Loot Found of Bank Robbery

Hold Up at Elk Rapids Last Summer Seems Near Solution.

The daylight holdup last July 20 of the Elk Rapids State bank, Elk Rapids, in which a small amount of cash and between $35,000 and $40,000 in negotiable bonds formed the loot of two armed men who made their escape in an automobile, is believed to have been solved, according to dispatches from Grand Rapids and California.

A list of securities found on the person of Harry Burke 25, when he was arrested recently in Los Angeles, Calif., for participating in a large postal robbery on the coast, has been received by Sheriff Fred Kamferbeck, of Ottawa county, and seems to indicate that Burke either was one of the Elk Rapids bandits or received the bonds from the ones who actually committed the robbery.

Burke, alias Harry Brackett, is said to be a pal of George J. Shipley, 35, who now is serving a life term in the state prison at Jackson for the $3,500 robbery, May 29, 1925, of the Berlin State bank at Marne. Burke is alleged to have aided Shipley in the holdup. Yesterday's turn of affairs also may involve Shipley in the Elk Rapids robbery.

Edward Durkee, cashier of the Elk Rapids bank in a telephone conversation Saturday night asserted that while the list of bonds stolen from his bank was locked up in his office for the week end, he was reasonably sure that most of the securities found in Burke's possession were taken from the vault after he and his assistant had been herded into an ante-room at pistol point.

St. Johns—By agreeing to mortgage her home and repay the $978.96 embezzled by her daughter, Evelyn, former deputy county clerk, Mrs. John Matteson has saved the daughter from a term in prison. Evelyn was placed on probation for two years when she pleaded guilty in Circuit Court to the theft of county funds.

Monroe—Elizabeth H. Hanley, New Cork city, pageant director of the Playground and Recreation Association of America, has arrived here and has begun intensive work on the historic pageant to be given here June 23-24, along the banks of Plum creek. About 1500 persons from Monroe city and county will take part.

Flint—Sitting on a railroad track with his head in his hands probably will cost James Moran, 45 years old, his life. He was removed to a hospital where attendants said he had little chance to recover. The fact that Moran was sitting on the track near a curve prevented the engineer from seeing him in time to stop the train.

Lansing—Authority to incorporate in Michigan with a capital stock of $1,000,000 has been granted the Detroit River Subways company by the state public utilities commission. The company plans to build two double-tube tunnels for vehicular and train passage between Detroit and Windsor at the outset and add more tubes as traffic increases.

Owosso—Social activities are becoming so numerous in many homes over the week-end that grade and high school students are not obtaining the rest they need. E. A. Courmyer, Owosso High School principal, told the Emerson Parent-Teachers' association. As a result, he said, children come to school on Monday unfit to do good work and their standings suffer.

Saginaw—Acting on the resolution of Commissioner George Crabbe, the city council has directed the Saginaw Prospecting company to sink another oil well in the Delindorfer woods which the company has under lease for development from the city. The city has been receiving royalty from the company's first well which was sunk in the Delindorfer woods.

Luther—High school girls pulled the hand bar of an old-fashioned fire pump and high school boys helped form a bucket brigade to save buildings east of Main street when the destroyed four structures here May 17, with a loss of several thousand dollars. Harry Brant, superintendent of the Luther Agricultural school deferred calling classes to permit students to help fight the fire.

Marshall—Mrs. Elizabeth Swick, an inmate of Dulcinea home, an institution for aged women, celebrated her ninety-eighth birthday anniversary recently. The other 16 inmates at the home were astonished when Miss Jane Winn entered the room. She fell and broke her hip, but after 18 months was able to get about. Three years ago she fell as she was entering the library at the home, injuring her chest.

New Auto Ferry For Charlevoix County

(From Charlevoix Sentinel)

The John Bros. Boiler Works in Ferrysburg are building a steel automobile ferry for the Charlevoix county road commission completion of the ship being assured within a very short time. Steamboat Inspector has already gone over the craft.

The ferry which is to be of less than 100 tons in order that its operation will not come under the seaman's act, will be driven with two engines built at Three Rivers, Wis. Propellers are to be at both ends of the craft so that she will be very easily navigated in close quarters. The boat is of shallow draft and will have four automobile tracks aboard.

The new ferry will be operated on Pine Lake, where recent heavy increases in auto traffic have rendered the old wooden ferry almost obsolete. Pine Lake is one of the large inland lakes of the north being about 14 miles long.—Grand Haven Tribune.

Captain B. J. Gellick, government inspector of hulls for this district who resides at Grand Haven, informs us that he has on various occasions visited the Johnson Bros. plant and observed the workmanship, progress made and material used in the construction of the ferry above referred to and that everything pertaining to the craft including workmanship is first class and that when placed in commission the same in-so-far as the hull is concerned will stand for all time if properly cared for. He also stated that this job was nearing completion and that it will soon be ready for delivery. This particular job calls for a hull 50 feet in length 30 feet in breadth but does not call for tracks as mentioned in the above article nor will same be supplied as they would be both expensive and useless.

Captain Gellick is favorably impressed with the appearance, style and general utility conveniences connected with the new ferry and positive that when placed in service that the general public will be pleased with its performance on the route for which it is intended.

Ferguson--Dow

James B. Ferguson, of Muskegon and Miss Alice I. Dow, of East Jordan, were married at the Presbyterian Church Sunday afternoon, May 23, by the pastor Rev. C. W. Sidebotham. Mr. Ferguson was employed as chemist with the East Jordan Chemical Company for about three years, leaving for Muskegon last fall, to accept a promotion in the chemical profession. Mrs. Ferguson had been bookkeeper for the East Jordan Chemical Co. for about three years. Mr. and Mrs. Ferguson have a host of friends in Charlevoix County whose best wishes will follow them to their new home in Muskegon.

Pontiac—Young business men from Saginaw, Flint and Jackson held a joint session here May 17, with the Pontiac Junior Chamber of Commerce, for the purpose of drafting by-laws and a constitution for a state organization of the junior bodies. A dinner was tendered the visiting delegates at the Board of Commerce. Plans include formation of a temporary executive committee to act upon the by-laws and constitution.

Ann Arbor—Word has been received here of the death in Sanakov, Bulgaria, of pneumonia, of Miss Inez Abbott, a graduate of the university in 1895. She had been principal of a girls' school there for 16 years. The school attained international prominence a few years ago because of the capture of Miss Ellen Stone, one of the teachers, by bandits. Miss Abbott is survived by a sister, Mrs. Stella Gunn, living near Lansing.

Kalamazoo—Iron River high school won the state championship in the sixth annual short-hand and typewriting contest conducted by the Michigan State Teachers' association at Western Normal May 14, scoring 50 points. The star of the 200 contestants was Dolores Christensen, 16-year-old Iron River high school student who set a new state record in the accuracy typewriting event, writing 75.29 words per minute with only five errors.

Kalamazoo—Kalamazoo fishermen do not favor advancing the opening day of the bass season from June 16 to July 1, this year, as proposed by John Baird, conservation director. Bass have been bedding in the lakes of this section of the state for a period of several weeks. The spawning season will be normal in this district this year, and fishermen here feel that they should not be penalized because of the unusual condition that has delayed spawning in the lakes of the northern section of the state.

The Thinning Ranks

Canning Factory Under Way

Ground Broken and Building Operations Commenced.

East Jordan's new industry—the East Jordan Canning Factory—started building construction operations the past week.

Owing to the delays in getting started and the necessary machinery required, we are informed that Cherries only will be handled this year. Contracts have already been secured from our largest growers of this fruit, that assures our embryo plant a busy season, and the farmer with only a few bearing trees a market for his produce.

A. J. Suffern Goes To Greenville

A. J. Suffern, Cashier of the State Bank of East Jordan for the past ten years, has accepted a position with the Greenville (Mich.) State Bank as Cashier and Trust Officer and plans to take up his new duties about June 10th.

Mr. Suffern has proved himself an able bank official and the Greenville bank is to be congratulated on securing his services. Mr. Suffern grew to manhood in East Jordan, and later on was identified with various business industries, among which was that of owner and publisher of The Charlevoix County Herald some 25 years ago. During the ten years he has served with the State Bank of East Jordan, the bank has grown each year both in number of depositors and total deposits. Mr. Suffern's successor here has not, as yet, been appointed. Mrs. Suffern plans to join her husband at Greenville at a later date. Their leaving East Jordan is a matter of sincere regret among their many friends in our local social and business activities.

Meguzee O. E. S. At Mancelona

At the annual meeting of Meguzee Ass'n, Order Eastern Star, held at Mancelona last week, the following officers were elected for ensuing year:— President, Mrs. Glendora Williams of Mancelona.

First Vice President, Nellie Van Avery of Petoskey. Second Vice President, Hayward E. Noteware of Bellaire. Secretary, Gertrude Ellis of Petoskey. Treasurer, Stella Voorheis of Harbor Springs. Marshal, Maa Brooks of Mancelona. Chaplain, Esca Rosenbrook of Elk Rapids.

Among those who attended from East Jordan were Mr. and Mrs. W. H. Sloan, Mr. and Mrs. George Sumner, Mr. and Mrs. A. K. Hill, Dr. and Mrs. G. W. Bechtold, Mrs. J. J. Mikula, Mrs. J. D. Frost, Mrs. Will Shepard, Mrs. C. H. Pray, Mrs. A. Danto, Mrs. H. Rosenthal, Mrs. G. W. Kitsman.

Belief

I trust the living God, maker of heaven and of earth, and of all things creatures visible and invisible. I trust in the kindness of His work. I will strive to love Him, keep His law and see His work while I live. I trust in the nobleness of human nature, in the majority of its faculties, the fullness of its mercy, and the joy of its love. And I will strive to love my neighbor as myself, and even when I cannot will act as I did. I will not hurt or kill any living creature needlessly, nor destroy any beautiful thing, but will strive to comfort all gentle life and guard and perfect all natural beauty on earth. I will strive to raise my own body and soul into all the higher powers of duty and happiness, not in rivalry or contention with other, but for the help, delight and honor of others, and for the joy and peace of my own life.—John Ruskin.

Peculiar Bark

Lace bark is the inner bark of several species of trees, the best known being the lace bark tree of Jamaica. It is readily detached in sheets or layers like birch bark, each layer being a delicate network of fiber.

Chloride Will Be Applied To Main Highways

That dust layer is to be applied to all main trunk lines in this district is the good word brought by A. L. Burridge, division engineer, from a meeting of highway officials at Lansing, to Cadillac last week.

M-13 is to have an application of calcium chloride about June 15 for its entire length. Previously only the portion south of Cadillac has been treated. M-22 is on the program and probably M-55 will receive some, making the trunk lines in this vicinity free from dust.

M-10, M-11 and M-14 are also on the list.

These highways will receive either calcium chloride or tar treatment so that tourists won't have to "eat dust all summer" as Mr. Burridge put it.

The chloride will be applied twice this season, the first time about June 15 and then again before Labor Day. This treatment costs about $250 a mile, as it takes about eight tons for both applications. Sometimes five tons are put on the first time and the other three applied the second time.

