Crow Held To Blame For Poor Seed Corn

Much Abused Bird Often Innocent. Low Germination Being Responsible.

Generally uncertain condition of Michigan's supply of seed corn for next spring's planting, and the possibility that there will be many "spotted" stands in 1925, forecasts a bad year for our old friend the crow, according to Prof. J. F. Cox, head of the crops department at M. A. C.

In years when the germination of seed corn is poor, the crow comes in for much more than his share of blame for the missing hills. It is true he does eat some seed corn and pull some seedlings. Prof. Cox admits, but many farmers who fail to select their stocks of seed corn in the fall and as a result get poor stands use the convenient crow as their alibi, refusing to admit that the seed may have been at fault.

"The crows are moving south now," says Cox, "and when you hear the next one say 'caw, caw,' just remember that he is talking about seed corn and that he is trying to remind you that now is the time to select your seed corn in the field and hang it under cover to dry before winter sets in.

"If your field is not ripe enough, buy the privilege of field selecting your own seed in the most mature and best yielding field in your neighborhood. The corn crop is late in Michigan and throughout the corn-belt, and good seed corn will undoubtedly be scarce next year. 'Save your own seed,' is the best way of meeting this condition. Don't be one of those who 'blame the crows' for their own short-comings next spring.

Amendment Foes Cite Constitution

Base "No Vote" Campaign on Provisions Calling For 1926 Convention.

Opponents of the three proposed amendments to the constitution which will be submitted to the electors in November are seizing upon constitutional provisions calling for the submission of the question to a constitutional convention at the general election in 1926, as the basis for a campaign of "vote 'no' on all amendments."

Strong opposition to all three amendments is now developing rapidly and indications are that before the campaign goes very far an effort will be made of all opposing forces to unite on a "vote 'no'" slogan for all three issues involved.

Fight Three Amendments.

The amendments are the so-called parochial school amendment, which would require all children between the ages of 7 and 16 years to attend a public school until they had completed an eighth grade education; the income tax amendment which would provide an income tax ranging from 5 to 10 per cent on all incomes in excess of $4,000; and the amendment proposing a new scheme of reapportioning the representation in the legislature on the basis of registered and qualified electors making the township rather than the county the unit for division of the various districts; it would repeal the present moiety clause in the constitution, and would work entirely to the advantage of big cities and particularly those in which there was a large registration of electors. The amendment would make the lieutenant governor, secretary of state and attorney general the reapportioning board, action to be taken every eighth year.

Opponents of the three measures are pointing to Section 4 of Article 16 of the constitution, which provides:

"At the general election to be held in the year thereafter and at such other times as may be provided by law, the question of a general revision of the constitution shall be submitted to vote for members of the legislature."

The section then goes on to detail the make-up of a constitutional convention in the event the proposal received a majority vote.

Opposition Growing

It is being pointed out by the advocates of the "vote 'no' on all amendments" move that if there is a general demand for revision or amendment to the constitution the proposal will receive a favorable vote when submitted two years hence and that the convention will be in session by the fall of 1927. They declare that with a constitutional convention both sides to any proposed issue could be given a full hearing and it would then be up to the members of the convention to determine what changes, if any, should be made in the present constitution.

Opposition to both the income tax and parochial school amendments is becoming very pronounced. Indications are that the apportionment amendment which is the child of a Wayne county legislator, will be snuffed under in practically all sections of the state outside of Wayne county.

The Koran

The Koran consists largely of moral and pious sayings, exhibiting a considerable knowledge of the philosophy of the age in which Mahomet wrote. Mention is made of some of the Old Testament characters, Moses and Elijah, for instance, and there are also quotations from, or at least indications, of a knowledge of the New Testament.

A. E. ALEXANDER GOES INTO PARTNER- SHIP AT CHARLEVOIX

Messrs. Peter Lemieur and A. E. Alexander, the latter of East Jordan, have leased the store building owned by Mr. John J. Fagan and purchased the stock, and will hereafter conduct the business formerly carried on by Mr. Fagan. The members of the new firm took possession of the place last Tuesday, and will add considerably to the present stock as well as making some important improvements to the property—Charlevoix Sentinel.

Mr. and Mrs. Alexander move to Charlevoix first of next week and will make that city their home.

JUNIOR FAIR LAST WEEK

Last week the Junior Class was very busy getting ready for a Junior Fair which is held annually.

The Fair opened Saturday afternoon with a parade which started from the High School at 1:30. The Juniors and grade children were in it as they marched around town advertising.

When all came back to the school the different stands were opened. The stands were back of the High School building, in the shape of tents. There were many attractions such as side shows, a museum, a merry-go-round, fish pond, candy, red hot, cider, ice cream, hamburgs, dummy stand and shelland ponies.

Two prizes were given to the two best dressed children in the parade. Miss Clark, Mrs. Blount and Mr. Duncanson acted as judges.

Again at 7:00 the Juniors paraded the town advertising the Fair.

The Fair closed at night, having had a very successful day.

The class wishes to thank all those who in any way helped to make it a success.

To Photograph Deer

A deer's sense of smell is wonderful, and they get the scent a half mile away, and a mouse over a mile with the wind blowing directly toward it, says Nature Magazine. Hence it is that the first thing that the photographer does is to see which way the wind is. If the wind blows wrong, stay in camp, because you will see no animals.

Cheboygan De- feated by E. J.

In a Clean and Hard-Fought
Game Coach Waggoner's Men Showed Greater Punch.

After a two weeks lay off since the opening game with petoskey, the local High School gridiron warriors got back into the harness against Cheboygan at the High School athletic field Saturday, and won a hard fought battle.

The locals seemed to show a lack of actual work in a game as numerous fumbles at critical times in the first half seemed to attest. On the other hand Cheboygan showed a smoother working combination, largely due to having already played three strong opponents. Although East Jordan was erratic in its offense it showed the punch which is the most necessary element in strong Football team.

East Jordan won the toss and chose to receive at the east goal. Cheboygan kicked to the 20yd. line where, on the first play, Palmer caught a beautiful pass from Walker for a 30yd. gain. On the next play, Walker skirted Cheboygan's left end for 20 more, on a cross-buck Walker repeated for 10yds, bringing East Jordan to Cheboygan's 20yd. line, where East Jordan made her first costly fumble, losing the ball to Cheboygan who kicked out of danger.

On a couple more plays, East Jordan fumbled again, leaving the ball on their own 30yd. line, where Myers, Cheboygan's star 190 lb. half back, on three plays made first down. In the next play he was held time for quarter.

Soon after the opening of the second quarter, after a good deal of Myers the ball was placed on East Jordan's eight yard line where East Jordan's right end was drawn in and Myers circled the remaining distance for the first score of the game. Cheboygan failed to score the single point. The rest of the quarter was played principally in Cheboygan's territory but continued fumbling caused the ball to see-saw between the two teams until the half ended.

In the second half, East Jordan looked like a new aggregation. Cheboygan received and was held for downs almost immediately. Then it was a case of Shaw, Walker and company, assisted by a couple of good running mates in Palmer and Smith and the ball remained in Cheboygan's territory almost continually.

