Lost Girl Puzzles Officers

13-YEAR-OLD GIRL FOUND WANDERING NEAR ALBA.

Bellaire, Aug. 7.—Antrim officers are seeking tonight the identity of a 13-year-old girl who last night stumbled into the home of Lem Paxson, farmer, living six miles east of Alba, in a dazed condition, her clothes torn almost from her body.

She told Paxson her name was Alice Stevenson and that she lived in Mancelona. Inquiries at Mancelona failed to reveal anyone who knew a girl by that name, and Paxson called Deputy Sheriff Barney Mitchell, who took the girl to the detention home at Bellaire. Today Mitchell took her to Mancelona, but no one could identify her, and the name Alice Stevenson was not found on the school records.

Officers think the girl had gone berrying and been lost, and that fright had robbed her of memory, or that she has been drugged and taken from her home. She appears badly frightened. A call has been sent to Sheriffs in neighboring counties, but no one has been asked to find a missing girl.

An effort will be made to find her family tomorrow. She says that she has lived both in Petoskey and in Mancelona.—Grand Rapids Herald.

RULES GOVERNING STATE CAMP SITES

Lansing, Aug. 7th.—Many residents of Michigan and a larger number of tourists from outside the State are not familiar with the fact that this year the conservation department has a definite set of rules governing the use and occupancy of the lands under its control. There have been instances in the past when valuable State property was seriously damaged or mis-treated by private parties using the State land for camping sites.

New notices, stating the regulations and the penalty for violation, have recently been posted in conspicuous places throughout the Northern counties. The seven rules are:

- 1.—Unlawful to camp or otherwise occupy such lands for more than 15 days without written authority.
  - 2.—Unlawful to deposit and leave papers, tin cans, offal, refuse, and other rubbish after camping or other occupancy, or to deposit same in streams or lakes.
  - 3.—Unlawful to occupy lands for camping without providing for latrine and covering same before leaving.
  - 4.—Unlawful to remove trees, shrubs, plants, sand gravel, or material without authority of authorized representative of conservation department.
  - 5.—Unlawful to mutilate or destroy live trees, or to carve, peel or otherwise deface bark of same.
  - 6.—Unlawful to mutilate or deface department of conservation signs, posters or notices, or other State signs or notices.
  - 7.—Unlawful to build fire without proper provision to prevent spreading or to leave premises temporarily or permanently while fire is burning.
- The penalty for violation of these rules and regulations is $100.00 fine or less, or imprisonment for 30 days or less, or both fine and imprisonment.

Bouffant Gown

Black is one of the favored colors in chiffons, tulle, lace and taffeta as well as the heavy mousseline in gowns of the type that stand alone.

Doris Kenyon chooses a charmingly designed bouffant gown in black to wear in "The Hawk's Nest." It is strikingly executed and adds a colorful note in the cherry red velvet ribbon trimming as well as the novel bunches of cherries used as decorations in place of flowers.

Beg Your Pardon

Kind Sir:—Will you correct the item in last week's Peninsula news. It was a board that come off the wagon rack that hit the horses, instead of me using a pitch fork on them, as it was reported.

CLARENCE JOHNSTON.

Michigan near Epoufette Bay, opening the season on muskrats from November 15 to December 15 throughout the state and closing season on partridge and prairie chicken for another year were authorized by the state conservation commission in session at Camp Newton, near Seney.

Manistee—One woman was injured fatally, and five others seriously hurt when a bumble bee flew into an automobile on U. S. highway 31. Mrs. Frank E. Jones, Chicago, died as a result of a severed jugular vein. Frank E. Jones, her husband, driving the machine; three daughters, and William Hunt, also of Chicago, were brought to Mercy hospital here. The party was en route to Chicago from Petoskey. The bee distracted Jones, who ran the machine off the road and down an embankment.

Battle Creek—More than 5,000 farmers of southern Michigan are expected to attend the formal dedication of the Kellogg Agricultural demonstration farm as a unit of the Michigan State College Saturday, August 11. The farm, consisting of 525 acres, is located about 12 miles northwest of this city, near Gull Lake. It was recently presented to the college by W. K. Kellogg, millionaire manufacturer of this city. An all day program of instruction and entertainment will be prepared for the dedication.

East Lansing—The codling moth, which attacks winter apple and pear varieties but does not harm those of fall and summer, has made its appearance in Washtenaw County. Prof. R. H. Pettit, head of the entomology department of Michigan State College, announced here. Prof. Pettit recommends a final arsenic spray for the second generation, to be completed before August 9. This advice was issued to growers in Jackson, Washtenaw, Wayne, St. Joseph, Branch, Hillsdale, Lenawee and Monroe Counties.

Lansing—Michigan retained third place in the manufacture of dairy products in 1927, although production was under that for 1926, the Bureau of Dairying announced in its biennial report. Milk production increased slightly in 1927, but there was a marked increase in consumption of whole milk, which limited the supply for manufacturing purposes. The decline was especially noticeable in butter, cheese and condensed milk, but not heavy for any. More than half of all milk produced was consumed as whole milk.

It is hard for some men to say just what they mean, but it is harder for others to mean what they say.

DEATH CLAIMS HENRY E. SHELDON

Henry E. Sheldon passed away at the County Farm, Saturday, Aug. 4, following an illness of several months. Mr. Sheldon was among the early settlers of Charlevoix County. He was born May 28, 1848, at Taylor Center, Wayne County, Mich. When a young man he came to this County, locating at Iron-ton. About fifty years ago he moved to East Jordan and has since made this place his home.

