Locate Body Of Murderer

Find Slayer Dead From Charge of Dynamite.

James Morris (Russian Jim), murderer of Stanley Laski (Zenlewicz) of Boyne Falls, has paid the penalty for his crime. The man who shot his friend, following a quarrel, attempted also to slay his friend's wife and seven children, died a few hours later, Wednesday, August 22, when he tripped and fell, accidentally exploding several dynamite caps and a quantity of dynamite. He was badly blown to pieces about the abdomen. The man's body was found Monday forenoon by Fred and Roy Hubbard, owners and operators of the Hubbard Bee farm adjoining the Laski farm. The men were going out to look after their bees when they discovered the body beside an old log.

Officers and residents of Boyne Falls believe Morris was attempting to hide near the Laski farm during Wednesday night and blow the house, children and mother to pieces.

Officers buried the body in the potter's field of the Boyne Falls cemetery Monday afternoon.

Morris is said to have murdered Laski because the latter refused to pay over to him $350 Morris alleges he gave to Laski for safekeeping while Morris was on a drunk. Laski denied he had been given the money and Morris then threatened to kill him and his entire family—wife and seven children.

Returning to the Laski farm during the morning hours last Wednesday, armed with a .38 calibre revolver. He killed Laski, firing two shots, one hitting him in the head and the other in the chest. He then turned the gun on Mrs. Laski, who was near her husband in the kitchen, but missed. A small son, hearing the shooting, rushed into the kitchen and Morris attempted to murder him. The lad leaped behind the kitchen stove and succeeded in eluding the bullets which the murderer fired at him. Going to the opposite side of the house, Morris fired several shots at two small children in bed. These crawled beneath the bed and escaped harm.

Morris was said to be a heavy drinker. He had worked for years in the camps between Boyne Falls and Alpena and had many friends among the Russian families in the camps and small farms. Friends of the murdered man declare he was an honest, hard working citizen, who was respected by all who knew him. They doubt Morris' charge concerning the money.

BIBLE STUDY FOR HIGH SCHOOL CREDIT

Last year nineteen pupils of the East Jordan High School received credit for Bible Study. Several of the best High Schools of the State will give credit the coming year for approved study in the Bible. The Bible is to be studied as history and as literature, and the examinations will be on that basis. Nothing of a denominational nature will enter into the instruction.

The Bible will be the text book, and a Syllabus of Bible Study published by the State Superintendent of Public Instruction and the Michigan State Teachers' Association will be used as a guide. This Syllabus is the outgrowth of the work of a committee appointed by the Michigan State Teachers' Ass'n, to work out a plan to meet the growing demand for Bible Study.

The class will meet once a week in the High School Building, and one quarter credit will be given those successfully completing the work for the year. The course for the coming year will be "Great Old Testament Characters." Rev. C. W. Sidebotham will be the instructor. The best educators of the State are stressing the importance of High School pupils acquainting themselves with the history and the literature of the Bible.

Completely at sea as far as any reliable clues are concerned, Gratiot county officials were balked in their efforts to capture the automobile gunman who held up the Bank of Edwell, near Riverdale. Some county officers seemed inclined to think that the holdup has some connection with the attempt to blackmail the bank weeks ago, when the cashier was ordered to place $500,000 in a pile near Pine river in Alma.

With the city council of Bessemer in a quandary over the question of a water supply, the mayor has decided to call a mass meeting of the citizens to sound out public opinion before any definite move is made. With the city already bonded to the extent of $215,000 on its water system, a failing of the supply wells has left it in a situation such that it will be without water in a short time, it is said.

Under the proposed new contract between the city of Alma and the Consumers' Power company, a boulevard lighting system will be installed on State street and Woodworth avenue. The contract provides for current of twice the present candle power at a cost of $1700 a year less than the contract which has just expired.

Gunderson Wins Shutout Victory

Petoskey Defeated 5 to 0 By Fast East Jordanites.

East Jordan's Northern Michigan League Base Ball Team practically assured itself of being the season's league leaders, by defeating the strong Petoskey team Sunday on the home grounds by a score of 5 to 0.

Gunderson was in the best of form striking out nineteen batters—and was backed by almost faultless support by his team-mates. Only at one time were the visitors in danger of scoring, when the base-runner was trying to reach home plate. Sam Kamradt found Thomas—Petoskey's star twirler—easy money, securing three hits out of his four times at bat. Gunderson also found him for two hits.

Thomas failed to get the support from his team-mates that East Jordan gave their pitcher, and their errors were costly.

The city commission of Monroe, accepted the offer of a nursery company of a tree to be planted in Soldiers and Sailors park as a memorial to Warren G. Harding. There now are a number of trees in the park, placed there in memory of Monroe county men who lost their lives in the World war. The park also contains the statue of General George Armstrong Custer, moved to the park from another section of the city. A committee of the commissioners was named to obtain a bronze tablet, suitably inscribed for the tree.

Decision as to the winner of the Edward Bok $100,000 prize for the best method of promoting world peace will be made January 1, 1924, by the co-operating council of military civic organizations, Grand Rapids, according to John G. Emery, representative on the council of the American Legion, who has returned from a visit to the committee headquarters in New York. The committee will have from November 15 to January 1, to inspect the communications received on the subject.

A proposal to bond Iron Mountain for $390,000 to buy the Iron Mountain Water Works company will be voted on at a special election September 10. The company is asking $210,000, but the city council has decided it will require $180,000 more to extend and improve the system. Lake Antoine, the source of the city's supply for 30 years, soon will become inadequate to meet Iron Mountain's development. If the bond issue passes, water will be taken from the Menominee river and filtered.

Michigan farmers will reduce their acreage of wheat 15.5 per cent, and rye, 9 per cent, according to a survey completed by Verne H. Church, federal statistician, and L. Whitney Watkins, state agricultural commissioner. The survey was undertaken in co-operation with the federal government at the suggestion of many farmers that they could better plan and regulate their planting if they could be informed in advance as to probable acreage.

All U. S. Girds for Coal Fight

Preparations For Emergency is Put At Top Speed.

