Supt. Duncanson | Tourist And Robbers Are Apprehended

Under Sheriff Cook Secures Confession After Grilling.

East Jordan and vicinity has been the scene of several store robberies of late, among them being the Geo. Carr Grocery on State-st, Matt Sommerville's store corner Main and State sts., the Klooster store at Ellsworth and the Saperston store at Alba.

After going over the different cases for some time, Under Sheriff H. Cook of East Jordan decided on action. On Monday morning last he arrested Winifred Beringer. After a four-hour session with him in the City jail, Berringer broke down and confessed, implicating Glenn Ross with him in the two local burglaries and that of Kloosters, and these two with Harold Atkinson in the Saperston affair.

Under Sheriff Cook arrested the other two in the afternoon, Ross confessing to his part in the burglaries and Atkinson holding out. Berringer and Ross went before Justice Severance and made affidavit to their con fession.

The trio were taken to Bellaire, Tuesday morning by Under Sherift Cook and enroute there Atkinson confessed his part in the Alba burglary.

They were arraigned before a Justice of the Peace at Bellaire and bound over to Circuit Court for sentence. In the two local robberies Berringer and Ross secured $8 to $12 dollars from Carr's Grocery, and about $40 and some cigarettes from Matt Sommerville's.

On Wednesday night, March 1st, Berringer and Ross walked to Ellsworth burglarized the Klooster store securing $150 in cash and some jewelry. They walked home the same night.

On Monday, March 6th. Berringer. Ross and Atkinson went by train to Alba and that night broke into Saperston store securing three suits of cloth ing, three overcoats, three leather suitcases and a quantity of watches and jewelry. In making their get-away from a rear exit, Atkinson fell through the snow into an open cistern. He went in to his armpits and probably would have been drowned had he no clutched the wooded edges of the cistern. His companions pulled him out. In the tumble he lost in the cistern the overcoat which he had taken and which was found there. The trio broke up and walked back to East Jordan that night. They went to the farm home of George Jacquay in Wilson township (which was furnished but unoccupied) where they remained about 24 hours, helping themselves to the canned fruit and leaving the house in a filthy con-

It is realized that Michigan can not gather its proper share of tourist traffic dollars unless it goes after them. Ways and means will be considered to turn as many of these dollars as possible toward Michigan instead of letting them be lured away to other resort regions by more attractive advertising of lesser charms.

Special problems in regard to pro moting agriculture and the settlement of productive idle lands are also demanding attention. Western Michigan has lost rural population during the last few years. This loss and methods of turning the ebb tide will be given serious attention by the directors of. the Western Michigan Development Bureau. Gaylord.

East Jordan trout fishermen are greatly interested in the proposed changes in the Michigan fish laws proposed by the department of conservation, and on which a special hearing of sportsmen has been called for March 27 at Gavlord.

Notice of this meeting has been sent broadcast over Michigan. Definite decision may not be made at this hearing, the department head having power to postpone the meeting should he see fit.

The formal notice of the hearing which is signed by John Baird, director of the department of conservation, recites that petitions have been filed with the department signed by twentyfive representatives of each of the fol-lowing counties: Wexford, Osceola, Missaukee, Gladwin, Ogemaw, Oscoda, Crawford, Otsego, Clare, Newaygo, Arenac, Alcona, Montgomery, Emmet,

ADVISE FARMERS TO SECURE SEED BEANS

Michigan farmers should secure their eed beans at an early date in order to be sure of getting seed stock of best quality. The present high bean mar-ket is resulting in a rapid movement out of the state, according to Prof. J. F. Cox, head of the Michigan Agricultural College farm crops department, who suggests that those farmers who wait until late spring to buy may have trouble in securing best seed.

A large increased territory for Michigan beans has been opened up by inreased freight rates which work adversely for Western beans, according to F. B. Dreese, secretary of the Michigan Bean Jobbers Association. The Mississippi Valley and westward has been included in the Michigan distributing section.

