatives, if necessary, as well as his wives."

AND HE COULD DO IT.

FIELDER'S CHOICE.
"I can marry a rich girl, whom I do not love, or a penniless girl, whom I love dearly. Which shall I do?" "Follow the dictates of your heart, my boy, and be happy. Marry the poor one, and—say—er—would you mind introducing me to the other one?"—Lippincott's Magazine.

TOO MUCH QUININE.

An Indian Coolie's Good Disposition Got Him In Bad.

A funny story is being told by the manager of an Indian tea plantation about his efforts to keep his coolies free from malaria.

He decided to dose his entire staff with quinine, and on pay days, as each coolie came up for his pay, he administered a five-grain dose of quinine, which the coolie had to swallow on the spot. One night he was roused out of bed to see one of the coolies, who was apparently very ill. He could make nothing of the case himself, so he sent off at once for the district doctor.

"What have you been giving him?" the doctor asked as soon as he saw the man.

"Quinine," replied the planter.

"How much?" the doctor asked.

"Five grains," was the reply.

"They each had five grains."

"Nonsense, man!" the doctor exclaimed. "He must have swallowed fifty grains to be in a state like this."

And so he had!

Prolonged cross-examination revealed the fact that this coolie had been induced by some of the others to come up again and again to the pay office to draw his own and his friends' pay, and had taken the quinine each time without a murmur, so as not to upset the sahib!

TOOTHACHE IN ELEPHANTS.

A Disease to Which These Great Animals Are Peculiarly Susceptible.

Elephants have good reason to thank Sir John Bland-Sutton, the famous surgeon, if they could express themselves in words.

They have long been regarded by man as great, clumsy animals almost insensible to pain. But as a matter of fact they are often martyrs to the most excruciating forms of toothache.

Sir John Bland-Sutton has found that elephants are not only liable to toothache in their ordinary molars—there are 12 in all—but that they may even have toothache in their tusks. When one considers that an elephant's tusks are often eight feet long and weigh over 150 pounds, the severity of toothache in such giant "teeth" may be imagined.

Sir John has explained something of his studies of elephants and their teeth.

"I have been interested in this subject for some 25 years," he said. "At one time I used to make post-mortem examinations of elephants who died in zoological gardens. I then found that they sometimes suffered from abscesses in their teeth, which must have caused them terrible suffering. It has also been found that the animals may even have toothache in their tusks, owing to the formation of abscesses."

"A case is on record where an elephant went mad in the Strand. After its death an abscess was found in one of its tusks."

One of the keepers of the elephant house at the zoological gardens said that young elephants often seemed to suffer agonies with their teeth.

"They keep putting their trunks in their mouths if their teeth hurt," he said. "One youngster here, who seemed to have toothache very badly, sucked the finger of his trunk almost white."

"Elephants, you know, keep on teething all their life. The top part of their molars breaks off and the stump grows again."

"When an elephant's tooth—or rather a portion of the tooth—falls out it sounds like a plate falling. I have picked them up as big as my hand."

A well-known zoologist said that the throbbing pain of toothache which human beings experience in their teeth would be just as violent with an elephant with its tusks.

"Both have a nerve cavity, which, when decayed or disturbed, causes violent pain. Only the elephant, if one may judge by dimensions, suffers 20,000 times more than human beings."

GIGANTIC WATER WHEELS.

The Four in the Syrian Town of Hama Will Never Stop.

Hama, in Syria, says a writer, is famed for its huge water wheels, locally known as naura. There are four of them, and they are driven by the river Orontes, which flows through the town. Each of the wheels bears a distinguished name, and the visitor to the city is made aware of their presence long before he sees them by the creaking and groaning noise which greets his ear. At first it suggests a pipe organ and later a brass band practicing.

The wheels are built of a dark mahogany, which gives them at a distance the appearance of iron. The largest of them boasts of a diameter of 75 feet and is declared to be the biggest water wheel in existence. The naura are erected on what is known as the undershot principle—that is to say, they are driven by the water striking them at their base. They serve not only to supply the town with water, but also irrigate the adjacent gardens.

