Fortieth Annual County Fair Went Big

Both Exhibits and Attractions Surpass Previous Years.

This year's Charlevoix County Fair excelled in many respects any of those in previous years. Probably the one greatest advance was in the exhibit of Dairy Cattle. The cattle barn was filled to overflowing with blooded stock and intense interest was shown by nearly a thousand people in the judging.

The Fruit exhibit was remarkably good, every space being taken, and this in spite of the fact that fruit this year is late in maturing. The Vegetable exhibit was also very good. The exhibits of school work were fine, the rural schools and East Jordan putting up meritorious work. For some reason neither Boyne City or Charlevoix schools were represented in this annual event.

Boyne City Marine Band furnished music throughout the Fair and on Thursday the East Jordan Concert Band was augmented. The "Free Attractions" went big with the crowds.

On the Midway, the fine merry-go-round and Ferris wheel, as well as the many side shows proved a source of attraction to the thousands of visitors.

East Jordan defeated Boyne City in Wednesday's base ball game, and on Thursday the Postum Cereal team defeated Boyne City.

Seram's Ramblers Orchestra furnished excellent dance music at the dances given in the educational building.

Moving pictures of the fair grounds were taken each day of the fair and these will be exhibited at a later date.

I'm Sorry

"Got a Baltimore paper?" a man asked impatiently. The young fellow at the "home-town newspaper" stand shook his head. "No, I haven't. I'm sorry." The man's face lost its irritable frown. "Can't keep everything on hand all the time, can you?" he admitted good-naturedly. "Odd how those two courteous little words can smooth things out!"—Chicago Post.

His "Mean" Had Developed

Dean and Dorothy had always been good friends, and played nicely until Dean returned from a three months' visit to his aunt, who spoiled him. After playing with him the first afternoon of his return and finding him quarrelsome, Dorothy said: "My, Dean, but your mean grew a lot while you was gone."

Well, They Were Worthy

"Yes, I had a brother in Boston once," said a Chicago woman to a New England visitor. "He was in some great music society, but I forget the name." Handel and Hadyn society, perhaps," suggested the other. "Well, probably, Handel and Hadyn were Boston men, weren't they?"—Boston Transcript.

See Silo As Means To Save Corn Crop

Backward Season Creates Emergency Situation.

With many fields of corn in the state which will not mature for grain harvest this year, because of the backwardness of the season, the silo is expected to pay its way rather completely by providing a means of handling the crop effectively.

The farmer with a silo, according to Prof. O. E. Reed, head of the dairy division at the Michigan Agricultural College, will be able to save all the crop that does mature.

One danger against which Professor Reed cautions is that of putting corn into the silo too green. This is frequently done, it is said, to avoid possible frost, but the silage made from very green, sappy corn will make a washy, sour feed that is unpalatable and does not have the feed value it should.

"It is better," says Reed, "to let the corn stand until after the frost than to put it in the silo too green. When this practice is followed, the corn should be cut as soon as possible after it is frosted; otherwise there will be considerable loss of nutriment. The leaves dry very quickly after a frost, become brittle, and are easily lost off the stalk.

"If it is desirable to fill before the last frost, the corn should be cut and allowed to lie in the field for at least twenty four hours, or a sufficient length of time to lose some of the excess moisture. The excessive moisture is the cause of sour silage. It is better to let the corn get too dry, and then add sufficient water to get the silage to pack well, than to ensilo the crop too green."

Packers in Demand

High wages are paid to experts employed in packing women's trunks. Both in Paris and London, but especially in the French capital, this has become a regular profession, and probably seven out of ten wealthy women who buy wardrobes in Paris employ a professional packer, who may be supplied either by the modiste or the hotel.

CHINA ENGAGED IN CIVIL WAR

FORCES OF RIVAL MILITARY GOVERNORS BATTLE FOR SHANGHAI.

CABINET WILL REMAIN NEUTRAL

American and British Ships Rushed To Scene of Conflict To Protect Foreigners.

Pekin—The Peking cabinet can not stop nor encourage the conflict raging near Shanghai between the forces of rival Chinese military governors of Chekiang and Kiangsu, contesting for possession of Shanghai and will devote itself to the maintenance of peace and order within the metropolitan area, according to the Asiatic News, which claims to reflect the attitude of the central government.

The present status between Peking and Gen. Chang Tso-lin, who controls Manchuria and is reported to be favoring the Chekiang side in the present conflict, will be maintained unless Chang advances against Shanhai-kwan or Jehol in an attack on Chihli Province, held by Wu.