Washington—Preparations of Government agencies to protect anthracite consumers from a fuel shortage were moving at accelerated speed as the threatened shutdown of hard coal mines drew nearer with no move from either side toward renewal of negotiations.

There still was a lingering hope in official quarters, that such a move would come. For that reason, the Coal Commission, as explained by Chairman John Hayes Hammond, was holding up its "emergency report" until the last minute in order that its conclusions might not work against the possibility of new overtures by either side. The last word on the Government's position was given by Mr. Hammond after a conference late yesterday with President Coolidge, when he said the commission had no present intention of intervening further.

"We are going to let the miners and operators walk the floor by themselves for a while," he added.

Development of the Government's program for supplying fuel to anthracite consumers in event of a tie-up of the mines meanwhile went ahead today, while Frederick Wadleigh, Federal fuel distributor, completed arrangements for meeting representatives of the governors of 11 anthracite consuming states in New York. The Geological Survey was drawing up final data on the amount of fuel available as a substitute to offset the shortage in anthracite while the Bureau of Mines, had ready instructions for the public in the use of bituminous coal as a substitute.

The Department of Justice, through its agents, is known to be keeping a close watch in order to be prepared for any disorders. There was no indication of any change in the previously expressed view of the Administration that there was no legal authority by which the walkout itself might be prevented, but legal officers of the Government were understood to be preparing for any contingencies.

Apparently no word had been received in official quarters today to substantiate reports of a possible sympathetic strike by organized miners in the bituminous fields. Most officials were inclined to view such a possibility as remote, although it has not been lost sight of in the Government preparations to protect the public.

Chicago—Apprehension that a sympathetic strike in the soft coal fields in Illinois would follow an anthracite strike today was largely allayed following announcement of Frank Harrington, president of the Illinois Mine Workers, that there was no thought of suspension. Coal operators who met with mine-union officials here, said there was plenty bituminous coal above ground to supply any emergency in the Middle West.

GERMANY MUST PAY UP FIRST

France Refuses to Recede Till All Resistance Ceases.

Paris—Germany can obtain evacuation of the Ruhr only by paying reparations, she can assure attenuation of the rigors of the occupation by ceasing passive resistance, and she can win no reduction in the amount she owes France unless the Allied creditors of France see fit to give France credit for equal amounts on her war debts.

These are the conclusions of Premier Raymond Poincare's reply to Marquis Curzon's reparation note of recent date. The French government also expresses its belief that the Allies can agree on methods of bringing about the execution of the Versailles Treaty by continuing courteous negotiations.

The British proposals for a reestimation of Germany's capacity for payment, and Lord Curzon's suggestion that the question of the legality of the occupation of the Ruhr be referred to The Hague are rejected, and the French position is re-affirmed as remaining unchanged.

The Amende Honorable. This term originated in France in the Ninth century. Traitors were stripped of their shirts and, carrying a taper, were led to the court to solicit the mercy of God. Death usually followed this punishment.

Warning Halts March of 500

Members of Hooded Order Gather on Hill After Rioting.

Pittsburgh—The customary quiet prevails in the suburban village of Carnegie where one white-robed Klansman was killed, another man seriously wounded and an undetermined number hurt during hours of rioting precipitated by an attempt of Ku Klux Klansmen to parade through the village, after a spectacular demonstration on a nearby hill. The Klan offered $5,000 reward for the arrest and conviction of the killer.

Thomas R. Abbott, of Atlasburg, was shot through the head and died in a doctor's office a few moments later, and Stephen Jarzombek, a bystander, was seriously wounded. Others of the wounded included Klansmen and rioters. A few were taken to hospitals but the greater number were hurried away by their friends and no record left with the authorities.

Five hundred or more Knights of the Ku Klux Klan assembled on a hill overlooking the town. Chief Braun, of the Allegheny county detective force, immediately dispatched a deputy to the hill with orders to notify the Klan leaders that a demonstration in the village would not be permitted, and unless they dispersed he would "not be responsible for what might happen."

County officers arrested Patrick McDermott, a Carnegie undertaker, in connection with the shooting of Abbott. They also sent to the Allegheny county jail W. K. Flaherty and Joseph Joyce of Carnegie upon a charge of carrying concealed weapons. The Klansmen, arrested while directing automobiles to the Klan meeting, were each fined $10 for illegally carrying weapons. Sixteen men, who were taken from automobiles bearing the Klan insignia by Pittsburgh police after the rioting, were given their liberty.

10,000,000 DISABLED IN WAR

Statistics Show Germany To Be Worst Sufferer.

Geneva—That at least ten million combatants were disabled during the great war, is disclosed by the statistics issued by the International Labor Office, regarding the number of people in the principal belligerent countries now receiving disablement pensions. The figures are:

Germany	1,587,000
France	1,500,000
Great Britain	1,170,000
Italy	800,000
Russia	775,000
Poland	320,000
Jugoslavia	164,000
Austria	164,000
United States	157,000
Belgium	110,000
Rumania	100,000
Canada	45,000
New Zealand	20,000
Australia	15,000
Finland	10,000

This totals 7,124,000, but no official statistics are available from Turkey, Bulgaria, the Baltic States, Portugal, Hungary and Japan. There is ample evidence, however, says the bureau, that to put the total of disabled men in the World war at ten millions, would not be an over-statement.

He entered the war as a captain, and emerged a rear-admiral, chief of staff of the first squadron of the Japanese navy, with decoration of the Order of the Golden Kite, second class.

A wall of water from the broken dam demoralized railroad and automobile traffic and wire communication in the flooded area.

Says Britain Loses Trade. Williamstown, Mass.—Sir Edward Grigg of London, in a statement here took issue with the latest speech of M. Poincare of France. He also ordered that all shoes should have flat heels, and the police were instructed to enforce these regulations.

Washington—Completion of the two veteran bureau hospitals in California and the project at Aspinwall, Pa., will utilize all that remains of the $85,000,000 made available in the two Langley bills. At present, he said 50 per cent of the beds in bureau hospitals are vacant.

