43 EXAMINED FOR TUBERCULOSIS

Of 43 individuals examined at the free chest clinic held July 2 and 3 in Charlevoix, one was diagnosed as having an active case of tuberculosis by Dr. J. W. Toan, chest specialist of the Michigan Tuberculosis Ass'n.

Five others were defined as suspicious, their symptoms not being definite enough to be labelled tuberculosis. The remainder were given a clear bill of health, in the matter of tuberculosis, by the examining physician.

The examinations were given without cost to all who attended the clinic; the proceeds of the Christmas seal sale conducted last year being used to defray the expenses. The clinic nurse, in co-operation with local doctors, attempted to bring in for examination every person suspected of tuberculosis, as well as all individuals who at some time have been in close contact with a victim of the disease.

The family physicians of the persons examined at the clinic were given a full summary of the diagnosis, and those found to have positive or suspicious cases were urged to see their doctor by the clinic attendants.

Where Will He Stand?

CIRCUS DAY IN EAST JORDAN FRIDAY, AUG. 3.

With the arrival in East Jordan of Karl Knudson, contracting agent of the Walter L. Main Circus, arrangements have been completed with city officials and local merchants for the parade and exhibitions of this old-time favorite in East Jordan on Friday, August 3rd.

Mr. Knudson carries letters from Chamber of Commerce organizations, Mayors and City Clerks of various cities where the show has exhibited this season, endorsing the entertainment offered, and commenting on high-class personnel of the organization; in many instances, welcoming the show back at its earliest convenience.

He is very emphatic in his denial that circus parades have been abandoned, and claims that while one circus is too stingy to give a street parade, his managers have taken the opposite view and have increased the street pageant of the Walter L. Main circus until now it is the largest one in existence, they figure the parade is the show window of the exhibition, with exactly the same object in view that causes a merchant to display his wares; another object of the parade is to give joy to many poor children whose only glimpse of the world's wonders is the time-honored circus procession, all dens and cages are wide open, so that all may see the many animals from every clime; five brass bands dispense real music, along with the largest steam calliope ever constructed, while twenty clowns furnish the comedy.

At the circus grounds, after the parade, the visitors are entertained, while waiting for the doors to open at 1:00 o'clock, after which, an inspection of the menagerie is in order; practically every known jungle animal is represented, also many denizens of the Arctic regions, the entire collection of 563 beasts being a complete education in animal-land. At 2:00 p. m., and 8:00 p. m., the performances start and from the opening spectacle to the closing overture, the air, the rings and the track are filled with acrobats, aerialists, clowns and performing animals of all kinds, accompanied by the best band in circusdom.

Mr. Knudson informs us the Walter L. Main Circus is the only large organization booked into this territory this season; also there are none scheduled within forty miles of this city, and that his show will positively parade and exhibit here on the date above mentioned, whether rain or shine. The parade is at 11:00 a. m. The doors open at 1:00 and 7:00 p. m.

Royal Oak—Tales of big bass have been eclipsed by Russell Walker of this city. Walker reported taking an eight-pound bass from Williams Lake in Oakland County June 24. The fish may be a record for Michigan.

Adrian—Mr. and Mrs. Daniel Carpenter, of this city, celebrated the fifty-eighth anniversary of their marriage recently. Mrs. Carpenter who is 79 years old, has been a helpless invalid for 40 years. Mr. Carpenter is 83.

Berrien Springs—A monster Luffalo fish or sheepshead was caught in the St. Joseph River here by A. S. Rice, of Berrien Springs. The fish weighed 12 3/4 pounds, the biggest ever seen in this vicinity. Ordinarily the sheepshead weighs but several pounds.

Sturgis—Responding to a riot call, the police department found Pete Dunkle, clad only in his underwear, high up in a tree, trying to capture a swarm of bees. Dunkle, who has faced the court 13 times in the last few months for violating the liquor laws, is suspected of having been drunk.

Port Huron—The Port Huron-Sarnia International bridge to span the St. Clair river may be wider and larger than previously planned and may cost approximately $5,000,000 instead of the $3,500,000 or $4,000,000 as it had been tentatively estimated. Maynard D. Smith, promoter of the structure, announced here.

Detroit—A pre-July 4 celebration cost the life of Eugene Nolan, 13. The boy died in Receiving Hospital from lockjaw as the result of a cap pistol burn. He lived with his father in West Frankfort, Ill., and was here visiting his mother, Mrs. Clara Osborn. He purchased the pistol in Chicago before he started for Detroit.

Ann Arbor—Psychiatrist, will examine Mrs. Emma Deverich, woman firebug, to determine whether she is sane. Mrs. Deverich pleaded guilty in circuit court here to having set the fires which destroyed the house, barn and garage on the farm of Closser Brothers several days ago, but Judge George W. Sample refused to accept the plea.

