Searle Jewelry Store Robbed At Petoskey

The Searle Jewelry Store in Petoskey was burglarized Thursday night, Nov. 13th, several valuable watches being taken. The large plate glass window on the west side of the store was smashed with a rock, the thief reaching through the small hole made to get at the watches on display.

Officers believe the job was the work of an amateur—some boy or youth who wanted a watch. Valuable watch cases also on display were not taken, the thief throwing them back after discovering they were empty. Other jewelry in the window was not touched which leads officers to believe that the job was not the work of a professional. The value of the loot will reach several hundred dollars.

Mr. Searle Friday forenoon offered a reward of $50 for the arrest and conviction of the thief or thieves.

The stolen goods included several high priced and several medium priced watches on display for the holiday trade.

The stone used to smash the glass was discovered on the sidewalk near the broken window.—Petoskey News.

Dairy Cows Are Increasing In Charlevoix Co.

Charlevoix County's dairy cow population is increasing according to figures announced by the Blue Valley Creamery Institute. The statement covers an area embracing approximately one-eighth of the state in this section, and is believed to hold true for the county proper.

A 9.2 per cent gain in the number of dairy cows two years old and over is noted for the district over the preceding year, while the increase for the state as a whole was 5.5 per cent as compared with 1923. The entire United States shows an increase amounting to 6 per cent, government figures show.

The number of heifers 1 to 2 years old as compared to the total number of cows in this district seem to be above the average, indicating the intention to bring more young stock into milk in the near future.

In citing these figures the Institute calls attention to the fact that the United States needs 320,000 more cows every year if production is to keep step with the normal growth of demand for dairy products. There are 1,412,000 more mouths to be fed in the United States with every passing year and with the increased consumption of dairy products per capita, this added number to the nation's herd will barely suffice to meet the increased demand.

Plan To Organize Boys' and Girls' Calf Club

County Agr'l Agent Wishes To Hear From Those Interested.

B. C. Mellenkamp, County Agricultural Agent is arranging a Calf Club project for the improvement of the cattle in Charlevoix County. The new club will no doubt follow the plan of the pig club which was organized about one year ago when boys and girls secured a pure bred pig from the Loeb farm. From the pigs secured by the club there have grown not less than one hundred. The plan suggested for organizing the Calf Club are as follows:

1. To have it open to grade animals backed by cow-testing Ass'n. records as well as to the purebred. I believe the majority of us are not yet ready to tackle purebreds for various reasons.
2. To have all the major dairy breeds represented in the project, if possible evenly divided.
3. To allow each member his choice of a calf or a bred heifer upon which to start his work.

4. To keep feed and cost records of his animal for a period of four months unless the heifer has freshened, then records on the weights, etc.
5. To have each boy take a note on one of the banks, indorsed by his father and carrying legal rate of interest for a year's time.
6. To have each member of the club care for his calf or heifer as far as possible and as much as conditions permit.
7. To have the territory around each city in the county an equal member of Club members if possible.
8. To have the members choosing one particular grouped together, the better for community work.
9. To have each member exhibit his or her animal at the County Fair next fall.

The Agricultural College endorses this movement and points to the mutual benefits to the farmer as well as his son. The plan having worked out satisfactorily in any number of trials. Mr. Mellenkamp wishes to communicate with everyone interested.

St. Mary, Charlevoix VS. St. Joseph East Jordan

Two Exciting Newcomb Games on St. Joseph Court.

The St. Mary Newcomb team from Charlevoix was cordially welcomed by the St. Joseph team Friday afternoon at 3 o'clock. Without much delay the visiting team was ready for action. The game was well played with the St. Mary team one point ahead at the end of the first half. The game was in favor of Charlevoix until towards the last of the second half when East Jordan made rapid strides finishing the game with one point ahead.

The second game was just as interesting and brought a result in favor of Charlevoix; the score being thirty and twenty-six. After the game the guests were ushered to a savory repast in the school.

The following were also given a chance to play in the St. Joseph team this week: Margaret Brennan, Catherine Brennan, Alice Nachazel, Mildred Lilak, Bernadette Greenwood, Josephine Dolezel, Bernice Bashaw, Dorothy Burbank.

We Thank You!

The Herald gets cussed so much for sins of omission and commission that the following line received the past week comes doubly welcome.

Dear Mr. Lisk:—
I am enclosing a money order to cover subscription to Herald till April 1925 as per your statement.

We had not intended to be so negligent, as we realize it costs money to get the paper to us. However we appreciate you sending the Herald to us without a miss since we have been in Detroit. That's efficiency G. A.

All are quite well, and while Detroit has a fairly firm hold on us, The Herald is still our home paper.

Very best regards to yourself and family.

How's This For Sweet Clover?

Low Bros., East Jordan Raise 10 Bushels On Half An Acre.

Sometime ago the writer observed an article in an Antrim County publication stating that a certain farmer residing in that County had raised a wonderful crop of Sweet Clover Seed that threshed 7 bu. to the acre and was considered to be the best yet reported.

Not in the sense of bragging at all about our own County accomplishments, but as a matter of fact we have had many yields that have beaten that mark twice over. The highest that has been reported to my knowledge is that of Low Brothers, East Jordan, who had the remarkable yield of 10 bushels of re-cleaned Sweet Clover Seed on a one-half acre of ground. The seed was of exceptional quality and brought very nearly the highest market price.

The producer was paid $10.80 cwt. or $6.48 a bushel and received $64.80 for his one-half acre of ground, which I consider is going some for this kind of crop. This seed was grown on a medium loam soil and was from the first cutting.

More farmers have raised Sweet Clover for seed this year than at any other time previous and are realizing good profits. Some are cutting the first cutting for hay and letting the second cutting go to seed and in so doing are fulfilling two requirements, plenty of roughage and a cash crop besides.

Are Low Brothers the champions of the County or can you beat their mark? If you have got 'em beat let us hear about it.

B. C. MELLENCAMP,
County Agr'l. Agent.

No Records Set In State Corn Contest

Poor Season For Crop Holds Down Production

Twenty-eight fields of corn, sampled as entrants in the Five-Acre corn growing contest conducted in the state during the past season by the Michigan Agricultural College, fail to include a contestant likely to approach the 100 bushel goal set for the contest.

Adverse weather conditions during the season proved too big a handicap for Michigan corn growers to overcome in the contest, according to D. F. Rainey, M. A. C. extension specialist in charge of the Five-Acre tests. The fields sampled for production all showed very high moisture content in the corn, running from 51 per cent down to 32 per cent, the lowest found among the contestants.

This high moisture content, checked for the best growers in the state, gave positive indication of the need for careful handling of the state's seed corn stores this year. It is said to be unsafe to "crib" corn with more than 30 per cent moisture content.

While none of the entrants in the 1924 contest are expected to reach the 100 bushel mark, Mr. Rainey predicts that the 1923 record of 83 bushels of shelled corn per acre, will be equaled or passed.

Winners in the contest, which will be announced during Farmers Week at M. A. C. in February, will be awarded special medals and other prizes. The list runs all the way from a standard Gultipackers to pure bred seed and farm paper subscriptions.

The Five-Acre contest is a new thing for Michigan farmers, having been started only a year ago. It will run again in 1925, according to the college men, becoming an annual event.

Mrs. L. VanBelle, Penroy, Mont., states: "My little boy had a very bad cough, and after he used FOLEY'S HONEY AND TAR COMPOUND he got relief at once." FOLEY'S HONEY AND TAR COMPOUND is best for coughs, colds, and hoarseness in children and older persons.—Hite's Drug Store. adv.

America's Glacial Period

Geologists agree that there was a glacial period in the northern United States. The rocks in this part of the country bear evidence of having been glaciated. Small remains of glaciers are found in the high Sierras, on the volcanic cones of the Cascades and in Montana and Colorado. The presence of moraines also bears witness to a glacial period.