Carelessness on the part of telephone linemen came near causing a serious wreck when the loose end of a trolley wire caught in the wheel of a touring car jerking it out of the road where it grazed a telephone pole, went through a barb wire fence and half way across a vacant lot before it could be stopped.

School commences Sept. 3rd with Mr. Lee as Supt. Mr. Hill of Traverse City as Principal. The staff is composed of Edith Brown, Margaret Brockman, Clarinda Andrews, Mrs. Ruby Hill and Mrs. E. Holmes. All taught here last year except Mrs. Hill and Mrs. Brown.

Mystery shrouds several fires on farms in Novi township, near Northville. Barns on the farms of some well known farmers, have been destroyed, by incendiaries, it is believed, within a few days. The fires have resulted in a near panic and efforts to increase insurance as a result have led to investigation of the situation by insurance companies.

Barley Production Is of Great Importance

Nearly as Valuable as Corn in Fattening Cattle.

(Prepared by the United States Department of Agriculture.)

Barley production in the United States is undergoing some changes and is becoming of increasing importance in American agriculture, says the United States Department of Agriculture. Barley is finding a place in the feeding of live stock on the farms, where it is grown and is being grown largely for feed outside of regions where corn and oats do well. Under suitable conditions of soil and climate, barley yields more pounds of feed per acre than any other small grain.

Barley generally is considered about 90 to 95 per cent as valuable as corn for fattening live stock. Although it is a good feed for all stock, it should be crushed or rolled for sheep, hogs and all young stock. If ground fine, the flour produced makes mastication difficult and the animals do not like the grain as well and eat less of it than when rolled. It should not be the only grain in a heavy ration for young pigs, as the hulls irritate the digestive system. It is often used in preference to corn for show cattle, because it does not make such hard flesh.

Because of the more general recognition of the value of barley as a live stock feed, and because of its yielding ability and adaptation to some regions where other grains do not do well, barley is being grown on more farms and over a wider area in the United States than formerly, and less extensively in special areas. It is likely also that the proportion of barley consumed on the farm where grown will continue to increase.

SCHOOL DAYS

Uncommon Sense — By JOHN BLAKE

LEARN TO AIM

BEFORE the soldier is permitted to shoot his rifle he is taught to aim it. Over and over again he must practice holding his weapon, and sighting it.

It is discouraging work. With the target before him the recruit naturally wants to try to hit it.

But to permit him to fire too soon would be fatal to his efficiency. He will never shoot well unless he first learns to shoot correctly.

And the long drill in holding the rifle properly, and aiming it properly is never wasted.

These rules are as necessary in life as they are on the rifle range.

It is easy enough to aim high, but it is not easy to reach your target.

Before you actually set out to accomplish your ambition you must learn how to accomplish it. This means long and often uninteresting toil, but without it all your aiming at the target will be useless.

There can be no success without training, severe and continuous.

You can no more become a bank president without learning how to be a bank president than you can go to Chicago without knowing how to get there.

Emerson's advice to hitch your wagon to a star is excellent advice, but it would have been of more practical value if he had added a few details as to how it is to be accomplished.

Do not begrudge the months of the weeks or the years that you spend in learning how to aim. You'll get far more hits if you put in hard work at training than you will if you fire before you have learned to hold your rifle.

Genius can sometimes fire at sight, but even genius often misses unless it learns how to fire. And genius succeeds more often than does ordinary ability because it is great enough to recognize the value of hard work.

No one worked harder than did Michael Angelo or Keats or any of the geniuses whose names will endure forever.

Aim as high as you can, always. But always learn how to aim before you fire.

MEN YOU MAY MARRY

By E. R. PEYSER

Has a man like this proposed to you?

Symptoms: History is an open book to him. One of his first remarks to you was, "Don't you dots on history?" Statistics are at his finger tips. Dates? Why! He eats them dried after millions of years! Shout out any number to him and he will emit the name of some obscure happening or birth of some great man that happened in that division of time. His street walks are one great orgy, for the numbers on the cars and on the houses all mean history—history to him! A telephone number makes him thrill with past historical facts. Think of it! He really knows about everything: what's the matter with the world, why men have no jobs and why they have—

Has Anyone Laughed At You Because

You are fussy about the way folk handle books!

"Don't be an old fuss!" This is what the unbookish and sometimes the bookish hurl at you. Never mind! You really love a book and you can't stand being a witness to its mutilations. Books mean something to you—probably the laughers couldn't stand seeing you hurt their field glasses, or their tennis rackets, etc. A book is a marvelously contrived thing, going through hundreds of processes between the brain of the writer and store counter. You, owning it, appreciate it, and appreciation is jealous always of depreciation. Books are one of the greatest of man's possessions and as such deserve a little more than casual care, especially by book-lovers and collectors!

Your get-away here is: At the worst—you are over-"fussy" over something worth being "fussy" about.

Something to Think About

By F. A. WALKER

MENTAL EXPLOSIONS

IF IN any chance you should fall into the lamentable habit of becoming truculent, peevish, ill-humored and sharp-tongued in moments of trial, take a new tack and head straight for the delectable port of good-will.

Nothing is more detrimental to the individual happiness and success than mental hysterics, whether they be of a mild or severe form. Often, in spite of himself, the victim of passionate outbursts is plunged into a sea of trouble from which he cannot extricate himself without loss of friends and self respect.

Men and women have fallen from high estates by allowing a burst of anger to sweep them off their mental balance and been taught a very trenchant principle for future judgment and action, in most cases, however, too late to be of any use to them.

If you will look about you, you will see them among the sad-faced and forlorn, eking out a bare existence in a lowly station from which they are unable to rise because of their ungovernable spirit.

When an automobile has been wrecked by a careless driver it serves as a warning to others, but it fails to restore the car.

Just so do foolish persons who have ruined their life prospects through impetuous impulse serve as warnings to the observing and thoughtful.

—And yet the world goes on, a large part of it unmindful of what is taking place under its very eyes.

