THE NEW STATE FIRE-MARSHAL LAW

Section No. 5 of the Fire Marshal Law as amended by the Legislature of 1915, gives the State Fire Marshal the authority to make regulations for the keeping, storage, use, manufacture, sale, handling, transportation or other disposition of highly inflammable materials and rubbish, gun powder, dynamite, crude petroleum or any of its products, explosive or inflammable fluids or compounds, etc., and imposes a penalty of from fifty to one hundred dollars fine or imprisonment in the county jail of not more than ninety days upon conviction for a violation of such regulations. The regulations, which are now in full force, have just been printed and copies of same are being mailed to all fire chiefs, prosecuting attorneys and local authorities. Under the new regulations gasoline in quantities of more than sixty gallons must be placed in underground tanks and five gallons only can be stored in a building used for any other purpose. The quantity of dynamite that can be stored within the corporate limits of any city or village is limited to ten pounds and special requirements have been enacted regarding the buildings in which such explosives may be stored within the State. The regulations are very stringent in regard to dry-cleaning establishments and other places where gasoline or explosives are used or manufactured and the sale or use of fireworks, firecrackers, blank cartridges, toy guns or pistols, fire-balloons, etc., is either prohibited or limited to size and kind of explosive used in the manufacture of same. The regulations also prohibit the use of cloth advertising signs in front of stores and on vacant buildings and billboards. One section provides that all aisles and passageways in theatres, schools, churches, halls and other public buildings must be kept clear and unobstructed during entertainments and the use of chairs in any aisle in such places is prohibited.

MISS GENEVIEVE SENECA BECOMES BRIDE OF MANCELONA MAN

The below article, clipped from the Times of Hammond, Ind., is of interest to the many friends here of Miss Senecal, who made her home here for a number of years.

PRETTY CHURCH WEDDING

The wedding of Miss Genevieve Senecal and Mr. John E. Lutz of Mancelona, Mich., was solemnized Monday morning at eight o'clock at All Saints church in Sibley street with Rev. Father Barrett officiating. The bride wore a virgin white crepe de chine gown finished in imported lace and applied with French knots. Her hat was of white satin with white aigrettes and she carried a bouquet of white roses. The groom wore the conventional black.

The bride and groom were attended by Miss Agnes Senecal, a sister of the bride, of Calumet, Mich., and Mr. G. S. Wilhelm, a cousin of the bride. The bridesmaid wore a fawn colored suit of summer material and wore a white satin hat with French aigrettes.

Mrs. Lutz, the bride, has been making her home with her niece, Mrs. Bert Wilhelm of Inghram avenue for the past year and has been employed at the E. C. Minas department store for some time. Mr. Lutz is the superintendent of a big chemical plant at Mancelona, Mich.

A Surprising Animal.

An Irish horse trader who was noted for his skill in getting the best of a trade was endeavoring to sell a horse to a farmer. He was praising the fine qualities of the horse when the farmer asked: "Can the horse pull?"
"It would surprise you to see that horse pull," said the Irishman.
He sold the horse. The next day the farmer came back highly excited. "You swindled me; you said that horse could pull," he screamed.
"You're mistaken," replied the trader. "I said it would surprise you to see that horse pull!"

GOOD ROADS DEPARTMENT

CONDUCTED BY

Michigan State Good Roads Association

Hastings, Michigan.

Hastings—The West Michigan Pike tourists have just finished their fourth annual trip from St. Joseph to the Straits of Mackinaw. The tour began Monday, July 12th, the party reaching Traverse City Wednesday evening at 6:15. The tour was a most delightful one, no accidents occurring, and the automobiles behaving beautifully all along the 418 miles.

Of this mileage, 270 miles have been improved, and is known as state reward road. The West Michigan Pike traverses twelve counties from Berrien to Emmet, and I think it will be admitted without controversy that it runs through the most beautiful resort region in the United States.

The West Michigan Pike is in part the northern link of the great Dixie Trail, from the Gulf of Mexico to the Straits of Mackinaw beginning at Miami, Florida. This particular stretch of road is designed to be and will one day become the most beautiful scenic route in the central states and unequalled in its attractions by any other highway in the country. Skirting the eastern shore of Lake Michigan it traverses a country rich in natural beauty.

The Pike is a trunk line highway constructed under the supervision of the State Highway Commissioner by the various counties through which it passes. The writer is frank to admit that there is some of the finest roads in the state along this Pike.

It is far from completion, however. Frequently during the trip we would pass immense steam rollers at work and the various gangs of workmen upon the road is evidence that there is a determined effort to complete the Pike in the immediate future. The farmers all along the way told us "it will be better next year." The fact that the Dixie Highway will use the entire of the West Michigan Pike north of Grand Rapids gives added importance to this great scenic road. We wish our readers to mark the work entire.

The completion of the main pike will mean eventually the improvement of all of the roads that radiate from the main line, and in time the entire western and northern part of the state will be a network of roads that can be travelled at all seasons of the year by automobiles and motor conveyances. Who can estimate the increased value of lands by reason of the completion of the Good Roads System of the state?

I believe that this annual tour of "the West Michigan Pikers," as they are called, increase interest in the Good Roads movement and helps to hasten the day when the people all over the state will demand that the roads be placed in a permanent condition for all kinds of travel. This is a great Good Roads age and time will prove that road construction will be greatly increased throughout the state as a result of the completion of the Trunk Line roads reaching from the southland.

The Dixie Highway Association have recently received an official communication from Governor Ferris in response to a request from the president of the association that the writer of this article, Philip T. Colgrove, of Hastings, and Frank Hamilton of Traverse City had been commissioned by him as directors from Michigan, and W. H. Anderson of Grand Rapids as founder. These gentlemen will agree between themselves as to who shall act as vice-president of the association from this state. As soon as this has been agreed upon the vice-president will appoint a temporary chairman in each county through which the Dixie Highway runs. The plan is simple and requires no great sacrifice on the part of anyone connected with the enterprise.

From South Bend the route will go through Niles, Paw Paw, Dowagiac, Kalamazoo, Grand Rapids and thence to Grand Haven where it strikes the West Michigan Pike, and then on to the Straits.

The time selected for the 1915 tour was most fortunate. "Cherries were indeed ripe." The billowed seas of grain, thousands of acres of fruit, the improved condition of farm buildings, evidence of thrift on every side, increased activity in village and cities together with the improvement being made on the roads and especially the increased sentiment for better roads all conspired to make the trip a memorable one. The weather was perfect and the constantly changing scenery kept one in good humor, never tiring of the trip.

At Traverse City more than a hundred automobiles came out to escort the Pike tourists into their beautiful city. It is estimated that 2,000 attended the meeting in the evening in front of the Park Place Hotel. The Traverse City Good Roads Association contributed much to the pleasure of the trip. The meeting at Traverse City was opened by singing "The Dixie Highway" to the tune of Tipperary.

"Whenever I thought of traveling in my little auto-car, I'd always dread the country roads. Though the distance wasn't far. But now the Dixie Highway's through to Michilimackinac, I do not mind the trip at all, Not even coming back.

CHORUS.

It's a long way to Traverse City,
Dixie Highway's the track,
It's a long way to Traverse City
And to Michilimackinac;
But the Pikers have been boosting
For improvements every year.
It's a long, long way that we are traveling.
But the distance seems near.