Main Crops In State Above Average

Shortage of Corn Crop Prevails Throughout Nation

Lansing, Mich., Nov. 14th. The growing season of 1924 terminated for the greater part of the State on Oct. 21-23, when the first general killing frost occurred. Notwithstanding the backwardness of the season and slowness in maturing, all main crops except corn clover seed and sugar beets are above the average in yield per acre, according to the Nov. crop report issued by L. Whitney Watkins, Commissioner of Agriculture, and Verne H. Church, U. S. Agricultural Statistician for Michigan. Fruit growers suffered more generally than grain farmers this year as apples, peaches and pears were only partial crops.

Corn: Crop correspondents report an average crop yield of 27 bushels per acre, or a total crop of 45,981,000 bushels, as compared with yield of 34.5 bushels per acre and a total production of 58,167,000 bushels last year. The ten year average yield for Michigan is 33.2 bushels per acre, 42 per cent of the crop this year is reported to be of merchantable quality as compared with 73 per cent last year. Only about 35 per cent of the crop is being husked, approximately 35 per cent has been put into silos, and 15 per cent is being hogged down.

The National crop aggregates 2,477,538,000 bushels, more than one-half billion bushels less than was produced last year. It is estimated that 63.2 per cent is merchantable quality. The amount of old corn remaining on farms is reported at 101,934,000 bushels.

Buckwheat: The average yield of buckwheat is 15.5 bushels per acre, as compared with 14.2 last year and 13.6 the ten-year average. The total crop for the state amounts to 868,000 bushels and as an average quality of 90 per cent or one per cent better than the ten-year normal. Yields varied considerably, as fields did not ripen evenly in all cases.

For the country as a whole, the buckwheat crop amounts to 15,520,000 bushels, or 1,600,000 larger than 1923 crop.

Potatoes: Although Michigan growers planted about 12 per cent less acreage than the average of the last ten years, the production indicated from their reports amounts to 38,227,000 bushels. This crop has only been exceeded twice, in 1909 and in 1914. The large production is due to the high yield since 1869 when the acreage was only one-sixth of that for the current year. The quality is rated at 91 per cent being 4 per cent above the average and good in nearly all sections. It is estimated that 61 per cent of the crop will be shipped out of the counties where grown.

A marked increase in other states, as reported since the harvesting of the crop became well advanced, gives a total of 454,119,000 bushels. This is the largest crop on record although less than a million bushels over the bumper crop of 1922.

Beans: A special inquiry during the month brought forth the information that 34 per cent of the total acreage of beans in Michigan this year was planted to small whites, 4 per cent to large whites, 10 per cent to red kidneys, and 2 per cent to soys, limas and others.

Clover Seed: While some good individual yields are reported, much of the crop averages light. The average is estimated at 85,000 as compared with 105,000 last year and 150,000 two years ago. The indicated yield is 1.2 bushels per acre, giving a total production of 102,000 bushels as against 147,000 in 1923, and 240,000 in 1922. The quality is rated at 86 per cent.

The total crop of the United States is estimated at 817,000 bushels, being generally light throughout the country. Last year's crop was 1,233,000, and that of 1922, 1,487,000 bushels.

Test weights of grain: The average weight per measured bushel of winter wheat is found to be 59.5 pounds, spring wheat, 58.0 pounds; oats, 38.8 pounds, and barley, 48.4 pounds, all being decidedly above the average.

Sugar Beets: The condition of the sugar beet crop on Nov. 1 was 83 per cent as compared with 90 per cent one year ago. The beets are averaging smaller in size than usual but possess a good sugar content.

Fruits: The harvesting of the apple crop has been completed and is estimated at 7,333,000 bushels, or 44 per cent of a full crop. The commercial portion is placed at 1,222,000 bushels. The quality is rated at 67 per cent, 12 per cent below last year and 10 per cent below the ten-year average. The total apple crop of the country aggregates 177,238,000 bushels, of which 27,186,000 barrels constitutes the commercial portion. The quality is 74.7 per cent. Last year's commercial crop was 34,403,000 barrels.

The pear crop represents 67 per cent of a full crop for Michigan, a somewhat greater production than indicated earlier in the season. The quality is rated at 86 per cent, or 2 per cent below the average. For the United States, the production totals 17,925,000 bushels which is slightly greater than that of last year.

Michigan's grape crop proved to be 75 per cent of a full one, and had a quality of 74 per cent. Frost damaged a portion in commercial districts because of the lateness in maturing. In northern districts, very few grapes ripened before the frost. The Nation's crop is reported at 1,771,898,000 pounds with a quality of 89.8 per cent.

Farm Labor: The supply on Nov. 1 was 85 per cent of normal and the demand, 80 per cent of normal; or a ratio of supply to demand of 108 per cent. Good weather prevailed throughout October and lessened the need for farm labor to some extent.

Sinners in Heaven

He swept the small island with another keen critical glance. From his knowledge of the South Pacific—in which ocean, somewhere, this island must lie—he guessed it to be of little or no use for trade, either in copra or other exports, in spite of its patches of luxuriant verdure. Therefore, probably, it was never visited by the outside world! Unless there were habitations in the south, it was conceivably uninhabited—possibly unknown.

For some moments he stood motionless, facing these probabilities. Then, with a grim face, he turned in search of his companion.

Barbara, her head buried in her arms, did not hear his approach. It was with a start of surprise that she found herself suddenly lifted bodily, as if she were but a featherweight. Feeling again very small and ashamed, she would have struggled free, but his grip tightened.

"Keep still! It's a rough climb," he spoke abruptly, ever his way in moments of stress. The tears of weakness rose again in her eyes. She closed them, but too late to hide what she felt he would despise. She turned her face away into his wet shoulder; and he strode along in silence.

Stray rocks lay about the ridge; small shrubs, interspersed with ferns and club mosses, made progress difficult; but he never paused until they were among the tall trees of the palm grove. Then he set the girl upon her feet.

"Where are we going?" she asked. "Listen!" he commanded, without answering her question.

From near at hand came the noise of rushing water. He turned farther inland, amid tall avenues of bamboo, toward the sound, Barbara closely following. Presently a pleased exclamation escaped his lips, and he halted.

From the high ground the river tumbled down, a sheer waterfall of dancing crystals splashing from great boulders high up among the forest trees to smaller ones on the lower level; thence hurrying and gurgling over little rocks, which encircled small pools of translucent green, into a clear, softly flowing stream some six feet deep. This after a time spread out and grew shallow, finally disappearing between rustling walls of bamboo canes toward the cove where it joined the lagoon. From the nature of this deeper stretch of water and the comparative clearing of undergrowth on the banks, Croft judged it to be partly the work of man's hand, not entirely the result of nature. But he forbore to suggest this to the girl.

Croft led the way back to the grove, then on to the clearing beyond. Suddenly Barbara stood still, with a little cry.

"What's that?" He stopped, looking aside in the direction indicated. Stooping swiftly, he lifted a queer bleached object and examined it closely. She drew near, glancing curiously at the hideous thing. "It's a skull! Isn't it?" "Yes," he replied, "and—of the ne—roid type!"

She looked up, startled. Until then it had not occurred to her to wonder concerning the island. The past with its tragedy had expunged all else from her mind.

He continued to examine the skull, with puzzled brows.

"There are some curious holes which I cannot understand," he said. "They might have been caused by bullets. But it is doubtful if natives would possess bullets here."

"Do you think there are any here now—any natives?"

He met the eyes raised in trepidation to his own. "I can't tell, yet. But they are friendly enough to white people." Throwing away the skull, he went on toward the open space.

The apparent caves proved to be moss-covered ruins of bamboo huts. Many had fallen into rough heaps upon the ground; of others, bits of all remained standing, guarding like sentinels the broken portions resting wearily against their base. Lying about, half-hidden in undergrowth, were oddly shaped household utensils made of wood or rough kind of pottery; also large shells, rude cups fashioned from coconut shell, broken spears.

The scene was desolate, giving the impression of death, of the relentless hand of Time sweeping away to extinction what once had seemed strong and full of life.