The true conclusion is obvious: if you will apply the experience of others to yourself, profit by their follies and hold your spirit in check when it is about to burst forth into a violent quake, you will have nothing to fear.

To the man or woman who can control his or her action in the vital moment the world is willing to yield its riches.

The eyes of employers ever watching such men and women, taking note of their worthiness.

Such persons do not have to beg for opportunity or advancement.

In matters of art, intellect and self-restraint they are always at home, sure of themselves in every field of human endeavor, confident that they can "make good," even when opposing winds beat hardest against them in their darkest night.

To Prevent Robbing by Strong Colonies of Bees

To avoid strong colonies of bees robbing the weak colonies of their supply of nectar, it is necessary to reduce the entrance to the hives of the weak colonies or to unite two of the weak colonies to make one strong one, says A. C. Burrill, extension entomologist of the Missouri college of agriculture. If the colony is weak for some other reason than that due to being a new swarm, it is a good thing to consider re-queening at least by the middle of August, although some do this in July. Colonies so re-queened go through the winter best and make better yields the next year. Keep all comb trimmings or drippings of honey in a covered pail and not scattered about. This cleanliness applies especially to times when there is no nectar flow.

To stop bees from robbing contract the entry of any weak colony being robbed to a space so small that hardly more than one bee can go through at a time. The opening may have to be larger if it is very hot, for ventilation; but in that case, hay, straw, coarse weeds or grass clippings may be thrown in front of the entrance. During fierce robbing, sprinkle the bees with cold water.

Mr. and Mrs. Bobwhite Are Friends or Farmer

Mr. and Mrs. Bob White and their numerous young ones are the best friends a farmer can have, for they eat nothing but waste grain and injurious insects and weed seed. Half of their bill of fare is composed of our worst pests, such as crab, cockspur, witch and foxtail grasses, sheep sorrel, smartweed, lamb's quarters, bindweed, pigweed, corn cockle, chickweed, partridge pea, beggar lice, nail grass, rib grass, and ragweed. So you see they are first assistants to the weed commissioner. Then, too, they eat some wild fruit, some leaf buds, and a great many harmful insects, such as locust, chinch bug, cotton worm, army worm, spotted red cucumber beetles, bean leaf beetle, squash ladybug, may beetles, clover leaf weevil, and cutworms. One man estimated that every quail on his farm was worth $5 apiece to him as a weed seed and insect destroyer.

Black Teeth of Pigs Has No Special Significance

The belief that black teeth often found in the mouth of new-born pigs have some dire detrimental effect upon the animals, seems to be about as prevalent as is belief in "hollow horn" and "wolf in the tail," two mythical diseases often spoken of in the southern states. Let it be understood that the black color of the small, sharp teeth referred to has no special significance and such teeth need not be removed on that account. As the teeth are as sharp as needles, however, and frequently lacerate the gums, or injure the teats of the sow, or wound the faces of the little pig when fighting, they should be clipped off at birth. This must be most carefully done.

Cloze Confinement Will Cure Hen of Broodiness

Broodiness of hens means decreased egg production. Hens that want to set in summer may be broken up by close confinement in a wire bottom coop, built under a shade tree about three feet above ground. Feed the fowls well meantime. Starving a broody hen doesn't pay because she must be fed up again before she will lay. Feed on regular laying mash and whole grain and keep plenty of fresh water within reach. Under these conditions most broody hens will give it up in three to five days.

The Branding Iron

This young woman by the fireplace had just that panther-air of perilous quietness. She was very haggard, very thin; she wore her massive black hair drawn away hideously from brow and temple, and out of this lean, unshaded face a pair of deep eyes looked drowsily, dangerously. Her mouth was straightened into an expression of proud bitterness, her round chin thrust forward; there was a deep, scowling line that rose from the bridge of her straight, short nose almost to the roots of her hair. It cut across a splendidly modeled brow. She was very graceful, if such a bundle of bones might be said to have any grace. Her pose was arresting. There was a tragic force and attraction about her.

The man by the door appraised her carefully between his narrowed lids. He kept in mind the remembered melody of her voice, and, after a few moments, he strolled across the floor and came up to her.

"Will you dance?" he said. He had a very charming and subtle smile, a very charming and sympathetic look. The woman was startled, color rose into her face. She stared at him.

"I'm not dancing, Mr. Morena," she answered. "You know my name," smiled Morena; "and I don't know yours. I've been on Mr. Yarnall's ranch for a month. Why haven't I seen you?"

"Per not lookin', I suppose." She had given him that one startled glance, and now she had turned her eyes back to the dancers and wore a grim, contemptuous air. Her speeches, though they were cut into short, crisp words, were full of muscle of a sharp, metallic quality different from the tone of her other speech, but quite as beautifully expressive.

"May I smoke?" asked Morena. He was still smiling his charming smile and watching her out of the corners of his eyes.

"I'm not hinderin' you any," said she. Morena smiled deeper. He took some time making and lighting his cigarette. "You don't smoke yourself?" he asked.

"No." "Nor dance?" "No." "Nor behave prettily to polite young men?"

Again the woman looked at him. "You ain't no awful young, are you?" He laughed aloud. "I amuse you, don't I? Well, I'm not always so ill-fired funny," drawled the creature, lowering her head a little.

"No. I've heard that you're not. You rather run things here, I gather; got the boys 'plumb scared'?" "Did Mr. Yarnall tell you that?"

"Yes. I've just in the last few minutes remembered who you are. You're Jane. You cook for the outfit, and Yarnall was telling us the other night how he sent one of the boys out for a cook, the last one, a man, having been beaten up, and, how the boy had brought you back behind him on his saddle. He said you'd kept order for him ever since, were better than a foreman. Who was the man you threw out tonight?"

"Perhaps," drawled Jane, "he was just a feller who asked too many questions?"

Again Morena's smile deepened into his cheeks. "You must pardon me, Miss Jane," he said in his murmuring, cultivated voice. "You see, I've had a great misfortune. I've never been in your West. I've lived in New York, where good manners haven't time or space to flourish. I hadn't the least intention of being impertinent. Do you want me to go?"