He was married to Caroline A. Hood at Iron-ton. To this union were born six children, five of whom have passed away. Mrs. Sheldon died in March 12th, 1910. In 1913 he was married to Mrs. Clara Spidel, who passed away July 22nd, 1928—two weeks ago.

Deceased is survived by a daughter—Mrs. Pearl Lintz of New York City, and an adopted son, Ellsworth Sheldon of Cadillac.

Funeral services were held from the Methodist Church—of which he had been a member since 1880—Monday afternoon, Aug. 6th, conducted by the pastor, Rev. V. J. Hutton. Interment at Sunset Hill.

Owosso—The Ann Arbor Railroad, which has division headquarters here, was among the railroads of the country to receive E. H. Harriman memorial awards from the American Museum of Safety. This road was given a certificate of honorable mention for reducing reportable accidents 72 per cent last year.

Grand Rapids—Tony Samora, 22 years old, a Mexican, will be deported to his native land after he has completed a sentence of one from one to five years in the Michigan State State Prison at Jackson for carrying concealed weapons. It was decreed by Judge William B. Brown in Circuit Court here. The young man was found with a pistol and a knife when he arrived in Grand Rapids on a freight train.

Lansing—Arthur C. Rich lost another attempt to gain freedom when Governor Fred W. Green found charges that X-ray plates showing the injuries sustained by Louise King had been tampered with were unsubstantiated. George Rich, father of Arthur, recently alleged that the plates, which figured prominently in the trial which resulted in his son's conviction and sentence to life imprisonment, were fictitious.

Benton Harbor—Raspberries are being given away here. The price on the local market dropped to $1 a crate. Many of the growers have refused to pick the berries, and are allowing them to rot on the vines. They have offered the residents the fruit for the picking. The estimated cost of placing a crate of berries on the market is $1.17. More than 20 canning plants in this county closed on orders from inspectors, who said the fruit was too wet to can.

Holly—A small boy on a fishing expedition solved the disappearance of Mrs. Jennie Warren, 67-year-old widow who had not been seen since her home burned to the ground recently. He found the body hidden just beneath the weedy surface of Mud lake, a mile south of town. She was clad in heavy, far-too-large clothing of her late husband, which she had fastened on with heavy steel traps. A length of rope trailed from one foot and nearby was a 20-pound stone. Oakland county authorities pronounced death a suicide.

Lansing—An automobile accident on U. S. highway 16 near Eagle, in which Governor Fred W. Green's car, occupied by his wife and daughter, Mrs. Peggy Tyrell, was involved, resulted in serious injury to Mrs. J. H. Rowley, of Alma. The 70-year-old woman was taken to a Lansing hospital with a broken hip. Her condition was considered serious because of her age. The crash occurred, according to witnesses, when Mrs. Rowley's husband swerved suddenly into a left turn directly in front of the governor's car.

Lansing—Officials of the Detroit house of correction, are victorious in their effort to force the state to pay $12.25 a day instead of $1 for state prisoners. Governor Fred W. Green approved the higher rate temporarily at the suggestion of a member of the prison commission. The governor explained this action does not mean that the state will pay $12.25 a day for each prisoner for the last year and a half, but merely from July 23 until the state finds a suitable institution for housing the women prisoners who are in the Detroit house of correction.

Mt. Clemens—A father's too short a turn of an outboard motor boat resulted in the death recently of his two-year-old daughter at the foot of Hall road in Anchor bay. Ralph White, of Mt. Clemens, took the child and Mr. and Mrs. Chester Thompson, of Utica, out in his boat for a turn around the bay. In dodging a wave, he swerved the boat and caused water to overflow the side upsetting it. The baby was thrown out and before any of the adults could go to the rescue, the child, Jean White, sank.

Oil Wells In Michigan

MUCH PROGRESS MADE DURING THE PAST YEAR.

Lansing, Aug. 7.—In the opinion of R. A. Smith, State Geologist, more actual progress is being made this year in the study of Michigan's possibilities as an oil producing State than ever before. Mr. Smith points to the activity of the various oil companies for his proof. Many sections of the lower peninsula are being punctured by the inquiring drills of the companies.

The Pure Oil Co., to whom the State leased large parcels of State owned lands during the past few weeks has several test rigs in the field. This company is active in many localities drilling through the rock strata which underlie the State and identifying them so that there will be some index as to the trend of the various beds.

The department of conservation is trying to have the oil firms work on something like a co-operative basis. It is believed that if the several parties would have a mutual understanding, pool their knowledge of various sections and contribute to a general experimental fund to go towards making test wells and other exploratory work, that there would be a sizable saving to all concerned.

The wide spread interest and activity in oil exploration is indicated by the location of the various test wells already being sunk and the projected wells. Geologist Smith has the following list, and would like to learn of all new projects.

Test wells—Walhalla, southeastern Mason County; Alpena, Boyne City, Manistee, Silver Lake (near Mears, Oceana County) near Mt. Pleasant (four wells); Eggleston township, (Muskegon County); Dowagiac, Cedar Springs, Decatur, Carson City, Spring Lake, Holland (two wells, one north of city and one northwest of city); Fowlerville, Minden City, (Sanilac County); Deerfield (Monroe County).

Projected test wells—Ionia (north of city); Fowlerville, Cassopolis, North Muskegon (northwest of city); Montague, Newaygo, and Fremont. Little has been done towards determining whether there is oil below the levels which have yielded to date. One of the companies interested in the Saginaw field has declared its intention of sinking a deep hole there. This project will no doubt be watched with much interest.

