Cattle Tests Now Complete

CHARLEVOIX COUNTY CATTLE FREE FROM TUBERCULOSIS

We are extremely pleased to announce that Charlevoix County has been re-accredited for being free of tuberculosis. The miracle however lies in the fact that in 1208 herds containing 11,636 cattle, that only one animal reacted to the test, which is the next thing to being absolutely free. This work was carried out under the supervision of the State Department of Animal Husbandry and was recently completed. This gives the county a distinct advantage in their out-of-state buyers are more and more coming to this section for their purchases.

Following this tuberculosis campaign a Bangs disease program is now in full operation throughout the county. Practically 4000 animals have already been tested for Bangs disease and we believe that by around the first of December the campaign will be finished. Judging from the first weeks activity the percentage of reactors in the county will be very low. When we can announce to the world that Charlevoix county is free from Bangs disease and tuberculosis then we have successfully finished a job that will mean thousands of dollars of additional revenue to the county.

If present prices continue, the sale of surplus dairy stock will be one of the very best cash crops. Think it over farmers, and see if it isn't good sound reasoning to develop young dairy stock as a cash crop.

Interest Shown In PCA By Members And Non-Members

Nine months' service (Jan. 1 to Sept. 30) in extending short term credit to farmers of this county by the Gaylord Production Credit Association was summed up at an open stockholders' meeting at Gaylord, Michigan on Nov. 9, 1937.

Besides the 60 members registered, there were 21 wives of members present and 51 visiting farmers who had not yet joined, but who were interested to learn about the association's aims and the way it carries on its business, making a total of 122 in attendance.

Directors, who are elected by the members, discussed the business and explained charts setting forth operation for this year in comparison with last year.

For the benefit of the visitors and new members it was explained that the association is a local co-operative organization made up of farmers who use credit from time to time in carrying on their farm operations, and that the members borrow from the association for a wide variety of purposes with the opportunity to repay their loans out of the income from the farm.

Questions were invited and were answered by the directors and by Secretary-Treasurer, A. J. Townsend in regard to the charts, details on applying for and paying up loans, and other points.

If regard to legal reserves and undivided profits, it was explained that this item of $7,879.00 represents the margin over cost of operations that arises from interest paid by borrowers and interest on the association's investments. These reserves protect the stockholders in the event losses occur.

Some were surprised to learn that the association has "investments", but that is what the capital stock amounts to, the secretary-treasurer said. It was explained that all the class A stock the Production Credit Corporation of St. Paul owns in the association is invested in various securities and that the local association gets all the income from this as well as all the income from the class B stock, the voting stock held by the members.

It was reported that an increasing number of borrowers who pay up their loans in full do not turn in their stock but keep it as the basis for future loans. The association has extended credit in the amount of $673,000 in the past four years with a fine record of repayments and no losses.

Much interest was displayed in the work of the association, especially by the non-member who were present.

CARD OF THANKS

We wish to express our gratitude and thanks to the many friends and neighbors who so kindly manifested sympathy in word, deed and floral offerings in our recent bereavement.

E. J. High School Cagers Warming Up For Long Grind

East Jordan's high school cagers are busy this week getting into shape for their long and hard basketball schedule, which opens here Friday, November 26, with a newly organized Alumni quintet. The following Wednesday, Dec. 1, the Red Shirts will entertain a strong class O-Pellston machine. This year's edition will be with but few exceptions a comparatively inexperienced outfit, which has a very tough schedule to face during the winter months. F. Morgan, Saxton, Holley, Isaman and Antoine all saw service last year but not regularly, while others; L. Cihak, Jackson, Bulow, Gibbard, G. Gee, and F. Crowell have seen service as reserves. With the Alumni as probable starters are; forwards, Gayle Saxton, Robert Winstone, M. Cihak, Edward Stank; center, Guy Russell; and guards, Chris Taylor, Colen Sommer, Donald LaPeer, Donald Johnson and others.

Following the game will be a dance, the price of admission, 25c and 15c will cover both the game and dance. Let's all come out and make it a grand opening to the 1937-38 basketball season.