"It's quite possible," he said, "that the whole colony which lived here has died out. Populations dwindle very much in the Pacific islands."

She gave a little shudder.

"It's horrible here—I don't know why! Let's go down to the shore. There seems to be a hut standing down there." She pointed toward a small, sheltered structure half-way down the lower slope, sheltered beneath the hill which they had climbed. Croft hurried in its direction.

It consisted of one small room. The bamboo walls were intact, but the thatch forming the roof showed large rents; on the ground within, amid musty, dead leaves, were scattered utensils similar to those which they had already seen.

Croft glanced round critically, then at the girl, who had followed him, then out through the opening seaward.

"We can make this sufficiently habitable to carry on with," he observed. His words went out into silence. They brought instantly a vivid realization of the immediate present to her mind, followed quickly by thoughts of the future. A new fear shot up, clutching her heart with a horrible, clammy hand. She looked with sudden dread at her companion's profile; and something about his tense lips seemed to confirm the awful foreboding. The faint color revived in her cheeks by exercise ebbed away, leaving her white. She clenched her teeth and her hands; then, with an effort, put her head to the test.

"We shall soon be rescued? Ships are certain to call here? It will only mean a few hours—or days?"

The moment which Croft had dreaded, yet known to be inevitable, was at hand; and he felt the utter inadequacy of his sex in dealing with delicate situations.

From his prolonged silence Barbara guessed the truth of his convictions; words were unnecessary. She clasped her hands in agony, uttering a little moaning cry like some dumb animal receiving its death-wound.

Croft turned quickly. He looked down at the quivering, girlish form, meeting the frightened eyes turned to him, trusting in his judgment and resource. And all at once he realized that, in this ghastly predicament, her very life lay in his hands. He leaned forward and took her clasped hands in both of his.

"Don't give up hope," he said earnestly. "It's very doubtful if ships call; but they may pass this way. We will do all we can."

She clung to his hands, breathing hard, seeming to find the old magnetism of his personality draw her up, deriving mental as well as physical support from his grip. Her eyes fixed upon his, as if searching for help.

Suddenly, like a plucky ray of sunshine in a stormy sky, a faint smile flitted tremulously across her pale lips.

"We must—as you said—buck up," she whispered, the trembling words scarcely audible.

II

At mid-day the heat became excessive. Mercilessly the sun, like a quivering mass of molten steel, beat down upon the shore; no breath of wind stirred the hot air; the lagoon, with its almost indigo blue, assumed an oily, sluggish appearance, as if sinking to sleep with the lowering tide.

Within the shade of the angle formed by one side of the hut and the hill behind, Barbara lay inert upon a soft, if simple, couch of sun-dried coats. Finding that the ground swayed and rolled like a mountainous sea if she endeavored to rise, she gave up the attempt, and lay motionless, with closed eyes.

Nearby were some untouched bananas and a broken coconut, the shell of which was filled with water and placed upright between three stones. From within the hut came the noise of splintering sticks, as if somebody were breaking the bamboo canes which, crossed and interlaced, formed its structure.

The girl listened, wondering dully at the endurance of her companion, full of a miserable sense of shame at her own weakness. Without pausing for rest, after fetching their coats and procuring food, he had begun clearing and improving this dreary abode—carrying down broken portions from the ruins above for a door, fetching other canes and palm-leaves for mending the thatched roof.

Presently, hot and disheveled, he appeared. He had shed all his clothes except breeches and shirt, and looked, she thought, strangely in keeping with the scene around them. This was her first experience of a man whose life had been spent chiefly in wild surroundings, often upon but the fringe of civilization; whose abundant vitality responded to the call of untamed nature in a way that proved he had not been shackled by chains of convention closing around him, fetter by fetter, as the years passed.

"That's done!" he said briefly. He sat down and proceeded to peel and eat bananas with considerable relish. "I feel so useless!" she exclaimed, miserably. "Such a hindrance instead of a help. It would have been wiser to have left me in the water. You would get on better alone. We shall only die lingering deaths here, if rescue doesn't come."

"Dashed if I mean to die!" he protested, between two large mouthfuls of fruit. "Nor shall you!"

Throwing away his banana-skins, he rose and surveyed the water; then he came close to her, towering over her, as it seemed to her excited fancy.

"I'm going to try to reach the machine. I may be able to rescue our luggage and provisions."

"Oh! no, no, no!" she cried wildly. "Suppose you get drowned? Never mind luggage! What does that matter? Oh! don't leave me all alone—"

Terrified, she tried to reach some part of him, to restrain him by force.

He caught her arms, raising her to her feet and supporting her. "Listen!" he commanded in a tone which checked her agitation. "It's not only luggage! I want to save the wireless transmitting set—"

"Wireless!" Radiant relief overspread her face. "Why—then—we can soon get rescued after all? I forgot about that!"

"You mustn't rely too much on it. It will be only the short range set. The long range used on board obtained its electrical energy from a generator run from one of the engines, and is therefore useless now."

Her eagerness for this new hope to be tested was still modified by fears concerning the risks of his venture. He pointed out the shallowness of the water and the scattered little coral islands. "The tide's low enough now for me to wade to that one nearest the reef. From there it's quite a short distance, if swimming is necessary."

"I will wade with you—"

"The devil you won't!" He suddenly wheeled round upon her. "Look here! You're never to go in the lagoon! Bathe in the river, but don't ever go in the lagoon. Swear to me!"

She gazed at him in stupefied amazement and anger.

"Why not? If—if you go in—"

"—er—I understand these waters. They're treacherous. Promise me—"

"Oh!" she interrupted impatiently. "I don't want to bathe—ever—anywhere! I'll sit and watch you go."

"In this blazing sun? No! indeed! You must lie down in the hut and sleep."

Vainly she remonstrated, fearing a recurrence of the tangible loneliness she had experienced upon the hillside. His jaw set in a way she was to know well. With a viselike grip he drew her toward the hut.

The interior was cleared now of rubbish, and a rough aperture for window had been made at the end facing inland. The shade was cool and welcome. Croft fetched the coats and spread them upon the ground.

"Now," he said, "stay here until I return."

"You understand? You promise to remain? Or must I barricade the door?"

She pulled her hand away, and let her aching head fall back upon the fierce lining of the coat.

"Now, Stay Here Until I Return."

"Oh, don't bully me!" she protested irritably, trying to control the quaver in her voice. "I won't endure it. Please—go."

He looked down at her in silence for a moment, his brows knit in perplexity. Then he turned and went out, setting up the improvised door behind him.

Lying motionless in the comparative gloom, a prey to rising fever, new fears assailed her. Shrinking in horror, she faced the fact of her isolation. Sundered from all the sure harbors of civilization with this man of uncertain moods—a man whom she neither liked nor understood!

A care for her physical welfare had certainly been shown today. But in everything her will had been overpowered, even to the extent of physical force.

It was not to be borne! What might not happen? . . . The fears, accumulating, grew into feverish terror. She struggled to her feet, and hurried herself weakly at the door, with some frenzied idea of escape.

The door was barricaded on the outside!

As a caged beast, half-mad with terror and impotence, she staggered up and down the little hut, her brow clammy, her clenched hands shaking. . . . With a rush of hysterical tears, she flung herself upon the ground. "Hugh!" she sobbed, distraught. "Oh, Hugh! Hugh!"

Gradually, worn out, she grew calmer; gradually she lost consciousness of her surroundings, falling into a troubled, restless sleep.

The sun had moved round behind the hill and the hut seemed dark and oppressive when, suddenly, her eyes opened. She started up in some alarm. Surely it was not night, and Croft still absent? However automatic and distasteful any companionship might become, the awfulness of solitude—as for a moment that contingency swept across her mind—made it desirable beyond all others.

She ran to the door. To her surprise, it was no longer barricaded. She pushed it open, and drew a breath of relief; for outside it was still broad daylight. The sunshine gleamed in bright patches upon the shore, alternating with long stretches of shadow cast by palms which, singly or in small clumps, dotted the bay. The time, she judged, must be early evening. If Croft had returned and opened the door, where could he be now?