SENIOR CLASS CON-TESTING FOR PLACE ON HÖNOR LIST

The Senior class honor list was announced in assembly, Wednesday, March 8th. The class has indeed a record of which to be proud. Six girls contested for the two highest honors. All six Lona Swafford, Julia Supernaw, Sena Franseth, Doris Colden, Virginia Pray and Lena Ekstrom had an average between ninety-five and ninety-six Lona Swafford was named as valedictorian while Julia Supernaw was pronounced salutatorian.

Not only has this class an unusual number in such a close race for highest honor places, but there are seven others who have an average of ninety to ninety-five. This average is high enough in many classes to make se. cure one's place at the top. ALBA & ELLSWORTH STORES BURGLARIZED

L Saperston's store at Alba was burglarized last Monday night for the third time in two years. About $150 worth of goods was stolen according to report. Two men are thought to be connected in the robbery, as one fell into a cistern at the rear of the store and necessarily would need help to get out, and left his overcoat in the hole in the ground. It is thought to have been the work of local talent, as Mr. Saperston has had a man sleep in the store since the robbery a year ago until a few days since. The robber crowd seem certainly to have put a jinx on this store.-Mancelona Herald, Mar. 9.

Ellsworth went into the lime-light in an undesirable manner on Wednesday night March 1st, when burglars eutered the Klooster and Son general store there and took a quantity of cash and iewelry. prying about in the house before himself and since Corvet had gone, star tled Alan and angered him. Who had been searching in Benjamin Corvet -in Alan's house? He pushed the drawers shut hastly and hurried across the hall to the room opposite. In this room-plainly Benjamin Corvet's bedroom-were no signs of intrusion. He went to the door of the room connecting with it, turned on the light, and looked in. It was a smaller room than the others and contained a roll-top desk and a cabinet. The cover of the desk was closed, and the drawers of the cabinet were shut and apparently undisturbed. He tried the cover of the desk, but it appeared to be locked; after looking around vainly for a key, he tried again, exerting a little more force, and this time the top went up easily tearing away the metal plate into which the claws of the lock clasped the two long screws which had held it. He examined the lock, surprised, and saw that the screws must have been merely set into the holes; scars showed where a chisel or some metal implement had been thrust in under the top to force it up. The pigeonholes and little drawers in the upper part of the desk, as he swiftly opened them, he found entirely empty. He hurried to the cabinet; the drawers of the cabinet too had been forced and very recently; for the scars and the splinters of wood were clean and These drawers and the drawfresh. ers in the lower part of the desk either were empty, or the papers in them had been disarranged and tumbled in confusion, as though some one had examined them hastily and tossed To Alan, the marks of them back. violence and roughness were unmis takably the work of the man with the big hands who hud left marks upon the top of the chest of drawers: and the feeling that he had been in the house very recently was stronger than ever.

Alan ran out into the hall and listened: he heard no sound; but he went back to the little room more excited than before. For what had the other man been searching? For the same things which Alan was looking for? And had the other man got them? Who might the other be, and what might be his connection with Benjamin Corvet? Alan had no doubt that everything of importance must have been taken away, but he would make sure of that. He took some of the papers from the drawers and began to examine them; after nearly an hour Alan guessed his age at thirty-five; he of this, he had found only one article was handsome-he had a straight ppeared connected in any way what Sherrill had told him or with Alan himself. In one of the little drawers of the desk he found several books, much worn as though from being carried in a pocket, and one of these contained a series of entries stretching over several years. These listed an amount-$150-opposite a series of dates with only the year and the month given, and there was an entry for every second month. Alan felt his fingers trembling as he turned the pages of the little book and found at the end of the list a blank, and below, in the same hand but in writing which had changed slightly with the passage of years, an other date and the confirming entry of $1,500. Alan looked through the little book again and put it in his pocket. It was, beyond doubt, his father's memorandum of the sums sent to Blue Rapids for Alan , it told him that here he had been in his father's thoughts. He grew warm at the thought as he began putting the other things back into the drawers. He started and straightened suddenly; then he listened attentively, and his skin, warm an instant before. turned cold and prickled. Somewhere within the house, unmistakably on the floor below him, a door had slammed. with him. Was it . his father who had come back? That, though not impossible, seemed improbable.

