THREE BELLS SCHOOL RAISES FUND FOR EDUCATIONAL BLDG.

In order to help raise money to pay off the indebtedness on the educational building put upon the fair grounds last year, a box social was held at the Three Bells School.

The fore part of the evening was spent in playing games after which the children rendered a program. Miss Stewart was present and gave a very interesting and helpful talk on educational matters. Following this the boxes were auctioned off. Mr. Will Gaunt very ably acted as auctioneer and twenty-three dollars and twenty cents was raised from the sale of the boxes. The school board allowed the children five dollars for piling twenty cords of wood in the shed. This was donated toward the fund making a total of $28.20.

Three Bells has every reason to be proud as Miss Stewart told us this was more than was raised by any of the other schools. Hurrah for Three Bells!

EAST JORDAN OVERWHELMS BOYNE CITY

Baseball Team Wins One-Sided Game In Neighboring City Last Friday.

The East Jordan High School baseball team found the Boyne City High School team easy picking on last Friday afternoon in a game that was rather one-sided, the local boys winning 18 to 8. The local team was represented principally by John Gunderson, who proceeded to strike out 22 Boyne City players in the course of an afternoon's pastime.

During the latter portion of the game he eased up a bit and permitted husky youths from our neighboring city to smite the ball on four different occasions, to regions where the outfield were not. But aside from this the most the Boyne batters were able to do was to stir up the air.

The East Jordan High School team outside of the pitcher and two or three other players isn't to brag about. They need experience, seasoning and pep. They still have a hard schedule and if the players round into form as they ought they will be able to come out victorious. Otherwise it may be necessary for Gunderson to strike out the whole lot in order to win a ball game.

Boyne plays a return game at East Jordan next Friday, May 21st.

ONE MORE STANDARD SCHOOL IN CHARLEVOIX COUNTY.

May 7, 1920, which was Arbor Day was held at the Rock Elm School with appropriate exercises. Rev. J. Duffan of East Jordan gave a splendid address entitled, "The Planting of the Tree."

The comparisons of life that were brought out were very interesting to everyone present.

Mothers' and Fathers' Day was observed. Last but not least Miss Stewart gave one of her fine and well known addresses before presenting the Standard Plate.

It has been five years since Standardization was talked about and considered in this district. The people here want

CLEAN-UP!

The Governor of the State of Michigan has, by proclamation, set aside the week of May 17th as "Clean-Up Week."

The CITY OF EAST JORDAN firmly believes in a clean city and desires to do everything possible to make East Jordan a clean, healthy, livable city. To this end all citizens are urgently requested to clean up their premises and to place all rubbish in boxes, barrels, or other containers and to place these boxes, etc., on the street where they will be readily accessible to conveyances furnished by the city. This rubbish will then be disposed of by the city. All citizens are warned not to place loose rubbish on the city streets as this will not be picked up by the city and persons responsible for placing it there will be prosecuted.

Additional warning. Do not at any time during the year place rubbish along the public highway in the city of East Jordan, or make dumping grounds out of private or public property other than that designated as such, under penalty of the law.

All owners of live stock within the city limits of the city of East Jordan are hereby notified that the state health laws require prompt disposal of all manure and that it be placed in covered containers until disposed of. A custom has developed in this city of piling manure in the alleys and leaving it to accumulate. This will not be tolerated longer. See that it is removed by the end of clean-up week as the health officer has been given instructions to proceed under the law against all those who do not strictly observe the law in this respect.

BY ORDER OF THE CITY COMMISSION of the City of East Jordan, Mich.

BUY A FARM!

At the present time a great many people are leaving the farms and going to the city. The attractive power drawing them from the farms is the reported high wages. The inevitable result of such a condition will be a shortage of food supplies and a corresponding increase of prices. There will be more to feed but fewer people laboring in the fields raising food products.

It is well to remember that when there is any shortage in any of the necessities of life the price advances out of proportion to the shortage. Hence it is almost a certainty that farm products are going to be unusually high for a considerable period of time. At the same time so many are leaving the farms and so many farms are being disposed of that the price of farm lands are not advancing so rapidly. Thus a situation is created which makes a farm an excellent investment. Under a period of high prices it is easy to pay for such a farm and if a period of depression comes a farm is an excellent thing to hold and reserve to fall back on. Any man who owns a farm has an independent means of existence and can survive in spite of prohibitive prices, strikes or business stagnation.

To Vote on Twp. Unit

Special Election Called in Wilson Township, June 3rd.

The township board of Wilson township met at the town hall on Friday, May 7, to consider the petitions submitted to the clerk, asking that a special election be called to submit to the school electors the proposition of forming a single school district in Wilson township. They found that more than enough signatures had been submitted to make the calling of such an election necessary, and have posted notices calling this election on June 3, at the town hall.

The township unit would do away with all district boundary lines making it possible for each child to go to the nearest school without the payment of tuition and without other permission, except that of the township school board. Instead of five school boards in different parts of the township, one school board of five members would be elected, and these officers would have the powers of the Board of Education in a graded school district. They would have the right to consider where it is best to transport and where it is best to keep the one-room schools open.

While it would not make possible a consolidated school, except with the consent of the school electors at a later election, it would at the present time equalize the tax rate throughout the entire township; lessen the expense of the conduct of school affairs and put the township in shape for any further movements that may be desirable. There seems to be a big demand for a change of some sort, and the big majority of electors who signed the petition seem to think that this is the change most needed at this time.

The following resolution was offered by Commissioner Gidley who moved its adoption: acceded by Commissioner Porter

Whereas, West Water Street from the end of the present cement pavement on West Water Street to the western boundary line of the city of East Jordan, on what is now known as the East Jordan-Ellsworth road, is in a bad condition and in need of repair, and

Whereas, said city is unable to make the necessary repairs thereon, and will be unable to make proper improvement of said street for some time to come, and

Whereas, said street forms part of a highway passing through the city of East Jordan to the city limits of which the said highway has already been taken over by the County Road Commissioners of said county, therefore,

Resolved, that the said Board of County Road Commissioners be and hereby are requested to take over the above described street as a part of the county roads of Charlevoix County.