The wheels never stop, summer or winter, and day and night their creaking and groaning are heard. In the summer months the small boys may always be seen bathing in the river in the neighborhood of the wheels, and for a small coin they will get in between the spokes of the wheels and allow themselves to be carried around many times or hang on the outside of the wheel.

"Do you know who this is?" inquired the young lady who had rung up the bookkeeper. "Haven't you an idea? Can't you guess?"

"I guess it's some fool girl," answered the senior partner.

That ended it.

A SERIES OF ARTICLES FROM FARMERS' BULLETIN NO. 576

The Cotswold Sheep

The typical Cotswold is a big-bodied, rather tall sheep, of stylish appearance. The color of the face, ears, and legs is white or white mixed with a little brown. The wool extends over the poll and hangs in ringlets of varying length over the face. All over the body the wool hangs in long wavy ringlets that do not show in the same way on other breeds. Generally the thigh wool is hairy, though the fleece as a whole is bright, and on account of having no excess of oil is light in shrinkage and sells well. The breeders' association for this breed is the American Cotswold Registry Association, E. W. Harding, secretary, Waukesha, Wis.

Feed Cottonseed Meal To Beef Cattle

Because of the abundant supply of cottonseed meal that there is likely to be in this country this year, specialists in the United States department of agriculture believe that the farmer has a better opportunity to make money by feeding beef cattle than for some years past. The feeding value of cottonseed meal has been recognized by agricultural authorities for some time and large quantities of it are exported annually to Europe where the farmers, especially those in Denmark, are also aware of its usefulness. It now seems likely that the price of cottonseed meal will continue to be considerably lower than in recent years and the American farmer should therefore utilize it to advantage to make cheap gains.

Two causes combine to lower the price of cottonseed meal. In the first place the cotton crop in the south this year is good, and in the next the foreign markets have been seriously interfered with by the European war. It is estimated that this year 15,000,000 bales of cotton will be produced in the United States. This should yield 6,680,000 tons of seed. All of this, of course, will not be crushed, but if last year's proportions hold good about 2,000,000 tons of cottonseed meal will be available. Last year approximately 400,000 tons were sent abroad. Under present conditions it is not probable that anything like this quantity will be exported this year, and as the cotton crop is larger than before, it is safe to assume that the quantity of cottonseed meal on the home market will be 500,000 tons more than last year. This situation has already resulted in a substantial drop in the price of cottonseed by-products. Cottonseed meal can now be bought in the south at prices ranging from $22 to $24 per ton instead of $27 to $31 demanded last year. An even greater decrease has taken place in the price of cottonseed hulls, which are now selling at from $4.50 to $5.50 a ton instead of $7 to $9 a ton.

At these prices cottonseed meal is approximately $15 per ton cheaper than linseed meal, and in addition its feeding value is a trifle higher. It seems obvious, therefore, that the cattle feeder all over the country should utilize cottonseed meal to a far greater extent than he has done in the past.

This meal is very rich in protein, and it is usually considered that its feeding value is at least twice that of corn. In other words one pound of cottonseed meal is equal to two pounds of corn for feeding cattle. A small portion of cottonseed meal has an even greater relative value where the ration would otherwise be composed entirely of feeds high in carbohydrates, such as corn, corn stover and timothy hay. This is extremely important to cattle feeders throughout the corn belt and other states where much corn is fed. In Indiana for example, it was found that the addition of one pound of cottonseed meal to a ration of corn and clover hay resulted in a saving of 1.37 pounds of corn and 1.41 pounds of clover hay. This means that if corn was worth 70 cents a bushel and clover hay $15 a ton, each ton of cottonseed meal fed the cattle saved the farmer $55.40 worth of other feed. With cottonseed meal at $24 a ton this is a net saving of $91.40—a saving well worth while.