In this quarter Shaw pulled off two or three 20 yard and 30 yard runs, at one time going 30 yard on a pass, hitting two Cheboygan men and laying them both out. Cheboygan held them for downs a couple of times but they took it away from the boys from the Straits almost immediately, assisted by some good end running by Walker and Smith, the ball was taken to Cheboygan's 30 yard line where Smith put it across on a good line plunge. Walker drop kicked for goal.

The next quarter was almost a repetition of the third, these same men carrying the ball to the 15 yard line where on a fake place kick, Walker ran the end almost crossing the field for the second touchdown early in the fourth quarter. Walker again place kicked for goal making the score 14 to 6 where the scoring stopped, although East Jordan came dangerously near scoring again.

Although the back field are mentioned prominently in the game, the line played a major part in preventing Cheboygan from scoring. A team is no better than its line play Cook, playing his first game, did some steller defensive work, as did Duffey at the other tackle.

By the way, Duffey should have a good year on account of his experience. Other men who showed up very well in the defense are Snyder, Mackey and others who perhaps will give more reason for comment in their next game.

Although Waggoner's men did some fumbling in the first half, it surely must be said that they played like a team of veterans in the second half, displaying a dash and variety of play that suggest well for the future prospects.

This week the boys journey to Alpena where they encounter Coach Quam's men who are an unknown quantity, as there is no chance to make comparison in any games played this year. East Jordan was weakened Saturday on account of the loss of the valuable services of Paul Souerville, veteran tackle. It looks now as though everybody would be in the game and things will go still better.

Will Raise A 100 Thousand

Michigan Tourists and Resort
Association Plan Campaign.

Carroll F. Sweet, Vice-President of the Old National Bank, Grand Rapids, and newly elected President of the Tourist & Resort Association, this week turned his dynamic energy to the task decided upon by the annual meeting of the Michigan Tourist & Resort Ass'n of raising $100,000.00 to get tourists to Michigan for the spring, summer and fall of 1925.

The two-day meeting held at the Pantland Hotel, Grand Rapids, brought out many interesting angles of West Michigan business that were discussed at great length by the members. One of the features of the meeting was the annual analysis of the work done by the Tourists Association. This was accomplished by a post-card referendum the card being sent to people who answered the publicity in West Michigan this year, and that the returns from the post-cards were tabulated by the Bureau of Market Research, Chicago, Ill. They showed that the Association's work was responsible for a $45,000,000.00 volume of business in 1924. This, of course, is only a portion of the whole business done in West Michigan. The people who inquired as the result of the publicity were asked whether they finally came to West Michigan, the number of people in their party and the number of days they stayed, and at $7.00 per person per day, the returns showed a $45,000,000.00 volume of business.

Other interesting factors in the investigation were the fact that this year the average person stayed approximately one week less in West Michigan than in 1923, also there was a reduction in the number of persons per party this year over last year, and even though the publicity expenditure of the Tourists Association was increased by 100 per cent in 1924 over 1923, the Association increased in business for 1924 over 1923 totaled something over 10 per cent, a condition which was due to weather and business conditions.

The work for raising the $100,000.00 fund for 1925 under the direction of the new President was started this week by Secretary and Manager Hugh J. Gray, and Field Representative S. B. Murray, who will visit all of the 30 counties and co-operate with the local committeemen to the end that these counties receive their quotas.

BRITISH LABOR CABINET FALLS

McDONALD QUILTS PREMIERSHIP AFTER HOUSE PASSES VOTE OF CENSURE

KING DISSOLVES PARLIAMENT

General Election To Select House of Commons Members Set For October 29

London—Following the government's defeat in the House of Commons last week, King George assented to and dissolved parliament by proclamation. The Labor Cabinet of Prime Minister MacDonald fell when the Prime Minister announced in the house during a debate of the Conservative motion of censure and the Liberal amendment dealing with the government's withdrawal of sedition charges against the editor of the Communist publication that the government would resign if the house passed either the motion or the amendment. The amendment was adopted 364 to 193.

A general election has been called for Oct. 29. There is little doubt that the Labor party and the government welcome an appeal to the country as they contend, and are convinced, that they will return to the House of Commons a much stronger party, even though they may not command a majority in the house over all the other parties. They believe they have a good cause to present to the electors in what they argue is the triviality of the question upon which they have been defeated and on their record, especially in the realm of foreign affairs and finance.

LA FOLLETTE FLAYS OLD GUARD

Says Big Business Owns Government, Charges Slush Fund.

Detroit—The largest crowd that has greeted Senator Robert M. LaFollette since he started his speaking tour in behalf of his candidacy for president, met him here. More than 7,000 people paid him from 50 cents to $1 to hear him allege that big business has bought the Government away from the people, and that the Republican National Committee is raising a slush fund of between $4,000,000 and $5,000,000 to swing the election to President Coolidge in doubtful states. Senator LaFollette repeated the charges made at Scranton that the plan for the slush fund was inaugurated at a conference between William M. Butler, Republican National chairman, W. T. Mellon, of Pittsburgh, and Edward T. Stotesbury, and that the Pennsylvania quota is $600,000.

ANATOLE FRANCE PASSES AWAY

Noted French Writer Dies After a Lingering Illness.

Tours, France—Anatole France, 80 years old, great French writer, is dead, after a lingering illness. In the passing of Anatole France, there is lost to France and to the whole world the genius of a man who, as interpreter of the French spirit during the last 50 years, has been without a rival. He wrote for France, but the whole world read him, and united in commending him in heart-felt phrases on the occasion of his eightieth birthday, April 18, 1924. France was a great French literary master, yet he was a very human man, given to gossip, serious about small things, light-hearted about weighty matters, tolerant, kindly and just, and a most charming conversationalist. Thus he came to be called "le bon maître" by his friends.

NAVY DIRIGIBLE ON RECORD TRIP

Giant Ship to Visit Pacific Points on 7,000 Mile Voyage

Fort Worth, Texas—The navy's big air cruiser, the Shenandoah, which cast off from her mooring mast, at Lakehurst, N. J., last week, on a two-weeks trip of more than 7,000 miles, via the southerly route to the Pacific coast, where visits will be made to San Diego, Los Angeles, San Francisco and Seattle, arrived here safely. Commander Zachary Lansdowne is in command of the dirigible. Rear Admiral W. A. Moffett, chief of the bureau of naval aeronautics, is on board as official observer. The outstanding accomplishment of the Shenandoah, in the view of Admiral Moffett, has been to establish the practicability of lighter than air craft as a means of transportation.

New York Valued at Over 12 Billion. New York—The five boroughs of New York, as fixed by the department of taxes and assessments for the 1925 tax roll, are valued at $12,301,509,295. The valuation is subject to revision but as it stands it represents a $2,000 property holding for every resident of the metropolis. The total is an increase of $1,581,262,551 over the previous year, the great amount of new buildings being responsible for the higher values, though many assessments have been raised.

Simple Day Dresses Sure of Approval

The pretty wearer of this demure daytime frock may not know just where she is going—before the day is over—but she is on her contented way. Wherever she may find herself there is one thing that she may be sure of and that is the fitness of her dress for all usual daytime requirements. It is made of crepe satin in the straight-line mode, and has a panel at the front of the material laid in impeccable knife plaits. There is a girdle, also made of the material. It is used as a covering for cord, which is worked up into small medallions and sewed together. Such a frock makes a background for pretty accessories—as costume jewelry and neckpieces—that tone it up when necessary, and almost any sort of hat looks well with it.