Pontiac—Big fish still may be caught in the Detroit area as proved by William L. Vanardale, of Pontiac. Vanardale caught a 24-pound great northern pike in Buckhorn Lake near Rose Center a short time ago. The big pike was landed only after a terrific battle, and is said by anglers to constitute a record insofar as Oakland County is concerned.

Cherry Festival at Traverse City

ELABORATE PREPARATIONS BEING MADE FOR THURSDAY, JULY 19.

For some time past, Traverse City has been making preparations for a Cherry Festival to be held in that city next Thursday, July 19th.

As East Jordan is the center of a fast developing cherry-growing region, our citizens have more than a passing interest in this event and it is safe to predict that this section will have a large representation of citizens at this celebration.

The complete program has not been completed, but in part will consist of the following—

11:00 a. m.—Mammouth Street Parade with over eighty floats. A special decorator has been secured to supervise this feature.

2:00 p. m.—Base Ball Game, Cadillac vs. Traverse City. This is of especial interest to East Jordan base ball fans as both the opposing twirlers are graduates of the East Jordan diamond. Jack Gunderson will pitch for Cadillac, and Al Tolles for the Traverse City team.

The closing event of the day will be a dinner dance that evening at the Country Club that will be labelled 'The Governor's Ball.' This will be an informal affair in honor of Gov. Fred W. Green. Dancing will follow the dinner program.

East Jordan to Have Candidate for Festival Queen.

On Wednesday the Festival management phoned The Herald and extended an invitation to East Jordan to send a representative to compete for Festival Queen honors. At a meeting of our Business Men's Club Wednesday evening, Miss Virginia Pray, daughter of Dr. and Mrs. C. H. Pray, was selected to represent our City. The judging will be made this Friday evening at Traverse City by five artists.

"A YEAR OF REJOICING AT EAST JORDAN"

Under the above caption the Michigan Christian Advocate, official organ of the Methodist Episcopal Church, ran the following article relative to the East Jordan Church. The article was featured with pictures of the local church and parsonage, and the Pastor.

Where there are a lot of wills working in unison there is always a way. That tells how East Jordan was able to rebuild after its disastrous fire, dedicating a year ago one of the neatest Churches in the north country.

How refreshing to read the story of a church that could and did when the times were not the best and the skies not the brightest.

Pastor V. J. Hufton kept telling the people, "We-Can," and they believed him and did it. Now they are preparing to celebrate on July 22nd, inviting the editor up to see the miracle for himself. We do not get many letters like this one from Pastor Hufton:

The Letter
"The church cost $7,200 and we took pledges covering three years.

"An extraordinary thing has happened. In nine months more money was paid into the building fund than was pledged to be paid in three years and we still have a number of good pledges. I only asked one person for a pledge. The World-Service Bulletin, with local matter on Rotosped, sent through the mail, speeded up the payments.

"An army of rural mail carriers will hold a Convention in East Jordan, commencing July 24.

"William Snyder, Rudolph Best, and V. J. Hufton were on the building committee. Dr. L. R. Eckhart of DePauw preached the dedicatory sermon last July.

"Earl Clark is Chairman of the official board, Roy E. Webster, Treasurer.

"I planned not to send in pictures of the church until paid for, as some thought the next generation would have to pay if we built again. The parsonage was painted at the same time as the church."

Let us all rejoice with East Jordan on July 22nd recall the fact that there is on record one church that paid up its three year pledges in one year.

Ancient Door Restored

An ancient door belonging to Elgin Cathedral at Elgin, Scotland, has been re-erected in its original position in the cathedral ruins. The door was in use in an adjacent building known as the bishop's palace, and a local donor offered to move it and erect another in its place in the bishop's palace.

The New York total was 81,742, the third state in line being California with 21,831.

RELIEF FROM CURSE OF CONSTIPATION

A Battle Creek physician says, "Constipation is responsible for more misery than any other cause."

But immediate relief has been found. A tablet called Rexall Orderlies has been discovered. This tablet attracts water from the system into the lazy, dry, evacuating bowel called the colon. The water loosens the dry food waste and causes a gentle, thorough, natural movement without forming a habit or ever increasing the dose.

Stop suffering from constipation. Chew a Rexall Orderlie at night. Next day bright. Get 24 for 25c today at the nearest Rexall Drug Store, adv.

Medieval Versus Modern Student Life
 By THOMAS ARKLE CLARK
 Dean of Men, University of Illinois.

