Changes In Postage Rates

Important Changes and Increases Effective April 15th.

Many important changes will be made on April 15th affecting the rates on post cards, and mail of the third and fourth classes. Postoffice patrons should thoroughly familiarize themselves with these new rates in order to avoid confusion.

Following are some of the outstanding features of the new rates as gleaned from "The Postal Bulletin":

The rate of postage on all post cards will be 2 cents each, whether they bear written or printed matter. The rate will also apply to each portion of double or reply post cards. The postage on the reply half need not be affixed thereto until it is detached and mailed for return.

This includes all cards within the size for post cards, whether or not they bear the words "Post card" or "Private mailing card." Cards bearing these words, even though not within the size for post cards, will be chargeable with 2 cents postage each if in print or the letter rate if wholly or partly in writing.

There will be no change in the rate of postage on Government postal cards nor on any other mail of the first class.

On and after April 15, 1925, mail of the third class will embrace all matter now, included in the third and fourth classes up to and including 8 ounces in weight, while the new fourth class will include all matter formerly in the third and fourth classes over 8 ounces in weight and not exceeding 70 pounds in the first, second, and third zones, and not exceeding 50 pounds when mailed for delivery in any of the other zones.

The rate of postage on all matter embraced in the new third class will be 14 cents for each 2 ounces or fraction of 2 ounces up to and including 8 ounces in weight, except that the rate on books, catalogues, seeds, cuttings, bulbs, roots, scions, and plants shall continue to be 1 cent for each 2 ounces on parcels not exceeding 8 ounces in weight.

The present fourth-class pound rates according to distance or zone will apply to all matter weighing more than 8 ounces, except that of the first and second classes, and in addition thereto there will be a service charge of 2 cents for each parcel, except upon parcels originating on rural routes, such charge to be prepaid in the same manner as the regular postage. Parcels mailed on rural routes should be indorsed "Mailed on rural route" in order that the parcels will show that they are exempt from the service charge.

Parcels to be given special handling will be chargeable with the regular fourth-class rates together with the 2-cent service charge and 25 cents additional postage on each parcel, all to be fully prepaid by stamps affixed. Such parcels should be prominently indorsed by the sender. "Special handling," preferably in the space immediately below the postage stamps and above the address.

MONEY ORDERS

A money order shall not be issued for more than $100, and fees for domestic orders shall be as follows—
 "For orders exceeding $2.50, 5 cents.
 "For orders exceeding $2.50 and not exceeding $5, 7 cents.
 "For orders exceeding $5 and not exceeding $10, 10 cents.
 "For orders exceeding $10 and not exceeding $20, 12 cents.
 "For orders exceeding $20 and not exceeding $40, 15 cents.
 "For orders exceeding $40 and not exceeding $60, 18 cents.
 "For orders exceeding $60 and not exceeding $80, 20 cents.
 "For orders exceeding $80 and not exceeding $100, 22 cents."

REGISTERED MAIL

"Mail matters shall be registered only on the application of the party posting the same, and the fees therefor shall not be less than 15 nor more than 20 cents in addition to the regular postage to be, in all cases, prepaid; and all such fees shall be accounted for in such manner as the Postmaster General shall direct."

"Whenever the sender shall so request, and upon payment of a fee of 3 cents, a receipt shall be taken on the delivery of any registered mail matter, showing to whom and when the same was delivered, which receipt shall be returned to the sender, and be received in the courts as prima facie evidence of such delivery."

INSURANCE AND COLLECT-ON-DELIVERY SERVICES

The fee for insurance shall be 5 cents for indemnification not to exceed $5; 8 cents for indemnification not to exceed $100.

The fee for collect-on-delivery service shall be 12 cents for collections not to exceed $50; 15 cents for collections not to exceed $100. Return receipts same as in last paragraph of "Registered Mail."

SPECIAL DELIVERY

To procure the immediate delivery of mail matter weighing more than 2 pounds and not more than 10 pounds, stamps of the value of 15 cents shall be affixed (in addition to the regular postage).

Farmers' Meet At East Jordan

Next Wednesday, April 1st, 2:00 P. M., Armory.

Plans have been completed to have a meeting of the vegetable growers, gardeners, and Canning Factory growers at the Armory in East Jordan on the 1st of April at 2:00 o'clock Standard Time. Mr. George Starr, specialist in Horticulture of M. A. C. will be present to address the gathering and discuss all problems that might be brought up. Mr. Starr has had a wide range of experience in vegetables and you may rest assured that it will be along practical lines for Mr. Starr has in the past managed one of the largest seed farms in the country.

There are several farmers now actively engaged in vegetable farming and are quite successful and with the large Resort business increasing from year to year it apparently looks like a good field to enter. In case you are located near a Canning Factory you will derive much benefit from this meeting.

Don't Forget—Attend.
 Armory—East Jordan—April 1st, 2:00 o'clock Slow Time.

Yours very truly,
 B. C. MELLENCAMP
 Co. Agr'l Agent.

Will Launch Airplane Carrier

Washington—The United States airplane carrier Saratoga will be launched at the plant of the New York Shipbuilding corporation at Camden, N. J., April 7, with Mrs. Curtis D. Wilbur, wife of the secretary of the navy, acting as sponsor. The Saratoga will be commissioned about the end of the year 1926. She will carry 75 planes, including fighting, bombing torpedo, scouting and observation planes.

Schurman Envoy To Germany

Washington—Dr. Jacob Gould Schurman, present minister to China, was nominated by President Coolidge to be United States ambassador to Germany. Schurman will succeed Allanson B. Houghton, who was transferred from Berlin to London, following appointment of Ambassador Kellogg as secretary of state.

Lord Curzon Is Dead

London—Marguis Curzon, of Kedleston, lord president of the council, died here following an operation early this month. Since that time he had gradually failed. He was 66 years of age. Lord Curzon had been prominent in the public affairs of Britain for the past quarter of a century.

Storm Tears Boats Adrift

Buffalo, N. Y.—Eight lake cargo boats were torn loose from their winter moorings in Buffalo harbor, a school building in the town of Wheatfield was unroofed and two uncompleted buildings in this city were flattened today by a gale which whipped across the eastern shore of Lake Erie.

19 Killed in Train Crash

New Orleans—Two fast Southern Pacific railroad mail trains collided in a dense fog at Ricohoc, La., killing 19 persons and injuring five others.

This is the time of the year that the average husband understands what a "simple hat" costs.

George J. McCormack, secretary of the American Academy of Astrologers, challenges the weather bureau to match its forecasts against his. This is our idea of hot fight.

I Hear Her Calling Me

NEWS DISPATCHES FROM EVERYWHERE

Thousands Killed Or Injured As Tornado Tears Through Central West

Chicago—A tornado of unusual proportions, tore through Southern Illinois after lashing Eastern Missouri, and then caused considerable damage in Indiana, Kentucky and Tennessee after collecting a reported toll of nearly 1,000 dead and 300 persons injured, on the basis of estimates available from the storm swept regions, where communications was largely destroyed.

The destruction of property was enormous, several towns being almost entirely wiped out, and such populous places as West Frankfort and Murphysboro having lost whole blocks of buildings. In the town of Parrish only three persons were said to have escaped death out of a population of 500.

In some places, where the twisting wind struck hardest, whole buildings were moved from their foundations, a grain elevator at Desoto having been carried intact some 40 feet to the middle of a road. Churches and schools seemed to have suffered most outside of dwellings and less substantial farm buildings. A schoolhouse at De Soto was razed and only 3 of the 250 occupants escaped unhurt.

The storm was not so severe in Missouri, where it seemed to emerge from the Ozark mountains but it laid waste a number of towns and many farms before it jumped the Mississippi river into Illinois. There the tornado was at the height of its fury for several miles while it careened from Murphysboro to Parrish.

Relief was almost as quick in its action as were the elements. Relief trains bearing doctors, nurses, wrackers, and goodly supplies of medicines and food were dispatched from Chicago and St. Louis as well as other points within a few hours after the disaster became known.

Quebec Shaken Again

Quebec—An earthquake of such intensity as to set buildings trembling and frighten the populace, again visited the region where the more severe quake of three weeks ago is believed to have had origin.

It was most noticeable in the St. Lawrence and Saguenay valleys, in the parishes of Bale St. Paul, Murray, St. Simeon, Limolou, St. Roth, Lortteville, Charlebois and St. Saviour. Although telephone service was disrupted there were no persons injured, and the property damage was small.