Unsteadily she walked to the water's edge, searching with straining eyes the shore and the distant reef, without result. Nameless dread at her heart, she turned to ascend the slope toward the palm grove, thinking to get from there a clearer view of the wrecked machine.

A movement behind, among the trees, presently caused her to look round quickly. It was, unmistakably, a footfall: evidently Croft had returned and come to the river. With a sigh of relief, she left the tree and turned inland to greet him.

Then, for a moment, all power seemed to leave her body. She stood rooted to the ground, her lips moving without uttering a sound, her eyes dilated.

About ten feet away, a pair of fierce, restless eyes gazed upon her, fasciated, from a sooty-black face repulsive by its breadth of nose and thickness of lips. The dark, naked form, of medium height and sinewy build, glistened as if fresh from the water; the frizzy black hair clung damply about the ears and forehead. As he stood watching her, like an animal watching its prey, the coarse lips parted in a slow devilish grin.

With a quick stream of unintelligible words, he sprang forward. The spell broke. With one shriek of terror, she turned and fled madly down the slope.

The unintelligible muttering ceased. A blood-curdling yell like some wild war-cry pierced the still air, echoing around the bay. . . . quick agile steps sounded close in her wake.

The unearthly strength born of emergency came to Barbara. Everything save the distant hut faded from her sight; time ceased; coherent thought fled from her. Only one instinct reigned—that of the hunted beast to reach its lair. That, once there, defense might prove equally impossible, she never paused to consider. The bare feet drew nearer in their hot pursuit; the weird cry again and again resounded over the bay.

Closer he came; she heard his short snorting breathing. . . . closer: the warmth of it fanned her neck.

closer yet, and a hand caught roughly at the sleeve of her blouse, tearing the soft silk to ribbons as she wrenched her arm free. . . . closer, and this time the slinky black fingers grabbed the bare arm itself.

A swift whirling noise smote across her reeling brain; something hurtled past her shoulder. . . . with a savage snarling groan, her captor fell, sprawling upon the ground.

Dazedly she looked around. Springing over crags, scrambling through brushwood, Croft came down the hill behind the hut at break-neck speed. The native, quickly regaining his feet, cast one glance toward the tall white figure with blazing eyes, dropping to his muddled senses direct from the heavens; then, without a word, he turned swiftly and leapt, with extraordinary rapidity, back toward the palm grove.

Her transient strength oozing away, Barbara staggered forward.

Croft caught her by the arms. "What the devil made you leave the hut?" he demanded angrily.

All tendency to faint left her. No lash of a whip could so have quickened her bewildered brain. She recoiled in his grasp, gazing up into his face dumfounded. Amid the confusion of her mind his extreme pallor struck her forcibly. His eyes pierced her like flaming steel.

"Hadn't you enough sense to realize this possibility?"

Now was the time to assert herself. She hesitated; searched vainly for a retort; opened her mouth; closed it again. In her weak state circumstances proved too overwhelming. Feeling utterly insignificant, she merely turned her miserable eyes seaward.

"I was only looking—for you," she murmured unsteadily.

Opposition may wear down a man, as a fortress, with time; but helplessness silences all guns. He stood, breathing hard, still grasping her arm, gazing into her face with eyes no longer flashing with anger, but smoldering with something she could not define—something composed of horror and fear.

"G—d!" he muttered at last, in a different tone. "If I had been too late!"

For a moment he stood silent, scanning the vicinity of the palm grove; perceiving no signs of the native, he turned with her toward the hut.

"I rescued most of the wireless and luggage," he said, turning the subject of her thoughts abruptly. "I brought some of our things across, and left the rest on the reef. You were asleep. So I took the wireless up the hill, and fixed up the aerial."

Sinking once more upon the coats, she watched him carry in their suitcases and—something else.

It was the old tin box of Aunt Dolly's provisions. . . . Tears rose to Barbara's eyes, and her throat contracted; but her companion's presence caused her to wrestle valiantly with the grief stirred up afresh by the sight of this familiar old box. The little homely things are ever those which bring out the full force of loss or tragedy.

It is believed they overloaded the craft, causing it to capsize. They were with seven other hunters, all from Rogers City.—Boyer Citizen.

Friends of Michigan public schools are this week circulating intiny petitions asking the legislature to pass two laws to boost the amount of an annual primary school fund. One of these would increase the tax on insurance companies organized outside of Michigan and doing business in this state to three per cent, and the other asks an increase in the inheritance tax rate in Michigan. The insurance tax increase would bring into the primary school fund about $650,000 annually, while the inheritance tax measure would add about $3,500,000 annually to the fund. Most other states have similar taxes.

Deer hunting has so far proved a disappointment, according to reports received from various hunting camps in the upper peninsula. Only one deer has so far been received for shipment by the American Express Co., from the vicinity of the Sault. There have been several deer shipped from the Canadian side and some moose, but the number does not approach the number of deer shipped in years. According to officials of the express company ten deer and six moose have been shipped so far. The main trouble it is believed, is not the scarcity of deer, for pre-season deer were plentiful. It is rather the lack of snow that has proven a severe handicap to hunters. Sault Ste Marie News, Nov. 15.

It cost four Gaylord hunters $25 a piece for killing a young buck deer the day before the deer hunting season opened. A game warden discovered the young deer in their car and hauled the men into justice court. One of the men, Blaze Respecki, told the court he was hunting for smaller game when the deer jumped up close in front of him. He fired without thinking and killed the animal.

Real fall weather visited northern Michigan Sunday morning and left a light fall of snow in its wake. The mercury dropped to 20 above zero and continued around the point all day Sunday. The heavy snow storm which struck northwestern Michigan Saturday night evidently missed this region for there was but a light fall here. However, toward night Sunday more snow came as the weather grew slightly warmer.

Miss Clara Mitchell, daughter of Mr. and Mrs. John Mitchell of this city, and Mr. Emily Nason, Eveline township, were quietly married at the Presbyterian parsonage, by Rev. E. P. Linnell, last Saturday evening. The young folks were attended by Miss Helen Mitchell, sister of the bride, and Mr. Burton Mellicamp, County Agricultural Agent. The bride is well and favorably known in this city, for two years she was a teacher in the Central school building! After a short honeymoon trip, the newlyweds will be at home on their farm in Eveline township.—Boyer Citizen.

Just before six o'clock Monday evening Harold Saffron was proceeding east on Michigan ave. with a roadster when just east of the old Buelah Home some boys with a sled shot out into the street ahead of the car. Saffron went down the embankment to avoid the boys. The embankment is not less than fifteen feet and when the car stopped it was on its side and the driver was wedged inside and injured about the neck and back. The car was slightly damaged. The boys were sliding on the sidewalk and could not be seen from the street until they got into the road. The officers have time and again cautioned the boys to keep away from streets that are used by autoists but little heed is given the danger. No doubt arrests will be the only way to safe guard the lives of the boys and those that use the streets for driving.—Boyer Citizen.

The Week Ender
By THOMAS ARKLE CLARK
Dean of Men, University of Illinois.

HE CAME into the office Monday morning listless and heavy-eyed, making excuse for his absence. He had been home over the week-end and he said he got back late, but had missed nothing important, of course He could make up the time easily if only the boss would be reasonable.

He had had a marvelous time, he admitted, yawning wearily as he told me about it, but it had left him wrecked. He had intended to get up a little back work, but—well, there had been a dance, and a dinner party, and he had slept until noon Sunday, and there had been something doing until he started back, so, of course, there was no time for anything else. He went out not exactly in a good humor, because I unreasonably could not get his point of view.

It is a growing custom, this spending the week-end at home or out of town, but it plays havoc with a man's work. There are, however, adequate reasons to justify the practice; the quiet influence of the home and the home folks, the taking down of the screens for winter or putting them up in the spring, getting the teeth filled or pulled, or the tonsils in or out. There is always the emotional pull of the sweetheart. One would be cruel indeed to object to a man's visiting her occasionally. Often the home folks think it is a good thing for a son to try to get home week ends.