Those roads we rode in days of yore
Were full of ruts and dry;
We'd swallow dust, "In God We Trust"
To get there by and by.
But now the Pike is in full sight,
To tour the state around,
It always takes just such mistakes
Before the truth is found.

CHORUS.

For it's the wrong building Tem-po-rar-y,
When the road will not last;
Oh! it's wrong building tem-po-rar-y,
We have found that in the past.
Good-bye, good old has-beens,
We sometimes thought you fine,
But it's wrong, wrong buildings tem-po-rar-y!

State reward roads for mine." Space will not permit a detailed statement of the various stops made, nor am I able to give excerpts of the addresses. Sufficient to say that those who have been over the road annually, since the first tour, all are agreed that the steady progress made in the improvement of the Pike is most satisfactory and that the country itself is being developed as the highway is developed, each keeping pace with the other.

Mich. State Good Roads Assn.

expected to be passing over the Rocky Mountain highland at the beginning of this week, Mississippi valley from 15th to 17th and eastern states about the middle of the week. The 15th and 16th promise to be severe storm days with an exceedingly low barometer, high winds and heavy rain in the Mississippi valley about Monday the 16th. High winds and heavy rain storms are to be expected during the passage of this storm followed by a change to cooler and clearing skies.

Rising temperatures on the western coast about the 18th are expected to forewarn the approach of another storm from the west which will make its appearance about Thursday with a very low barometer. Heavy rains and electrical storms will cross the United States from the 19th to 23d reaching central sections of the country about Saturday the 21st. There appears to be a dual influence at work at this time and the probabilities are that a second storm area, probably a reaction from the storm area named above will move along the gulf coast. It should be remembered that this is the beginning of the West India Hurricane season and such storms are likely at this time. The fact that they are little understood makes them all the more dangerous.

Following these storms there will be a change to much cooler temperatures ranging below normal over the Colorado Plateau region as the week goes out.

OUR POULTRY DEPARTMENT

ERNEST B. BLETT GRAND RAPIDS, MICH.

This week concludes the articles from three different writers on Caponizing. This week's offering is from Ray Cook of Eckford, Michigan. Mr. Cook was a novice and his only instructions was the book, "What is a Capon and Why." The book sells for 50c and the editor of this department believes it a good investment. A good set of tools can be purchased for $3.50 and $5.00 per set. With each set of tools full instructions with descriptive photos of work are sent out free.

My Experience in Capons.
An article I saw in a poultry magazine about capons caught my eye one day and I immediately wrote both Mr. Beuy and the Geo. Pilling Co., whose ads I found in several poultry papers and after studying the matter over decided on the Automatic Remover as the one to try.

I interested a doctor friend of mine (also a poultry admirer) in my venture and we did the first work together. The only instructions we followed were found in Mr. Beuy's book on "What is a Capon and Why" with which we had fine success. I always keep the birds to be caponized from feed for at least 24 hours to have the bowels empty which gives more room in the abdominal cavity to find the testicles. To be sure there is no chance for infection I always wash the part of the body where the incision is to be made with an antiseptic solution of any kind that is the handiest at that time, also thoroughly sterilizing instruments before starting in on a batch of poultry.

I always try to have the birds to be caponized, to weigh from one to one and one-half pounds, but do not let them get much larger for good results.

I have never used anything but an Automatic Remover for what is the use of changing when you have the very best of success never losing a bird due to any fault of the tools in my two years of experience with them and only one in all is a very good record I think.

After the operation I always turn the birds out on the lawn giving them a light feed to start with. As I am on a large farm I have plenty of range. My birds are always in fine condition and in a day or two you can hardly tell by just looking at them which were operated upon.

It will not be long before you can tell them by their more rapid growth and at selling time will out weigh the roosters by 3 to 4 pounds. I have never left any for Foster mothers as local demand takes all I raise.

Before I get ready to sell my Capons I put them in a small pen by themselves and feed them a ration of corn and milk for about three weeks. At the end of that time they are plump and fat and after dry picking they certainly make a fine showing on the market.

If you once get a customer for Capons you can always sell him again, so often you will hear them say, "I never tasted such fowl before, it does not seem there could be so much difference between a Capon and the Rooster."

I have never shipped any Capons to the city trade but in our local market they will sell from $1.50 to $1.75, very good for a small town but I am planning to raise enough this year to pay to ship them away. At the time I sold my last Capons I took a few surplus roosters of the same age and they sold for 60 cents a piece alive. "Does it pay to raise Capons?"—Ray Cook, Eckford, Mich.

blanket, and carried her to a large chair by the window, overlooking the paved street, with its endless stream of vehicles.

As she lay there, she thought of the old days when she was a girl, and Sam but a boy. They were in the little schoolhouse together. Sam was the best speller in the school, but this day they two had been the only ones left in the spelling bee, and he had missed the last word. The boys had been making fun of him because a girl could outspell him, but somehow he did not seem to feel so very badly because she had won, and she half suspected that he could have spelled that word if he had wanted to.

On the way home Sam had told her of the plans to go to the big city and make a name for himself, and had asked, in a shy way, if she would like to go to the city some day, after he had become a captain of industry, and was very rich.

She had blushed, and replied that she thought such questions rather old for boys and girls to consider; but she was glad when after he had returned from college he again referred to that conversation, and said that she would be glad to go anywhere with him. He had done so well, and everyone was proud of him, and it all seemed as though he must become a great man sometime; but she had got so lonesome, with nothing to do from morning until night except make believe busy herself about the little house-keeping, or a walk in the park, which somehow reminded her of the animals in the circus. The trees, and the shrubbery were pretty, but they were only specimens of the real life from which they had come, and she too seemed like one of the restless animals walking to and fro in the cage, while she waited for Sam to make his success, and now she was taking him away just when he seemed almost about to succeed, and instead of being a help she was a hindrance.

A step on the stairs, the noise of a key in the lock, and Sam's cheery face advised her that he had returned.

"I got it! I got it!" he cried, as he held up a folded paper. "I used part of the money from the old farm, and I have bought 160 acres of land. That will give us an income of $16,000 a year if all in clover seed, or $5,000 a year in stock and wheat, and that's better than I'm doing here, and we shall be free again, and not have to worry about what will become of us if work gets slack, or I get too old, and they want a younger man. Cheer up, little girl, we'll soon be on our own farm in Michigan. I'll buy the horses, cows and tools when I get over there."

"I've engaged men to come and pack our furniture. I've made a reservation in the sleeper for tonight, and tomorrow we shall be at Newaygo, and smell the clover blossoms, and see the green fields, as we used to know them when we were children together in the old farm."

The poor girl was too weary to enter into Sam's exultation, and simply said, "That will be nice. But Sam, I'm so tired, and I can't help you much."

"Never mind, pet. I can pack all the things we need, and the men can do the rest. Don't you worry one bit about it. I'll do the work."

With an affectionate kiss placed upon the pale forehead, he began to busy himself with the packing, when Sue's voice called him to her.

"What did you do about the office, Sam?" asked his wife.

"I told them that the doctor had ordered me out of town, that if it were necessary I would come back in a week to break in a new man for my place, but the boss said that would not be necessary, as his son had just finished college, and he had anticipated giving him my place anyway, and he would break him in himself." He thanked me for all I had done, and I thanked him for the opportunities he had given me, but I don't think any tears will be shed on either side, and you needn't think about that again."