The money is well spent in the opinion of the road engineer as in this way everyone gets some benefit from it. Residents and tourists share alike in the benefits from the dustless roads.

Mrs. S. A. Correll Passes Away

(From Charlevoix Sentinel) The death of Mrs. S. A. Correll which occurred at 10 o'clock Sunday evening, May 16, 1926, after a brief illness, came as a surprise to her many friends who had not realized her critical condition.

Mrs. Correll's maiden name was Isora Card. She was born Dec. 27, 1857 in Ashtabula county, Ohio. On Dec. 21, 1876 she became wife of Servetus A. Correll and the early years of this married life was spent in Warren, Ohio.

They were among the pioneer settlers of northern Michigan, living near Clarion in the vicinity of Walloon Lake, known in those days as Bear Lake. Mrs. Correll was an active member of the Methodist church at Clarion, in those days a thriving lumber town on the G. R. & I. R. R. She was choir leader, class leader and Sunday school worker; a good friend and neighbor, always helpful in time of sickness and trouble, as well as a devoted wife, mother and home-maker.

About thirteen years ago the family moved to Charlevoix, where Mrs. Correll continued her various activities until prevented by failing health, but she has always maintained her interest in the work in which she was formerly engaged.

Beside her husband she is survived by a brother, Orville Card, of Bronson, and three children, Lee F. Correll, of Lawrence, Long Island, Mrs. Harry Belding, of Muskegon and Miss Nettie Correll of this city; also one grandchild Martha Isora Belding.

The funeral services were conducted from the family residence on Alice St. at two o'clock Tuesday afternoon, Dr. Herman Burns, D. D., of the Baptist church, officiating. The interment was at Greenwood cemetery, Petoskey.

Editorial Outing

Thursday, Friday and Saturday, June 10, 11, 12, has been set aside for the annual summer outing of the Michigan Press Association, and Harbor Springs will be the destination of the weekly scribes of the state where for three days they will revel in the luxuries of the playground of the north country as guests of the Harbor Springs Chamber of Commerce and the representatives of her summer resort facilities.

For three whole days and nights pen-pushers from the land of the Wolverine will put on all the earmarks of those to the manor born and cavort on green clad golf courses, eat from sumptuous laden banquet tables, dance the Charleston if they wish on polished oaken floors and ride on the bosom of the inland seas, all at the expense of a hospitable people who are anxious for us to visit them and view the wonders of that great garden spot of all the universe.

AIR CASTLES

By THOMAS ARKLE CLARK
Dean of Men, University of Illinois.

BRAYTON was brought up upon a New England farm. Until he was grown he was never out of the country in which he was born, and he spent his time in the regular routine of farm life—milking the cows, hoeing potatoes, pitching hay and harvesting grain.

For 35 years Brayton has practiced the medical profession in a large Middle West city. He has been a cliff dweller looking down upon the horges of human beings who, like insects, crowd the streets below.

He launched into great detail as to his project, and I, having myself obtained my start in life upon a farm, listened with more or less intelligence to his discussion of wool and lamb chops, of horned and the hornless varieties of sheep, of the various details of leading lambs to the slaughter with a maximum of profit.

Now there is, in fact, very little possibility of Brayton's ever going into the sheep business and still less of his making a success of it if he did. He'll practice medicine, as he should, until he dies, or at least until he is incapacitated for doing any serious work.

As for myself, I've never gone in much for sheep, but secretly I plan, when I am older, to have a little plot of land outside of town where I can have a garden and raise flowers, and fresh vegetables and fruit and where there will be chickens and—I blush to admit it—a pig. I shall have no sheep and I don't care for cows. I had to do the milking when I was a boy.

BRITAIN'S PLAN TO END MINE DISPUTE

Subsidy of 3,000,000 Pounds; Financial Aid to Extra Miners; Provide Wage Board.

London.—The process of liquidating the British general strike, brought to an end a few days ago, has proceeded rapidly and the country's industrial life once more is headed toward normal conditions.

The government offers to have bills passed at the present session of parliament embodying the changes in the coal industry recommended by the Samuel commission. It also offers a further subsidy to the industry of approximately £3,000,000, in addition to giving financial assistance to superfluous miners displaced from the pits.

These offers, however, are conditional on both sides accepting all the terms of the government memorandum. The miners will be obliged to accept a reduction in minimum wages, the cut to be determined later. The government's memorandum provides for a national board of three members for the owners and three representatives of the miners, with a neutral chairman, to frame a national wages and hours agreement governing the principles on which general wage rates should be ascertained in each district.

This board shall also decide the minimum percentage on the basis of taking into consideration the state and the prospects of the coal industry, the reorganization proposals of the commission and "other relevant factors." In a letter to Evans Williams, negotiator for the owners, and Herbert Smith, president of the miners, Prime Minister Baldwin outlined the government proposals.

The government also proposes that the national wages board shall issue its decision within three weeks, and in the event of a disagreement, the independent chairman shall have the final decision. The wages of the poorer paid miners, however, are safeguarded by a provision that men getting 45 shillings weekly or less shall not have their pay reduced. A loophole is left for the miners to accept longer hours if they so desire, by a provision that if the parties agree on a modification of hours the government at once will propose the necessary legislation and help its passage.

The terms of the railway settlement provide that the strikers be reinstated as soon as traffic offers and work can be found for them, the principle of seniority being followed. The unions admitted that in the general strike they committed a wrongful act against the companies and agree that the companies now will not surrender the legal right to claim for damages arising from the strike. The unions further undertake (1) not to strike again without previous negotiations with the companies; (2) not to support members taking unauthorized action; (3) not again to encourage supervisory employees to take part in a strike.

Soviet Engineers to Inspect U. S. Plants

Montreal, Que.—A commission of four hydroelectric engineers from the Soviet union will tour the American continent for three months in preparation for the construction, on the Dnieper river in the Ukraine, of the largest hydroelectric development in Europe, gathering technical material. They will study the largest Canadian and American power plants from coast to coast.

The Dnieper project, which is a link in the huge superpower development planned by the Soviet government and includes large inland navigation and irrigation plans as well, will cost $75,000,000. The power plant will have an initial capacity of 210,000 kilowatts and an ultimate capacity of 455,000 kilowatts.

Americans Plan to Win Flight Across Atlantic

Newark, N. J.—Announcement is made that the Aeronautical Club of New Jersey would attempt to finance a nonstop airplane flight from Newark to Paris some time before June 20. The early start is proposed in an endeavor to beat Rene Fonck, French ace, who is expected to take off from Mitchell field on that date in an effort to win the Raymond Orteig prize of $25,000 offered in 1924 for the first nonstop flight from continent to continent.

Lieut. Commander Noel Davis, United States naval reserves, and Lieut. Frank H. Conant, United States navy, are preparing a three-engine plane for the proposed flight.

Anoka, Minn.—Clarence Eaton of Des Moines, Iowa, was found guilty of robbing the Anoka National bank and sentenced to life imprisonment in the state prison at Stillwater.

STATE NEWS IN BRIEF

Lowell—Distracted because of the last start in spring work on his large farm, Alfred Glaser, 50 years old, residing six miles north of here, shot and instantly killed himself.

Owosso—Hammed by the tongue of a wagon when a team of horses she was holding became frightened and ran away, Mrs. Nick Olejas, 36 years old, mother of six children, is in the Memorial Hospital here, believed to be fatally injured. The accident occurred while her husband was loading hogs.

Albion—In order to test the city ordinance that forbids the maintaining of junk yards within residential areas, City Manager Leon A. Seaps has brought complaint against Stanley Demske, who has a junk business at 509 Austin avenue. Demske asked for a hearing and he was released without bail.

Flint—Sitting on a railroad track with his head in his hands probably will cost James Moran, 45 years old, his life. He was removed to a hospital where attendants said he had little chance to recover. The fact that Moran was sitting on the track near a curve prevented the engineer seeing him in time to stop the train.

Ionla—Although a 1,700 pound harrow passed over his body, Raymond Cochran, small son of Ezra Cochran, a farmer, is not believed to have been injured fatally. The boy fell under the machine which had to be driven completely over his body before he could be released. Twelve stitches were taken in closing a wound on his head.

Traverse City—A parade led by the blossom queen to be selected by popular vote will open the annual three-day blossom festival of the Grand Traverse cherry region to be conducted here beginning May 28. One hundred floats, several bands and nearly 2,000 school children are expected to participate in the parade. Jay P. Smith is general chairman.

Monroe—About 700 crippled children were examined at the clinic sponsored by the Monroe Rotary club, held May 12 at the Masonic Temple. The work was done by Dr. Carl G. Bagley, orthopedic surgeon at the University hospital at Ann Arbor. He was assisted by physicians of this city and country, and Miss Alberta Chase, secretary of the society for crippled children.

Menominee—The cost of a new survey of the land involved in the cause of further dispute in the Michigan-Wisconsin boundary case. Wisconsin urges that the expense be borne equally by the two states. Attorney-General Daugherty states, however, that inasmuch as Wisconsin has won it is up to her to survey her own territory and stand the whole expense.

Kalamazoo—Serious injury to herself and her son and the wrecking of her new automobile resulted from Mrs. Isaac Hoebeke's attempt to learn to drive. Losing control of the car as it swerved to the side of the street, Mrs. Hoebeke stepped on the accelerator, in the belief that she was applying the brakes and the machine crashed into a telephone pole which snapped off at the base and fell across the automobile.

East Lansing—In the presence of 16 of the oldest living alumni, 2,300 students and presidents of other Michigan colleges and normal schools, the 69th anniversary of the founding of Michigan's state college was celebrated in the college gym May 13. Charles W. Garfield, Grand Rapids, a graduate of the class of 1870, spoke on "Looking both ways," telling of the early days when the college was little more than three buildings set in a tract of burned out land, with 62 students.

Flint—One of the first air meets to be held in the state will be in Flint, June 4, 5 and 6, under the auspices of the Flint Chamber of Commerce. The meet will be sanctioned by the National Aeronautic Association and any records made will be official. Commercial and military planes will compete for various purses to be offered as prizes, one of which includes a race to Flint from the home town or field of the pilot. It is also planned to furnish contestants with free gasoline and oil.

Port Huron—The Pere Marquette Railway has been made defendant in a suit for $2,500 brought in the St. Clair County Circuit Court by Edward P. Gibbons for damage alleged done to his farm property, north of Blaine, in April, 1925. According to Gibbons declaration and to testimony given before Judge Lay, sparks from a locomotive set fire to hay on the railroad right-of-way, the flames being communicated to hay on the Gibbons' farm. The farmhouse and barns burned to the ground.

Lansing—At the governor's instance the state administrative board has authorized the building of a new $40,000 structure to house agriculture displays on the state fair grounds. The state auditor's records show that there is only about $21,000 in the fund out of which the new building expense is to be met and that no additional monies for the fund are in sight until the next fiscal year appropriation, which is principally for state fair premiums, is received, unless the operation of the fair this fall shows a profit.