Mrs. Edward C. Henning Passed Away At Charlevoix Hospital

Mrs. Edward C. Henning, nee Louise Laura Augusta Knop, daughter of Carl Knop and Laura (nee Schultz), was born June 13, 1902 in Wilson Twp., Charlevoix County, Michigan. Soon after, on July 20th, she was brought to the loving arms of her Savior through the Sacrament of Holy Baptism. She was blessed with the happy privilege of growing in this her Baptismal grace by being reared in her Christian home and family circle which still stands in the shadow of the church of her love and devotion. On June 17, 1917 she publicly confirmed her baptismal promise in the ceremony of Confirmation after having previously been thoroughly instructed in the plans of God's Salvation. She later moved to the city of Chicago, Ill. On Nov. 6, 1929, she was united in holy wedlock with Edward C. Henning of Chicago, Ill. at Petoskey, Mich. Establishing their new home in Chicago they remained there for about three years when they decided to return to her maiden home in Wilson Twp. and take up residence there. During their short married life they were blessed with one son, Edward Jr.

In addition to establishing a Christian home with her faithful husband, she was very active in the social circles of her community. Her first objective was always to make the most of her church-life together with her family. Regularity at the church service and the Lord's Supper was the rule and this led her to serve her Savior in the zealous activities of real Christian service. It was only during this very year that she led the activities of the Ladies' Aid Society in the responsible duties of president.

The Lord of Glory, however, shortened her activities which were so sacred to her family and her church by calling her to her heavenly home (at the Charlevoix hospital, Wednesday, Nov. 17) at the age of 35 years, 5 months, and 7 days. The physical cause of her untimely death was brought on by heart trouble. She leaves to mourn her loss, her faithful husband and son, Edward Jr., age seven years; her parents-in-law; eight brothers and sisters, viz.—Carl and August Knop of Wilson township; Albert of Muskegon; Emma, Selma, Matilda and Margaret of Chicago; and Rose of Boyne City. Also a great number of relatives and a long array of friends.

Funeral services were held from the Christ Evangelical Lutheran church in Wilson township, Saturday afternoon, Nov. 20, conducted by the pastor, Rev. V. Felton. Burial was at Maple Lawn cemetery, Boyne City.

Among those to attend the funeral were Mr. and Mrs. Albert Knop and children of Muskegon; Mrs. Elmer Henning, Mrs. Walter Henning, Mrs. Herman Henning, Mr. and Mrs. John Henning, Mr. and Mrs. Stolfa, Miss Margaret Knop, Mr. and Mrs. Eggersdorf and daughter, and Mr. and Mrs. Walters and son, of Chicago; Mrs. Wm. Knop, Miss Adeline Knop and Royce Jordan of Saulte Ste. Marie.

Miss Esther Clark, Tuberculosis Victim, Passed Away Saturday

Miss Esther Clark, daughter of Mr. and Mrs. Earl Clark, died in Boulder, Colorado, last Saturday morning. Esther was born on a farm near East Jordan, December 31, 1915, and graduated from the East Jordan High School in 1933.

She entered the Ferris College in Big Rapids in the fall of 1935, and was making an excellent record there, but poor health compelled her to return home. Here she failed to gain in physical strength, and in December of last year she entered a tuberculosis sanitarium in Boulder, Colorado, and died there last Saturday morning.

Her parents visited her early in the month. When they left for home the probability was that Esther would not recover, but there was no thought of so an immediate end of the physical life.

Esther was a girl of fine intellectual ability which, combined with a gracious personality, won her a large circle of friends and made her a favorite wherever she went.

The remains arrived in East Jordan Tuesday evening, and the funeral service was held at the home Wednesday afternoon, conducted by her pastor, Rev. C. W. Sidebotham, of the Presbyterian Church. In her health Esther was a faithful and valued worker in the local church.

Mrs. Rose McQuaid, 74 Passed Away At Her Home Here

Mrs. Rose McQuaid passed away at her home on Bridge-St., East Jordan, Sunday, Nov. 21st, following an illness from heart failure.

Deceased was born April 1st, 1863. Very little is known of her earlier life, except that she was married three different times — all three husbands having passed away. She was first married to Mott Wood, then to Edmond Slater, and in 1924 was married to Charles McQuaid at Gaylord. Mr. McQuaid passed away at East Jordan June 5, 1936. They came here from Gaylord about eleven years ago.

She is survived by two daughters and a son — Mrs. Elmer Foot of Lansing, Mrs. Alfred Armstrong of Lansing, and Edward at the home here.

Funeral services were held Wednesday forenoon, Nov. 24, from the Watson Funeral Home, conducted by Elder Leonard Dudley, pastor of the Latter Day Saint church. Burial was at Sunset Hill.

Welfare Applicants Warned By State Office

The following statement from George E. Granger, state relief administrator, describes the relief situation in Michigan, and will be interesting to residents of Charlevoix County.

"The State Relief Commission has adopted a ruling that we will live within the budget set up by the Legislature and will not spend beyond this sum. Reports from the southern industrial plants indicate that the automobile plants have already started to lay off men. It appears now that the relief need will be greater this winter than anticipated. This means very scanty relief for those on welfare rolls and relief budgets are lower now than at any previous time."