"Are you going to the Michigan game?" I asked another. "No," was his reply. "I'd like to, tremendously, but a trip like that upsets me for two days and leaves me a mental junk heap for a week after I get back. I can't afford it. I rested this afternoon for two hours and then got up my back work."

The week-ender is usually not doing so well in his work, and not much interested in it. The explanation is simple. He has a double interest and does justice to neither of them. His week-ends give him pleasure, but he comes back to his duties tired, uninterested and bored.

Sinners In Heaven

Hiding weakness from Croft's eyes, however, was becoming, unconsciously, Barbara's purpose in life just now. Any display of it was, she felt intuitively, abhorrent to him. In silence she watched him unfasten the box, take out the spirit-lamp, reach among the other contents, and abstract a tin of milk.

Presently he brought some steaming milk in a small tin mug. She had often used that mug upon picnics with Aunt Dolly; the sight of it caused another wave of homesickness and loss.

"I can't drink it," she muttered, turning away.

"You must," he replied quietly, seating himself on the ground beside her, his countenance inexorable. She took no notice.

"Come along! Don't be silly, Barbara!"

Quickly she turned and faced him. Then rather too hastily she took the mug; but her hands trembled, and the milk splashed over the edge. He placed his fingers over hers and guided them; and the cool firm touch brought a peculiar sense of calm and security.

"It tasted—queer!" she remarked.

Rising, he returned to the work of unfastening their luggage.

"Your case is unstrapped," he said presently. "Will you unpack it now?"

"Oh—I can't! Not yet," she said wearily.

"Shall I?"

"No! Oh, dear me, no!" She started up in alarm.

"Well, but—don't you want things for the night?"

"No."

He looked at her in mute inquiry.

"You don't suppose," she asked with asperity, "I shall ever—address in this place?"

As he turned away, she saw the same flash of white teeth in the dim light that she had seen the first time they met.

"Advise you to change, after such a soaking," was his only remark. He stood near the door, as if uncertain, for a few moments, then pushed it open. "I shall have my supper outside."

"Good-night!" he added.

There was much sense in his advice: her clothes felt stiff and heavy. Wearily she opened her suitcase, surprised to find most of the contents dry. She hastily undressed and slipped into cool, fresh garments. Throwing on a loose Japanese dressing gown, she lay down again, exhausted. All fears sank into oblivion. . . . She fell into a deep, heavy sleep.

III

The flare of many torches illuminated the midnight darkness in the south of the island. Chinabaho, the old chief, sat in the leafy council chamber near the entrance of the sacred palm grove, surrounded by his trusted warriors. In the center of the large circle of squatting figures stood Babooma—next in rank to the chief—recounting, in his muttering, sing-song dialect, the strange story which, arousing tragic memories, caused consternation and foreboding in every heart.

When he ceased, Chinabaho sat silent, pulling his beard with wrinkled dark hands that trembled. An agitated babel broke out all around, fierce native oaths blending with walls of distress.

The chief at last commanded silence and spoke.

"Whence came they, Babooma? Was there no strange canoe floating, like a vast island, upon the lagoon?"

Help Kidneys By Drinking More Water

Take Salts to Flush Kidneys and Help Neutralize Irritating Acids

Kidney and bladder irritations often result from acidity, says a noted authority. The kidneys help filter this acid from the blood and pass it on to the bladder, where it may remain to irritate and inflame, causing a burning, scalding sensation, or setting up an irritation at the neck of the bladder, obliging you to seek relief two or three times during the night. The sufferer is in constant dread; the water passes sometimes with a scalding sensation and is very profuse; again, there is difficulty in voiding it.

Bladder weakness, most folks call it because they can't control urination. While it is extremely annoying and sometimes very painful, this is often one of the most simple ailments to overcome. Begin drinking lots of soft water, also get about four ounces of Jad Salts from your pharmacist and take a tablespoonful in a glass of water before breakfast. Continue this for two or three days. This will help neutralize the acids in the system so they no longer are a source of irritation to the bladder and urinary organs, which then act normal again.

Jad Salts is inexpensive, and is made from the acid of grapes and lemon juice, combined with lithia, and is used by thousands of folks who are subject to urinary disorders caused by acid irritation. Jad Salts causes no bad effects whatever.

Here you have a pleasant effervescent lithia-water drink which may quickly relieve your bladder irritation. In all means have your physician examine your kidneys at least twice a year.

"There was not, O Chief. The white woman appeared in my path as if sprung from the waving palm! The white man—he looked furtively round—'did fall from the skies, sending his belt before him!' He shivered, stroking his sore shoulder. 'The great white man is a giant, O my Chief! He will not easily be killed.'"

"How great is the tribe? Didst thou not see others, Babooma?"

"None other did I stay to see, O Chief! Perchance they are evil spirits come to haunt the huts where live the ghosts of our slain ones. Or perchance they slay with ball-devils like unto those other evil ones."

The chief sat in deep thought for some moments; then rose and waved his spear.

"The Vow!" he cried. "Let preparations be made, my warriors. When next darkness hides the earth, we will fall upon this white tribe, true to the Vow!"

A confusion of voices resounded, accompanied by many furtive glances into the darkness of the forest; the savage joy of revenge was yet tempered with awe. Memories of the means of warfare adopted by white men caused them to follow their chief in still half-fearful excitement to the sacred palm grove.

Presently the sound of native voices rose once more, singing their Song of Hate.

The man sitting outside the little hut raised his face, inhaling the soft scents, grateful for the refreshing wind. All night he had sat motionless, head hidden in his hands. There was nobody to see, in his haggard features, what Barbara had seen that morning.

Although his eyes had not closed, this solitary vigil, with its forced inaction, had revived and intensified the morning's sufferings. The sense of powerlessness which had attacked Barbara with such violence in the afternoon now attacked him. Again and again he strove to turn his thoughts from the wrecked mass out there upon the reef; from the dark waters and the monsters which infested them, where those friends, strong and full of life not many hours ago, now lay hidden. What awful fate, worse than mere drowning, had been theirs? . . . He strove to restrain his mental agony, dragging his mind away, for down that road madness lay. . . . There were natives, possibly cannibals, upon this island, to be faced sooner or later. Therein, to his mind, lay hope. For surely they were in touch with civilization? During his travels he had picked up a good number of dialects employed among Polynesian and Melanesian natives. With luck he might find means of rescue through their enterprise, if they had any. But this was doubtful. He knew well the characteristics of the Pacific: knew the trade routes, the ports of call, the features of islands in touch with civilization, the features of many practically unknown. . . . Intercourse with strange natives, too, meant considerable risk, with a woman in his care. . . . At that thought, the same strange thrill shot through his frame which he had experienced in the morning; the awful loneliness of spirit seemed to fall from him.

Scattering his reflections, a strangled, terrified cry came from the hut. He sat up, alert in a moment. All had been quiet hitherto. The draught dropped into the milk had done its work. He had been fortunate in rescuing the case of medicines and first-aid necessities from the machine. Again, louder, another cry smote upon his ears. He sprang to his feet. . . .

Reaction had come upon Barbara, awakening from the heavy effects of the drug, so vividly that she was almost delirious. The little hut seemed to swing round and round, now darting suddenly up toward the sky, now dropping, as a stone, into limitless space. And ever, from the four quarters of the globe, roared what seemed like ten thousand trains. . . . To escape was impossible, for somebody had barricaded the door. . . . the hut rushed down now toward the dark fathomless waters. . . . they closed above her head, and everywhere black hands surrounded her—black, leering faces came close. . . . With a shriek of terror she covered against the wall, when the door opened; then perceiving freedom, she ran blindly toward the starlight without.