PAYING FOR THINGS

By THOMAS ARKLE CLARK
Dean of Men, University of Illinois.

"WHAT a wonderful man George Newton is," an acquaintance of mine said to me when I was in California this summer.

I had known George well half a dozen years or so ago, and so I was interested.

"Yes?" I said inquiringly. "What wonderful thing is he doing now?"

"He has such enthusiasm; he's always pushing something. And then he went on to tell me of a scheme in which George was interested and which involved the expenditure of many thousands of dollars.

"How much is George putting into it?" I asked.

"Well, I don't know that he has invested anything," was the reply; "he's just promoting the scheme."

I recalled that while in college he was a sort of social and political promoter. If there was a dance to be given, or a lot to be distributed, he always managed to get onto the committee; he was keen for every enterprise that presented itself, but he always saw to it that someone else paid the bills. No one was more eager than he to send the band to Columbus or Madison or to put on a monster celebration at homecoming, but it was the faculty, or the merchants of the town, or the alumni of Chicago, or the Salvation Army who in his mind should assume the responsibility for payment, not George. His shiekels were reserved for the promotion of his own personal pleasure. He never "chipped in," he never plunked down the cold cash to further the worthy enterprises which he advocated. He furnished the enthusiasm, the wind, as it were, and he expected the other man to shell out the money. I was interested to see that long after he was out of college he held to the same theory.

My father used to say that what we believed in and what we belonged to we ought to be willing to pay for. It is a long time since he first preached the doctrine to me, but I have come to believe he is right. Education, religion, ideals are worth all that they cost, and the more we pay for them the more they mean to us. What we pay little for we are likely to value lightly.

Any enterprise which we support rises in our estimation. The more we give, the more we sacrifice, the more we love the thing for which we have sacrificed.

"ORPHEUS"

Orpheus was a legendary Thracian musician and hero who popularly was supposed to have invented the lyre. His music is said to have been so magically beautiful that the wild beasts crowded about him to listen. He is also famous for his journey to Hades to recover his wife, Eurydice. Since he is a patron of music, musical clubs are often called by his name.

CHAPTER XIII

"Now we've been questioning the girls in the house, and your stepmother—and your wife," Ryan said, casually, arranging papers on the desk before him, and glancing now and then at Gibbs as he did so. "And I think if you will give us your version of this affair, Mr. Josselyn—"

"Certainly!" Gibbs said, sitting back in his chair, and folding his arms. As Ellen had felt the unspoken friendliness in the air, so Gibbs was instantly aware of an antagonism; as Ellen had seen that they sheltered and favored her in their questions, so Gibbs saw that he was not to be spared. The district attorney, who had sold papers and run errands for a living, twenty-five years ago, when little Gibbs Josselyn was riding his pony, and having his beautiful little suits made to order, was not apt to be over-gentle in his dealings with a rich man's son.

Gibbs' Face Was White, and His Eyes Strained, Before the Quarrel Had Been Lived and Relived Again.

Gibbs' face was white, and his eyes strained, before the quarrel had been lived and relived again. He admitted his admiration of his father's wife, admitted that it had given his own wife and his father some concern, admitted that the matter had caused a strained relationship between the four. He did not glance at George; his eyes were fixed upon his interrogator.

"I tell you as well as I can," Gibbs said. "I went first to the study where I had the little smoking room for a long time—more than an hour, I think. The window there, under the picture of the King, and said that it was nearly eight o'clock, and asked me to dine."

"You had had nothing to eat?" "Nothing." "Nor to drink?" "Yes, I had had a whisky-and-soda when I went in, and then later another."

"Ah! And did you drink with you, dinner? Go on, please, just as the events transpired." "I had two cocktails before my dinner; I was still upset from the talk with my father—"

"The quarrel?" "The quarrel, yes. I didn't eat—much. I may have eaten something, but I am not sure. I went out—"

"What time was this?" "Nine o'clock, I should say. Getting would remember that, because he followed me out to ask me something about the hunt breakfast on Thanksgiving."

"Will you get hold of him?" Ryan asked one of his men in an undertone. There was a moment's interruption and murmuring. Then Ryan said: "Excuse me. Will you go on?"

"After that I started walking, without thinking much where I was going," Gibbs said. "It was dark, but not very cold. I walked a long way, and then I saw the lights of the 'Wayside Inn.' We'd been there before, last summer. I sat up on the porch, and stood there, looking in."

"Why didn't you go straight in, Mr. Josselyn?" "I don't know. I think I wasn't sure that I wanted to go in."

"You walk—what is it—something more than eight miles, in the dark," commented the district attorney, "and then you vacillate about going in?" "I remember thinking that I was hungry," Gibbs went on. "But they were dancing in there, and I didn't feel much like getting into a dance."

"But you did go in?" "No, I didn't. While I was standing there I recognized—I recognized—friends—at a little table right near the window—"

"I have told you that I did not mention it to my wife," Gibbs answered. "I should like to call your attention to the fact that Mr. Josselyn was unwilling to bring his stepmother's name into this discussion a few minutes ago," George said quietly. "That would seem to me to indicate that there had been no rearrangement between them."

"Exactly," Ryan said, with a sharp look. "Thank you—I think that is all. Oh, one moment. When you came home from this walk, you approached the house by the rear road, crossed the field of the adjoining property, entered the gate on the tennis court, and so came around the west face of the house, to the front door?"

"Yes, sir." "So that, by a really circuitous route, you did not pass the lighted study window?" "Accidentally, I did just that."

"Accidentally, of course. Thank you, Mr. Josselyn." Again there was the little stir of men changing position. Gibbs and George went to the desk.

"I will make it my business to look up those matters you called to my attention, Mr. Ryan," George said. In a business-like tone. "I'll see Mr. Josselyn's man-of-business—had out if there was anything irregular, any dispute there. There was one point I would like to make before we end this investigation: Is it possible that Mr. Josselyn fell asleep in his chair, and was shot in that state?"

The district attorney nodded thoughtfully. He had scored steadily, throughout the long day, but he was rasped by the conviction that Gibbs despised him.

"I will speak to Corrigan about it. That would be an important point, of course." He glanced at the coroner, who had risen, and was standing aside him.

"Doctor Cutter spoke of that," the man said. "But it is impossible. When we found the body the head was sunk forward, exactly like a man asleep. But the bullet could not have entered the body as it did enter it while it was in that position. Mr. Josselyn was sitting erect when the shot was fired, and his assassin must have engaged him in conversation, holding his own hand, with the revolver in it, barely above the level of the table."

"I see," George said. He and Ryan fell into a low-toned conversation at one of the windows. All over the room there was the rustle preceding departure. A deputy, a kind-faced man of large build, would remain in the house; the others would return in the morning.

"But, what's the point? I don't see how to live a lie and things?" "I've got them. Her mother and father will be there, and Aunt Ellen. That's all."

"But Joe—no, quickly!" Ellen cried. "After all, perhaps it's the wisest thing," she conceded. "I'll try tomorrow to get someone else for Tommy."

"I was going to speak to you about that, Sis. Why can't we take Tommy? You'll have your hands full—"

"Look here, Ellen!" Joe said bluntly. "I'm surprised at you. Gibbs is going to depend on you now, as he never did in his life before, and here you are skipping your meals, lying awake nights, and getting hysterical! My G-d, Sis, you'll do him much more harm than good this way."

