A Tourist Park for East Jordan

Our Citizens Determined To Have One for Next Year.

While this little city has been slow in procuring a suitable place and developing a park for attracting and interesting the motorist, who, in many instances is keeping his eyes open for the ideal spot to establish his future summer vacation headquarters. A movement is now in progress for procuring a site and establishing one which will offer advantages that only a limited number of towns are in a position to.

The idea of a site with a good bathing beach where bath-houses can be built, and at the same time within range of modern conveniences which the city can offer, appears to have met with general approval, and the City Council, with the Mayor are now busy trying to work out a plan by which this can be accomplished in time to have it in readiness for next year.

About two weeks ago a petition was circulated, and inside of 48 hours had a list of signers which was a pleasant surprise to those who started it, and now it is up to these signers and every other citizen who has the future welfare of East Jordan at heart, to back up the city officials in any plan which they decide is most practical to obtain the results.

It seems there is a handicap, under the City Charter, to appropriate the necessary funds from this year's taxes, owing to not having included such an expenditure in the original budget for the year.

One suggestion made seems possibly practical, and that is—that the Assessment Roll be used as a basis of valuations and that property owners be asked to voluntarily pay into the Treasury of the City an amount of 2 mills ($2.00 per $1000) on his assessed valuation, and that it be understood that the next summer's tax will be spread at 2 mills less than it would otherwise be. Should no better plan be arrived at, let's get busy and do this, and whatever we do let's do it now. So when we get the final report from our city officials, let's go, for this project is an important step in East Jordan's future. "Our town is what we make it," and there is no good reason why we should not have hundreds of tourists here during the summer months, buying the necessities of life from our local people, where now we have but a very few. It will do for us what it is doing for many Michigan towns, and we who own property will profit by it.

LEAGUE OF WOMEN VOTERS FORM COUNTY ORGANIZATION

Mrs. Helen Brooks Davis of Saginaw, representing the State League of Women Voters, gave a very interesting and instructive address last Friday afternoon at the Boyne City Presbyterian Church. About fifty of the representative women of the county were present and showed their interest by asking questions and discussing the work and several gave their names and dues as members of the State League.

As all the effort of the League at present is bent toward arousing people to register and vote, a county committee was elected to work through existing organizations in this movement. The members of the committee are Mrs. Brayton Saltonstall, Charlevoix, Mrs. Frank Kaden, Boyne City, and Mrs. J. E. Secord, East Jordan.

The League of Women Voters is the only organization in the U. S. which has for its purpose the education of women for citizenship. It has nearly 10,000,000 members. It is not a political party. It is not a woman's party. It urges its members to enroll in political parties. It embraces women of every kind of belief and every kind of politics.

The League has very definite plans about getting definite information from local candidates as to their attitude on different questions. It does not endorse candidates but it does endorse legislation and policies.

We are ruled by a minority because such a small percentage of the eligible voters vote. Bad and dishonest politicians are elected by good people who stay at home.

The goal of the league is to make our country a better place in which to live and bring up our children.

A Musical Event by a Great Violinist.

The immortal "Largo" by Handel, as interpreted by Prof. Harry Miller, violinist, of Chicago, last Sunday morning at the Presbyterian Church, was a sermon in itself that the hearers will long remember.

His bow breathes, and as his violin gives the message all thoughts of artificiality disappear. His single and double stops and his change of bow are so masterfully done, that his listeners enraptured forget any idea of notes, and the portrayal carries them into realms beyond.

It is an unusual opportunity to hear a master with such a rare combination of skill and soul feeling, and all who heard him hope they may soon have the privilege again.

Fine Amusements Are Provided

For Charlevoix County Fair Week of Sept. 8-12.

While the Board of Directors of the Charlevoix County Fair promises extraordinary exhibits in every department this year it is also evident that they have not overlooked the very important work of securing suitable amusement and entertainment for the visitors at the Fair.

The contract between the Fair Directors and the Lippi Amusement Co. assures the fact that this year's midway will be as good or even better than any the Fair has ever had.

The Lippi Amusement Co., which has just finished a tour through the Upper Peninsula of Michigan has established a record of cleanliness and many strong letters of recommendation have received from city and county officials and communities where the Lippa shows have appeared.

With a handsome Merry-go-Round, a mammoth Ferris Wheel, and six high class shows, plenty of good wholesome entertainment and amusement is secured. The big Musical Comedy and Vaudeville Show is headed by the well known comedian, Buddy Riley, and features Babe Theda, the youngest toe dancer in America and a phenomenal juvenile performer.

The big Circus Side Show presents a program of such variety that the public is sure to find much to its liking. Visitors at this show will be impressed by the atmosphere of mystery which predominates this particular attraction. Professor Tarble, who is in charge of the Side Show has been a keen student of oriental magic for a number of years and he bears the distinction of being among the first to present the famous Hindoo Torture Chamber in this country. While the torture chamber is one of the features of the Circus Side Show mention should also be made of the French Mied Reader, Sailor Ed, Lewis, the Tattooed boy, the Fire King, Old London Punch and Judy, the Master Magician and a long string of specialties which make up a program such as has seldom if ever been presented on the Fair Midway.

Den after Den of strange animals thrill and delight the visitors at the Zoo carried by the Lippa Amusement Company. Wild cats, wolves, kangaroo, rats, monkeys and other beasts and birds captured in the wilds of this and foreign countries have been grouped together in this exhibition of strange animal life, mention should also be made of Gazigapper, the most peculiar fowl in the world, with the body and wings of a duck and the head and feet are rooster. Poultry experts proclaim Gazigapper a most unusual freak.

Truly a mechanical marvel is Mayne's Model and Model city combined, another of the feature attractions. The big model shows complete mining city with business blocks, electric lighted streets, a bank, a saloon, stores, shops, moving street cars and taxis, a pool hall, Y. M. C. A., in fact an exact reproduction of a busy little city with all the inhabitants performing their daily tasks. Underneath in plain view are the mines showing actual mining operations as they are carried on hundreds of feet underground in the iron, copper and coal mines. It is an educating, instructive, and interesting masterpiece.

Captain A. LaVerne, a former deep sea diver presents his collection of ocean animals known as wonders of the deep. A visit to this attraction is a revelation as few people have any conception of the startling forms of animal life which inhabit the floors of large bodies of water.

Taken all-in-all, this year's Midway will be the largest and best ever presented by the Fair Management.

NATIONAL DEFENSE DAY TO BE OBSERVED IN EAST JORDAN

All citizens of East Jordan interested in a National Defense Day Program in this city are requested to meet at the Armory this Friday evening, Aug. 29th at 7:30 o'clock.

A joint meeting of the City Council and American Legion was held Tuesday evening and a decision reached to observe the day.

A general committee, consisting of Dr. H. W. Dicken, Jos. Cummins and Leslie Miles was elected to have supervision of the day's program.

COW-TESTING ASS'N ORGANIZES FOR SECOND YEAR

The Charlevoix Cow-testing Association perfected their organization for the second year at a meeting held at Rock Elm Grange Hall on Monday night the eighteenth.

The meeting was well attended and marked by such enthusiasm over the results of the last year and the prospects for a very successful new year.

More and more the dairymen are realizing their possibilities in dairying and with that realization are demanding some agency whereby they can get the facts concerning their cows. The cow-testing association conforms to this demand in every respect, as it enables the dairyman to know exactly what each of his cows is producing in pounds of milk and butterfat, what his income is from the sale of the product, what it costs to feed the animal, how much feed the animal consumes and finally what each of his cows is making in dollars and cents.

As a result of being in the Association the dairyman is in a position to feed his cows more economically and efficiently, weed out those cows who are termed visitor cows as they never even pay their board, and to improve his herd.

The cow-testing association work is proving to be very popular throughout the state. Michigan ranks second only to Wisconsin in the number of associations in the last year than any other state. At this time three years ago there were only ten associations in operation; now there are one hundred and one in operation. This wonderful expansion has taken place due directly to the merits of the work.