Senator Campbell Candidate For Second Term

This paper is this week privileged to print a notice of the candidacy of Senator Cal. Campbell of Indian River to succeed himself for a second term as Senator from the 29th Senatorial District of Michigan, comprising the Counties of Alpena, Charlevoix, Cheboygan, Emmet, Otsego, Presque Isle and Montmorency.

Senator Campbell will have no opposition on the Republican ticket at the primaries, but that has not deterred him in taking as keen an interest in the primaries as he showed by his service as Senator in his first term at Lansing. Senator Campbell is a keen business man, and those who watched and followed his conduct of District and State affairs at Lansing in his first term there, will understand and appreciate that those same practices and good business judgment were paramount in his political practices and public service. Senator Campbell does not have to make a campaign for re-nomination, but he is keen for a full republican vote at the primaries, and a united and solid republican front throughout his District as well as the State and Nation. From Senator Campbell's viewpoint there seems a greater need of party solidity and party unity than ever before, and that good, common sense should prevail at the coming primaries and election instead of political buncomb.

The special school meeting which was called for Aug. 1st to vote on the question of raising the extra $10 per year which the Boyne City High School demands, more than the Dist., is obliged to pay, resulted in the victory for the negative by two votes, but had the effect of bringing out most of the voters, needless to say it was voted down by those in the District who have never had more than one or two at most who have drawn public money for the District for years, compared to one family who has eight on the school census and which will continue to have 8 for a good many years yet and has 4 now ready for High School. Should some of the families who really are a credit to the District move out, which they are likely to do, the short sited ones would see a decided difference in their school, which would not be worth keeping up and the question of consolidation would again be in line.

THE GENEROUS OPPONENT
By THOMAS ARKLE CLARK
Dean of Men, University of Illinois.

It was Abraham Lincoln who used to say that one never lost anything in conceding to an enemy or to an opponent everything that it was possible truthfully to grant. One only made his own case stronger, he held, when he admitted that the opposing side had merit, but showed that in spite of its claim to attention his own case was the stronger.

There were some hot political contests in our community last spring, and though I heard much discussion I cannot now recall anything complimentary that was said by any candidate relative to his opponent. From the standpoint of all the speakers I heard the opposing candidates were all little better than thieves and liars.

The case of Jeff Fowler of Throckmorton, Texas, however, as given in a recent issue of the New York Sunday Times is different. He has a lot of interesting things to say both of himself and of his opponents. The letter which he writes to his constituents is extremely generous to the other candidates and reveals the fact that Jeff knows his political onions. It follows:

"To the Voters of Throckmorton County:

"Having been strongly solicited, by my wife, I hereby announce my candidacy for the office of county attorney. I shall be opposed in this race by two of your best-known citizens, Hon. B. Reynolds and Mr. James F. Wright. Concerning them, I shall have nothing to say except that they are upright and honorable men deserving of your confidence and support.

"Mr. Reynolds came to Throckmorton county before most of us were born, when it represented the last outpost of civilization and lay far out on the edge of the wild frontier. But for such men as he, who came here when every step was attended by dangers and existence meant a battle and a march, there would be no Throckmorton county and no county attorney's office to fill. For his labor and sacrifice, we are all grateful. A life of noble deeds and great achievements recommends him to the voters. He is my friend and I love him. I have served for the past year, and am at present his assistant.

"Mr. Wright is a native son and was born in the county he seeks to serve. He is capable and qualified to fill the office and is deserving of the trust he asks you to bestow. He, also, is my friend, and should you elect him as your servant, I am sure your confidence would not be misplaced.

"As for myself, I am an Arkansas Hill-Billy, born and raised in the Ozark mountains; outran the dogs on Sunday morning to keep from having my face washed—did my sparring barefooted—never saw a train until I was fifteen and was almost grown before I learned that Republicans walked on hind feet like people.

"Have farmed with a bull-tongue plow—taught school—practiced law—and am a first-class mechanic, having worked a right smart around a molasses mill. Came to Texas two years ago and married the finest little girl in Throckmorton county. I want the office because I think I can make a living out of it, and will promise, if elected, to try and make thieves and bootleggers think hell ain't forty feet from the courthouse.

"So I expect to spend the time between now and the election kissing babies, complimenting the ladies' cooking and bragging on the Old Man's crop.

"Your vote and influence will be appreciated.

"JEFF FOWLER."

Trees Play Big Part in Town's Appearance

The municipal government of Springfield, Mass., places an appraised value of $100 on each tree. At the latest count 25,000 trees give the city an added asset of $2,500,000. An Arbor is racing along in the tree competition under a similar method of appraisal. This plan of tree evaluation is worked out under the formula devised by Prof. Fillbert Roth one of the most expert of American foresters. The formula is based on an exhaustive study of individual trees. This study notes the kind of tree under examination, its size and shape at maturity, its average length of life, the character of its foliage, its power to adapt itself to the local environment. "Trees as Good Citizens" is compact of useful information and expert experience and a deep sense of appreciation, all bent upon the subject in hand, I've gathered but a single item from it, since the essence of this item points upon the value of foresight, and upon the misfortune of hindsight. It counsels construction in place of destruction. It advises a real publicity preceding action in matters where the voice of the citizens should be given timely opportunity.

"The city with fine shade trees is the city beautiful"—Charles Lathrop "Lack Talking"—"When the traveler gives thought to the world's most beautiful cities, he thinks instinctively of Washington and Paris; and in thinking of them he delights in the memory of their wealth of trees. In each of these cities great architects and gifted artists have created buildings of rare splendor and stately grace. The chief charm of both cities, however, is found in their magnificent shade trees which line their streets and beautify their lawns, parks and public grounds. Who can picture Sixteenth street or Massachusetts avenue, or any of the streets of Washington deprived of shade tree beauty? Visualize without their trees the city streets and parks with which you are familiar, and see what becomes of the city beautiful!"