Only meagre reports of the operations near Shanghai reach Peking. Interest here centers in Gen. Chang Tso-lin and the possibility of his taking a hand in the conflict.

American and British warships were rushed from Chefoo to Weihaiwei to defend the foreign settlement and a protective cordon composed of Shanghai volunteer corps and American, British, Japanese and French sailors, has been thrown about the foreign settlement in Shanghai to prevent the entry of armed Chinese forces there.

Alfalfa Is Best on Drained Soil

Like Sweet Clover Plant Thrives With Liberal Application of Limestone.

If you haven't good drainage or cannot get it, do not try to grow alfalfa. The New York State College of Agriculture at Ithaca makes this statement in pointing out that good drainage is the most important single need for this important crop.

Alfalfa is not so particular as to soil, for it grows and thrives on such heavy ones as Vergennes clay and such light or coarse grained ones as Coloma sand or Chenango gravel. "While a fair natural supply of organic matter in the soil is desirable, yet with thorough inoculation and a little manure to help at the start, alfalfa does well on very sandy soils when other requirements are met," the statement continues.

Lime is Required.

"Alfalfa, like sweet clover, requires lime in the soil. In fact, it fails to thrive without a liberal application of limestone unless the soil is naturally well supplied with it. Alfalfa requires much more lime than does red clover.

"The most important single soil need of this crop is thoroughly good natural drainage. Few soils are too dry for it—many are too wet. It may grow some but it cannot thrive in wet soils. Soils like the Volusia and Canfield, common southern New York upland types, and others which possess poor natural drainage are not well adapted to alfalfa production.

"Soils with good natural drainage like the Chenango, Wooster and Ontario are excellent for alfalfa.

Some Essentials.

"Hardy seed, like Grimm, thorough inoculation, abundance of lime, either native or applied, and thorough natural drainage are essential for real success with alfalfa, but the most important of all is drainage. Without thorough drainage, failure is certain. Red clover and alsike, or alsike alone, on the wetter soils will be more productive than alfalfa."

Machine Shed Will Save Much Money on Any Farm

A recent survey reported by the Missouri College of Agriculture shows that the average life of the corn binder is eight years, and that it is in use only 40 days in its lifetime. The conclusion drawn from this survey is in favor of more machine sheds on the farm. It is estimated that, in many instances, the entire cost of such housing would be paid for in one season, due to decreased wear and tear. A machine shed should be rain proof, snow proof and poultry proof. It should be so arranged that the machines may be stored or removed conveniently.

Standard widths that have been found satisfactory are 16 feet for a small house and 26 feet for a larger structure accommodating two rows of machines. The length depends upon the number of machines. In the wider house sometimes a deck is built seven feet above the ground floor, extending out ten feet from the rear wall. This is used for the storage of some of the lighter machines.

Getting Stand of Sweet Clover on Alkali Soils

Farmers throughout the corn belt have found that in many cases it is possible to get a stand of sweet clover on alkali spots when it was impossible to grow anything else. In some cases corn might grow to a height of four or five feet but then it would dry and the wire worms on such land were always thick. Oats would crinkle and go down.

In years that are dry it is more noticeable than when the spring has been very wet. In a wet spring the alkali goes down into the ground. This excess of alkali, when present in a large area, has been remedied by tilling early. This was followed by a heavy application of straw horse manure. The main idea is to loosen up the soil and allow the alkali to seep down with the rains.

Utilizing Sweet Clover Depends Upon Its Needs

The best way to utilize sweet clover depends largely upon whether hay or pasture is needed. The first crop of the second year, if cut early and high enough, may be used for hay, and the second crop come on for seed. It is advisable to cut the first crop just as the blossom buds form and before they come into bloom. At least two or three leaves should be left attached to the stubble of each plant. If the first crop is cut below the leaves and branches, there will be no second crop. When the second crop is harvested for seed, frequently sufficient seed scatterers to reseed the crop. Sweet clover may be threshed with an ordinary grain separator. If the growth is not very rank, it may be threshed with a clover huller.

Farm Records Will Pay

It pays to keep farm records. Let each member of the family have a department in the ledger—to keep up. It's a lot of satisfaction at the end of the year to know just how much you earned and how much you spent. Even if the "profits" are on the wrong side of the ledger, you'll feel better to have an accurate record rather than to guess at it.

CHAPTER II.—On the way from the station to Mrs. Rose's Ellen rides with a remarkably attractive young woman and a much older man. She takes them for father and daughter, but they are introduced as Mr. and Mrs. Josselyn. Ellen does not "fit in" with the younger members of the party, and is miserable.