Further resolved, that upon the adoption of said street as county roads by said Board of County Road Commissioners, that the city of East Jordan release and give over to said Board of County Road Commissioners all further control and responsibility over the same.

Adopted by the City Commission of the city of East Jordan, on the 3rd Day of May, A. D. 1920, by an aye and nay vote as follows:

Ayes: Wilson, Gidley and Porter.
 Nays: None.

On motion by Porter, meeting was adjourned.

OTIS J. SMITH,
City Clerk.

Pasteurizing Milk.

The milk in the bottles may be placed in a boiler in which cold water comes up to the necks of the bottles. The boiler is then placed on the stove and heated until the water reaches a temperature of 145 degrees Fahrenheit as determined by the thermometer, where it is maintained for 30 minutes. The bottles are then removed, cooled in running water, and kept sealed until the milk is ready to serve. Pasteurization kills disease-causing germs.

Bath in West Africa.

The South of West Africa makes elaborate preparations for a real bath by digging a hole in the ground, in which he puts seven or eight bushels of peppers, cardamom seeds and such other things as he can get, and then he pours in a lot of boiling hot water. After he gets in a light frame covered with clay is put over the hole to keep in the steam. After hours of steaming the bather emerges and is washed off with cold water, then he goes to a stream to get a drink of water, when he goes to the party drinking and goes to bed.

2ND MISSION COMES FROM PHILIPPINES

Body Headed by Senate President Quezon Reiterates Demand for Independence.

That the Filipino people are in earnest in their demand for immediate independence is indicated by the coming to the United States of a second Philippine mission to work for independence. Coincident with this announcement the War Department received a cable from Manila stating that the all-Filipino legislature had adopted resolutions reiterating its plea for immediate independence.

The second mission, like the first, is composed of the leading men of the islands and will work in the United States not only for immediate independence, but also to bring about "better understanding, greater confidence and closer economic relations between the United States and the Philippines."

The mission is again headed by Manuel L. Quezon, president of the Philippine Senate, who is well-known in America, having been for six years resident commissioner to the United States. Mr. Quezon and the Hon. Sergio Osmena, Speaker of the Philippine House of Representatives and Vice President of the Council of State, are the leaders of the Nacionalista party, which has been in power since 1907.

Senate President Manuel L. Quezon.

While Speaker Osmena is not so well known in the United States as Quezon, he is considered one of the ablest men in the islands. Senate President Quezon, recently referred to, Osmena as "the greatest Filipino since Rizal."

The personal relations between Osmena and Quezon are probably without a parallel in modern politics. They have been the leading political figures in the islands for 12 years, yet there has never been the slightest indication of rivalry between them. Throughout their college life as well as their long political service each has refused to be a candidate for any position that the other aspired to.

During the years Quezon was the Philippine delegate in the American Congress he won the esteem and confidence of both the Republican and Democratic sides of the chamber. Whenever he spoke he was assured of a good attendance. One of the official short-hand reporters once declared Quezon used the purest English of any member of the House.

Osmena, as president of the Nacionalista party, is the leader of the national movement for independence. "Osmena is the premier de facto of the Philippines," said a leading Filipino journalist, now in America. "A very conscientious and tireless worker, thorough and persistent, a genius for grasping the big features as well as the smallest details of public affairs, cool headed, quiet by temperament and education, a deep thinker, an eloquent speaker, a polished writer, a keen observer of men—such is Osmena."

Both Osmena and Quezon have been confident advocates of Philippine independence, yet when the occasion demanded it they have never hesitated to champion the cause of America's good friends in the Philippine people.

FIRST LASSIE AND SECOND CONVERT STILL IN SALVATION ARMY SERVICE

Commandant Emma Westbrook, member of the first Salvation Army contingent to land in America. (Insert) Louis Petain, the Army's second American convert.

Veterans both, Commandant Emma Westbrook of Indianapolis, 70, member of the first contingent of Salvation Army lassies to invade this country, and Sergeant-Major Louis Petain, 67, of Brooklyn, second convert made by the struggling little band in America, will be active workers in presenting the Army's 1920 appeal for support of its Home Service Fund to be made throughout the country May 10 to 20.

These two workers have seen the organization grow from the veriest tyro in the field of service and relief in 1850 to the powerful influence that it is today. They have never left its service and entertain no thought of doing so. They want to help raise the $10,000,000 necessary to carry the work through another year.

Their enthusiasm is boundless, as it well may be in people who have seen such an inauspicious beginning in the face of jeering and antagonistic crowds result in the universal respect and love held for the Salvation Army today.

The difference in the figure of the coming appeal and the mite collected in their tambourines in the old days demonstrates concretely the difference that 40 years have brought.

Louis Petain is particularly jubilant over the transformation that he has seen and remarks epigrammatically: "You can't buy confidence, sonny. You've got to earn it."

Commandant Westbrook is a traveling inspector of corps in Indiana, while Sergeant-Major Petain is still an active worker with the Brooklyn Post No. 1.

"Ash Barrel Jimmy," the Army's first American convert, died a few years ago. He was sentenced to serve six months with the Army by an exasperated judge who had given up hope of reforming the drunken "remittance man." Jimmy decided voluntarily to make it a life sentence and stayed with the organization until his death. He attained the rank of captain and served others as the Salvationists before had served him.

TORNADO AGAIN BRINGS SALVATION ARMY DOUGHNUTS INTO ASCENDANCY

A forge pressed into service in the wake of the southern tornado. (Below) Salvation Army workers amid the ruins of La Grange, Ga.

The achievement of the Salvation Army in being the first relief organization on the job in many of the Georgia and Alabama towns struck by the tornado March 28 was far from setting a precedent. In previous disasters it has often succeeded in reaching the smitten territory immediately and has assumed the leadership in rescue and relief work.

The Army had charge of the food supply in the tidal disaster at Corpus Christi, Tex., in 1918, and took the lead in all the work following the explosion at Halifax, Nova Scotia, during the war, while in the Dayton flood of 1913 Army workers in Columbus and other Ohio towns were among the first to get food to the marooned. Relief expeditions were sent to Galveston and San Francisco, while the workers stationed in both these places did yeoman service. One hundred and forty Salvationists lost their lives when the Empress of Ireland sank in the Gulf of St. Lawrence in 1914. Testimony of other passengers shows that this high mortality was caused by the officers voluntarily giving their life belts to others.