Grand Rapids—Col. John H. Schoulen, commander of the 136th Infantry, has received his appointment as brigadier-general in charge of the Fifty-third Infantry Brigade of the Michigan National Guards. The official order bears the signature of Gov. Alex J. Groesbeck.

Grand Rapids—James A. Garfield, 75 years old, a nephew of former President Garfield, died May 6 at his home in Jamestown Township, Ottawa County, where he had resided since 1867. He was born in Ohio and was the son of Thomas Garfield, oldest brother of the President.

Lansing—Frank F. Rogers, state highway commissioner has instructed county road commissioners that all one-half road restrictions on roads in lower Michigan have been removed and that all motor vehicles on all roads in the lower peninsula be permitted the full legal load.

Grand Rapids—Surgeons at Butterworth Hospital are attempting to re-bull the palate of Bernard Oosting, 7-year-old son of John Oosting, injured in a peculiar accident. The boy, with an all-day sucker in his mouth, was playing ball when a batted ball struck his mouth and drove the stick into his palate.

Marshall—The graduating class of the high school, 62 in number, has selected Rev. W. S. Carpenter to give the baccalaureate address June 6. Frederick Keicher, son of Rev. and Mrs. B. F. Keicher, of Trinity church, was chosen valedictorian and Loretta May Townsend, daughter of Mr. and Mrs. Miles Townsend, salutatorian.

Birmingham—The first public health clinic in Birmingham opened May 11, at the Birmingham community house, under auspices of the Oakland county branch of the Tuberculosis association and the Birmingham Civic league. Dr. A. W. Newitt, Birmingham health officer, and Dr. A. B. Wickham, of Detroit, were in charge.

Ludington—Although an airplane in which they were riding took a 500 foot nose dive, burying its nose in 18 inches of sand, Harry and Roy Tropaner, brothers, escaped death. Roy was taking his first flying lesson. The men were unconscious when taken from the wreckage of the plane but were quickly revived and are not believed to have been seriously injured.

Muskegon—Plans to develop Lake Harbor, a 217-acre tract on Lake Michigan, two miles south of Muskegon, have been announced by Paul Rader, noted Chicago evangelist, who recently completed the purchase of the tract. The consideration is understood to have been around $250,000. Rader terms Lake Harbor one of the beauty spots of the nation, and plans to develop it fully.

Owosso—Dr. Purviss, Willson, 56 years old, prominent Owosso physician, is dead at his home here, a martyr to his profession. During an epidemic of influenza two years ago Dr. Willson worked day and night, finally contracting the contagion. After apparently recovering he refused to take a needed rest and was again stricken. Spinal trouble developed and he had been ill since.

Jackson—Fire of undetermined origin destroyed the large plant of the American Vitrifed Products Co., here the night of May 12, with a loss of approximately $200,000, according to estimates of officials of the company. Firemen were endangered as was traffic on the Grand Rapids division of the New York Central railroad when the west walls of the building fell over the main line tracks.

Flint—Richard Carter, 20 years old, of Holly, has been sentenced by Judge James S. Parker, in the Genesee County Circuit court to serve six months to five years in the Michigan State prison at Jackson, for the death of Marjorie Reiddell, 6 years old, of Fenton, who was struck and killed by an automobile driven by Carter as she left a Fenton school last November. Carter was found guilty by a jury on a charge of negligent homicide.

East Lansing—Prof. O. E. Reed, head of the dairy department at Michigan State College, has been appointed chairman of a committee to arrange for a meeting of the various Michigan organizations which are interested in the National Dairy Show to be held in Detroit October 6 to 13. The experiments being carried on by the dairy department in finding the necessary rations for the dairy cow will be presented at the Detroit show, Prof. Reed declared.

Ann Arbor—Two members of the senior literary class and a junior literary student at the University of Michigan have had their college careers curtailed as the result of an expulsion order passed by the university committee on discipline. The official bulletin in the Michigan Daily states that expulsion followed "long continued conduct of a nature clearly detrimental to the welfare of the student body and to the best interests of the University of Michigan, as a whole."

Battle Creek—Married last October 26 at Michigan City, Ind., Dorothea Lohrke, deputy county clerk, only recently told her friends about it. The deputy clerk said she was wedded to Lieut. R. N. Frith, of Springfield, Ill., while en route to the Michigan-Illinois foot ball game at Urbana. The announcement of the marriage was made as the result of pressure brought to bear by an attorney in a civil damage suit who declares certain papers signed by the deputy, who used her maiden name, were made illegal as the result.

If Kidneys Act Bad Take Salts

Says Backache Often Means You Have Not Been Drinking Enough Water

When you wake up with backache and dull misery in the kidney region it may mean you have been eating foods which create acids, says a well-known authority. An excess of such acids overworks the kidneys in their effort to filter it from the blood and they become sort of paralyzed and loggy. When your kidneys get sluggish and clog you must relieve them, like you relieve your bowels, removing all the body's urinous waste, else you have backache, sick headache, dizzy spells; your stomach aches, tongue is coated and when the weather is bad you have rheumatic twinges. The urine is cloudy, full of sediment, channels often get sear, water scalds and you are obliged to seek relief two or three times during the night.

Either consult a good, reliable physician at once or get from your pharmacist about four ounces of Jad Salts; take a tablespoonful in a glass of water before breakfast for a few days and your kidneys may then act fine. This famous salts is made from the acid of grapes and lemon juice, combined with lithia, and has been used for years to help clean and stimulate sluggish kidneys, also to neutralize acids in the system, so they no longer irritate, thus often relieving bladder weakness.

Jad Salts is inexpensive, can not injure and makes a delightful, effervescent lithia-water drink. Drink lots of soft water. By all means have your physician examine your kidneys at least twice a year.

SULPHUR CLEARS ROUGH, RED SKIN

Face, Neck and Arms Easily Made Smooth, Says Specialist

Any breaking out of the skin, even fiery, itching eczema, can be quickly overcome by applying a little Mentho-Sulphur, declares a noted skin specialist. Because of its germ destroying properties, this sulphur preparation begins at once to soothe irritated skin and heal eruptions such as rash, pimples and ring worm.

It seldom fails to remove the torment and disfigurement, and you do not have to wait for relief from embarrassment. Improvement quickly shows. Sufferers from skin trouble should obtain a small jar of Rowles Mentho-Sulphur from any good druggist and use it like cold cream.

PORTO BELLO GOLD

"If they seek terms, they are uncertain of success," he said. "Send the boy away."

"But if they destroy the James?" "First they will attack—and after that we will deal with the problem of protecting the ship."

And as I hesitated— "Be so good as to answer him at once, Robert, or I shall have him shot as he stands."

"Go back, Darby," I called. "Captain Murray will have none of your offer."

"God save us!" he exclaimed involuntarily. "I'm thinkin' that will be the death of many a tall feller, Master Bob. Well, good luck to ye and to Master Peter and the elegant young maid. If we all come out safe—"

My great-uncle leaped upon a tree-stump and fired a pistol over Darby's head. The boy stood motionless a moment, mouth agape.

"The old devil!" he howled then, and fled down the hillside for all he was worth.

Flint did not wait to receive Murray's verbal answer; that pistol-shot was sufficiently explicit. Three musket-shots echoed it from the foot of the hill, and at once there was a renewed hustle of men on the fo'c'sle of the Walrus. A puff of white smoke blew up from the deck, and the crack of a long twelve started myriads of sea-birds from the seaward marshes.

The shot sang over us and crashed into the forest beyond. The other chase-gun howled a shot into the enclosure, where it simply buried itself in the soft sand.

The carronades were unable to reach the blockhouse with their heavier shot, and the Long Toms lacked the power to penetrate the green wood of the walls. Most of the round-shot plumped into the sand. Three posts of the stockade were knocked over and promptly set up again. That was all. When darkness intervened and the firing ceased we felt that we had been the winners of the first bout of the struggle.

In the meantime we had not seen a trace of the landing-party from the Walrus, and as the night shut down we all peered curiously through the posts of the stockade, expecting momentarily to discover a rush of crouching figures. But hour after hour passed without a sound to disturb the silence, and even Murray, whose nerves were of forged steel, became uneasy as he up-ended the hour-glass for the third time since sunset and decided to inspect the circuit of the defenses.

"There is another hand than Flint's behind these Fabian tactics," he observed. "Perhaps John Silver's. 'Tis a clever rogue, and a cunning. We cannot be too vigilant."

Coupeau joined us on the southern arc of the stockade. On the north side we came to a pit which was empty, and in the next one to it a man lay on his stomach as if asleep.

Murray prodded him with his sword, and the fellow groaned, but did not stir.

"What is the matter with this man?" demanded my great-uncle.

"Please, zur, 'tis Job Pytchens," answered the man next beyond.

"I asked what was the matter with him, said my great-uncle coldly.

"He'm wur one o' they as had a hun'erd 'n' fifty lashes, cap'n, zur."

I shuddered. My great-uncle took snuff.

"And who is gone from this vacant place?" he pressed.

"Tom Morpew, zur. He'm dead, zur."

"Was he shot?"

"No, zur, cap'n. He's had a hun'erd 'n' fifty lashes, too."

"Where is he?"

"Please, zur, us buried him," the man answered.

"Where?"

The man waved an arm vaguely over the sandy top of the hill.

"Ah! Well, you will leave unburied the next man who dies, be he Job or another—else I shall have the cat administered to all of you who have abandoned your posts without permission."

"Is, zur. Thank 'ee, zur," replied the man—but there was no thanks in his snarling voice; his face was masked by the darkness.

"Stap me," said Murray, turning away, "but these rascals are becoming as slack as Flint's tattletails!"

Across the clearing a musket exploded. Then another and another. A volley crackled from the lower slopes, and our men replied. A hoarse yelling underscored the firing.

"At last!"

Murray's voice vibrated with exultation.

"Now we shall scoop the rogues like so many grains of sand. The fools! A night attack is fatal with undisciplined men."

A great roar of firing burst out upon the northern front of the stockade, and mingled with the reports of the muskets were shouts of:

"Down arms, Jameses!"

"Step aside, James lads!"

"All we want is old Murray!"

And a walling voice cried over and over again—

"Here be Tom Morpew 'n' his bloody back, mates!"

The firing sputtered and dwindled and was succeeded by a prodigious scuffling and clatter of cutlasses.

"We'll do 'ee no harm, Jameses!"

And now I recognized Silver's voice.

"Strike arms, Jameses!"

Three men, one of them with a broken arm, raced up to us.

"Long John's in," sobbed one.

"Tom Morpew let 'em in," panted a second.

"Excellently planned," drawled Murray.

I heard the click of his snuffbox.

"Yet observe how fate hath tricked our opponents," he went on. "They timed their second attack to catch me on the southern side of the stockade, whereas it happens I am strategically disposed to exploit the disorder which attends their success. I think we shall teach the clever Master Silver a lesson."

"Yes, if your men are loyal," I said angrily.

"Any crew are loyal in victory, Robert," he answered.

"Ja," spoke Peter, "but you better not let dot feller talk about his bloody back."