Cable To Italy Opened

New York—On March 16 Baron Giacomo de Martino, Italian ambassador to the United States, pressed a switch in the offices of the Western Union Cable company which opened the first direct cable linking the United States and Italy.

Immediately following the first message flashed to Rome was one from President Calvin Coolidge to H. M. Victor Emmanuel III, king of Italy, in which President Coolidge sent his greetings in the name of the United States.

Extra Session Planned

Washington—President Coolidge plans to call a special session of congress in September to consider further tax reduction, members of the senate were informed as they prepared to close their offices here and leave for home for the summer. Chairman Smoot, of the senate finance committee, and Chairman Green, of the house ways and means committee, have told members of their committees to be ready for a call the latter part of July or the early part of August.

Some people are so extravagant that they won't save time.

4 Comedians In 1 Picture

Four comedians playing prominent roles in one of the most dramatic pictures ever made.

They can be found in the cast of "He Who Gets Slapped," Victor Searstrom's picturization of the well-known Andreyev play which comes to the Temple, Wednesday, Thursday, Friday, April 1-2-3.

The comedians, or ex-comedians, are Ford Sterling, Lon Chaney, Clyde Cook and George Davis. Although he has been playing in serious screen work for years, Chaney began his picture career in comedies.

Ford Sterling and Clyde Cook were both former comedy stars. Davis is a famous clown and acrobat, who started films with Buster Keaton.

"He Who Gets Slapped" is a Metro-Goldwyn picture, presented by Louis B. Mayer.

SENATE CONFIRMS NEW ATT'Y GENERAL

Washington—Advised by Charles Beecher Warren, of Detroit, that he did not desire, and would decline, a recess appointment as attorney general, President Coolidge, after conferring with Senators Curtis and Robinson, the Republican and Democrat senate leaders, sent the nomination of John G. Sargent, of Vermont, to the senate.

The senate in open session confirmed the nomination for attorney general without a record vote. The whole situation canvassed in advance by the president in his conference with Senators Curtis and Robinson, and Mr. Coolidge had told them quite frankly he did not wish to submit a new appointment to such an ordeal as that dealt out by the senate to Mr. Warren.

Two Palm Beach Hotels Burn

Palm Beach, Fla.—This city was under martial law, two fashionable hotels, the famous Breakers and the smaller Palm Beach, were in ruins, many cottages and shops were burned, one small child is dead and five persons were reported missing as the result of a fire which started in the Breakers hotel. The property loss is estimated at from $4,000,000 to $5,000,000.

Martial law was ordered by Gov. John W. Martin at the request of local authorities after the police at West Palm Beach had captured two motor trucks and several automobiles loaded with valuables stolen from the ruins and had arrested eight Negroes and one white man. Other reports of looting were received.

Bids Received For U. S. Vessels

Washington—Bids for ten of the President type vessels were submitted to the Shipping Board by the Pacific Mail Steamship Co., operators of the California, Orient line, and R. Stanley Dollar, of the Dollar Steamship line. The bid of the Pacific Mail company for the five vessels which it now operates to the Orient, proposed the formation of a corporation with $6,750,000 of capital stock, the amount bid by that company for the vessels. The second bid, that of the Dollar Steamship company, offered $5,625,000 for the five vessels now operated by it.

Cocanut King Gives Fortune

New York—Leopold Schepp, known as the "cocanut king," has set aside $2,500,000 of his fortune to carry out philanthropic plans for the "betterment of humanity." It has become known. Part of his fortune will be used to establish a foundation for the benefit of worthy boys of New York, he announced.

Mr. Schepp also distributed $22,900 to the employes of his firm L. Schepp & Co. The employes, old and young, received gifts of from $500 to $1,000 each. Two years ago he made a similar distribution of $110,000.

Intemperance Increases

New York—Gain in drinking is shown in the report of the Charity Organization Society on families aided during the last year. Despite the prohibition laws, the society found intemperance the problem to be overcome in 12 per cent of the families. This was a rise from 10 per cent last year and 7 per cent the year before. In 1921, intemperance provided 8 per cent of the total cases, and in 1920 it was 9 per cent.

Dawes' opinion of the senate is well known by this time: what is now interesting is the opinion of the Senate of Dawes.

"Let George Do It"

When the average citizen of this community gets what he considers is a "dirty deal," from whatever source the deal may spring, the average citizen thinks it is the duty of the newspaper to expose the "crook" and keep his name out of the light.

There are people in this community whose main thought of the newspaper is that they are to serve the public, fight its battles, boost its town, yell for home-trading, brag on local merchants, gloss over local vices, exaggerate local virtues, headline unimportant boosts for business, go crazy over the town's future prospects and stay crazy over the general excellence and wonderful ability of the subscriber doing the thinking.

These people are hair-trigger critics of the editor, of the news, of the print, of the policies, of the honesty, of the motives, of anything or everything in the paper that does not carry out the principles set forth in the imagination of the thinker, as set out in the first paragraph above.

When it comes to paying a subscription for the journal they read the paper at the barber shop or at the home of an old maid aunt. When it comes to advertising they are quite certain that everybody in trading territory knows their line, and the marvelous bargains there. When it comes to advice they have Solomon looking like a mudfish and when it comes to cash they make the mudfish look like a mammal.

To get the idea into their craniums that a newspaper, first, foremost, and all the time is the business of the owner, with the same aim in business that a shoe store, is practically impossible. The newspaper is a place of free puffs, in their eyes, a device to serve the community and the leaders therein without being entitled on the other hand, to loyalty, support or encouragement.

Newspaper editors, who experience this phase of the public misconception as to their business, should be flattered. It is the unconscious admission of the public that the newspaper business in the past, has been unselfish, working for the community and not for the dollar. The editor should feel flattered—that is about what he will get for his trouble.

Of course, this editorial is for those able to get the point. There are many loyal friends of the press in our midst, but there are also many other, thoughtless, selfish, and envious. There are merchants whose practices have been above reproach, and there are others whose advertising like their money, is obtained through sinister devices. There are subscribers who co-operate in helping the office force, who tell them the news, make splendid suggestions and conversely, there are those who send in an article to be printed in the nature of a free service, and then get out and talk about you for not printing it, when as a matter of fact they haven't had sense enough to see it in print.

HIGHWAY BILLS OKEHEHED.

Bohn Primary School Fund Aid
To Poor Districts Passes
Senate 25-3

The past week saw more apparent legislative progress than any other week thus far this session. The Senate set the ball rolling Monday evening by considering 26 bills in 40 minutes—some of a record, in legislative activity. When the bills have been carefully considered in committee and the members have made up their minds regarding them, it doesn't take long to go through the formalities of passing them, either in committee of the whole or on third reading. Often they are "considered read" and then some member moves "that the affirmative roll call be attached." If there is no objection to this motion, all those present are recorded as voting for the bill, the clerk announces the result of the ballot and the presiding officer declares the bill passed. A few seconds suffices to pass the bill.

Big batches of appropriation bills, aggregating many millions of dollars, are being passed in rapid fire order with apparently little consideration on the floor. The salvation of the taxpayers of the State is that behind the scenes are the various institutional committees and the hard working Committee on Finance and Appropriations in the Senate and the Ways and Means Committee in the House.

Pass Road Bills

The final enactment of both the Atwood and Ming trunk line bills practically completes the cut-and-dried highway program agreed upon by the Administration and Senate and House leaders. The Ming bill provides that on and after Jan'y 1, 1926 the State will take over the construction and maintenance of Michigan's entire trunk line system and relieve the counties from any responsibility, financial or otherwise, in connection with trunk lines. This bill passed the House by a big majority and was endorsed by the Senate 23 to 6, being opposed by the five Wayne County senators and Senator Chas. Herrick of Fenwick.

The Atwood bill authorizes the laying out of 500 miles of additional trunk line highways, the routes to be designated by the State Highway Commissioner and the State Administrative Board.

The Bohn bill, which represents a mild form of the so-called Escanaba plan of redistributing the primary school fund, has been speeded through the Senate to the tune of 25 to 3, being opposed by only Senator Condon, Wood and Woodruff, all of Wayne County. It would leave 95 per cent of the fund to be distributed as at present, but would provide for distributing the remaining 5 per cent to the more needy school districts according to a carefully worked out plan which is intended to insure some measure of educational opportunity to Michigan boys and girls.