A pair of arms caught her upon the threshold. Half-demented she struggled in their hold, gasping hard sobs. But they closed more tightly; and their protective warmth shut out the lurking dangers. Gradually she grew calmer; the nightmare sensations of returning consciousness abated. Ceasing to struggle, she leaned exhausted against him, her arms clinging to one of his, the waves of her long hair falling across his breast.

So for several minutes they remained—two derelict beings hurled, helpless pawns, over the boundary line of civilized life into a world yet in its infancy—each conscious of a sense of comfort in each other's nearness.

Presently he straightened himself. With two fingers he felt her brow and cheek; they were of little more than normal heat. He stroked back the hair clustering over her forehead; and she stirred, raising her head.

"You must lie down again and sleep," he said, drawing her toward the bed of coats. But her grasp tightened upon his arm.

"You are not going—far away? It—it's like a vault in here—full of death!" Her voice rose unaturally.

"I won't leave you at all," he said hurriedly, but with a decision which obviously relieved her. "It's not safe—for either of us—alone—tonight."

Her eyes wandered over his face, in the dim starlight, in a dazed manner, while she sank back upon the coats with a long sighing breath.

One hand still clasped in hers, the other arm passed under her head for a pillow, he remained upon the ground, by her side. The turmoil of his own spirit seemed unaccountably soothed. Though never sleeping, a comforting drowsy numbness replaced the sharp suffering of his mind.

But when the early light of dawn pierced through the aperture, it brought with it the remembrance of a man's hand-clasp, the trust in one honest brown eye, the shade in place of the other. . . . The wonderful peace which seemed to have descended upon the little hut, lulling his mind, filling it, during those hours of close protection and companionship, with something exquisitely beautiful, albeit incomprehensible, was shattered at one blow.

He half-withdrew his arm; then, pausing, bent over the sleeping girl and looked long upon the delicate features, the sensitive lips and dark lashes. As he looked, an unbidden thought flitted across his mind, bringing a slow flush into his face. Had another taken indisputable possession? Had he reached to the very depths of her soul; fired all the deepest fibers of her womanhood?

He drew himself up, gently freeing his hand and arm. The question opened vistas down which he refused to look. A part of his nature that night had been illuminated as if by many-hued candles; and he felt dazed, strange to himself, almost, for once, afraid.

He rose with difficulty, his limbs cramped after long sitting; stretched his arms; looked down once more upon the sleeping form confident of his protection.

Croft was a lover of cleanliness, fair play, victory always—but victory with honor. Throwing back his head in a characteristic way, his eyes still resting upon the sleeping face, he smiled. It was the little smile which many men knew well, which enemies feared, but which those he led had ever loved to see: that smile with him meant a challenge, and a challenge presaging achievement.

Noisefully, he opened the door and went out. Seizing two old basins discovered among the rubbish in the hut, he strode toward the river.

Save for the distant surf, no sound was audible. From the palm grove he keenly surveyed the bay: it was deserted; the world might have been dead. Plunging through the tall bamboo he came out upon the deepened stretch of water glistening faintly, like moving darkness, below him. Then, throwing off his garments, he dove into the shadowy ripples, feeling a primitive delight in the cold sting to his tired limbs. Afterward, slipping into his shirt and breeches, he filled his basins and returned to the grove.

When he emerged from the bamboo, the sound of voices fell upon his ears. Hastily stepping back, he waited, listening intently. The voices came nearer, then receded toward the seaward outskirts of the palm grove. Croft took a few noiseless strides in their direction, soon discovering the dark forms of three natives among the trees. Soundlessly creeping in their wake, he hid again, close enough to hear their speech, while they paused at the top of the slope.

He could see now, in the stronger light, that all were armed with long spears, two also carrying bows and arrows. The third, an old man, wore round his neck a large clam-shell disk—emblem of the rank of chief—and through his nose-cartridges a dark stone. Rings, probably of tortoise-shell, hung from his ears.

Croft wondered if this were a visit of negotiation, with a view to a compact of friendship with visitors to down the slope at the solitary hut wherein Barbara lay unprotected. At last, after an indistinct colloquy, they moved slowly forward in its direction.

For a moment Croft's heart seemed to stop beating. To expose himself, unarmed, would mean certain death, and the consequent abandonment of the girl, whose life now rested upon his, to a fate probably far worse. Inside the hut, if he could but reach it, lay the suitcase containing his revolver. Should he risk all and dash from his hiding place or? A sign of relief escaped his lips when the men suddenly halted. For what seemed an eternity he watched them confer together, evidently divided in opinion on the wisdom of their venture. When at last they turned and made off toward the south of the island, he found his clenched hands were shaking and his brow was wet. He hurried down to the hut, where he found a white-faced girl ineffectually barricading the door with suitcases.

She uttered a welcoming cry on his appearance at the window.

"How did you escape? Where were you? What can we do?"

To his own amazement perhaps as much as hers, he laughed—almost happily.

"They have gone away," he replied. "We can't do anything at present."

She gazed at him in some bewilderment, knowing nothing of the reaction which had caused that strange light in his face; and he laughed again, boyishly; then leaned farther in for a closer inspection of the blue-clad figure with its cloud of hair.

"You are better?" he asked.

The paleness of her cheeks changed suddenly to red under his scrutiny.

"I—I'm all right," she muttered, turning away.

"I will go back for the water," he remarked; and his face disappeared from the aperture.

Barbara's mind was uncomfortably confused. Safe in some refuge, she had seemed to be sleeping for hours. When she awoke she instinctively sought for a hand which proved not to be there! Throughout the terrified moments that ensued, vague impressions of some midnight event chased elusively through her brain. They were intensified by Croft's appearance. Vainly she tried to capture the threads; to separate the real from the chaos of delirium. All was confusion, jumbled repetitions of accumulated horrors. She caught first at one thread; then lost it and caught at another. But ever at one point her cheeks burned. How much was true! Surely not. . . . The more she thought, the more convinced did she become of its incredible reality.

How could she face her companion? He alone could place the unraveled threads in her hands. But how to make him do so? How—their island. He recognized them for members of the huge scattered family of Melanesians, or Papuans, which have some undoubted connection with the African blacks, and are to be found in numberless South Sea islands as well as in Melanesia proper. Although their dialect is more or less local, there is sufficient similarity to make it fairly intelligible to any one accustomed to the variations.

A few minutes, and Croft's illusion of a friendly compact was destroyed. Hostility was evident. He soon realized that an attack was being organized for the following night, though he could not distinguish the plans being laid.

Emboldened by the absence of any sign of their enemy, the men remained standing for several minutes, gazing

Lilac Leads All Perfumes

Among the purchasers of perfume, lilac is said to hold first place as the favorite scent. Violet is a close second. White rose and cologne water have entirely lost their great prestige of other days.

EXPLOSION KILLS 3 IN GRAND RAPIDS

NUMBER OF OTHERS HURT WHEN PLATFORM AT POSTOFFICE IS BLOWN UP.

INVESTIGATORS BLAME T. N. T.

Blast Wrecks Windows for Several Blocks—Quantity of Mail Also Destroyed.

Grand Rapids, Mich.—Three investigations were conducted to determine the cause of the explosion at the post-office building here which killed three men and seriously injured 13 other persons.

Two of the men, Ernest Roth and Herman Pettersch, employees at the post office, were killed instantly and a third, Dale Newhouse, driver for a local factory died from a fractured skull shortly after.

Although city officials and some postal officials had insisted the explosion was caused by gas accumulating beneath the floor of the loading dock and then suddenly becoming ignited, Federal officials concluded that the detonation was caused by a high explosive, probably T. N. T.

The explosion, which burst hundreds of windows for a block or more in three directions, and which hurled bits of debris skyward and out from the east side of the building for hundreds of feet, occurred during a lull in activities at the station in the afternoon, November 12th.

Eye witnesses said there was a flash which completely filled the large door of the loading station; a muffled jar and then a deafening blast which completely filled the air with mail, splintered glass and fragments of the one-story frame structure. Except for windows the main building was slightly damaged.