"You are squeamish, it seems, Peter," murmured my great-uncle. "Well, I shall even seek to humor you. Coupeau!"

His voice hardened.

"Oul, m'sieu."

The gunner stepped from the huddled ranks of the afterguard.

"We attack."

But indeed the attack was made upon us. We had not advanced four paces from the shelter of the blockhouse when fifty of the invaders stormed out of the night, howling and waving their cutlasses. We fired one smashing volley that dropped a fourth of them, and charged. A few pistol-shots met us, but most of the Walrus men had discarded their muskets, preferring to fight sailor-fashion with the cutlass, and they were utterly disheartened by the unexpectedness of the reception we gave them.

Murray's slender dress-sword was a bodkin of death which pricked a path through the densest ranks. On one side of him Peter swung a clubbed musket which shattered heads and limbs at every step. On his other side Coupeau wielded a cutlass with equal effect.

A yellow crescent moon was riding over the treetops, and we halted in the gap the attackers had torn in the stockade to survey our situation by its light. Half-way down the hill a group of the Walrus men rallied and commenced to fire up at us; and Coupeau was for pushing after them, but my great-uncle checked him.

"No, no, Coupeau! Yonder is John Silver, astraddle of the stockade. See, he is helping up another fellow. They have been cut off by our charge, and if you please, we'll deal with them first."

Yonder is John Silver, Astraddle of the Stockade.

I will admit a pang of sympathy for Silver. He was not more than twenty yards from us and by dint of well-nigh incredible efforts, with the other man to boost him, he had succeeded in scaling the stockade and was sitting there, with his one leg dangling inside. When we discovered him he started to swing his leg over the top, evidently intending to abandon his companion. But whether because of something the other man said or because he feared he must injure himself in dropping the eight feet to the ground without anyone to check his fall, he abruptly changed his mind and faced about toward us very resolutely, setting hold of the crutch which hung from his neck by its thong. The man at the foot of the stockade gathered himself together like a coiling serpent and plucked a long knife from his belt. He had been in the shadow until then, but now the moonlight shone over his torso and we recognized him for the blind man, Pew. He had lost his green eye-shade and his pock-marked face was cadaverous in the yellow glow. His eyes were open, and they seemed to smolder dully as they strained at us. His knife glinted in his hand.

"Will you be assisted down and be hanged whole, or must we cut you down, Silver?" hailed Murray.

He, like the rest of us, ignored the blind man. Our attention was fixed upon Silver, his broad face very calm in the moonlight.

"Them there ain't exactly tempting terms, Cap'n Murray, sir," Silver answered temperately. "Couldn't ye be a mite more generous?"

"I am serving you a dish no more highly sauced than that you intended for me," returned my great-uncle dryly.

"Now, sir; now, sir," remonstrated Silver. "How can ye say that? All we done was to try and persuade ye to give us our share o' the treasure—ye havin' eight hundred thousand pound stowed away special, accordin' to your own story. And if we come in by the back door a'ter it, why that was so's we'd hurt ye least."

"You'd argue yourself to a block of ice in hell, Silver," rejoined by great-uncle amusedly. "Throw down that crutch! Drop that knife you, sirrah, Pew—or whatever your name is!"

Sword in hand, he advanced ahead of the rest of us, who were strung out all the way from the gap in the stockade. Coupeau was at his elbow, and Peter and I close behind.

"Come," he adjured them a second time. "I'm in no mood to talk terms, and if you delay 'twill make your end the more painful."

Silver's face went livid in the moonlight.

"Aye," rasped the one-legged man, "ye'll lash us bloody-raw like the lads as let us in tonight."

And as Murray continued to advance, he struck out with his crutch.

"Keep off," he shrieked. "Keep off!" And then: "I can't reach him, Ezra. Let him have it!"

Pew crouched with his knife-hand drawn back.

"Aye, it takes blind Pew to let him have it," he croaked in his hateful voice.

His hand jerked forward. There was a flash in the moonlight, and my great-uncle staggered, the flung knife buried to the hilt in his side.

"I am stabbed," he gasped.

Silver brandished his crutch over his head.

"Pew's stabbed Murray!" he shouted. "Come on, Walruses! Lay off, ye James lads—we'll not harm ye, mates. Treasure for all, and no more tyranny!"

Peter and I caught my great-uncle as he fell. Coupeau jumped at the blind man with a bellow of rage, cutlass raised to strike; but as he came within reach Silver poised his crutch like a spear, leaped over and drove the sharp spike of the ferrule through the gunner's eye into the brain. Coupeau dropped in his tracks.

"I ha' done for Coupeau," Silver shouted again. "Don't make Long John do it all, lads!"

There was such a rush of enemies, such a howl of exultation, as took my breath away.

"Do you hold Murray, Peter," I said. "I'll finish that precious pair."

And I ran in at Pew, albeit more warily than Coupeau; but the blind man—and certes, if he was blind his hearing was so marvelous as to make up for it—retained a clubbed pistol, which was a serviceable weapon at close quarters, and Silver covered him overhead with that deadly crutch. I shouted to the after-guard to shoot them, but our people had not reloaded their pieces, and many were already engaged with the party we had just driven out, who swarmed in again through the same gap. Those of the James' men who were nearest were palpably lukewarm, and Silver, atop of the stockade, perceiving his advantage, thrust his crutch at me and continued trumpeting his rallying cries.

"Murray's a goner, mates! Coupeau's shark-bait! There's only the two Buckskins left. Go easy w' they Jameses. Naught for ye to fight about, James lads! We'll divide square with ye."

Men swirled toward us from all sides of the stockade, the James' crew mingled with the Walrus', and where our people fought at all 'twas faint-heartedly and to no purpose. We were pressed back, and presently were put to it to avoid being surrounded.

"We go to der house, Bob," squeaked Peter. "Der James men don't fight for us no more."

He had Murray's limp body slung over one shoulder and still retained the iron barrel of his musket—the stock had been demolished; but he ran easily beside me through the sand.

We reached the blockhouse alone on the side opposite the door, and circled it cautiously, no little concerned for Moira's safety, for pistols were popping and cutlasses clashing in several directions close at hand. With the moon obscured we could not see a musket's length ahead, and as I turned in toward the black oblong of the doorway I tripped over a corpse.

"'Tis on your own head your death will be, my man," said a cool voice. "I can hear you fine, and if you're not after—"

"Moira!" I exclaimed.

"And is it you, Bob? Oh, blessed saints, but I'm that glad. I thought you were— Is that Peter?"

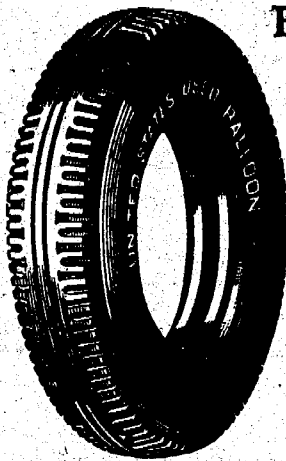

"Ja," said Peter.

shoulder? A dead man? Is it him I shot a few minutes back?"

"'Tis Captain Murray," I answered, making way for Peter.

"Oh, Queen-of-Heaven! Sure, we're in bad case."

"We are," I assented grimly as I followed Peter inside. "Have you a light?"

She took a lantern from under a cloth, and its scanty rays played hide-and-seek with the shadows over the rude log walls and the piles of rum barrels and kegs of hard tack and the clumsy stack of treasure.

Peter laid my great-uncle gently upon the earthen floor—there was no softer bed—and began cutting away the garments from around the hilt of the knife, which was still fixed in his right side.

"And why didn't you go with them?" I asked. She gave me an indignant look.

"And he leaving the two of ye! I am not that kind of friend, Bob."

Peter looked up from his task.

"You got to watch dot door, Bob. And, Moira, you bring me some rum. Maybe Murray gets back his sense before—"

I suddenly found myself unwilling to believe it could be so.

"He can't Peter!"

"Ja," replied the Dutchman patiently. "Pretty soon he goes. He bleeds inside."

I stumbled to the doorway with my head in a whirl. Murray dying? 'Twas incredible! That tremendous personality, so masterful, so aloof, dominating all with whom he came in contact, saltily compounded of wickedness, greatness, wisdom and naive vanity! And explain it how you will, I suddenly discovered an admiration for him which had been growing for months beneath my surface resentment. Up to this moment I had detested him. But I choked now at the thought of his death. Whatever he was, he was no coward. And there was about his end in this sordid, haphazard fashion, stabbed by a blind man in the dark, a redeeming touch of high tragedy. He, whose ambitions had vaulted the stars, to perish by the hand of Pew! And in a moment when apparently he had snatched victory from defeat!

Mechanically I carried chests of gold and silver ingots from the heap of treasure and built a barricade

Beauty Is Stressed in All Negligees

There are negligees—and negligees, many of them useful and substantial, designed to make our hours of leisure comfortable, others flimsy and frivolous, to the end of being picturesque. But, whatever its destiny, women demand that the negligee be pretty—they cannot be entirely comfortable, it seems, in a garment that lacks the quality of prettiness. It is easy to fulfill this call, because nearly all negligees, whether simple or splendid, are cut on the same graceful lines and employ lovely colors and attractive materials, and these materials are mostly inexpensive.

The pretty negligee pictured belongs to the lounging-robe class and may be effectively made in gay-colored rayon fabrics or in printed crepe or quilted satin.

SAGE TEA DANDY TO DARKEN HAIR

It's Grandmother's Recipe to Bring Back Color and Lustre to Hair

You can turn gray, faded hair beautifully dark and lustrous almost overnight if you'll get a bottle of "Wyeth's Sage and Sulphur Compound" at any drug store. Millions of bottles of this old famous Sage Tea Recipe, improved by the addition of other ingredients, are sold annually, say well-known druggists here, because it darkens the hair so naturally and evenly that no one can tell it has been applied.

Those whose hair is turning gray or becoming faded have a surprise awaiting them, because after one or two applications the gray hair vanishes and your locks become luxuriantly dark and beautiful.

This is the age of youth. Gray-haired, unattractive folks aren't wanted around, so get busy with Wyeth's Sage and Sulphur Compound to-night and you'll be delighted with your dark, handsome hair and your youthful appearance within a few days.

WILSON

(Edited by Mrs. O. D. Smith)

A hard freeze last Sunday morning. Miss Esther Shepard was on the sick list a few days last week.

Geo. Jaquays and family spent Sunday at their farm home in Wilson.

Albert Todd is able to be out again after his siege with pneumonia this spring.

Chas. Healey of Peninsula was a visitor at J. S. Sutton's in this place last Sunday.

Miss Faye Martin visited her grand mother, Mrs. Bergman in East Jordan a few days recently.

Wm. Vrondon has been taking treatments of the Chiropractor in East Jordan and is much benefited thereby.

Christobel Sutton, who broke both bones of her arm about two weeks ago, is getting along very nicely at present.

Afton school attended Township Day 'Fete' at Deer Lake last Thursday, and carried off a large share of the prizes.