As applied to Charlevoix County, the above simply restates the policy of the county commission to help only persons unable to work. At a time when there are several wood cutting jobs in operation near by, the commission does not feel justified in accepting applications for relief from able bodied workers.

Don't Eat Deer Meat Top Fast Out of Season

When Wesley Thompson of Rudyard entered the hospital at Saulte Ste. Marie his intention was to have a bone removed from his throat.

Doctors attended to the matter of the bone being out of place.

Conservation officers attended to the matter of the bone being out of season, it being a deer bone.

Conservation officer L. E. Janowski happened to hear about Thompson's entry in the hospital and the nature of it. The date being Oct. 22, or almost a month before the deer season which did not open until Nov. 15, officer Janowski speculated upon the fact that the bone in the patient's throat was from a deer. The officer decided to diagnose the case with the aid of Justice G. W. Moore who, on being informed of the symptoms, issued a search warrant. With this and accompanied by Conservation Officer Frank W. Nelson, Officer Jankowski inspected Thompson's home and reported finding ten pounds of venison.

Appearing later before Justice Moore at Trout Lake, Thompson pleaded guilty to the charge of possessing deer and was fined $50 with costs of $9.10.

A fitting moral might be: Don't eat deer meat too fast out of season.

CLASS NEWS

The ninth grade home economics classes are studying how to plan and prepare luncheons. The girls have already prepared a variety of soups, salads, and main dishes.

Now that winter seems to have begun in earnest, the tenth grade home economics girls have an added incentive to finish their wool dresses and suits. They will be completed on November 24, in time for Thanksgiving.

The plinking that you have heard all year from the typing room has really not been in vain. The typing students are beginning their third budget. The first year shorthand classes are taking dictation at 40 words a minute, and the second year students at 80 words a minute.

Bookkeeping classes are going to begin their second practice set of records the third week in December.

If you are seriously considering a trip somewhere — anywhere in the United States, just consult a member of the junior business training class. Quickly and efficiently he will whip out a railroad time table and rattle off all the information you need. The class is at present taking an imaginary travel tour by railroad through the United States.

GUESTS AT ALPENA

Mr. John Ter Wee, band instructor, and Bud Porter were guests and entertainers at the Alpena Music Club dinner last Thursday evening. Mr. Ter Wee's clarinet solo and Bud's playing on the marimba brought encores. Mr. Ter Wee was also called on to give a few remarks on bands and orchestras in high schools.

The program was so much enjoyed that the two were invited by the music department to remain in Alpena and repeat the program in the Alpena schools. However, they returned Thursday night.

GRADE NOTES

To see the rooms in the grade building, one would know that this is Thanksgiving week. Every grade has Thanksgiving decorations on its bulletin boards and walls. Thanksgiving programs were given in each grade on Wednesday.

All grade children were asked to bring money for the Junior Red Cross. However, this year they did not receive pins for their donations.

The sixth grade has appointed Steve Kotovich and Louise Stanek as football captains. They are to take care of the football on the playground.

The sixth grade has a new pupil, Miss Maryanne Lenosky, who formerly attended the Knop School.

The grades have been given a series of tests during the last week, both mental and physical. From the kindergarten through the sixth grade tests of both eyes, teeth, and ears have been made and parents will be informed if their children need special attention. The results of the mental achievement tests are not yet known.

One afternoon last week the sixth grade was invited to Mrs. C. H. Pray's home to see a collection of old lithograph Thanksgiving pictures. These pictures come from New Orleans and are very valuable.

HIGH HATS DUE FOR DEFLATION

Prediction that women's high hats that are so fashionable this fall may suffer a downfall in height and popularity is suggested by Miss Marian Hillhouse, clothing instructor at Michigan State College.

"To say that hats are high is to state the truth mildly," Miss Hillhouse claims.

"At the moment they are on the rampage, up and down and out, high, wide and handsome. It is never safe to predict what will happen to hats but it is my belief that the extremely high hat is about to make its exit.

"Women want their hats to be new. The extremely high hat is a complete change from the flat hats of last spring and summer. But even more than newness, women want hats that are youthful and becoming. The lower crown is decidedly more youthful on most women."

One way in which the effect of height can be attained and yet use a crown that conforms to the contour of the head is suggested by Miss Hillhouse. Quills, ribbons or folds of felt can offer a suggestion of more height to a hat. The extremely high crown, she claims, is not as becoming or as youthful. In fact such hats look heavy and have even been designated in derogatory manner as being "matrons' hats."