Not Hard Matter to Clean Painted Wall

Any painted wall may be successfully washed, whether it is plain or decorated with some novel treatment. Stencils and Tiffany glazes are as easy to do as a plain wall finish. Wallpaper that has been varnished may also be washed.

The easiest way to wash a painted wall is to prepare a solution as follows: Shave a cake of pure neutral (nonalkaline) white soap into a quart of boiling water. Dissolve about two ounces of glue in another quart of boiling water and mix the two liquids together.

A little flour may be added to make a thicker solution, and a little sal soda or washing powder to make a solution. This jellied cleaning liquid is applied with a soft sponge, working from the bottom up.

The wall is then wiped down with cloths. If the surface is quite soiled it will be easier to apply the solution to a wall area with a kalsomine brush, allowing it to stand two or three minutes to loosen the dirt. Then wash off with a clean sponge and a pail of clear water.

Progress Goes On

A public that demands more attractive motor cars and clothing, beautiful furnishings in the home and increased conveniences in a hundred directions hardly will be content forever with ugliness and inconvenience in its cities. Wider streets, more trafficways, removal of signboards and other rubbish from places where it does not belong are betterments that may be anticipated with reasonable assurance. One thing is evident: The cities, in a score of ways, are more livable than they were a generation ago. What changes in the line of progress may not come in the next generation?—Kansas City Star.

Dirty Home Hurts All

A few clean and orderly homes in a select residence district can never safeguard the entire community. A single filthy home, dirty backyard or a stagnant pool may easily become the source of an epidemic of fatal disease that will sweep the city. A trash pile in the slums may start a general conflagration.

Have Your Plans Correct

Be sure of your "plans" before you go ahead and build your house. For in those plans it not only the power to make you happy or miserable as they are good plans or bad plans, but in them you are investing a certain amount of capital—hard-earned capital, perhaps—that represents considerable effort of saving.

How to Control Rats Is Problem

Temporary Measures Include Use of Poisons, Traps and Gases.

(Prepared by the United States Department of Agriculture.)

Rats cause losses amounting to not less than $200,000,000 each year in the United States, according to the biological survey of the United States Department of Agriculture. This enormous damage occurs in homes, stores and factories, and to a large extent on farms.

Temporary Measures.

Temporary measures of rat control include the use of poisons, traps and deadly gases. These devices merely eliminate the animals for a short time and do not in any way prevent others from reinfesting premises. Nevertheless, temporary measures are the first consideration in dealing with the rat problem. Permanent control consists primarily in depriving rats of one or both their necessities of life—food and shelter. Attention to such community rat-breeding places as garbage dumps and city abattoirs will keep down the rat population. Every community interested in preventing disease epidemics that may possibly be spread by rats should make it a point to provide for proper maintenance of dumps and similar places for garbage and refuse disposal. Changes in the construction of buildings can be effected to make them rat proof, and building codes of cities and towns can require rat-proof construction.

Effective Poisons.

Barium carbonate and red squill are effective poisons for the temporary eradication of rats. Barium carbonate has neither taste nor odor. It is mixed with various foods and, if prepared as recommended, is usually effective. Red squill has an advantage in being relatively harmless to animals other than rats. If taken accidentally by cats or dogs it acts as a powerful emetic and is thus eliminated. A small quantity of red squill will kill a rat, however, and it is therefore an ideal poison for use on farms and in many places in towns or cities where there may be danger of poisoning beneficial animals.

Calcium cyanide fumigant has been widely and effectively used to kill rats that live in burrows in the ground, under concrete, or in other inaccessible places. It comes in powder form and is applied with a duster or blower. When the dust comes in contact with air it forms a poisonous gas. Calcium cyanide is a deadly poison and should be kept out of reach of children, irresponsible persons, and live stock.

Feeding Milk to Laying Stock Increases Yield

Liberal feeding of milk to laying stock will help to increase the egg yield and improve the quality and size of the eggs. Fertility and hatchability of the eggs will likewise be improved.

Milk feeding helps to keep fowls healthy and to prevent disease. In 1904-05 Dr. Louis Dechmann demonstrated that the mineral content of eggs could be increased, and made more desirable from a medical viewpoint by feeding the desired minerals in finely triturated form, mixed with milk curd, to the laying fowls. W. McA. Johnson, chemist and metallurgist, has also pointed out that the rare mineral content of eggs may be enhanced by feeding the fowls finely powdered minerals rubbed up in warm fresh milk and in milk curd. "Also," he states, "as Doctor Dechmann claimed, that 'medicated eggs' are possible and that we may expect them soon."

In experimental work in feeding minerals to growing chicks, milk, milk curd, and milk powder have proved the best mediums for feeding the powdered minerals. So milk and milk products not only help poultry healthy and productive, but may be the means of introducing medicinal elements into egg which, in a very agreeable manner of administration, may help to prevent or cure disease and keep human beings in good health.

Agricultural Notes

- Something is wrong if young chicks are not active.
- Gardening keeps down the cost of living on the farm. It's no longer just a job.
- Liquid skim milk is recommended for young chicks in place of water during the first week.
- Carbolicum, cresote, or crude carbolic acid make the best spray material to use in poultry houses to keep down red mites.
- It is better to feed sludge to dairy cows once a day over a longer period than to feed it twice a day for a shorter time if no other succulent feed can be had.
- To disinfect a brooder house, scrub the floor and side walls with a strong solution of hot lye (one pound of lye to 40 gallons of water), using a stiff broom. When the floor and walls are dry, drench them with a strong disinfectant—3 per cent creolin or lysol. Treat the fixtures in the same manner.