He moved as if to leave her, and she did not lift a finger to detain him. "I'm not carin'. Do as you please," she said with entire indifference.

"Oh," said Morena, looking back at her, "I don't stay where people are 'not carin'." She gave him an extraordinarily intelligent look. "I should say that's the only place you'd be wantin' to stay in at all—where you're not exactly urged to come," she said.

Morena flushed and his lids flickered. He was for an instant absurdly inclined to anger and made two or Valuable Gum Mines. Probably the only gum mines in the world are in New Zealand, where there is a whole district in which fossilized gum from trees that died centuries ago is found a few feet below the surface. three steps away. But he came back. He bowed and spoke as he would have spoken to a great lady, suavely, deferentially. "Goodnight. I wish I could think that you have enjoyed our talk as greatly as I have, Miss Jane. I should very much like to be allowed to repeat it. May I be stupidly personal and tell you that you are very beautiful?" He bowed, gave her an upward look and went out, finding his way cleverly among the dancers.

Outside, in the moonlit court, he stood, threw back his head and laughed, not loudly but consumedly. He was remembering her white face of mute astonishment. She looked almost as if his compliment had given her sharp pain.

Morena went laughing to his room in the opposite wing. He wanted to describe the interview to his wife.

Betty Morena was sitting in a rustic chair before an open fire, smoking a cigarette. She was a short woman, so slenderly, even narrowly built, as to appear overgrown, and she was a mature woman so immaturely shaped and featured as to appear hardly more than a child. Her curly russet hair was parted at the side, her wide, long-lashed eyes were set far apart, her nose was really a finely modeled snub—more, a boy's nose even to a light sprinkling of freckles—and her mouth was provokingly the soft, red mouth of a sorrowful child. She lounged far down in her chair, her slight legs clad in riding-breeches of perfect cut, stretched out straight, her limber arms along the arms of the chair, her chin sunk on her flat chest, and her big, clear eyes staring into the fire. It was an odd figure of a wife for Jasper Morena, a Jew of thirty-eight, producer and manager of plays.

When Betty Kane had run away with him there had been lamentation and rage in the houses of Kane and Morena. To the pride of an old Hebrew family, the marriage even of this wandering son with a Gentile was fully as degrading as to the pride of the old Tory family was the marriage with a Jew. Her perverse Gaelic blood, on fire with the insults heaped upon her lover, Betty, seventeen years old, romantic, clever, would have walked over flint to give her hand to him. That was ten years ago. Now, when Jasper came into her room, she drew her quick brows together, puffed at her cigarette, and blinked as though she was looking at something distasteful and at the same time rather alarming.

"Have they stopped dancing, Jasper?" she asked in a voice that was at once brusque and soft. Jasper rubbed his hands delightedly. He was still merry, and came to stand

"Have You Ever Noticed Jane, Who Cooks for the Outfit, Betty?"

near the fire, looking down at her with eyes entirely kind and admiring. "Have you ever noticed Jane, who cooks for the outfit, Betty?"

"Yes. She's horrible." "She's extraordinary, and I mean to get hold of her for Luck's Day. Did you read it?"

"The play is absolutely dependent on the leading part and I have found it simply impossible to fill. Now, here's a woman of extraordinary grace and beauty—"

Betty lifted skeptical eyebrows, twisted her limber mouth, but forbore to contradict.

"And with a magical voice—a woman who not only looks the part, but is it. You remember Luck's heroine?" Betty flicked off the ash of her cigarette and looked away. "A savage, isn't she? The man has her tamed, takes her back to London, and there gives her cause for jealousy and she springs on him—yes, I remember. This woman, Jane, is absolutely without education and hasn't a notion of acting, I suppose."

Jasper rubbed his hands with increased delight. "Not a notion and she murders the king's English. But she is Luck's savage and—in spite of your eyebrows, Betty—she is beautiful. I can school her. It will take money, no end of patience, but I can do it. It's one of the things I can do. But, of course, there's the initial difficulty of persuading her to try it. That oughtn't to be any difficulty at all. Of course she'll jump at the chance."

"I'm not so sure. She was ready to throw me out of the kitchen tonight. She is really a virago. Do you know what one of the men said about her? Jasper laughed and imitated the grove western drawl. "Jane's plumb movin' to me. She's about halfway between 'You go to b—' and 'You take me in your arms to rest.'"

Betty smiled. Her smile was vastly more mature than her appearance. It was clever and cynical and cold. The Oriental, looking down at her, lost his merriment.

"Do you feel better, dear?" he asked timidly. "Do you think you will be able to go back next week?" She stood up as he came nearer and walked over to the little table that played the part of dressing table under a wavy mirror. "Oh, yes. I am quite well. I don't think the doctors have much sense. I'm sure I hadn't anything like a nervous breakdown. I was just tired out."

Jasper drew back the hand whose touch she had eluded, and nervously, his long supple fingers a little unsteady, lighted a cigarette. At that moment he did not look like a spider, but like a lover who has been hurt. Betty could see in the mirror a distorted image of his dejected gracefulness, but entirely unmoved, she put up her thin, brown hands and began to take the pins out of her hair. "I like your Jane experiment," she said. "Let me know how you get on with it and whether I can help. I shall have to turn in now. I'm dead beat. Yarnall took me halfway up the mountain and back. Goodnight."

Jasper looked at her, then pressed his lips into a straight line and went to the door which led from her bedroom to his. He said "Goodnight" in a low tone, glanced at her over his shoulder, and went out.