As a matter of fact cottonseed meal has been the principal concentrate fed to cattle in the south for years. In experiments conducted by the bureau of animal industry it was found that with this as the only concentrated feed gains could be made on steers very economically. Three hundred and fifty pounds of meal often produced as much as 100 pounds of gain. When fed judiciously six pounds of cottonseed meal a day for a period of 100 to 120 days does not prove harmful to mature steers. If the steers are to be fed for a longer period, however, the amount fed should not be more than four pounds a day. For wintering cattle it is hard to find a better or more economical ration than silage combined with two to three pounds of cottonseed meal and a little fodder or stover. Mature cattle can be wintered on a ration of 30 pounds of silage, two pounds of cottonseed meal, and about five pounds of some dry roughage. On such a ration steers will pass through the winter in exceedingly good condition and even gain something in live weight.

But in addition to its feeding value the fertilizing value of cottonseed meal is very high—so high indeed that often the fertilizing constituents in the meal are alone worth as much as or more than it now costs. When it is remembered that from 80 to 90 per cent of this fertilizing value remains in the manure the opportunities for profit that its use offers become even more obvious. To put the case in another way: When one includes in his calculations the enrichment of the land he finds that feeding cottonseed meal to cattle costs him only from 10 to 20 per cent of the market price of the meal.

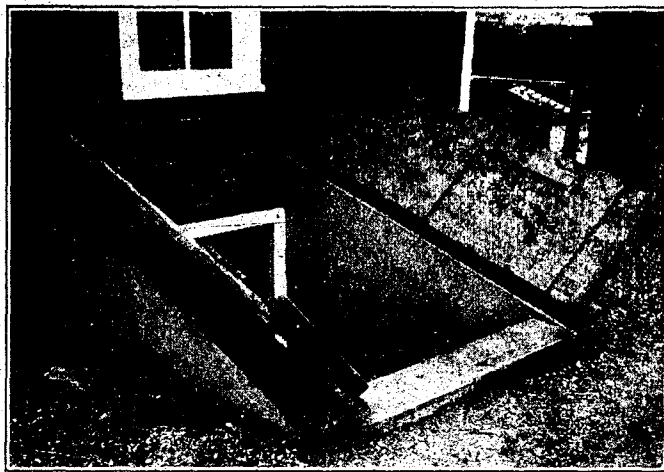

In view of these facts, specialists in the department recommend cattle feeders in all parts of the country to secure prices on cottonseed by-products and to take advantage of the cheap foods that they provide. No other form of concentrated feed, the specialists say, will prove as profitable as cottonseed meal this year. In the south the feeders have an opportunity to get these by-products at lower prices than at any other time during the last ten years. Combined with farm-grown feeds, such as corn silage, they should be able to secure gains very cheaply; and with the present high prices for finished cattle, make good profits. Incidentally it may be said that if such a movement tends to strengthen and steady the market for cottonseed by-products, this will in itself be of considerable assistance to cotton growers in the south.

Don't forget the fact poultry manure is a most valuable fertilizer and when cleaning out the poultry houses have a barrel to put it into and keep in a dry place until ready for use. Many are very neglectful in this matter and a big waste is recorded here on many poultry farms.

Concrete Cellar Steps And Hatchway

Construction of Permanent Steps and Watertight Walls

A damp cellar underneath a dwelling is frequently the unsuspected cause of many a case of sickness. Often this dampness is the fault of a poorly built entrance-way. If water gains access by means of leaky hatchway walls, the cellar becomes unsanitary and the health of the entire family is endangered. This peril can be dispelled by making the walls and steps of concrete.

The methods of building hatchways for either new or old cellars are very similar. With an allowance for a three-foot landing at the bottom of the stairs, excavate the opening to the width of steps desired plus one foot. This extra width is for a six-inch thickness of concrete wall on each side. The steps themselves have a rise of six and a tread of nine inches. Beneath the steps proper is a four-inch thickness of concrete. Therefore provide for this thickness in sloping the ground upward from the landing to the top of the stairs. Extend the trenches for the side and end walls one foot below the concrete of the steps. As forms choose two 1 by 12-inch boards and notch them as though they were to be used as "horses" to support wooden steps of the same dimensions as those of concrete. Place the notched edges down with the ends fixed at the top and bottom of the stairs. To hold the rise of the concrete steps use 1 by 6-inch boards three feet 10 inches long, which are secured to the forms by means of nails and wooden cleats.