The work done after the March tornado in the South has received high praise from the authorities in the cities helped because of its promptness and effectiveness. The Salvationists' supplies of food, clothing, and bedding filled a crying want. Forges were used for stoves, and the doughnut came into its own again amid such scenes of destruction as saw its ascendancy in France.

Work such as this is supported from the Home Service fund which makes possible all the Army's activities in America and for which the organization will make an appeal for $10,000,000 from May 10 to 20.

The Name Taffy.
The name Taffy is a nickname for the whole Welsh people. The word is simply Davy (David), pronounced with aspiration; Sawney (Alexander) the most common Scotch name; Pat (Patrick) the most common Irish name; and John (John Bull) the most common English name. Each is used to designate the race or nationality to which it belongs. A similar case is that of Brother Jonathan, once commonly used to designate the people of the United States, but now largely superseded by Uncle Sam.

Memoranda in Glass.
A reader tells us that with the use of gum tragacanth, allowing a week for drying, two sheets of glass can be joined with a sheet of paper between them, without the slightest staining of the paper. It is suggested that this provides a new and useful means of making paper weights and other glass articles with calendars, etc., imbedded in them. The gum, while still wet, appears to have stained the paper; but every trace of this disappears as the drying out proceeds.—Scientific American.

To make transparent paper, dilute one part of castor oil with two or three parts of alcohol, dip the paper into it and hang it in the open air to dry.

"Now, then, go on over that an' sit down," continued Lacy. "Maybe, if yer wait long enough, that partner of yours might blow in. Come on, boys, let's liquor. Big Jim Westcott has his claws cut, and it's Beaton's turn to spend a little."

Westcott sat quietly in the chair as they fled out, then took the pipe from his pocket and filled it slowly. He realized his defeat, his helplessness, but his mind was already busy with the future.

CHAPTER V.

A Night and a Morning.

Stella Donovan never forgot the miseries of her first night in Haskell. When old man Timmons finally left her, after placing the flaring lamp on a chair, and went pattering back down the bare hall, she glanced shudderingly about at her unpleasant surroundings, none too pleased with the turn of events.

The bed-clothing, once turned back and inspected, was of a nature to prevent the girl from disrobing; but finally she lay down, seeking such rest as was possible, after turning the flickering flames of the lamp as low as she dared, and then finally blowing it out altogether. Her thoughts, never still, wandered over the events of the evening—the arrival at Haskell station, the strange meeting with Westcott, and the sudden revelation that he was the partner of Frederick Cavendish.

The big, good-natured miner had interested her from the first as representing a perfect type of her preconceived ideal of the real westerner. She had liked the firm character of his face, the quiet, thoughtful way in which he acted, the whole unobtrusive bearing of the man. Already he had awakened her trust; she felt convinced that if she needed friendship, advice, even actual assistance, there was one whom she could implicitly trust.

She was young and she awoke rested and refreshed, in spite of the fact that her body ached at first from the discomfort of the cot. She stared about at the bare, board walls, the bullet-scarred mirror, the cracked pitcher, before she could fully reassure herself; then stepped upon the disreputable rug and crossed to the open window.

She straightened up, emitting a swift breath of delight, as her wide-open eyes surveyed the marvelous scene of mingled loveliness and grandeur. The stream, curving like a great snake, gleamed amid the acres of green grass, its swift waters sparkling in the sun. Beyond, seemingly at no distance at all, yet bordered by miles of turf and desert, the patches of vivid green interspersed with the darker coloring of spruce, and the outcropping of brown rocks, the towering peaks of a great mountain-chain swept up into the clear blue of the sky, black almost to their summits, which were dazzling with the white of unmelted snow.

The girl's eyes dwelt lovingly for some time on the far-flung line of mountains, before she finally released the green shade, and shut out the scene. Her toilet was a matter of but a few minutes, although she took occasion to slip on a fresh waist, and to brighten up the shoes, somewhat soiled by the tramp through the thick dust the evening before. Indeed, it was a very charming young woman, her dress and appearance quite sufficiently eastern, who finally ventured out into the rough hall, and down the single flight of stairs. The hotel was silent, except for the heavy breathing of a sleeper in one of the rooms she passed, and a melancholy-looking Chinaman, apparently engaged in chamber work at the further end of the hall.

She passed out into the bright sunshine, and clear mountain air. The board walk ended at the corner of the hotel, but a narrow cinder path continued down that side of the street for some distance. Through the rude window at the post office the clerk pushed a plain manila envelope into her outstretched hand. Evidently from the thinness of the letter, Parrish had but few instructions to give and, thrusting the unopened missive into her handbag, she retraced her steps to her room.

There she yawned a startled gasp. The suitcase which she had left closed upon the floor was open—wide open—its contents disarranged. Some one had rummaged it thoroughly. And Miss Donovan knew that she was under suspicion.

she was in Haskell, and consequently, if any vague suspicion had been aroused as to her presence in that community, the searchers had discovered no proof by this rifling of her bag.

Farriss' letter contained nothing of interest except the fact that Enright had also left for the West. He instructed her to be on the lookout for him in Haskell, added a line or two of suggestions, and ordered her to proceed with caution, as her quest might prove to be a dangerous one.

Miss Donovan thought rapidly and clearly, more than ordinarily eager to solve this mystery. It was Frederick Cavendish who had formerly been the partner of Jim Westcott. This was why no answer had come to the telegrams and letters the latter had sent East. What had become of them? Had they fallen into the hands of these others? Was this the true reason for Beaton's presence in Haskell, and also why the La Rue woman had been hastily sent for?

Westcott's discovery was not even proven yet; its value had not been definitely established; it was of comparatively small importance contrasted with the known wealth left by the murdered man in the East. No, there must be some other cause for this sudden visit to Colorado. But what? She gave little credence to the vague suspicions advanced by Yelais; that was altogether too impossible, too melodramatic, this thought of the substitution of some other body. No doubt there had been a crime committed, its object the attainment of money, but without question the cost had been the life of Frederick Cavendish.