POTATO TRICKS AVOID DISCOLOR

Potatoes often blacken and discolor when cooked. Yet cooks and homemakers can be let in on a few secrets and tricks recommended by the home economics division at Michigan State College.

Freshly dug potatoes least likely to blacken often are not available in Michigan homes either because of season or price. Because Michigan this year has jumped into second place in the production of the principal or fall harvested crop of this important food, the tricks of cookery will improve table appearances as well as help dispose of the crop in the state.

Research workers in Wisconsin have discovered that for plain boiled potatoes the blackening can be avoided by soaking the peeled potatoes in cold water for two and a half hours before cooking. The potatoes are drained and cooked in fresh water.

Cooking without previous soaking also can be done. A mixture of half milk and half water is found to do the trick. This milk mixture, holding considerable food value, should be used later in bread or soup.

Even if previous soaking or precautions during the boiling are neglected, the blackening can still be avoided after cooking. Milk again is the magic. Boiled or baked, the potatoes will remain natural in color if they are mashed with milk immediately after cooking. Baked potatoes shells may be refilled with the mashed, seasoned potatoes and put back in the oven to brown.

Fruit Growers To Meet Nov. 30

Annual sessions of the Michigan State Horticultural society and with it the Michigan apple show are to be held in Grand Rapids beginning Tuesday, Nov. 30, and continuing through Wednesday and Thursday, Dec. 1 and 2.

More than $1,600 in prizes are to be distributed as premiums in the apple show which will display topnotch fruit from the 13 million bushel bumper crop which has just come off the trees.

Members of the staff of Michigan State College will play prominent parts in conducting the program, according to H. D. Hootman, secretary of the state association and extension horticulturist at Michigan State College. Fruit pests, diseases, cultural methods, varieties and marketing problems all are included in the phases which will be on the horticultural society program.

4-H Girl Awarded Gold Medal In Canning Record

Jessie McDonald of East Jordan has been awarded a handsome gold medal for the record she submitted in the National 4-H Canning Contest. The award is made by the National Committee on 4-H Work in Chicago on approval of the County Agent and State Club Leader who designated the girl 1937 canning champion of Charlevoix County. The medal is shield shaped nearly one inch deep on which is embossed a horn of plenty, laurel branch and 4leaf clover. It is provided by the Kerr Glass Corporation to promote better living, together with trips for state winners to the forthcoming National 4-H Club Congress and $1,000.00 in college scholarships for sectional and national winners.

CHINESE QUIT NANKING

Chiang Will Lead His Armies Against the Invaders . . . Congress Is Expected to Enact Tax Law Revision

Looking as if he had just bitten into a sour, very sour, pickle, Norman H. Davis, chief of the American delegation to the nine-power conference in Brussels, is pictured chatting with British foreign minister Anthony Eden (left) and French foreign minister Yvon Delbos (right).

Edward W. Pickard SUMMARIZES THE WORLD'S WEEK

Chinese Flee From Capital

NANKING, capital of China, was abandoned as the seat of the government because of the rapid advances westward of the Japanese forces. Officials were being scattered in several cities, the central point being Hankow, on the Yangtse 300 miles west of Nanking. One army of the invaders was moving from Shanghai on Nanking, and another was about to attack Tsinan, capital of Shantung province in North China.

Chiang Kai-Shek China, however, was far from giving up the fight. It was reported in Shanghai that Generalissimo Chiang Kai-Shek had resigned as president of the executive council in order to lead his troops in a final effort to stop the Japanese and win the war. H. H. Kung, it was said, would succeed Chiang in the presidency. He is finance minister.

Thousands of civilians and foreigners were fleeing from Nanking. But military authorities remained there and declared the city would not be surrendered to the Japanese without a desperate fight. If the Japanese penetrate the powerful "Hindenburg line" anchored on Soochow, Changshu, and Kashi, the Chinese were expected to fall back to new positions stretching from Kiangyin, on the Yangtse river, to Wushih, 100 miles east of Nanking.

Paris heard that Japan was threatening to establish a naval blockade of the Chinese coast if any nations attempted to send supplies to the Chinese armies.

Britain Woes Hitler

VISCOUNT HALIFAX, lord president of the council in the British cabinet, was in Germany ostensibly for the purpose of visiting a hunting exhibition but actually to negotiate with Hitler and other Nazi chiefs for the establishment of more friendly relations between Great Britain and Germany. Public belief was that he was authorized to hint to Hitler that there was hope Germany might regain some of its lost colonies if Germany would abandon its economic isolation and co-operate with other European powers in a revised League of Nations.