PROFESSOR ROBERT F. SEYHOLT of the University of Illinois has just made a translation of a series of school dialogues written by one Peter Schade, professor of Greek in the University of Leipzig in 1517.
 These paragraphs are not intended as a review of the book but simply to show how little the point of view of the modern student has changed from that held by students four hundred years ago. They employed the same tricks. In Leipzig in the early sixteenth century as are employed today —they had much the same round of amusements, the same critical attitude toward their teachers and the courses of study they were required to pursue, and got into scholastic and moral difficulties similar to those the modern Middle West student or today encounters. Translated into present day vernacular the students at Leipzig in 1500 might very well have been walking up John street at the University of Illinois or in front of the Union building at Ann Arbor discussing the latest show at the Orpheum or picking up pieces of the last lecture in Latin.

"What are you going to do tonight?"
 the undergraduate asks another.
 "Oh! go to a show. I suppose."
 "Anything new in town?"
 "Same old stuff we've been used to all year—dancing, performing bear, you know the kind. You'd better come and go along."
 "I'd like to but I'm broke."
 "Oh! we can beat our way in. I know the door man, and he'll let us by."
 These aren't the exact words but put into Twentieth century language the meaning is the same. Pleasure and pull were as much in the young fellow's mind then as now.

There was discussion on the food they were getting, which was evidently considerably more meager then than now, for the medieval student had little ready money to spend on anything and depended largely on chance or charity for something to eat. There was discussion of the landlady who was not always to the liking of her lodgers, and there was as much interest in the Christmas holiday as there is today among those undergraduates who no matter how low the vacation may be, always make a strenuous effort to have it longer.

"This is the day when the committee on discipline meets," one boy says to another as they are walking along the street.
 "What do they do?" the other inquires, being newly arrived and not familiar with college customs.
 "They bring you to trial for violating some of the college regulations and fire you if you are guilty."
 "How can they know what we do, they surely are not so wise."
 "Oh! they have spies who follow us around, see what we do, and then report to the faculty."
 The statement probably had as much basis of truth then as it has today, or had when I was in college and heard the same things said. No undergraduate has ever given a professor credit for intelligence enough to know what was going on in undergraduate life unless some one told him.

In spite of the doctor's attitude and my own fears, I cannot see today that a dispassionate examination of the evidence would really involve me.

Gordon saw a man enter the gun room window, and was attacked from the kitchen by that man. It must be perfectly evident to Greenough, on hearing the doctor's story, that had I for any reason desired to make some nefarious entrance into the house, I need not have resorted to a window. I have keys to every door, and can produce them.

Thomas, however, who seems to have his own methods of acquiring information, today tells a fact which, in my ignorance of such matters, I had not noticed last night. He states that the doctor reports the boy as having been tied in the same manner as poor Carroway; in two half-bites around the wrists, a turn or two about the body and arms, and ending in two half-bites at the ankle.

The rope, it appears, was not brought for the purpose, but had been left lying on the top of Annie Cochran's laundry basket in the kitchen, when she went home last night.

Later, Greenough and Doctor Hayward have driven past, on their way to the main house. I have telephoned to Halliday, and he is on his way here. I may need him.

July 28

After all, things passed off yesterday better than I had hoped. The detective concedes that, while in daylight it is a simple matter to reach the main house from the sun-dial, it is not an easy one at night. And I think he was puzzled when I said:

"After all, the real mystery to me is how Doctor Hayward, who says he was passing on the main road in his car, could reach the house so soon after I did."

"He had his car."

"But he didn't drive in. You left it outside the Lodge gates, doctor, didn't you?"

"I didn't know just where the bell was ringing."

"But you know there was such a bell on the main house. Every one around here knows it. Even at that you made very good time. I had only had time to light one match and see the boy, when you turned your flashlight on me."

I imagine, and Halliday agrees with me, that whatever Greenough had in mind when he came, the new element thus introduced caused him to hesitate. And to add to his hesitation, the doctor, from the breezy unconsciousness of his entrance, took to twitching and gnawing his finger tips.

"I don't suppose you are intimating that I knocked the boy down, Porter," he said, "but it sounds like it. As a matter of fact, I didn't even know him; never saw him, to my knowledge, until last night."

"I'm not intimating anything. I'm in a peculiar position; that's all. And you have been considerably more than intimating that I was where I had no business to be last night. I had, you see, exactly as much reason to be there as you had. Rather more, I imagine."

"I was perhaps a trifle excited, but heaven knows I had a right to be."

"I know what you have in your mind, Mr. Greenough, and I'm glad to have this chance to lay my cards on the table. Ask my wife why I was on the boat, the night Carroway was killed in the bay. She'll tell you I was in bed, until she roused me and sent me down to the beach. Ask Peter Geils where I was at the hour when Halliday was attacked; he can tell you. Ask the newspaper reporter who told me, right here, about that culvert under the road where Halliday's car overturned; and ask Halliday himself about our excursion to examine it, and my losing my fountain pen there. And then ask yourself if I would open the gun-room window of the main house to make an entrance when I have in this desk a key to every door in the place."