Alan stooped quickly, unlaced and stripped off his shoes, and ran out into the hall to the head of the stairs, where he looked down and listened. From here the sound of some one moving about came to him distinctly: he could see no light below, but when he ran down to the turn of the stairs, it became plain that there was a very dim and flickering light in the library. He crept on farther down the staircase. His hands were cold and moist from his excitement, and his body was hot and trembling.

Whoever it was that was moving about downstairs, even if he was not one who had a right to be there, at least felt secure from interruption. He was going with heavy step from window to window; where he found a shade up, he pulled it down brusquely and with a violence which suggested great strength under a nervous strain; a shade, which had been pulled down, flew up, and the man damned it as though it had startled him; then, after an instant, he pulled it down again. Alan crept still farther down and at last caught sight of him. He was a with broad big, young-looking man, shoulders and very evident vigor;

ing at all he wanted; he dragged some of the books from their cases, felt behind them and shoved back some of the books but dropped others on the floor and blasphemy burst from him. The beam of light from the torch in his hand swayed aside and back and forth. Without warning, suddenly it caught Alan as he stood in the dark of the front room; and as the dim white circle of light glenmed into Alan's face, the man looked that way and saw him, The effect of this upon the man was so strange and so bewildering to Alan that Alan could only stare at him. The big man seemed to shrink into himself and to shrink back and away from Alan. He roared out something in a bellow thick with fear and horror; he seemed to choke with terror. There was nothing in his look akin to mere surprise or alarm at realizing that another was there and had been seeing and overhearing him. The light which he still gripped swayed back and forth and showed him Alan again, and he raised his arm before his face as he recoiled.

The consternation of the man was so complete that it checked Alan's rush toward him; he halted, then advanced silently and watchfully. As he went forward, and the light shone upon his face again, the big man cried out hoarsely:

"D-n you, d-n you, with the hol above your eye! The bullet got you! And now you've got Ben! But you can't get me! Go back to hell! You can't get me! I'll get you--I'll get you! You--can't save the Miwaka!" He drew back his arm and with all his might hurled the flashlight at Alan. It missed and crashed some where behind him, but did not go out the beam of light shot back and wavered and flickered over both of them as the torch rolled on the floor. Alar rushed forward and, thrusting through the dark, his hand struck the man' chest and seized his coat.

The man caught at and selzed Al an's arm; he seemed to feel of it and assure himself of its reality.