August 21.

The excitement is still intense I have hardly seen Halliday since our trouble; he is working with the police, of which a number have come to assist Greenough. Curious crowds stand outside our gates, which we have been obliged to close and lock. A few of the more adventurous, gaining admission by the lane, are turned back there by guards who are on duty day and night.

Thomas, standing at the gate, has orders to admit only the detectives and duly accredited members of the press.

On the bay we have once more the familiar crowd of searching boats. Off the Point, dragging has been going on, but with no result. Owing to the fact that no guards were placed by the boat, a large portion of it has already been taken away by morbid individuals who will place their trophies, I dare say, on tables or mantelpieces, and thereafter gloat over them.

Truly, just as the lunatic always insists that he is sane, so do the sane often demonstrate that they are mad. And so far, nothing.

Nothing, that is, which leads to Gordon's apprehension. From the time he turned back in the boat and landing, made his escape into the woods above Robinson's point, he disappeared entirely. Here and there a clew has turned up, to end in disappointment. Greenough believes that he will be found, that he cannot escape the police drag-net, but I am not so sure.

Although almost forty-eight hours have passed, Jane, has not yet opened up the subject of the telephone, and because of her morbid reserve on such matters, I have not told the police.

Asked how I had happened to be at the telephone and thus receive the alarm, I have replied that the bell rang that I went to the instrument, and was immediately aware that one of the receivers was down, either at Halliday's or at the main house; that I heard a crash over the wire, followed by a second and nearer one, and after that a silence; that following that I heard, near the receiver, the sobbing breath of exhaustion, and that immediately after that the receiver went up, and I called Halliday frantically; and that, on his replying, I told him my suspicion that something was wrong at the main house, and to meet me there at once.

But there is a discrepancy here which may cause me trouble if they come back to it. A telephone such as ours does not ring if one of the receivers is down. And the plain fact is that our telephone did not ring at all that night.

As I have not yet recorded the events of that tragic evening in their sequence, I shall do so now.

Halliday had dined with us, and had been more like himself than for some time past. After dinner he and Edith sat on the veranda, and going to lower a shade I saw that she was holding a match while he drew something on a bit of paper. But the match went out almost at once, and I would have thought no more of it, had I not heard Edith say:

"And the cabinet was there?"

"In the corner," he replied.

"I am no eavesdropper, so I drew the shade and turned away."

He left at something after ten, and Edith joined us. She was very quiet, and sat watching me play solitaire while Jane sewed industriously. At half past ten or thereabouts, Jane suddenly said:

"The telephone is ringing."

Both Edith and I looked up in amazement; the instrument was in the small hall, not ten feet from where I sat; it would have been impossible for it to ring without our hearing it, and we had heard nothing.

"You've been asleep, Jane!" Edith accused her. "But I glanced at her, and I remember that she was oddly relaxed in her chair; her face looked white and her eyes were slightly fixed. "It is ringing," she said, thickly. And that is how I happened to be at the telephone that night. And how, too, I gave the alarm which enabled the murderer to escape, by calling Halliday.

NOT HOW OLD—BUT HOW ACTIVE.

"Get your revolver and meet me at the main house," I said. "There's something wrong there."

"I know that had I not rung the telephone, had I gone for Halliday instead, we would have caught the criminal. But to ring the one house was to flag the other; he may still have been standing there gasping. He had, for all he knew up to that time, the rest of the night in which to finish his deadly work; to dispose of the body, to gather up his suitcase, waiting outside, and get away.

But I called Halliday, and the criminal listened. He knew then that instead of hours he had only minutes. He must have worked fast. In that ghastly shambles of a room; the car was probably already out, in the lane. He may even have stood there, at the corner of the lane, the engine turning over quietly, and watched Halliday running up toward the house. And perhaps he laughed, that secret laugh of his which had always rather chilled me.

Then—he simply got into the car and drove away. Cool and crafty to the last. No body, no murder. He made for the boat.

He left behind him only two real clues; the knife, which Annie Cochran identifies as one taken from the kitchen, and his packed suitcase. Not intentional, this last. He must have needed clean linen. And certainly that diary of his, in cipher—he would not want that in the hands of the police. But what would the diary matter after all, if he himself escaped?

August 22.

As time goes on the case is complicated with the eagerness of all sorts of people to bring in extraneous circumstances which they consider important.

For instance, Livingstone's butler, the one who bought the knife in Oakville and caused so much excitement by so doing, has been over to get a description of Gordon, preserving an air of mystery which under other circumstances would be vastly entertaining.

Another story concerns a middle-aged man, of highly respectable appearance and of a square and heavy build, who was seen walking uncertainly along the main road near the Livingstone place at 1:00 a. m. the night of the murder. A passing car seeing his state, stopped and asked if he was in trouble.

He replied that he had been struck by a car an hour or so before, and had been lying by the road ever since. His condition bore this out, as he was stained with blood and dirt. He accepted the offer of a lift, and was left at the railroad station at Martin's Ferry to catch the express there-for the city.

There have been many similar ones; an innumerable number of people are convinced that they have seen Gordon, and apparently almost any dapper youth of twenty or so, with what Edith calls, patent leather hair and an inveterate cigarette habit, is likely at any time to be tapped on the shoulder and taken to a police station.