Greenough smiled dryly. "That's a pretty strong defense, considering that you haven't been accused," he said. "As a matter of fact, we hadn't found your fountain pen. Mr. Porter, I'm afraid we overlooked something there."

Since they have gone, I feel, although he has not said so, that Halliday believes I have made a tactical error. Nevertheless, I feel a great sense of relief. I have at least made a hole in that web of circumstantial evidence which has seemed to be closing around me, and sent the detective scurrying back to the center of it again, to spin such new threads as he is able.

July 29

Today has been quiet. Those constant reminders of the latest tragedy, the boats dragging the bay, have disappeared, and once more we see gay little picnic parties chugging across the water to Robinson's point or thereabouts, laden with hampers and I dare say, with flasks.

Jane and I took a brief walk this afternoon, and noticed a man clearing the woods on Nylle's farm, across the road. We stopped and watched him for a time, and he seemed curiously inexpert at the job. But perhaps I am too ready to suspect Greenough's fine hand in everything I see.

Young Gordon, although still confined to his room, is up and about again.

Today I asked Hayward, who had been to see him, if I might visit him, but he shook his head.

"He is still in an excitable condition," he said. "Better give him a day or two more."

As, however, Annie Cochran reports him in excellent shape, although moody and irritable, I can only feel that the doctor has his own reasons for keeping him away from him. At the same time, I must be careful not to allow suspicion to carry me too far. Mr. Bethel states flatly that the boy has no idea of who attacked him and himself suggests Thomas!

My talk with Mr. Bethel last night was interesting and not without an unusual quality of its own. He chose to be civil, and rather more than that I felt that the alarm of my entrance over, he not only greeted me with a sense of relief, but kept me as long as possible. My last impression of him is of a helpless and yet indefinitely militant figure in a dimly lighted room, sitting upright in his chair, one withered hand palm upward, on his knee, and the other not too far from a revolver.

I am puzzled over that picture, as I am over the one which I saw from the terrace window, as I approached. He gave the same impression then as he did when I left, of a man sitting waiting for something.

As I looked in at him, he was facing toward the hall and the dining-room door, directly across, with a concentration so great that my light tap at first did not reach his ears. And during the entire conversation which followed, every now and again I was conscious of a sudden abstraction on his part: an intent listening, that made me nervous in spite of myself.

I gather that, like young Gordon, he has heard certain sounds in the house at night, but does not intend to be stamped by them, to use his own words. He has some theory of a disturbance of molecular activity, by some undiscovered natural law, which I could not follow closely. But in the discussion of superstition in general which followed, I was a trifle disconcerted to find him laying much of it to the Christian religion; that our present theology had given birth to the widespread belief in evil spirits and in sorcery.

Strangely enough, I had at that moment one of those curious sensations which I have heard referred to as a failure of the two sides of the brain to synchronize.

I had the feeling that sometime, somewhere, eons ago, I had sat in a dimly lighted room and heard those same words. And that I had had the same instinctive revolt from them.

But the impression was fleeting, and seeing perhaps that our views did not coincide, he added that I must not believe that he disregarded the spiritual side of the individual, or of the universe.

"Soul animating matter!" he said. "It is a great thought, Mr. Porter. And I have reached that time in life when what is to come is assuming more importance than that which has gone."

Then he dismissed the subject, and went back again to the local situation, this time taking up the crimes themselves. He sees no necessary connection between the disappearance of Muggie Morrison and the tragedy of Carroway, on this I did not enlighten him.

As to the strange affair of the attack on Gordon, he himself with Annie Cochran's assistance, examined the gun room the next morning. The lock of the window was broken, but he fancied that was a matter of old standing. He was having it repaired.

"The boy's story seems to be borne out by the facts," he said. "There were indications, as you probably know, that some one had entered by the window. But what strikes me as strange is that whoever did so should have known his way so well. Gordon says no light was turned on, yet this fellow puts his hand on the only weapon about, the poker, without difficulty." He turned and glanced at me. "How long have you known Thomas, the gardener?" he asked.

"Too long to think he would do a thing like that," I said, rather warmly. "I dare say. And, although I think Thomas is not fond of Gordon, that would be carrying a distaste rather far, I imagine."

He has no anxiety for himself, or at least so he said; I am personally not so certain. For as I looked back from the terrace on my way out, he was once more facing toward the hall—and I somehow felt—watching it.

July 30

I have today borrowed some of Mrs. Livingstone's books on psychic research, and intend to go into them thoroughly. If there is any proof in a mass of evidence, it is certainly here.

On the other hand, one must remember that the hope of survival is the strongest desire of the human heart. How many, if they felt that this life was all, would care to go on with it?

Analyzing my last night's experience, however, I can find nothing in my mind before I went to sleep, to account for it. I ate a light dinner, and spent the evening after Jane retired, with this journal. The night was quiet, and my last waking thought was concerning the wood-cutter across the road, who seems so singularly inactive except when some one leaves the Lodge, or appears at one of its windows.