CHAPTER III.—Leaving for her home next morning, Ellen meets Gibbs Josselyn, son of her fellow guest. He has disapproved of his father's wedding and is not on speaking terms with the couple. Declining to stay at Mrs. Rose's Gibbs drives Ellen to the station. They miss the train and Gibbs undertakes to drive the girl to Port Washington. On the way their auto is wrecked. Ellen is hurt, but it is not thought to be serious, and she and Gibbs part. He has been attracted by the girl, and she by him.

CHAPTER IV.—Ellen's injury proves to be severe, and for months she is an invalid. Recovered, she is taking part in the town's Memorial day festivities when Gibbs Josselyn, on a vacation trip with a friend, George Lathrop, meets her again. The feeling of mutual attraction has strengthened since they parted. They leave Port Washington man and wife.

CHAPTER V.—Nearly seven years later Gibbs and Ellen Josselyn, with their son Tommy, come back from France to New York. They are welcomed by Josselyn, senior, and his beautiful wife, Lillian, the old ill-feeling forgotten.

rather fun to visit there, as Gibbs' wife, with little Thomas, third. She well remembered the handsome woman who had been so ballingly superior in her manner toward Mrs. Rose; her own—what was it?—stepmother-in-law now, so curiously had events come about.

Five minutes later they were all together in a jumble of landing. Ellen was kissed on her suddenly wet cheeks by her father-in-law, and by George Lathrop, who had been best man at their wedding, and by the sweet and rather silent Joe. Joe was taller than ever, he would never be well-dressed or well-groomed, or have a particularly happy manner in company, but Ellen clung to the big, boyish arm, and laughed into his handsome, kindly face as if she could never feel and see and hear enough of him. He had improved so, and he looked so—well, so grown-up! After all, one's little brother was one's little brother, even if he was twenty-five! She found her father-in-law aged, he was somehow shrunken, and his face had grown leaner in its aspect. Lillian was so changed as to be hardly recognizable.

She was dressed with great severity, but everything she wore was fine and rich. Her skin was like a rose leaf, her dark eyes were rimmed with faint violet shadows—eyes made for sorrow, but shining with pleasure and hospitality now. Ellen thought she had never seen whiter teeth, or a more beautiful scarlet mouth to enhance their whiteness.

She had been beautiful seven years ago, she was more than that now. She radiated charm and personality, there was a hint of sadness in her face when it was in repose, there were a hundred provocative attractions in her thoughtful smile. She was ready with a French phrase, a German phrase, she touched lightly upon the Italian political situation, she had the name of a Russian novelist readily upon her tongue.

Ellen thoroughly liked George Lathrop, who was Gibbs' senior by only six or seven years, and his best friend. George was a lawyer and a man of importance, but he was somewhat insignificant in appearance, and his manner still betrayed the country boy who has fought his way to the top.

"You must help me get some new gowns," Ellen said, realizing for the first time in seven years that gowns really were important. "Of course at home—in Paris, I mean, I've worn only studio things."

"But, my dear, you should have gotten loads of things in Paris!" Lillian said. "You'll think they're pirates here!"

"Well, I did get an evening gown, and an afternoon dress," Ellen said. "Gibbs and I tried to pick out something smart. But really it is hard, there. There are so many new models, and one can't tell which is going to be adopted—and so many women dress just to fit their own types, now, regardless of style!"

"Here we are!" Joe, who could not move his delighted eyes from his sister, said suddenly. They all got out at the great hotel, where, Ellen learned, they were to stay for a day or two, instead of the Hotel Brevoort, before going down to the country house, to which Lillian had given an Italian name, "Villino dell'Orto."

thing that their vague reports had given her to understand was like an infantile paralysis.

"My little brother has grown up!" Ellen said, with a rueful smile. He answered her with another smile. "Joe? Joe's a great fellow," he said. "We're very fond of Joe at my house. In some ways he's the most remarkable boy I ever knew! He's absolutely and utterly honest. Things don't deceive Joe. I like to introduce him to people—if they've got anything that interests Joe, he gets it out. If they haven't, it doesn't matter how much champagne they open, or whether they have a season opera box or a villa in Italy, they simply don't register with Joe. I think that fellow will go a long way! He's taught my boy more now than I could ever teach him, more than he'll get out of college."

Ellen went back to Gibbs with her eyes shining. "Mr. Lathrop was talking so nicely about Joe, Gibbs!" "Oh, that's a love affair all 'round!" Lillian said lazily. "Of course Harriet's feelings are no secret. She's plain, and she's not likely to meet anyone else on the same intimate terms that she's known Joe. George is willing, Joe is willing—I suppose—and Harriet is more than willing."