The pupils of Afton school celebrated the last day on Tuesday by enjoying a picnic dinner on the grounds of J. S. Sutton in this place, after which they accompanied their teacher, Miss McCalmont, to Charlevoix, where they visited Loeb Farm, the fish hatchery and other points of interest. A very enjoyable day was spent by all.

Conn Nowland met with an accident last Saturday, while driving a car to East Jordan with his father, S. R. Nowland. In some way he lost control of the car which capsized in the ditch, pinning S. R. underneath. When he was extricated it was found his worst injury was a broken collar bone, which was immediately set by a surgeon, and he was brought to his home on Nowland Hill. He is now getting along as well as can be expected. The driver escaped with no injury.

NOWLAND HILL

Mr. and Mrs. Lewis Trojanek and sons of the Bohemian Settlement visited Mr. and Mrs. S. Nowland Monday evening.

Dr. Pomroy Veterinary Surgeon of Boyne City came on the Hill Tuesday to test the cattle for T. B.

Mrs. Ambrose Bell and little daughter Betty of Muskegon arrived Monday on a two week's visit at the home of her parents, Mr. and Mrs. John Martin.

Mr. and Mrs. A. R. Nowland and daughter Miss Ellen, and Louis Fuller took dinner Sunday with the former's daughter and family, Mr. and Mrs. Omar Scott of Boyne City.

Miss Bessie Simmons and Mr. and Mrs. Hawkins, and Mr. Long, three friends of Petoskey, called on her mother, Mrs. James Simmons, Saturday evening.

Mr. and Mrs. Roy Nowland motored to Central Lake Saturday to get her sister, Mrs. B. K. Brouwer of Chicago, who is visiting her mother, Mr. Jarman, returning with her Sunday.

Mr. and Mrs. Arthur Walter of River Rouge, who were called here by the death of Mrs. Walter's daughter, Mrs. Bert Danforth of Chestonia, spent a few days with her step daughter, Mrs. Ray Nowland, last week.

Mr. and Mrs. Clair Brooks and two children of Boyne City spent Sunday afternoon at their farm on the Hill.

Mrs. Walter Kent and children of Pleasant Valley attended the funeral services, Wednesday, last week of her father, Henry Sutton of Chestonia.

Mr. and Mrs. L. Thompson near Chestonia called Friday on his uncles, the Nowland brothers, A. R., Ed. and Sam.

When Sam Nowland and son, Conn, were going to East Jordan Saturday afternoon the steering gear went wrong, causing the car to turn turtle on the road below Curtis Brace's farm. Mr. Nowland had a collar bone broken in the accident. A passing car took him on to East Jordan, where Dr. Dicken set it.

Petting Trouble

By THOMAS ARKLE CLARK
Dean of Men, University of Illinois.

SOAMES FORSYTE had been a very busy and energetic business man who retired to live on his income when he was getting on toward old age. He had always worried a good deal even when he was busy with important matters. Now Galsworthy says of him:

"Lacking the professional issues to anchor the faculty for worrying he had inherited from James Forsyte, Soames was inclined to pet any trouble that came along."

There are few things more engrossing than this petting of trouble. Most troubles will die of inanition if allowed to fend for themselves. They waste away or disappear or are forgotten unless they are coddled a little—nursed and fed and encouraged as the woes of a fretful child are increased through sympathy.

Prather had been out the night before without a topcoat and in a driving rain. He had been pretty well drenched and had sat with his feet soaking wet for two or three hours. Little wonder that when he awakened in the morning his throat was sore and he felt feverish.

"You'd better go to the hospital," the doctor advised him, "and I think it's wiser to isolate you for a day or two. There's probably nothing the matter with you, but we've had a good deal of infectious disease this winter, and it's better to take no chances."

Prather's imagination began to work overtime; he started in at once to pet his little worries.

"What are the symptoms of scarlet fever?" he asked the nurse as she was stowing him comfortably into bed a little later at the hospital.

"Oh, headache," she replied, "sore throat, fever, aching back; nausea sometimes."

Prather's back began to ache at once and he felt sick at his stomach.

"One can't tell at the outset, however," the nurse explained. "Scarlet fever, smallpox, diphtheria, measles, chickenpox, and a number of diseases start in about the same way. One has to wait until the disease develops before making an accurate diagnosis. I shouldn't worry."

One might as well have suggested to Niagara not to shoot over the precipice. Before night Prather in his own mind had every disease known to the human race and in addition was on the verge of a nervous breakdown.

"Do you think I'll have scarlet fever?" he asked the doctor the second day of his being in the hospital. The quarantine for that disease, he had learned, was ordinarily longer than for any of the others.

"Scarlet fever!" the doctor replied. "Of course not. You haven't anything the matter with you. You'd better get up and put on your clothes and go back to work."

"But I'm really sick, doctor; my back aches terribly."

"Nonsense," the doctor said. "Your back doesn't ache. The trouble with you is you've been nursing your little troubles until they're as big as elephants. Forget them."

Anyone with careful and regular attention to the matter can soon pet the smallest mole hill of trouble into a mountain.

Port Huron—Charles Mugavero, contractor of Port Huron, has been ordered by the city commission to rebuild half a mile of sewer constructed by him in 1925. Mayor James Dunn charged the sewer joints were improperly laid and are filling with sand.

Big Rapids—Thomas Mitchell, a potato shipper at Stanwood, was arraigned recently in justice court on federal complaint that he shipped a carload of poor potatoes to the Detroit market. He pleaded guilty and was assessed $15, covering fine and costs.

Aurion—Charles Shierson, who successfully handled the Community Chest fund drive last year has again been appointed manager for the campaign here this year. The appointment was made by directors of the chamber of commerce. A committee to assist Shierson will be selected.

Saginaw—The Shreve garage at Bridgeport was destroyed by fire when the gasoline tank of a sedan, owned by Frank Hunter, Saginaw overflowed and caught fire. The fire quickly spread to the garage, a two-story frame building. Leonard Shreve, owner of the garage, and David L. Premo, one of the occupants of the car, suffered burns.

Grand Rapids—Guests at the wedding of Miss Lois Laninga and Gerrit Fennema, at Cutlerville left the party long enough to save the home of George Morris, nearby, from destruction by fire. Soon after the Rev. C. R. Vanhattama had read the service, flames enveloped the Morris barn. The wedding party formed a bucket brigade and succeeded in saving the home.

across the doorway. But nothing came. Feet shushed in the sand all around the blockhouse; voices called, questioned and argued; an occasional shot was fired—no more. Flint's triumph had been too amazingly complete for him to grasp, and evidently there were dissensions in the pirates' ranks as to what the next step should be.

The hour-glass we had fetched from the Royal James stood by the door, and I remember that I turned it twice before Peter tapped my shoulder.

"He wants you," he said.

Murray lay with his head in Moira's lap. On his face was stamped a waxy pallor. His nostrils were sunken and pinched in. A crimson froth showed at the corner of his mouth. But his tawny eyes blazed with the unconquerable fire of his spirit. As I stooped over him a mocking gleam radiated from their black depths, and his lips moved in almost voiceless speech.

"Sorry, eh?" I nodded, and the mockery became more pronounced.

"Would have—won you—boy—in—time." Moira wiped the dreadful bubbles from his lips.

"You—won't—carry—out—plot?" he asked.

"I would be dishonest to promise," I answered. "And I doubt if we are like to live much longer than you." The fingers of one hand fluttered strangely.

"Tut, boy—never—lose hope. Win—yet—myself."

His colorless lips parted in a ghastly smile at the shocked disbelief in my face.

"This—will be—end—of Flint. Kill me—kill himself." His fingers fluttered again, and Moira whispered—

"Twill be his snuff-box he's after wanting, Bob."

And as I fumbled for it in the wreck of his coat she added—

"But 'twill be his death does he use it the once."

I hesitated, but the look in his eyes impelled me to give it to him.

"Good lad!"

And his fingers closed lovingly on the jeweled trinket, picking at the lid he was wont to click open and shut in moments of perplexity. The tawny eyes flitted toward Moira.

"Take care—maid—good blood—in—her. Family, Robert—breeding—land—marks in—mad world."

"I'll do what I can," I promised, seeing he expected an answer.

"Might do—worse—or more," he replied with the shadow of a smile.

"Pew's knife—kept you—being—duke—Moira—"

A pause whilst Moira wiped his mouth.

"A mad world," he repeated. "What will—Prince Charles—say?"

His eyes clouded, and he murmured a snatch of song, one of those ranting Jacobite ballads that spread like wildfire after the '45—

"Cope sent a challenge frae Dunbar, Charlie, meet me an yo daur—"

A coughing fit interrupted him, weakened him so I thought he was sped; but the ghostly voice went on with a hint of the gay, reckless tune:

"Hey, Johnnie Cope, are ye waukin yet?
Or are your drums a-beatin' yet?
If ye waur waukin' I wad—"

His voice strengthened.

"Ah, your royal highness! The procession is ordered—the heralds—waiting—my lords—commons—"

He struggled so to rise that to save

Many East Jordan Folks Have Found the Way.

Is a dull, nerve-racking backache wearing you out? Do you feel older and slower than you should? Are you tired, weak and nervous; find it impossible to be happy, or enjoy the good times around you? Then there's something wrong and likely it's your kidneys. Why not get at the cause? Use Doan's Pills—a stimulant diuretic to the kidneys. Your neighbors recommend Doan's. Read what this East Jordan resident says:

Mrs. Sam Williamson says: "I had bearing down pains through the small of my back which kept me in misery. My back was lame and sore and as time passed, began to feel dull and all out of sorts. My kidneys failed to act regularly but after using Doan's Pills which I bought at the Hite Drug Co. I was relieved."

Price 60c, at all dealers. Don't simply ask for a kidney remedy—get Doan's Pills—the same that Mrs. Williamson had. Foster-Milburn Co., Mfrs., Buffalo, N. Y.

CHAPTER XVI

Prisoners

"Ahey, the blockhouse!"

"Dot's Flint," whispered Peter. "You talk to him, Bob, ja."

"What is it?" I shouted back.

"Is Murray with ye?"

"He's dead," I answered after a moment of reflection.

"And that's—lucky for him! Here's Tom Morpew ready to give him a taste of the cat."

A shrill howl echoed the words.

"Don't 'ee believe man, Cap'n Flint! 'Tis all a lie! And 'ee promised I should ha' t' beatin' o' mun."

"'Tis true," I said wearily. "After sunrise you can send in a man to see for himself."

"Ah!" jeered Flint. "But ye see I'm not waiting for sunup or moonset or aught else, my Buckskin. We know how many o' ye there are; and if ye don't surrender, why, we'll put a torch to the blockhouse and roast ye out. Fire won't hurt gold and silver, but 'tain't friendly to live meat."

"'Twill cost you something first," I retorted.

"Not so much as ye might think."

"Dot's right," squeaked Peter beside me. "Ja, you better make a bargain wit' him, Bob."

"A bargain," I repeated. "What on earth can we bargain with?"

"Der treasure on der Dead Man's Chest."

"But that is—"

I turned to Moira.