One thing I have traced, however. It is distinctly possible that the herbal, aromatic odor I noticed at the end of the experience was due to the leaves he collected yesterday, and which I find have smoldered throughout the night.

It was after midnight when, just as I was dozing off, Jane came to my door and asked me if I would mind sleeping in her room.

"I can fix you a bed on the couch," she said, avoiding my eyes. "I'm nervous tonight, for some reason."

I went at once, trailing my bedding with me, and while she prepared the couch I observed her. She was very white, and I saw that her hands were shaking, but she refused my offer of some brandy with her usual evasive answer.

"I'm all right," she said. "I just don't like being alone."

She fell asleep almost at once, like one exhausted, but the change of beds had fully roused me, and I lay for some time staring into the darkness. I do not know when it was that I began to have the feeling that we were not alone in the room, but I imagine fully half an hour had passed.

I saw nothing, but I had the sensation of being stealthily watched, and with it something of horror rather than of fear. I was right with it. Then something seemed to tug at my coverings, and the next moment they had slid to the floor. Almost immediately after that there came a rush of air through the room, a curtain billowed over my face, and the door into the hall swung open. Then all was silent, save for a low whine from Jack outside in the hall.

How much of this today to allot to my nerves I do not know. Undoubtedly Jane's nervousness had affected me; equally undoubtedly bed clothing has a tendency to slip from a couch. I have experimented today. A gale of wind would blow out a curtain and open an unlatched door.

On the other hand, I am as certain today as I have been certain of any thing recently, that I had bolted the door when I entered the room. But it was not bolted in the morning.

If I have indeed actually had a psychic experience, it seems singularly purposeless. Up to this time I have imagined, correctly or not, that these inexplicable occurrences have had a concealed but definite objective. If such a phrase may be used. But in this case there is apparently nothing. We have had, however, a development of our own, and this from Edith!

It appears that this morning, seeing Doctor Hayward pass on his round of morning calls, she went to his office and, on his housekeeper reporting him out, asked permission to go into his office and there leave him a note.

"A note?" I inquired. "What sort of a note?"

"Any sort of note," said Edith. "As it happens, I asked him to tea tomorrow. It was all I could think of."

But what she really did was to type a few lines on his typewriter, tear the paper out and put it in the small vanity case which is as much a part of her as the nose she powders from it. (As a net result of which audacious performance Halliday now informs me that the cipher words were not written on the doctor's machine.)

Halliday has found the boat.

At least he has found a boat which answers Jane's description. Today he took me to see it.

It lies in the small creek which extends through the marsh half a mile north of the boathouse, and just beyond Robinson's point.

The boat, evidently an old and abandoned one, gives some evidence of recent use. That is, although it contains some water, there is very little, whereas, as Halliday says, after the recent rains it might well be full.

The oarlocks are wrapped with dingy-white cotton cloth, and to prevent their being stolen, or the boat taken away, the oars had been skillfully hidden in the marsh. Halliday located them but left them as they were; but with his penknife he cut away a small bit of the muffling on the oarlock, for later possible identification.

It was in this boat, Halliday believes that the murderer fled onto the bay from our slip the night Carroway discovered him, and from it too that he later climbed into Carroway's launch and attacked him.

Small wonder that the boy's face set hard as he examined it.

Yet, for one must find some humor nowadays or go mad, there was something humorous in the careful indirection by which we reached it. We made rather ostentatious preparations to go fishing, Halliday working with hooks and sinkers, and I hopelessly entangled in coils of line.

Later, we rowed across the bay and anchored by the whistle buoy, where we fished assiduously for some time. Our approach to the mouth of the creek was therefore of a most desultory sort, but once around Robinson's point, we abandoned caution and rowed rapidly.

Had Greenough been able to see us, from start to finish, he would have had some basis for his suspicious of me.

Whether Halliday's later discovery has any significance or not we are not certain. Believing that, on the night of the girl's murder she was brought in the truck to the water front, and coupling this with the finding of the boat, he left me sheltered from observation in the woodland and started through it toward the main road.

In a half hour or so he came back again, and reported that he had found the track of wheels driven through the woods, and that in one place a barbed wire fence had been taken down and boards placed over it, to permit the passage of a car across it.

This, I imagine, fair presumptive evidence, although it brings us no nearer the identity of the criminal than we were before. One thing, however, may be valuable. Edith, who knows a number of unsuspected householdly things, insists that the strips which wrapped the oarlocks are of a fine grade of material.

"Look for somebody," she says, "who uses linen sheets on his bed, and doesn't care that they cost twenty-five dollars a pair nowadays."

From which I gather, among other things, that our little Edith has been pricing the equipment of a home.