The harsh clang of the dinner-bell from the porch below aroused her to a sense of hunger.

Ten minutes later Timmons, guiltless of any coat, but temporarily laying aside his pipe as a special act of courtesy, escorted her into the dining room and seated her at a table between the two front windows. Evidently this was reserved for the more distinguished guests—traveling men and those paying regular day rates—for its only other occupant was an individual in a check suit.

A waitress, a red-haired, slovenly girl, with an impediment in her speech, took her order and disappeared in the direction of the kitchen, and Miss Donovan discreetly lifted her eyes to observe the man sitting nearly opposite. He was not prepossessing, yet she instantly recognized his type, and the probability that he would address her if the slightest opportunity occurred.

The waitress spread out the various dishes before her, and she glanced at them hopelessly. As she lifted her gaze she met that of her vis-a-vis fairly, and managed to smile.

"Some chuck," he said in an attempt at good-fellowship, "but not to remind you of the Waldorf-Astoria."

"I should say not," she answered, testing one of her dishes cautiously. "But why associate me with New York?"

"You can't hide those things in a joint like this. When did you leave New York?"

"Oh, more than a week ago," she lied gracefully.

He stroked his moustache.

"Then I suppose you haven't much late New York news? Nothing startling, I mean?"

"No; only what has been reported in the western papers. I do not recall anything particularly interesting." She dropped her eyes to her plate and busied herself with a piece of tough beef. "The usual murders, of course, and things of that kind."

"There was a moment's silence, then the man laughed as though slightly ill at ease. "Whatever brought a girl like you down in here?"

She smiled.

"I'm a feature writer; I'm doing a series on the West for Scribblers," she told him. "I visit New Mexico next, but I'm after something else besides a description of mountains and men; I'm also going to hunt up an old friend interested in mining, who told me if ever I got out this way I must look him up. He was continually singing this valley's charms, and so here I am. And I'm planning a great surprise on him. And, of course, I'm literally drinking in atmosphere—to say nothing of local color, which seems mostly to be men and prospects."

The man opposite wet his lips with his tongue in an effort to speak, but the girl was busy eating and apparently paid no attention. Her calm indifference convinced him that her words were entirely innocent, and his audacity returned.

"Well," he ventured, "do you agree with this prospector friend?"

"The scenery, you mean?" glancing up brightly. "Why, it is wonderful, of course, and I am not at all sorry having made the journey, although it hardly compares with Tennessee Pass or Silver Plume. Still, you know, it will be pleasant to tell Mr. Cavendish when I go back that I was here."

He choked and his face seemed to whiten suddenly.

"Mr. Cavendish?" he gasped. "Of New York? Not the one that was killed?"

It was her turn to stare across the table, her eyes wide with horror, which she simulated excellently.

"Killed! Has a man by that name been killed lately in New York? It was Frederick Cavendish I referred to." Her pretense was admirable.

He was silent, realizing he had already said too much.

"Tell me," she insisted, "has he been killed? How do you know?"

Her earnestness, her perfect acting, convinced him. It was a mere coincidence, he thought, that this name should have cropped up between them, but, now that it had, he must explain the whole affair so as not to arouse suspicion. He cleared his throat and compelled his eyes to meet those across the table.

"Well, I don't know much about it, only what I read," he began, feeling for words. "He was found dead in his apartments—apparently killed by a burglar who had rifled his safe."

She sat with her chin in the palm of one hand, watching him from beneath the shadow of lowered lashes, but his eyes were bent downward at his plate.

"Are you through?" he questioned suddenly.

"Yes; this—this awful news has robbed me of all appetite."

Neither had noticed Westcott as he entered the room, but his first glance about revealed their presence, and without an instant of hesitancy the big miner crossed the room and approached the table where the two were sitting.

"I hope I do not interrupt," he said pleasantly. "I had reason to suppose you were unacquainted with Mr. Beaton here."

"What reason?" her surprised tone slightly indignant.

"I believe the gentleman so informed me. It chanced that we had a slight controversy last night."

"Over me?"

"Over his curiosity regarding you—who you were; your presence here. I informed him that it was none of his business, and that if he mentioned your name in my presence again there was liable to be trouble. We scrapped it out."

"You—you scrapped it out? You mean there was a fight over me—a barroom squabble over me?"

"Not in a barroom; in the hotel office. Beaton drew a gun, and I had to slug him."

"But the affair originated over me—my name was brought into it?" she in-the whole world was suddenly turned upside down. So she really belonged with that outfit, did she? Well, it was a good joke on him.

Before he finished his meal his mood had changed to tolerant amusement. That the girl had deliberately deceived him was plain enough, revealed now in both her manner and words. It was clear she really belonged to the Lacy crowd, and had no more use for him.

He could scarcely comprehend the situation; how a girl of her apparent refinement and gentility could ever be attracted by a rough, brutal type such as Ned Beaton so evidently was. There surely must be some other cause drawing them together. Yet, whatever it was, there was no doubt but that he had been very properly snubbed. Her words stung; yet it was the manner in which she had looked at him and swept past at Beaton's side which hurt the most. Oh, well, an enemy more or less made small difference in his life; he would laugh at it and forget. She had made her choice of companionship, and it was just as well, probably, that the affair had gone no further before he discovered the sort of girl she really was.

Westcott reached this decision and the outer office at the same time, exchanged a careless word or two with Timmons, and finally purchased a cigar and retired to one corner to peruse an old newspaper. It was not so easy to read, however, for the news failed to interest or keep his mind from wandering widely.

Who was this Beaton, and what connection could he have with Bill Lacy's gang? The row last night had revealed a mutual interest between the men, but what was its nature? Lacy's purpose he believed he understood to some extent—a claim that it was an extension of the La Rosita vein which Westcott had tapped in his recent discovery. But he had no personal fear of Lacy; not, at least, if he could once get the backing of Cavendish's money. But these other people—Beaton, Miss Donovan, and still another expected to arrive soon from the East—how were they connected with the deal?

He was so deeply engrossed in these thoughts that he remained unaware that Timmons had left the office, or that the Chinese man-of-all-work had silently tiptoed down the stairs and was cautiously peering in through the open doorway to make sure the coast was clear. Assured as to this, the wily oriental sidled noiselessly across the floor and paused beside him.