"Do you mean," asked Sue, "that he would have given you position to someone else, and turned you out without any notice?" asked Sue.

"No, not quite so bad as that," replied Sam. "He would have told me that business was getting slack, and it was necessary to curtail expenses, and as soon as I could find another position it would be satisfactory to him. I didn't expect that he would marry me, and these concerns can't keep men on the payroll unless they have the business for them to do. But the old farm will keep me busy, and will at least make a living for us, and I can be my own boss."

The next day found Sam and Sue in Michigan. As the train left Grand Rapids for the land they had selected for their future home, and which they supposed would in some way resemble Illinois, they were depressed by the miles and miles of oak grubs, and pine stumps on either side of the car, but as Sam told Sue, land that would produce 60 bushels of wheat could not look like that, and it must be a different country where their land was located. The man at the Michigan Stock Ranch Co. had told them to buy their ticket to Lilly, which he said was a little station a few miles east of the land he had sold them in Troy township, along the Pere Marquette river, and they could get a man at the station to drive them over to the farm, but he would advise Sam to leave his wife at the hotel at White Cloud, and go on up and clean out the house, and get things in readiness for her before he moved in.

He said the house was not a city mansion, but could be made comfortable until they could get off a few crops which would enable them to build as nice a house as any man need to live in.

They could dam up the river that ran through the place, and have their own electric lights, hot and cold water in the house, and every convenience that they could have in the city, and have the satisfaction of knowing it was all their own.

When they reached White Cloud Sue's courage began to fail her, and as she saw the hotel from the car window, she decided that she had rather go on to Lilly with Sam than to stay there alone without him. And so it was that they went from bad to worse, and when they arrived at Lilly Sam, wished that he had stayed in Chicago with his sick wife.

By inquiring he found that he could get a room for the night, in one of the little farmhouses near the depot, and that the owner would drive him over to see the land he had purchased the next day.

After making Sue as comfortable as he could, and getting her to bed, he motioned to Pete Peterson, who was helping his wife get supper, to follow him out into the yard, and when he was far enough away so that his wife could not hear his voice, he said: "Mr. Peterson, will you tell me if there is any land in this part of Michigan that will raise 50 bushels of wheat to the acre?"

"Well, I don't know," drawled Pete, "perhaps there is, but I never seen it. I reckon you're one of the Chicago guys that's been readin' fairy tales made up by the Michigan Stock Ranch Co. 'Aint you?"

Sam ventured the information that he had purchased 160 acres in Troy township from this company, at $15 an acre, and they had told him that the land would produce 50 bushels of wheat, 150 bushels of corn, 75 bushels of oats, or 300 bushels of potatoes to the acre and as his wife was sick, and she had to leave the city at once, he had taken their word for it, paid them their money, shipped his household goods, expecting that he was getting into a farming country such as he had left in Illinois.

Pete took out his knife, picked up a piece of a pine root, and began to whittle.

"Sue! Sue!" he cried, as he bathed her face with some water. "Come back to me, and I will get out of this city as soon as God will let me. See here, I am going to buy a farm in Michigan. I've just been reading an advertisement. I can buy land there that will produce 50 bushels of wheat to the acre, and $100 worth of clover seed, and it only costs $6.00 an acre to get it! Wouldn't you like to smell the clover blossoms again, and hear the bees humming overhead, as they hurry with their loads of honey? Wouldn't you like to hear the birds sing, and see the wheat waving in the fields? Listen, dear. I'll go right downtown to the Atwood Building, and see the St. Helen Development Co.'s man, and buy a farm this very day. Tomorrow we'll pack our duds, and take the train for Michigan, and just as soon as you're able we'll begin life all over again, on our own farm."

"But what about your work?" asked Sue, "can they spare you at the office? Is it right for you to give up your career, and go back to a farm?" His big form brightened as he said, "What would they do if I should die. They would get along all right, wouldn't they?" "Oh, don't!" cried Sue, laying her hand on his lips, "don't talk so. What would I do if you should—"

"Well, well, we won't discuss that question any more," said Sam, "but they'll have to play that I am on a vacation. You are my first concern, and you shall get well, no matter what it may cost them or me. Come pet, let me wrap you in a blanket, so you can sit by the window, while I run downtown, and buy that farm. I'll be back in a few hours, and tell you all about it."

Willow Brook Apiary in Charlevoix County Mich.

Michigan jumped from thirteenth to fourth place in the list of states as a honey producing section during the ten years preceding the last census. The three states ahead of it in 1909 were, in the order of their importance, California, New York and Texas. As Michigan during the last four years has been going extensively into fruit growing and alfalfa raising, both of which industries are important factors in the production of honey, it is very likely that today the state is crowding Texas for third place. The twenty counties of western Michigan produce about one-fourth of the state's output. In 1910 there were 28,195 colonies in western Michigan. They were valued at $119,672, and the annual crop of honey and wax was valued at better than $71,000. The above pictured apiary, belonging to Ira D. Bartlett, is on the edge of Charlevoix County. The 1912 honey crop at this apiary amounted to 17,000 pounds.

Great State Movement In Child Welfare Work

Michigan Fraternalists Organize to Make a State-Wide Survey of Entire State and Outline Plan for Effective Co-operative Work.

Detroit—What promises to be the greatest child welfare movement in history was launched in Detroit, Thursday, July 15th, at the Hotel Statler, when at the call of officials of the Michigan Fraternal Congress and others, a conference was held comprising every activity, large and small, public and private, in fraternal, charity, welfare and better citizenship movements in the state.

The proposal of the Michigan Fraternal Congress to promote this movement and endeavor to unite all of the units in the state into a single effort for the child, was pronounced by Hastings H. Hart, director of the Russell Sage Foundation, New York City, as the most important and significant in the history of welfare work.

About three hundred persons were present at the conference, each in a majority of cases, representing some very potent influence, either throughout the state or in some particular district. These included the Fraternal Beneficiary societies of the state and other fraternal societies, in all comprising about seven hundred thousand members; state officials, state boards, institutional boards, hospital boards, welfare leagues and societies, charities organizations, playground and recreation commissions, disease prevention movements, in fact all boards, societies, clubs, organizations engaged or interested in any uplift work in the state.

Prominent Speakers.

Among the speakers at the conference, besides Mr. Hart, the New York expert, were: Dr. William A. Wilson, superintendent of the Florence Crittenden Home in Detroit; Grant H. Slocum, founder and Supreme Secretary of the Ancient Order of Gleaners, Detroit; William E. Brown, Lapeer, president of the Michigan Fraternal Congress; D. B. Montgomery, superintendent of the state schools at Coldwater; Ira W. Jayne, superintendent of the Play-Ground and Recreation Commission, Detroit; Rev. Caroline Bartlett Crane, Kalamazoo, National Red Cross Society; Dr. John L. Burkhardt, secretary of the State Board of Health; Mrs. Orton H. Clark, president of the Michigan Equal Suffrage Association, Kalamazoo; Miss Bina M. West, Supreme Commander of the Women's Benefit Association of the Maccabees, Port Huron; Stewart Hanley, vice president of the Michigan Fraternal Congress and a member of the State Board of Charities and Corrections, and others of equal prominence.