"Yes, I know!" Ellen said quickly. "But, Joe, she added, "I keep thinking that that Ryan will ask me—ask me outright what I think, and what can I say? I can't—"

"Now, listen, Ellen," he interrupted firmly. "In the first place, he never will ask you what you think. He'll simply ask you what you did, or said, or heard said; he may not put you on the stand at all. Now just calm down. Take things easy. And you let us have Tommy. Lizzie adores the kid—we both do. And he'll be out of the way of the whole thing. Get me?"

"I get you!" she smiled, a little sadly, as she returned his kiss. "And you may be married tonight?" "Will be!"

"It seems so strange, Joe." She went with him to the door of her room. "Not what I thought my little brother's wedding day would be!" she said.

"Nor I," he answered gravely. She thought he looked all a boy as he walked away, and turned at the stairhead to wave his hand to her.

A few minutes later Gibbs came up, and Ellen lighted the flame under the spirit-lamp, and made him fresh tea. He looked tired and ill, but he smiled at her gratefully as she gave him the smoking cup.

There was a knock at the door, but he did not seem to hear it. He had dropped his handsome head against the chair-back, and closed his dark, shadow-rimmed eyes. "It will seem good to get out of this, and get the little scout again, and go off out of the range of newspapers and cameras, won't it?" he asked. "I was thinking we might take the roadster and go South—Florida, maybe, or Atlanta."

Ellen's color rushed up, the vision of escape from all this horror had set her blood to dancing. The open road again, Gibbs and Tommy, meals here and there and everywhere—

Josselyn's Wife

Another knock at the door. Gibbs heard this one, and turned questioning eyes toward it. "Stay where you are!" Ellen commanded. She went to the door. Gibbs heard one whispered word of protest and horror, and got to his feet, the color draining from his face. He saw George's grave face, and another face or two in the background. In the foreground, their eyes sweeping the room quickly, were two blue-coated officers.

CHAPTER XV

The trial of Thomas Gibbs Josselyn for the murder of his father was naturally the journalistic tidbit of the day. The social standing of the family, the mystery surrounding the murder, the odd relationship of the man and the two women, all these things were incalculably valuable to city editors everywhere.

Presently the will of the murdered man was filed, and caused its own sensation. After the bequests to servants and charities, and the gifts to old friends, the widow was to have her handsome allowance, payable unless she remarried, throughout her life, besides her country home at Wheatley Hills, and all it contained. To the son certain books and specified silver and jewels were bequeathed, and a moderate sum was to be held in trust for the little grandson.

All the rest went to the daughter-in-law. More than that, should Lillian remarry, she was to be given a lump sum, the remainder of her fortune to revert to Ellen. Ellen heard it all vaguely; she was not thinking of money in these days. She did not read the papers that shrieked between the two oceans that old Thomas Josselyn had trusted her above his wife or his son.

The trial was set for the first week of the new year, and to Gibbs and to Ellen as well, much as she had dreaded it, it came as a relief. She had visited him every day, in his cell at the Mineola jail, and what those visits had cost her, only Ellen knew.

Every day she must nerve herself afresh to enter into the stale, cold air and must pass the clanking doors and the watching eyes. She must nerve herself afresh for the sight of him, thin, despondent, dishonored. She must breathe the suffocating moral atmosphere that surrounds the offenders, the human who is felt by other humans to be dangerous. She must talk to him, and yet not talk of the hideous cloud that pressed so close over him, and the hideous weight on their hearts that made them both afraid they would go mad.

She kept him supplied with books, and sometimes made him read aloud to her. George was often with him, full of confidence and courage.

Empty as they were, these hours at the jail were Ellen's life. Otherwise she was hardly conscious that she lived at all. She sat by the fire with her aunt, in the evening, talking with the busy, kindly woman and the old captain, but not knowing what she said. She wrote her nightly letter to Joe or Lizzie, with a scalloped kiss for the boy, and went early to bed. She rose early, and joined the old people at breakfast. Then she aired her room, and made her bed, and by that time the little closed car was at the door, with Torrens at the wheel. Closely veiled, although she was really indifferent to staring eyes and snapping cameras, she slipped into the car and was on her way to Gibbs.

Sometimes alone, or with George, she lunched in the neighborhood of the jail, and went back to it immediately. Always she saw her husband twice a day, and was back in Port Washington in time to read the paper to the old captain before dinner.

Mary Cutter, the doctor's lovely daughter-in-law, had taken it upon herself to befriend Ellen, and during these terrible days she had never failed her. And when the trial began she was always at Ellen's side. George called at the Main street house on the first morning, and Mary met them at the courthouse.

SAGE TEA DANDY TO DARKEN HAIR

It's Grandmother's Recipe to Bring Back Color and Lustre to Hair

You can turn gray, faded hair beautifully dark and lustrous almost overnight if you'll get a bottle of "Wyeth's Sage and Sulphur Compound" at any drug store. Millions of bottles of this old famous Sage Tea Recipe, improved by the addition of other ingredients, are sold annually, say well-known druggists here, because it darkens the hair so naturally and evenly that no one can tell it has been applied.

Those whose hair is turning gray or becoming faded have a surprise awaiting them, because after one or two applications the gray hair vanishes and your locks become luxuriantly dark and beautiful.

This is the age of youth. Gray-haired, unattractive folks aren't wanted around, so get busy with Wyeth's Sage and Sulphur Compound to-night and you'll be delighted with your dark, handsome hair and your youthful appearance within a few days.

Ellen had never been in a courtroom before, but she said to herself: "That's the jury-box—that's the witness stand, even with her first quick glance."

George came in, talking in an undertone with his associate. He nodded reassuringly to Ellen. When he went away again, and disappeared through one of the doors behind the judge's bench, she saw Ryan come in.

He had the air of a man who had breakfasted well, and who was full of confidence. Ellen felt a wave of sheer hate shake her. How free he was; how comfortably ready for the day's work! And Gibbs—Gibbs would come in between two guards—

"This is merely the paneling of the jury," George had told them; "it may take several days. It's a long, stupid business."

Empty as They Were, These Hours at the Jail Were Ellen's Life.

With a great stirring and murmuring in the room, Gibbs came in, with a court officer. He was pale, but seemed neither self-conscious nor nervous, as he came quickly to his seat at the end of one of the tables. Then he saw Ellen, who was only ten feet away, and who sent him a brave smile. Ellen's heart was torn within her. Gibbs, with that little new droop to his broad-shoulders, a spectacle for this staring roomful!

Everybody rose, and she rose, too, dizzily. The clock was on the stroke of ten, and his honor came promptly and quietly through a door at the back, to his large chair. A clerk leaned over him to murmur some message; he nodded quickly; the clerk went out. The case of the State versus Thomas Gibbs Josselyn was called.

For days the paneling of the jury dragged on, and the long hours in the courtroom were wearisome and uneventful. Then suddenly there was a full jury, and the trial began. Ellen was dazed by the preliminaries, and the cross-questioning seemed to her singularly irrelevant. George would ask an apparently unimportant question, and nodding, sit down. The district attorney would jump up with another, leading nowhere, as far as Ellen could see. Between George and Ryan there was a running fire of hot words. Ellen was amazed to see them speak civilly to each other the moment court adjourned. At luncheon she would eagerly question George as to the significance of this point or that.

