NUMBER 34

School Work Begins Sept. 6

EAST JORDAN PUBLIC SCHOOLS OPEN TUESDAY, SEPT. 6TH.

Vacation wanes, work begins week from next Tuesday in the East Jordan Public Schools. The annual teacher's meeting takes place at 4:30 p. m. Monday, Sept. 5th.

Nothing is so important to each individual student as an early enrollment. Every year quite a number of students, especially High School students persist in coming in late, this is a serious mistake, for it is difficult if not impossible to recover this lost time. Therefore be enrolled the FIRST day.

I care not how good your job is, you are the loser in the end if you have not graduated from High School. Unless you are earning better than $9.02 a day and assured this will continue, statistics shows you are losing financially at least. Boys and girls who hesitate on going back to school, put away the grouch, roll your sleeves up and graduate from High School.

To the non-resident student, remember you can't find a better High School in the north than the local school. Come with us, join the band, the Debating team, the Football squad or enroll in our agricultural department or commercial department and be ready to immediately take your place as a trained citizen as soon as you get through High School.

Non-resident tuition according to the State law is due the first week of school in full, and the School Board expect to collect it at that time, please come prepared accordingly.

The morning session begins at the usual time—8:00 a. m., ends at 11 a. m., afternoon session 12:15 p. m., and ends at 2:30 p. m. Enrollment takes place, Tuesday morning, Sept. 6th.

Septic Tank Demonstration Sept. 6-9

Farmers in Charlevoix County will have the opportunity during the four days of Sept. 6, 7, 8 and 9 to actually see four tanks of the latest design constructed by Specialists from Mich. State College, one on each day.

A sewage disposal system is fundamental to the installation of other conveniences in the farm home. Before running water can become possible, or at least practicable, it is necessary to provide some means of removing the waste water. A septic tank and tile system provides that means, and at the same time provides the best possible methods of safeguarding the water supply against contamination from these wastes.

The septic tank and tile system is to the farm home what the sewer system is to the city. It provides a satisfactory means of disposing of the wastes from the kitchen, laundry and bath room.

It's cost is not prohibitive and its construction is little more difficult than the building of a concrete water tank. You will be interested in attending your nearest meeting during one of these four days and see how simple a matter it is to construct one of these tanks. Watch the next paper for further details and the places where demonstrations will be held.

The British are now trying to develop a plane that will make 300 miles an hour. That will be fast enough for some people.

What has become of the old-fashioned parent who used to see that the children studied the Sunday School lessons regularly?

These long distance hops are beginning to get tiresome. It won't be long now before it won't be safe to owe a man in another State.

His Second Visit to France

Barberry Eradication In This County

The large area of common barberry which was located south of Walloon Lake has been completely scouted and all bushes salted according to the latest report from the government men located in Charlevoix County. The area was about six miles square and required over two tons of salt to eradicate the bushes. At the present time the squad is working north and east of Boyne City.

In an effort to finish the barberry eradication work in Charlevoix Co., this summer another squad of five men will be moved in according to W. F. Reddy, head of the campaign in this State. These men are at the present working in Emmet County which they will finish sometime during the week of August the 22nd. Walter Kidman at the present time squad leader in Charlevoix will remain at the head of the work.

It is hoped that with the original survey over in Charlevoix County this summer that the farmers will cooperate with the government in keeping the common barberry exterminated. It is the plan of the officials in charge of the work to check the areas where common barberries were found every five years. This will enable them to catch any small bushes which have been overlooked and will also bring to light seedlings and small bushes which have sprung up from seeds of the barberry since the survey was completed. The barberry seed has the peculiar quality of being able to remain dormant in the ground for a number of years and then sprout a bush which experiments show that it often does.

The barberry eradication campaign is being carried on by the Federal Department of Agriculture in cooperation with the State Department of Agriculture and Michigan State College. The common barberry spreads black stem rust of oats, rye, wheat, barley and other grains and grasses. This rust every year causes millions of dollars worth of loss in grain to the farmers of the North Central States.