With the forms firmly fixed in position, fill the mold for the bottom step, and the space back of it, with concrete proportioned one bar of Portland cement to two cubic feet of sand to four cubic feet of crushed rock.

If bank gravel is used, mix the concrete one part cement to four parts gravel. Bring the concrete in each step to the top of the riser and finish the surface with merely a wooden float. Continue the work upward until all the steps are finished. At cellar doors sufficient slope for shedding rain-water. Above ground line, outside forms must be provided. Fill the walls with concrete masonry wet. Before the concrete sets, bolts are placed (heads down and washed) in the top of the side walls for holding the wooden sills to which the cellar doors are hinged. After two to four days the forms can be removed. Connect up the drain in the landing and lay the landing floor.

The eight cellar steps of the hatchway shown in the plan have a tread of nine inches, a rise of six inches and a length of four feet. The clear height of the door-way in the cellar wall is six feet, six inches. The landing at the foot of the steps is three by four feet and has a four-inch concrete floor. The same thickness of concrete lies under the steps proper. The side walls were built as described above. For this improvement there were required the following quantities of materials:

Bill of Materials.

Crushed Rock.....2 1/2 cubic yards
Sand.....1 1/2 cubic yards
Portland cement.....12 bags

For improving old cellar hatchways it is frequently necessary to fill with earth and gravel so as to provide the earthen slope for the concrete steps. Such filling must be thoroughly tamped into place and should be water-soaked and allowed to settle before the steps are built.

Concrete steps, unlike other kinds become stronger with age. They are perfectly safe under the heaviest of loads. Moreover, besides being water-tight, they keep out rats, mice and other obnoxious vermin.

GRAND RAPIDS MICHIGAN

The old house, if white-washed, cleaned, and slicked up will show up much better, and not only that, but will be in far better condition for winter and a healthier place for the fowls.

The five-year average price for eggs during month of August in the state of Michigan is 19 cents per dozen, and poultry 11.4 cents per pound. Eggs and poultry have had a great advance in price the past two years.

The early hatched pullet will begin laying now, and if you are breeding for eggs it might be well to force them, but if for breeders, you had better go a little careful and let them take their own course.

The colony house, with plenty of range in an orchard, is an ideal place to raise poultry and it is near nature. You can fairly see poultry grow with such surroundings. It is far ahead of confinement, and poultry can be raised for much less.

Poultry houses should be repaired and put in shape for winter. When the ground is used for a floor, better take out the earth to a foot in depth, if the house has been there long and replace it with fresh earth.

The moment you find a fowl ill remove it from the others into dry and separate quarters, where attention may be given. If the disease should prove contagious it will not spread as if left with the other fowls.

Some farm flocks are fed the year round on corn, and only get a variety of food through the summer season when they can forage for it. If they were fed and cared for in a practical way, how much more of an income would each farm flock produce.

A low roost has many more advantages than a high one. The hens can get on and off easily, bumble foot is avoided, and you can easily clean the roost. A perch should be not less than two inches wide and even three is better. A wide perch is easier for the fowls to roost on and gives you a better opportunity to fight lice with liquid lice killer, by painting it on the roost.

We say again to our readers that, if disease, or problems along breeding, feeding, or any part of the poultry business arise, and you need help or advice, don't be afraid to ask us. If in a hurry, say so, inclose a stamped envelope for a reply. We are ever ready to help our readers over difficult places and problems in the poultry business, or do anything to help promote the industry that we possibly can.

Be sure and attend some of the fall fairs and winter poultry shows and study poultry from an exhibitor's standpoint. It is an object lesson that will be well worth the time and expense necessary. Better yet, take some of your birds and show them in competition with others. If you do not win, it will give you an opportunity to compare them with the winners and ascertain where they are defective, giving you an idea how to improve them.