"In a manner of speaking, that treasure is yours. 'Twas in your father's name, to be held in trust for others. Are you willing—"

"My faith, any cause will be the better without it," she interrupted. "What has it done but bring bloodshed and suffering upon all who trafficked in it? If it will just win us our lives, Bob, 'twill be the one good deed to its credit."

"Time's runnin' short," shouted Flint. "If ye won't surrender we'll start the tagots."

"Sult yourself," I replied with as much confidence as I could muster.

"There are three of us here, and 'tis we know where the treasure lies on the Dead Man's Chest. If you won't even promise our lives we'll make the bitterest fight we can and carry the secret with us."

There was a gabble of protest at this, several others joining their voices to Flint's, among them Silver.

"Naught's been said o' slayin' ye," declared Flint. "Give up the treasure, and we'll part friends."

"Aye, aye, Master Ormerod," called Silver. "Cap'n Flint puts it straight. There ain't a man of us would wish to be your enemy."

I looked hopelessly at Peter.

"What more can we win?" I asked.

"'Tis a mockery to place credence in their promises."

"Ja," nodded Peter. "We don't trust 'em. But we know dot, Bob. We don't be fooled. And now anyway we get off alive. Afterward—"

He shrugged his mountainous shoulders.

I called to Flint:

"Mistress O'Donnell must have every consideration she is accustomed to, with decent lodging in the cabin and we two to attend her."

"Gut me!" roared Flint. "D'ye think we'll conduct a nunnery aboard the Walrus?"

"I am thinking she is a young maid by her lone, which is hard enough, let

"You Have Heard My Terms," I said, be she must dwell with pirates," I answered.

"There's Rule Four of our Articles," he sneered. "Ye will ha' heard it before. It should be assurance for any maid."

"You have heard my terms," I said. "Take them or leave them. There's eight hundred thousand pounds to be gained from treating us kindly. If you do not so, as sure as I am here we will die, the three of us, before we yield you the secret—and you should know the years 'twill require to dig over the Dead Man's Chest."

"We'll take you," he replied ill-naturedly. "And such a arguing swab I never listened to or will again. —my eyes. Are ye fixed in your mind, Buckskin?"

"Yes."

"Drop your arms and bide where ye are, then. We're comin' in to look ye over."

Torches flickered around the circuit of the stockade, and as they drew nearer Peter and I tore down the barricade of treasure I had built across the doorway. Figures appeared in the wavy light, naked to the waist, scratched by the jungle growth; uncouth, grizzled faces lowered at us.

"Keep back," I warned them. "We'll let no man in until Captain Flint is here."

"Careful, ain't ye, Buckskin?" he mocked me from behind a clump of plaites. "Make way, shipmates. Ye'll all ha' a chance to see the treasure, soon or late, and we'll share in it equal and regular, accordin' to the Articles."

The group split to make way for him, and he strode up to the door. Bones was with him, and Silver, and the man they called Black Dog, who carried a torch, as did Bones. And behind them all limped an awful creature, whose grimy face was a mask of pain, whose bare back and flanks were crisscrossed with festering welts. In one hand he held a cat-o-nine-tails, the pendent rope lashes with their jagged knots stained a dark claret hue.

Bones flourished his torch as they entered the low door, and the light shone into every corner of the big hut.

"Is that Murray?"

He pointed to the body that lay beneath the hacked remnants of the plum satin coat which served as shroud.

"Yes," I said, and Moira shrank betwixt Peter and me as they crowded forward, staring open-mouthed at the cold clay that represented the man they had so feared and hated.

"Gut me," swore Flint. "I never thought to see Andrew Murray lyin' stark."

Silver's eyes glistened from his slab of a face.

"He don't figure much now, do he, mates?" he said.

"Let's have a look at him," spoke up Bones abruptly. "Here, Black Dog, bring up your light, too."

The man with the sore back limped after them, drawing the tails of his cat through the fingers of one hand with a kind of lingering caress.

"Let me at him," he muttered. "I'll flay him. I will! I'll learn mun t' murder sailormen. Five o' us, and—"

Bones brushed off the plum satin coat with one toe, and Murray's gaunt, white face smiled up at them, faintly satirical, the snuff-box still clutched in one hand.

"—me, 'tis so he looked ever!" gasped Flint.

"'Tain't right nor natural," said Bones. "He looks like he knowed we was here—and couldn't harm him none."

"He'll look difrent when I lash mun," whined the man with the cat, pushing past Black Dog. "Wait till t' cat slices into t' back o' mun, cap'n, I'll cut t' grin off'n t' devil's face o' mun."

"'Twas Silver caught the poor fellow's arm as it was raised to strike."

"No, no, Tom!" he cried. "Murray's dead."

"Dead?" answered the man dazedly.

"But 'ee promised I should ha' t' beatin' o' mun!"

"Why? He beat me till I was like t' die. He beat three o' my mates till they died, an Job Pynchens is a-dyin' out in the sand right now."

But Flint himself snatched the cat from the man's grasp with unaffected horror.

"Ye can't beat a dead man, Tom," insisted the Walrus' captain. "'Tis bad luck. And look at the good luck we ha' had since we found Darby McGraw! I can tell ye, mates, I'm a-going to hang on to my luck."

Bones growled assent, and Silver added—

"Aye, aye, cap'n; and if ye'll be guided by me ye'll lose no time in puttin' Murray underground."

"They all exchanged superstitious glances, and Bones said hoarsely—

"He were close to bein' more'n human, weren't he?"

"They do say as how ye can chain down a ha'n't by drivin' a stake through the body," suggested Black Dog—and he shook so that his torch scattered sparks.

"It's bad luck to mutilate the dead," objected Flint. "No, no, we'll bury him quick and be done with it."

"But 'ee promised I was t' beat mun," sobbed Tom Morpew. "I let 'ee in, Long John, and 'ee promised!"

"How was I to know he'd be dead?" returned Silver. "Don't ye take on so, Tom. We'll give ye a double handful o' onzas for what ye done, and when your back's well ye'll ha' a rare spree w' the yellow boys, eh?"

But Morpew refused to be comforted. He limped from the hut, trailing his whip behind him.

"'Tisn't good! I want," he wept. "'Tis to lay my lash to t' back o' mun. Aye! Till he do be bloody raw, same as Job Pynchens and they other lads as is under sod. Oh, my pore back!"

There was an interval of silence after he was gone.

"It's bad luck to touch the dead," reaffirmed Flint. "No, no, the thing to do is to bury him quick. You take half a dozen men, Bill, and plant him anywhere—so's he's deep enough."

"And what about the treasure?" called one of the men by the door.

"Aye, aye," chimed in a second. "When do we shift it aboard and divvy up?"

Flint stroked his chin, considering.

"Why, there's no hurry about the treasure, mates," he answered finally. "'Tis safe here. What we all need now is a dram o' rum and two watches below."

There was a general murmur of assent with this sentiment, and he crooked his finger at me.

"Come along, Buckskin. We'll put the three o' ye aboardship, out o' harm's way, seein' as ye're so precious o' yur skins. Long John, I'll leave it to ye to guard the prisoners. Give the girl a stateroom for herself—less'n ye might wish to share it, Buckskin?" he added with a leer that fetched a ruddy tide to Moira's cheeks.

Silver motioned us to precede him into the night, and as we passed out he gathered together a party of men who formed loosely around us.

"If so be as ye'll give me your word to come peaceable, Master Ormerod, I can make things easier for ye," he offered when we were clear of the hut.

"What do you say, Peter?" I asked the Dutchman.

"Ja."

"That's enough for me," announced Silver cheerfully. "And very sensible of ye, too, gentlemen. Not quite so fast. I'm only a crippled sailorman, and I ha' labored hard this night. Aye, it were such a sea-saw o' fortune as kep' my heart a-poppin' in my throat. I thought ye had me on the stockade; but there's none like Pew w' the knife, and he can smell his man when he can't see him. Well, well, whod' ha' 'sposed when we met in New York we'd come to aught like this, Master Ormerod?"

I lacked the heart to answer him, and we stumbled through the woods in silence to the shore of the Anchorage. Here one of the Walrus' boats was launched, and we were rowed out to where she lay, her hull squatting like a rock in the quiet water. Men hailed us from her deck, a whip was sent down for Silver's convenience, and the rest of us climbed the side ladder, Moira as agile as any after her months at sea.

"Here we are, safe and snug on the old Walrus," remarked Silver, still aggressively cheery; "and them as is here can call themselves fortunate, 'cause there's a plenty as ha' kep' Murray company. Aye, blast me for a swab, but it ha' been a bloody night. Get for'ard, mates."

This to the men who had come off with us.

"I'll see to the prisoners. Now then, gentlemen—and mistress—you come along w' me, and I'll make ye all as comfortable as if ye was in a Bristol packet."

He prodded a muscular forefinger into my chest.

"You mind that, Master Ormerod. You mind that Long John was your friend. 'Cause why says you? Here's the Walrus, and here's a treasure, and here's Flint, and here's maybe twelve-score lads as don't all think alike, and here's Bill Bones—and here's me. A goodish bit might happen, my master. And who's to say what will start it a-happenin'? Not me! Nor who might come out on top afterward."

And with a parting wink he stumped aft, crooking his finger in sign that we should follow him across the untidy deck.

"Glory!" sniffed Moira, her nose in air. "This will be more the like of a stable than a ship."

She did not exaggerate. The Walrus was dirtier than she had been the night Peter and I were committed to her as hostage. Her decks were foul with grease and all manner of filth; her paint was crocked and peeling; a cloud of flies buzzed around a tub of fish-guts which nobody would take the trouble to cast overboard; from an open hatch poured a sour, acrid stench. A strange contrast with the Royal James!

Inside the companionway under the poop we tripped over the usual litter of broken bottles, pistol-flints and odds and ends of cast-off clothing. Silver balanced himself on his crutch against the wall, struck flint and steel to a slow-match and ignited the wick of a whale-oil lantern which depended from a hook. Holding this above his head, he surveyed the double line of stateroom doors, very similar to the plan of the cabin quarters of the James.

"Room for all," he pronounced. "This here to larboard is Flint's, and Bones' berth's opposite. 'Tother's full o' junk, but ye can soon clear 'em out."

We did the best we could, which was very little, and then persuaded Moira to risk lying in the cleaner of the two rooms—we had chosen it for her because it had a bolt on the inside of the door and offered her a degree of privacy—while Peter and I berthed across the companionway, Peter on the floor by reason of his bulk, and I in the one cramped bunk. And I marvel to say that we went promptly asleep, and did not waken until the noon sun was flooding through the grimy panes of the cabin windows.

HAUGEN MEASURE IS DOOMED TO DEFEAT

Tincher Farm Relief Bill is Most Likely to Obtain Final Approval.

Washington.—The Haugen bill providing a $850,000,000 subsidy for the farmers is regarded as killed, according to a canvass of house members. In addition to this President Coolidge told Representative Vestal of Indiana, Republican whip, that he would sign the Tincher farm relief measure if it was passed by the house.