The guilt of the common barberry has long been established. It gives the rust its start in the spring. Without the common barberry the rust is practically powerless to spread to grains and grasses. The reason for this is that there are three different stages of the rust during the year known as the black stage or winter stage; the spring stage or the stage when the rust is on the common barberry in cluster cups; and the red stage or the summer stage, which like the black stage is on the grain. The winter stage lives on the grain stubbles and on wild grasses. It cannot in the spring spread directly to grains and grasses but it must first spread to the Common Barberry to Get It's Start. Thus by eradicating the common barberry black stem rust may be completely stopped.

Allot Last Supply of War Explosives

The final echoes of the motive power prepared for the engines of death in the World War will resound in Michigan during the next few months, according to the announcement of L. F. Livingston, specialist in agricultural engineering at Mich. State College.

The final allotment of war surplus explosives for Michigan has been received and will be distributed through the county agricultural agents of the State. The allotment is small and the early orders are expected to exhaust the available supply.

Farmers of Michigan have used 5,500,000 pounds of war surplus explosives. An equal amount of comparable commercial explosives would have added $750,000 to the expenses of the farmers in blowing out stray stumps, in land clearing, and in blasting boulders, according to M. S. C. estimates.

Continued use of the explosives in the State has accustomed farmers to the employment of this concentrated power, and after the surplus it is expected that they will employ commercial explosives as a means of smoothing the path of the plow.

Novelty Is Feature Gentry Bros. Shows

Those who say "all circuses are alike" are slated to get a big surprise when the Gentry Bros. Shows exhibit in Boyne City on Friday, Sept. 2nd, because the performance of the Gentry Bros. this season is unlike that of its past 38 seasons and those of the other circuses presented here in past years. The Gentry Brothers performance is setting a new standard in circus productions. No expense has been spared to provide one of the most novel and entertaining circus programs ever offered on this continent.

Not only have the stars of this country and of Europe been drafted to take a part in this spectacular offering but also the talented performers from the more distant lands, the South Sea Islands, India, Borneo, Afghanistan, Persia, and the nearer countries in South America and Central America. Each of these have contributed their talents and present the most novel program ever offered by an American circus.

Great care has been taken to keep out of the routine and the amazing acts of the 60 acrobats, 30 aerialists, 60 riders, and scores of other performers are absolutely new and never before have been seen in this country. Many acres are required to house the immense tents of the Gentry Bros. Shows this season and more than 500 people are required to present the performance. Gentry Brothers have invested more than $750,000 in equipment.

The mile-long spectacular street parade will be given at 11:00 a. m., rain or shine, and the doors to the mammoth menagerie tent open at 1:00 and 7:00 p. m. The big show performance begin at 2:00 and 8:00 p. m.

To the kiddies as well as their parents a visit to the Gentry Bros. Shows will prove to be a two-hour journey through a joyland of the highest type of circus entertainment and an unforgettable amusement as well as educational treat. Among those who will contribute much to the enjoyment of the program will be the 30 famous clowns. These play-boys in their eccentric make-up have scores of new stunts that are proving great innovations and in keeping with the novel production of the entire circus performance.

Being nice to people usually moves them to try to float a loan.

Moon Lengthens Months
The effect of the tidal waves on the moon is to take her gradually away from the earth. As the distance of the moon from the earth is increased the length of time required for the planet to circle the earth is also lengthened so that over a period of ages the months will become many days longer.

TOLERANCE
By THOMAS ARKLE CLARK
Dean of Men, University of Illinois.

IT IS quite clear that the Dunlaps do not get on well together. Even in the company of other people they nag each other a good deal. The cause of their disagreement is rather a slight one when looked at in an unprejudiced way. It is his carelessness as to his appearance which constantly irritates her; and the fact that she is deliberate, if not often a little late, with meals or in her preparations for going out that drives him constantly into a perturbed state of mind.