"Flesh! Flesh!" he roared in re lief; and his big arms grappled Alan As they struggled, they stumbled and fell to the floor, the big man under-neath. His hand shifted its hold and caught Alan's throat; Alan got an arm free and, with all his force, struck the man's face. The man struck backa heavy blow on the side of Alan's head which dizzied him but left him strength to strike again, and his knuckles reached the man's face once more, but he got another heavy blow in return. The man was grappling longer; he swung Alan to one side and off of him, and rolled himself away. He scrambled to his feet and dashed out through the library, across the hall, and into the service room Alan got to his feet; dizzled and, not yet familiar with the house, he blundered against a wall and had to fee his way along it to the service room as he slipped and stumbled down the stairway, a door closed loudly at the end of the corridor he had seen at the foot of the stairs. He ran along the corridor to the door; It had closed with a spring lock, and seconds passed while he felt in the dark for the catch he found it and tore the door open and came out suddenly into the cold air of the night in a paved passage way beside the house which led in one direction to the street and in the other to a gate opening on the alley. He ran forward to the street and looked up and down, but found it emp ty; then he ran back to the alley. A the end of the alley, where it inter-sected the cross street, the figure of had been the "bullet hole." The rest that the man had said had been a reference to some name; Alan had no trouble to recollect the name, and, while he did not understand it at all, it stirred him queerly—"the Mi-The queer waka." What was that? excitement and questioning that the name brought, when he repeated it to himself, was not recollection; for he could not recall ever having heard the name before; but it was not completely strange to him. He could define the excitement it stirred only in that way. Sherrill had believed that here in this house Benjamin Corvet had left-or might have left-a memorandum, a record, or an account of some sort which would explain to Alan, his son the blight which hung over his life. Sherrill had said that it could have been no mere intrigue, no vulgar personal sin; and the events of the night had made that very certain; for, plainly, whatever was hidden in that house involved some one else seriously, desperately. There was no other way to explain the intrusion of the sort man whom Alan had surprised there an hour ago. The fact that this other man searched also did not prove that Benjamin Corvet had left a record in the house, as Sherrill believed; but it certainly showed that another person believed—or feared--it. Whether not guilt had sent Benjamin Corvet away four days ago, whether or not there had been guilt behind the ghost which had "got Ben," there was guilt in the big man's superstitious terror when he had seen Alan. A bold, powerful man like that one, when his conscience is clear, does not see a ghost. And the ghost which he had seen had a bullet hole above the brows!

Alan took up his hat and looked about the house; he was going to return and sleep here, of course : he was not going to leave the house unguarded for any long time after this, but, after what had just happened, he felt he could leave it safely for half an hour, particularly if he left a light burning within. He did this and stepped over to the Sherrills'. The man who answered his ring recognized him at once and admitted him; in reply to Alan's question, the servant said that Mr. Sherrill had not yet returned. When Alan not yet returned. went to his room, the valet appeared and, finding that Alan was packing, the man offered his service. Alan let him pack and went downstairs; a motor had just driven up to the house. It proved to have brought Constance and her mother; Mrs. Sherrill, after informing Alan that Mr. Sherrill might not return until some time later, went head and left the black mark. That Benjamin Corvet, if he had wished Sherrill to know those circumstances would have told them to him; but Corvet had not done that; instead, he had sent for Alan, his son. He had given his son his confidence.

1. 1. D. D. B. B. B.

Sherrill had admitted that he was withholding from Alan, for the time being, something that he knew about Benjamin Corvet; it was nothing, he had said, which would help Alan to learn about his father, or what had become of him; but perhaps Sherrill, not knowing these other things, could not speak accurately as to that. Alan determined to ask Sherrill what he had been withholding, before he told him all of what had happened in Corvet's house. There was one other circumstance which Sherrill had mentioned but not explained; it occurred to Alan now.

"Miss Sherrill-" he checked himself. "What is it?"

"This afternoon your father said that you believed that Mr. Corvet's disappearance was in some way connected with you; he said that he did not think that was so; but do you want to tell me why you thought it?" "Yes; I will tell you." She colored quickly. "One of the last things Mr. Corvet did-in fact, the last thing know of his doing before he sent for you-was to come to me and warn me against one of my friends.'

"Warn you, Miss Sherrill? How? I mean, warn you against what? "Against thinking too much of him."

She turned away. "I think I'll come to see your father in the morning," Alan said, when Constance looked back to him. "But you'll come over breakfast in the morning?" 'You want me?"

"Certainly."

"I'd like to come very much." "Then I'll expect you." She followed him to the door when he had put on his things, and he made no objection when she asked that the man be allowed to carry his bag around to the other house.

When he had dismissed Simons and re-entered the house on Astor street, he found no evidences of any disturb ance while he had been gone. On the second floor, to the east of the room which had been his father's, was a bedroom which evidently had beer kept as a guest chamber : Alan carried his suitcase there and made ready for

The sight of Constance Sherrill standing and watching after him in concern as he started back to this house, came to him again and again and, also, her flush when she had spoken of the friend against whom Benjamin Corvet had warned her Who was he? It had been impossible at that moment for Alan to ask her more: besides, if he had asked and she had told him, he would have learned only a name which he could not place yet in any connection with her or with Benjamin Corvet. Whoever he was, I was plain that Constance Sherrill "thought of him;" lucky man, Alan to himself. Yct Corvet had said warned her not to think of him. .