"Zis Meester Vest-cott?" he asked softly.

"That's my name, John; what is it?"

The messenger shook a folded paper out of his sleeve, thrust it into the other's hand hastily, and, with a hurried glance about, started to glide away as silently as he had come. He vanished into the dark hall, and there was the faint clatter of his shoes on the stairs.

Westcott, fully aroused, cast his glance about the deserted room, and unfolded the paper which had been left in his fingers. His eyes took in the few pencilled words instantly.

"Do not be angry. I had the best of reasons. Meet me near the lower sisted. "You actually threatened him because he asked about me?"

"I reckon that was about how it started," he admitted slowly. "You see, I rather thought I was a sorter friend of yours, and that I ought to stand up for you."

Her eyes were scornful, angry.

"Indeed! Well, permit me to say, Mr. Westcott, that I choose my own friends, and am perfectly competent to defend my own character. This closes our acquaintanceship."

She moved about the end of the table and touched Beaton's sleeve with her fingers.

"Would you escort me to the foot of the stairs?" she asked, her voice softening. "We will leave this bell-ringer; individual to his own company."

Neither of them glanced back, the girl still speaking as they disappeared, but Westcott turned in his chair to watch them cross the room. He had no sense of anger, no desire to retaliate, but he felt dazed and as though

Sheriff Rugg is referred to as "Honest Ed." and has preferred to act as peacemaker in scores of cases rather than obtain fees through making arrests.

MARJORIE BOYD

"Strange Case of Cavendish"

bridge at three o'clock. Very important. S. D.

He read the lines over again, his lips emitting a low whistle, his eyes darkening with sudden appreciation. It had been a trick, then, a bit of play-acting! But had it? Was not this rather the real thing—a sudden change of heart. This note might have a sinister purpose; he intended to deceive. No! He would not believe this. All his old lurking faith in her came back in a flash of revelation. He would continue to believe in her, trust her, feel that some worthy purpose had influenced her strange action. And, above all, he would be at the lower bridge on the hour set. He was back at the desk when Timmons returned.

"Zis Meester Vest-cott?" He Asked Softly.

"What do I owe you, old man?"

He paid the bill jokingly and in the best of humor, careful to tell the proprietor that he was leaving for his mine and might not return for several days. He possessed confidence that Timmons would make no secret of this in Haskell after his departure. He was glad to notice that Beaton observed him as he passed the Good Luck saloon and went tramping down the dusty road.

The only carriage belonging to the town livery passed soon after his arrival, evidently bound for the station, and from his covert he recognized Beaton lolling carelessly in the back seat. This must mean that the man expected arrivals on the afternoon train, important arrivals whom he desired to honor. There was no sign, however, of Miss Donovan; the time was up, yet with no evidence of her approach.

Westcott waited patiently, arguing to himself that her delay might be caused by her wish to get Beaton well out of the way before she ventured to leave the hotel. At last he strode down the path to the bridge, and saw her leaning over the rail, staring at the ripples below.

"Why," he exclaimed in surprise, "how long have you been here?"

"Several minutes," and she turned to face him. "I waited until the carriage passed before coming onto the bridge. I took the foot path from the hotel."

"You sent for me; there is some explanation, no doubt?"

The lady smiled, lifting her eyes to his face.

"There is," she answered. "A perfectly satisfactory one, I believe; but this place is too prominent, as I have a rather long story to tell."

"There is a rock seat below, just beyond the clump of willows, quite out of sight from the road," he suggested. "Perhaps you would go with me there?"

"What trail is that?"

"It leads to mines up the canyon, my own included, but is not greatly traveled; the main trail is farther east."

She walked to the edge of the bridge and permitted him to assist her down the bank. There was something of reserve about her manner, which prevented Westcott from feeling altogether at ease. Neither broke the silence between them until they reached the flat boulder and had found seats in the shelter of overhanging trees. She sat a moment, then she turned toward him questioningly.

"I was very rude," she said, "but you will forgive me when I explain the cause. I had to act as I did or else lose my hold entirely on that man—you understand?"

"I do not need to understand," he answered gallantly. "It is enough that you say so."

"No, it is not enough. I value your friendship, Mr. Westcott, and I need your advice."

"You may feel confidence in me."

"Oh, I do; indeed, you cannot realize how thoroughly I trust you," and impulsively she touched his hand with her own. "That is why I wrote you to meet me here—so I could tell you the whole story."

He waited, his eyes on her face. "I received my letter this morning—the letter I told you I expected, containing my instructions. They—they relate to this man Ned Beaton and the woman he expects on this train."

"Your instructions?" he echoed doubtfully. "You mean you have been sent after these people on some criminal matter? You are a detective?"

There must have been a tone of distrust in his voice, for she turned and faced him defiantly.

"No; not that. Listen: I am a newspaper woman, a special writer on the New York Star." She paused, her cheeks flushing with nervousness. "It—it was very strange that I met you first of all—for it seems that the case is of personal interest to you."

"To me! Why, that is hardly likely, if it originated in New York."

"It did," she drew in a sharp breath—"for it originated in the murder of Frederick Cavendish."

"The murder of Cavendish! He has been killed?"

"Yes; at least that is what everyone believes, except possibly one man—his former valet. His body was found lying dead on the floor of his private apartment, the door of his safe open, the money and papers missing. The coroner's jury brought in a verdict of murder on these facts."

"But when was this?"

She gave the date and he studied over it.

"The same day he should have received my telegram," he said gravely. "That's why the poor fellow never answered." He turned to her suddenly. "But what became of my others?" he asked, "and of all the letters I wrote?"

"That is exactly what I want to learn. They must have been delivered to his cousin, John Cavendish. I'll tell you all I know, and then perhaps, between us, we may be able to figure it out."

Briefly and clearly she set before him the facts she and Willis had been able to gather: the will, the connection between Enright and John Cavendish, the quarrel between John and Frederick, the visit of John to Enright's office, the suspicion of Valois that the murdered man was not Cavendish, and, finally, the conversation overheard in Steinway's, the torn telegram, and the meeting between Celeste La Rue and Enright.