Of clews of other and lesser sorts there has been almost an embarrassment. Both the library and that portion of the hall near the telephone have furnished finger prints. But as Greenough says:

"Finger prints do not discover criminals; they identify them."

Nevertheless, great pains have been taken to preserve them. On the white marble mantel a very distinct imprint in blood was photographed without difficulty; others, less clear, were dusted with black powder before the camera was used. Detailed pictures were made of the library and hall, before any attempt to put them back to order was permitted, and these prints have been enlarged and carefully studied. One of them—with a strange result.

"Greenough, handing it to me, said: 'This print is defective. You can keep it, if you care to.'

'But I wonder if it is defective there is what Greenough calls a light streak in the lower corner, but it requires very little imagination to give to this misty outline the semblance of a form, and to the lower portion of it the faint but recognizable appearance of a brocade.

I have said nothing. What can I say?

One thing which puzzles the police is the violence of the battle; it seems incredible that Bethel could have made the fight for life which he evidently did. At the same time, they have two problems to solve, which repeated searching of the house and wide publicity have not yet answered.

One is the disappearance of the manuscript on which Bethel had worked all summer. Annie Cochran has testified that this manuscript was kept locked in a drawer in the library desk; when Halliday and I entered the house this drawer was standing open and the manuscript was missing. It has not yet been located.

But perhaps the most surprising is the failure of any friend or relative of Simon Bethel to interest himself in the case. Cameron's note to Larkin before Bethel rented the house expressly disclaims any previous knowledge of him.

"Here is a possible tenant for Mr. Porter's house," he wrote, "of which he spoke to me some time ago. I have no acquaintance with Mr. Bethel, save that he called on me a day or so ago, in reference to a statement in a book of mine. I imagine, however, that he would be a quiet and not troublesome tenant."

Halliday brought up this curious situation yesterday, in one of the rare moments he has given us since the murder.

"Has it occurred to you, Skipper," he said, "that it is strange that no one belonging to Mr. Bethel has turned up?"

"I dare say a man can outlive most of his contemporaries and most of his friends."

"He wasn't as old as all that." And he asked, apparently irrelevantly a moment later: "The two evenings you saw him and talked to him, how did he impress you? I mean, his state of mind?"

"The last time, of course, he was frankly frightened. He said as much."

"And before that?"

"He didn't say so, but he was more or less on guard." He had his revolver. Of course, those were rather parious times."

As a matter of fact, the case is anything but a clear one against Gordon as it develops. Greenough has been all along, as convinced of Gordon's guilt as he had previously been of mine. But Benchley is more open to conviction, and a conversation between Halliday and him this morning on the lawn near the terrace, is still running in my mind.

Halliday had been protesting against Greenough's method of "following a single idea until it went up a blind alley and died there."

"Of course," he said quietly, "you can make a case against Gordon; it's all here. But you'll have something left over that you won't know what to do with. We know that it was Mr. Bethel who hit Gordon and knocked him out some time ago, but who tied him? Where's the boy's own story about seeing a man at the gun-room window? Mr. Porter here later on finds that same window open, and sees a man in the lower hall. Who was that? The same hand tied the boy that tied Carroway, and Gordon hadn't even seen this place at that time. What are you going to do with that?"

"Then where's Gordon now?" Benchley asked, practically enough.

"I don't know. Dead, maybe."

Benchley stood thinking.

"I think I get the idea," he said. "The fight, you think, was between Mr. Bethel and this unknown of yours; the boy either saw it and got mixed up in it, or knew he'd be suspected and beat it. Is that it?"

"Well, I would say that a man about to commit such a crime doesn't pack his suitcase—with the idea of escaping with it."

"A thought which, I admit, had never occurred to me until that moment."

As a result of this conversation Benchley has advanced a theory of his own which accounts at least for the failure of any relatives to make inquiry. This is that the old man was in hiding under an assumed name; hiding in the most secluded spot he could find, from some implacable enemy who had finally caught up with him.

How he reconciles this with the Carroway murder and the disappearance of Maggie Morrison I do not know, but certain facts seem to bear out this idea. He was, in one sense, a man of mystery. His accounts were paid in cash; the automobile in which he arrived had been bought at second hand a few days before, by the secretary and in the same manner. And all identifying marks had been carefully removed from his clothing.

In addition to all this, there is the puzzling report on the knife itself. Examination under the microscope shows fibers of linen as well as fragments of cellular tissue. But it also reveals minute particles of tobacco leaf, showing it had gone through a pocket.

But Mr. Bethel was not a smoker.

At some one time, then, Bethel clearly secured the knife and wounded his assailant. Not seriously evidently, since after that he was able to do what he did do, but sufficiently to turn the minds of the police toward the man who claimed to have been struck by an automobile.

This clew, however, has developed nothing. The night was dark and his rescuers have no description of him save of a heavy-set figure and a dazed manner of speech. They carried him to Martin's ferry, but the conductor of the night express remembers carrying no such passenger.

Greenough today showed me Gordon's diary, rescued from the suitcase. It has at some time been dropped into water, and certain pages are not legible. If indeed that word may be used where nothing is legible; whereas page presents such jumbles of large and small letters as the following sentence, which I have copied as a matter of interest:

"Tyn r K - GTRag UnM' aut LmG' MotrT"

The record is not a dull one, but apparently was used for jotting down odd thoughts or ideas. It continues, however, at intervals, for the entire period of his stay at Twin Hollows the last entry having been made on August 17.