Mr. Vestal called at the White House to obtain a definite answer from the President regarding his stand on farm relief. The President had already let it be known that he favored the so-called administration bill, drawn by Secretary of Agriculture Jardine and Representative J. N. Tincher of Kansas, and he repeated his views.

The death of the Haugen bill, indicated by the recent canvass, comes largely as a result of defection among southern Democrats who had been expected to support it on account of the $100,000,000 subsidy it contained for cotton. The bill has also been abandoned by representatives from metropolitan districts in the North Central states who joined the Republicans of the East in condemning government subsidy of any special group.

The eleven North Central states most vitally interested in the Haugen bill would, according to theory, cast 124 votes for the Haugen bill. It is believed now, however, that this will be cut to 90 and that the total Republican vote for the bill will not be over 110.

The defection of the southern Democrats is ascribed to several factors, among which is the fact that under the terms of the Haugen bill the first equalization fee would be levied in 1928—at the time of the Presidential campaign—and this would not be, it is believed, popular.

Another factor is that many southern Democrats believe that the cotton growers do not need a subsidy, given the fact that 60 per cent of their crop is marketed abroad. Still another point against southern adherence to the Haugen bill was made by Representative Edward W. Pou, Democrat of North Carolina, who denounced the bill as typical Republican special interest legislation, entirely inconsistent with the principles of the Democratic party.

Now that the Haugen bill is believed to be a dead letter it is regarded as probable that the Tincher bill will be adopted. In the senate, however, the situation is more uncertain. The senate has pending before it the co-operative marketing bill passed by the house early in the session, which has been amended by the senate agricultural committee so as to include the principles of the Haugen bill.

This has been reported and the possibility of its being passed is being discussed, although for a long while the chances of its ever seeing the light seemed to be slim. If the senate should pass this bill, and it went into conference, the house conferees would be in the unusual position of having to pass on a measure which the house itself had not actually passed on.

WHO SAID

"Nothing has such power to broaden the mind as the ability to investigate systematically and truly all that comes under thy observation in life."

IT IS a peculiar thing that the man who uttered this plea for breadth of vision and generosity in differing opinions, should have been one of the best and noblest emperors of ancient Rome and at the same time, one of the most insistent and harsh persecutors of the Christians. His persecution is all the harder to understand when we consider that this man, Marcus Aurelius, left a collection of his meditations which are in striking harmony with the religion of Jesus Christ.

Marcus Aurelius was the adopted son and son-in-law and successor to the Roman emperor, Antonius Pius. He ascended to the throne of Rome in the year 161, and until the year 169 reigned jointly with his adopted brother Lucius Verus. In that year the latter died and Marcus Aurelius became the sole ruler of Rome.

Few men were better emperors of Rome than Marcus Aurelius, but he had his enemies and the tribes to the north of Rome were particularly troublesome during his reign. A legend is told concerning his campaign against these northern tribes which, it would seem, should have been sufficient to turn the emperor from his persecution of the Christians.

The story runs that on a certain day the Roman army was caught in a narrow defile, unable to advance because of the enemy, and unable to retreat. There was no water to be had and the soldiers were fainting of exhaustion. At this moment a band of Christians who belonged to the legion came forward and prayed for rain. Not only did the water pour down in torrents, but a terrific hailstorm set in which thoroughly demoralized the enemy and brought victory to the Romans. There is no record, however, of the emperor ceasing his persecutions.

WHEN I WAS TWENTY ONE

At 21: Supreme Court Justice Van Devanter Was a Librarian.

AT THE age of twenty-one my position in life was that of a student in law and, as a side effort, I held the post of assistant librarian in the law library. As to my ambition at that time it was to secure a good foundation for becoming a useful lawyer.—Willis Van Devanter.

TODAY:—Mr. Van Devanter is associate justice of the United States Supreme court, the inner shrine of the law, entrance to which is the highest award the country can bestow in recognition of supreme talent in jurisprudence.

The justice is sixty-seven years old. At the age of twenty-two he had already received his degree of LL. B. and began to practice law in Marion, Ind. When only twenty-seven he was appointed a commissioner to revise the Statutes of Wyoming and at thirty he became chief justice of the Supreme court of that state. To be a chief justice at this comparatively youthful age is a record achieved by very few jurists in the world.

Justice Van Devanter's progress continued in the order in which it had started; he became in turn assistant United States attorney, United States circuit judge and then associate justice of the Supreme court. (© by McClure Newspaper Syndicate.)

WHO SAID

"O would I were a boy again, When life seemed formed of sunny years, And all the heart then knew of pain Was wept away in transient tears!"

MARK LEMON, one of the great British humorists of the past century and the author of the lines quoted, is chiefly remembered in the United States as one of the foremost foreign critics and detractors of President Abraham Lincoln, during the Civil war.

Lincoln and Lemon were born in the same year and died within five years of each other. Until the former's death the latter never missed an opportunity to ridicule his handling of the affairs of the United States. When Lincoln died, however, and the wisdom of his course had become apparent, Mark Lemon was one of the first to pen an apology for his criticism. This is in the form of a poem and its obvious sincerity and easy style make it worth reading.

In addition to being a humorous writer Mark Lemon was well known in his day as a capable playwright. During his lifetime he supplied the London stage with more than 60 farces, melodramas and comedies. When the magazine Punch was established in 1841 Lemon became joint editor with Henry Mayhew, and later he was sole editor of the publication. It was in this satirical paper that most of Lemon's fables at Lincoln were published.

Lemon also achieved some success as a free-lance writer. He contributed to the Illustrated London News, to Dickens' Household Words, Once a Week, and other periodicals. Among his later works are several novels of average merit. Of all Lemon's works his claim to fame rests most securely upon his work as editor of Punch.—Wayne D. McMurray. WHEN I WAS TWENTY-ONE

BY JOSEPH KAYE

At Twenty-one Richard Le Gallienne Received His First Commission.

AT THIS age came my first commission, from Mr. John Lane, to write a book on John Meredith. I had at this time said good-by to the accountant's office where I had been working, rented an old loft in an ancient office building in Liverpool and seriously, as they used to say, "commenced author."

I would hardly venture upon the task now, but one is afraid of nothing at twenty-one. So I wrote the book for Mr. Lane and, as a result of it, went up to London. It chanced that just at that moment one of our "T. P.'s" (T. P. O'Connor) earliest successes, the Star, was about to lose one of its most valued contributors. Mr. Clement Shorter, his column on "Books and Bookmen" was vacant and open to competition. I took my fling at it, fearfully, as one should essay some inaccessible flight. But, one incredible afternoon it was announced to me that I had been chosen to fill the giant's robe. I was to be paid for writing every Thursday about the books I loved; I was to have my pick of all the books that came into the office—and yet I was to be paid.—Richard Le Gallienne.

TODAY.—Mr. Le Gallienne is one of the most distinguished poets and essayists of this age—so distinguished, in fact, that the writer recently came across the manuscript of one of his poems offered for sale by Thomas F. Madigan, the autograph dealer. When this happens to any writer he can be certain that he has already achieved the realms of posterity. (© by McClure Newspaper Syndicate.)

THE WHY OF SUPERSTITIONS

By H. IRVING KING

AMONG children it is common after making a false statement to say "over the left." This is frequently uttered in so low a tone that the person addressed cannot hear it; but in the child's mind the "over the left" takes away, or neutralizes, the sin of the lie. If the words are uttered so as to be heard the hearer at once knows that the statement just made is not to be taken as a true one. Among adults, too, the words "over the left" are not infrequently added to a statement to convey the idea that it is to be taken in just an opposite sense; for instance, they change a laudatory statement into a sarcastic comment.

The idea of the power of magical inversion in "over the left" comes entirely from the primitive superstition with regard to right hand and left hand—an idea applied by extension to the right and left of the entire body. The idea, in brief, is that as the right hand is the "right" hand to do things with, the left hand consequently the wrong one, it naturally follows that good resides on the right and evil on the left.

In former times the words "over the left" were considered much more seriously by adults than they are now and believed capable of changing a blessing into a very potent curse. In 1705 one Bevell Waters, having lost a suit in the court at Hartford, Conn., said to the bench as he left the room: "God bless you all—over the left shoulder." The court took expert testimony upon the remark from the two ministers of the two Hartford churches, who declared that Waters had uttered "the words of a curse the most contemptible that can ordinarily be used." Whereupon the culprit was heavily fined. (© by McClure Newspaper Syndicate.)

SMILE FOR SMILE

By DOUGLAS MALLOCH

WE CAN'T be merry all the day, but if a friend should come your way With smiling face and happy air, Whatever load you have to bear, What sort of sorrow for awhile, I hope you give him smile for smile!

Now, much is said about the need, Of bringing cheer to hearts that weep; And bringing joy to souls that weep; But there's another faith to keep, There's something for the sad to do— To smile at folks who smile at you!

So when they come, as come they will, To speak of good in time of ill, To speak of blessings, too, no doubt, Perhaps you had forgot about, When joy comes knocking, night or day, Run out to meet it half the way!

Yes, there's a duty for the sad, When good folks come to make you glad, And that's to grin, and show your grit, And cheer yourself a little bit. At least this much you ought to do— To smile at folks who smile at you. (© by McClure Newspaper Syndicate.)

Among the NOTABLES

LOUIS JOLLIET

TO LOUIS JOLLIET, born September 21, 1645, belongs the honor of having been the first white man to explore the upper part of the Mississippi river. Many historians claim he explored more of the river than any other man of that time, taking the honors away from both La Salle and De Soto. Beyond doubt, he was first to establish the fact that the great river did not run into the South sea, as it was believed in Canada.

Jolliet was the son of a wagon maker, better educated than most of his time, since the family had decided to make him a priest. But he turned into a fur trader and merchant, instead, and made many daring trips into unexplored wildernesses.

So great was his reputation, that he was chosen to lead the expedition that was to go down the Mississippi, Father Marquette being one of the party. Through the Illinois and Wisconsin rivers they traveled, and finally came into the Mississippi and went on to the Missouri. At this point, the Indians assured them it was but a ten days' trip to the river mouth, so they concluded the great stream ran into the Gulf of Mexico and turned back. Crossing a lake in a canoe, all Jolliet's maps were lost, and much valuable information destroyed.

His next trip was to explore the Hudson bay region and then the coast of Labrador for seal fishing. He wanted to colonize the beautiful valley of the Mississippi, but the Canadian government gave him no encouragement. He died wealthy and honored in Canada in 1700. (© by George Matthew Adams.)

The Hotel Stenographer

"I GOT to get on my diet again," I said the hotel stenographer. "I got weighed this morning."

"Why you are not fat!" exclaimed the house detective. "Right you are, Kelly," answered the girl, "and I am not going to be. An ounce of diet is better than a pound of adipose tissue. Fat has divorced more women than Mexico. If fat doesn't put women in the cemetery it puts them on the shelf and any woman would as soon have a nice quiet grave in a cemetery as a nice quiet place on the shelf."