The trial lasted for only a day less than three weeks. Ellen had moved her place to Gibbs' side, and although they rarely spoke, she knew he was as much comforted as she was by this arrangement.

For two days, cruel and exhausting days, she was on the stand. Mary Cutter and George Lathrop were amazed at the courage and strength she found for the ordeal. She had promised them she would not break down, but she did for a moment, when Tommy's name was mentioned. And perhaps that moment, when the sensitive mouth quivered, and the blue eyes brimmed with tears, was as favorable to Gibbs' cause as any logic or any eloquence could have been.

For it slowly became evident that no eloquence and no logic could avail in defense of a man, young and rich and handsome, who had turned from this devoted little wife to another woman, who had quarreled with the generous father who was that other woman's husband, who had threatened and brooded over the quarrel.

Day after day the net tightened about him. Ellen, listening and watching, sometimes felt as if she were in an oppressive dream. Oh, it could not be Gibbs who was trapped here; it could not be Tommy's father who was the chief figure in one of the sensational murder trials of the day!

On the afternoon before the final summing-up, when all the testimony was in, and it remained only for the prisoner's counsel and the district attorney to present to the jury their verities of the case, Ellen was spending an hour with Gibbs. His months of confinement and mental distress had affected his constitution, and a poor appetite and wakeful nights had added to the misery of his situation.

"I jump from one extreme to the other, Ellen," he told her. "Sometimes I think they'll bring in a verdict of guilty—plain and flat. And then sometimes, I let myself think that all this has impressed them more favorably than we—than we fear, you know—and that I'll walk out of the room a free man—with my girl on my arm—"

His voice broke, and Ellen burst into bitter sobbing. He put his arms about her, and kissed the top of her soft hair.

"Look here, dear," he said, after a while, "I want to talk to you for a few minutes. We don't know what's ahead of us, and I want to say this while I have a chance."

"They sat down on the bed, side by side, and he locked his arm about her. "One thing I want to say is this," Gibbs said, slowly. "I wasn't a good husband to you, the last year, but it was only that I was a fool, Ellen. I never was untrue to you even in my thoughts."

"I know it!" she said fervently, raising her wet eyes to meet his. "Oh, Gibbs, my own sweetheart," she burst out, her eyes brimming again, "what haven't you given me?—a little country girl who never had anything in her life until you came along! Paris, and my boy, and my little girl—and your love, Gibbs, that made life seem a miracle to me—"

"Don't cry, Ellen," he pleaded, and she made herself be calm again.

"There's one thing more I want to say," Gibbs said. He got up and walked about the little room, Ellen watching him distressedly. "I want you to remember this, and when you tell the boy about it, tell him this, too. I've no reason to lie to you, Ellen, and what I'm telling you I say as if I were a—a dying man. It may be my last talk with you, and I think—I think of that, when I say it. I think of what you have done for me, and of what you are to me. By my mother's memory, Ellen, and by the memory of the little girl—we named for her—I never fired that shot. I never had my hand on that revolver in my life!"

For a minute she stared at him without a change of expression. Then he saw an extraordinary look almost of madness come into her eyes, and saw her breast rise with one great breath. She made an effort to speak, with dry lips, and failed, made a second, and succeeded.

"Gibbs!" she stammered, in a whisper. "You—you!" Her voice faltered, and she made a gesture as if for air, still clinging tightly to his arm, which she had grasped when first he spoke. "You say you didn't—" Ellen whispered, with a sudden pitiful trembling of her lips. "But, Gibbs—but, Gibbs—why didn't you tell me so before?" And suddenly she slipped to her knees, and he felt her face, streaming with tears, pressed against his hands. "Oh, my God, I thank Thee!" he heard her sob. "Oh, my God, I thank Thee!"

A second later she was upon her feet, pressing against him as she clasped his hands, and looked with wet eyes into his face. She was trying to laugh through the sobs that racked her.

"You didn't do it—my darling!" she said, again and again. "You didn't do it—I always knew that you didn't!"

"But, Ellen," he said, holding her tightly, and almost dazed by her vehemence, "you didn't think that I did it, dear?"

"No, I didn't think so!" she said, sobbing more quietly, and interrupting herself to laugh, and to press her wet face against his for one of her quick kisses. "But, Gibbs, I've thirsted so to have you tell me just that—I needed your word to help me! I felt as if I was all alone! Now—now it'll all be so different! I don't mind anything, now. I—"

She laughed again, broke into quick tears, and buried her face against his shoulder. "I'm so happy!" she sobbed. "I—let me cry, Gibbs. I'm crying because I feel so much happier!"

Abruptly she stopped. A bewildered look was in her eyes as she drew herself away from him, and faced him still holding his arms. She stared blankly at him for a moment; then the clear brows met in a puzzled frown.

"Gibbs," she said, in a whisper, "who did do it?"

CHAPTER XVI

Who did it? The question burned like a fever in Ellen's veins, and her passionate determination to answer it swept all lesser considerations from her mind. She could face anything now. Somebody, other than Gibbs, had fired that shot. And she was Gibbs' wife, and she was free to search and hunt, and study the strange facts surrounding old Thomas Josselyn's death, until somehow, somewhere, her hand fell upon the thread that should lead her to the truth. Her simple faith that the truth must come to light helped them all.

"If we could find some one who saw Gibbs on that walk that night!" George said.

"We will!" Ellen assured him confidently. "Gibbs," she added, tightening the hand that lay over her own, "don't you feel it? Don't you know that you and I will look back at this some time as a dark, hideous dream? I know it!"

And yet she had turned dizzy when an officer coming quietly to the door cell announced that the jury had found a verdict. She put her hand on Gibbs' shoulder and raised her ashen face for his kiss. They had time for no words, even if there had been words to say. Blindly Ellen followed George to the courtroom. With quick efficiency the officials were filling their places. The faithful newspaper men, their dinners left to cool, hurried in.

It was seven o'clock; the cold February dark had closed down hours ago. The courtroom was brightly lighted, and warm. His honor, who had also been dining, came in. He had addressed this same jury in his kind, wise voice five hours ago. After Ryan's furious tones he had seemed all temperance and justice to Ellen. He had charged them that if there was a reasonable doubt as to whether the crime of murder in the first degree had been committed, they were in duty bound to give the prisoner the benefit of that doubt, and to find for murder in the second degree, or manslaughter.

Now the old man looked benignly over his glasses at the twelve tired men who filed back into the box. And Ellen looked from face to face with agonized surmise.

The blow fell with merciful quickness. It was only a few minutes before the whole thing was over. Gibbs preserved the quiet dignity of manner that had marked him all through the trial. If a sickening fear of the future swept over him he gave no sign of it. He looked with concern toward his wife, but Ellen had mercifully lost consciousness and had quietly dropped against George's shoulder.

She recovered immediately, and they saw Gibbs again: a criminal now, convicted of murder in the second degree. All the freedom of their recent intercourse would be ended; she had foreseen that. What else had she foreseen? The indignities of shaven head and striped clothes, the filth and ugliness of the prison, the locked cell door, the terrible atmosphere that surrounds men for whom there is no place in the green world!