At a "round table" about fifty of the brightest minds in the state engaged in a spirited discussion and all promised the hearty co-operation of the units they represented in a general organization in which would be co-ordinated all interests engaged in child welfare work.

It was decided to effect a permanent organization and make a complete survey of the conditions in the state and report the same at a conference to be held late in the fall at which time sessions covering three days will be held, outlining plans for the carrying out of the work.

The officers of the organization and the executive committee are:

Holt—Myles F. Gray, grandmaster of the Michigan Odd Fellows, points out the Holt lodge as one of the most enterprising and ideal lodges of the 600 in the state. The Holt lodge was instituted five years ago with but a small membership. "This lodge," says Grand Master Gray, "is accomplishing a big purpose; that of making itself the social center of a community. Its activities are many and its enterprise untried. An indication of its substantiality is the fact that, although it has been organized but five years and has a membership limited to possibly a half hundred, it has built two halls. The first one built burned down, and the members immediately started subscriptions to erect another. This record has scarcely been equaled, considering its membership, in Odd Fellow history of the state."

For Twenty-seven Years

There is a man here, where we make Lily White flour, to whose watchfulness and familiarity with Lily White flour you owe at least part of the success you have in using it.

He is the Head-miller

For twenty-seven years, during every hour of every working day he has been watching Lily White in the making. He knows Lily White better than most people know their children. How many sacks or barrels he has seen made and watched over he himself probably has no idea. But he does know and he sees to it, that Lily White is always the same.

Lily White

"The flour the best cooks use"

This man is not the only old experienced man making Lily White. But he is the head-miller, the man who watches the results of the others' work. This is but an illustration of one of the reasons why Lily White is the best all-purpose flour you can buy. Some people say it is the best flour. They leave out "all-purpose."

The same care and experience is employed in every detail, from the purchase of the right kinds of wheat and the best of the right kinds, to the time the flour goes down the chute to a wagon, tied and sewed in a sanitary, clean sack—a perfectly clean and cleanly perfect flour.

THE FABLE OF THE YOUNG MUSICIAN AND VILLAGE PROPHETS

Once upon a time in a sleepy little village there lived a young man whose desire was to become a great musician. While other children played marbles and hop-scotch, he stayed in-doors and practiced his lesson on a violin. His solo at the high school commencement was encoored and the visiting orator from the state university who made the address at the exercises complemented it highly.

After the affair was over, several excellent opportunities were offered the budding Kublick. Old man Simmonds offered him a position as delivery boy for the Simmonds' grocery; Bill Brown presented him with an offer of a position as clerk in the Brown confectionery, and the directors of the Glen Hollow school told him that if he would attend 'summer normal' he could have the honor of teaching the Glen Hollow children during the winter term. When he refused—all these generous offers, many dire prophecies were made. And when he boarded a train one day with his beloved violin and a canvas telescope full of clothes the townspeople grew very much alarmed and whispered strange and ominous forebodings.

Six years later the town woke up sufficiently to hold a chautauqua, and when the program was announced in the Weekly Horn the face of the former resident was seen. The paper announced that Mr. Blanque, one of the foremost violinists of the day would positively play at every concert.

The day for the hero's arrival came. The hero himself appeared on the scene. He played his best for his old friends and neighbors, and they applauded generously. After it was all over Old Man Simmonds went up to the platform and shook hands with the home-comer and by way of congratulations said "You've got so you kin fiddle real well, but if you ever git rheumatiz in yer fingers yew'll wish ye had took that job I offered ye before yew left home."

Time for Notification Extended in "Corn Contest."

Owing to the backwardness of the season coupled with the early fair date it has been decided to extend the time for notification of intention to exhibit in the 'Corn Contest' at the Charlevoix Co. Fair, from August 1st to August 20. It has developed that quite a number have deferred making any notification because of their uncertainty that the corn would ripen in time for the fair. This is a mistake however, all that are interested in this Corn Contest should notify me at once regardless of whether the crop may mature in time or not, for upon the interest manifested this year will largely depend the continuance of contests of this kind. If you have the crop under cultivation please notify me at once that you intend to make the best display possible.

The Temple Theatre will on Friday Aug. 13, offer its patrons Kibble and Martin's grand spectacular revival of "Uncle Tom's Cabin." This attraction is classed as the biggest scenic production of this well known story the American stage has ever seen, it being necessary to utilize two special seventy foot cars to transport the fifty people, scenery and equipment. No such amount of money as Kibble and Martin have spent on this production has ever before been expended on this neglected and much abused—but still most successful of American dramas.

The performance of "A Modern Cinderella" was greeted by a good sized audience at the Temple Theatre last night, who displayed their enthusiasm by repeated encores on the many musical numbers, presented by a company of clever artists including the chorus of fourteen who could really sing and dance and which by the way were beautifully costumed. The scenery and electrical effects displayed a carefulness of detail, as well as the musical portion of the program presented by Mr. Durrand, the composer, and Mr. Bartine with his xylophone accompaniments.

The play itself was a consistent succession of farcical complications in which Gaiter Austin and Betty Caldwell were worthily featured, being assisted by Louise Hoerger with a beautiful soprano voice, David Rivers and Charles Plows in the principal comedy parts, Howard Murrell and his clever dancing partner, Miss Ellis Davis and several others in the minor roles.

In all it was a most worthy production, deserving of unusual patronage.

CHAPTER IV

Introducing Jeanette.

"Feel better now?" the question was asked in a low, musical voice. Barrington opened his eyes and immediately closed them again. He thought he was dreaming and the vision was one he did not wish to lose. He was aroused by a gentle shake and opening his eyes, he looked into a pair of brown ones in which he detected a twinkle of amusement, and a great deal of interest.

"I-I beg your pardon," stammered the consul swinging his legs to the floor and sitting bolt upright. "I had no idea I was intruding on the sylvan retreat of a lady." Notwithstanding his rumpled hair and disarranged tie, he was good to look upon, this clean limbed, well built American. The oddness of the situation caused a faint tinge of color to flood his cheeks. Jeanette started as she realized she was regarding him most intently. A deep flush suffused her dark face.

The confusion of the awakening leaving him, he realized he was looking at a rustic beauty, a child of the country, simple, earnest and honest, but intelligent as well. Her words, well chosen, were spoken with a slight French accent. Everything about her was dainty, even her thick soled shoes fit her neatly and were of good material. Plainly but well dressed with a fur cap set jauntily on her head, she presented a most pleasing picture. Barrington thought so and managed to make a mental photograph of her in spite of the vexations with which he was surrounded.

"My brother, Pierre Langlois, sent me to you," she explained simply. "He could not come himself. It would be dangerous to you, he said."

"Yes?" Something in the girl's manner checked the gallant speech he had prepared, and there was nothing but respectful admiration in his gaze. Jeanette with a woman's quickness of perception, realized the change and appreciated it. She had had no schooling in the ways of the world as Barrington knew it, but her intuition, a God-given faculty of defense bestowed upon many of the fair sex, taught her he was to be trusted. The embarrassment disappeared from her manner.

"You have the glove, and that in itself is sufficient to place you in danger, he says. If you will come with me I will take you to a place where he will see you later. He bade me tell you that all that you have striven for in behalf of your country is as nothing compared with that that is to come."