"I don't believe you've combed your hair or washed your face since you got up this morning," she will say to him, "and your clothes look as if you had come out of an ash barrel."
Were there not some element of truth in what Mrs. Dunlap is saying it might pass unnoticed by her spouse but Dunlap has been fooling around with the furnace, and he hasn't given much attention to his toilet, and so her remarks get under his skin and he comes back with another "Well, I've had time enough to shave and take a bath and put on dinner clothes while I've been waiting for a few bites to eat. Why you can't begin things a little earlier and have dinner on time for once in our lives is too much for me. A man can't always be looking like Beau Brummell."

You can see that with this attitude of mind they have a pleasant evening together. Neither one deceived the other before they were married. Dunlap's clothes were pretty much out of press and his hair was touselled when he used to call on Martha Ball and he never found her ready at the appointed time, but each was tolerant of the other, and they got on beautifully, as they might do today if each would exercise a little patience and tact.
The Carlsons had their first quarrel or misunderstanding over Mrs. Carlson's not being ready to go to a reception at the time he had called the cab. Carlson is one of those men who never missed a train in his life, and who has wasted hours of valuable time by getting ready before it is anything like time to start, or by going to a committee meeting a half hour before any one else arrives.
"It didn't really make any difference whether we were there at half-past eight or not," she said to him after their quarrel was over, "and why should we both have an unhappy evening for such a trifle as my being ten minutes late?"
"Why, indeed?" Carlson asks himself. And now when he is ready ahead of time, instead of pacing up and down the hall growing perspiry and irritated while she finishes her toilet upstairs, he sits down and smokes or finishes the evening paper or reads a chapter in a book or listens to the radio. He knows she will be ready some time, that nagging won't help things, and that anyway it is sometimes better to be tolerant than always on time.

DIPPING INTO SCIENCE

The Early Match
Although in 1805 matches were made by dipping wood in sulphur and tipping them with chlorate of potash and sugar, these were abandoned because they had to be dipped into sulphuric acid, the combination causing the fire. This acid was too dangerous and clumsy for common use. Soon after came the forerunner of our present match, the product of John Walker, an Englishman.

"It won't entirely destroy your appetite to sit down to dinner in tweeds, will it?" he asked. "We really haven't time for frivolities of that sort this evening."

And yet his manner when he took the chair that Wilkins placed for him, and glanced over the menu card suddenly became leisurely and deliberate. He had a little chat with Wilkins, taking the advice of that gastronomic expert as seriously as if a good dinner were the only subject that he felt the slightest interest in just then.

The waiter got our order at last and went away with it to the kitchen, and Wilkins himself, with a grave inclination of the head, started to move away, but the doctor called him back. "I wonder, Wilkins," he said, "whether you can find out for me if there is a chambermaid named Jane Perkins employed in the hotel."

The man shot a quick look of surprise into the doctor's face, a look quite at variance with his ordinary stiff immobility. "Yes, sir, there is such a young woman working here," he said. "It happens that I am acquainted with her personally."

"Ah," said the doctor in a tone of satisfaction, "that simplifies matters. I might have known that you would be able to help me. Wilkins, it happens that I very much wish to have a little conversation with that young woman."

Wilkins inclined his head gravely, without a word.

"You'll arrange it for me, won't you?" said the doctor. "I'd like to have her sent to my room immediately after dinner."

There was a momentary silence after that. Both of us looked up in some surprise that the man did not answer. His face was unusually grave.

"I beg your pardon, sir," he said with a little hesitation; "I hope you'll forgive the liberty, but I have, as I was saying, something of a personal interest in that young woman. I hope she's not in any difficulty, sir. I hope that she has not been doing anything that she shouldn't have done."

"I'm inclined to think not," said the doctor, "but unless I am mistaken, she's in a difficulty."