Redistricting Big Issue

Forsaking its accustomed calm, the Senate allowed itself to become quite excited when the reapportionment bill to give Wayne County seven senators instead of five came up for final passage. For nearly two hours the battle raged back and forth. Proposals looking toward eight or ten seats for Wayne were decisively defeated. Somewhat conflicting opinions from the Attorney General were presented. Decisions of the Supreme Court were quoted. The debates were interjected with parliamentary tangles. Motions were passed only to be reconsidered and defeated. Finally after a recess in which things were talked over in words of one syllable the bill passed 18 to 12.

This bill now goes to the House, which has troubles of its own in the shape of Rep. Culver's bill to give Wayne 25 instead of 14 members of that body.

Seek Safety at Crossings

In an effort to cut down the appalling loss of life resulting from traffic accidents at grade crossings, the House after extended debate passed the Richardson bill by a vote of 82 to 12. Under the provisions of this bill the Public Utilities Commission would be empowered to designate especially dangerous crossings and to require the railroads to install specified stop signs to warn motorists and drivers of other vehicles. Upon approaching a crossing so marked, the driver of any vehicle would be required to bring such vehicle to a complete stop and to listen and look in both directions before crossing the railroad track. In the debate on this bill, figures were submitted to show that hundreds of persons are killed or injured at grade crossings in Michigan each year. It was pointed out that trunk line highways are designated as stop streets and it was much more reasonable and necessary to have such restrictions apply to dangerous railroad crossings than even to trunk line highways.

Early in the session several bills were introduced all requiring the stopping of automobiles at all grade crossings. These bills were regarded as somewhat extreme, so the Richardson bill was agreed upon as a substitute. It was shown in the debate that there are 16,000 grade crossings in Michigan, so it would be impractical to do away with all of them or to require all autos and trucks to come to a complete stop for all such crossings.

To show that stopping before crossing a railroad track really prevents accidents, it was pointed out that busses are required to stop at all crossings and since this law has been in effect there has not been a single accident to a bus occurring at a grade crossing. This bill was described as "intended to benefit sensible people who want to be warned of bad and dangerous crossings."

The matter of enacting some legislation so that the County Comm'r of schools might be the choice of the people whom he really serves, instead of a politician holding office through his connection with a city political machine has now taken another turn. Some time ago Rep. Wilbur Snow of Comstock introduced a bill providing for the selection of this official by the board of supervisors. He now has proposed a substitute bill which would establish a county board of education, one of whose duties it would be to hire a county superintendent of schools for a four year term. This bill changes the term county commissioner of schools to county superintendent of schools wherever the former title occurs in the present school laws.

The county board of education would consist of five members, holding office for six year terms. They would be nominated by petition and elected as are other county officers. An interesting feature of this bill is the provision that a majority of the members of the board would be required to be residents of the county living outside of incorporated cities. The board would hold regular monthly meetings, and would receive their actual expenses, but no other pay.

Makers and sellers of livestock tonics condition powders, etc., will find little consolation in a bill introduced by Senator Frank L. Young of Lansing to require the licensing and registration of such dealers and to provide for labeling, inspection and analyses of such products. Remedies coming under the provisions of this bill would have to be sold on the basis of a definite guarantee as to ingredients and in printing any analysis, the English rather than the Latin terms would be required. In order to properly control manufacturers and dealers in such remedies, they would be subject to license and stiff penalties for violating any of the provisions of the bill.

Senator Burney Brower of Jackson has introduced a bill providing an appropriation of $75,000 for the Michigan State Fair at Detroit for each of the next two years. Out of this amount $25,000 would go for maintenance and operating expenses and $50,000 for premiums annually during the coming two years.

Baseball. Again

Judging from reports received from the training camps 1925 is to be exceptional in the annals of big league baseball. Every team it appears is certain to win, and sixteen pennants will be required when the final curtain falls.

The newspapers are filled with news of this player signing and another holding out for more cash. The public is interested and the sporting editors are laying in a supply of new adjectives and sharpened pencils.

The interest is not confined to big league towns. All over the nation hamlets, towns villages and cities are discussing their prospects. Minor matters, like taxation, election and fiscal affairs, are being given the pink slip. Every boy, old enough to throw a ball or hold a bat, is anxious to show his stuff. It is a great game, and to be perfectly frank, we wouldn't mind a few innings ourselves.

If the price for coal continues to worry you think about the price of ice.

We would like to experience the sensation produced by the treasury department demanding seven million dollars as back taxes.

Potato Growers To Hold Annual Meet

Leading potato growers of the state, especially those interested in the production of certified seed, will gather at Traverse City on April 16-17 for the annual meeting of the Michigan Potato Producers Association, pioneer seed production co-operative group.

Prominent speakers, representing various phases of the industry, are listed for the educational program at the conference. President K. L. Butterfield, of M. A. C., G. V. Branch, director of Detroit City Markets; Carroll F. Sweet, Grand Rapids banker; and J. T. Horner, marketing specialist at M. A. C., are among the leading figures on the program.

Experience talks by some of the state's most successful growers will be a special feature. F. H. Glidden, of Alba, will discuss hill selection of seed; Ernest Pettifor, Gaylord, selecting and exhibiting show potatoes; and H. H. Losey, of Elmira, will talk on grading and loading certified seed.

Farming Not a Bed Of Roses

If you think that the average farmer lives an easy life, and enjoys a sweet smelling bed of roses, there are acres of farm lands in this section awaiting your magic touch.

We are not among those who envy the favoritism, so-called, that it is said the farmers get. Life on the farm is ideal in the imagination only; when you get out and tackle the dirt for the purpose of raising crops you have a big job on your hands.

After fighting the weather and the seasons and having the good fortune to raise a large yields the next fight is on. This is the big problem of the farmer. It is a big job to get something for what he has succeeded in taking from the soil.

There have been occasions when the wheat farmer, the cotton and the corn farmers would have been better off without a big yield. They would have saved money by letting the grass grow in their field. The fact would not be distressing if there had been in the world at the time a huge surplus of the crop, but when the world, as a whole, has need for farm products, and the farmer in this country is unable to get the benefit of the demand there is something rotten in Denmark.

Farm relief is a stock phrase with the politicians but it will take a lot of manoeuvring to help the actual farmer, the man who toils in the fields and raises the stuff. This is the biggest problem in the country today, and it should be assailed.

Losing $100,000
A Throw

When a business turns in profits of eight and a half million dollars in one year it is reasonable to believe that the contractor of the business knows what he is doing.

Well, William Wrigley, Jr., of chewing gum fame, knew what he was doing when he spent as much money as he could on advertising. Starting with a soap business and giving away chewing gum as a premium he soon built up a demand for chewing gum, and took to it.

After getting a modest start he accumulated $100,000 and flung it into an advertising campaign in New York City. He lost it because the city was so big it did not notice the $100,000. When he got another $100,000 he flung it into New York, and again the campaign fizzled.

Most men would have let New York alone after that but in a few years he was back on the scene. This time he had a quarter of a million to spend for publicity. This time he captured the metropolitan market. His company still advertises heavily. He estimates that he has spent $23,000,000 advertising chewing gum—a five cent article.

The Wrigley factories now manufacture 40,000,000 sticks of gum a day, and the public chews it. That is one example of what advertising does for the man or merchant who uses it in the right manner and keeps his courage in the face of slow results.

They are taking up a collection to restore the frigate, Constitution. There is something else by the same name that needs a little help.

We are always optimistic. Somehow we have a feeling that our past subscribers are about ready to step forward, with the cash.

Fundamental Transportation

Into the vast and complicated network of Transportation in Michigan have been knit several accessory types of carriers. Yet it is noteworthy that each of these accessory carriers exists only through service by certain of Michigan's 24 Steam Railroads.

Electric railroads get their power from coal. Steam Railroads bring it to them.

Motor cars, trucks and busses use gasoline for fuel. Steam Railroads bring it from far-away refineries—bring, too, the materials for the paved highways on which motor vehicles run.

Not even ships are self-sustaining. Their coal meets them at the railhead.

Steam Railroads are Fundamental Transportation.

On their faithful performance everything else depends.

This responsibility is ever before the Steam Railroad men of Michigan. And they feel they are meeting it today better than ever before.

Does your experience confirm this belief?

Do you appreciate the absolute need of protecting this Fundamental Transportation from further restrictions adding to the cost of service?