Certain entries are neat and methodical. The one on July 27, however, after his injury, is by hand, and shows erasures and changes. Once or twice in August the record is long, covering more than a page, while the July entries are all brief. On the last page, however, and without comment, he has drawn in, rather carefully, a small circle enclosing a triangle.

Greenough, while attaching a certain interest to it, has not yet sent it to be deciphered by the code experts of his department. As a matter of fact, I suspect him of holding it out, with the idea of being able to claim the reward of he finds Gordon.

Which reward, by the way, now stands at ten thousand dollars.

August 23.

Halliday saw a red light in the house the night Bethel was killed. He has just told me.

He ran out, after I telephoned him, and from the foot of the lawn he saw it. It was gone almost at once.

He has asked me to experiment with him tonight, using the lamp from the attic closet. I have given him the keys. Apparently what he wishes to discover is the approximate location of such a light. I have no idea of his purpose.

I understand that the guards who have been watching the house at night have been withdrawn, and that hereafter only such watch will be kept as will suffice to keep away the curious crowds that still throng here in day light hours.

Today Annie Cochran and Thomas have been putting the house in order, preparatory to its final closing. I shall never open it again. Thomas has already painted the window boards and put some of them in place. Let us pray that they keep inside what should be inside, and outside what should be out!

Filet Lace Frock

Dorothy Mackall, in "Lady Be Good," illustrates the new made in fashions for summer in a filet lace frock combined with chiffon in a delicate shade of shell pink. The skirt of irregular length consists of two ruffles of lace attached to a bodice of the pink chiffon. The old fashioned bertha with a deep back is made interesting with bows and a ribbon steamer of chiffon at the shoulder. A large, transparent hat of horsehair and chiffon and a ruffled parasol complete a picture of femininity that carries back memories of the fluffy ruffle girl of bygone days.

Community Building

Well-Built House Can Always Be Made Over

The well-built home of another era obsolete only because of the omission of moving features, and interior equipment which have come within the last few years to be adopted as necessary, offers to the owner or the builder a fertile field for the exercise of an interesting and profitable hobby in adding or removing features which make or detract from the modernity of the house.

Among the additions possible is that of the second floor sleeping porch, which may economically be built where a first floor projection extends beyond the body of the house. This makes necessary the removal of the slanting roof of the projection. If there is one; the construction of a room by erecting glazed walls, construction of a roof and enlarging a window to make room for a connecting door.

The sleeping porch may also be added by supporting it outside the main body of the house over an open porch or a rear terrace, but this method makes the heating rather difficult unless the unprotected floor be well insulated.

Should it be decided to place the addition over an attached garage it is advisable to put sheet metal or some dense material in the floor so that the gasoline fumes will not penetrate to the sleeping porch.

Probably the most important consideration in the construction of the sleeping porch is that of the type of windows to be used.

There are many types of patented hardware for windows which will permit of the entire unit of windows being folded up to one side, but the usual practice is to put the type used for the remainder of the house.

Steel casements are economical for this use and have the further advantage of ease of construction, which is a paramount consideration if the work is to be done by the home craftsman. They are simply placed by screwing into the wood framing and caulking the joints with a plastic compound prepared for the purpose.

Tree Has Many Good Qualities for Garden

The Mayday tree is recommended to garden-makers who live in states where the number of good flowering trees is limited. This tree is an early flowering wild cherry, the native home of which is Manchuria. It is one of the first of the bud cherries to bloom, producing its flowers in pure white racemes, which make a handsome appearance and are very fragrant.

The somewhat drooping habit of the racemes makes them particularly appealing. This tree can be used to advantage as a lawn specimen, but is hardy and sturdy enough to be planted in rows to serve as a wind-break. The small fruit seems to have an unusual attraction for the birds.

Selecting Home Site

Is the lot you are thinking of buying located where you would like to live for some time to come? There is no being absolutely certain of the future, of course, but it is fairly certain that the man who buys or builds his home will live in it for a number of years at least.

There are many communities in easy access of big cities. Before buying make sure the distance to employment is satisfactory; not as measured in miles so much as in minutes. Also it is wise to learn everything about the local improvements to be contracted for, the special assessments, the zoning laws and building restrictions.

Influence

Men and women of importance in the community are frequently cautioned to be careful of their behavior because of their influence on others. But influence is not confined to prominent citizens. There is no person so humble in the town that he does not exercise considerable effect on the lives of some others near to him. It is a deadly power—or an enlivening power—that we all carry with us. Grove Patterson, in the Mobile Register.

Greenhouse Cost Low

The greenhouse as an adjunct to the home of moderate size and cost is now an accomplished fact. Standard sized units, made by companies specializing in this form of construction permit of quick and economical erection. Quality production permits of low-cost in manufacture, and this is a light auxiliary to the modern home is made available to persons of moderate means.

Good Citizenship

Love your town and love your country. And then keep your mind broad, your vision clear, and your sense of justice undefiled. Have pride in your self, and consideration and kindness for your neighbor. Live, labor and love.—Blue Mountain (Ore.) Eagle

Face Brick Offers Variety

Walls of diversified color effect and others of quiet monotones in any shade desired are possible with face brick construction.

Nancy Carroll

Nancy Carroll, as Rosemary Murphy in the motion picture "Abie's Irish Rose," has scored because of her splendid portrayal of her part. Nancy was born in New York city. She is one of twelve children. She is five feet, four inches tall, weighs 118 pounds and has red hair and blue eyes.

Uncommon Sense

By John Blake

LOCATION

THE vast majority of people prefer to live on hill-sides, where they can look out upon at least a little part of the world.