But she came up to him smiling. "We expected that, sweetheart, didn't we? It doesn't matter. You didn't do it, and it will all come right some day. Try not to think of it now—think of the time to come. Just lift yourself out of all this—"

"Oh, we'll make a fight of it!" George added. Immediately afterward he took Ellen away.

They went to the Port Washington house, and George came in to talk to her aunt and grandfather. Ellen hardly spoke. She went to the door to say good-night to him, and thank him. He thought she looked ill.

But she was in her place in the courtroom a few days later when Thomas Gibbs Josselyn was sentenced to penal servitude for the term of his natural life, for the peculiarly atrocious crime of murdering his own father.

"And somehow, one lives through it, all, George," Gibbs said later. He was behind bars now, but astonishingly serene and strong. He was nervously anxious to have the events of the next week over, when he should be transferred to the big prison. "I want you to take Tommy, and get away from this, Ellen," he said, firmly. "Write me, and send me pictures—"

"Oh, Gibbs—" she whispered, with a sudden stoppage of breath.

"Yes, I know," he said quickly, sympathetic for her distress. "But you must remember this. If I can think of you, living quietly somewhere, not too unhappy, it's going to brace me. I'm not any better than lots of other fellows who have been up against it, Ellen. And if, as you say, something new comes to light, why then we'll be glad we faced the music with someone—some decency, don't you see? Now take her away, George. I don't like her to be here."

"I have never seen a man change as Gibbs has changed," George said, as they drove home. "I am amazed at him. Always fastidious, exacting, autocratic—he's got a new viewpoint now. Well, now, we've got to do our share. We mustn't lose heart. The game isn't up yet, by a good deal."

Like Gibbs, Ellen was impatient to have these few days over. She could not gauge her present strength for the hideous ordeal of parting with him, and of having Tommy say goodby to his father. Her soul shrank from the mere thought, and she dreaded a breakdown on her part, or on Gibbs', that should undo them all.

Lizzie had written her every day: of the pretty house they had found in Bridgeport, of the walks and talks she had with Tommy, and of Joe and his new work. The little stories of Tommy, the assurance that he was well and happy, the pictures of a well-capped and wrapped Tommy playing in a glitter of snow, were an interest for Gibbs as well as herself.

Joe never wrote, but both Joe and Lizzie brought Tommy to Port Washington in answer to Ellen's wire a day after the sentence had been pronounced. The child looked rosy and well, and leaped into his mother's arms, instantly distracted from his first embraces by her unfamiliar clothing.

"Why 'bout all black things, moth-er?"

"Because grandpa is dead, sweet-heart."

"Grandpa is!" he ejaculated. He pointed to the old captain in the adjoining room. "There's grandpa!"

"Dad's father, Tom. You remember Grandpa Josselyn, with the gold glasses?"

"Is he dead?" said the child, in a sweet, inquiring voice.

"You start your stumps out here, Tom, and come and eat something!" Aunt Elsie said from the doorway. "How are you, Lizzie?"

"Oh, I'm fine!" Lizzie, who looked bad, said mildly.

"Is she really?" Ellen asked, when the old woman had taken Tommy and Lizzie into the kitchen. "I've been wondering. Tell me about Lizzie."

"She's all right." He smiled, ruefully. "She's a sad little thing! She cries, and she's sorry she's wrecked my life; all that sort of thing."

"And do you feel your life wrecked, Joe?" Ellen asked with a great ache at her heart for his quiet, hopeless tone.

"Oh, no!" he said impatiently and gruffly. "What's the difference, anyway?"

"Joe," Ellen said hesitatingly, "I'm—sorry."

"I'm sorry for the whole thing," he echoed. "It's a rotten morality that makes a girl feel that there's no going back. No matter how sorry, and how good, she is, there's always the feeling—why, Ellen, I know respectable girls in this town that aren't fit to tie Lizzie's shoes! Girls clever enough to make their bargains in cold blood—so much loving for a ring and an income for life! Lizzie's a loving little thing—she was starved for someone to really care for—she reached out for love the way a scared kid might reach out for a kitten! And now she'll never see herself quite like the others"—he gave his sister a dubious smile—"she hasn't let me put my arms about her!" he confessed.

"Hasn't!" she echoed, amazed.

"No," Joe smiled got to his feet, and sighed. "It's a fine old world!" he remarked grimly. And then with an abrupt change of subject: "I'm so sorry for all this, sis. I wish to God I could spare you this afternoon. When do we go?"

"George calls at three," she answered quietly. "I think I can get through it thinking of Gibbs. I'm praying—I'm praying—that I can't let the last pull, you know—and after this—after this I can faint or be sick or do anything else, for awhile!"

Wearily, she turned to go upstairs with Lizzie and Tommy. Tommy was to lie down and have a favorite book read to him for an hour; the little boy was presumably tired from his trip. Ellen left him when George arrived, and came downstairs.

George, coming in at the hall door, and Joe, who opened it to him, and Aunt Elsie, who came to the dining-room door to greet him, looked at her in amazement and vague alarm. Her face was pale, she was breathing hard, and there was a strange, feverish glitter in her blue eyes; she made a wild gesture that detained them all, and caught George by the wrist. He was instantly given the impression of exhaustion, of desperate determination to say what must be said, before the collapse.

To Ellen the air seemed suddenly thick and soft; she felt it pressing against her.

"No—wait a minute, Auntie!—George—and Joe, too—come in here—don't go!" she stammered. She half-dragged, half-led them into the little parlor. "All stay," she said in a dry whisper. Joe had run for a glass of water, and now beside the chair into which George had put her, and held it to her lips. "Thanks, dear," she whispered. Her eyes moved about from face to face, and her lips moved dully. Then suddenly she made a great struggle, as if for air.

"My God, she's dying!" Mrs. Ralston exclaimed. But Ellen herself answered her:

"No, auntie—no, I'm all right!" And tightening one hand on Joe's, and with the other clinging to George, she said at last: "I've found out who did it, George! I know who fired that shot!"

Wall Paper's Effects

Wall paper manufacturers in issuing their aids to housewives and interior decorators have called attention to the wonderful powers of illusion concealed in the design of wall paper. Paper with a small pattern will make the furniture and fixtures of the room look much larger than they actually are and a large pattern paper will do the opposite.

What Puzzled Her

"I never for the life of me," observed Mrs. Callahan to Mrs. Casey, "could understand about this wireless telegraph thing." "Why," said Mrs. Casey, "it's as plain as day. They just send the messages through the air instead of over wires." "Sure, I know that," continued Mrs. Callahan; "but how do they fasten the air to the poles?"—Everybody's Magazine.

"Kansas" and "Arkansas"

There seems to be no connection between the words "Kansas" and "Arkansas," although both words are derived from the names of Indian tribes. "Kansas" is from the name of a tribe who called themselves "Kan-za." The word is said to refer to the wind. "Arkansas" was the name of a tribe of Indians found within the borders of the state by the first settlers.

If Kidneys Act Bad Take Salts

Says Backache Often Means You Have Not Been Drinking Enough Water

When you wake up with backache and dull misery in the kidney region it may mean you have been eating foods which create acids, says a well-known authority. An excess of such acids overworks the kidneys in their effort to filter it from the blood and they become sort of paralyzed and loggy. When your kidneys get sluggish and clog you must relieve them, like you relieve your bowels, removing all the body's urinous waste, else you have backache, sick headache, dizzy spells; your stomach sours, tongue is coated and when the weather is bad you have rheumatic twinges. The urine is cloudy, full of sediment, channels often get sore, water scalds and you are obliged to seek relief two or three times during the night.