Filled with wonder, dazed at the complications closing in upon him, worried at the statement that his safe had been, or would be rifled, anxious as to the safety of his sister, Barrington was undecided as to what course to pursue. His inclination was to at once go to Waltonville, size up the situation and openly fight in the name of the United States, demanding reparation and explanation for the outrages perpetrated.

Jeanette saw the struggle going on within him. He had forgotten her presence, forgotten the Glenmore murder; all he thought of was his duty.

"Pierre never talks without reason," she hazarded looking at him with anxious eyes. He caught the expression of concern, looked into the open face.

"Very well, I will do as you wish," he spoke very gently. There must be something deeper than a mere whim in the request of the French deputy. If it really bore upon the great plot he was unearthing it was his duty to sink all personal considerations and get to the bottom of it.

He smiled grimly as he thought how ridiculous all this seemed in the present high state of civilization. The garishness of the sensational events took him back to dime novel days when the entire world seemed enveloped in a haze of blood, thunder and romance.

Passing out of the shack after having scattered the embers of the fire, Barrington followed the girl who glided in and out among the thick underbrush with the grace and lightness of a gazelle. It was an intricate way, and yet she never faltered. Jeanette kept up a pace that tired even the muscular American, and yet seemed to think nothing of it. She looked back frequently in the gathering gloom with dark eyes that made his pulse beat more quickly. He was becoming most interested in this witch of the woods.

"Tired?" she queried as she stopped upon a knoll in an open space. She smiled as she spoke showing a set of teeth as perfect and as white as her brother's.

"I am a little fagged," he acknowledged sitting on a fallen log beside her. "Are you not worn out?" "Me!" there was surprise in her voice. "Oh, no, I am used to it. I very often go much farther and faster."

"You do?" "Yes," she answered somewhat coldly. "Pierre may tell you. Come, if you are rested."

He would much rather have sat still and talked to her, but she rose as she spoke, and they continued on into the deepening shadows. It was now almost night in the open, and was growing very dark in the brush. "Which way are we going?" he hazarded at length.

"Hush! we are too close to the road to talk. Wait until later." There was no mistaking the warning tone of voice and they continued in silence.

The underbrush was giving way to taller timber. The trees were further apart and through them ahead, he could see the glimmer of a light. It was above them, and she explained in a whisper that it was the end of their journey; a cabin set on a ledge on the hillside above Swail Creek.

Barrington found himself stumbling awkwardly in the darkness. With a laugh that sent the hot blood to his face in mortification, Jeanette reached out her hand and grasped his. In this manner they threaded their way along the creek bottom and up the hill to the cabin. A light knock, twice repeated, caused Pierre to throw open the door. Almost blinded by the sudden light, Barrington floundered into the room the door being quickly shut behind him, and a curtain of rag carpet dropped over the window to shut out the light that had been their beacon.

Jeanette threw herself into a chair and removed the fur cap, releasing a mass of rebellious, curly dark brown hair. Her dark eyes alive with intelligence and determination glistened and her trim figure made a pleasing picture in the fire light.

Throwing his own sealskin head covering upon the table, Barrington ran his fingers through his thick wavy hair which fell into place revealing his high, broad forehead.

"For one who up to a few days ago was a quiet, peaceful representative of the United States, an almost useless appendage to the government, I seemed to have plunged into the thickest mess the middle ages could have cooked up, or Stanley Weyman concocted." Barrington laughed as he spoke. "I believe I am indebted to you for a valuable tip as to the plans of my enemies, but I would like to know where you come in, and your reason for piloting me here instead of counseling me to go back to Waltonville."

Having transferred his revolver to his outside coat pocket while coming through the brush, Barrington had it handy for use if it was needed, but the presence of the young girl made him almost ashamed of the doubt of Langlois's good faith. Had he intended treachery it was easy for him to have acted while the consul was asleep in the shack. He was forced to believe that for some reason of his own or on Nolan's account, the French Canadian, and evidently part Indian, had befriended him.

"Your question is a natural one," the deputy smiled grimly, "and it is easily answered. 'I hate Fred Quigsley!'"

"Stick you on a mining proposition?" inquired the consul. "He is long on tricks of that kind."

"Worse than that, robbed me of one, and broke the heart of the only woman on earth I ever thought anything of outside of my sister. Besides," he added, "although I am supposed to yell 'God Save the King!' I have no love for England, and still less for Japan that is now trying to make the subjects of His Majesty, Edward VII pull her chestnuts out of the fire. I might as well go further with you Barrington," Pierre's dark eyes glowed in the dancing fire light. "As we are destined to work together for a while you are entitled to the facts. I am the man Yamagasi selected to take you off of Nolan's hands when that gentleman had rendered you hors d' combat. As it happens Nolan and I understand each other, and being desirous of sparing you a headache, we took this means of his carrying out his compact with the Jap."

"Then Nolan has played me false!" cried the consul, his face flushing with anger. He had his revolver in his outside coat pocket, and as he spoke he brought it to bear on the deputy.

"Put it up, Mr. Barrington," advised Pierre unruffled by its appearance. "Jim did not play you false, on the contrary he is keeping absolute faith with you and I am helping him do so. He will be here later, when it is safe for him to get away. Yam does not half trust him, and it was up to him to make good. Quigsley will assure him it is all right, and that I am to complete the elimination of Consul Barrington in any cold blooded way I may see fit, remembering always that dead men tell no tales. To all intents and purposes, you have now passed to the great beyond."

"This is pleasant news," the consul spoke quietly but there was an anxiety closely akin to fear gripping him. "As a deputy constable, a fellow conspirator with Quigsley and Yamagasi, how am I to reconcile your attitude as my alleged friend?"

"We have to fight the devil with fire, Mr. Barrington," replied Pierre. "I am with you in this, heart and soul."

"Then why are you so closely allied with the rascals on the other side?" persisted the consul.

"First, I hate Quigsley as I said before, and I am weaving the net around him, second placing my neck in jeopardy for the country of my adoption, for I am a naturalized citizen of the United States, with the conviction that I will get well paid for that risk if I am successful."

"You mean to say—" "Hush! I mean to say nothing nor must you. Let it suffice for the present that I am subject to your orders."

A long, low whistle was faintly heard through the closed door. "That is Jim," explained the Frenchman as he opened the door slightly. He did this twice, and then sat down.

"Before he comes, Mr. Barrington," almost whispered Pierre, "let me tell you Washington has an inkling of what is going on, but looks to you for fuller details."

"How—" He was interrupted by the entrance of Nolan. The man's face was more free from marks of dissipation than usual, as were his eyes, but it wore a troubled expression, and he was evidently laboring under great excitement.

"We are up against it, and up against it hard," he exclaimed. "That brown devil Yam, and Quigsley not finding the report in the safe are convinced you have it on your person. Unless it is delivered it means you, Pierre, and I will have to come out in the open and fight."

"That will never do," responded Barrington. He was thinking hard. Pierre fastened his glistening black eyes on the face of the consul as if striving to penetrate and read his thoughts. Barrington glancing up caught the look, and coolly and critically looked the deputy squarely in the eye. It was a questioning gaze, passing to one of determination that boded ill to the Frenchman if a trap was being set. Too much depended upon the ferreting out of further details and securing for the state department documentary evidence of the plot which Barrington knew to be in existence.