When she had finished Westcott sat, chin in hand, turning the evidence over in his mind. "Do you believe Frederick Cavendish is dead?" he asked suddenly.

"Yes."

Westcott struck his hand down on the rock, his eyes glowing dangerously. "Well, I don't!" he exclaimed. "I believe he is alive! My theory is that this was all carefully arranged, but that circumstances compelled them to act quickly and before they were entirely ready. Two unexpected occurrences hurried them into action."

She leaned forward, stirred by his earnestness.

"What?"

"The quarrel in the restaurant, leading to the making of the will," he answered gravely, "and my telegram. The two things fit together exactly. He must have received my first message that same night. In my judgment, he was glad of some excuse to leave New York and determined to take the first train west. His quarrel with John, coupled with his disgust of the company he kept, caused him to draw up this will hurriedly. He left the club intending to pack up and take the first train."

"And was killed before he could do so?"

"Possibly; but if the dead man had no scar on his chest he was not Frederick Cavendish; he was an impostor; some poor victim deliberately substituted because of his facial resemblance. My belief is that Fred returned to his apartments, took what money he required, packed his valise, and departed without a word to any one. He often did things like that—hastily, on the spur of the moment."

"But what happened afterward?"

"The rest is all theory. I do not know, but I'll make a guess. In some way the conspirators learned what had occurred, but not in time to intercept his departure; yet they had everything ready for action, and realized this was the opportunity. Frederick had disappeared leaving no trace behind; they could attend to him later, intercept him, perhaps—wait! Keep still. There comes the carriage from the train."

"More Power"

You know what happens when a car runs dry for lack of gasoline—it is just naturally out of business.

In other words you can't run a car without gasoline. A telephone company, or any other company, is in exactly the same fix; it can't run unless it gets enough financial "power" to keep the employees working "on all cylinders", and to insure proper operating conditions.

You also know that it takes more "power" today to keep a business going than it ever did before. Workers must be paid more if they are to meet the increased cost of living; also everything that goes into the building and repairing of property has gone up in price.

So long as you furnish the necessary "power" we will see to it that the telephone keeps running.

SALTS IF KIDNEYS OR BLADDER BOTHER

Harmless to Stomach, Kidneys and neutralize irritating acid—Splendid for system.

Kidney and Bladder weakness result from uric acid, says a noted authority. The kidneys filter this acid from the blood and pass it on to the bladder, where it often remains to irritate and inflame, causing a burning, scalding sensation, or setting up an irritation to such extent that the bladder obliges you to seek relief two or three times during the night. The sufferer is in constant dread, the water passes sometimes with a scalding sensation and is very profuse; in such cases there is difficulty in voiding it.

Bladder weakness, most folks call it, because they can't control urination. While it is extremely annoying and sometimes very painful, this is really one of the most simple ailments to overcome. Get about four ounces of Jad Salts from your pharmacist and take a tablespoonful in a glass of water before breakfast, continue this for two or three days. This will neutralize the acids in the urine so it no longer is a source of irritation to the bladder and urinary organs which then act normally again.

Jad Salts is inexpensive, harmless, and is made from the acid of grapes and lemon juice, combined with lithia, and is used by thousands of folks who are subject to urinary disorders caused by uric acid irritation. Jad Salts is splendid for kidneys and causes no bad effects whatever.

Here you have a pleasant, effervescent, lithia-water drink, which quickly relieves bladder trouble.

DRINK HOT TEA FOR A BAD COLD

Get a small package of Hamburg Broom Tea at any pharmacy. Take a tablespoonful of the tea, put a cup of boiling water upon it, pour through a sieve and drink a teacup full at any time during the day or before retiring. It is the most effective way to break a cold and cure grip, as it opens the pores of the skin, relieves congestion, loosens the bowels, thus driving a cold from the system. Try it the next time you suffer from cold or the grip. It is inexpensive and entirely vegetable, therefore safe and harmless.

Don't stay crippled! This soothing, penetrating oil needs to be used only once. It takes the ache and pain right out of your back and ends the misery. It is magical, yet absolutely harmless and doesn't burn the skin. Nothing else stops lumbago, sciatica and lame back misery so fast.

OPEN NOSTRILS! END A COLD OR CATARRH

How To Get Relief When Head and Nose are Stuffed Up.

Count fifty! Your cold or head or catarrh disappears. Your clogged nostrils will open, the air passages of your head will clear and you can breathe freely. No more sneezing, hawking, mucous discharge, dryness or headache; so struggling for breath at night.

Get a small bottle of Ely's Cream Balm from your druggist and apply a little of this fragrant antiseptic cream to your nostrils. It penetrates through every air passage of the head, soothing and healing the swollen or inflamed mucous membrane, giving you instant relief. Head colds and catarrh yield like magic. Don't stay stuffed-up and miserable. Relief is sure.

DEAF MUTES IN INDUSTRY

Big Plant at Akron, O., Has 600 on Payroll.

ARE UNUSUALLY EFFICIENT

Lack of Speech and Hearing Shown to Be Conducive to Keener Mentality, a Finer Degree of Sensitiveness and a Higher Sensibility—Often Prove Better Workmen at Certain Tasks Than Normal Workers—Woman Builds Colony.

The theory that the individual who has suffered some misfortune and lost some faculty which seems indispensable to industrial usefulness is not a good buy on the labor market has again been disproven. One of the big rubber companies in Akron, Ohio, has placed on its payroll 600 people who can neither hear nor speak, and these handicapped individuals have demonstrated that they are as efficient as any other group in their organization, writes Frederic J. Haskin in the Chicago News.

About this group of actual workers is gathered as many more of their kind, dependent upon them, and thus there has developed at Akron the largest colony of "silents" in the industrial life of the nation. They take their places as independent, self-reliant citizens, who ask no special indulgence.

The successful employment of this group of mute workers is additional proof developing in the West that there are places in industry into which handicapped individuals can be fitted and in which they will serve effectively.

The handicap bureau of Chicago gave this theory the best demonstration, persuading employers to find places into which one-legged, blind, blind people and old people would fit. It supplied those handicapped persons for these special positions. The handicaps were so earnest in their attempts to make good, because it was almost a matter of life and death with them, that they often proved better workmen at certain tasks than normal workers.