Constantly you hear men talk about the "view from my window."

Not long ago I overheard a little working girl boasting to another that from the flat where she lived she could "see right across the roofs of two streets of tenement houses to more tenement houses on beyond."

"I love to sit there, and just look out," she said.

Location is always an important factor in life.

Always the most expensive building sites are those which command a view.

The first thing a man newly come into a fortune thinks of is to buy a home which is surrounded by extensive grounds, so that he need never more know that shut-in feeling which has been his since birth.

Yet many of the owners of beautiful park-surrounded homes, where they may look through vistas of trees to the sea or mountains, are still shut-in as far as life is concerned.

It is education and thought which give people the real vision which counts, the ability to look back across the years with the eyes of history, and to look on the activities of mankind through the eyes of intelligence and understanding.

Only the people who have taken the trouble to read and think are quite free from mental blindness.

To these the locations of their roof-matter little.

The boy, Chatterton, could see more in his attic than many a magnate can from his mansion.

Every attic is filled with windows, if one knows how to use them. Reading makes a seeing man, as well as a full man.

Reading plus reflections puts one on a mountain top, and enables him to see beyond oceans, and over mountain chains, and to understand and enjoy the life of the whole world.

But, unhappily, most of us still are content to dwell within walls, to shut out all the wonders and delights that we might well be looking upon, simply because it is difficult to study, and distasteful to think. We are content, if we look out at all, to look out on a few streets, or perhaps a lake or across a river, while we might be looking back on the struggles of humanity from the time history began or even a little—as yet a very little—forward into the future.

Education means a favorable and commanding location in the world, and is worth more to us than any mountain top or seaside residence for, by means of it we see all human life pass and re-pass—and though we fall on evil days and are plunged into poverty, no affliction—not even blind ness—shall ever take that ability away from us.

"Indolence won't make the pot boil," says Philosophizing Felice, "and yet it has cooked many a man's goose."

Number of Apple Trees Declining

No Shortage of Fruit Has Developed and Production Increases.

(Prepared by the United States Department of Agriculture.)

Although the number of apple trees in the United States has been declining since 1910, no shortage of apples has developed and commercial production is increasing. The crop of 1928 was the largest produced in many years. This apparent paradox is explained by an increased output per tree and by the fact that the reduction in the number of trees has taken place largely in scattered family orchards and in the less favorably situated commercial areas. Apple production for the market has been increasing materially in some areas through better orchard management, better selection of varieties and increased bearing capacity resulting from an increase in the age of the trees.

Decrease in Trees.

For each 100 trees in the country in 1910 there were 70 and 64 respectively in 1920 and 1925, according to the census. In round figures the decrease from 1910 to 1925 was about 79,000,000 out of a total of 217,000,000 trees reported in the former year. The significance of this decline is modified by the fact that in the box apple region of the Mountain and Pacific states no less than 55 per cent of the trees were not of bearing age in 1910. By 1920, the percentage of nonbearing trees had fallen to 13, and the same percentage is reported by the census for 1925. It would be a distinctly unfavorable augury for the apple industry had plantings from 1910 to 1925 been large enough to prevent a decline in the proportion of trees not of bearing age.

Present conditions in the apple industry are in marked contrast to those that prevailed eighteen years ago. In 1910 there were 15,000,000 trees not of bearing age in the box apple regions of the Mountain and Pacific states. As these trees came into bearing, the producing capacity of the region increased enormously. In 1920 the region had 175 trees of bearing age for each 100 reported in 1910. From 1920 to 1925, however, the number decreased and in 1925 stood at 151 for each 100 trees of bearing age in 1910.

Apple Tree Planting.

In recent years plantings of apple trees have been to a large extent in the eastern apple region and have been chiefly concentrated in the commercial areas. Most areas of heavy concentration of trees are now in regions adjacent to the larger consuming centers, although there are important areas in the West which, because of favorable natural features, successfully produce fruit for consuming markets. In the states north of the Cotton Belt and east of the Great Plains, farm orchards are fairly evenly distributed. In the western states, scattering of trees throughout extensive areas, in the manner typical of the farming regions of the East, is not found.

Satisfactory Means of Eradicating Cutworms

If one cutworm in the garden cut only one plant and ate that plant, the damages would not be so very great. But the worm is not satisfied with one plant. It usually follows one row and cuts as it goes. In this way one cutworm will do a great deal of damage. The cutworm is nocturnal in its feeding habits. It usually starts to feed late in the afternoon and continues throughout the night. The knowledge of this habit is very essential when the worm is to be poisoned.

Two satisfactory control methods are: first, place a collar of cardboard or tar paper around each plant. This should extend to a depth of two or three inches in the soil. The second method of control is probably the most satisfactory. This control is the use of poison bait. The bait should be scattered late in the afternoon, at feeding time, and near the plants. The poison bait consists of wheat bran, 25 pounds, Paris green, one pound, and three oranges or lemons. This material should be thoroughly mixed and brought to a consistency of a thick dough by adding a low-grade molasses, with water when necessary.

Short Farm Notes

The silo stores feed in one-third the space required by hay in the barn.

For the first week, baby chicks should have liquid skim milk instead of water.

Alfalfa contains the protein needed to balance the silage while the silage supplies succulence.

Sweet clover should be used as a green pasture crop and as a self builder rather than for the production of hay or silage.

The ideal incubator cellar or room is one in which the air is constantly changing without varying perceptibly the temperature of the room itself.

No stalks remain in the way of farm implements and none are left in feed racks and mangers to be thrown out and wasted when feed is stored in a silo.