The members of the association are very fortunate in being able to retain Clarence Mullet as their tester. The success that any association makes depends entirely on the type of man doing the testing. The fine results of last year indicate conclusively that Mr. Mullet is filling the bill.

The following are the members of the board of directors for the year beginning August first:

Arthur Shepard, President, East Jordan.

Elmer Murray, Vice-President, East Jordan.

Mr. Edwards, Secretary-Treasurer, Orchard Bay Farm, Charlevoix.

Orvie Gunsolus, East Jordan.

The following are the members of the cow-testing association:

Tars Superstitious

When the West Campgaw ran into 48 hours of ensuing gale and fog in a region infested with icebergs, the sailors attributed their bad luck to hymn singing by two preachers who were working their way to Europe as cattle men aboard ship. Freight Rates and Commodity Prices

Should Freight Rates Be Reduced at the Expense of Good Service?

(From Chicago Tribune.)
The head of the Carnegie Institute at Pittsburgh told a gathering of farmers that if the manufacturers of machinery, clothing, house furnishings and other commodities would reduce prices 2 per cent this would reduce the farmer's expenses as much as a 25 per cent reduction in freight rates. So would a reduction of 1 per cent in interest on loans.

"The trouble with that proposition is that freight rates may be reduced—possibly—by political pressure; commodities and interest not so readily.

"But that is consideration the farmers will ponder very carefully, if they look to the future. They may be able to force a reduction in freight rates by using their influence upon the machinery of regulation, but if that reduces the efficiency of transportation the immediate advantage will be swallowed up sooner or later, probably sooner. Regulation, unless it is constructive, unless in the long run it builds up the railroads, is not in the farmer's interest. As his political leaders do not discuss that much, it is up to the farmer to look it up for himself. Just freight rates should be worked for, but a rate that is inadequate to the carrier is not just to the farmer, though he may think it is until he begins to pay the price of inadequate service."

A railway rate reduction sufficient to enable a shipper to make a substantial saving on a freight bill would, if made effective now, impair the earning power of every western railroad and threaten the solvency of some. All that a railway buys,—labor, coal, forest products, steel articles, etc., still range at peak prices, and rates cannot safely be lowered until there is a reduction in these costs.

Eighty-eight cents of the railway dollar is required for wages, fuel, supplies taxes and rentals. A ten per cent rate reduction would wipe out all profit and injure the credit of lines which have nothing saved up for a rainy day.

The Government turned the railroads back to their owners in 1920 with an average operating deficit of $45,000,000 a month, which had been paid from the Federal treasury. Now, the railroads have no such recourse.

The increase in railroad freight rates is less than the increase in other prices.

In January, 1923, the average freight rate of the western railroads was only 36 per cent higher than in 1913, while the average wholesale price of all farm products was 42 per cent higher and the average wholesale price of all commodities 56 per cent higher.

Fluctuations in prices for farm products cannot be laid at the door of the railroad, since between June, 1922 and June, 1923, under the same transportation conditions, wheat declined 10 cents a bushel in price and corn improved 19 cents.

The depressed condition of the farmer, and particularly the wheat grower has been of great concern to the railroads, as well as to the public, but happily all signs point to a material improvement. "The estimated income of the farms of America for 1923 is a billion dollars in excess of their income in 1922" (Advertisement, The Capper Farm Press, October 8, 1923.)

And the last annual report of the Interstate Commerce Commission says: "Manifestly existing rates are no longer interfering with the free flow of commerce as a whole."

Give the railroads a chance. Don't lessen their usefulness by impairing their earning power. They are spending more than a billion dollars this year not from earnings but of new money to put their properties in condition to better serve the public and to prevent car shortages—this because they believe in the inherent fairness of the American people and their willingness to pay what good service is worth. Starved railroads, like starved horses, cannot do good work. It is axiomatic that compensatory rates with good service are far preferable to cheaper rates with poor service.

Late Potato Blight Is Serious Menace

Disease Can Be Controlled by Bordeaux Spray.

Late blight of potatoes is probably one of the most destructive of all potato diseases and is particularly dangerous in a wet season such as this, warns William H. Martin, plant pathologist at the New Jersey agricultural experiment station.

Fortunately, potato growers now have a means of defense against this trouble. Spraying experiments conducted by the experiment station have demonstrated conclusively that late blight can be controlled by spraying with bordeaux mixture. These tests have shown also that even in the absence of late blight, spraying will return a profit.

Best results have followed the use of home-made bordeaux mixture of the 5-5-50 formula; that is 5 pounds of copper sulphate and 5 pounds of lime in 50 gallons of water. This material should be applied immediately at approximately ten-day intervals. In order to insure success, the vines should be thoroughly covered with a protective film of the spray mixture.

In 1920 the losses from late blight in New York amounted to approximately $5,000,000. In 1918 the disease was severe in New Jersey in Monmouth, Mercer, and Middlesex counties. In 1919 it was present, but not severe, and in 1920 and 1922 it was again very severe in central New Jersey. In 1923, due to the very dry season, late blight was not present. Under wet conditions an entire field may be killed in a few days unless measures are taken to prevent the spread of the trouble. It is important that the potato growers be prepared to prevent the losses that are certain to result if this disease does become epidemic.

Look for Lice and Mites

During the Hot Weather

The lice and mites problem is a great one during the hot summer, and their control will depend upon the methods of handling them. There is only one way to handle lice and mites, and that is to get rid of them as soon as they are found on poultry. You cannot wait until next week and expect to control lice and mites on your hens. The day they are discovered is the day to begin to rid the flock of them.

Lice and mites, if left to themselves, will rob the hen of her vitality and then you will learn that the egg basket will suffer. A hen cannot lay when she is worried all day by having lice running over her body and at night with mites feeding upon her life blood.

Spray the houses and keep them clean. Dust the houses with a good insect powder. This will mean profit and not loss, for it will mean better and more poultry, and that is what is needed in every community.

Ellen hardly dared breathe. She had never had a man's confidence before. "I gave up my painting, and I went into the firm with my father," he pursued. "A year ago, we were both in the library with her, when she—well, she just gave a sort of sigh, that was all. Her heart got tired, there was no pain. And for a while we thought my father was going, too. He drooped and brooded—it was ghastly. He'd always been so young for his age. But now he seemed broken, somehow!"

Ellen cast about for something to say, fearful of chilling his mood. "He seems young now," she ventured at last.

"Now? Of course he does!" Gibbs assented half-angrily. "Mind you," he added, speaking fast and vigorously, "mind you, he had a perfect right to remarry if he felt like it. That's his affair. But to marry this pink-cheeked, empty-headed, stupid cloak-model—if she was that! I only saw her once. She was engaged, when my father met her, to a big black-mustached fellow who had a couple of living wives. That's her measure! The fellows began to hint to me about it six months ago; I didn't believe it. Then I saw my father with her one night, having dinner; at Sherry's, I think it was. I thought—" He glanced at his companion suddenly. "Well, you're only a kid," he said, more gently. "But I never dreamed this would come of it!" Ellen's color rose.

"But—there is nothing disgraceful in his marrying her," she said bravely. "And—if I were your mother I would rather he did that than—that did anything that wasn't fair to her!"

Gibbs drove on in silence. She thought perhaps he had not been listening.

"You're quite right, my dear," he said presently, in a softened tone. "You make me feel ashamed of myself. A good woman has the trick of putting her finger right on the vital spot sometimes, and I believe my mother would agree with you!"

Ellen's happy color flooded her sensitive face. "I've not seen my father since this thing happened, two months ago. I suppose they told you that?" Gibbs said. "I've not been home since. I suppose he's established her there, if they got in on Wednesday, and she's prowling among my mother's books and laces and jewelry. I can't—I can't quite go it. The world's big enough, and people will stop buzzing about us presently. Let her have her money and position and good times, I don't grudge them, God knows. But I feel as if it wasn't only my mother who died a year ago, but my father, too, and the old days, and the old ways of thinking. Some day—I don't know—I'll go in and see the old man, and we'll have a talk—"

"But you've not met her?" Ellen asked thoughtfully, when his voice had dropped to silence. "She doesn't seem to me the cloak-model type."