A light delivery truck was hurled skyward as if it possessed no weight, then suddenly flew into pieces as if by some self-contained force.

As the dust was wafted from above the dock, nothing remained of the loading platform. Part of the tin roof supported by a few joists still clung to the wall of the federal building.

TAX PUBLICITY FACES REPEAL

Treasury Department Says Country Is Opposed To It

Washington—Congress will be asked by the Treasury in the forthcoming short session either to repeal or make clear provisions of the tax laws relating to publication of income tax returns.

Although the publicity provisions in the present law are to be left by Atty-Gen. Harlan F. Stone for judicial interpretation, the Treasury it was said, feels that the reaction since the recent publication of returns has shown conclusively that the country is opposed to such publication.

The Treasury has received thousands of letters on the subject.

EXCITEMENT FATAL TO HUNTER

Upper Peninsula Youth Found Dead Beside Deer He Had Shot

Escanaba, Mich.—Wallace Lagerquist, 19 years old, of Rapid River, was found dead by his companions, beside a deer he had killed in Delta County. Lagerquist shot the deer after tracking it six miles from Rapid River and then returned to get his friend to help bring it in.

The party had difficulty finding the deer and the men had spread out and were walking through the woods. After searching for some time one of the members of the party came upon the deer with Lagerquist's body beside it. Lagerquist's death is believed to have resulted from the excitement of finding the deer.

FOKKER DESIGNING U. S. PLANES

Famous Engineer Is Under Contract With American Firm

New York—In the event of a war between the United States and other powers this country would have the advantage of H. G. Fokker's airplane designing talents as Germany did in the World War, he made known at the hotel here where he is staying on a four month's visit to this country.

Under terms of his contract with the Atlantic Aircraft Corporation, in Hasbrouk Heights, N. J., the United States Government has first option on all of Fokker's new designs, he said.

Norton's Building Bill $4,500,000,000.

Washington—The American building bill for 1924 is expected to exceed the enormous sum of $4,500,000,000, and the construction of homes accounts for about 40 per cent of that total, according to figures made public by the federal reserve board and the department of commerce. It has been a boom year in the building industry. There still is a national housing problem, but the situation is the best it has been since the war, officials said.

STATE NEWS IN BRIEF

Caro—A new industry, The Coaster Wagon Company, has been organized here.

Lansing—The State Administrative board has decided to make the completion of trunk line highway M-23, across Lenawee and Washtenaw counties, one of its major prison labor projects for 1925. Two prison camps are to be established along the route, probably this fall.

Grand Rapids—The establishment of "historical rooms" in each of the city's high schools, where records of Grand Rapids service men and women may be displayed, together with such relics as may be conveniently handled, is proposed by George A. Davis, President of the board of education.

Monroe—Broken glass from a mustard bottle, eaten in a sandwich, caused the death of Lawrence Doudrix, 37 years old, of Monroe. He is said to have mixed the glass accidentally with the mustard when he opened the bottle with a knife. Physicians said the glass had penetrated the heart.

Ironia—Fire of unknown origin started in the large woods at the extreme west end of this city. As a high wind was blowing, the fire spread rapidly and several homes were threatened. The woods are not far from the Michigan reformatory. Several hundred men turned out to assist the fire department.

Marquette—The first fatality of the hunting season in the upper peninsula was the death, from exposure, of Harold Knudson, of Michigamme, whose body was found in the woods about 10 miles from Michigamme. Coroner Prin said the condition of the body showed that Knudson died from exposure.

Lansing—Increases in the attendance at the Central State Normal School at Mt. Pleasant have made necessary a revision of the plans for a new library, it was reported to the State Administrative Board. The original plans for a $100,000 structure are to be discarded and new plans prepared for a building estimated at $173,000.

Lansing—The Devil's Bowl, a scenic sink-hole on trunk line M-10, near Alpena, is to be surrounded by a state highway for the benefit of tourists who wish to view the geological curiosity, and several other sink-holes in the vicinity may be set aside as state property according to plans tentatively adopted by the state administrative board.

Lansing—Michigan's problem of financing its future highway development may find its solution in the form of an auto weight tax at the hands of the 1925 legislature. The secretary of state's office is at work compiling the weight of the state's automotive vehicles in order that accurate information may be placed before the house and senate when the question comes up.

Grand Haven—A new steel bridge has been opened to traffic here. This bridge, the largest in Michigan outside of Detroit, is one of the most important engineering feats of the state highway commission and is the connecting link for M-16 and M-11, two important trunk line roads. The structure cost $250,000, paid for jointly by the State and the city of Grand Haven.

Detroit—The Detroit and Windsor Ferry company has awarded a contract to the Great Lakes Engineering works of Detroit to convert the day excursion steamer Britannia into an automobile and passenger ferry. It will ply between Detroit and Windsor. When placed in commission, about January 3, 1925, the new ferry will be able to accommodate 375 automobiles an hour.

Battle Creek—Announcement has been made that Henry M. Stegman and his wife, Dr. Louise V. Stegman, head of the eye department of the sanitarium are about to start a trip around the world, visiting China, India, and other lands. The main objective will be Shikarpur, India, where Dr. Stegman has been invited to do special clinical work in a Mohammedan charitable hospital. She is the third American ever accorded this honor.

Lansing—A system of subways for pedestrians, as an adjunct to the state highway system, was given tentative approval by the state administrative board. It was agreed generally by Governor Grosbeck and other state officials, that steps must be taken in the near future to protect life at points on the trunk line highways where both vehicular and pedestrian traffic are heavy. The most feasible plan, it was decided unanimously, is the construction of tunnels under the highways.

Lansing—After having fought through the World war without a scratch, Dr. Bruce Poyer, house physician at the Edward W. Sparrow hospital, suffered the loss of one eye in a freak accident here. Dr. Poyer was injured when an automobile he was driving struck a stray horse wandering on the road near Howell and the windshield was broken. A flying piece of glass struck Dr. Poyer in the eye, cutting the eyeball so badly that he immediately lost his sight. Physicians say they will save the sight of the other eye.

"COQUETTE"
Even the most man-hating spinster is at heart something of a "coquette." Coquette is derived from the French word "coq," which means a cock. The tendency of that bird to strut up and down the parade grounds of the barnyard, attracting attention to himself, is widely known. The word was coined to denote the girl, who, conscious of her charms, is something of a flirt. The pronunciation is "ko-ket," with the accent on the second syllable.

Pretty Negligees Arrive in Many Styles

Just before Christmas the annual new crops of negligees make their appearance in the shops. They are of many kinds, ranging all the way from the little breakfast jacket, pretty, brief and frivolous, to rather gorgeous affairs of satin or velvet in long negligees. With them appear boudoir and breakfast caps—these are belongings that make an enticing appeal as Christmas gifts.

A light and silky cotton corduroy, in many rich and cheerful colors, has proven itself to be about the best medium for negligees that are at once practical and handsome. They are cut on graceful lines, and the easiest things to slip on in the morning. One of them, in henna-colored corduroy, is shown here. Sometimes a lining to match, of mercerized and silky-looking cotton material, is used, but as often they are unlined.

Dear Mr. Lisk:
Enclose herewith please find our money order being payment for subscription to August, 1925.

We send greetings from California, especially San Francisco, to all our old friends. We find this a wonderful state, and an ideal city, with opportunities for everyone.

Dear Editor:
It pleases me very much to renew our subscription to the paper. We all look forward to its coming weekly, because I am quite busy and it makes it impossible to keep in touch with all my friends.

Really, I can hardly imagine one living in East Jordan for six years and not welcome the "Home Town Paper." I am in hopes of dropping in on all of my friends soon.

I am very much interested in the East Jordan ball games and although I am not there to cheer, it gives me a very happy feeling; "When she comes out ahead."

With best regards,

Mr. Lisk:—

Will you please send "The Herald" to our new address at the bottom of this card. As we were driving through a town, I guess Grantsville, Maryland, yesterday, Frank Osborne ran and caught up to us. He said he saw in your paper that we were going thru, and he had been watching for us. He said that May Stewart lived in that County too. Mr. Osborne and wife have a new baby girl at their house, which arrived ten days ago, their third child.