Alan turned back his bed. It had been for him a tremendous day. Barev twelve hours before he had come to that house, Alan Conrad from Blue Rapids, Kan., now phrases from what Lawrence Sherrill had told him of his father were running through his mind as he opened the door of the room to be able to hear any noise in Benjamin Corvet's house, of which he was sole protector. emotion roused by his first sight of the lake went through him again as he opened the window to the east.

Now-he was in bed-he seemed to vague memories of similar sort-were all that recollection ever would give him. He caught himself together and turned his thoughts to the approaching visit to Sherrill-and his father's offices. He had accepted Constance Sherrill's invitation to drive him downtown to his destination. Observing the towering buildings to his right, he was able to identify some of the more prominent structures, familiar from photographs of the city. Constance drove swiftly a few blocks down this boulevard; then, with a sudden, "Here we are!" she shot the car to the curb and stopped. She led Alan into one of the tallest and bestlooking buildings.

On several of the doors opening upon the witle marble hall where the elevator left them, Alan saw the names, "Corvet, Sherrill and Spearman."

Constance led the way on past to a door farther down the corridor, which bore merely the name, "Lawrence Sherrill"; evidently Sherrill, who had interests aside from the shipping busi-ness, had offices connected with but not actually a part of the offices of Corvet, Sherrill and Spearman. on guard at the door, saving that Mr. Sherrill had been awaiting Mr. Conrad, opened an inner door and led Alan into a large, many-windowed room, where Sherrill was sitting alone before a table-desk. He pulled the "visitor's chair" rather close to his desk and to his own big leather chair before asking Alan to seat himself. "You wanted to tell me, or ask me, something last night, my daughter has told me," Sherrill said cordially. "I'm sorry I wasn't home when you came back." "I wanted to ask you, Mr. Sherrill.' Alan said, "about those facts in re-gard to Mr. Corvet which you mentioned to me yesterday but did not ex-plain. You said it would not aid me to know them; but I found certain things in Mr. Corvet's house last night which made me want to know, if I could, everything you could tell me." Sherrill opened a drawer and took out a large, plain envelope. "On the day after your father disappeared," he said, "but before I knew he was gone-or before any one except my daughter felt any alarm about him forehead over daring, eyes his nose, lips and chin were power-fully formed; and he was expensively and very carefully dressed. The light by which Alan saw these things came from a flat little pocket searchlight that the man carried in one hand, which threw a little brilliant circle of light as he directed it; and now, as the light chanced to fall on his other hand-powerful and heavily muscled -Alan recollected the look and size of the finger prints on the chest of drawers upstairs. He did not doubt that this was the same man who had gone through the desk; but since he had already rifled the desks, what did he want here now? As the man moved out of sight, Alan crept on down as far as the door to the library; the man had gone on into the rear room, and Alan went far enough into the library so he could see him.

He had pulled open one of the drawers in the big table in the rear room and with his light held so high as to show what was in it, he was tumbling over its contents and examining them. He went through one after another of the drawers of the table like this; after examining them, he rose and kicked the last one shut disgustedly; he stood looking about the room questioningly, then he started toward the front room.