NEWS FROM THE STATE CAPITAL

Wayne County Forced To Accept Seven-Seat Measure In Senate

Lansing—After two hours of jockeying and debate the senate passed by an 18 to 15 vote the Wood reapportionment bill which would give Wayne county seven senate seats. In the balloting and discussion, the senate expressed itself clearly that it would oppose any bill which would give Wayne any more, and the ultimatum was delivered to the Wayne members that unless they accepted the seven-seat bill they would get nothing. The vote was taken in the face of an opinion by the attorney general's department the bill likely would be unconstitutional.
Senator David Butler, of Lapeer, whose district would be absorbed under the Wood plan, served notice on the senate he would go into court in the next election to have the Wood bill declared unconstitutional in the event that it passes the house.
Board Given Highway Central
The final act in connection with the adoption of its major highway program was performed by the Legislature when the House accepted a Senate amendment to the Ming Bill, giving the State control over the construction and maintenance of the trunk line system, and sent the measure to the Governor for signature.
The change from the original bill was a short phrase giving the State Administrative Board undisputed supremacy. As introduced, the measure specified that the State Highway Commissioner and "other state officers," should direct expenditures. The Senate made it more specific by substituting "State Administrative Board."
The final adoption of the Ming Bill, and the transmission of the Atwood Bill to the Governor, finishes the program. The Ming Act requires the State to pay the entire cost of the trunk line construction, relieving the counties of about $4,000,000 a year.

Crime Bureau Blocked

The House sent the Haight Bill, proposing the establishment of a bureau of criminal identification in the State Department of Public Safety, to the Ways and Means Committee. It was slated for consideration on the floor, but Rep. Robert Mac Donald, of Larium, objected to advancing it without the approval of the Finance Committee. The State Department of Public Safety virtually conducts a criminal identification bureau now, he stated, although the Legislature has never been consulted.

Anglers License Voted

The senate passed the Angler's License Bill, 24 to 7. The opposition was led by Senator Norman B. Horton, of Fruit Ridge, who declared that while the bill's proponents said that they expected to realize $100,000 a year from it, to use in fish propagation work, he believed that the actual proceeds would be nearer $750,000. The bill provides a $1 annual license for male anglers more than 16 years old who want to catch bass or trout, exclusive of lake trout, in Michigan waters.

Regulate Hours of Firemen

The Senate passed, by a vote of 25 to 2, a bill regulating the hours of fire department employees in cities of more than 10,000 inhabitants. It was introduced by Senator Frank L. Young, of Lansing. It is provided that firemen shall not be on duty more than 24 hours, and shall not be off duty less than 24 consecutive hours in any period of 48 hours.

Deer Season Out In Two

Over the negatives of six Lower Peninsula Senators, the Trustner Bill reducing the deer hunting season from 20 to 10 days passed the Senate. Senator Roy Herald, of Detroit, backed by Senator Norman B. Horton, of Fruit Ridge, objected because the bill would separate the deer and bird hunting seasons by 10 days in the Upper Peninsula.

Bohn Measure Passed

The Bohn primary school fund reapportionment bill, which would take $700,000 out of Wayne's share of the fund and distribute it among counties in the northern part of the state, was passed by the senate on third reading. Three Wayne senators were the only ones who voted against the bill.

House Passes Pension Bill

Destitute mothers in Michigan are barred from the operation of the mothers' pension bill unless they have been in the state two years and in any single county one year under the terms of a bill that went to the senate after being passed by the house of representatives.

Crossing Bill Passed

A bill making it a misdemeanor for motorists to cross unprotected railroad crossings without first stopping, was passed by the House, 62 to 18. Violators, it is provided, would be punishable by a fine of from $10 to $100 or a jail sentence of not more than 90 days. It provides that the Michigan Public Utilities Commission may, at its expense of the railroad, place large white signs at any crossings otherwise unprotected, the signs to read: "Stop, Railroad Crossing, Michigan Law."

Use High Grade Fertilizer Only

Sand and Cheap Materials Are Expensive Because of Handling Cost.

The principal arguments for high-analysis fertilizers are: (1) they save on freight, (2) they save on the cost of handling, (3) they do not require a filler, and (4) they require the use of higher grade goods by the manufacturer. So says Prof. C. P. Blackwell, chief of the agronomy division, Clemson college, who explains that high-analysis fertilizers are those containing 16 per cent or more of plant food.
Results to Farmer.
If a farmer buys a low-analysis fertilizer, the manufacturer, in order to make up this, must of necessity do one of two things. He must either use low-analysis materials for his ammonia and potash, or he must use a filler. In either case the results to the farmer are practically the same. For example, the manufacturer may use sand as a filler. One may argue that sand is very cheap and it should make little difference in the price of the fertilizer, but let us see if that is true.
To begin with, that sand must be hauled to the fertilizer plant. It must be unloaded and handled into the plant. It must then be mixed in with the fertilizer. Then it must be sacked, tagged, and handled out of the plant. All this is paid for by the farmer. It is then shipped to the farmer's freight station at his expense, and he must now haul it to his farm and distribute it over the land. All this takes labor, so in the end this sand has cost the farmer a great deal. The manufacturer will generally say that he does not charge the farmer for this filler and perhaps he does not directly, but indirectly he does add it to the farmer's bill.
Again, one may say that the filler does not amount to much. That may or may not be true. If the farmer is buying 8-3-3 fertilizer (and more than 40 per cent of the fertilizer sold in South Carolina is of that analysis), this 8-3-3 fertilizer can be mixed from high analysis materials with less than 1,500 pounds of material for each ton of fertilizer, the remaining 500 pounds being filler. This 500 pounds of filler must add materially to the cost of buying this fertilizer and applying it to the field.

Low Analysis Materials.

As a general rule, however, the manufacturer would, most likely, use low-analysis materials for making up this fertilizer. The result, however, is practically the same so far as the farmer is concerned. He pays for the expense of handling the large bulk of low-grade material used in making up this fertilizer, and frequently the materials used are not so good as the higher analysis materials.

Deep, Mellow Seed Bed Is Required for Soy Beans

Soy beans require a deep mellow seed bed similar to corn and it would pay to plow the field and keep it in good condition until the first of June which is about the best time to sow the beans. Manchu is one of the best varieties for hay. The oat cups should be used in the grain drill and they should all be left open when sowing for hay. The drill should be adjusted to sow from 60 to 90 pounds per acre. The beans must be inoculated to get the best results and the best way to do it is to secure some soil from a field where soy beans are grown, being careful to get soil that has contained some of the soy-bean roots. Spread this out and let it dry, but do not expose it to the sun for the light will kill the bacteria. Then mix three or four quarts of the soil with each bushel of the seed and drill it together. Be careful not to get the seed covered too deeply. Never plant deeper than three inches, depending upon the soil.

Useful Manure Spreader

Durability of manure spreader depends largely upon resistance to wear of its gears and bearing surfaces. A spreader has to withstand almost as bad usage in this respect as plow or cultivator. Modern spreaders are generally made with bearings carefully guarded against dust and grit. All moving parts that require lubrication should be covered and protected so dirt and stone cannot get into them. An oiled surface will hold dust and grit.

Cows Fail to Clean Well

It is very noticeable in some sections where the soil is under continuous croppings for a long period, as well as during hot, dry seasons when the crops do not grow well, that the cows fail to clean naturally at calving time. This frequently happens when the cows are fed a ration that is low in mineral matter. In herds that are fed sparingly and with a poor ration the number of cows that fail to clean are many more than from a well-fed herd.

Cause of Weak Pigs

There are several things that cause pigs to be weak at birth. Probably the most common cause is the improper care of the sow during pregnancy. The sow must be fed a carefully balanced ration containing plenty of protein and mineral matter for these substances must be present to build the growing embryos. Exercise is very important because the sow must be in good health to nourish the young pigs.

The Man for the Job

By THOMAS ARKLE CLARK
Dean of Men, University of Illinois.

"IT ISN'T a job for every man," someone has said, "but a real man for every job."