At the thirty-ninth annual convention of the American Poultry Association, held in Chicago, during the month of August, the following breeds were admitted to the Standard: S. C. Blue Orpingtons, R. C. Anconas, R. C. White Minorcas, White Houdans, Silver and Golden Campines, Salmon Faverolles, Mille Fleur Booted Bantams, Gray Jap Bantams, Buff Ducks (formerly called Ruff Orpington ducks), Penciled Runner Ducks, Red and Speckled Sussex.

C. E. Brown of Northwest Experiment Station, Crookston, Minnesota, says: "Geese and ducks are very similar in their habits of eating. Some recommend feeding the grain whole, but we prefer feeding it ground, especially in winter, as this enables us to mix the green feed with it. Bran, shorts, and corn meal or barley meal, equal parts by weight, mixed with clover leaves or boiled vegetables, is one of the very best rations for winter. Milk mixed with it improves it greatly. We have secured fairly good results from feeding boiled roots, shorts, and milk, but the addition of a small amount of grain gives better results. For summer feeding the geese require nothing but good pasture while the ducks do well if fed whole grain once a day in water if rapid growth is not desired."

The Agricultural Possibilities Of Michigan

By W. A. Carpenter, Frankfort.

While Michigan is today recognized as one of the leading manufacturing and agricultural states, there are still untold resources in the way of farm lands to be opened up, cleared and converted into valuable fruit and general farming districts.

From Grand Rapids north to Charlevoix and Petoskey along the line of the Pere Marquette railway, from Grand Rapids to Mackinaw City along the G. R. & I. railway, from Owosso to Frankfort, along the Ann Arbor railway from north to south, from east to west and all the way through the upper peninsula lie idle lands, only waiting the coming of the husbandman to blossom into dividend paying farms. Here and there all along these railways are fertile, level farms, barns full to overflowing with products of the soil, and yet not a quarter of the wealth producing land in the northern part of the state is under cultivation.

A few inexperienced, ignorant (as to farm work) city bred people have been lured from their haunts or jobs in the cities to begin new and strange life, without money, without tools and without the least idea of farming, thinking green backs and silver dollars grew wild, only to find that it requires just as much hard work, just as much skill in farming as in selling merchandise or in drawing a well filled pay envelope, and have become discouraged and returned to the city, broken in spirit and ready to yell, "It's no use; there is no money in farming," forgetting utterly the fact that while it is just as hard to make a living on the farm lands of Michigan as in any city, after five or ten years instead of having a massive bunch of receipted bills to show for their toil, with possibly (though not probably) a few hundred dollars in the bank or in a home, they might have a farm worth from $50 to $150 per acre, a home filled with comfortable furniture, a farm stocked with valuable live stock, tools of all kinds—a home to be proud of, in fact, and a sure and certain protection against want in old age, besides having reared their children amidst surroundings where there has been room for them to grow and attain the full measure of manhood and womanhood.

The Ann Arbor Railway company was the first to see the possibilities in store for those who would avail themselves of the opportunity thus offered, and about a year ago established a bureau of development. Other roads will follow suit and establish land offices, thus furnishing the prospective settler with a full list of available lands along its road, trusting to increased local shipping and passenger transportation to return a fair rate of interest upon the investment.

When every acre of land in Michigan is under cultivation and producing its full share of beans, wheat, oats, corn and fruit of every kind, then will Michigan lead all the other states in the value of its products. And the time is rapidly drawing near. New families are pouring into northern and central Michigan in a steady and never ending stream. Many come from the more thickly populated states to the south. In Ben. county alone the past year are more than twenty-five families who came from colleges, from government positions, from stores, churches and factories. Some of these new comers have resigned high salaried positions—and all are making good. And all other sections of the state tell the same story.

The significance of this fact cannot be over looked much longer. Michigan is coming into her own, and that right soon.