The British want to detach Germany, and Italy, too, if possible, from their alliance with Japan. Halifax was a fitting messenger to send to Berlin, for he is an outstanding friend of Germany among British officials.

Leaving It Up to Uncle Sam

UNLESS congress changes the neutrality act, it is probable the nations that signed and adhered to the nine-power Pacific treaty will take no positive action against Japan for violating that pact. The delegates to the Brussels conference, with the exception of Italy, voted to censure the Japanese for making war on China, and then adjourned to get further instructions from their governments.

Great Britain and France agreed to join in an effort "short of war" which the United States may decide should be made, this meaning economic sanctions against Japan. But the isolationist policy of this country would have to be abandoned if such sanctions were to be of any avail.

A long document was submitted to the conference by China asking that the war be ended by the infliction of penalties against Japan. The memorandum gave statistical tables that showed economic sanctions could halt Japan because of that nation's dependence on foreign markets and foreign sources of supply. Norman H. Davis, chief American delegate, in addressing the conference, was rather conciliatory toward Japan, but he said: "The question in its final analysis, is whether international relations shall be determined by arbitrary force or by law and respect for international treaties. In fact, that seems to be the greatest issue facing the world today."

Airplane Crash Tragedy

GRAND DUKE GEORGE OF HESSE, his wife, mother and two little sons and six other persons were killed when a Belgian air liner crashed and burned near Ostend. They were on their way to attend the wedding of the duke's brother Ludwig in London. Ludwig succeeded to the title and the marriage ceremony was performed privately with him and his bride, Margaret Campbell Geddes, daughter of Sir Auckland Geddes, in deep mourning. Ludwig was the third grand duke of his line within a week, for his father died only a few days before the airplane tragedy.

Extra Session Opens

WITH the evident intention of doing what it can to aid business, congress began its extraordinary session. Its first business was to listen to a rather long message from Mr. Roosevelt in which the Chief Executive committed himself to limited tax law revision for the purpose of removing admitted injustices suffered especially by small business and non-speculative investors.

Mr. Roosevelt proposed tax "modifications adequate to encourage productive enterprise," but explained that he sought primarily to aid at the expense of individual or partnership undertaking. The President said exercise of "ordinary prudence" would protect the nation against prolonged business recession.

He reiterated his intention to balance the next fiscal year budget, and demanded that congress find and provide new revenue for any added expenditures authorized now. The President asked congress to provide: 1. Wages and hours legislation. 2. An "all-weather" crop control program. 3. Reorganization of executive departments. 4. National planning for better use of natural resources.

It appeared certain that a vigorous opposition to all or part of this program would arise, but nearly everybody seemed in favor of tax law revision.

Plot to Kill Stalin?

FROM foreign diplomats stationed in Moscow came reports that a plot by German agents to assassinate Dictator Stalin of Russia had been uncovered, and that it might compromise Maxim Litvinov, foreign commissar, who left the Brussels conference suddenly and apparently seriously worried. Investigations by the G. P. U. already have resulted in the recall or disappearance of many leading Russian diplomats. The German consul general in Leningrad was ordered to leave the country immediately. It is believed two German agents arrested some weeks ago confessed the conspiracy to murder Stalin and involve the country in a civil war.

"Fireside Chat"

CALLING on the nation for full cooperation in the taking of the voluntary census of the unemployed, taken by the Post Office department, President Roosevelt in a "fireside chat" by radio said that permanent cure of the unemployment problem lies in finding jobs in industry and agriculture. Nevertheless, he said, it is still the policy of the administration that no one shall starve through lack of government aid.

He gave assurance that the government will try to stimulate private industry enough to enable it to re-absorb the jobless; and after the results of the census are tabulated, a long-range program will be launched. This program, he said, will apply to employers as well as to workers, and in this was perceived a note of encouragement to business.

The President said prosperity of the nation depended upon national purchasing power, and added: "Our far-sighted industrial leaders now recognize that a very substantial share of corporate earnings must be paid out in wages, or the soil from which these industries grow will soon become impoverished. Our farmers recognize that their largest customers are the workers for wages, and that farm markets cannot be maintained except through widespread purchasing power."

Mr. Roosevelt emphasized that America will not try to solve the employment problem by a huge armament program, as other nations are doing.

Thalberg's Millions

AN INVENTORY filed in probate court at Los Angeles placed a gross value of $4,469,013 on the estate of Irving G. Thalberg, motion picture producer. The net estate will amount to about $2,244,000. After several cash bequests to members of the family the remainder will be divided into three trust funds of about $629,000 each.

