EXPLORING THE AIR

New Device May Be Capable of Reaching the Moon.

Exploration of the Higher Levels of the Air is Believed to Be Entirely Feasible.

Washington.—A method of sending apparatus to the hitherto unexplored higher layers of the air, to the regions beyond the earth's atmosphere, and even as far as the moon itself, is described by Prof. Robert H. Goddard of Clark college in a recent publication for the Smithsonian Institution at Washington. The new apparatus is a multiple-charge high efficiency rocket of an entirely new design.

"The great scientific value of Professor Goddard's experiments," says the announcement, "lies in the possibility of sending recording apparatus to moderate and extreme altitudes within the earth's atmosphere. The nature of the higher levels of the air has for a long time been a subject of much speculation as to their chemical composition, temperature, electrical nature, density, ozone contents, etc.

"The highest level that has ever been reached up to the present time with recording instruments is about 15 miles, accomplished with a free balloon. As the earth's atmosphere extends some 200 miles out, there is a great unknown region, knowledge of which would greatly benefit the science of meteorology.

"The balloon with its recording apparatus requires several hours to ascend to its highest altitude, drifts horizontally for a considerable period of time and may come down, at a great distance from its starting point. Its recovery by the sender depends on the chance of its descent being noticed and on the willingness of the finder to return it. Thus it may be days or weeks before the record taken is made available.

"On the other hand, the new rocket apparatus would go straight up and come straight down, the whole operation probably consuming less than half an hour. Thus daily observations at any desired altitude for use in weather prediction could be easily taken.

"The time of ascent of the rocket will be very short, only six and one-half minutes being required to carry the apparatus up 230 miles, somewhere near the outer limit of the earth's atmosphere. The too rapid descent of the recording instruments could easily be checked by the use of a small parachute.

"Professor Goddard is at present, under a grant from the Smithsonian Institution, perfecting the reloading mechanism whereby successive charges are inserted in the explosion chamber during its upward flight, and it is hoped shortly to be able to demonstrate the practicability and value of this new type of rocket."

Hubby Quit Hotel With Wife's Wearing Apparel, Following Quarrel on Honeymoon Trip.

Atlanta, Ga.—The proprietor of a hotel tells the story of a clothesless bride whom he asserts was a guest at his hotel for several hours, until she could procure habiliments from a friend.

According to the hotel man a lover-like young couple registered at his hotel and the next day guests heard a quarrel in progress in the bridal suite. Soon afterward the husband came downstairs with two grips, acknowledged he was short of funds and left his wife's toilet set as security for their room rent, after stating his wife would be down soon.

Shortly after his departure his wife called up, wanting to know where her husband was. Upon being told of his absence she explained he had taken with him all of her clothing except an embroidered apron and a pair of shoes.

It was hours before she could reach a friend and procure wearing apparel suitable for the street.

Kin of Famous Nurse Is Victim of Thief
London.—Miss Florence Nightingale Shore, a second cousin of England's "Lady of the Lamp," is near death from wounds inflicted by an unknown person while she was traveling by train from London to Rexhill.

Miss Shore, who did distinguished nursing service during the war, is about fifty years of age.

When the train arrived at Lewes, Miss Shore was found in an unconscious condition with a wound in her head. Her money and railway tickets had been taken.

Miss Shore has not regained consciousness and so far no clue was found to the supposed assailant.

Must Not Sell Unborn Babe.
In the face of threatened action by the juvenile department of the superior court at San Francisco Hubert Barnett has abandoned his reported intention of selling his unborn baby but he insists that the expected little one will be given to whoever may wish to adopt it.

It is admitted that the court cannot prevent the father from giving the child away for adoption.

YOU CAN'T FOOL THE MOTHERS.
No one remedy would stand as a lead for so many years as has Foley's Honey and Tar if it could not be depended upon to relieve coughs, colds and croup. It heals and soothes, eases hoarseness, stops that coughing that strains the whole body and breaks colds and coughs. Children like it. Contains no opiates.—Hite's Drug Store.

MYSTERY!

Who does not love it? When Macbeth said: "Canst thou not minister to a mind diseased?" he could have had his answer and his remedy had there been a school of mystery and detective fiction in that day. There is no better medicine for young and old than a good mystery story.

William Johnston

the author, skilled in this class of writing, has transplanted the atmosphere and weird happenings of an ancient castle to ultra modern surroundings. He has located the mystery in that most unusual of all places for such an abode—a fashionable New York apartment house. It challenges the best detective, legal and newspaper brains in the unraveling. It will challenge yours, unless you become too anxious and turn to the closing chapter. Do not spoil your pleasure in that manner, but follow it through from the opening installment. It is