I suppose I give as much advice to young men and their parents as the next man—sometimes when it is asked for and at other times proffered gratuitously. Perhaps in the latter case it is seldom considered very seriously. There is no other subject upon which counsel is sought more frequently than that which has to do with the choice of a job.
There are two opinions which are quite generally held by young people with reference to jobs. The first is that practically all the jobs in the world are taken or will be taken by the end of the month, and that if the young fellow in question does not get out and after a job at once he will be left holding the sack. This opinion has been extant since the spring I graduated from college—and possibly before that time. The other opinion is that there are good jobs and bad ones; that some jobs in themselves offer a straight and open road toward unquestioned success.
"What is a good thing for a boy to study for?" fathers ask me, with the idea that there is some alchemy of open sesame in the job itself, and that it does not depend to any large degree upon the man.
When I was a graduate student years ago in an eastern university I came into contact with a considerable number of men engaged in advanced study who were no longer young. They had apparently, so far, not done well in the teaching profession. They lacked tact, enthusiasm, personality, an understanding of human value or something of the sort that was necessary to their getting on, and, at much sacrifice, they had given up their positions in order that they might pursue the studies necessary to the obtaining of an advanced degree.
What impressed me was that most of them had the idea that the degree itself was the talisman that would bring them all these qualities the lack of which had meant failure for them. They gave little or no thought to the development of their characters, to the cultivation of an appealing personality, or even to the acquisition of knowledge which might in some practical way make them better teachers—it was only what would help them up the hill toward the coveted degree that they concerned themselves with. It was the job which they kept in mind and not the development of a real man for the job.
What most of us should concern ourselves with is not in looking out for a job which will offer a sure and easy approach to affluence and distinction, but in developing our minds and characters and personalities to the extent that the job will come after us.
There will always be a job for the man who can first prove himself the man for the job.

STAR

Running-in-oil and Timken Bearings

This new STAR, with either Timken Tapered Roller Bearings or "NO-OIL-EM" Bearings, running-in-oil, has great efficiency as a pumping power in 8 to 10 mile winds.

As you know, any mill will pump water in high winds, but the windmill that will provide water in the lighter breezes is the one you want.

The Star can do this because it has a scientifically designed wheel. The fans have just the right curvature and are properly spaced.

Bearings running in oil, with a flood of oil for cross-head, guides and pitmans, reduce friction to the minimum. The better features of the old Star, two gears, two pinions and two pitmans, are retained. This gives a direct center lift to pump rod and equalizes the load on working parts of the mill. Star is pivoted on ball-bearing turn table.

Come in and see this new Star. You will be interested in seeing how effectively it is lubricated, and we know one erected on your place will prove a better water pumper than anything you have used in the windmill line. May be fitted on any tower.

"YANKEE"

"Yankee" was first used during the Revolution as a term of reproach by the regulars of the British army in discussing the colonial insurgents. "Yankee" grew out of the attempt of the Indians to pronounce the word English. Their broad, guttural accent made it "Youngee," "gh" having the sound of "k." The term was used contemptuously by the Dutch colonists in reference to the settlers of New England.

Extracting Flower Essence

Perfume must be drawn from the bloom on the day that it is plucked. In 24 hours the delicate aroma is almost gone. Many flowers are required to produce small amounts of the perfume. It takes about two tons of violet blossoms, for instance, to make about two pounds of essence of violets.

King Tommy

By George A. Birmingham

Copyright by Bobbs-Merrill Co. (W. N. U. Service)

He sat up straight in his chair, pulled his bristly white mustache and looked so pleased that Tommy began to think that he must himself be the "arranged" bridegroom. The thought of Calypso being married against her will—Tommy felt certain it would be against her will—to this bristly-headed German made Tommy seriously angry.

"Do you mean to tell me," he said, "that you have the nerve to think of marrying her yourself?"

"So," said Von Steinfeldt. "Her equal in birth I certainly am."

"Well, just listen to me for a minute," said Tommy. "You've swindled me with these beastly marks of yours in a way that a third-rate money-lender would have been ashamed of. You've set on nasty, slimy police officers to arrest me. You've dragged me about Berlin in a taxicab. You've kept me standing here for half an hour with nothing but your face to look at. Very well. I'm not going to ask for compensation, though I ought to get it. I'm not even going to demand an apology, though if you had as much decent feeling as a Hottentot you'd apologize without being asked. But I'll just tell you one thing before I go. I mean to marry Calypso myself."

Von Steinfeldt was genuinely astonished. He had been brought up to regard royal persons of all kinds and members of aristocracies as sacred. A pastor—he now quite believed that Tommy was a curate—belongs to the rank of the bourgeoisie, is burgerlich. For such a one to marry—

"But she is a princess," he said. "I don't know anything about that," said Tommy, "but whether she is or not, I mean to marry her if she will have me. And I may say that it's a choice between you and me, I expect to have the better chance."

"So, Herr Pastor," said Von Steinfeldt. He had sufficiently recovered from his first surprise to realize that Tommy's threat was absurd. No princess could possibly marry a curate. Such a thing would be worse than a wave of Bolshevism. Central European society would be shaken to its foundations. Wladislaws, as Von Steinfeldt knew, was a disreputable wreck of a king. Calypso was highly unconventional in her manner of life. But even they could not contemplate an alliance with a curate. The sneer on Von Steinfeldt's face became quite unmistakable.

"Ach so, Herr English pastor," he said. "And even if she won't marry me," said Tommy, "and I mean to have a pretty good try at persuading her, I feel pretty certain she won't marry you. No girl would. Good-by. Or perhaps I ought to say, 'Ach so, Herr Bridegroom arranged.'"

CHAPTER XI

It was at half past ten that Casimir entered the Adlon hotel the morning after the party at the Mascotte. He did not find Tommy, who by that time had gone off to the police office. He did find Janet Church, whom he rather wished to avoid. She at once attached herself to Casimir and reminded him of his promise to arrange for her visit to Lystria.

Casimir was quite civil to her. He is the kind of man who is civil to any woman anywhere and at any time. He had a reason for treating Jane with special politeness. He believed her to be Tommy's or rather Norrey's aunt.

"Certainly," he said. "Everything will be settled about your journey. There will be no difficulty at all. I shall get you a passport."

In talking to Janet he spoke German and was therefore able to express himself without quoting Shakespeare. "I don't see how you can get me a passport," said Janet. "The consul here, and the passport officer, and the people at the embassy refuse to allow me to have one. If I travel at all, it must be without a passport. That's what I expect you to manage for me."

"You shall have an excellent passport," said Casimir, "a British passport, which no one will question."

"You can't get me that," said Janet. "It's impossible."

Casimir smiled indulgently. They were sitting together near the door of the hall. A lady, middle-aged, very neatly dressed, unmistakably English, passed them, going toward the swinging door.

"That," said Casimir, "is Miss Gisborne. Miss May Gisborne. She is the secretary of Colonel Heard, who is the head of the British Graves Registration commission."

Janet looked without particular interest at Miss May Gisborne. "In seeking for British graves," said

Casimir, "Colonel Heard, who is sometimes accompanied by his wife, goes through various parts of Germany, and beyond Germany into all the countries of eastern Europe. Miss Gisborne often goes with him, in order, I suppose, to register the graves which are found. Colonel Heard has a diplomatic passport. So has Miss Gisborne. I propose that you should use Miss Gisborne's passport."

I do not suppose that Janet Church has any particular scruples about traveling with a false passport. For the sake of a noble excuse—and what could be nobler than world peace—she would willingly do far worse things than that. But she was startled at the cool way in which Casimir assumed that Miss Gisborne's passport would be at her disposal.

"But she isn't in the least likely to lend it to me," said Janet.

"No," said Casimir. "I shall steal it."

Even Janet shied a little at that. The word "steal" used in that way

"No," said Casimir, "I shall steal it."

has a very nasty sound, and I suppose, as a worker in the cause of Christian unity, Janet felt herself more or less committed to the Ten Commandments.

"Steal!" said Janet. "But I couldn't agree."

"Even Shakespeare," said Casimir, "is occasionally wrong. You recollect—?" He gave his quotation in English. "Who steals my purse steals trash; 'tis something, nothing; 'twas mine, 'tis his, and has been slave to thousands, but he that filches from me my good name robs me of that which not enriches him and makes me poor indeed." There Shakespeare was mistaken. If I took the purse of Miss Gisborne I should make her poorer. But if I take her name, that is to say, the passport of the gracious fraulein, I do her no harm, for she gets another one at once—another passport, you understand, not another name. Whereas I make you rich in what you want.

With the passport of Miss Gisborne you can travel anywhere."

I do not know whether that line of reasoning quieted Janet's scruples, or whether the joy of being able to go to Lystria smothered the cries of her conscience. She ceased to object to the stealing of the passport, and became exceedingly curious to know how it was to be done.

"That," said Casimir, "is easy. The English seldom lock up anything. In England, I suppose, it is not necessary to lock things up. No doubt all the English are so rich that they do not want to take what is not theirs. Why should they when they have all they want? So here in Berlin—Colonel Heard does not lock up his own passport or Miss Gisborne's. If sometimes, by chance, he does lock them up, he always leaves the key in the pocket of the trousers he wore the day before, for the English are a truly great nation, and the English gentleman is so noble he suspects no one. He would not himself steal anything, ever. Therefore he leaves his keys in the pockets of his yesterday's trousers."