"Pretty, eh?" he asked, with dry interest. "Oh, extremely! She's more than pretty, she really has a lovely face, and I think she is clever, too. She's studying French and music, and she—well, she has a way of keeping silent that makes other women seem like chatter-boxes!"

"It must be lots of fun to play her game," Gibbs said musingly. "Watching every chance, studying the Social Register as if it were her catechism, picking up bridge and French and music! I wonder if my father sees through it?"

"It wouldn't be worth while to me, not if I was left a million dollars," Ellen contributed. "There's too much that's uncomfortable about it. And if I had daughters, I wouldn't want them to think that only money counted. I don't mean that I could do it, even if I did want to!" she said hastily. "There's nothing in it for the people who chase it all their lives," Gibbs observed. "And the real people—the ones who are born to it, don't know they have it—so there you are! You can't buy anything real with money, as I see you suspect. Well, now I've talked you to death about me, and told you my maiden name and everything."

Life's Cornerstone

The diffidence of children is the foundation of all virtues.—Cicero.

East Indian Zobo

The zobo is a hybrid between the yak and the humped cattle of India. It is common in the western part of the Himalayas, and is used as a beast of burden as well as for its milk and its flesh. It resembles the English ox.

and it's your turn. You didn't drop out of the sky, I suppose. Just to give me an excuse to blow off steam? You live in—"

"Port Washington, Long Island. Age, twenty-two," Ellen said demurely. She told him about her grandfather, and Joe, and her work at the Art League. It pleased her to be able to paint Mrs. Rose in the colors of a generous benefactress, to show him what a difference the friendship of the kindly old meddler had made in her life. She said that she lived in an old-fashioned village house, and that Aunt Elsie was considered the best housekeeper in the village, and that her tomatoes and Ellen's dahlias had twice taken prizes at the Minola fair.

"You sound quaint," said Gibbs, "and as if you might have a melodeon in the parlor."

"We have!" Ellen said, dimpling and widening her eyes as she smiled at him.

After that they ran on for a while in contented silence until he stopped the car at one side of the road, and took off his glasses. Ellen took her own off, too, and looked at him in some surprise, as they blinked at each other in the strong light.

"We are now forty miles from Columbus Circle, and it is one o'clock," said Gibbs. "How do you feel about luncheon? A place called 'Adrian's' is about three miles from here, and I am a frill young thing, and I've not had any breakfast!"

The conventional aspect of the affair struck Ellen for the first time. She looked at him gravely, and her ready color crept up. She did not know him, her chaperon was even unaware that she was in his care. Men loved to get foolish girls into strange places, Aunt Elsie said, and a girl never made a mistake in refusing when she was in doubt.

Gibbs was smiling at her obvious hesitation.

"You know you're safe with me, Kiddie, don't you?" he asked. "You know I wouldn't take you anywhere that I wouldn't take my mother?"

That settled it. Ellen had not been born yesterday, after all. She had her own stern girlish standard of judgment, and she knew she was safe. The luncheon was a perfectly natural part of the trip; they were both hungry. And he had not had any breakfast!

She made him an answer that pleased him deeply, although he apparently conceded it nothing but a satisfied nod, and immediately hid his eyes under the glasses again.

"If you say it's all right, I know it must be."

So they went to 'Adrian's,' a big, shabby hostelry set upon a rise of ground, and provided with wide verandas for the summer crowds; verandas deserted now under their bare awning frames.

The meal came, hot and odorless and appetizing, and they talked while they ate. Gibbs told her of his first acquaintance with Mrs. Rose.

"I was a small kid of ten or twelve, in Rome, do you see? And she was there with her first husband, Torrey. My mother was kind to her, we were at the same hotel, and she was awfully kind to me. She had a brother with her, about my age, and we saw a good deal of each other. Later, when she was a widow, she turned up in Paris with the two children. My mother and father were staying there for a while, before leaving me there to study. And later, she came here, and married Rose, who is a darn nice fellow, and now of course she regards me as a member of her family."

"She went to school in Boston with my mother," Ellen said. "But I never saw her until a few years ago. Now that I've visited her I can see just the careless way she suddenly thought of inviting me to her Thanksgiving house party. I never had such a wretched, uncomfortable time in my life; perhaps it was my own fault!"

"I Never Had Such a Wretched, Uncomfortable Time in My Life; Perhaps It Was My Own Fault!"

She told him all about it, inconsequently, and he listened with genuine interest in his handsome eyes. Perhaps this artless revelation of a girl's heart was novel to a man who found the sex remarkable in all its phases, perhaps with beauty like Ellen's opposite him, and a delicious breakfast under way, he would have found anything she said equally absorbing.

Warmed and contented, they went out to the car again, and again Ellen was wrapped in snugly, and disguised by the big dark glasses. "Half-past two," said Gibbs, again at the wheel. "That means that we will run into the city just about four o'clock."

The car moved smoothly away over the snow. Ellen was beginning to love the steady, gliding motion. She secretly wished that there was a longer journey ahead.

The snow was surely coming; dark little cottony clouds were gathering ahead, and pressing low over the silent earth. There was no sunshine now, and the air seemed heavier and colder. The roads were almost deserted.

"Never you mind, we'll beat it!" Gibbs said with great enjoyment. "Look out for a signpost, and tell me where we are."

"Columbus Circle twelve miles," Ellen announced, after a few minutes.

"Twelve miles—well, we must look out for the Sunday speed cops now!" He slackened his pace. They were running through a well-settled region. Ellen began to realize that the trip was almost over. The day had run away; a day always to be a wonderful and treasured memory.

Afterward, she tried to remember just how she was shaken from her musings. Like all accidents, the thing was simplicity itself. They were running parallel to a trolley track, on the wide street under the beginning of the elevated trains. There was a car on the track a few hundred feet ahead, and next to the car a man driving an enormous team of horses and an empty truck. Both truck and trolley were traveling in the same direction as the automobile.

The street was so wide that there was no question, even in Ellen's mind, of the propriety of passing the car and truck, especially as the stretch of street beyond was absolutely empty.

Gibbs turned his wheel toward the left, and was running unconcernedly by, when the motorman suddenly sounded an ear-piercing whistle—a terrific, prolonged blast of the siren with which trolley cars are sometimes equipped in the country. The horses, with a wild plunge of terror, flung themselves straight across the path of the motorcar coming up behind them, almost upsetting their driver, and tangling themselves in reins and harness.

Gibbs jerked his car violently to the left, instinctively avoiding the plunging hoofs; there was a moment of horrible skidding and grinding in the snow that edged the ditch, then the roadster turned abruptly on its side, and Ellen was spilled out, with Gibbs on top of her.

The girl had hardly time for a moment of hideous apprehension and panic before she was on her feet again, with his arm about her, laughing with the revulsion and the shock. The skid had saved them, for the car was turned at an exact angle, and so had slipped with her lights firmly wedged against the further side of the ditch, and had no opportunity to turn turtle, as she must otherwise have done.

For a few confused moments Ellen hid her dazed face in the fur of the man's shoulder; no, she really wasn't hurt, she had landed on her shoulder, honestly she was not hurt, it just hurt her for a moment, that was all! And it had scared her—

Gibbs, reassured, began to nurse a wrenched wrist of his own, and to discuss the accident with the two carmen and the truck driver with the usual anger and threats. What was the sense of blowing a whistle right into the horses' ears—

"You was passing too close to the edge of the road anyway!" shouted the motorman furiously. Upon Gibbs taking his number, he blew his whistle again, and banged triumphantly down the line. The truck driver, a little frightened, standing at the horses' heads, expressed his satisfaction that the lady wasn't hurt, and drove away. "You've bust your front spring, mister," volunteered a youth gaily. "I know I have," Gibbs said savagely. "You poor little thing," he added tenderly to Ellen. "I've scared you to death!"