Betty waited an instant, then slowly unlaced her heavy, knee-high boots, took them off, and began to walk to and fro on stocking feet, hands clasped behind her back. With her curly hair all about her face and shoulders, she looked like a wild, extravagantly naughty schoolgirl, a girl in a wicked temper, a rebel against authority. In fact, she was rejoicing that this horrible enforced visit to the West was all but over. One week more! She was almost at an end of her endurance. How she hated the beautiful white night outside, those mountain peaks, the sound of that rapid river, the stillness of sagebrush, the voice of the big pines! What a malevolent trick of fate that Jasper should have brought her to Wyoming, that the doctor had insisted upon at least a month of just this life. "Take her west," he had said, and Betty, lying limp and white in her bed, her small head sunk into the pillow, had jerked from head to foot. "Take her west. I know a ranch in Wyoming—Yarnall's. She'll get outdoor exercise, tonic air, sound sleep, release from all these pestiferous details, like a cloud of flies, that sting women's nerves to death. Don't pay any attention to whether she likes it or not. Let her behave like a naughty child, let her kick and scream and cry. Kick her up, Morena, and carry her off. Do you hear? Don't let her make you change your plans." The doctor had seen his patient's convulsive jerk. "Pack her up. Make your reservations and go straight to Buck Yarnall's ranch, Lazy-Y—that's his brand, I believe—Middle Fork, Wyoming. I'll send him a wire. He knows me. She needs all outdoors to run about in. She needs jogging around all day through the sagebrush on a cow-pony in that sun; she needs the smell of a camp-fire—Gad! wish I could get back to it myself."

Betty, having heard this out, began to laugh. She laughed till they gave her something to keep her quiet. But, except for that laughter, she had made no protest whatever; she did not "kick and scream and cry." In fact, though she looked like a child, she was not at all inclined to such exhibitions. This doctor had not seen her through her recent ordeal. Two years before her breakdown, Jasper had been terribly hurt in an automobile accident, and Betty had come to him at the hospital, had waited, as white as a snow-charge, for the result of the examination. They had told her emphatically that there was no hope. Jasper Morena could not live for more than a few days. She must not allow herself to hope. He might or might not regain consciousness.

Betty had listened with her white, rigid, child face, had thanked them, had gone home. There in her exquisite, little sitting room above Central park, she had sat at her desk and written a few lines on gray note paper. "Jasper is dying," she had written. "By the time you get this, he will be dead. If you can forgive me for having failed in courage last year, come back. What I have been to you before I will be again, only this time we can love openly. Come back."

Then she had dropped her head on the desk and cried. Afterward she had addressed her letter to a certain Prosper Gael. The letter went to Wyoming.

Three days later Jasper regained consciousness and began slowly to return to health. He had the tenacious vitality of his race, and, in his own spirit, an iron will to live. He kept Betty beside his bed for hours, and held her cold hand in his long sensitive one, and he stared at her under his lashes till she thought she must go mad. But she did not. She nursed him through an interminable convalescence. She received Prosper, very early in this convalescence, by her husband's bed, and Jasper had murmured gratitude for the emotion that threatened to overwhelm his friend. It was not till some time after Morena's complete recovery that she had snapped like a broken icicle. And then, forsooth, they had sent her to Wyoming to get back her health!

Moving passed away some of her restlessness, Betty stopped by the cabin window and pushed aside one of the aloft, calico curtains. She looked out on the court. A tall woman had just pulled up a bucket of water from the well and had emptied it into a picher. She finished, let the bucket drop with a whirr and a clash, and raised her head. For a second she and Jasper Morena's wife looked at each other. Betty nodded, smiled, and drew the curtain close.

CHAPTER II

Jane.

After that night, there began a sort of persecution, skillfully conducted by Jasper and Betty, against the ferocity of Jane. It was a persecution impossible to imagine in any other setting, even the social simplicity of Lazy-Y found itself a trifle amused. For Jasper, the stately Jewish figure, would carry pails of water for Jane from the well to the kitchen, would help her in the vegetable garden, and to straighten out her recalcitrant stove-pipe; Betty would put on an apron a mile too large, to wash dishes and shell peas. She would sit on the kitchen table swinging her long, childlike legs and chatter amiably. Jasper talked, too, to the virago, talked delightfully, about horses and dogs—he had a charming gift of humorous observation—talked about hunting and big-game shooting, about trapping, about travel, and, at last, about plays. Undoubtedly Jane listened. Sometimes she laughed. Once in a while she ejaculated, musically, "Well!" Occasionally she swore.

One afternoon he met her riding home from an errand to a neighboring ranch, and, turning his horse, rode with her. In worn coroduroy skirt, flannel shirt, and gray sombrero, she looked like a handsome, haggard boy, and, that afternoon, there was a certain unusual wistfulness in her eyes, and her mouth had relaxed a little from its bitterness. Perhaps it was the beauty of a clear, keen summer day; without doubt, also, she was touched by the courteous pleasure of his greeting and by his giving up his ride in order to accompany her. She even went from her silence and, for the first time, really talked to him. And she spoke, too, in a new manner, using her beautiful voice with beautiful carefulness. It was like a master-musician who, after a long illness, takes up his beloved instrument and tentatively tests his shaken powers. Jasper had much ado to keep his surprise to himself, for the rough, ranch girl could speak pure enough English if she would.

"You and your wife are leaving soon?" she asked him, and, when he nodded, she gave a sigh. "I'll be missing you," she said, throwing away her brusquerie like a rag with which she was done. "You've been company for me. You've made use of lots of patience and courage, but I have really liked it. I've not got the ways of being sociable and I don't know that I want ever to get them. I am not seeking for friends. There isn't another person on the ranch that would dare talk to me as you and Mrs. Morena have talked. They don't know anything about me here and I don't mean that they should know." She paused, then gave way to an impulse of confidence. "One of the boys asked me to marry him. He came and shouted it through the window and I caught him with a pan of water." She sighed. "I don't know rightly if he meant it for a joke or not, but the laugh wasn't on me."

Jasper controlled his laughter, then saw the dry humor of her eyes and lips and let out his mirth.