The income from one of those will go to Norma Shearer, his widow, for the remainder of her life. Their two children are to receive the income from the remaining two funds until they are thirty-five years old, then the principal.

Lewis Back from Europe

SENATOR LEWIS of Illinois returned from a tour of Germany in which he sought to arrange for payments to American holders of German municipal bonds. The group of which he was a member has submitted a report to Secretary of State Hull.

In France, England, and Germany, the senator said he found a strong increase in American exports to the three countries but expressed himself at a loss to see how the nations could pay for their purchases, because they are all in debt as a result of feverish preparations for or against war.

Row in Coal Bureau

GEORGE E. ACRET, acting director of the division of examiners of the bituminous coal commission, resigned and suggested a congressional investigation of the agency. He says it has almost completely broken down, and for this he blames Senators McAdoo of California and McGuffey of Pennsylvania. Acret revealed that there has been a row in the commission for several months over patronage, which he alleges has been "hogged" by the senators; and that another cause of dissension has been the fact that the commission has been seeking to grant railroads below-cost fuel at the expense of general consumers.

Here's Wallace's Program

SECRETARY WALLACE offered a program which he said would "promote security for both farmers and consumers" in his annual report to the President. To finance it he recommended a moderate processing tax on cotton only. Crop control when necessary, and the "ever normal granary" are parts of his plan.

- These are the six points of the program which Wallace said would harmonize with the general welfare: 1. Farmers should have a share in the national income to re-establish the prewar ratio of the average farmer's purchasing power to that of the average non-farmer. 2. The people who live on the land must have security of tenure, either as owners of land or renters on a long-time basis. 3. The soil must be used properly and conserved for future farmers and future city dwellers. 4. Farmers through sound co-operatives must come into control of those marketing, processing, purchasing and service functions which they can manage efficiently. 5. Family sized farms should be favored by federal programs, benefit payments and other such aids to rural income. 6. Federal and state funds should continue to be spent to promote agricultural research and farm efficiency.

Death of Atlee Pomerene

PNEUMONIA put an end to the career of Atlee Pomerene, former senator from Ohio. He died in Cleveland at the age of seventy-three years. Pomerene gained fame as a special prosecutor in the Teapot Dome oil inquiry, and President Hoover made him chairman of the Reconstruction Finance corporation.

Washington Digest National Topics Interpreted by William Bruckart

Washington.—Word comes from Rio de Janeiro that the government of Brazil has decided at long last to place its coffee business again on a competitive basis. That is to say, Brazilian coffee once more will be sold in world market conditions. It was 14 years ago that crop control was started, and now it has flopped finally after costing the growers losses accountable in millions and after virtually wrecking some portions of Brazil's foreign trade. I think it might be said also that the fallacy of the coffee control policy was among the real causes which eventuated in the dictatorship that established itself in Brazil recently. President Getulio Vargas succeeded in placing himself at the head of the nation "indefinitely" and he did so, he said, because of "unrest among the peoples" of the provinces. The first dictatorship in the Western hemisphere, therefore, is a fact.

But to get to the coffee question: it was the determination of the Brazilian leaders that a policy of scarcity would force coffee prices higher in the world market. The state of Sao Paulo initiated the scheme. It failed to work, and its sponsors said the reason was its scope was limited. Thus, it was expanded until the whole nation was embraced. Still, coffee prices did not go high enough and it was then that actual destruction of coffee began. Millions of tons were dumped into the Atlantic ocean and other millions were burned—even as we in this country burned surplus wheat and corn and killed 6,000,000 pigs.

As the destruction continued and the growers found themselves tied tighter with regulations and decrees, there were some increases in prices. But the promised great profits proved to be as illusory as a mirage on the desert. The whole thing was a boomerang. Not only were the producers in Brazil disillusioned by failure to gain the record returns they had been led to expect, but they found another sad and wholly disadvantageous result staring them in the face. There was some increase in the price—just enough, indeed, to reduce consumption to some extent—for the growers, but with Brazil reducing available supplies others got into the producing business.

Among these new coffee growing areas, Colombia sprang into prominence. Maybe Colombia coffee was not as good as Brazil's, in quality. Maybe it was not quite as acceptable otherwise. But it was cheaper, and it was profitable for Colombia planters to produce. They found a ready sale. That, however, was not the worst. When other coffee-using nations bought coffee from Colombia and other growing areas, Colombia was able to buy other commodities from the nations buying her coffee. New trade agreements suddenly showed up; new relationships were established, and some of Brazil's former business connections throughout the world are gone with the wind. They may never be re-established. We, in the United States, ought to give quite a bit of thought to Brazil's coffee experiment for we have had, and are threatening to have more, experiments of a kindred nature. Lessons in crop control are right expensive, and more important is the fact that, sooner or later all through history, they have had to be abandoned. And when I refer to crop control, I include all kinds of production control whether agricultural or industrial. Somebody always has to pay dearly for it and usually the cost has been extended. It is reflected in other commodities and in taxes until the actual loss from the experiment is multiplied many times over.