"Oh, it feels all right, now," she said quickly, but she was white, and still shaken from the narrow escape. He read her expression truly.

With only one worried glance at her, he set about extricating them from the difficult position as rapidly as possible. The gay boy was left in charge of the car, and Gibbs caught up Ellen's suitcase, as, still in their heavy coats, they started on foot to the nearest garage.

Fortunately this was not far away, and from here Gibbs sent mechanics back to the roadster, and engaged a taxicab to take Ellen and himself as far as the subway at Van Cortlandt Park.

All the while he was praising her, not only in words, but with his appreciative eyes, and in the sudden cheerfulness that the averted tragedy inspired in him. He talked to her frankly and gaily; she was a good sport, she had really shown incredible nerve. And they had had a great day, hadn't they?—since they missed the train from Hastings.

"It's been a—wonderful day!" she said, hardly above a whisper.

Perhaps the man's first impulse was to lay his hand over the small hand not far from his own, to say something that should meet her mood. It was not the only time that Gibbs Josselyn had had such an opportunity. It was the first move in a game that he had played with supreme success for many years.

But he did not want to play that game with Ellen. There was no conscious, idle flirtatiousness in those lowered blue eyes, no coquetry in that honest little Irish mouth. It could bring her no joy, it might—it must bring her pain—to know Gibbs Josselyn well. No, let her have this day's adventures to keep, an unclouded memory, and let the story end here. She had played her part fairly, and he would play his, too.

There was barely time at the train for laughing goodbyes. Ellen glanced back when she had passed the gate; he was watching her, and as their eyes met he gave her his disturbing smile again, and again raised his hat. "He's thirty—or more, and every woman he knows is in love with him," said Ellen to herself, settling down in the train. "It's been wonderful—it's been heavenly, and I'll never see him again!"

woman exclaiming over descriptions of meals and clothes, the old man and the young anxious to grasp exactly what happened to the car, and Ellen sat up after the others had gone to bed and wrote a pretty note of thanks to Mrs. Rose. She said that she and Mr. Josselyn had had a "spill in the snow," but that fortunately no harm was done; it had been a lovely run.

After the letter was gone she sat reflecting; Gibbs' with any propriety write Gibbs? She knew she could not. She knew that he would read her motive in doing so as clearly as if she wrote the words: "I like you. I'm not married, and you're not married. I don't want to let you go."

She gave up the idea, and put her letter to Mrs. Rose by the clock, to be mailed in the morning, and went to bed, twisting and turning because the wrenched shoulder had begun to ache, but finally falling into deep, exhausted sleep between the cold sheets, too tired to dream.

Be Ten-Cents-ible and insist on

"Just as much" is not "Just as good"

Over one-third of all the tobacco chewers in the United States have proved that.

The demand for BEECH-NUT Chewing Tobacco alone is more than 250 million packages in a single year.

That's because we didn't let tobacco growers, labor, manufacturing costs, State, Federal and revenue taxes collect their increases from the quality or the weight.

BEECH-NUT Chewing Tobacco is the same in 1924 as in 1915. Still the most of the best for 10c—still the best chew at any price—still the favorite everywhere.

Fall Hats Achieve Becoming Brim Lines

The brim's the thing—with which fall and winter millinery will undertake to make itself irresistibly becoming. The beloved little brimless cloche, that reigned so long, could not be replaced—except by hats just as flattering and offering more variety and novelty. Here are two of its successors made of velvet and trimmed with ostrich, typical of the new modes.
The hat at the top is of the sort that artists delight in—a romantic type with a soft ostrich plume falling from its brim. The other is a daring and ingenious shape, with a strong flavor of Spanish motifs. A "feather duster" ornament and two cabochons of silk-covered cord, serve to finish it. The saucy feather ornament is made of ostrich fess.

School Board Organize

Tuition To Be Paid First Week In September.

The local School Board held their first meeting of the school year 1924-25 last Monday evening for the purpose of organizing. Roy E. Webster was elected President, Dr. C. H. Gray, Secretary and L. A. Hoyt, Treasurer. Action was taken on the vacancy caused by Mr. Bartlett's resignation, and Dr. Hugh W. Dicken was appointed to fill Mr. Bartlett's unexpired term of two years.

Hitherto the tuition for foreign pupils has been paid some time in February but this does not work out well, and East Jordan is about the only school in Michigan that allows the tuition to be paid this way. The tuition according to the State law must be at least $60.00 for an Accredited High School, and $40.00 for the grades. It costs the local school quite a bit over $100 to educate a pupil for a year. At times the Board borrows money until the tuition comes in and pays the necessary interest. All the way round it is not a good business proposition. Hence a resolution was passed by the Board Monday night that one half the tuition for foreign pupils must be paid the first week in September and the second half the first week of the following semester. School directors and interested parties please take notice.

School starts Tuesday Sept. 2nd. at 8:00 o'clock Central Standard time. Doors open at 7:30.

Upon the recommendation of the state department the local school will go back to the regular 45 minute recitations. This also gives seven recitation periods instead of six under the old system, but at the same time school is out earlier. Nearly every school in Michigan goes on the above plan.

Regular meeting of the Pythian Sisters next Tuesday evening.

Mrs. C. J. Mills left first of the week to join her husband at Jamesville, Wis. after a visit here with her parents, Mr. and Mrs. James Howard.

Moon's Rotation

The moon rotates on its axis. The exact coincidence of the moon's period of axial rotation with that of its revolution about the earth is generally accepted as due to tidal influence. The moon is believed to have been plastic at one time, and great tides must then have been produced by the earth's attraction.

Meaning of "Zion"

Zion is a form of the Hebrew word Syyon. It is perhaps from an older word meaning "to be dry," "to set up" or "to protect." Arabic analogies favor the meanings "hump," "summit of a ridge" and so "citadel." Zion was properly the southern part of the eastern hill on the top of which the temple was built.

Joe mailed the letter the next morning, and stopped at the drug store on the way back, for Ellen could not twist her sore shoulder into her dress, and came downstairs in her wrapper.

Her aunt and the captain prophesied that it would get better immediately, and a day or two went by. Ellen lay patiently through the long day-time hours, and wept with pain in the night.

Mrs. Baldwin persisted that it was either a cold in the shoulder, or a "wrench," or "the stiffneck." But she sent Joe for the doctor after breakfast, and Ellen felt better when she knew Joe had gone. Her aunt aired the dining room, anticipating the call, and had everything in order long before nine. But it was almost noon when the busy doctor came in.

That was the beginning. Ellen, who had never been in a doctor's hands before, smiled up at him uncomfortably as his skilled fingers pressed and explored. She made a rueful face when she heard her fate. She must lie absolutely still for an unspecified number of days, perhaps a week. Mrs. Bradley afterward told some intimates that she mistrusted Ellen was in for a bad spell when Doctor Older, who was fresh from the city hospital himself, said that he was going to see an old doctor in the city who was a spine authority in a day or two and discuss Ellen's case with him.

The preliminaries of a long illness are almost always wretched for the patient. Ellen was suffering acutely, she was mystified and shocked, and she was heartsick at the hideous possibility she suspected under the young doctor's frankly troubled manner. Joe came in to see her for a few minutes twice a day, her grandfather once, her aunt kept the room clean, and brought her trays she could hardly touch. Fevered, restless, dazed with lack of sleep and with the effect of the medicine that controlled the worst of the pain, she would stare at them dully.

Gradually she reached the second stage, and, if hope died within her then, as to the future, at least she found the present more bearable. Not as a whole, for her soul shrank from the horror of the thought that she might never walk free and young through the garden, and into Main street again.