"All the same," said Janet, "he'll lock the door of his bedroom. We all do that."

"That," said Casimir, "is nothing." Then he went on to explain to Janet how the theft was to be effected, and the explanation left her gasping.

The Countess Olga, Casimir's only sister, was at that time a housemaid in the Adlon hotel. As a housemaid she had, of course, a master key which opened all the doors on the floor on which she served. The room occupied by Colonel and Mrs. Heard and that of Miss Gisborne were under her care. She could enter them at any time she chose, stay in them as long as she chose and not excite the smallest suspicion. She was familiar with Colonel Heard's habit of leaving his keys in his trousers pockets.

The first feeling which this frank confession aroused in Janet's mind was pity for the countess. It must be a dreadful thing for a highborn lady, no doubt a delicately nurtured lady, to be reduced to earning her living as a housemaid in a hotel. Casimir explained that her pity was wasted.

"It is not for the sake of wages that Olga is a housemaid," he said. "She has money enough to live otherwise, and if she had not, I would give it to her. We Lystrian nobles are not rich, but we would not allow our sisters to earn wages as servants. No. Olga is a patriot. She is a housemaid just as I was a soldier in the war for the sake of our beloved land, ours for a thousand years, now taken from us. I fought, but it was no use. Olga collects information, letters, documents, telegrams—"

"From people who leave their keys about," said Janet.

"And, if necessary, passports," said Casimir, smiling.

Janet is not, I suppose, an entirely unscrupulous woman. There are things she would not do, though very few, for the sake of a cause she had at heart. She made no further protest against the theft of Miss Gisborne's passport; but she did not want to go on talking about it. She changed the subject.

"By the way," she said, "talking of passports. That young friend of yours who was with you last night in the Mascotte—"

"Your nephew," said Casimir. Janet recollected herself.

"My nephew, yes. I am afraid he is likely to get into trouble with his passport."

"But how?" said Casimir. "Surely in London they gave him a correct passport."

"On his passport he is described as the Reverend Thomas A. Norreys. Now, he's not that."

"He is certainly not that," said Casimir.

"I thought not."

"It was foolish," said Casimir, "to put that on his passport, and quite unnecessary."

"If the police suspect anything, wrong—"

"The police will not see that passport."

"They will," said Janet. "By this time I expect they have. He went off to the police office this morning to obtain his Ausweis, taking the passport with him."

"What?" said Casimir. "He has gone to the police office!"

"That's what I'm trying to tell you," said Janet, "and I'm very much afraid there'll be trouble."

"Trouble! They will imprison him. They will deport him. They will— But not even Von Steinfeldt would dare shoot him. But—Excuse me. I must act at once or all is lost. The rincess! My beloved country! But have friends and I have money. The Ing has friends. Perhaps it is not yet too late."

He hurried across the hall toward the door. Janet hurried after him. Tommy was in serious trouble. Casimir was excited and frightened. She could not bear the thought of not being helpful in a crisis as desperate as this. She caught Casimir by the arm just as he reached the door.

"Shall I ring up the embassy?" she said. "The third secretary is a friend of mine. At least, I've often talked to him over the telephone. After all, your friend—I mean my nephew—is a British subject. The ambassador must do something. I shall insist on his moving in the matter."

Casimir turned on her. He must have felt extremely irritated, but his politeness did not fail him.

"Gracious lady," he said, "I can think of only one thing in the world which would make this affair worse than it is, and that is the interference of the British ambassador."

Janet says that his face was white, drawn and tragic when he spoke, and that beads of perspiration had gathered on his forehead. But Janet is inclined to exaggerate in the interests of the picturesque. I do not suppose that Casimir was in the state she described. He was upset about what had happened and foresaw a great deal of trouble. But he had no doubt that he could straighten things out even if the police had arrested Tommy.

When he left the hotel Casimir went straight to his bank and cashed a check for ten thousand marks. In Germany it takes a long time to cash a check and it was half an hour before Casimir actually got the money. Then he drove to the police office and walked into the room into which Tommy had gone that morning. There was still a long queue of Poles, Russians, Slavs, Ukrainians and other foreigners waiting to approach the police officer's desk. But Casimir did not take his place at the end of the line. He handed twenty marks to the policeman who kept watch at the door and was immediately placed at the head of the queue. In return for another twenty marks the policeman ordered all the other waiting people out of the room. They were allowed to draw a breath of fresh air in the passage until Casimir finished his business. This was good for them, but they did not like it.

For some months the German mark had been falling rapidly. Official salaries, from those of cabinet minister to those of simple policeman, had in March only about one-tenth of their supposed value and a large class of more or less deserving people found themselves starving. This, though disagreeable for them, was a great advantage to any one who controlled money in a stable currency. Casimir had Procopius Cable's English pounds to draw on. He felt confident of being able to persuade any official to do what he wanted done.

He began his interview with the police officer by laying a thousand marks on the table in front of him. Then he said he wanted an Ausweis, duly signed and in proper form, for an Englishman called Norreys. The police officer stood up and bowed respectfully to Casimir. Then he fixed his eyes, hopefully at first, sadly afterward, on the thousand marks. He began to apologize.

If he had known a little earlier that the highborn gentleman wished for an Ausweis—The young Englishman had been there, in that very office—There

Helping the Boy

In the morning a calf was found with its head tied close to the manger with two ropes so it is supposed that the intruder was caught in the act of larceny.

The citizens of Central Lake by eight votes failed to carry the bonding proposition to raise $15,000 to build electric lines from the Elk Electric Co. feeders at Clam River, and for the necessary transformers to distribute the current in the village limits. The vote was a good majority in favor of the proposition, but the required two-thirds vote did not materialize. The proposition would have given Central Lake 24-hour power and lighting service instead of the evening service they now have, and would have reduced the meter rate considerably also. To disinterest outsiders the outcome is a surprise, for Central Lake has always been considered wide awake to improvements.

SULPHUR IS BEST TO CLEAR UP UGLY, BROKEN OUT SKIN

Any breaking out or skin irritation on face, neck or body is overcome quickest by applying Mentho-Sulphur, says a noted skin specialist. Because of its germ destroying properties, nothing has ever been found to take the place of this sulphur preparation that instantly brings ease from the itching, burning and irritation.

Mentho-Sulphur heals eczema right up, leaving the skin clear and smooth. It seldom fails to relieve the torment of disfigurement. A little jar of Rowley Mentho-Sulphur may be obtained at any drug store. It is used like cold cream.

had been a trifling irregularity in his passport, very trifling, nothing that mattered. If he had known— Now, unfortunately, he could do nothing. The young Englishman had been passed on to his superior officer.

The poor man eyed the thousand marks hungrily. He had a wife and two children at home. They had very little food and no firing. A thousand marks would have made life a much pleasanter affair to him.

"Ach, most highborn sir," he said, "I cannot now issue the Ausweis, though how willingly I would do so if I could."

Casimir is not a man who pays for what he does not get. He picked up the thousand marks again.

Then he laid down a note for a hundred marks, and asked to see the superior officer who had taken charge of Tommy.

This time the young man, standing behind his desk, bowed gratefully. Certainly the highborn gentleman should see the superior officer at once. Casimir was shown into the inner room. The young man at the desk pocketed the hundred-mark note. Perhaps he spent half of it on a piece of soap. His face looked as if he had none at home.

Casimir dealt with the superior officer in much the same way, except that this time he laid down two thousand marks. He was received with almost groveling civility. This officer looked at money not so much hungrily as greedily. He had neither wife nor children and was not actually hungry. But he was a man who liked enjoying himself, and in the good old days before the mark fell he was accustomed to spend his evening in pleasure resorts less sumptuous and much less respectable than the Mascotte. From these delights he had been cut off for some months. With two thousand marks a man can buy a great deal of pleasure in Berlin. For two thousand marks most government officials would have done a great deal.

Casimir said what he wanted, an Ausweis for Tommy.

The officer, his eyes fixed on the money, cursed himself, his bad luck, his government, the late war, the French nation, the English nation, the Reparations commission and the International Military control. He cursed fluently, blasphemously and obscenely. At last he told Casimir that Tommy had been sent on to the Prince Von Steineveldt. He himself could do nothing in the matter of the Ausweis.

The information was worth something, and Casimir paid for it.

Then he went back to his bank and drew out, not marks this time, but five hundred pounds sterling.