Speaking of congress, the way it has started off makes me think that the extra session was purely a political move. I am quite sure it is going to accomplish some great good like amending the neutrality act. Of course, I suppose I should not be selfish. I ought to consider that the representatives and senators must have time to make speeches for this or that or the other so that their constituencies back home will be duly impressed with their importance. Maybe so! But I repeat that the prospect of anything worth while in either the special session or in the regular session to follow in January is decidedly dull.

Politically, there are several things to watch for in the time that congress will be here—ho-ho-ing. One of these definitely now visible is the maneuvering among the Democrats to find out whether President Roosevelt really wants to be a candidate for a third term. I think I am violating no confidence when I say that a good many of the President's real friends at the Capitol would like to know, and know now, whether he is going after a third term. He hasn't told them in a way that is convincing. He made a speech at the "victory dinner" last March 4 in which he said he had an ambition to leave the President's chair and desk with "the nation intact, a nation at peace, a nation prosperous," etc. He said he planned to do that in January, 1941. That would seem to be clear enough. Yet, it is amazing how many members of the President's party at the Capitol contend that those remarks did not constitute a final withdrawal. They point as well to the fact that other Presidents, after being re-elected for a second term, have come out flat-footed with their announcements and have told their party, in effect, "Go out and get yourselves a new candidate."

So, I am making a small prediction. There will be plenty of odd maneuvers, unusual situations, that will appear to "just happen" that way. Their purpose will be to bring about a circumstance wherein President Roosevelt can appropriately tell all of those who have so faithfully stood by him that he is, or is not, a candidate for a third term. The other phase of congressional activity that will prove interesting links in somewhat—with the third term question. It involves the personal political fortunes of the representatives and senators who will seek re-election in 1938. It is easy to see how many Democrats, if they know definitely that President Roosevelt will seek a third term, will want to ride again on the New Deal wagon. It is equally easy to understand how some of them, desirous of observing the tradition that no man shall serve more than two terms as President, may want to take a stand opposing the course if President Roosevelt decides that way.

This condition leads far afield. I am informed, for instance that some senators and representatives who have been back home in conservative sections of the country want to dodge further support of the New Deal. This class obviously is biding its time for something to happen to justify a jump. Announcement by Mr. Roosevelt of intention to be a candidate for the third time would provide the reason. The converse is true, as well, for there are those in the house and senate who have found the President's personal popularity at home as great as ever and they are looking for an excuse to sound off that they believe in the Roosevelt policies 100 per cent and want him to have a third term. The election results in various parts of the country will have some influence on the attitude of representatives and senators as the session continues. Take the vote in Arkansas, for example. Representative Miller won the senatorship in succession to the late Senator Joe Robinson. His victory was over Governor Bailey, who announced that the New Deal was for him and that his defeat would be a slap at President Roosevelt. It is a fact that New Dealers were pulling for him—but Representative Miller was elected. That is just a sample. The senators and representatives are going to interpret such elections in the light of sentiment in their own bailiwicks. Undoubtedly, some are going to show more spunk in behalf of the New Deal while others have come back determined to foster their ideas of Democratic principles rather than those of New Deal.

Tribute to Halsey

This date being what it is, I want to record a tribute in these columns, a tribute to a grand public servant who never has sought publicity for himself nor claimed the credit that is due him. For, it was 40 years ago this week that Col. Edwin A. Halsey, of Tye River, Va., entered the employ of the senate. Now, he occupies the post of secretary of the senate, the highest available outside of senate membership. The senate never convenes but that I am again impressed with the smoothness of the senate organization under "Eddie" Halsey's direction. I truly believe him to be the best informed man at the Capitol on legislative procedure. As his colored messenger once said to me: "Yessah! De cunnel he suah do know his stuff." And that goes for Colonel Halsey's political acumen, too. He has performed the chores of the Democratic side of the senate to everybody's satisfaction. I suppose some of the senators who like to be regarded as big shots won't care for this exposure, but I have seen them saved from unnumbered mistakes that would have made them the laughing stock of their constituencies. Day after day, in season and out, "Eddie" Halsey has done more for the Democratic senators than they can ever repay. He ought to be called "the Sage of Tye River," as his counsel warrants that description. The state of Virginia could do itself a good turn if it kept "Eddie" Halsey in mind for something higher.