Tonight that old sea-chest which in the boathouse holds on its top the law books which were to occupy Halliday's leisure this summer, and which so far seem to be used chiefly to hold open his doors on windy days—the old sea-chest contains to date the four clues which are our sole ammunition in the putative expedition against Greenough. They are:

(a) Half of a broken lens from a pair of eye-glasses.

(b) A scrap of paper, containing a cryptic bit of typing in large and small letters.

(c) The small cap of an ether can.

(d) A fragment of white cloth.

Had it not been for Halliday's unwittingly placing a weapon in the enemy's hands we should also have had:

(e) A very sharp knife, with a plain wooden handle and a blade approximately six-inches long.

August 1

An incendiary fire was started beneath the boathouse last night, or rather toward morning. An assessment of what was apparently oil-soaked waste was placed in one of the pails from the sloop, and a candle lighted and placed in it. Over this was laid such lumber as was left from the repair of the pier.

Had Halliday been asleep the entire building might have burned. As it happened, he had been in the woods near where we found the boat, on a chance that its proprietor might pay a visit. He discovered the fire from some distance and by hard running, reached it in time to extinguish it.

He notified Greenough early this morning, but the gentleman was extremely noncommittal. He stood with his hands in his pockets, kicking over the ashes of the fire.

"What's the big idea, Mr. Halliday?" he inquired.

"I don't get that," said Halliday, belligerently.

"Don't you?" said Greenough, and after kicking the ashes once more, took an untroubled departure.

The best we can make of that is that the detective believes the whole thing a clumsy but concerted plan, on Halliday's part and mine; that we have endeavored to show that, although his watchers would be able to testify that I had not left the house last night, the unknown is still at work.

Nor can I entirely blame him for that. Whoever built the fire knew that Halliday was out at the time. But Halliday could not so state without betraying his knowledge of the boat, a matter he wishes to keep to himself as long as possible.

A new month begins today, and like Pepsy, it behooves me to take stock of myself. In spite of my best endeavors, some of my anxiety has crept into this record during the last month; and not always anxiety for myself. Alone, I could take off my coat and fight this thing out, but I am handicapped by Edith and Jane.

Edith will not go and leave Halliday; Jane will not consider abandoning me here, although she has no idea of the true situation.

I have, I feel, a responsibility I cannot evade. The responsibility to my tenant. I have, by a reduced rent and an alluring advertisement, brought here an elderly paralytic and his young secretary. And, evade the issue as I may, the fact remains that the last two acts of violence have been on my property. From the beginning, indeed, the most casual survey of the situation shows me that Twin Hollows has been a sort of focal point. It was on this property that Nylle saw the sheep-killer hunt sanctuary; not on it, but adjacent to it, is still hidden the boat, and it was from my own boat that he first escaped from Carroway and later killed him; it was even very possibly his flashlight that Halliday saw, the night of his arrival when, finding the boathouse occupied, he worked his way through the salt marsh toward the sea.

More recently the radius of his activity has been narrowed to the property itself. The secretary sees him outside a window; he enters the house and attacks him from within. And a few days later, possibly having overseen Halliday's discovery of his boat, he attempts to drive him away by setting fire to the boathouse.

I am tempted to ask Mr. Bethel to cancel his lease; to return him his money, entire, and relieve me of responsibility.

What would he say, I wonder?

August 2

I have been reading Mrs. Livingstone's books, and a pretty lot of nonsense I find them. If there is any thing in this question of survival, surely we cannot expect to find it in physical phenomena. Why not better accept that the nervous force which actuates the body may, in certain individuals, extend beyond the periphery of that body?

Nevertheless, it is as well that I brought away from the other house the book I found there on the desk, on "Eugenia Riggs and the Oakville Phenomena." It is no reading for Mr. Bethel, under the circumstances.

One finds, for instance, that the small paneled room which we call the den was used for her seances. That paneled in itself sounds suspicious. But stop! It was not paneled at that time; I recall when poor old Florence found that oak paneled and gleefully installed it in what had been the old kitchen of the original farm-house.

An investigation, made just now has supplemented my memory. The photograph (Note: Plate I, "Eugenia Riggs and the Oakville Phenomena") shows a plastered wall, and one or two crude water colors on it. Possibly the spirit paintings of the text.

It also shows that the cabinet, so-called, was not a cabinet at all, but a dark curtain on a heavy pole, which extends across a blank corner. In the picture these curtains are thrown back, showing a small stand on which are the stage properties of "George," a bell, a pan of something, a glass, and a small bunch of flowers. On the floor, ready for his ghostly hand, is a guitar. The wall is certainly plastered.

An inset shows the pan, set on its edge to allow photography, and with the title: "Imprint of hand in putty; Dec. 2nd, 1902. Notice lack of usual whorls and ridges." But in spite of this rather militant caption, I find I am unimpressed. Rather am I wondering whether somewhere in the background there was not a Mr. Riggs, with a short broad thumb and a bent little finger, who was not ignorant of the lack of the usual whorls and ridges in a pair of rubber gloves.