"Joe" Ellen could only echo, in amazement. "Joe is clever, and steady, and sensible," Lillian said, "and George doesn't care about anything else. His one terror is that his precious child will be snapped up for her money. Joe's position doesn't make the slightest difference to George."

It was said so pleasantly, in her good-natured, indifferent manner, that the oddity of this sentiment, coming from Lillian, did not occur to Ellen, nor the propriety of her saying it to Ellen at all. The two women, utterly different in type, were inclined to like each other, perhaps for the reason that they lived in alien worlds, and spoke alien tongues. Ellen, clear of vision for all her simplicity and inexperience, knew that Lillian regarded her with a sort of indulgent contempt. A woman who was cheerfully unfashionable to the point of dowdiness, who was domestic and unselfish and contented, had no common ground upon which to meet Lillian Josselyn.

As the pleasant days went on, Ellen marveled at her more and more. Lillian never talked of herself. She had her mysteries, her cryptic reserves. She had friendships of a sort with women, sometimes she tried to make Ellen express herself about them. And she had friendships with men, but of these she never spoke at all. She was the type of beautiful woman who can remain silent with perfect self-possession, and when she did speak it was to amuse her old husband, or to encourage Ellen and Gibbs to talk.

In the evening occasionally all four went to the theater. But Lillian liked better to dine at leisure somewhere, and to meet friends, as they always did, and to dance. Gibbs danced a little, Ellen less. They sat and chatted with Josselyn, Senior, quite happily, enjoying the music and the general gaiety of the scene. Lillian's partners would bring her back, flushed, lovely, silent; she would exert herself to be pleasant to the group at the table until she was claimed again. She taught Gibbs new steps, but it was quite apparent that she enjoyed dancing with good dancers, regardless of her feeling for them as men. Sometimes they went to the tea dances that were the latest attraction at the big hotels; Ellen would feel a little sorry for her father-in-law. He was always well-groomed, interested, alert. She found a little pathos in his eagerness to join them in all their amusements, not to be a clog, or to affect their plans.

He treated his wife with unvarying courtesy, but he grew deeply fond of Ellen, and little Tom became the joy of his life. There were days when the three went together to the park or the zoo and chattered all day as if they had been of one age. And Ellen felt no pity for the silver head when she saw it bent against Tommy's black locks; somehow there was a dignity and a fittingness here that was lacking at the dances and the teas.

own, keep the little Fort Washington Lincoln for Tommy, get a cook besides, and go back to their own way of living.

"I stuck in everything I wanted," Lillian conceded, "and Tom almost lost his mind trying to reconcile Spanish tiles and old English woodwork and Dutch doors!" "It must be wonderful and fearful to behold," Gibbs said later to his wife. "I have a vision of tapestries and Mission oak and black-and-white stripes and Tiffany lamps all merrily intermingled. Lillian would get what was smart, you know, if she lived in La Trappe monastery!"

Two days later they drove straight from the hotel to Wheatley Hills, and to the "Villino dell'Orto." It was a day of soft showers and uncertain sunshine. Ellen, sitting next to her father-in-law, who was driving the car, was in an ecstasy as she began to recognize the familiar country.

"This is our little outfit," Josselyn, Senior, said, at last, turning in at a white-pebbled drive, between great trees and spraying, enormous rose-trees that already wore young green. The hard-rolled lawns showed a faint, emerald film; bushes ready to bud were everywhere; in a few weeks the place would be a mass of fragrant bloom. All about were the curves and rises of wooded hills, beyond lay the Sound, coldly blue in the distance. Here and there another country home was visible; a stately facade of dark brick, or the classic green and white of the modern colonial wood. Each of these had its fifty or a hundred acres, its stables and garage and lodge to match the house. The Josselyn estate was small, less than ten acres in all; there was a handsome fence, and some of the finest woodland on the entire island, but no lodge.

But Ellen had only a confused impression of these things at the moment; her whole attention was centered on the house. She gave Gibbs one amazed glance, he met her look, and they both burst into laughter. "We've been had, old dear, what?" he said shamefacedly. Lillian smiled contentedly. "You do like it?" "Like it!" Gibbs merely echoed. And Ellen said honestly: "I think it's the loveliest house I ever saw!"