NEWS FROM University of Michigan

By JOHN R. BRUMM

Register A. G. Hall estimates that the enrollment figures for this year will show an increase of 250 over last year, bringing the total registration to 6,500. So far as can be seen at present the war has had little effect upon the attendance. There may be a slight falling off in representatives of the mining districts in the Upper Peninsula as a result of the business depression occasioned by a closing of foreign markets. The law school is behind last year's registration, but this loss was expected in consequence of the increased requirements for admission. All other departments of the university show a slight gain over last year's enrollment.

The registration of freshmen was greatly facilitated this year by the assistance of the advisory committee. Heretofore the advisors have had assigned to them groups of students who appeared for consultation after college had opened and their work was well under way. The plan was not wholly successful. It was readily seen that new students needed advice before they enrolled in classes. Accordingly the advisors sat as a committee to receive freshmen who had registered and were ready to appear before the election committee. Each freshman was thus able to confer with some member of the faculty before he selected his studies for the first semester. When he appeared before the election committee he was therefore ready to make his choice of courses without any uncertainty. Not only were the freshmen helped to elect their work for the first semester but were advised with reference to the careers they are preparing to follow.

The freshmen enrolled in rhetoric courses are being conducted through the university library in groups of twenty or thirty, under the supervision of the assistant reference librarian, Miss F. N. Gillette. The purpose of these excursions is to acquaint new students with the resources of the library. An explanation of the various indexes and catalogues, reference libraries, special collections, etc., enable the young student to enter at once upon the most profitable use of the library.

Fourteen women are now registered as students in the department of engineering and architecture, two senior "civils" and a junior in architecture, three sophomores (one civil and two architectural engineers), and eight freshmen in architecture.

The University of Michigan has 96 alumni now serving in twenty-five foreign mission fields—25 in China, 12 in India, 21 in other parts of Asia, and the others in Africa, South America, southern Europe and Mexico. Forty-six alumni who have served in foreign missions are now living in this country. The oldest active missionary from the university is Dr. Henry Laning, '63 M., of Osaga, Japan. The University Y. M. C. A. supports a medical mission at Busrak, Abyssinia, where 30,000 patients are given medical treatment annually.

Records in the office of the Student Health Service show that 16,000 office calls were made by students last year. More than 3,500 patients were treated. Five hundred house calls were registered. The Health Service staff consists of four physicians and two nurses. The service affords students free medical attendance and treatment upon the payment of a health fee, which was raised this year from two to four dollars. The increased fee provides for a sixty-day hospital treatment without extra charge. Prescriptions are filled without cost to the student. The Health Service has done much to conserve student health and efficiency throughout the University.

Professor W. J. Hussey, director of the University Observatory, is the chief contributor to the recently published first volume of the observatory publications of the University at La Plata, at which institution he supervises the astronomical interest during one semester of the college year.

The state department has collected through the automobile division the sum of $345,295.81, all of which has been turned into the general fund of the state treasury.

PILGRIM MONUMENT.

Erected in England in Commemoration of the Mayflower.

Commemorating the departure of the Mayflower 293 years ago on August 15, a monument to the Pilgrim Fathers was unveiled in Southampton by American Ambassador Page. The monument, a plain shaft of grey stone, with panels on the sides bearing historical inscriptions, and surmounted by a cupola of marble, stands on the western esplanade overlooking the sea and adjacent to the spot where the Mayflower weighed anchor. Funds for its creation were subscribed by members of the Society of Mayflower descendants in the United States, many of whom attended the ceremonies.

The mayor and other municipal officials received Ambassador Page, and the party was escorted to a luncheon at the Royal Pier pavilion by the Southampton Boy Scouts. As the entwined American and English colors fell away from the shaft bands played American and English national anthems.

SHIFTED THE GROUNDS.

Caused by Evidence in a Wife's Suit for Divorce.

A New York judge was hearing a divorce case in which the wife demanded a divorce on the ground of cruel and inhuman treatment.

The husband's brother was put on the stand. He swore he had never seen any evidence of cruel and inhuman treatment by his brother.

"Did you ever see a quarrel between them?" he was asked.

"Yes, I saw one once."