A few days before Christmas the New York specialist came down, and was friendly and informal to a degree that enchanted Aunt Elsie. He could say little more than Doctor Older. Miss Latimer had done something mysteriously harmful to one of the delicate vertebrae at the very base of the brain. It was an unusual case. The girl quivered into the invalid's invariable question.

"Doctor—do you think—can you give us any idea—it can be cured, can't it?"

"Almost anything can be cured. Doctor Older tells me that you want to be an artist," said the specialist for answer. "Now, there's nothing to prevent you from going right on with your work here. Get out your pencils, and don't bother your head about your back! You're not having so much pain, now—"

"Not unless I move," Ellen faltered, feeling the tears of bitter disappointment press behind her eyes.

Doctor Older immediately began to discuss a sort of harness he was having made for the neck, and when the city man had highly approved this experiment, the two went away. Only Ellen knew the bitter desolation they left behind them; and the long hours in the night she lay sobbing over what in her dark hour she thought the death of hope.

The harness gave her blessed relief, although its ugly brownness, pressing up against her white face, was a hurt to her girlish pride. And on Christmas day, with Joe's help, the doctor moved her down to the dining room, where a wide couch had been placed for her.

After that she came, downstairs every day, and Aunt Elsie and Joe helped her tenderly upstairs every night. And there were hours, whole days sometimes between the moods of revolt and resentment, when she found a new, odd flavor of joy in her life.

Almost every hour something took her thoughts to Gibbs Josselyn and the adventurous day that had been her last day free from pain. At first it had seemed that he must know, that he had a right to know, what the accident had cost her. She longed—ah, how she longed, for his splendid concern and sympathy. There were whole hours when she lay and dreamed of it, his shock, his horror, his visits, and his flowers.

Sometimes the wording of the letter she knew she would not write filtered through her mind. "Dear Mr. Josselyn—I know you will be sorry—something that seems to puzzle the doctors—the pleasant land of counterpane—"

But she did not write. Pride kept her silent. She would not send him the three lines that must buy his friendship. If that was to come to her, it would come. She dared not beg for it.

And honest as she was to the core, Ellen knew that her motive in keeping silent was not quite unmixed. The note might bring him straight to her. It was true. But suppose he did not in the least realize that her life had been crushed and altered in the one brief moment of terror and shock they had laughed over and so quickly forgotten? Suppose he said to himself that he was sorry, and it was a pity and nothing more? Then she would lose not only the future, but the bright and precious memory of the past.

Again, he might respond to the little appeal with all the generous ardor that she knew was in him, waiting to be stirred. He might come straight down to the house in Main street—

To find Aunt Elsie, opening the door, suspicious of his errand, and find the dining room overheated and unaired, and find Joe's boots oiled and drying by the airtight stove, and adding their odor to the other odors—

And to find Ellen, his rosy companion of the furs and the laughter, a small white-faced thing under a patchwork quilt, with brown leather straps under her chin—

Reaching this point in her thoughts, Ellen would give a little shudder. Better that he should never know. Better that she had never crossed his path, or he hers. But for that memorable week-end she might be going to the Yacht club dance with Willis, Bobby Carnival, and the Henshaws tonight, she might be in the Mardi Gras Kermess that was to convulse and enchant the village next week. And summer was coming, a summer without driving and tennis and swimming for Ellen.

She must lie still, the old physical joy in living gone, and the old peace of mind gone, too. For Bobby and the Henshaws seemed changed now, and in the back of her heart and the back of her mind there lingered the disturbing vision that had displaced them: the memory of a cultivated voice; of deep kind eyes, and silver hair; of clever, groomed hands. There lingered the hurting knowledge that certain doors were closed to Ellen Latimer, that certain lips spoke a language she could not understand, that there was a world, so near her own, where her mere youngness and goodness and willingness to learn could win her no place. Other keys were needed for those doors, and through no fault of her own, Ellen had not those keys.

Mrs. Rose had gone to Bermuda. The check for Ellen's expenses had arrived promptly during the first week of the year, however, and had been the cause of some serious debate in the Latimer house.

Ellen wished to send it back, with a note explaining the circumstances. The warm-hearted Mrs. Rose might show her sympathy in some decided way, might even mention Ellen's sad situation in some quarter through which it would reach Gibbs Josselyn.

But Mrs. Baldwin, quite unsuspecting of this vague thought in her niece's mind, suggested that the check simply be banked for the time when Ellen could use it. No use distressing her generous friend with a tale of misery for which she was indirectly responsible, and which she could not help.

Ellen agreed to this somewhat reluctantly. The girl hungered for the romantic and dramatic; life thrust her back resolutely into the commonplace, do what she might. But she was learning patience and self-control, coming to believe that what made for happiness and harmony here, in the old house, was her first concern.

April was rainy, and May was rainy, but the miracle of the year went on despite the rain. A film of green showed on the hard dark earth of the garden and against the bare limbs of the trees, and sweet wild winds swept over the world with the odor of damp turned soil and bursting buds in their wake.

Then suddenly there were still hot days. All the windows were open, and a scent of lilacs drifted through the house.

Ellen, a little thin and limp, but dressed and radiant, had a comfortable chair under the lilac tree, and waved now and then at friendly passers-by in the street. She had a book, but often she sat dreaming blissfully, with the pages returned, for hours at a time. No book was half so exciting as was a slow walk to the gate, with a stop on the way back to gather herself a dozen violets, or a plume of lilac. Spring had never seemed half so lovely, or the world so kind.

The glory of the year deepened swiftly, and joy kept pace with it in Ellen's heart. The harness was long gone, the couch was upstairs again, and only a cushioned rocking-chair in its place. Ellen could sweep the garden path again, with her blue sunbonnet over her eyes. Ellen could cut out cookies on condition that she went straight upstairs and lay down for an hour afterward. Except that she usually went to bed at eight o'clock, and avoided the more violent forms of youthful amusement, Ellen might live her old life again.

But it would never be the old life. It was so enriched and so enhanced by the five long months in prison that Ellen felt sensations of freedom absolutely birdlike, warmth and flowers and blue sky intoxicated her. Leonard Henshaw, for whose attentions she had wistfully longed a year ago, was her captive now, but she did not want to marry Leonard Henshaw. She only wanted to be alive, and to claim her work and play among the living again.

May thirtieth, always a great day in Port Washington annals, broke cloudless, and found all the village already in holiday mood. The yacht clubs would go into commission at high noon, with every imaginable form of gaiety to do honor to the occasion. At the Port Washington club, where Ellen and her friends would presently gather, there were to be swimming races, a great outdoor luncheon, a baseball game between the married and the unmarried men, moving pictures, games and prizes for the small children, a dance until long after midnight, and, of course, the raising of the colors.

Ellen was taken down by the Henshaw boys, in their car, at eleven o'clock, and was under parole not to race, even if she swam, not to "crew" even if she sailed, and to be home at five o'clock to get three hours' rest before the dance.

Strings of color were fluttering everywhere, women with baskets were gathering on the clubhouse porch, eager boats were cutting about the pier end like restless gulls, tenders, loaded to their capacities, were making for the yachts. Presently the colors went up, fluttering gayly against the blue, and the cannon, fired from the grassy mound before the clubhouse, was answered by twenty booming shots from the boats. As the detonation died away the band burst madly into sound, and thirty young figures plunged from the pier end for the first swim, to pull themselves upon the float a moment later as sleek as seals, and add their shrieks and laughter to the general uproar.

If Ellen Latimer, one of the seals, who was warning Bobby Carnival that if he pushed her into the water again he would be sorry for it the longest day of his life, had chanced to glance toward The Eaglet, one of the visiting yachts in the bay, anchored three hundred yards away from her, she might at this moment have received a shock. For a man with a thick mop of silver hair under a visored yachting cap was standing there, yawning happily in the warm sunshine.

Gibbs Josselyn, if he had been through no such schooling as Ellen in the last few months, had suffered, too, in his own way. Like Ellen, he had seemed to lose his place in the world, with his father's marriage, his resignation from his father's firm, and the transplanting from his father's house to his club. Sensitive and proud, he found the attitude of his intimates equally distasteful, whether they sympathized with him or criticized him, he missed his work, and found no incentive to take up anything new.