Found True at Akron Plant. This is found to be true of the mutes at Akron. In a big plant there are many posts in which hearing and speech are unnecessary. The person without hearing escapes annoyance from the noise. The person without speech is less likely to be diverted from a task which requires concentration.

The lack of speech and hearing does not necessarily diminish mental or physical alertness. On the contrary such deprivation may be conducive to even keener mentality, a finer degree of sensitiveness and a higher sensibility, all of which inherent traits make the deaf mute unusually efficient and highly desirable for certain kinds of industrial work.

Strikingly corroborative of the contention that a high degree of general mentality is found among deaf mute employees, records show that in the psychological tests given in this factory similar to the army's psychological tests, deaf mute men and women in the factory and main offices in Akron attained higher average grades than any other group.

Regently officials of the company were persuaded to give deaf mute factory girls a chance at office work. They were agreeably surprised at the rapidity with which the girls grasped details and successfully overcame handicaps. So mentally alert, so quick to grasp ideas, so painstakingly efficient and so determined to succeed was one of these deaf mute girls that within two weeks she was performing unassisted and in a highly satisfactory manner work which it had taken her immediate predecessor, a girl who could both speak and hear, nearly seven weeks to master. This holds true in cases of nearly all deaf mute girls transferred to office work.

Affliction Increases Alertness. Since establishment of the rapidly growing "silent" colony in 1914, the deaf mutes have proven themselves among the steadiest and the sturdiest of all the company's 28,000 employees. Their expertness in the building especially has demonstrated that their affliction does not constitute a serious physical handicap, and that it increases rather than diminishes both mental and physical alertness. These deaf mutes now have their own clubhouse, their own church service, their own public and private social gatherings and their own dances. Seldom, except when thrown in business contact with them, do they leave the sphere of their own little colony to mingle socially or otherwise with speaking people. They are musical—even to the extent of having a twenty-piece brass band which has gained fame as one of the most unique musical organizations in the world. The deaf mute musicians play in perfect tune and perfect time, and display such keen sensibilities as to be able to discern whether or not an instrument is "out of tune" merely by the vibrations they send through their chairs or other objects.

They are great dancers and frequently attend their own dramatic club. They are now conducting their own musical comedies. They are now completing a deaf mute opera. They are now conducting their own finger algebra class. They are active members of the Akron chamber of commerce, while many also are stockholders in the company for which they work and home owners.

Woman Builds Up Colony. The remarkable degree of community or colony spirit now existing among these "silents" has been built up by the work of Mrs. Arthur Shawl, formerly of Cincinnati. Born of parents both deaf and dumb, although herself possessed of the full faculties of speech and hearing, Mrs. Shawl has made welfare work among the deaf mutes her chosen vocation. She does this work not through any degree of sympathy, for she claims the deaf-mute needs no sympathy, but because, as she states, she likes life better in the mute colony than among people who have the faculties of hearing and speech.

Mrs. Shawl until recently was Miss Nellie Gillespie. She married Arthur Shawl, who is a deaf mute and a member of the Akron silent colony. According to Mrs. Shawl there is something singularly magnetic about the typical character of the deaf mute, something deserving of the highest admiration in his fortitude, his irrefragable determination to win out despite his physical handicaps, his finer degree of sensitiveness and of mental alertness.

Mrs. Shawl, as an interpreter, goes with members of her colony to concerts. Taking a position where all can see her, she interprets the words of the singer on the stage in finger language. She asserts that by reason of his finer sensibility the average mute gets more pleasure out of a concert than does the average person of perfect hearing. He apprehends the sound in the form of vibration and gets much of the emotional value by watching the facial expression of the singer.

Surprised Mother. The missionary society was meeting at our house and the woman who was to lead the devotionals took the elastic band from her Bible, laid it on her lap and began to turn the pages to find the passage she was to read. During the solemn silence my young son marched over to her and picked up the elastic. He announced: "Why that's my mother's garter!"—Grit.

IF HAIR IS TURNING GRAY, USE SAGE TEA

Here's Grandmother's Recipe to Darken and Beautify Faded Hair.

That beautiful, even shade of dark, glossy hair can only be had by brewing a mixture of Sage Tea and Sulphur. Your hair is your charm. It makes or mars the face. When it fades, turns gray or streaked, and application of two or three drops of Sage and Sulphur Compound. This can always be depended upon to bring back the natural color and lustre of your hair.

Everybody uses "Wyeth's" Sage and Sulphur Compound now because it darkens so naturally and evenly that nobody can tell it has been applied. You simply dampen a sponge or soft brush with it and draw this through the hair, taking one small strand at a time; by morning the gray hair has disappeared, and after another application it becomes beautifully dark and appears glossy and lustrous. This ready-to-use preparation is a delightful toilet requisite for those who desire dark hair and a youthful appearance. It is not intended for the cure, mitigation or prevention of disease.

Seven Things To Be Sure Of IN THE PURCHASE OF YOUR PIPELESS HEATING SYSTEM

- 1 That the quality of heating service assures a comfortable, clean, healthful home in any weather.
- 2 That the convenience of simple operation, regulation, and quick heating compares favorably with much more expensive types of heating systems.
- 3 That the low first cost is due to economy of material and labor instead of cheapness of construction.
- 4 That the fuel bill can be reduced from 1.4 to 1.3—enough to save handsome dividends on the amount invested.
- 5 That the "upkeep," or expense for repairs, is positively less than any other types of heating systems.
- 6 That you are protected at this store, because of the manufacturer's refusal to authorize installation where their trained heating engineers cannot safely guarantee it to operate efficiently in your home, their decision being made after careful study of conditions in your home—no guesswork—thus protecting all concerned.
- 7 That the purchase will increase the value of your property more than the amount invested.

DROPS THREE MILES

Aviator Has Thrilling Experience Trying for Record.

Oxygen Tank Begins to Fail and Flyer Almost Loses Consciousness.

Dayton, O.—Dropping 14,000 feet while six miles in the air and still alive today was an experience through which Maj. R. W. Schroeder, chief test pilot at McCook field and champion altitude flyer of the secret service, passed recently.