He fully realized the precarious situation, in which he was placed, but it was not fear for himself, that gave him anxiety. It was the possibility that he would be done away with before being able to accomplish the task he had set himself.

Pierre's white teeth showed beneath the black mustache. He bore the scrutiny of the consul unmoved, then turned to Nolan with an expressive shrug of his shoulders.

"John, Pierre is all right," emphatically declared the deserter in answer to the Frenchman's unspoken appeal. "I discovered it accidentally, how, it does not matter, but he is with you. He is necessarily playing a double game, but if you have the faith in me you said you had, or would have, believe me."

The same cold, critical stare met the eyes of the deserter. So steady was it that it became somewhat disconcerting, and a dark flush slowly mounted the face of Yam's supposed tool.

"Well, I am going to keep to my part of the compact, Jim." The words came slowly and distinctly, and though it was unspoken, the sentiment: "God help you if you do not," was plainly to be inferred.

"You shall have that report," continued Barrington. "That is, if some one can go to my sister whose presence will not arouse suspicion."

"I can arrange that, Mr. Barrington," Pierre spoke quietly and something in his tone of voice heretofore lacking, made the consul feel more comfortable. "My sister Jean will carry a note to your sister for you. If any questions are asked I can easily say I sent her to ascertain how much your sister knows. Will you write a line?"

Barrington nodded and when pen and paper were brought to him by Miss Langlois, he disconcerted her with one of his piercing looks. He seemed well satisfied with the result, his face relaxed from its grim set and there stole over it the shadow of a smile altering the expression Jean thought how much handsomer he was than when the fighting spirit was uppermost.

John briefly outlined the situation to Belle, omitting, however, to state that he was in any danger personally. He told her to read the report carefully and then give it to the bearer of the note. He was careful to state who that bearer was, so that in case the note was delivered by any one except Miss Langlois, Belle would at once know something was wrong.

"Do this, Belle," he concluded, "and then get to Washington as fast as you can, my supposed disappearance being a good excuse to go to Uncle. Through him communicate what you have absorbed in the reading to the state department."

Pierre sat in his chair tipped back against the log wall of the cabin calmly smoking a pipe while Nolan sprawled on the bunk a deep sleep upon his scarred face. When in repose it was not a bad face, though a livid streak across the right cheek gave it a sinister expression when flushed with anger.

"Miss Langlois," Barrington's gray eyes softened as he spoke and his tone was very gentle. "I am going to trust you with more than my life. I do not believe you will betray me. Will you please give this note to my sister, and contrive to do so unseen. The moment she reads it, she will look after the rest of it."

Jeanette Langlois standing so the firelight threw a ruddy glow over her dark face drew her figure to its full height and proudly meeting his glance, silently took the letter and stepped out into the winter night.

"She should not go alone at this time of night," exclaimed Barrington, starting up.

"Have no fear for her," remarked her brother. "She will take care of herself, and it is safer that she should go alone."

CHAPTER V

Call from the Conspirators.

A fresh log of seasoned wood was placed upon the fire. As the flames leaped into life and cast a ruddy glow over the interior of the cabin, they formed a pleasant contrast to the night without. The wind had risen; it howled around the corner of the cabin and whistled through the bare limbed trees with an angry scream, carrying with it fine snow that eddied and whirled like a great white cloud of mist. The minute particles sought out every crevice, and flying in at the crack of the door formed a thin line of white until it met its master, heat, then trailed off into a tiny stream of water.

"It's a nasty night," ventured Barrington who sat with his elbows on the table, supporting his chin with his hands. "I am glad I am not out in it."

"You may be," replied Langlois ironically as he poked the fire. "Mr. Barrington," continued the deputy constable, "this is a queer tangle. There are many angles in it that place me in positions apparently contradictory. As fate seems to have thrown us together I think it is but due to you to give you a brief outline of my history so you can better understand the situation, and be able to determine how far you can trust me."

The school savings bank of Public School No. 77 of Borough of Queens, New York City, has had $4,800 deposited in it in the three years of its existence. More than half of this amount is still on deposit either with the school bank or with a State Savings Bank.

Many of the smaller city schools are adopting progressive measures in advance of the larger city systems. Hays City, Kans., has a free dental clinic, free medical inspection, social center, community music, supervised playgrounds, and organized athletics. State and municipality have gone in partnership in Hays City; the entire city school system has been turned over to the Fort Hays Kansas State Normal school for use as a "pedagogical laboratory."

The Children's Story Telling Club

Essilyn Dale Nichols, Editor

1527-35 St., Rock Island, Ill.

Send Manuscript and Letters for this Department Direct to the Editor of this Dept.

My Dear Kiddies:—Your editor thought SURELY she would be traveling when she sent this week's club to the publisher, but—there has been another unavoidable delay in that long talk of journey and to and behold! she is still in the city by the big river. But we will have our club surprise anyway, and I think we will all enjoy it, don't you?

Here is our surprise: We are going to have another CONTEST! Now I can just imagine I hear you all saying: "Why, that isn't a surprise! We are used to contests." But you see, this is going to be a different kind of a contest. It is going to be a DOUBLE CONTEST! What do you think of that? Did you ever hear of a "double contest?" I expect you never did because it is a new kind of contest. It is TWO CONTESTS IN ONE and it's going to be stacks of fun! Now listen, VERY CAREFULLY, while I tell you what you must do in order to join.

FIRST—I want you all to write and tell me what kind of a contest you would like to have published in the Children's Story Telling Club. Write a description of your contest VERY PLAINLY, on a sheet of paper SEPARATE from your letter (if you write one.) Write your name and address REAL PLAIN on the same paper that holds description of your contest, and on the back of the envelope write: "FOR THE DOUBLE CONTEST" so your editor will make no mistake. And to the one sending in the BEST SUGGESTION for a contest will be sent a nice PRIZE, and the contest sent in by the FIRST prize winner will be used as SECOND PART of our double contest.

Won't that be fun?
Also, every other contest that can be used will be used and a prize sent to its writer, and the name and address of every little member sending in a suggestion will be printed in the club.

Now who will be the FIRST prize winner in the FIRST part of our double contest? I will tell you later what the first prize will be; also when the first part of the contest will close.

Don't forget the rules, Dears. Read them carefully, and be sure and write your name and address VERY PLAINLY. Now we will have our letters.

Dear Editor:—I received my membership card and was very pleased to get it. I thank you very much for it. I am sending you quite a long story so I will not write a very long letter.

From a member, Alta Merritt, Marion, Mich.

What My Old Shoe Told Me.
By Alta Merritt.

"Here goes," said a small boy as he picked up an old shoe to toss it in a box of rubbish. "Not so fast, not so fast he heard some one say softly. 'We have been companions so long; do let me tell my story before I am buried out of sight forever.' The puzzled boy turned quickly. No one was in sight. Again he heard the voice; this time it was close to his ear and was saying: "Yes, we have traveled together a long time. How well I remember the first time you tried me on. It was a bright sunny day in June. At first I was the skin of a calf. When the calf was killed I was taken off from it and sent to a tannery. In the tannery I was stretched upon a board and all the fat was scraped off of me. Next I was tanned over a fire of oak bark. As soon as that was finished I was put through a machine which took all the hair off of me. I was then dipped in some oils which made me soft. Next I was sent to a shoe factory. There a man took a large pair of scissors and cut me out after a pattern, with several of my brothers. Then I was made into a little boy's shoe and was packed in a large box with other shoes and sent to a store.