But, considering that plastered walls are everywhere, and that the entire evidence in the book, gathered together, forms a surprising whole. One must take off one's hat to the Riggs family, provided there were two of them, or to whomsoever assisted the lady. Especially since the windows were shattered and bolted, and small strings of bells, which would ring at the slightest touch, were hung across them."

August 3

Halliday, who is an early riser, burst in on us this morning at the breakfast table, fairly bristling with excitement.

"Good morning, everybody!" he sang out. "What do I receive for a piece of very cheering news? Greenough's gone. Benchley came over yesterday and threw him out of the case. At least, that's what they say at the post office. Thirteen days he's been fooling around, and he couldn't get over the hump."

"If only he had stayed a little longer," Edith said, regretfully, "and somebody had killed him! It's rotten bad luck, that's all!"

The conversation had little or no meaning for Jane. She was, I could see, puzzled by our excitement and unable to understand our relief. "Surely they have left somebody," she said. "We ought not to be left without protection. Who knows when something will break out again, and then where are we?"

"Where indeed?" said Halliday. The move is a totally unexpected one. Yesterday, as Halliday said, the sheriff came over to the hotel and was closeted for an hour or two with Greenough. A bellboy reports that, on carrying some cracked ice to the room, he found Greenough sitting morosely by a table, and Benchley at the window, staring out. Half an hour later the sheriff left, passing out of the hotel without so much as a nod to anyone, and within the hour Greenough was paying his bill in the lobby, and ordering a car to take him to the train.

Our own relief is enormous, but there is much grumbling among the summer folk as well as the natives. Starr is the usual variety of small-town constable, and it seems extraordinary that the case should be left in his care. It is of course possible that another man is to be sent in Greenough's place, but if so we have no intimation of it.

The immediate result of Greenough's departure has been rather to revive the interest in the situation than otherwise. I dare say as long as the police were on the case the people more or less lay back and depended on them; now they are thrown once more onto their own resources, and a variety of opinions and even of clues are being exchanged at that central clearing house, the post office. Thus: This morning the cows of a man named Vaughan were found huddled in a corner of the field, giving every evidence of having been run to death during the night.

(To the common sense suggestion of a dog being the culprit, pitying glances.)

A stranger three days ago tried to buy a large knife in the hardware store.

(Later shown to be the Livingstone's new butler seeking a carving knife.)

The second keeper at the lighthouse has resigned, declaring the tower is haunted.

Bradley, of Bellevue, who had borrowed a friend's car to return home after losing his own machine, recognized the car and took Harris to a nearby farm house where he notified officers.

Grand Rapids—When fire broke out at Sunday morning services not a member of a congregation of 500 persons at Bethel Reformed church left the building while firemen extinguished a blaze in the basement of the church, which originated from a short circuit in the organ. The fire was discovered soon after the organ stopped playing and smoke began filling the church. While the janitor hastened to locate the fire, the pastor, Rev. John Van Wyck, began preaching and continued his sermon as the firemen worked.

(This is true, so far as the resignation goes. He has it appears, asked to be transferred. But Ward says there has been no repetition of the strange affair the night of the storm.)

A car driven recklessly and, without lights has been seen twice near the Hillburn road, both times after midnight.

(There seems a certain authenticity in this; the car, however, shows its lights until fairly close to another car, when it shuts them off entirely. There may be, of course, some defect in the dimmers.)

My own relief is beyond words. Looking in my shaving mirror today I am startled at the change in me the last few weeks. The Learns are coming out to dinner tonight. More power to them.

August 4.

The party last night was a great success. Lear had brought me out a bottle of claret, and with candles on the table and six wine glasses, hastily borrowed from Annie Cochran at the main house, we took on quite a festive air.

Edith and Halliday for the Boathouse and a Canoe.

We divided after the meal, Jane and Helena to talk, Edith and Halliday for the boathouse and a canoe, and Lear and I to pace the drive with our cigars.

Lear's quiet face and general dependability, and perhaps the need of a fresh mind on the conditions here, impelled me to tell my story, to which he listened without interruption.

His opinion is that we have to do with a homelike maniac, and that the sheep-killing was preliminary to the rest. "A propitiation," he puts it. The supernatural angle of the case he put aside with a gesture.

"I won't even argue it," he said. "There may be something to it; I'm not denying that. But it's not stuff to be meddled with; when the Lord means to open that veil he will do it. And I am no peeping Tom."

He said further that Helena has taken up the ouija board, and sits for hours "with anyone she can entrap," getting absurd messages which sound well and mean nothing.