He had, as yet, neither seen nor heard anything to alarm him, and as he went to the desk in the front room and peered impatiently into the drawers, he slammed them shut, one after another. He straightened and stared about. "D-n Ben! D-n Ben!" he ejaculated violently and returned to the rear room. Alan, again following him, found him on his knees in front of one of the drawers under the bookcases. As he continued searching through the drawers, his irritation became greater and greater. He jerked one drawer entirely out of its case, and the contents flew in every direction; swearing at it, he gathered up the letters. One suddenly caught his attention: he began reading it closely, then snapped it back into the drawer, crammed the rest on top of it, and went on to the next of the files. He searched in this manner through half a dozen drawers, plainly finding noth-

He ran a little farther and looked then he went back to the house. side door had swung shut again and latched. He let himself in at the front door and turned on the light in the reading lamp in the library. The electric torch still was burning on the floor and he picked it up and extinguished it; he went upstairs and brought down his shoes. He had seen a wood fire set ready for lighting in the library, and now he lighted it and sat before it drying his wet socks before he put on his shoes. He was still shaking and breathing fast from his struggle with the man and his chase after him, and by the strangeness of what had taken place.

When the shaft of light from the torch had flashed across Alan's face in the dark library, the man had not taken him for what he was-a living person; he had taken him for a spec ter. His terror and the things he had cried out could mean only that. The specter of whom? Not of Benjamin Corvet; for one of the things Alan had remarked when he saw Benjamin Corvet's picture was that he himself did not look at all like his father. Be sides, what the man had said made it certain that he did not think the snee ter was "Ben"; for the specter had "got Ben." Did Alan look like some else, then? Like whom? Evi dently like the man-now dead, for he had a ghost—who had "got" Ben, in the big man's opinion. Who could that be?

Alan got up and went to look at himself in the mirror he had seen in the hall. He was white, now that the flush of the fighting was going; he probably had been pale before with excitement, and over his right eye there was a round black mark. Alan yet. looked down at his hands; a little skin was off one knuckle, where he had struck the man, and his fingers were smudged with a black and sotty dust. He had smudged them on th papers upstairs or else in feeling his way about the dark house, and at some time he had touched his fore-upstairs and did not appear again. Constance followed her mother but, ten minutes later, came downstairs "You're not staying here tonight?" she asked.

"I wanted to say to your father," Alan explained, "that I believe I had better go over to the other house."

"Are you taking any oné with you?" she inquired. "Any one?"

"A servant, I mean." "No."

"Then you'll let us lend you a man from here.' "You're awfully good: but I don't think I'll need anyone tonight. Mr. Corvet's-my father's man-is coming back tomorrow, I understand. I'll get along very well until then." She was silent a moment as she looked away. Her shoulders suddenly jerked a little. "I wish you'd take some one with you," she persisted. "I don't like to think of you alone over there.' "My father must have been often alone there.'

"Yes," she said. "Yes." She looked at him quickly, then away, checking a question. She wanted to ask, he kn what he had discovered in that lonely. house which had so agitated him; for of course she had noticed agitation in him. And he had intended to tell her, or, rather, her father. He had been rehearsing to himself the description of the man he had met there in order to ask Sherrill about him; but now Alan knew that he was not going to refer the matter even to Sherrill just

Sherrill had believed that Benjamin Corvet's disappearance was from circumstances too personal and intimate to be made a subject of public inquiry; and what Alan had encountered in Corvet's house had confirmed that belief. Sherrill further had said that be standing, a specter before a man blaspheming Benjamin Corvet and the sous of men dead. "And the fole above the eye! . . The bullet got you! . . So it's you that got Ben! . . . I'll get you! . . . You can't save the Miwaka!"

The Miwaka! The stir of that name was stronger now even than before; it had been running through his consciousness almost constantly since he had heard it. He jumped up and turned on the light and found a pencil. He did not know how to spell the name and it was not necessary to write it down; the name had taken on that definiteness and ineffaceableness of a thing which, once heard, can never again be forgotten. But, in panic that he might forget, he wrote it, guessing at the spelling-"Miwaka." It was a name, of course; but the name of wliat? It repeated and repeated itself to him, after he got back into bed, until its very iteration made him drowsy.