Wilkins said nothing, but his silence was expectant. He was too well trained to ask any questions, but it was very evident that he wanted to know more.

"I think I may venture to be frank with you, Wilkins," the doctor resumed. "Of course what I say is between ourselves, and I want your promise to say nothing of it to the young woman in question."

"Yes, sir; certainly, sir."

"In the investigation of the Oak Ridge murder the other night a certain green cloak was found, which in the state attorney's office, is believed to have been worn by an unknown woman who committed that crime. That cloak was advertised as found, in the afternoon papers, and was almost immediately claimed and identified beyond a doubt by this Jane Perkins, who gave The Meredith as her address."

"She didn't do it, sir," Wilkins interrupted quickly. "I'm sure she can't be guilty of the crime of murder. She's a very quiet girl, sir—a good girl."

"I have made a little investigation of that mystery on my own account," said the doctor, "and I'm inclined to think you're right. I should, however, be glad to have some better-founded reason for that opinion. There are certain circumstances which point at her directly enough to bring her under serious suspicion and to make her a good deal of trouble. If Mr. Phelps and I can convince ourselves, in advance, of her innocence, we will gladly do all that is within our power, both in representations we will make to Mr. Ashton and otherwise, to shield her."

"That's very good of you, sir," said Wilkins. "I'll see that she's sent up to your room the moment you have finished dinner."

There was another little silence; still Wilkins kept his place beside our table. Presently, after a little apologetic cough, he spoke again.

"It strikes me, sir, that it might, perhaps, be as well if the young woman were not to know that she was to be questioned. If she is innocent, it would only fluster her, and if she is guilty, it would give her time to prepare herself. If you wish, I will arrange to have her sent to your apartments, instead of the regular chambermaid who works upon that floor, to prepare your bedrooms for the night. In that way she'll suspect nothing."

The doctor glanced at him shrewdly. "That was a very able suggestion, Wilkins. Thank you for making it."

"Not at all, sir," said Wilkins.

"For the present," the doctor concluded, "you will remember that you are to say nothing of this conversation to anyone, either to the other people in the hotel, or to—Mr. Ashton."

"Certainly not, sir."

The arrival of some other people in the dining room called him away just then, and we did not see him again until we were half through our meal. Then, looking up, we found him standing, silently, in his old place.

"The matter is arranged, sir," he said to the doctor. "The young person is at her own dinner just now, but she'll go up to attend to your rooms in about half an hour."

"Very good," said the doctor. "We can have our instruments ready by that time."

At the word "instruments" the man started, and, looking up, I found him regarding the doctor with a queer, half-frightened expression.

"Speaking of instruments, sir," he said, stammering a little, "there isn't going to be any mesmerism, or—"

The doctor interrupted him with a full-voiced laugh. "No hocus-pocus whatever, Wilkins; no black art, no clairvoyance, or anything of that sort. The instruments I speak of simply serve the purpose of a stop-watch, and the test is a perfectly simple, straightforward one."

Then, seeing that the man was still not entirely convinced, he added, "You can be present yourself, if you care to be."

"That's very good of you, sir," said the man. "On the young woman's account I will be glad to come, if you can wait until I can leave the dining room. That will be about eight-thirty, sir. I'd be sorry to keep you waiting, but she might be alarmed at any sort of test, and she has a good deal of confidence in me, sir."

"Very good," said the doctor, "only don't come up to the room with her. Follow along later, on some errand or other, and we'll call you in. Perhaps we'll make a little demonstration on you in advance, just to give her confidence."

A look of decorous amusement appeared on Wilkins' face.

"That will be very interesting, I'm sure, sir," he said. As he bowed himself away I could see that he was still smiling.

"It's curious," I observed to the doctor. "We've seen that man daily since we came here to The Meredith to live, but I got an absolutely new impression of him this evening. It never occurred to me before that when he laid aside his professional manner he might be a thoroughly human, kindly old chap, with as many affections and concerns as any of us, and with, perhaps, about the same opinion of our reality as we have always had of his."