Without his realizing it, the pretty little Miss Latimer had touched him. She was not flirting, like Lucia, she was dead in earnest, the bright-eyed, rosy little enthusiast.

He chanced to come to Manhasset harbor with George Lathrop and George's motherless boy and girl in time for the opening of the clubs on Decoration day.

George, Junior, leaping out of the cabin ready for swimming, the older men followed suit, and Gibbs, whom the boy adored blindly in all things, passed him in the fresh dancing water, and dragged himself up on the anchored raft at the side of the club pier, where they got into conversation with a boy in a dirty gray sweater, who was sitting there idly in the sun.

"This is going to be the girls' race now," said the boy, when he and George, Junior, had discussed several important matters. "They'll all line up here, and dive and swim to the float, and touch it, and then swim back."

On the pier, the crowd was gathering to watch the races, and presently a dozen slender laughing girls in wet bathing suits formed a line on the edge of the float, and at the crack of the pistol were into the water with one shout, and tearing like so many salmon for the swimmers' float. The sweated boy was now heard to observe to George, Junior:

"That's my sister out there on the float. She could beat 'em all! She got first prize last year, and two years ago. She fell out of an automobile, and hurt her spine, and they won't let her swim yet."

"I don't know what she's doing in that rig, then," Gibbs observed.

"Oh, well, she swims, but she can't race!"

Gibbs thought the big, loosely-built country fellow had a most engaging smile, and paid small attention to his words at the moment. Meanwhile Ellen, wrapped in a mantle of drying black hair, was rocking herself back and forth on the float, discussing the races, and congratulating the winner. Perhaps she noticed the two strange men and the boy who dived suddenly from the anchor float, but as this chanced to be the moment when the Henshaw boys, with two girl passengers, elected to upset their canoe, it was probable that she saw nothing of the visitors.

Later, when she and Aunt Elsie were busy at the lunch tables that had been built on the green between the clubhouse and the tennis courts, and with a score of other women were cutting cakes, helping salad, and pouring coffee, Joe lounged up to them, gorging on sandwiches, interested in all other forms of food, and even willing to be useful in some not-too-conspicuous way.

"There's a feller on one of the yachts that ast me to come out with a boat, about four o'clock, and bring him in to get cigarettes and ice and butter and things," Joe volunteered. "He asked me my name, and I said Latimer. I get sick of this Joe—Joe—Joe business. Every wop in the place is named Joe! Gosh, that kid with them must have things pretty easy. His sister was there, a little kid—but Gosh, she was a plippin' Harriet! She's about ten or twelve with her hair all hanging round!"

Ellen laughed, and for the young Latimers the episode seemed closed. And yet not only to Ellen, and to Gibbs Josselyn, but to Joe and the innocent Harriet of the hanging locks, the hour was filled with possibilities, and never to be stricken from the calendar of the four lives again.

For Gibbs had caught the name Joe called to George Lathrop, Senior, and had mused upon it.

"Latimer—that's funny. Latimer and Port Washington—he might be her cousin or something. I suppose the same names run through all grades in these old country places. If he comes at six, I'll ask him if he knows my little lady. What did Mrs. Rose call her?—Helen, that was it!"

"Is there any one down here named Helen Latimer?" he duly asked Joe, late in the sweet summer afternoon, when the races were over.

"No, sir. I guess my grandfather and my sister and I are the only ones of that name," Joe answered, after a moment's thought.

"You never heard of a lady named Mrs. Rose—Mrs. Sewall Rose?"

"Sure I did!" Joe said, smiling.

"She's the lady that got my sister started in the art school!"

"Well, of course!" Gibbs was surprised at his own pleasure in identifying her at last. "Your sister, that's it! And what is her name?"

"Ellen," Joe smiled.

"Ellen, of course!" Gibbs echoed.

"Well, how is she?"

"Oh, she's all right now," Joe answered carelessly. "If you're coming ashore for the dance tonight, you'll see her. She can't dance, except just a little, but she's going down."

"I hardly think we will come in for the dance," Gibbs answered. "Funny—she looks as if she could dance! But you give her my love—Mr. Josselyn, will you?"

At the dinner table George Lathrop asked Gibbs if he had noticed that boy. That was no sort of boy to be knocking about the water front of a small fishing village, he had an exceptionally fine face.

"I'd like to get hold of a boy like that, and keep him about the place," Lathrop said, enthusiastically. "It would be the making of George."

"Well, if you like the boy, I assure you you'd be amazed at the sister," Gibbs said. "She's a little beauty; dainty, clever, quick as a whip! I take it they're the best sort of American blood, come of a long line of simple, decent people—"

"What's the matter with her?" Lathrop asked.

"The matter with her—how d'you mean?" Gibbs, who was mixing a salad dressing, looked up sharply.

"Why, she's sickly, or something," his host answered innocently. "Didn't you hear the boy say this morning that she couldn't swim any more, and just now, didn't you hear him say that she couldn't dance?"

"He said she'd been in a motor accident, and hurt her spine," little George said. "But she got the prize for swimming last year, and second prize in the ladies' singles—What is it, Uncle Gibbs?"

First Mother's Day

Mother's day, now commonly observed throughout the United States, was first generally revived in 1910. It dates back into the Sixteenth century in English church history, when it was called Mothering Sunday, and celebrated the fourth Sunday in Lent, by persons living away from home, especially young men and women, who were allowed the day free to return to their parents with gifts.

The Schools and The Railroads

Teachers in Michigan's primary schools are being supported, to a large degree, by taxes paid by the state's steam Railroads. In many counties, the whole cost of these schools is carried in this way.

Michigan is justly proud of these schools, and of the capable teachers who preside over them.

And Michigan's 24 Railroads are proud of the result which their tax payments have made possible.

These primary school taxes have become a part of the delicate balance which laws have established between Railroad receipts and expenditures.

This balance can be preserved with a steady and continued improvement in Railroad service, as the past two years have amply proved.

To destroy this balance by increasing Railroad taxes, or by imposing any additional burden on your carriers, would be a calamity for the Railroads and a severe blow at Michigan prosperity.

All we ask is a fair chance to keep on making good for you.

Write us freely about any phase of this matter that interests you.

Alfalfa Pasture Is Superior for Swine

Has No Equal in Palatability and Protein.

"In palatability and in production of protein alfalfa has no equal as pasture crop for hogs. Alfalfa hay is a profitable hog feed during the winter months," says E. G. Eiling, animal husbandryman, Kansas State Agricultural college.

After spring litters have been weaned, brood sows will do well on alfalfa pasture and a light grain ration. A hog raiser will find it profitable to feed corn liberally to his spring litters while on alfalfa pasture. They will then be ready for the fall market, which is usually higher than the winter market, according to Eiling.

At the Kansas experiment station 50-pound pigs which were fed corn with alfalfa pasture gained three times as much per day as hogs receiving corn alone in a dry lot. The first group required only 4.5 pounds of corn to make a pound of gain, whereas the second group required 11.25 pounds. Even when a well balanced ration was fed, the pigs on the alfalfa gained 44 per cent more per day than pigs fed the same grain ration in a dry lot. The first of these groups required 3.5 pounds of grain to produce a pound of gain while the second group required 4.5 pounds.

Alfalfa pasture should not be grazed too closely. It is better to have a large acreage so that it can be cut about twice and yield one-fourth or one-half a crop of hay. This acreage will, of course, vary with the rainfall.

Production of Combs Is Big Asset for Beekeeper

A good stock of drawn combs is the most valuable asset that a beekeeper can have, especially if one is a producer of extracted honey. They are of particular value in a season when the honey crop is light, because they enable the bees to store what little nectar is available instead of using it for the building of new comb. Every beekeeper should endeavor to have a number of new combs drawn during a good season to replace any that may become damaged or broken.