"Describe it."

"Well, my brother had been very sick of typhoid fever and he was getting well. The doctor told him he could go out. He called his wife and asked her to get him some clothes."

"I haven't any for you," she told him.

"I didn't think you would get better," she replied, "and I sold them to the second-hand clothes man."

"I think," said the judge, "that the grounds for divorce in this case—shift from wife to husband."

REASON ENOUGH.

"So you think you'll go to the mountains next year?"

"Yes; too much breeze at the seashore. Always blowing the cards off the bridge tables."—Louisville Courier-Journal.

NEW USE FOR OLD WHEEL.

Wide Farm Gate Is Easily Moved by Its Aid.

If a wide farm gate is wanted, one that will open and close readily, and that without much outlay, you can have it if you are lucky enough to own an old wheel. The picture shows how it is done. A gate is built, long enough to go between the posts set, and a solid post sawed off at one side two feet above the ground. The middle rib of the gate is left long enough to rest on this low post. It must be thick to take a pin or an iron bolt that is driven into the post. At the other end, explains Farm and Home, it is worked down to act as an axle for the wheel which carries the end of the gate around with the least exertion on the part of the operator.

A Gate Easy to Handle.

Uniform Berry Packages.

One of the striking facts of the berry season every year is the astonishing variety of fruit packages which the consumer finds in the market. Boxes and baskets of both wood and paper, square, flat, oblong or flaring, some quart boxes short and some shorter, combine to make a medley which is confusing to the buyer. It is also a puzzle to the grower, and a cause of positive loss, when he changes his style of package. Really the grower need not do this if he makes proper preparations, but sometimes he is forced to when in sudden need he is unable to find his preferred style and, therefore, must take whatever the dealer has to offer.

Often in small shipping towns, where there are only perhaps half a dozen growers, there will be found as many styles of packages as there are men. This can be nothing but detrimental to the business, because it prevents the interchange of boxes and crates which might often be of great advantage. Such unnecessary diversity can be prevented by co-operative buying. In many places this system is now in practice.

Cost is saved by bulking together orders for packages, and uniformity of packers also improves market conditions. If all the growers of even a small neighborhood were so well organized that their supplies could be bought through one agency, in a course of only a few years it would be an advantage of great value.

Keep the Farm at Work.

The farm's waste and neglected corners should be turned into woodlots where the farmer may grow his own posts, poles, fences and sawlogs. It is decidedly worth while to keep all of the farm at work. The owner pays taxes on all his land, and is out of pocket for whatever is not earning him something. Further, by growing a tree crop on land that is too poor to plow, the quality of the land itself is improved. Forests add humus to the soil, bettering its character.

Ground for Strawberries.

How hard should the ground freeze before covering up the strawberry vines? Well, if it will hold a wagon up when driven over it you may conclude that it is time to put on the mulch. Don't put on too much at first, however. Increase the amount of covering as the weather increases in severity.

Cleaning and Grading Seeds.

With the excellent machines for cleaning and grading now to be had this desirable object can be secured with the seeds of the various kinds of grains, thus obtaining a much more uniform quality of the seed and in the crops grown therefrom. This should receive due attention.

Keeping Potatoes.

Many market gardeners find it profitable to include potatoes in their list of crops, and it is important to keep the seed tubers in a perfectly dormant condition. Cellars with furnaces are unsuitable for storing seed potatoes. The room should be cool, dry, well ventilated and frostproof.

Cheap Farm Paint.

A cheap farm paint can be made from one gallon of skim milk, three pounds Portland cement, dry paint powder to give desired shade. This compound must be kept well stirred, as the cement settles. Stir up not more than one day's supply at a time.

Feed the Cat.

A sup of milk for the cats will keep them tied to the dairy barn and make them good partners in keeping the place free from rats and mice. Remember that many a farmer loses a tidy sum in providing board for the rodents.

Keep tab on the markets and watch your chance to sell your crops at the best price.

Oats make an ideal food for the brood sow. It will pay to keep her well fed up.