"We'd better get on," said the doctor, "sufficing the action to the word. 'We haven't any time to waste.'"

As we walked over toward the elevator Wilkins preceded us and rang the bell for us. Just as he always did, I had it my tongue's end to make some reference to our engagement with him for a little later in the evening, not that it was necessary, but simply because it was more natural to say, "In half an hour, then," or something of that sort, than merely to nod and answer his good night. I think he must have perceived that intention, certainly he checked it by looking, just then, a little more wooden and professional than ever. I understood when I glanced over his shoulder and saw that Ashton had just come in. He was not looking our way. Whether he had made a point of not looking, I do not know; but I was glad that I had not blurted out, in his hearing, any reference to the unusual and highly unprofessional sort of engagement that the doctor and I had with Wilkins.

"A rather remarkable man," said I, as we stepped into the elevator.

The doctor nodded. "A few minutes later, in the doctor's spacious sitting room where we had set up our instruments and now sat waiting for the arrival of the subject we meant to test by them, we heard a rap at the door."

"No timidity about that," observed the doctor in a whisper, "and no efrontery, either. A plain, commonplace, professional knock. Let her in, will you, Phelps?"

It was with a mounting excitement that I crossed the room and laid my hand on the knob, for there, on the other side of that door, was one of the elements of our mystery. What would she prove to be? Another innocent person, tangled by pure chance in the spider's web of circumstance which surrounded our mystery; or would she turn out to be, herself, one of the spinners of the web?

When I opened the door I got, instantaneously, a very good view of the girl for the sitting-room was brightly lighted and the little entrance hallway where she stood comparatively dark. And that first look of mine brought a disappointment, there was no doubt of that. I had not known exactly what I had expected Jane Perkins to be like, but something different from this, certainly. The whole look of her as she stood there, an appearance so pervasive that it baffled analysis, was of stolid stupidity.

Her eyes were dull, her cheeks a very dark red, so that as I looked at her first I suspected a perfectly reckless use of cosmetic. Of course the standard I compared her by was the wild girl in the hospital, for upon the doctor's theory of Harvey's testimony, that wild girl's profile had reminded him forcibly of this English housemaid. There was a crude sort of resemblance between the two faces—the heavy brows and lashes, the black hair and general contour of the features. Indeed, the thing that occurred to me as I stood there was the ridiculous futility of written descriptions of faces, when the same description would include two people whose general air and appearance were so diametrically different.

I found it impossible to describe the wildness and curious unearthly distinction of that other face; I found it as difficult to analyze the tameness, the commonplace banality of this one. And yet, seen in silhouette, they might look a good deal alike.

"I was sent up here to do up the bedrooms, sir," she said. "Was there any mistake about it, sir?"

I realized now how "face"—and "nice" had suggested a rhyme to Harvey. She pronounced the word, "mistake," in the vilest cockney.

"No, it's quite right," said I. "Come in."

Doctor McAlister let her go straight through into the bedrooms with no more than a glance at her, and a nod in her general direction.

"Well," he said, "how about it? Does the resemblance strike you?"

"I don't think it would have struck me had I not been looking for it. But I imagine if we could get silhouettes of those two faces and put them side by side, they'd look a good deal alike."

He looked at me rather oddly, turned away and paced the length of the room a couple of times. It was one of his incongruous and unexpected characteristics that he liked to whistle or hum popular tunes to himself when he was thinking in an abstracted way. He began to do it now, though it was no popular tune which his fancy alighted on; indeed, it took me a minute or two to identify the queer, chanting cadence which he hummed over and over again. I did not identify it, in fact, until he left off humming and began to sing, and then the guttural words he used gave me the clue. It was that ghastly death chant we had heard the girl in the hospital droning and mumbling to herself.