Even with that sum in his pocket he did not feel quite sure of being able to deal with Prince Von Steineveldt. He drove to the flat which King Wladislaws occupied and took counsel with him.

The king listened to the story.

"The difficulty is," said the king, "that Von Steineveldt wants to step into my shoes himself. He can't, of course. The Entente powers would never allow a German to sit on the throne of Lystria. And, besides, Calypso wouldn't marry him. But that's not the point. He thinks he'll be able to manage it and of course he'll want to get Norheys out of the way."

"Fortunately," said Casimir, "and thanks to the excellent cable, we have plenty of money."

"There's no use offering Steineveldt marks," said the king. "He understands all about marks and knows exactly what's going to happen to them."

"Naturally," said Casimir, "I do not offer him marks. I have five hundred pounds in my pocket."

"That ought to be enough," said the king. "He wouldn't make that much clear profit, after paying all expenses, out of Lystria in two years unless he is a great deal cleverer than I am. But you'll have to be careful, Casimir. He'll take the money all right. But he's a prince. You must allow him to keep up his self-respect."

"I had thought," said Casimir, "of laying the money on his desk without saying anything about it."

"I should be rather inclined," said the king, "to hand it over to him openly, saying that I sent it as a donation to whatever charity in Berlin he thinks most worthy of support. Tell him at the same time that I want to remain anonymous and desire no receipt for the money."

The king, who had been lounging in a chair, got up, went over to his writing table and unlocked a drawer. He took from it a small case made of real morocco leather.

"You may as well offer him this at the same time," said the king.

He opened the box and displayed a small golden snake. It was curled up so that its tail was in its mouth. Its eyes, which had a fierce expression, were garnets. Casimir looked at it with reverence. It was the sign of "The Most Noble Order of the Golden Adder of Lystria," an order granted to very few people and worn by no Lystrian except the king himself.

"He may like to have it," said the king, "though I don't know why he should. It's only nine carat gold, and the creature's eyes aren't rubies. Still, he may like it. Try him, and you might say if at any time he wants a good table at the Mascotte, he has nothing to do but ring me up and I'll arrange it. What's more, I'll take fifty per cent off his bill, and he won't be expected to tip the waiter. Tell him all that, will you?"

Casimir went off to Von Steineveldt's office in good spirits and full of confidence. He did not expect that his interview would be pleasant, but he had no doubt that he would be successful in obtaining Tommy's release.

Von Steineveldt would probably try to bully him. He usually did try to bully any one he met. He would certainly bargain and the haggling might be prolonged. Casimir expected bullying and bargaining; but he felt that no living German would resist the offer of five hundred pounds in English bank notes, a decoration to pin on his coat and the chance of supper at the Mascotte whenever he liked at half the usual price.

Never was any diplomatist, engaged in a demarche of an important kind, more surprised than Casimir was.

Von Steineveldt made no attempt to bully him. He received him with extreme politeness and showed every kind of courtesy and consideration. This made Casimir suspicious. He knew Von Steineveldt fairly well and had never seen him behave like a gentleman before.

"His majesty the king of Lystria—" Casimir began.

"Ah, poor King Wladislaws," said Von Steineveldt. "My heart bleeds for him. Such a position for one who has been a king. Tell me, how is he getting on?"

Casimir did not believe that Von Steineveldt's heart ever bled for anyone. He felt sure that he did not care whether King Wladislaws starved or not. His suspicions, already awakened by Von Steineveldt's politeness, became acute.

"His majesty," he said, "sent me to place a small sum of money in your excellency's hands. He knows little of the needs of the poor in Berlin and he hopes that your excellency will be kind enough to spend this money in the way that you think wisest."

He drew from his pocket his packet of English bank notes and laid it on the table. Von Steineveldt picked it up. There were fifty Bank of England notes for ten pounds each. Von Steineveldt hated and despised almost everything English. But he had a deep respect and a genuine liking for English bank notes. He became almost genial, certainly facetious, while counting the notes. The feel of the paper between his finger and thumb gave him a sense of physical pleasure.

"King Wladislaws," he said, "seems to have been doing pretty well at the Mascotte."

"His majesty," said Casimir stiffly, "wishes his gift to be anonymous, and hopes that you will make no acknowledgment of the receipt of the money."

Von Steineveldt pocketed the notes. "Among the German aristocracy," he said "there are many who have suffered severely by the fall of the mark. Their pride forbids them to make any public complaint of their poverty. I think, if your king approves, that this money would be well spent, perhaps best spent, in relieving their distress."

Casimir had little doubt that the German aristocracy—at all events one member of it—would benefit by the five hundred pounds.

"It is," said Von Steineveldt, "a most generous gift. I beg of you to convey to your king my warmest thanks."

Casimir took out of his pocket the crimson case which contained the Golden Adder of Lystria.

"His majesty," he said, "is deeply conscious of your kindness in acting as his almoner, and is not unmindful of the many services which you have rendered in the past to the unfortunate kingdom of Lystria. He begs your acceptance of the Order of the Golden Adder of Lystria."

Von Steineveldt picked the adder out of its box and held it suspended by the pink ribbon attached to it. Then, standing up and bowing deeply to Casimir, he pinned the decoration to the breast of his tunic. It hung there, the last in the second row of decorations which Von Steineveldt wore. There were twenty-nine of them and the Golden Adder made the thirtieth.

"I accept it," he said, "in recognition, not of the services I have rendered, but of those I hope to render to your native land. I think you understand me, Count Casimir."

Casimir did, or thought he did. No doubt Von Steineveldt was of opinion that he would render valuable services to Lystria by marrying the princess and ascending the throne.

"I am also charged by his majesty," he said, "to inform your excellency that if at any time you should wish to visit the Mascotte a table will be reserved for you and a proper deduction, fifty per cent in fact, will be made to your bill."

"I shall certainly accept the invitation," said Von Steineveldt. "I have long wished to see the Princess Calypso dance. She is still dancing there, I hope."

"She danced last night."

"And tonight? No, tonight I am engaged and the night after. Will the Princess Calypso be dancing next Monday night?"

Casimir sincerely hoped not. If his plans worked out as he wished, the princess would be well on her way to Lystria on Monday night. But he did not want to say that to Von Steineveldt. He made an effort to get away from the subject of the Princess Calypso.

"His majesty," he said, "hopes to engage an English dancer for the Mascotte. She is, I am told, well known and greatly appreciated in London. If your excellency will come and see her when she arrives you will no doubt be pleased. Her name is Temple, Viola Temple."

"Ach," said Von Steineveldt. "I think I know the name. Let me see. I hear a little of the gossip of the London clubs, though I should no longer be admitted as a member of one of them. Is not that the lady to whom young Lord Norheys is so deeply attached?"

Casimir felt that the time had come for getting at the real object of his mission. This chance mention of Norheys' name gave him his opportunity.

"Speaking of Lord Norheys," he said, "reminds me that his majesty asked me to say to you—"

Von Steineveldt interrupted him.

"That Lord Norheys is in Berlin. But I know it already. I had a visit from him this morning. A very charming young man. Perhaps he is over here to take care of Miss Temple."

Casimir, who had been uneasy all through the interview, became actually uncomfortable. He did not understand what Von Steineveldt meant.

"Miss Temple," he said, "has not yet arrived in Berlin."

"Indeed, then perhaps there is no truth in the rumor that he intends to marry Miss Temple. Indeed, I have heard it whispered that another and much more desirable marriage has been planned for that fortunate young man. The Princess Calypso is, I understand, a very beautiful young lady."

Casimir was not surprised to find that Von Steineveldt knew all about the scheme for the marriage of Calypso and Norheys, but he was startled, puzzled and frightened to hear the matter spoken of in this way.

"Lord Norheys is a rich man, I believe," Von Steineveldt went on. "He will no doubt make an excellent king of Lystria, a post which could hardly be accepted by a man without private means. And if your bill fields are developed, he will see to it that England obtains control of them. Well, England gets everything nowadays. To the victors the spoils. It is enough for us poor Germans that we are allowed to live. Please tell the king that I do not grudge Lord Norheys his good fortune. I found him a most attractive young man. I have seldom enjoyed a chat more than the one I had with him this morning."

Casimir felt perfectly certain that Von Steineveldt would grudge the princess and the throne of Lystria to Lord Norheys or any one else except himself. He was equally sure that no German would be content to see England in control of the Lystrian oil. He felt that he was being played with, laughed at, and that some very disagreeable surprise awaited him. He began to be angry and to lose confidence in himself.

"What brought Lord Norheys here?" he asked abruptly.