Outside, the gale whistled and hrieked. The wind, passing its last shrieked. resistance after its sweep across the prairies before it leaped upon the lake battered and clamored in its assault about the house. But as Alan became sleepier, he heard it no longer as it rattled the windows and howled under the eaves and over the roof, but as out on the lake, above the roaring and icecrunching waves, it whipped and circled with its chil the ice-shrouded sides of struggling ships. So, with the roar of surf and gale in his ears, he went to sleep with the sole conscious connection in his mind between himself and these people, among whom Benjamin Corvet's summons had brought him, the one name "Miwaka."

CHAPTER VI.

The Deed in Trust. Memory, if Alan could call it that, had given him a feeling for ships and for the lake. But these recollections were only what those of a three-years' child might have been. Not only did they refuse to connect themselves with anything else, but by the very finality of their isolation, they warned him that they—and perhaps a few more some one I ought to have known about and commended you to my care. The remainder of it was merely an agitated, almost indecipherable farewell to me. When I opened the envelope, a key had fallen out. The note made no reference to the key, but, comparing it with one I had in my pocket, I saw that it appeared to be a key to a safety deposit box in the vaults of a company where we both had boxes.

"The note, taken in connection with my daughter's alarm about him, made it so plain that something serious had happened to Corvet, that my first thought was merely for him. Corvet was not a man with whom one could readily connect the thought of suicide; but, Alan, that was the idea I had. hurried at once to his house, but the bell was not answered, and I could not get in. His servant, Wassaquam, has very few friends, and the few times he has been away from home of recent years have been when he visited an acquaintance of his-the head porter in a South Side hotel. I went to the telephone in the house next door and called the hotel and found Wassaguam there. I told him over the telephone only that something was wrong, and hurried to my own home to get the key, which I had to the Corvet house: but when I came back and let myself into the house, I found it empty and with no sign of anything having hap pened.

"The next morning, Alan, I went to the safe deposit vaults as soon as they were open. I presented the numbered key and was told that it belonged to a box rented by Corvet, and that Corvet had arranged about three days before for me to have access to the box if I presented the key. I had only to sign my name in their book and open the box. In it, Alan, I found the pictures of you which I showed you yesterday and the very strange communications that I am going to show you now."

misnomer to speak of the national government having a personnel sys tem at all. The reform accomplished by the establishment of the civil service commission and the merit system has touched but one phase of the personnel problem, and that but partially --entrance into the government service. Practically nothing has been done in the way of erecting the government services into careers that will attract and retain efficient men. Bad as con ditions were in this respect before the

The situation now is that there is worse during and since that event.

At the present time it would be a plete recasting of the present system under which the personnel required to man the governmental plant is secured, compensated, promoted, as-signed to particular tasks and con-trolled, to the end that not only justice will be done to the several classes of governmental employees, but that a personnel system will be established that will insure a maximum of efficiency in the actual conduct of public affairs.

A study of action actually had or now under way shows that steps have been taken toward the accomplishment of each of these fundamental reforms. The introduction of a budget system is a long step forward.

I don't mean in the least to give the impression that all private business is perfectly run and that only government business is badly managed, or that all the efficient people are in private employ and only inefficient in the public service. Neither of those conditions exists.

In the common phrase, you have got hand it to Alexander Hamilton for devising a scheme that has stood up since revolutionary days. part of the workers. My only desire is to disclose the present condition of government emi-ployment; that good men are leaving, and that the present tendency, if not checked, will inevitably drive out of the service all of the efficient and leave only the mediocre and incompetent. I have said little myself, but have chosen to let the men working for the government tell the story. Every assertion of fact in these articles comes from some responsible source or authority within the service. I am not making a criticism or attack from the outside, but merely serving as a mouthpiece for your hired men.