Major Schroeder formerly lived on Washington boulevard, Chicago. He made his first flight over the stock yards here ten days ago.

While making a maximum test flight in a Le Pere ship, in which he has been flying for altitudes, Schroeder noticed the thermometer of the ship registered 52 degrees below zero.

In this extreme cold the oxygen tank began to fall.

He had nearly lost consciousness when he suddenly realized that he was losing his sense of direction and control. He reached for the throttle of his ship and missed. He then tried the switches.

Suddenly the ship dropped. At 18,000 feet Major Schroeder partly regained consciousness and found that his ship was turning a spiral. In a desperate effort he righted the Le Pere, which began diving safely into McCook field.

As a result of the ordeal Schroeder's sense of hearing is dulled.

He was at the hangars next day preparing to make another flight. Nerves shaken? No!

Shellac.
Shellac is the joint product of insects and plants and comes from India. The lac insects are about 1.25 of an inch long, a bright red in color. They suck the juices of plants, digest them and exude them in the form of resin, which soon encases the whole insect. When the young insects have swarmed out, the resin is scraped from the branches, ground, washed, mixed with colophony and orpiment, cooked slowly and drawn out into the thin sheets we know as shellac.

GOOD OF COMMUNITY SERVICE CHAPLAIN AMERICAN LEGION

Ideals and Purposes Are in Evidence Now That Initial Organization Is Completed.

Soon after the organization of the American Legion an official order went out from the headquarters of War Camp Community Service to its field workers. Assistance and good will were to be given to the American Legion in all localities. On its side the Legion had already expressed its attitude toward the fast developing program of community service by the following clause in its constitution: "to inculcate a sense of individual obligation to the community, state and nation."

When the American Legion began its drive for membership and sought to establish posts, the accumulated experience of War Camp Community Service with soldier and sailor needs proved helpful. The services of nine organizers of proved ability were placed at the Legion's disposal. As necessity demanded, offices, clubs and information booths became centers for the campaign. The swift advance of the organizers as post after post was established showed that common ideals and a common purpose constituted a great propelling power in this drive for members. And now that initial organization has been completed, these same common ideals and purposes are evident.

The friendliness of the American Legion for Community Service has recently been manifesting itself in various ways. In Fayetteville, N. C., the Legion is pledging funds for the 1920 program of a community club and three officers of the local post are working on the general Community Service committee. The entire community work in another place was continued at the suggestion and with the backing of the Legion. The Girls' Community Service League members are being asked to discuss with the local post and the leading men of the town the building of a community house. One of the Legion members in Freeport, Long Island, is so interested in the Community Service program that he is devoting a great deal of time and effort to engage the public in extensive plans for a civic center and community house. In several places a "community council" of Legion members has been appointed as a special committee to work with Community Service. Wherever the girls' groups are continuing activities the American Legion members are the popular guests at dances and parties.

In Nassau-Queens county, New York, the girls' clubs are successfully working out with the Legion community forums and social evenings. The forum discussions often lead to warm debates on national and international topics. The ex-soldier is keen to discuss current events and the girls are prepared to cope with several up-to-the-minute subjects. The patriotic stimulation and sociability resulting from these meetings is showing good results.

In less pretentious but nevertheless practical ways the Legion is working with Community Service in other places. For example in Baltimore it is giving free use of its ballroom each Saturday night to the girls' clubs. In Fredericksburg, Virginia, it helped in the production of a minstrel show; in Chelsea, Michigan, the post is opening its club rooms for a general Community Service in its request for the use of the armory for a recreational program.

A recreational and social program that is often community wide has been continued by the American Legion in many communities where the War Camp Community Service ceased to exist after the demobilization of the soldier. In cases where the soldiers' club or "hospitality house" was vacated by the government the American Legion went in and began a "carry on" movement. This was true in Dallas, Texas, where the American Legion, together with the Rainbow, 30th and 90th divisions, assumed the responsibility of running the soldier club. In Junction City, Kansas, the Legion has practically full charge of the Community House and its program.

The numerous occasions on which Community Service has been able to assist in programs given by the various local posts serve as other examples of the co-operation between the two organizations. From coaching the chorus of a minstrel show to the arrangement of an entire evening orchestra to speakers, the Community Service workers have willingly put themselves at the beck and call of the Legion. In Hackensack, New Jersey, the opportunity of helping in a musical entertainment led to the possibility of forming a glee club of the Legion men; and the colored post of Eastwood, New Jersey, has asked the help of Community Service in arranging a year's program of activities. The community council of Chelsea, Michigan, is co-operating with the Legion in conducting two weekly dancing classes, followed by a community dance. The Legion club rooms in Houston, Texas, were renovated and redecorated with the help of Community Service. In which places the Community Service club rooms are housing the offices of the social center of the Legion. This has worked out for the benefit of both organizations, the Legion often taking part in the community entertainments and Community Service offering its assistance in membership campaigns and publicity. Often the local organizer is asked to explain the community program at banquets given by the local post. The understanding arrived at on such occasions usually has definite results.

One of the most recent services which Community Service was glad to render was the arranging of a program for the presentation, through the American Legion, of the certificates from the French High Commission to the nearest of kin of those who lost their lives in the world war. A complete program for the service was drawn up by an official at Community Service headquarters and sent out to all Legion posts as suggestive for Washington's birthday. It included appropriate numbers of the French and American music, a reading of Markham's poem, "France in Battle-flame," and a fitting pageant scene. Many cities used the service as written, others adapted it to suit local conditions.

The future plans of the American Legion and Community Service include features which can be worked out by both organizations together, to the mutual benefit of themselves and the community. In fact, the similarity of purposes will make more strongly effective the efforts of each for a better citizenship.

He saw service at the various debarkation camps in England and Scotland. He left Brest in January, 1919, and was discharged from the army, February, 1919. He has risen to the rank of regimental sergeant major, but was never commissioned.

He was assistant head of the special service section of the bureau of war risk insurance for three months and was then called to headquarters of the American Legion as assistant head of the insurance division and later of the work and handled all other claims of ex-service men.