"Why, sir," said Jane, "you'd be surprised at the foolishness of men. Sometimes it seems that, just for pure contrariness, they want to marry her that least wants them about. The day I came tramping into this valley, I stopped for food at the ranch of an old bachelor down yonder at the ford. And he invited me to be his wife while I was drinking a glass of water from his well. He told me how much money he had and said he'd start my stove for me winter mornings. There's a good husband! And he was sure kind to me even when I told him 'no.' 'Twas that same evening that the boy from Lazy-Y rode in and claimed me for a cook. Mr. Yarnall is a trusting man. He took me and didn't ask any questions. I told him I was 'Jane,' and that I wasn't planning to let him know more. He hasn't asked me another question since. He's a gentleman, I figure it, and he's kind of quiet himself about what he was before he came to this country. He's a man of fifty and he has lots back of him, only he's taken a fresh start." She sighed. "Folks like you and Betty seem awfully open-hearted. It's living in cities, I suppose, where every one knows every one else so well."

This astonishing picture of the candid simplicity of New York's social life absorbed Jasper's attention for some time.

"Wouldn't you like to live in a city, Jane?" She laughed her short, boyish "Hoo!" "It isn't what I would like, Mr. Morena," she said. "Why, I'd like to see the world. I would like to be that fellow who was condemned to wander all over the earth and never to die. He was a Jew, too, wasn't he?"

Jasper flushed. People were not in the habit of making direct reference to his nationality, and, being an Israelite who had early cut himself off with dislike from his own people and cultivated the society of Gentiles, "a man without a country," he was acutely sensitive.

"The Wandering Jew? Yes. Where did you ever hear of him?"

"I read his story," she answered absently; "an awful long one, but interesting about lots of people, by Eugene Sue."

Jasper's lips fell apart and he stared. She had spoken unwittingly and he could see that she was not thinking of him, that she was far away, staring beyond her horse's head into the broad, sunset-brightened west.

"Where were you schooled?" he asked her. He had brought her back and her face stiffened. She gave him a startled, almost angry look, dug her heels into her horse and broke into a gallop; nor could he win from her another word.

A few days before he left, he took Yarnall into his confidence. At first the rancher would do nothing but laugh. "Jane on the boards! That's a notion!" followed by explosion after explosion of mirth. The Jew waited, patient, pliant, smiling, and then enumerated his reasons. He talked to Yarnall for an hour, at the end of which time, Yarnall, his eyes still twinkling, set for Jane.

The two men sat in a log-walled room, known as the office. Yarnall's big desk crowded a stove. There was no other furniture except shelves and a box seat beneath a window. Jasper sat on the end of the desk, swinging his slim, well-booted leg; Yarnall, stocky, gray, shabby, weather-beaten, leaned back in his wicker chair. The door which Jasper faced was directly behind Yarnall. When Jane opened it, he turned.

The girl looked grim and a little pale. She was evidently frightened.

The Girl Looked Grim and a Little Pale.

This summons from Yarnall suggested dismissal or reproof. She came around to face him and stood there, looking fierce and graceful, her head lowered, staring gloomily at him from under her brows. To Jasper she gave not so much as a glance.

"Well, Jane, I fancy I shall have to let you go," said Yarnall. He was not above tormenting the wildcat. Female ferocity always excites the tensing boy in a man. "You're getting too ambitious for us. You see, once these rich New Yorkers take you up, you're no more use to a plain ranchman like me."

"What are you drivin' at?" asked Jane. "Do let me explain it to her, Yarnall!" Jasper snapped his elastic fingers, color had risen to his face, and he looked annoyed. "Miss Jane, won't you sit down?"

Jane turned her deep, indignant eyes upon him. "Are you and your wife the rich New Yorkers he says are takin' me up?"

"No, no. He's joking. This is a serious business. It's of vital importance to me and it ought to be of vital importance to you. Please do sit down!" Jane took a long step back and sat down on the settle under the long, horizontal window. She folded her hands on her knee and looked up at Morena. She had transferred her attention completely to him. Yarnall watched them. He was an Englishman of much experience and this picture of the skillful, cultivated, handsome Jew angling deftly for the gaunt, young savage diverted him hugely. He screwed up his eyes to get a picture of it.

"I am a producer and manager of plays," said Jasper, "which means that I take a play written by a more gifted man and arrange it for the stage. Have you ever seen a play?" "No, sir." "But you have some idea what they are?"

"Yes. I have read them. Shakespeare wrote quite a lot of that kind of talking pieces, didn't he?" Jasper was less surprised than Yarnall. "At present I have a play on my hands which is a very brilliant and promising piece of work, but which I have been unable to produce for lack of a heroine. There isn't an actress on my list that can take the part and do it justice. Now, Miss Jane, I believe that with some training you could take it to perfection. My wife and I would like to take you to New York, paying all your expenses, of course, and put you into training at once. It would take a year's hard work to get you fitted for the part. Then next fall we could bring out the play and I think I can promise you success and fame and wealth in no small measure. I don't know you very well; I don't know whether or not you are ambitious; but I do know that every woman must love beauty and ease and knowledge and experience. For what else," he smiled, "did Eve eat the apple? All these you can have if you will let us take you East. Of course, if I find you cannot take this part, I will hold myself accountable for you. I will not let you be a loser in any way by the experiment. With your beauty"—Yarnall fell back in his chair and gaped from the excited speaker to the silent listener—"and your extraordinary voice, and your magnetism, you must be especially fitted for a career of some kind. I promise to find you your career."

Every drop of blood had fallen from Jane's face and the rough hands on her knee were locked together.

"What part," she asked in a quick, low voice, "is this that you think I could learn to do?"

Jasper changed his position. He came nearer and spoke more rapidly. "It is the story of a girl, a savage girl, whom a man takes up and trains. He trains her as a professional might train a lioness. It is a passion with him to break spirits and shape them to his will. He trains her with coaxing and lashing—not actual lashing, though I believe in one place he does come near to beating her—and he gets her broken so that she lies at his feet and eats out of his hand. All this, you understand, while he's an exile from his own world. Then, in the second act—that is the second part of the play—he takes his tamed lioness back to civilization. They go to London and there the woman does his training infinite credit. She is extraordinarily beautiful; she is civilized, successful, courted. Her eccentricities only add to her charm. So it goes on very prettily for a while. Then he makes a mistake. He blunders very badly. He gives his lioness cause for jealousy and—to come to the point—she flies at his throat. You see, he hadn't really tamed her. She was under the skin, a lioness, a beast, at heart."