Either consult a good, reliable physician at once or get from your pharmacist about four ounces of Jad Salts; take a tablespoonful in a glass of water before breakfast for a few days and your kidneys may then act fine. This famous salt is made from the acid of grapes and lemon juice, combined with lithia, and has been used for years to help clean and stimulate sluggish kidneys, also to neutralize acids in the system, so they no longer irritate, thus often relieving bladder weakness.

Jad Salts is inexpensive, can not injure and makes a delightful, effervescent lithia-water drink. Drink lots of soft water. By all means have your physician examine your kidneys at least twice a year.

SULPHUR CLEARS ROUGH, RED SKIN

Face, Neck and Arms Easily Made Smooth, Says Specialist

Any breaking out of the skin, even fiery, itching eczema, can be quickly overcome by applying a little Mentho-Sulphur, declares a noted skin specialist. Because of its germ destroying properties, this sulphur preparation begins at once to soothe irritated skin and heal eruptions such as rash, pimples and ring worm.

OPEN NOSTRILS! END A COLD OR CATARRH

How To Get Relief When Head and Nose are Stuffed Up.

Count fifty! Your cold in head or catarrh disappears. Your clogged nostrils will open, the air passages of your head will clear and you can breathe freely. No more snuffing, hawking, mucous discharge, dryness or headache; no struggling for breath at night.

Germination of Alfalfa Seeds

There Are Present in All Lots Two Types of Kernels: Hard and Soft.

The germination of alfalfa seeds shows that there are present in practically all lots two types of live seeds. The first type absorbs water and germinates readily in a few days; the other type has a hard seed coat which prevents immediate absorption of water and hence delays germination.

There has been carried on and is now being continued much investigational work in an effort to find the causes of the hard seed coat and the agricultural value of such seeds. The most comprehensive piece of work which has been completed at the present time seems to show that it is reasonable to regard approximately one-third of the hard seeds reported at the end of six days as properly belonging to the germination per cent. This is based on actual field work.

There is some reason to believe that methods of threshing alfalfa seed reduce the hard seed per cent, since seed harvested by hand this fall and tested in the laboratory has 65 per cent of hard seed while machine threshed seed from the same vicinity has approximately 20 per cent of hard seed.

It is characteristic of alfalfa seed imported from Turkestan to have practically no hard seeds; those imported from Europe to have a comparatively small per cent, while seeds imported from South America and Africa vary much as do those grown in North America.

A lot of seed containing a high per cent of live seed, even though some of them are hard seeds, is superior to a lot having the same germination but no hard seed.—Anna M. Lute, Colorado Seed Laboratory, Colorado Agricultural College.

Lack of Ventilation Is Quite Harmful to Bees

Carefully examine all of your bee hives, says E. S. Provost, extension bee specialist at Clemson college, in discussing summer care of hives, and see if there is room. If there is not room, put on a super, with full sheets of foundation; and if they don't need an extra super, prop the hive up at the four corners with blocks about a half-inch thick. This will give a door all the way round and will let the air circulate in the hive much more freely.

If the hive is in the sun all day, it is a good idea to make a shade board. This may be done by taking rough planks which are a little longer than the hive and leaning them on top of the hive so that they will break off the sun.

Destroying Grasshoppers

The use of poison bran mash is the most effective and practical method for destroying grasshoppers. This bran mash is composed of twenty pounds of bran, one pound of white arsenic, two quarts of sirup, three oranges and three and one-half gallons of water. The bran and arsenic are mixed together while dry. The other ingredients are mixed together and when ready to use in the field the two mixtures are united and thoroughly stirred. This poison bran mash is sown broadcast over the area where the hoppers are bad, the above formula being sufficient for about five acres.

Why Butter Is Washed

Washing the butter has for its object the removal from the butter of as much of the buttermilk as possible. The churn should be stopped when the butter granules are the size of wheat kernels. The buttermilk is then drawn off and the butter washed with an equal quantity of clear water at the same temperature as the buttermilk. The churn is revolved eight or ten times with the wash water and the water drained. The washing should be repeated.

Pasturing Sweet Clover

Sweet clover may be safely pastured in its second season from two to three weeks earlier than any other of the common pasture plants. It will carry a tremendous burden—more than any other of our pasture plants. There is more danger of not keeping enough stock on it than overpasturing it. In its first season it will carry 2,000 pounds live weight to the acre and will, of course, carry much more the second.

Inoculation of Alfalfa

To inoculate alfalfa after it is sown use soil that carries the bacteria. This you can get from an old alfalfa or sweet clover field. The soil must not be exposed to the sunlight much, as this kills the bacteria. It is best to apply the soil on a cloudy day and harrow it in at once. It is hardly safe to harrow alfalfa too soon after it is sown.

Historical Account. A brief historical account is presented of the California citrus industry since the introduction of orange trees by the Franciscan monks in 1769. The conditions causing the practical bankruptcy of the industry in the early nineties, and the unfortunate alliance of the exchange with commercial shippers in 1908-04 are other topics discussed in the historical section of the bulletin.

Considerable space is given to a discussion of the organization and operation of the local units that make up the exchange.

"Local co-operative associations are the foundation of the exchange system," it is stated. "The earliest organizations of this kind preceded the incorporation of the exchange by almost three years. They were created by the members of a community who considered their marketing problems as being, first of all, local in character."

The organization and functions of the district exchanges and the various departments of the California Fruit Growers' exchange are discussed in detail.

Other Organizations. An organization for the purchase of supplies and two by-products companies have been established by the federated associations. These organizations are not subsidiary to the California Fruit Growers' exchange, but are units of the exchange system.

Students Witness Mock Trial of a Scrub Bull

An audience of about 250 persons recently witnessed the mock trial of a scrub bull at the East Tennessee farmers' convention at Knoxville. In a description of the trial received by the United States Department of Agriculture from Dr. C. A. Hutton, dairy specialist of Tennessee, he says it resulted in much interest in improved live stock. It was held under the auspices of the agricultural club, and two law students of the state university acted as attorneys in the case.

This method of showing the undesirability of inferior breeding stock is proving very popular. The Department of Agriculture has had a large demand for their "Outline of a Scrub Sire Trial," which was prepared for the purpose of aiding persons interested in the work of bettering the nation's live stock. Copies of this publication may be had free on request to the bureau of animal industry at Washington.

Milk fattened poultry is considered the finest by most discriminating people. And on the majority of farms, milk is one of the cheapest foods available for young chicks.

Important to Store Eggs in Dry Place Gather and Market Often to Obtain Top Prices.