XXVI EASY COME, EASY GO

Back in 1912, when Mr. Taft was President, and when the gross expenditures of the government were about one-quarter of what they are now, he became exercised and concerned about the higgledy-piggledy, unscientific, disorderly, grab-bag methods by which your money was expended for public purposes. He said then what is equally true now, that the activities of the national government "are almost as varied as those of the entire business world. The operations of every person living within organization embraces stations and and in many local subdivisions of the farious activities or to group them in such a way as to present a clear picture of what the government is doing. Never has a complete description been given of the agencies through which these activities are performed. "At no time has the attempt been made to study all of these activities and agencies with a view to the as-signment of each activity to the agency best fitted for its performance, to the avoidance of duplication of plant and work, to the integration of all administrative agencies of the government, so far as may be practicable, into a unified organization for the most effective and economical dispatch of public business." This extraordinary and indefensible situation, which exists today as fully and completely as it did when Mr. Taft portrayed it seven years ago came about quite naturally and simply through our tolerance and slackness For years and years the government lived and grew and extended its activities on Santa Claus money. Its income came as easily as money in a letter. For years and years the national income was greater than the expenses. Every year there was a surplus.

The government was precisely in the position of the Rockefellers and the Carnegies and the Rothschilds. Its problem was not how to get money enough to live on, but how to spend its income. It naturally got in the way of throwing some of it to the birds. It lived like a remittance man You may remember that back in the time of the first Cleveland administra-tion one of the problems of public discussion was: "What shall be done with the surplus?" Then there was a change of administration and Corporal Tanner was made commissioner of pensions. The whole country was amused and had a hearty laugh when he announced his policy: "God belp the surplus!" Them was the halcyon days!

Mr. Gilbert, the present undersecre tary of the treasury, in an address said :

"The estimates for the year 1920 show that over a billion dollars of expenditures were authorized by the last session of congress in addition to the amount shown in the usual compiled statements of appropriations. In fact, the practice has reached such propor tions as to be almost a national scandal, and it was vigorously de-nounced in the President's last annual message.

It has become the first principle of strategy on the part of people interested in appropriations for various special purposes to frame the matter to authorize the use of the public funds indirectly, or in indefinite terms, or by authorization for expenditure of unexpended balances, per haps appropriated originally for other purposes, or by authorizations to divert government receipts before they ever reach the treasury. Efforts are made to find general words which do not speak in terms of appropriations and cannot be readily calculated. \"The last session of the present congress for example, authorized additional expenditures out of balances of prior appropriations and from re ceipts to the amount of over $500,000, 000, including over $400,000,000 for the shipping board. The pressent ses-sion of congress by similar procedure

Simple Remedy for Drowsiness. Drowsiness in church is often caused by poor ventilation. Try to choose a seat where fresh air is assured. To keep awake in church when inclined to be drowsy, lift one foot a little away from the floor and keep it there. It is impossible to go to sleep with the foot poised in the air. This simple remedy is very effectual.

SURPRISE PARTIES

Two birthday parties in one week, who wouldn't enjoy the fun of growing old at that rate? Such was the good fortune of Wm. Fortune of this city, just this week. Last week it was whispered around that this genial brother would reach the age of 81 on Tuesday, March 14th. The Men's Fellowship Club of the Methodist cuurch conceived the idea that a Birthday Cake ought to adorn their regular Supper Monday night. Arrangements were made, the cake appeared, much to the surprise and delight of all present. An appropriate speech from Jos. Ekstrom, president of the club, brought forth a few well chosen remarks from Mr. Fortune.

Then, last Tuesday evening at the home of Mr. and and Mrs. Wm. Sloan of this city, about twenty-four- friends and neighbors surprised Mr. Fortune again. After a pleasant evening of music, singing, visiting and delicious refreshments, the Rev. Thos. Marshall in behalf of the assembled friends presented Mr. Fortune with a handsome pair of gold cuff links, much to the delight of the 81-year-old brother.

We refuse to believe our friend is the high school in assembly the last growing old. He is eighty-one years young. If the years are slipping by brother. We fancy we can hear him saying, "Grow old along with me the best is yet to be."

Electa Club To Give Card Party

Next week invitations will be issued by the Electa Club for a card party, which promises to be of unusual interest. It is hoped there will be a large attendance as the proceeds will be given to help erect the new O. E. S. Or-phanage Villa.