We traveled in a snow storm all day yesterday and had to go very slow.

AN OLD RECIPE TO DARKEN HAIR

Sage Tea and Sulphur Turns Gray, Faded Hair Dark and Glossy

Almost everyone knows that Sage Tea and Sulphur, properly compounded, brings back the natural color and lustre to the hair when faded, streaked or gray. Years ago the only way to get this mixture was to make it at home, which is messy and troublesome.

Nowadays we simply ask at any drug store for "Wyeth's Sage and Sulphur Compound." You will get a large bottle of this old-time recipe improved by the addition of other ingredients, at very little cost. Everybody uses this preparation now, because no one can possibly tell that you darkened your hair, as it does it so naturally and evenly. You dampen a sponge or soft brush with it and draw this through your hair, taking one small strand at a time; by morning the gray hair disappears, and after another application or two, your hair becomes beautifully dark, thick and glossy and you look years younger.

SEEK SCHOOL FUND INCREASE

Teachers Propose Tax on Insurance And Inheritances

Lansing—An effort is to be made to write an act into the statute books, designed to increase the primary school fund approximately $6,000,000 a year.

E. T. Cameron, an official of the Michigan State Teachers' association, announced that initiatory petitions would be circulated, proposing that foreign insurance companies doing business in this state be subjected to a tax increase of about 20 per cent and that the inheritance tax rate be advanced.

According to those back of the movement there are some districts in Michigan which cannot afford to maintain their schools unless additional state assistance can be obtained.

It was estimated the insurance company revenue would yield about $5,000,000 and the inheritance tax about 1,000,000.

HILL WINS "HOME BREW" CASE

Jury Says Congressman Had Right to Make Own Wine and Cider

Baltimore, Md.—The manufacture of wines and cider of ordinary alcoholic content in private homes is permissible, a jury in United States District Court here decided.

The jury dismissed all the counts of the indictment against Rep. John Philip Hill, of Maryland, which had charged him with unlawful manufacture of 11.64 per cent wine and 2.7 per cent cider in his home. Hill provoked the trial to test the power of the Volstead Act over home brewing.

The case will not result in any change in the prohibition department policy to prosecute home brewers who exceed the legal alcoholic limit in their home brewing, department officials said.

NEW RADIO BEAM INSURES PRIVACY

MARCONI HAS NEW SYSTEM FOR LIMITING WAVES TO ONE DIRECTION.

WILL GREATLY AID COMMERCE

Erection of Beam Stations to Be Contracted For At Once—Will Reduce Rates.

London—William Marconi, the wireless wizard, has perfected his beam system of transmission to the point where signals between England and Australia have been heard regularly, he has announced.

Scientists are enthusiastically declaring this ends the experimental stage of beam transmission and forecasts rapid development in wireless in the immediate future. By the beam system the radio waves are sent out only in one direction and in a limited beam.

Signor Marconi has been conducting experiments along this line nearly 30 years. He told the correspondent adoption of his new system means greatly reduced radio rates and greater privacy in transmission.

He said contracts would be entered into at once with the British government for erection of beam stations to link up the far away dominions with England. He also expects to make rapid progress in circling the globe with these stations.

"All the results," he declared, "may of which greatly exceeded my expectations, convince me that by means of the beam system economical and efficient low power stations can be established which will maintain direct, high speed services with the most distant parts of the world during a considerable number of fixed hours daily. Besides increasing the number of stations, it will be possible to reduce the possibility of mutual interference between them."

BROOKHART'S SEAT CONTESTED

Congress Will Be Asked to Decide On Ballots Thrown Out.

Des Moines—Ballots thrown out by election judges in numerous Iowa counties and estimated to number thousands may decide who shall be Iowa's junior senator—Smith W. Brookhart or Daniel F. Steek.

These ballots, missing from the official tabulations completed in all counties, will form the basis of a contest of the recent senatorial election which Mr. Steek, Democratic candidate for Senator Brookhart's seat, announced would be made when the new Congress convenes next March 4.

Mr. Steek pointed out that approximately 950,000 votes were cast for President, Nov. 4, while the tabulations show less than 900,000 votes for the senatorial candidates. While many voters undoubtedly refrained from expressing their choice for Senator, Mr. Steek declared he had been advised that "a great many ballots, in which the voter attempted to exercise his choice, were not counted by local election boards." The total vote, as shown by the complete county canvasses was Brookhart, 447,711; Steek, 446,961.

FRANCE RESUMES REBUILDING

First Payment Under Dawes Plan Is Turned Over to Devastated Regions

Paris—Fifty million gold marks ($12,500,000), first of the monthly reparations payments collected under the Dawes plan, has become available to France for use in reconstruction of the devastated regions. Reconstruction work ceased last spring when the government held up all expenditure not covered by receipts, conforming with the Morgan agreement for a $100,000,000 loan to save the franc. The reconstruction of the war shattered zones will recommence immediately, and contracts will be let for rebuilding.

BUILDS SHAFT HONORING ADAM

Baltimore Man Believes Original Man Has Been Neglected.

Baltimore, Md.—To make up for the neglect of the whole human race to properly commemorate the birth of the progenitor of all the people, John P. Brady has taken it upon himself to erect a monument to Adam, the First Man.

The monument is a plain stone shaft, impressive by its simplicity, surmounted by a sun dial. Without any flourishes to detract from its imposing grandeur.

State Has 71,691 Acres U. S. Land

Washington—The Department of the Interior has just finished striking a balance of Uncle Sam's real estate for the last fiscal year and finds that the total Federal public domain amounts to 186,604,733 acres, distributed among 24 of the 48 states. This does not include land in forest and Indian reservations, nor does it include Alaska. The Federal domain in Michigan, 71,691 acres, is greater than that in any other eastern state except Florida, which has 79,406 acres.

Detroit—Albert Majewski, East Jordan, Mich., was arrested by the police of that city on a charge of manslaughter following the death of a 10-year-old boy, who is said to have fallen from the running board of Majewski's automobile when the latter started the machine in an effort to "shake the boy off."

Aibion—The principal feature of the Aibion election was the naming of a woman for a municipal office for the first time in the history of the city. Mrs. Kate Bromeling, who has carried on a real estate and insurance business since the death of her husband, 7 years ago, was named justice of the peace.

Lansing—Majorities which are believed to have finally crushed in Michigan any attempt to impose an income tax upon the public, and further attempts to abolish parochial schools, were rolled up in the state election. The school amendment was beaten 2 to 1, while the income tax proposal was beaten nearly 5 to 1.

Detroit—Convicted solely on his finger-prints, Onnie Howard, 27 was sentenced to serve one to five years in Jackson prison for burglary. Lieutenant Charles Carmody, head of the police identification bureau, produced at the trial prints found at the scene of the crime and pointed out striking likenesses in them to the finger-prints of Howard.

Grand Rapids—Dorothy Plucker, 2-year-old daughter of Mr. and Mrs. Clifford Plucker, was seriously injured when struck near her home by an automobile in charge of Ted Rice, of Howard City. The shock of the accident revived a nervous trouble in Rice and he was taken to a hospital, where, physicians say, he has little chance for recovery.

Lansing—Michigan has elected a 1925 Legislature that is solidly Republican. In 1923 the Democrats had five members in the House and none in the Senate. Four of those five ran for re-election, and, according to official returns, they have all been defeated. The fifth Democrat, Dr. Dennis Dawe, of Monroe, did not run for renomination and his place has also been taken by a Republican.

Grand Rapids—John Ormond, 52 years old, was killed when he was struck by a Pere Marquette passenger train at Franklin's crossing. Ormond was walking some from work and is said to have stepped around the crossing gates and walked directly into the path of the train. A sister, Rose Ormond, was at the crossing when the accident occurred, but did not realize the victim was her brother until he was identified an hour later.