"There was some trifling irregularity about his passport," said Von Steineveldt, "and he very properly brought it straight to me."

Casimir knew, or thought he knew, all about Tommy's passport and that the irregularity was anything but trifling. He also knew that Tommy had not gone to Von Steineveldt's office of his own free will. He had been arrested and taken there. He jumped to the conclusion that Von Steineveldt had already sent Lord Norheys back to England and was now enjoying his triumph in a disagreeable and spiteful manner.

"I was so glad to be able to set the matter right for him at once," said Von Steineveldt.

"I suppose," said Casimir, "that you have deported him."

Von Steineveldt raised his eyebrows in well-feigned surprise.

"My dear Count Casimir," he said, "why should I deport Lord Norheys? That excellent young man is at present enjoying the sights of Berlin, in company, perhaps, with Miss Temple. Or did you say that she had not yet arrived? I suppose in any case he does not mean actually to marry her. It would be very awkward for you and King Wladislaws if any formal promise of marriage existed. It might be difficult to buy off Miss Temple. I imagine that you would have to pay her more than five hundred pounds. Perhaps the king might offer her the Golden Adder of Lystria."

He fingered the pink ribbon on his breast as he spoke.

"Or a table at the Mascotte and fifty per cent off her bill. But I forgot. She has already been engaged to dance there."

Casimir was by this time nervous as well as angry. Von Steineveldt would scarcely venture to laugh at him so openly unless he were very sure that he had the best of the game.

"I suppose," he said, "that you have imprisoned Lord Norheys if you haven't deported him."

"Even if I wished to imprison him," said Von Steineveldt, "I haven't. We poor Germans lost the war, you know. The hand of the conqueror lies heavy on us. If I arrested an English nobleman in the streets of Berlin, I should probably be tried for my life by the League of Nations. My property would certainly be confiscated. But I need not talk of such things. Even if I could do so with impunity, I should not want to interfere with Lord Norheys or to curtail his liberty in any way."

Casimir has the temper of a healthy and therefore amiable child. But like most children and simple minded people, he is liable to sudden gusts of passion which he cannot control.

"You've just taken five hundred pounds of our money—" he said.

"For the impoverished German aristocracy," said Von Steineveldt, "and I assure it will be well spent."

"You have accepted the Order of the Golden Adder—"

"In return for services which you hoped I would render to your country. Is not that so, Count Casimir? Well, I have rendered them before you asked me. Three hours ago your friend Lord Norheys left this room entirely free to go where he chose and do what he liked."

"I don't believe you," said Casimir. "If you will inquire at his hotel," said Von Steineveldt, "for Miss Temple's hotel— But I keep forgetting. You said she was not in Berlin. Or perhaps he has taken the princess out to luncheon somewhere. Or he may be making arrangements for his journey to Lystria. You will find him somewhere no doubt if you look for him. He is certainly at liberty."

Casimir rose from his chair and crossed the room.

"I don't know what you expect to gain," he said angrily, "by treating the king and myself as you have; but if you think that after this the Lystrians will ever accept you as a king, you are very badly mistaken."

He opened the door as he spoke. When he had finished speaking he passed through it and slammed it violently behind him.

I have no doubt that Von Steineveldt smiled. He probably chuckled when Casimir left him. The mistake about Tommy's identity was sure to be discovered sooner or later. When it was discovered every one concerned would feel so foolish that there would be no further talk about an English candidate for the throne of Lystria. Once Lord Norheys was out of the way, Von Steineveldt's own chances would be greatly improved.

Drink Water If Kidneys Bother

Take a Tablespoonful of Salts If Back Pains or Bladder is Irritated

Flush your kidneys by drinking a quart of water each day, also take salts occasionally, says a noted authority, who tells us that too much rich food forms acids which almost paralyze the kidneys in their efforts to expel it from the blood. They become sluggish and weaken; then you may suffer with a dull misery in the kidney region, sharp pains in the back or sick headache, dizziness, your stomach sour, tongue is coated; and when the weather is bad you have rheumatic twinges. The urine gets cloudy, full of sediment, the channels often get sore and irritated, obliging you to seek relief two or three times during the night.

To help neutralize these irritating acids; to help cleanse the kidneys and flush off the body's urinous waste, get four ounces of Jad Salts from any pharmacy here. Take a tablespoonful in a glass of water before breakfast for a few days, and your kidneys may then act fine. This famous salt is made from the acid of grapes and lemon juice, combined with lithia, and has been used for years to help flush and stimulate sluggish kidneys; also to neutralize the acids in the system so they no longer irritate, thus often relieving bladder weakness.

Jad Salts is inexpensive; can not injure and makes a delightful effervescent lithia water drink. Be all means have your physician examine your kidneys at least twice a year.

EASY TO DARKEN YOUR GRAY HAIR

You Can Bring Back Color and Lustre With Sage Tea and Sulphur

When you darken your hair with Sage Tea and Sulphur, no one can tell, because it's done so naturally, so evenly. Preparing this mixture, though, at home is messy and troublesome. At little cost you can buy at any drug store the ready-to-use preparation, improved by the addition of other ingredients called "Weyth's Sage and Sulphur Compound." You just dampen a sponge or soft brush with it and draw this through your hair, taking one small strand at a time. By morning all gray hair disappears, and, after another application or two, your hair becomes beautifully darkened, glossy and luxuriant.

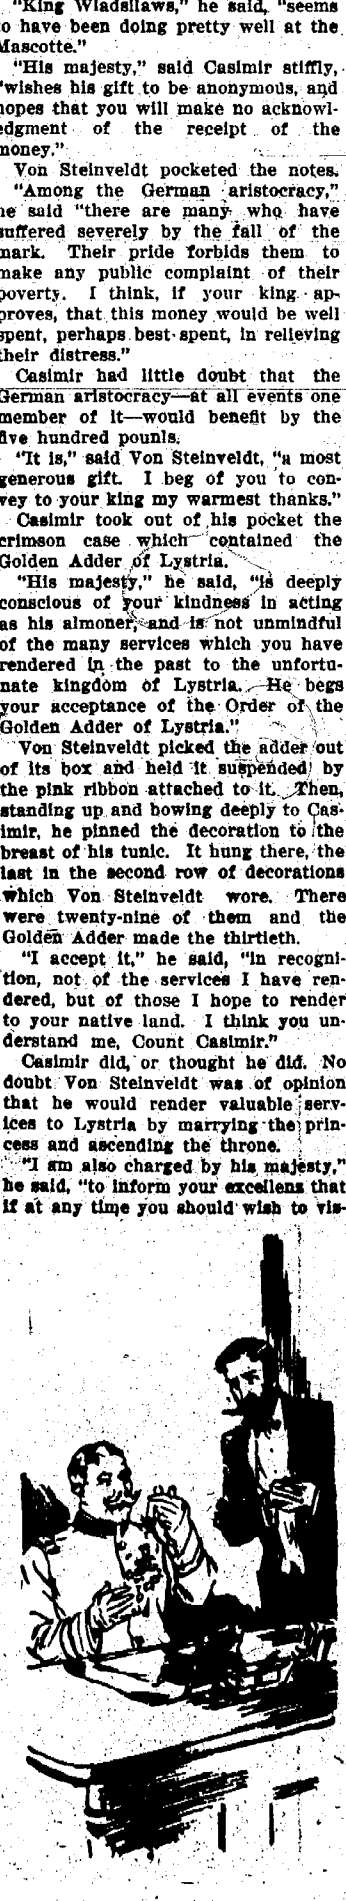

Gray, faded hair, though no disgrace, is a sign of old age, and as we all desire a youthful and attractive appearance, get busy at once with Weyth's Sage and Sulphur Compound and look years younger.

Trimming Finds Placement at Tip-Top of the Crown

The idea of posing the trimming at the very tip-top of the crown brings with it a tip-top of style which is most charming. We were rather skeptical when the mode proposed at the beginning of the season that we position our bouquets of violets, roses and other posies on the very summit of the crown. Now that most of our chapeaux, especially the now-so-popular small hats, are trimmed just that way, we are finding out how perfectly charming these top effects are.

The rule of fashion which pertains to the placement of flowers pertains to ribbon bows as well. They flaunt their perky loops from the very pinnacle of the crown throughout spring millinery with the sprightly grace of a butterfly poised on the petal of a flower.

The two sunny little top-trimmed models in the picture are proof positive that the idea is very fetching. In regard to ribbons, the Parisian vogue is to match the color of the ribbon to the hat, especially if the hat be felt.