Other things being equal, newly-hatched hen-fruit is one of the most perfect foods in the world. From the moment it is laid by a healthy hen in a clean and sanitary environment it is subject to deleterious influences. The hen is in no way responsible for these, but her owner is. Dirt, heat, excessive dryness or a damp environment are all inimical to quality in fresh eggs. Dirt disfigures the shell and so lessens its value to buyers; it also contracts mold, germs and injurious bacteria which break down quality and nutritive value and vitiate flavor. Hence the importance of placing eggs in a cool, dry, pure atmosphere, and of gathering and marketing them often, or of cold-storing them, which is only another way of maintaining their quality. To eat hen-fruit at its best is to do so when it is yet very young from the nest. When eggs are subjected to damp and moisture, the albuminous protective covering dissolves, admitting decomposing bacteria into the shell through the pores, which causes rapid spoilage. Heat tends to break down the "whites," rendering the egg "weak" and watery; on the yolks the effect is to make them dark and "heavy." Eggs of this character are graded as "bakers," which command reduced prices. An excessively dry atmosphere causes rapid evaporation, or "shrunken" eggs. A careful consideration of these premises will suggest their own remedies. Clean nests protected from the sun and wind, healthy laying hens and wholesome feeding are the fundamental things to provide for good performance flocks. When the industrious hen has functioned and delivered her product, it is "up to" her owners to take the necessary measures that will insure a good price to the poultryman and fine eating quality to the ultimate consumer.

Waves Will Scare Deer

Deer are especially timid in a high wind and will jump in alarm at the sound of the waves splashing on the rocks, says Nature Magazine. They are very sensitive to sudden changes of temperature, and it is most surprising to find none coming out of the woods when a cold northwest wind blows.

FARM FACTS

The best time to fix the farm machinery is before it needs repairs.

During summer the gardener needs to cultivate his pep along with his pepper.

The average duckling is ready for market between ten and twelve weeks of age at which time individuals of the Pekin variety should weigh between five and six pounds.

There is absolutely no danger spraying broods or brood sows while they are pregnant. Spray brood sows with crude oil after they have been put in a thoroughly clean farrowing pen. This prevents the pigs from getting lice from their mother.

The time to set trees and shrubs is in early spring, as early as the ground is fit to work. They may be set up to the first of June if kept dormant, but it is just as well to remember that the later the planting the less likely the success, within certain limits.

Boys and girls have often got started with good flocks of sheep by raising such orphan lambs on cow's milk. As ewe's milk is richer than even Jersey milk, there is no need to dilute cow's milk for feeding, though a little lime water is sometimes added to prevent indigestion.

The old wood may be cut from the raspberries and blackberries, and if new canes are making a very strong growth, they may be cut back, say to three feet. In the case of red raspberries, it is unnecessary to cut them back, and experience has proved that it is a better practice to keep back only black caps and blackberries.

Migrate at Night

The majority of birds migrate at night. Some species do so both by day and night, as swans, geese, ducks, nighthawks, swallows and swifts. The average rate of flight is very much less than men at first believed. The majority of small land birds seldom fly more than 25 miles an hour, and they rarely fly more than a few hours each night.

ALL OUT OF SORTS?

So Was This Good Woman Who Tells Her Experience.

All too often women accept their aches and pains as natural to their sex. They fail to realize that weak kidneys are often to blame for their backache, those headaches, dizzy spells and that tired depressed feeling. Thousands have found new health and strength by helping the weakened kidneys with Doan's Pills—a stimulant diuretic. This case in one of many in this locality.

Mrs. Wallace Weather, 178 Main St., Manistee, Mich., says: "I felt pretty badly with backache and I was hardly able to be around. It was difficult to attend to my housework. Every time I stooped, I was miserable in straightening up. I was restless nights, couldn't sleep, and it seemed I was always tired and depressed. Doan's Pills rid me of the trouble." Price 60c at all dealers. Don't simply ask for a kidney remedy—get Doan's Pills—the same that Mrs. Weather had. Foster-Milburn Co., Mfrs., Buffalo, N. Y.

GERMAN LOAN IS OFFERED IN U. S.

AMERICA'S PORTION OF CASH TO BE ADVANCED UNDER DAWES PLAN IS $110,000,000.

BONDS MATURE IN 25 YEAR

Money to Be Used for Economic Rehabilitation and Stabilization of Currency in Germany.

New York—America's portion of the $200,000,000 German loan under the Dawes Plan, amounting to $110,000,000, was offered to the public this week by a nation-wide banking syndicate headed by J. P. Morgan & Co. and Kuhn, Loeb & Co.

All subscriptions received in advance by the Morgan firm were returned with suggestions to re-submit at the time the books for the offering were opened. The demands of the small dealers were heavy.

J. P. Morgan & Co., in a formal statement, said that the proceeds of the American portion of the loan, together with the portions offered in various allotments in Great Britain, France, Belgium, Italy, Switzerland, Holland, Sweden and Germany, are to be used to make operative the plan of the first committee of experts appointed to the Reparation Commission, popularly described as the Dawes Plan, with the object both of insuring currency stability in Germany and of financing essential deliveries in kind during the preliminary period of economic rehabilitation.

The issue will bear the title "German external loan 1924 seven per cent gold bonds." The bonds will be dated Oct. 15, 1924—will mature in 25 years, will be around seven per cent interest and will be offered to the public at 92 and interest. The bonds carry sinking fund provisions, which are said to be sufficient to retire the issue at maturity.

COST OF GOVERNMENT IN U. S.

National, State and Local Rule in 1923 Was $10,000,000,000.

New York—The people of the United States in 1923 paid a bill of ten billion dollars for governmental expenditures, national, state and local. This amount was 15 per cent of their whole income for that year. It was equivalent to 91 per cent of the total amount paid out in wages and salaries in 1921 by all manufacturing plants in the country covered by the census of manufacturers. It represented a levy of $91 a head on every man, woman and child in the nation—more than three and one-half times the per capita expenditure on government in 1902, and more than five and one-half times that in 1890.

These figures were given out by the National Industrial conference board, after a study of public disbursements in connection with a survey of the tax burdens of 1923.

Of the $10,045,000,000 spent on government in 1923, the figures show, $3,459,000,000 represented expenditures of the federal government, interest and amortization on the national debt accounting for $1,526,000,000 of it. The state governments spent $1,450,000,000, and the local governments got rid of the remainder, $5,136,000,000.

MICHIGAN TEAM WINS DEBATE

English Trio, Led By Former Premier McDonald's Son, Defeated.

Ann Arbor, Mich.—University of Michigan orators scored a victory in their international debate with a trio from the famed Oxford university, of England, last week, the first of its kind ever held in the Wolverine seat of learning. The subject was "Prohibition."

The Oxford team, led by M. J. McDonald, son of the former prime minister of Great Britain, took the negative side of the question.

Contrary to the usual custom the verdict was left to the audience, which voted 1,247 to 520 in favor of the Michigan speakers.

SENATORS VICTORY POPULAR

Defeat of Giants Pleases General Public—Players Get $5,595.64.

Washington—Each regular player on the Washington team received a check for $5,595.64 as his share of the world's series money. In addition the Senators are in possession of the world championship crown, wrested from the Giants, an honor for which they fought as no other team had to fight in the history of the autumn baseball classic. The victory of the Senators was perhaps the most popular in the life of the organized sport.

It was decided by Judge Landis, high commissioner of baseball, that the New York Giants' share of world series would not be held pending his investigation of bribery charges involving members of that team.

Attorney-General Stone announced that if any evidence of a federal law violation were presented, in connection with the recent bribery scandal involving the New York Giants, there would be a federal investigation of the subject.

On the face of the statement issued by Baseball Commissioner Landis after outfielder O'Connell and Coach Dolan were expelled from organized baseball, the attorney-general said he saw no violation of federal statutes.