A good comb is one that is straight, and containing as few drone cells as possible. It must also be firmly attached to the frame on all four sides and strongly supported in the frame by means of wire. To produce such combs, the frames must first be tightly wired; No. 28 tinned wire is most commonly used. Full-depth Langstroth frames should have at least four horizontal wires; larger frames will need more.

When extracting the honey from new combs, first take only part of the honey from one side, reverse the comb and empty the other side; again turn the comb and finish the extracting; this will prevent breakage. If all the honey is extracted from one side without removing any from the other, the weight of honey on the inner surface of the comb will crack, or even break out the whole center.

Silo Needs No Drainage

It is not necessary to make any provision for drainage in a silo. If there is excess moisture the most of it will seep through the walls of the silo, and if you have drainage at the bottom, air will enter and some of the silage will spoil. Green corn contains just about a sufficient amount of moisture so that there will be no excess moisture and no seepage. When dry stalks are ensiled water must be added, and there is little danger of getting too much.

Pasturing Sweet Clover

Stock can go onto sweet clover in April and it may be pastured hard clear up to August 15. The harder it is pastured early in the spring the better, for this induces new shoots and it keeps down stems which light pasturing would allow to become woody. Early pasturing keeps the plants tender and nutritious. With new seeding do not turn in the stock until about July 1, and then it won't do to pasture it as hard as the two-year-old field.

Farm Hints

The man who buys cheap clover seed gets just that.

Rats are enemies of the harvest—let the youngsters and the dogs loose upon them.

Uncle Ab says that many a time it's better to do a thing than to be an expert on how it ought to be done.

What is true of early spring vegetables bringing the highest price is also very largely true of fall vegetables.

Farmers must be prosperous or the nation will not be prosperous. That is why everybody is vitally interested in farming.

If the drivers and owners of horse could experience some of the pain which these animals must endure there would be fewer sore shoulders.

A great deal of farm butter has a strong undesirable buttermilk flavor. Such butter does not keep well. Every effort should be made to remove as much buttermilk as possible.

Handling Broody Hens Is Problem for Owners

How to handle the broody hen in the general purpose flock is a problem that confronts stock owners every summer. If there are such things as plagues in the poultry business the broody hen is perhaps the worst one. A good way to overcome the broody instinct is to confine the hens in slatted coops, suspended in the shade. Confine them the first evening they remain on their nests, but feed and water abundantly the same as you do the non-broody hens.

Proper Temperature Is Important in Churning

No factor in the efficient churning of cream is more important than the proper temperature. The temperature will vary between the limits of 50 degrees in summer and 65 degrees in winter. For a minimum loss of fat in the buttermilk and a good firm butter the churning process should take from 80 to 45 minutes. When churning is accomplished in 10 or 15 minutes the butter always comes soft and there is a great loss of fat in the buttermilk.

Kill Gophers by Poison

Gophers can best be killed by placing poison in their burrows, according to C. E. Mickel, of the University of Minnesota. He recommends a mixture of one-eighth ounce of powdered strychnia alkaloid, one-eighth ounce of baking soda, and one-eighth ounce of saccharin. These amounts are sufficient to poison four quarts of vegetable bait. Potatoes, carrots, parsnips, beets and turnips make especially good bait, covered with the poison.

Best Garden Fertilizer

While barnyard manure is the best fertilizer for the garden, still the garden fertilizer that comes in bags is a good substitute and has at times advantages of its own. Now, that automobiles and motor trucks are taking the place of horses there will be less horse manure and though cow manure can be substituted the results are not so satisfactory as when old-time manure consisting of both horse and cow manure was used.

Best Done Quietly

There is no objection to other people's thinking what they like—just so they refrain from thinking out loud.

IS EVERY DAY A BACKACHE DAY?

East Jordan Folks Have Found the Cause and Corrected It.

Is your back lame and achy? Are you tortured with sharp, rheumatic pains; miserable with headaches, dizzy spells and kidney irregularities? No wonder, then, you feel worn-out and discouraged. But have you given any thought to your kidneys? You should! Weak kidneys cause just such trouble. Don't risk neglect! Use Doan's Pills—a stimulant diuretic to the kidneys. Here's an East Jordan case: "When I got up mornings I could hardly move about. After I did my washing, my back was so lame and sore I dreaded to move. If I was on my feet a little while my back gave out. I often had headaches and dizzy spells. I was nervous, depressed and irritable. My kidneys acted irregularly, too. I used Doan's Pills, from Hite's Drug Store, and they cured me." 60c. at all dealers. Foster-Milburn Co., Mfrs., Buffalo, N. Y.

Great Value of Stock Exhibits

Breeder Gains More Than Just Ribbons or Prize Money He May Win.

A live stock breeder gains more from exhibiting his stock than just the ribbons or prize money he may be fortunate enough to win. Few breeders win enough prize money to pay all expenses of showing. This is just as true with unfitted animals driven to local fairs to compete for $2 prizes as it is with herds fitted for months and shipped hundreds of miles to compete for $25 and $50 prizes at the larger stock shows. This fact should not discourage the exhibitor, however, as there are other benefits of considerable importance.

Educational Value. The educational value of the stock show cannot be overestimated. The show ring is the greatest educational institution for teaching animal form and type. Types sometimes change materially in a very few years. Breeders discover the defects in their own animals when they see them lined up in competition by an efficient judge. Few men become really good judges until they have exhibited stock in competition. Until a man is a good judge he is rarely a successful stock-breeder.

Advertising Counts. Probably the greatest return from showing live stock is in the advertising one gets for his stock. The man who exhibits live stock, whether it be good or medium in quality, gets his name before people in a way hardly equaled by other forms of advertising. This is more especially true if animals are prize-winners and have been shown in attractive condition. With a well-fitted herd on exhibition and the name of the breeder properly displayed on signs or placards, a most effective impression is made on the minds of spectators and prospective buyers. Those who are most successful financially in breeding and selling live stock, consider the exhibition of their stock as a highly important and necessary form of advertising.

Renovating Strawberry Patch After Harvesting

The strawberry patch which has borne one crop should be renovated soon after harvest. This is done by plowing out the plants on either one or both sides of the row, leaving a strip only about four inches wide. The soil of the plowed land is thoroughly cultivated and, if a spike-toothed harrow is used, cross-cultivation may be practiced so that a good bed is made for the new runner plants. Under good soil conditions these will start to grow within a short time and will make a row of new plants 12 to 16 inches wide by early fall. The new plants are confined to the proper width by continuing cultivation until they cease to grow.

Usually it does not pay to renovate a commercial strawberry patch that has already produced two crops, although a home patch, under very favorable conditions, may be allowed to yield three and sometimes four crops.

Utilizing Geysers

Many geysers of Iceland have been used for laundry purposes and soon will be used to heat the city of Reykjavik.

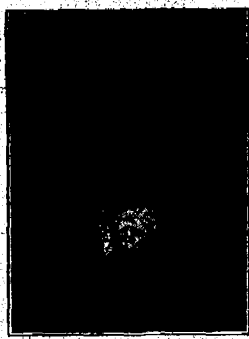

Fruit-Producing States
California produces approximately 70 per cent of the oranges grown in the United States, Florida being the only other state producing any considerable quantity. Nearly all of the lemons grown in the United States are produced in California. A lemon grove near Santa Paula is said to be the largest in the world. The quantity of grapefruit produced is increasing, but Florida far outranks California in both quantity and quality.

Use for Old Leaves
Old leaves are being utilized in France for making paper, fuel and cattle food. They are crushed and chemically treated so that the powdered portion easily separates. The fibrous ribs and veins are then pulped and made ready for use in the manufacture of paper, while the powder is converted into fuel and cattle food.—Popular Mechanics Magazine.