It was Italian in type, the plaster walls stained a warm cream, the windows and doors placed irregularly; some large, some narrow. A wide stone stairway rose from the pebbled path to the second floor, climbing against the side of the house, at its base stood great jars of potted hydrangeas. Under the stairway water poured from a lion's mouth into a shallow basin, and above it, in the smooth facade of the house, a blue plaque was embedded in a vine-wreathed arch, a Della Robbia bambino spreading his little hands in untrusting blessing over the doorway.

There was the perfection of exquisite simplicity in the whole, the perfection of absolute order and appropriateness. The three years that the house had been standing here might have been three hundred, so kindly did the trees enclose it, so readily had the bare vines made themselves at home. Even while the newcomers stood gazing at it, a nesting bird, with a thread hanging from his bill, disappeared into the chimney ivy, and a maid, opening an arched door in the house wall, showed behind her trim little figure a sun-flooded vista of stone arches and tiled floors that tempted Ellen to an immediate investigation, and made her exclaim again.

They went up the wide outside stair, and through the dark carved wooden door at the top, and were in a quaint, long room marvelously paneled in rich wood, with a glorious view through enormous windows that were curtained only by thin widths of some dark silken stuff. The room was devoid of merely ornamental things, one splendid rug crossed the floor, logs blazed under the carved acanthus leaves of the great marble fireplace. There was a black oak table that might have come from a monastery, the chairs were large and comfortable despite their severity of line. The effect was of space, silence, and shadow.

Lillian, enchanted by her visitors' admiration, led them to other rooms. Here was a piano, with a harp beside it, in a small room, lighted by three narrow gothic windows. Here was the breakfast room, bright and square, with Quimper plates ranged on an old dresser, and Perugian blue cottons at the windows. Sometimes they stepped up, and sometimes down, through exquisite doorways deeply arched, every vista had been studied, and made perfect. Sometimes Ellen looked down at the formal garden, with its moonlight and its trimmed cypresses close to the woods, sometimes she laughed in surprise at finding herself unexpectedly above the tiled courtyard where maids were chatting in the sun, or crossed a stone balcony presumably leading into the library, to find herself in one of the long, bare corridors again. Everywhere was the same effect of space, and restraint, and emptiness.

Gibbs presently went to his stepmother, and took both her hands. "I congratulate you, my dear! I've not seen anything better in my life!" "I congratulate you, my dear! I've not seen anything better in my life!"

"I congratulate you, my dear! I've not seen anything better in my life!" she had not meant to show it, she laughed a little shakily. "We want you dears to like us!" she said. And immediately she was all practical. "I've put you both in here, Ellen, it's not the largest room, but it has the prettiest view, and the fireplace. And in summer, you can move if you like. And Thomas is right next door, across the bath. Lizzie can either sleep there or have a room upstairs with the other girls. Little Keno will look out for you, she's Japanese, but she understands everything, and if you ring, she'll bring you anything. Don't dress unless you want to; I'm going to get into something comfortable."

She was gone, and the younger Josselyns left to smile upon each other like children in a fairy tale. Ellen explored the little domain; every need had been anticipated, everything was perfect.

The Real Balloon Tire Discovery—Supertwist You're probably thinking about buying Balloon tires. As you know, Balloon tires are much larger than ordinary tires and run at lower air pressure. They smooth out bumps, save your car and its occupants. But to be practical, a Balloon tire must stand up and give good mileage under the constant flexing and bending to which it is subjected. The durability of Goodyear Balloon Tires is assured by a new invention—Supertwist Cord. Supertwist is an extra durable cord fabric developed by Goodyear especially for Balloon tires. Its superiority lies in its greater elasticity. Supertwist will stretch farther than ordinary cord before it breaks. Hence it protects Goodyear Balloon Tires against stone bruise and rupture. We have Goodyear Supertwist Cord Balloons for the new small diameter wheels or to fit the wheels now on your car, without change.

Pretty Caps to Aid the Cause of Beauty

Our evening faces and our morning faces are not always equally "easy to look at." Evening faces usually have much the advantage because of pretty framing in careful hairdressing and coiffure ornaments. But the morning face may rival it. There are many pretty breakfast caps whose only mission is to help the cause of beauty in the morning. Two of them, shown here, have lately arrived in the bright company of boudoir headwear. The cap at the top, of dotted net, lace, ribbon and chiffon plaiting, covers the coiffure (or lack of one) completely, with lace about the face and frills of plaited chiffon falling over the ears. The other cap is called a "wave retainer" and is made of narrow ribbon tied in lattice work pattern. This makes one of the most adorable of night caps as well as a cheerful affair for the breakfast table, and is much appreciated by the bobbed-haired.