One day a little boy came into the store and after trying on several pairs of shoes decided to take me. Every day he went to the pasture to take the cows and to school with me on. One day he started to school after a hard rain. When he was about half way he came to a large puddle in the middle of the road. Like most boys he wanted to see how deep it was so he walked through it. Of course, he got his feet wet. That night after he had brought the cows home he took me off and put me on the register to dry and feeling very tired he went off upstairs to bed forgetting all about me. I almost suffocated there!

The next morning he came down stairs and tried to put me on, but alas! I was shrunken and hard and was only about half large enough for him. He threw me across the room in disgust (which hurt me very much). Just then his mother, hearing the noise I made in crossing the room, came in to see what was the matter, and the little boy said: "Mother, I put my shoes on the register to dry last night and went to bed and forgot all about them. This morning when I got up and tried to put my shoes on I could not get them on. May I have a new pair?" "Yes," answered his mother. Last spring when the maid was helping to clean house I was thrown over here in the corner, and here I am now.

Alta—What a fine little story writer you are! I am sure all our little members will enjoy reading your story. I am glad you liked your membership card, and I hope you will write again and often.

Dear Editor:—I thought I would try and join the Story Telling Club, so I am writing you a letter to see if it will be printed in the newspaper. I have some pets, a dog and a black cat. My cat has one leg off; it got in a trap. And the dog's name is Watch. We have some horses; their names are Frank and George. I am in the third grade. Our teacher's name is Verna A. Pike. I am ten years old today. I guess I will have to leave off now. Yours truly, Johnnie Onscorn, Grant, Michigan.

Johnnie—I expect you have been looking and looking LOOKING for your letter, haven't you? But it had to wait it's turn, you know, and there was many, many letters ahead of yours but it is better late than never, isn't it, and I am quite sure you are pleased to see it printed now, aren't you? Write again.

Dear Editor:—I thought I would write you a letter and tell you that I would like to join the Story Telling Club. I am ten years old. I go to school, a quarter of a mile. I like my teacher. I have two brothers and two sisters. We have two horses named Bessie and Gyp. We have a cat named Betty. I live in Bridgton. Our school is named Cooley school. Yours truly, Pearl Halverson, Grant Michigan.

Pearl—Thank you for a very nice little letter. I am glad to welcome you as a member of our club and hope you will write many letters for us.

Dear Editor:—I have heard that other boys and girls have been writing to you. I would like to join the club. The weather has been very warm. I am only ten years old but I can write a letter. I am going to school and I am in the fourth grade, and I have five studies: reading, arithmetic, grammar, geography and physiology. Our school is going to be out the last of April. Yours truly, Walter Frantz, Grant, Mich.

Walter—Of course you can write a letter and a fine one too. I hope you will write other letters for the club. We like to have our little members write to us.

Dear Editor:—May I become a member of your Story Telling Club? I am 12 years old, am in the fifth grade and like to go to school very much. My teacher's name is Miss Ziegweid. I have a sister and three brothers. Well, this is all for this time. Yours truly, Margie Carmichael, Sentinel Butte, North Dakota.

Margie—I was glad to print your very nice letter and glad to send you a membership card which I hope you received. I used to live in South Dakota. South Dakota joins North Dakota, you know; in fact, the two Dakotas used to be one big territory until it was divided into states. Write again Dear.

Dear Editor:—I was very glad to see my letter in print and I thank you very much for the membership card. I thought it was very nice. Here are some riddles for the members to guess: 1—What is the difference between a new penny and an old dime? 2—What does a lawyer do when he dies? 3—How do you spell candy with two letters? 4—When is a ship not a ship? 5—When does a farmer act with great rudeness towards his corn? 6—What animal fell from the clouds? Well, I'm afraid my letter is too long now so I will close for this time. Your friend, Helen E. Perry, Saugatuck, Michigan.

Helen—Thank you for a very interesting letter. I think I received another letter from you yesterday which will be printed in its turn. I know our little members will have great fun guessing your riddles, Helen. Riddles are interesting, I think, although I must confess that I am a rather poor hand at guessing them.

Dear Editor:—I have been reading the letters and like them very much, so I thought I would like to join. I am twelve years old and am in the seventh grade. I go a mile to school. I have three brothers and two sisters. I will be glad to receive my membership card. I have a cat and a dog for pets. I would like to win a prize so am sending the words for the Missing Word Contest: 1 years, 2 biddy, 3 small, 4 side, 5 feet, 6 hide, 7 saft, 8 make, 9 cluck, 10 head, 11 frightful, 12 pull. Your friend, Eva Kinsey, Farmerville, Ohio.

Eva, Dear—THIS letter containing the missing words came too late for the contest, but it seems to me that you sent a list in time for the contest and that I sent you a prize. As I right? I am sure that I sent you a membership card; did you receive it? If you did NOT write and tell me about it and I will send you another one at ONCE.

Dear Editor:—My name is Pansy Butler. I am nine years old and I go to school every day and I take the paper that has your Story Telling Club in, and I received the card you sent me. It was nice. I live two squares from the school house. We have four churches in Jonesboro and I go to Sunday school every Sunday morning. We have a big rubber factory where everything is made that can be made of rubber; auto tires, bicycle tires, hot water bottles and all kinds of tires and all kinds of insulated wire. We have two glass houses in our town. We have two restaurants one dry goods store, five grocery stores, three barber shops, two blacksmith shops, one bakery, one hardware store, one milliner store and two drug stores, and no saloons in our town. I have three little sisters that are too small to go to school. I want you to put this in the club as I am going to be a member. Pansy Butler, Jonesboro, Indiana.

I was very glad to print your letter in the club, Pansy; I like to print letters from our little members, ESPECIALLY nice interesting ones like yours is. I hope you will write often, Dear.

Dear Editor:—I am nine years old and in the fourth grade at school. I spent Thursday and Friday and came back Saturday morning from my grandpa's farm. I like the farm. I would like a membership card. Good bye, Marion Whitaker, White Cloud, Mich.

Marion—I sent you a membership card which I hope you received. I expect you had a lovely time out at your grandpa's farm, didn't you? I like the farm too, and hope some day to live on a farm.

Dear Editor:—I thought I would write and tell you what I want if I win one of the higher prizes in the contest. I would like a book because I have so many dolls. I have not seen my letter in which I have my Missing Words in the paper yet but suppose I will see it pretty soon. Now if this letter and my story are not too long I would like to see them in print. Here is the story:

THE LITTLE GIRL OF THE FOREST

By Norine Bragg.