"It is one thing to take off fat and look like the hand of a laundress after a hard day's washing and quite another to keep the fat off and not have the skin-on-your-face full of little wrinkles like a punctured toy balloon. I am going to keep it off and believe that if you are to be popular with the men you've got to wear a svelt figure, if you know what I mean."

"The new style dresses are made for the hipless women. If she swells in the middle like a tepin its far-eye-well any place except a hen party where they sip tea and knock flappers. Stylish stouts are for fat women who are not stylish. If keeping my eye on the calories will permit me to wear a section of fireman's hose for a dress I will watch my weight like a jockey. Prize fighters, jockeys and women have to keep inside the weight limit if they hope to get engagements. "If spending a few cents on weighing machines and having a little sense about eating will keep me in the running I shall face the starter fit as a couple of fiddles and neither one of them will be the bass fiddle either. "I am two pounds overweight and have cut out candy and sodas till am back where I belong." (Copyright by the McClure Newspaper Syndicate.)

SENATE VOTES QUIZ ON BIG VOTE FUNDS

Committee to Investigate Illinois and Pennsylvania Expenditures.

Washington.—The refusal of three of five senators named to sit on the special committee authorized to investigate charges that large sums were spent in Pennsylvania and Illinois primaries made necessary the reorganization of the committee.

Vice President Dawes announced that Senators Fernald (Rep., Maine), Goff (Rep., W. Va.), and King (Dem., Utah) would sit with Senators La Follette (Rep., Wis.) and Reed (Dem., Mo.), originally named as members of the committee.

Anti-Saloon league expenditures in campaigns also will be among the matters sifted.

The new investigating committee will at once map out sketchy plans, but nothing vital will be done now, as Senator Reed of Missouri, the author of the resolution, is going away for a few days. When he returns a program will be arranged.

Washington.—Amid feverish excitement and passionate denunciation the United States senate voted, by a majority of 46 in a total of 72 votes cast, to investigate expenditures of money in the Pennsylvania senatorial primaries which ended in the defeat of Senator Pepper (Rep.) by Congressman Vore (Rep.).

The McKinley-Smith senatorial contest in Illinois also will be investigated if the probable chairman of the investigators—Reed of Missouri—has his way, for Senator Reed in his blistering speech in the senate said:

"We had a senatorial primary election in Illinois a few weeks ago. It has been charged by many people—I do not assert the truth of the charge, I want to know as to its truth or as to its falsity—that one of the candidates expended from a million to a million and a half dollars in that primary and even then went down to his defeat.

"If that charge is true, then the country ought to know it. If that charge is true, then a condition of corruptness and of rottenness exists in this country which ought to arouse to extreme vigilance every man who loves his country and adores its flag."

Frantic maneuvering, changes of heart of almost miraculous suddenness, and swift flights from the chamber by senators who had no stomach for the test vote marked the three hours of strategy and oratory. They led up to the decision to investigate immediately the charges of slush funds of from two to five million dollars in Pennsylvania's primaries and of from one to one and a half million in Illinois.

The committee is empowered to sit during the senate's summer recess, thus keeping the fear of the Lord heavily in the hearts of the 34 sitting Republican and Democratic senators who come up for re-election next November.

The committee has power to investigate not only the expenditure of money in senatorial primaries already held, but also such expenditures as may be made in senatorial primaries still to be held and in the impending election campaigns of all the 34 senators who go to the people in November.

It will thus be the official recipient and investigator of all the financial campaign scandal that may break between now and November.

LATEST ORDER ADDS
10,000 DRY SLEUTHS

Both Factions Declare President's Action Illegal.

Washington.—An executive order authorizing the appointment of state, county or municipal officers as federal prohibition officers signed by President Coolidge, and made public by the treasury, means the addition of an estimated 10,000 of "dollar a year" volunteers and amateur "snoopers" to the already enlarged enforcement army of Gen. Lincoln C. Andrews, prohibition enforcement chief.

This move, which was made at the request of General Andrews and which reverses the position taken by President Grant during his administration, was met by immediate and bitter opposition by both wets and dries in the senate.

It means, according to Prohibition Commissioner Jones, that an Iowa or a Michigan constable or sheriff can cross the state lines and raid violators of the prohibition laws in any other state. State lines are wiped out for the local and state enforcement officer.

Wets predict that the country will be overrun by Anti-Saloon league zealots, who, in their eagerness to see the law enforced, will obtain local appointments as peace officers, justices or constables, and run rampant over the country.

The order, which is operative in states that have statutory provisions forbidding state officers from holding federal jobs, reads as follows: "In order that they may more efficiently function in the enforcement of the national prohibition act, any state, county, or municipal officer may be appointed, at a normal rate of compensation, as prohibition officer of the Treasury department to enforce the provisions of the national prohibition act and acts supplemental thereto in states and territories, except in those states having constitutional or statutory provision against state officers holding office under the federal government."

Prohibition Referendum
in N. Y. O. K'd by Smith

Albany, N. Y.—Governor Smith wound up his work on the final gist of measures sent to him by the legislature when it adjourned, by giving his approval to the Karle-Phelps bill providing for a prohibition referendum at the general election in November. Under the bill, the people will decide whether they desire the Volstead act amended to permit the states to determine the amount of alcoholic content which is "in fact, intoxicating." That the dries will use the injunction process in an attempt to stave off a popular verdict is certain.

Governor Smith, in explaining his favorable action on the measure said: "The fanatics on both sides of the question view the situation through the blurred glasses of prejudice. The bill will settle for the present the attitude of the people of this state on this whole question. If the voice of the people means anything in democratic government any vehicle through which it can be ascertained is to my mind desirable."

HOUSE KNOCKS OUT HAUGEN FARM BILL

Rival Measures Are Withdrawn; Still Have Hopes of Action During Session.

Washington.—The Haugen farm subsidy bill went down to defeat in the house by a vote of 212 to 167 on one of the most strikingly non-partisan divisions on record, indicated by the fact that both Democrats and Republicans voted to defeat the bill by the identical majority of 23 votes.

Realizing that any plan containing a subsidy or an equalization fee cannot be passed by the house, farm leaders, headed by Representative Dickinson, Republican, of Iowa, later met to agree on some legislation embodying the plan, advocated by President Coolidge, of increased co-operation among the farmers in the matter of marketing machinery, based on the theory that the farmers' greatest aid must come from himself, free from governmental interference.

Mr. Dickinson, after the vote, said that as far as the farmer was concerned it had all along been a question of "the Haugen bill, or nothing," and that the Republican party had missed a great opportunity. Nevertheless, he, along with other farm representatives, have hopes of enacting legislation at this session which, while avoiding the subsidy and the equalization fee, will establish machinery for disposal of the farmers' surplus.

Representatives Tincher, Republican, of Kansas, and Aswell, Democrat, of Louisiana, both sponsors of rival farm measures, asked unanimous consent to withdraw their bills, which they had offered as amendments to the Haugen bill. Unanimous consent was obtained, and then Representative Haugen, Republican of Iowa, amid cheers from the farm bloc, moved that the house sitting as the committee of the whole, recommend his bill to the house for passage.

Representative Madden, Republican, of Illinois, then threw the house in a tumult by offering a motion recommending the Haugen bill to the committee on agriculture, thus killing it. A viva voce vote favored this measure, 197 to 176, and a vote by tellers confirmed this action by 171 to 165. The biggest surprise came when a roll call on the motion to recommend was ordered, and the house went into the face of its two previous decisions and defeated the motion, 182 to 200.

Mr. Tincher, spokesman for the administration farm relief plan, said:

"The Aswell and Tincher bills are both on the calendar. All this propaganda out of Washington has been used to poison the farmer against the Tincher bill and Secretary of Agriculture Jardine. Let the matter rest a while and see if the farmers really want legislation. If they do we'll give them something—without anything like the Haugen subsidy."

"I haven't given up hope," Mr. Dickinson said. "The senate may send over the co-operative bill with the Norris amendment."

This amendment contains the same features as the Haugen bill, except that the subsidy is $350,000,000, and a deferment on the equalization fee is provided, pending definite permission from congress every time a fee is to be levied.

The news of the defeat of the Haugen bill was so sudden that definite plans have not yet been drawn up by farm relief advocates in either branch. It seems improbable that the senate would pass the farm bill just outlined containing the very features which the house killed.

WASHINGTON BRIEFS

News of the defeat of Senator George Wharton Pepper, in Pennsylvania, was hailed by Washington wets as a victory and a forecast for early modification of the national prohibition law.

THINGS WE CAN-NOT FORGET

By THOMAS ARKLE CLARK
Dean of Men, University of Illinois.

IT IS the easiest thing in the world to forget, as I have myself demonstrated, even with all the modern helps to memory which have been devised. They say that a man is not likely to forget a dinner engagement especially if he knows that the cook has a reputation, but I have disproved such a statement many a time.

Just last week, for instance, I had agreed to go to a banquet where I knew that the food would be excellent. More than that, I was to make the only speech of the evening for which there should have been some serious preparation. I had forestalled forgetting by having all these facts written on my calendar in plain sight before me and yet the whole situation had entirely escaped me. I was in a committee meeting at ten minutes of six when one of the members said:

"Have you forgotten that you are due at a dinner in ten minutes, and that you have to make a speech?" I had.

But there are some things which try as he will, a man cannot forget. I lent Smith ten dollars five or six years ago when he was in a hole. He dunned himself at intervals during the next few months, but gradually he seemed to forget all about it. I have never mentioned the matter to him, but I never meet him face to face or see him driving around in his shining car without wondering what has become of my ten dollars. A man cannot forget when some one owes him money.

We find it very difficult to forget an injustice or an imagined slight.

Every time I have met Timmons during the last twenty years I have realized that for some reason he had it in for me. I had done something at one time or another which he could not overlook and which he could not forget. I put it up to him one day and he admitted to me that it was a trifling experience he had had with me when he was a sophomore in which he thought I had not done him quite justice, and he could not forget it. He admitted, when he went over the situation, that in all probability he was wrong in his point of view, but the incident had made such a strong impression upon him that he could not get it.

I have never known a man who had any distinguished relatives who could forget that fact. The ne'er-do-wells, the riffraff passed out of their memory, but if they had had a remote ancestor who was in the Revolutionary war or an uncle who had struck oil in Texas or who had been in on the discovery of gold in California, he was always dragging the man in. Hill's grandfather had made a million in public utilities, and Hill could never for a half hour forget that fact.

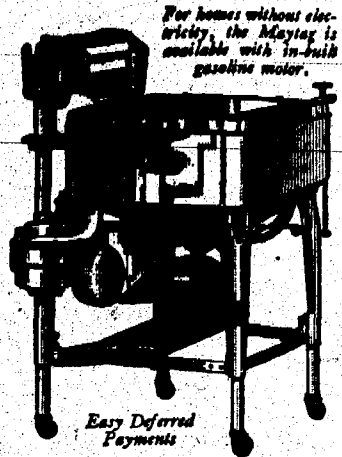

It touches our pride to be slighted or cheated; it stimulates our self-esteem to have an important relative, and these things we cannot forget.