"In your place," he said, "I would forget it. If you get really to the point where you think you have something, send for Cameron and let him look into it. But keep out of it yourself, Porter. It's bad medicine."

I took them to the eleven o'clock train, and have only just returned. But I think it would amuse Lear. In spite of his hands-off attitude, to know that as I drove into the garage and shut off the lights and the engine, in the very act of getting out of the car I heard once more that peculiar dry cough, the faint slow footfall and smelled again that curious herbal odor which I shall, all the days of my life, associate with my Uncle Horace.

So unexpected was it, coming on top of the happiest evening of the summer, that I stood for a moment immovable. Then I leaped from the terrifying darkness of the garage out into the moonlight, and there confronted young Gordon, standing out side and quietly smoking.

"Hello!" I said, when I could speak. "Out again, I see."

"Yes. That place gets my goat," he replied. "I guess I'm jumpy, since the other night."

He looked bad, and I asked him if he cared to sit down before starting back. But he refused.

"I'll get it if he finds I've left the house," he said elegantly.

I turned and walked back with him toward the house, and seeing him secretly amused about something, asked him what it was, whereupon he said that he was thinking of the way I had shot out of the garage.

"Put something over on you there, didn't it?"

"You startled me. What do you mean?"

"I guess you know," he said, with his side-long glance. "That cough."

"You mean, the lighthouse story?"

He fell again into one of his secret convulsions of mirth.

"No, I don't mean the lighthouse," he said, and turning abruptly, struck off through the trees.

I can take from this as much or as little as I will. Is it possible that Gordon has heard the cough in the house, and associates it with the other sounds of which he has complained to Annie Cochran? Or has he merely been told of it, and with his perverted idea of humor, been deliberately alarming me with it?

August 5.
Annie Cochran declares that young Gordon has been in the habit of slipping out of the house at night; that he commenced to do it shortly after his arrival, and has done it ever since; that, indeed, he was not sitting on the kitchen steps before he was attacked, but had been out in the car, and was trying to get back into the house.

She also believes that Mr. Bethel suspects it, and has been on the alert, especially since the night of the attack.

"There's been bad blood between them, ever since that night," she said. "They talk a bit when I'm in the dining room, but once I'm out of it, they're as glum as oysters."

She also suspects Mr. Bethel of being afraid of Gordon. On the nights when she assisted him upstairs, while the secretary was still invalided, she always heard him bolt his door as soon as he was inside.

"And the nights he stayed down," she added, "he had me bring down that revolver of his. He laid it to the fellow who got in by the gun room window, but I've got my own ideas about it."

"What makes you think Gordon had been off the place, the night he was hurt?"

"He said he couldn't sleep, didn't he? And he got up and went downstairs to get something to eat, and then went outside?"

"So he said."

"Well, as far as I can make out, he was dressed from top to toe. He didn't need to do that to get down to the pantry."

And we had missed that! Hayward Greenough and I had checked up that story, according to our several abilities, and had never noticed that discrepancy. "I sent his clothes to be cleaned the next day," she said, "and I noticed it then."

But her real contribution, if I may call it that, lay in the garage, and after tip-toeing to the hall and listening to the sound of Mr. Bethel's dictation from within, she drew me outside.

"So far as I know," she said, "that car's only been out twice since they came, and that was to take Thomas home one time, and me another, the night of the storm. But it's been out just the same."

"Wouldn't the old man hear it?"

"He might and he might not. Suppose it was rolled along the lane and started? He wouldn't hear it there would he?"

To support her contention she showed me a number of marks in the lane, certainly suspicious but by no means evidential. It is nothing unusual for motorists to strike into the woodland along the lane, under the impression that it is a public road and to be brought up all standing at the house.

But against all this, at least as pointing to young Gordon as our possible criminal, is what is to me an insuperable obstacle. We know that the crimes are connected with the killing of the sheep. It is not possible to doubt this. And the sheep were killed and the altar built before Mr. Bethel brought Gordon into the neighborhood. Annie Cochran has a certain support for her contention, but not enough.

And she dislikes the boy extremely. Probably she unwittingly revealed the reason for her attack on him just before I left.

"There's something wrong about him," she said. "When a man's dishonest he thinks everybody else is. He's taken to locking his room and carrying the key about with him. I never took a thing of anybody else's in my life."

As Halliday went to town early today, taking the scrap of paper with the cipher to an expert he knows there, I have not been able to discuss this new angle with him. Quite aside from the discrepancy in dates, however, Gordon not arriving until after the reign of terror was well under way, the chief stumbling block is the attack on the boy himself.

Suppose the boy does slip out at night, and take the car? He is young and I imagine pretty much a prisoner all day. He takes dictation all morning, types after luncheon while Mr. Bethel sleeps, and at four o'clock again is ready with his book and pencil. The few moments he has spent with Edith now and then are plainly stolen.