COMB SAGE TEA
INTO GRAY HAIR
Darkens Beautifully and Restores its Natural Color and Lustre At Once

Common garden sage brewed into a heavy tea, with sulphur and alcohol added, will turn gray, streaked and faded hair beautifully dark and luxuriant. Mixing the Sage Tea and Sulphur recipe at home, though, is troublesome. An easier way is to get the ready-to-use preparation improved by the addition of other ingredients in a large bottle, at little cost, at drug stores, known as "Wyeth's Sage and Sulphur Compound," thus avoiding a lot of mess.

While gray, faded hair is not sinful, we all desire to retain our youthful appearance and attractiveness. By darkening your hair with Wyeth's Sage and Sulphur Compound, no one can tell, because it does it so naturally, so evenly. You just dampen a sponge or soft brush with it and draw this through your hair, taking one small strand at a time; by morning all gray hairs have disappeared. After another application or two your hair becomes beautifully dark, glossy, soft and luxuriant and you appear years younger.

Drink Water If Kidneys Bother
Take a Tablespoonful of Salts if Back Pains or Bladder is Irritated

Flush your kidneys by drinking a quart of water each day, also take salts occasionally, says a noted authority, who tells us that too much rich food forms acids which almost paralyze the kidneys in their efforts to expel it from the blood. They become sluggish and weaken; then you may suffer with a dull misery in the kidney region, sharp pains in the back or sick headache, dizziness, your stomach sour, tongue coated, and when the weather is bad you have rheumatic twinges. The urine gets cloudy, full of sediment; the channels often get sore and irritated, obliging you to seek relief two or three times during the night. To help neutralize these irritating acids; to help cleanse the kidneys and flush out the body's urinous waste, get four ounces of Jad Salts from any pharmacy here. Take a tablespoonful in a glass of water before breakfast for a few days, and your kidneys may then act fine. This famous salt is made from the acid of grapes and lemon juice, combined with lithia, and has been used for years to help flush and stimulate sluggish kidneys; also to neutralize the acids in the system so they no longer irritate, thus often relieving bladder weakness. Jad Salts is inexpensive; can not injure and makes a delightful effervescent lithia-water drink. By all means have your physician examine your kidneys at least twice a year.

"I never hawl out my husband for dropping cigar ashes on the carpet or jerking back the lace curtains so he can see out or using the guest towel, or things like that, because I want him to feel his home is a place he is free to do just as he pleases," said a careful housewife to her neighbor.—Chicago American.

To Be Happy at Work.
If you are the sort of woman who cannot work well except under pleasant conditions, it is economy to buy the things that mean this to you. It may only be pretty curtains, light woodwork or a certain kind of wallpaper, but it means everything to certain types of women and results in much more being accomplished.

"Turn Again."
Dick Whittington and his cat are known to every British child. How they were leaving London and heard Row bells ring "turn again Whittington," and how he did return to fame and fortune. Yet Italy, Brittany, Norway and Russia have similar tales with a differently named hero. Did they borrow them from us? The same story appeared in a book written by a Persian about 60 years before our Dick Whittington was born.

She Was "Jilted."
When I was in the fifth grade at school there was a boy who was very fond of me. Every morning I found some candy in my desk. At Christmas I received a large box of candy from him. This pleased me very much, but his candy game didn't last long. After Christmas our room received a newcomer. She was beautiful and immediately caught his eye. Every morning after her arrival there no longer was candy in my desk, but in hers.—Chicago Journal.

Powdered Hellebore Is Good to Kill Fly Larvae
One of the most common breeding places of the common house fly is the manure pile, which it is not always possible to spread on the land frequently enough to bring about destruction of the contained larvae. The addition of chemicals to manure for the purpose of destroying these larvae has its limitation, since some substances used for this purpose destroy the fertilizer value of the manure, others are so poisonous that there is danger of poisoning farm animals and poultry, while others are harmful to vegetation when applied to the land.
After a careful study of a large number of chemicals, the United States Department of Agriculture has found that powdered hellebore, one-half pound in ten gallons of water, will prevent the development of fly larvae in eight bushels of manure and possesses none of the objectionable features mentioned above. Borax is also a satisfactory chemical for use in manure which is not applied too thickly to the land. Too much borax in the soil will interfere with plant growth when used. Clean premises, closed garbage cans, screened manure pits and outdoor fly traps will also pay in fly time.—R. F. Bourne, Veterinary Department, Colorado Agricultural College.

Profitable Business in Feeding Orphaned Pigs
Orphaned pigs that rob a hog raiser of a lot of good money every year can be made into a profitable business with a little extra work, if they are not orphaned too young. If they are purebreds it will be more worth while to try to raise them than otherwise, although it has been found to pay with any kind of pigs.
Orphaned pigs at the Iowa station have been found to put on gains at a lesser outlay of dry matter per unit than the combined sow and suckling litter. The pigs do well when fed whole cows' milk for the first few days, followed by buttermilk later. It is estimated that an orphaned litter is worth from $1 to $4 per pig, and this makes it worth while to use a little extra care.
Some pointers in feeding orphaned pigs are: Be sure to feed them adequate rations; feed often enough and regularly; feed sufficient vitamins; allow sunlight and be sanitary; encourage the pigs to get plenty of exercise; give plenty of clean, water, and keep the pigs warm in well-ventilated quarters.

USE SULPHUR TO HEAL YOUR SKIN

Broken Out Skin and Itching Eczema Helped Over Night

For unsightly skin eruptions, rash or blotches on face, neck, arms or body, you do not have to wait for relief from torture or embarrassment, declares a noted skin specialist. Apply a little Mentho-Sulphur and improvement shows next day.
—Because of its germ destroying properties, nothing has ever been found to take the place of this sulphur preparation. The moment you apply it healing begins. Only those who have had unsightly skin troubles can know the delight this Mentho-Sulphur brings. Even fiery, itching eczema is dried right up.
Get a small jar of Rowley Mentho-Sulphur from any good druggist and use it like cold cream.