Presently he strode over to the mantelpiece. There was a large ornamental, narrow-throated vase at the end of it, and the doctor began tapping idly enough upon the side of it with a little pearl-handled pocket knife. I turned round in some surprise.

"That sounds as if it were full of water," said I.

"It is."

"Well, who in the world can ever have thought of putting water in that vase?"

"Who, indeed?" he said. "Oh, look here, will you, Phelps? I've dropped my knife into it."

It was curiously unlike him to do an idle, clumsy thing like that, quite as unnatural as that the vase, which had never held a flower, should be full of water. But suddenly something in his face told me that the thing he had done was part of a carefully calculated trick.

The next moment he called out, "Perkins—"

"Yes, sir," came the chambermaid's voice from the next room, "Coming, sir."

As she entered the room he turned to her and indicated the vase. "I've just dropped my penknife in there," he said, "and my hand is too big to go in through the throat of it. Do you think you can fish it out for me?"

"My hand isn't as small as some, sir," she said with fat good humor "but, anyway, I can try."

"Hold on!" the doctor cried as she moved her hand toward the vase. "The thing is full of water. You'll get your sleeve wet."

I was standing close by waiting to see what would happen, still utterly at a loss for a guess as to the doctor's purpose.

The girl slipped back her sleeve and plunged her arm into the vase.

And I, unable to believe what my eyes had seen, clutched the doctor's shoulder and stared, astounded, into his thoughtful face. For high up on the girl's forearm, just inside the elbow, was a tattoo mark in red and blue—a mark that I had not forgotten.

of way, and then began singing the words.

The girl looked up at him and burst into a peal of laughter.

He stopped abruptly. "What's the matter?" he asked.

"I beg pardon, I'm sure," she said. "I couldn't help laughin'." That was such a funny lot of noises.

"Is my singing as bad as that?" he asked good-naturedly.

"Not the singin', sir; the noises that went with it."

"Oh, you mean the language. Didn't you ever hear that language before?"

"Do you call that a language sir? Does it mean anything? Do people talk like that?" Then she went on, without a pause, "I beg your pardon for bein' such a rattle, sir. And here's your knife."

She wiped it on her apron and laid it on the center table; then wiped her hand and started to pull down her sleeve.

"That's a curious bit of tattooing on your arm," the doctor commented. "How did you come by it?"

"I don't know," she replied indifferently. "It's always been there, I fancy; ever since I was too small to remember anyway. I hope your knife won't get rusty, sir. And I hope you don't mind my laughin' at that bit of song you sang."

"Not a bit," said the doctor. "I don't wonder the language struck you as queer. Yet it was common enough down in the quarter of the world where I was born."

"And where might that be, sir?" she asked.

"Oh, I meant the South Pacific generally. Where I lived was in New Zealand."

"Fancy now!" she said, obviously pleased. "That's where I come from myself—Wellington, New Zealand, but I never heard that language."

"No," he said; "you'd have to go a matter of a thousand miles or two from Wellington to hear that; it's Maori."

"I never heard of him. Is that all, sir? Shall I do up the rooms?"

He nodded; but as she turned to leave the room he called her back.

"You're rather near-sighted, aren't you, Perkins?" he said.

"Hold on!" the doctor cried as she moved her hand toward the vase. "The thing is full of water. You'll get your sleeve wet."

"Did you ever have your eyes tested?"

"Measured for glasses, do you mean, sir?" she asked. "No, sir. I shan't never come to them."

"Sit down in that chair a minute," said the doctor, with an easy assumption of authority. "No, not that one; this big chair here. I want to see if your eyes are as good as you think they are."

The chair he indicated, and in which she rather reluctantly seated herself was deep and soft and heavily upholstered. "Neither the doctor nor I enjoyed sitting in it, however, because the curve at the back thrust one's head forward at an unnatural angle."