Soldiers Fond of Tobacco

European soldiers always have been heavy smokers, in the last war as well as in the conflicts of olden times. Napoleon used snuff, lots of it, when on the march; the life of Frederick the Great was once saved when a bullet flattened out against a snuff box in his pocket, and Sgdylla, one of the famous cavalry generals of history, was a slave to his pipe.

PROS. ATTY A. L. FITCH MAKE FINE RECORD IN FIRST TERM

The friends of A. L. Fitch, candidate for the usual and customary second term as Prosecuting Attorney are out strongly in his support. They feel that he is entitled, on his record, to a second term. He has made an exceptionally good and efficient officer and no just criticism can be found against him. His judgment has been sound and he has shown courage of a high order on more than one occasion. Once he is convinced that he is right, he goes ahead regardless of consequences to himself. This shows real backbone and the job requires that kind of stuff. Honestly and fairly has characterized all his official acts and at the same time he has been firm in his dealings with violators of the law. He has shown no favoritisms, and the poor man without friends has had an equal show with the man with money and influence. The records verify this statement, and it is as it should be. He repeatedly says that he is looking for results and not for popular favor.

Although his office has been unusually active, he has effected a large saving to the taxpayers by keeping down his expenses, and by insisting upon the collection of costs of prosecution to re-emburse the general fund. He has used business methods and good common sense as the record in the offices of the County Clerk and Treasurer will show.

He has the respect and approval of the Board of Supervisor for his punctual attendance on its sessions and usefulness.

He should have had no opposition at the primary, and his opponent, who was himself allowed a second term cannot on a comparison of records and qualifications, justify his entry in the campaign at this time. Mr. Fitch should have the endorsement of every fair-minded voter, and should receive an overwhelming vote at the polls.

Some figures showing facts which every voter is entitled to know will be published next week.

Flotsam, Jetsam and Ligan

Flotsam, jetsam and ligan are English legal terms, the first referring to shipwrecked goods which float; the second, to goods thrown overboard, which sink and are lost; and the third, to goods which sink, but which are tied to a buoy so that they may be recovered. No owner appearing to claim them, goods which are saved are forfeited to the crown.

Needed Fortifying

In England an arrested murderer told the police, "Yes, yes, I am guilty. I will tell you everything about it after I have had some tea." Later, he said, "I have had tea, Mr. Jones, and I will tell you everything." Yet there are people who do not take seriously British devotion to the national beverage.—Springfield Republican.

Silo Whl Preserve Whole of Any Crop

Various Plants Combine Well With Alfalfa.

The silo preserves the whole crop, stalks and all, in best form for feeding, whether corn, sorghum or kafir, so that hardly any of the food value of the plant is lost. The Colorado experiment station found that when corn was kept in large shocks 31 per cent of dry matter was lost, when kept in small shocks 43 per cent of the dry matter was lost, and when left on the ground 55 per cent of the dry matter was lost. With the silo much of this is saved and the stock will not waste the stalks as they do in dry curing.

The curing of hay is largely dependent on weather conditions, but silage crops can be put into the silo when wet and will cure regardless of weather.

No stalks remain in the way of farm implements and none are left in feed racks and mangers to be thrown out and wasted.

Silage, whether from corn, cane, kafir or sunflowers, combines well with alfalfa hay, which is a staple crop in this state. Alfalfa contains the protein needed to balance the silage, while the silage supplies succulence. Straw can be fed to better advantage with silage than in any other way. The silage will give better results when fed with a little dry roughage than when fed alone.—Charles L. Bray, Colorado Agricultural College.

Methods of Control of Different Insect Pests

The following methods of control for common pests are recommended:

Codling Moth.—Use powdered lead arsenate, 1 1/2 pounds, or powdered calcium arsenate with 4 pounds of hydrated lime to 40 gallons dilute commercial lime sulphur. Apply when 75 per cent of the petals have fallen and complete the work within ten days. Give a cover spray three weeks later with or without lime sulphur.

Orchard Aphis.—First spraying with lime sulphur, 1 to 9, with nicotine sulphate, 1 1/2 pints to the 200 gallons, as buds are beginning to break. For later applications use 2 pints of nicotine sulphate, 8 pounds soap to 200 gallons of water.

Woolly Aphis.—Kerosene emulsion may be applied to overwintering colonies when noticed in the spring.

Leaf-Feeding Caterpillars.—For tent caterpillars, tussock moth and canker worms, apply powdered lead arsenate, 4 pounds to the 200 gallons of spray.

Strawberry Weevil.—Apply sulphur-lead arsenate dust (85-15) at the rate of 60 to 80 pounds per acre when the work of the weevils is noticed in the bud and further application is needed.

Cuprant Leaf Worms.—Apply powdered lead arsenate dusts or sprays to the foliage, unless the fruit is near maturity, when fresh hellebore, 1 pound to 5 pounds hydrated lime, may be used.

Cabbage Root Maggot.—Two or three applications of corrosive sublimate, using 1 ounce to 10 gallons of water. Make first application within four days of the first appearance of eggs on the plants and subsequent treatments at weekly intervals.

Green Cabbage Worms.—Apply a dust of 1 part powdered lead arsenate and 15 parts hydrated lime, or a liquid spray of 1 pound powdered lead arsenate with 2 pounds soap in 40 gallons of water in two or three applications. Make the applications a week or ten days after the white butterflies become numerous in July. In garden plots fresh pyrethrum 1 part to 4 parts flour may be used.

Study Draft of Plows

Extensive studies of the draft of plows conducted by the Iowa agricultural experiment station, have proved that the type of plow bottom does not materially influence the draft. Stubble plows and breaking plows were operated at rates of speed varying from three-fourths of a mile per hour to six and one-half miles per hour, and it was found that the increase of speed will produce about the same increase in draft with any type of bottom.

FARM FACTS

Most farm machinery is more worn by rust than by use.

An account book helps locate the no-account cows and crops.

Don't forget that the horses feel the heat, too, even if they can't remark about it.

Fairs and exhibitions are the milestones that mark the progress of a community and a nation.

Legumes prevent bankruptcy because they insure a steadily increasing reserve deposit in the soil.

Right after the hay has been drawn is a good time to pick up those stones that bothered the mower in cutting it.

Ohio farmers whose low fields had been tile-drained were able this year to work them two or three weeks ahead of their neighbors.

Yields of hay from Sudan average from 1 to 2 1/2 tons an acre. When grown for seed it usually is cut with a corn binder or grain binder, thrashed with a threshing machine.

Cutting Sudan Grass at Most Profitable Time

The most profitable time to cut sudan grass is between the time it begins to head until it is fully headed out. There is little loss, however, when the grass is allowed to grow until the seed has reached the soft dough stage, only one cutting being then required to harvest the crop and obtain the maximum yield of forage. When cut earlier more than one cutting may be obtained but the yield per cutting will not be so large. There are few grasses that are injured so little by standing beyond the proper stage of maturity as sudan grass. This is due to the numerous tillers, which, arising from the base, mature successively and provide immature stalks throughout the season.

Wind and Waves

Contrary to popular belief, the wind's effect on waves is comparatively slight. It has been proved that the fiercest gale has no influence on the water below a depth of 50 feet.

MARY A. COOPER

Candidate for the Republican Nomination for The Office Of

COUNTY TREASURER.

Your support will be appreciated at the September Primary

I am at present Deputy County Treasurer and because of the illness of the Treasurer Henry C. Cooper, I have had I have had complete charge of the office since Sept. 1923 in this last Congress; Because of the fact that Congressman Frank D. Scott, your representative in Congress, voted as a republican in support of the Coolidge program of TAX REDUCTION and like measures, he is opposed in the primary election for renomination on the republican ticket by three who aspire to the office.

Because of the Staunch Support Given President Coolidge

It is apparent, then, that his vote in support of President Coolidge and lower taxes, is not in accordance with the views of his opponents,—or—they seek the office because they are politically ambitious.—Should it happen, then, that any one of Scotts opponents be elected to Congress, he naturally would not vote in support of the President and the administration's program, but would vote as an individual seeking political advancement.