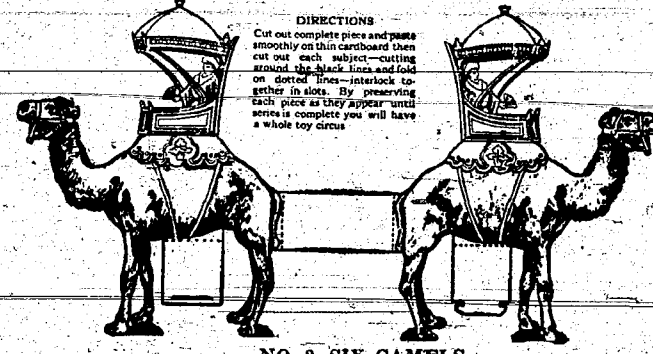

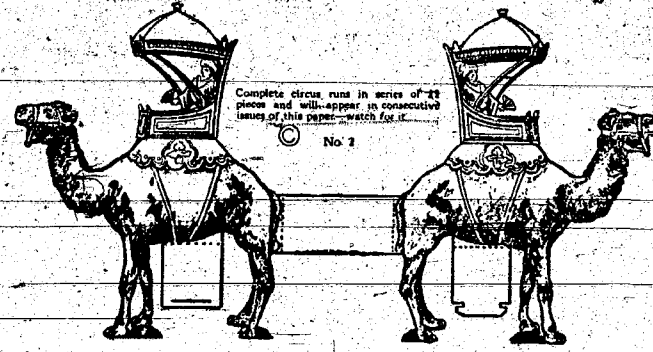

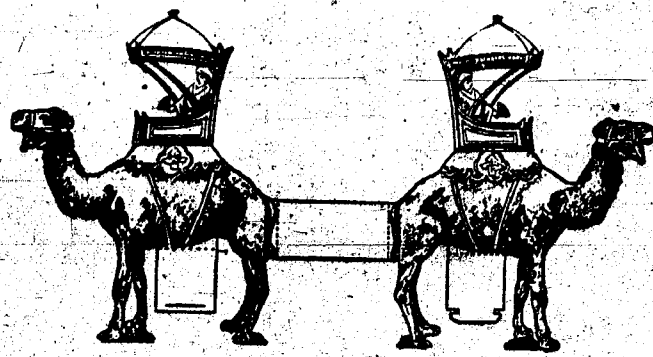

Once there was a little girl whose name was Alice. She lived in the forest with her grandfather, and they loved each other. They were very poor and had but a rude hut to live in, but they were always happy. Alice liked to drive the goats up to the mountains to pasture and her grandfather always used to let her. But one time she got lost, and some kind people took her and she told them about her grandfather and her home. Then these people who found little Alice took her and put her in a good school and cared for her grandfather, and they are still happy.

This is the end of the story. Yours truly, Norine E. Bragg, Caledonia, Mich.

Norine—Your story was very nice indeed and I was glad to print it. I expect you have been watching for it a good while, haven't you? But there were so many ahead of yours, you see, and each one must wait its turn. I was real sorry I could not send a FIRST prize to all the little prize

Dear Editor:—I received the membership card and thank you very much. I like to read the letters from other little people. I have one sister, her name is Cecil. I like my teacher very well; her name is Miss Burns. I like to go to school. I have sent my Missing Words and hope I receive a prize. I have a kitten; its name is Snowball. Hoping to see my letter in print I will close. Your little friend, Phillis Neilson, Hart, Michigan.

BOYS AND GIRLS PAINTING CLUB

M. Elizabeth Harper, Editor

248 Lexington Ave., N. W., Grand Rapids, Mich.

Send your name in if interested in painting and want to become a member of the club.

Dear Little Friends:—

This week we will paint a picture of a lake and woods on the other side of the lake, also a pretty little grove on its side.

First paint the sky a light blue, and where the lines are in the blue, use quite a lot of white so as to make it look like clouds, the woods behind the lake near the water use a dark green, and at the top of the woods make it a light green.

The water in the lake paint it blue, where the shadows are paint it darker. The grass in the grove paint it green, making it a darker green under the trees, paint the foliage of the trees a nice thick foliage on every tree, try to make the foliage look like real leaves on the trees.

I have several paintings without names on them, one of "Spring" one of "Summer" from Bellevue, Mich., also two with the initials of L. A. L. The picture is of the Frog, the other one is of the two children with their kittens. Kindly send in your names if you want your work marked and your work returned to you.

I wish to call your attention to the following. Be very careful and not get the Boys and Girls Story Telling Club mixed with the Boys and Girls Painting Club; some of the little girls have sent their paintings to the editor of the Boys and Girls Story Telling Club, and through the kindness of the editor of that club, she sent them to me, which I appreciate very much. If you will be very careful it will save your editors a lot of extra work.

I am sure you will paint a very beautiful picture of this lake and woods. Make your standing at least 75 (as per your membership card.) Those that have not received their cards as yet, send as soon as possible, as it is to your loss if you do not.

"HORS DE COMBAT" FROM CONCUSSION OF BIG GUNS.

To what extent the life and destiny of a nation depends upon the strength and efficiency of its navy, has been impressed so deeply during the past few months, even upon those who have paid no heed to it heretofore, that the big feature to be presented by Lyman H. Howe at the Temple Theatre, next Thursday, Aug. 12th, assumes an importance that can hardly be over-estimated. Every inch of the film was photographed not only by authority of Secretary of the Navy, Mr. Daniels, but with the most enthusiastic co-operation of the commanders and officers of the fleet.

There is something irresistibly fascinating about these mighty dreadnaughts. It is a fascination that springs from a sense of their untold power which hurls a shell weighing over half a ton for mile after mile and then puts it through ten inch armor plate. These scenes were obtained when the men behind the camera "covered" every move of the men behind the big guns and what happened when those same big guns "spoke" in unison—"salvos"—they call them. Veritably the sea and all it contained seemed to tremble and quake. At all events nothing could withstand the shocks—not even the cameras, despite all precautions and devices employed to make them "rock-steady." Consequently when the big guns boomed, the films recorded not merely the smoke of battle-practice but—true to life—also its shock and quaver. Splendid views are presented of this very serious phase of life aboard super-dreadnaughts, because the operators located their cameras in the fighting tops of the gridiron masts and from that commanding position they pointed their cameras on the decks beneath them while the gun crews were manoeuvring and pointing the big guns at the moving targets miles away. Not the least interesting is the strict discipline and precision which governs every movement of every man during the loading and firing of the guns on the turrets fore and aft. While one camera man was filming the whole procedure from above, another was equally busy down on the main deck getting pictures at very close range of the big guns in action. It nearly cost him his life. When the big guns "spoke" the concussion and suction was so powerful that it knocked him 20 feet along the deck.

Howe travelers will also visit what, at first sight, might well be regarded as a governmental edifice, museum or university. Indeed it well deserves to be considered as a university that stands for all that is progressive and practical, rather than for theory. In reality it is a manufacturing plant of vast proportions and one that owes its great success to the initiative, increased efficiency and consummate skill and organization of an army of over 6,000 men and women. It is the plant of the National cash register company at Dayton, Ohio, and the innumerable processes, operations and machines employed in manufacturing the product as shown in this reproduction are of absorbing interest.

Native life in the Philippines is another feature of remarkable interest showing the strange customs of different tribes and how these same tribes have been led to civilization by Uncle Sam. Unique customs, weird scenes, strange dances and the swift march of progress are all vividly illustrated. It is an astonishing object lesson showing how these strange people have been redeemed from savagery. One portion, in particular, was secured at great personal risk, showing the last head-hunt which ever occurred in Bontoc. This portion never has been and never can be duplicated as head-hunting has now ceased.