When a man paints his house he

State News in Brief

Kalamazoo—Mark Gibbs, Oshtemo farmer, celebrated his ninety-second birthday anniversary by driving to Gull lake in his new automobile to attend a family reunion.

Detroit—Henry Valente, 19 years old, was injured when an inner tube exploded as he was filling it with air.
Valente was struck in the eye with a part of the tube. He was taken to Receiving hospital and treated.

Bay City—Elizabeth Powner, 16 years old, of West Branch, may lose the sight of her right eye because of an accident in which she was shot by a bow and arrow at West Branch.
The girl was brought to the General hospital here.

Detroit—Henry Ford was the first passenger and his son, Edsel the second passenger to ride in the Spirit of St. Louis, with Colonel Charles A.
Lindbergh, at the controls. It was also the first time the Fords have ridden in an airplane.

Lansing—A cave-in of the ceiling wrecked the interior of the Mayflower Congressional church here. Faulty workmanship at the time the church interior was remodeled recently was blamed. No one was in the building when the plaster fell.

Mt. Clemens—Fifteen per cent of Macomb County cattle have been found to be infected by tuberculosis by a staff of State and Federal inspectors under A. F. Logan, state veterinarian. This probably is the highest percentage of any county in the state, Mr. Logan said.

Grand Rapids—Suits for $35,000 have been filed in circuit court against the Schulze Baking company by Nellie Stitzer, of Muskegon and Adeline Demory, of Kalamazoo. The women were injured when an automobile in which they were riding is said to have been struck by the defendant company truck.

East Lansing—Work has been started on the new federal weather bureau station, to be constructed on the Michigan State college campus at a cost of approximately $28,000. It is more than a year since the money was made available through a special appropriations bill passed by congress.
The new building is expected to be completed in about five months.

Muskegon—False teeth are often reported lost, but lost legs are rather unusual. Police here were asked to assist in a search of an artificial leg lost by Mrs. Rose Lemay of Marinette, Wis. The false leg, and accessories were in a suit case, Mrs. Lemay said, and was believed to have been lost on the road between Muskegon and Holton.

Alma—Officials of the Republic Motor Truck Co. here announced the company had purchased the entire capital stock of the Linn Manufacturing Corporation, tractor manufacturers at Morris, N. Y. The purchase includes plant, equipment, good will and exclusive selling rights. Operation of the plant will be continued at Morris as a division of the Republic company.

Big Rapids—The farmers must work out the solutions to their problems co-operatively, Senator Woodbridge N. Ferris declared before nearly 5,000 farmers and business men at the annual co-operation picnic here. Although Congress, at its next session, is certain to go to the aid of the farmers, their problems must, of necessity, be solved largely by themselves, he said.

Lansing—Thad D. Seeley, of Pontiac, who had charge until this year of the work of negotiating for the 200-foot right of way for wider Woodward avenue between the Detroit city limits and Pontiac, has been engaged by the State Highway Department to obtain the right of way for the parallel North and South road through Birmingham. This road will include the present Grand Trunk right-of-way.

Mt. Clemens—Stricken with cramps when she jumped from a raft, Miss Catherine Zwinakas, 16 years old, a Washington high school girl, was drowned in 30 feet of water at a

ELECTRICAL JOBBERS.

GRAND RAPIDS, MICH.

December 7, 1926.

Mr. E. H. Dickey,
Manager, Michigan Bell Telephone Company,
Grand Rapids, Mich.

Dear Sir:

We are great believers in the long distance telephone for keeping practically a personal contact with our customers.

I find that when some dispute comes up between us and our customers, I can usually settle it when I talk personally to my customers over the telephone.

Also when we have something of special importance that we want to get over to a customer in a distant city, that our business is increased, due to the fact that the writer or one of the managers of our different departments uses the telephone to put the proposition before the buyer.

As stated in the first paragraph, we are great believers in the use of the long distance telephone.

Sincerely yours,
C. J. Litscher,
C. J. Litscher, P.