What Irwin S. Cobb Thinks about

The Law's Injustice.

SANTA MONICA, CALIF.—

Had it happened in another country, we'd say, "What curious ideas foreigners have of law enforcement."

A footpad with an evil record held up a victim. A bystander saw the crime, identified the thief. The ruffian was held under indictment. But he could give bond. The spectator was "detained" as a material witness—a gentle way of saying he was locked up, exactly as though he had been the criminal. Well, he was guilty of being poor.

Six months later came the trial. The defendant, having been out all that time on bail, looked hale and hearty. The prosecution's witness was produced under guard, pale and sickly from close confinement. It didn't help his health any when the crook's attorney browbeat him, yelled at him, practically accused him of perjury.

The citizen sued the state for false imprisonment, for loss of wages, for separation from his family, for all he'd suffered. Under the statutes he had no standing. They threw his case out. Meanwhile, the convicted crook had been released by the parole board and was free as a bird.

Aquatic Novelties.

INTERESTING discoveries were made in Hawaiian waters by government ichthyologists. For fear the similarity of sound may lead to wrong impressions, let me state that this department has nothing to do with Secretary Ickes, although, since ichthyology pertains to fish, Mrs. Secretary Perkins might possibly have a contrary view on this point. Because they do say there are moments in the cabinet when all is not sweetness and accord.

However, the point is that Uncle Sam's piscatorial sharps dredged up a fish that is most delectable for six months of the year, but poisonous the other six months. So at least they've found a creature emblematic of the California climate.

Let this be regarded around here as treason, I will state that I'm as loyal a native stepson as any that ever came out of Iowa, having been here long enough now to join in passing resolutions endorsing the scenery and at intervals uttering three loud ringing cheers for the sunsets.

Also let envious Florida refrain from gloating. To typify Florida's climate that fish would be good only four months of the year and powerfully hard to put up with the rest of the time.

Lecturing Adventures.

IN ALABAMA is a sect which forbids its converts to laugh or even smile. Now I know who it was bought out the house when I delivered a humorous lecture down there.

The other day a chap asked me why I didn't go back on the lecture platform. I told him I'd appeared in practically every sizable town in America, and, though it was years ago and probably popular indignation had abated now, still I wasn't taking any chances—I was waiting for some new towns to be built.

Once I tried the experiment of slipping around to the front door to hear what the crowd said, coming out. That was the night I attempted suicide by gas, but was saved when someone, passing through the hotel corridor, smelled something that smelled even worse than the hotel smelled.

A lecturer's lot is not a happy one. But usually it's the audience that suffers most.

Eating Oysters.

THERE'S a brand-new movement called eat-oysters-in-any-month-you-please movement, or, unless you're working on space rates, it may be called E. O. I. A. M. Y. P. M., for short. Its sponsor says the prejudice against eating oysters in months having an "r" in them is a fallacy dating back 2,000 years when, between hiccoughs, a Roman senator said: "Oysters should be eaten only in certain seasons."

So it appears we've been penalizing ourselves ever since then for the indigestion of a Roman senator, although, so far as eating the California oyster is concerned—he runs around forty to the dozen—he personally could refrain for the whole year without any undue longings. The California oyster looks something like a brass overall button suffering from vertigris.

Still, maybe it's all for the best. Because during May, June, July and August is when the oyster does practically all his courting. There's little enough romance left in the world—and anyhow, who am I to come between an oyster and his love-life? He doesn't seem to have any too much fun the rest of the time.

Advertising Reduced Cost

A third of a century ago the price of the cheapest automobile was about $5,000. Today a much better car can be bought for around $700. Advertising created demand, demand created mass production, with many times the number of jobs, and mass production improved the quality and reduced the price.

Still Coughing?

No matter how many medicines you have tried for your cough, chest cold, or bronchial irritation, you can get relief now with Creomulsion. Serious trouble may be brewing and you cannot afford to take a chance with any remedy less potent than Creomulsion, which goes right to the seat of the trouble and aids nature to soothe and heal the inflamed mucous membranes and to loosen and expel the germ-laden phlegm. Even if other remedies have failed, don't be discouraged, try Creomulsion. Your druggist is authorized to refund your money if you are not thoroughly satisfied with the benefits obtained from the very first bottle. Creomulsion is one word—not two, and it has no hyphen in it. Ask for it plainly, see that the name on the bottle is Creomulsion, and you'll get the genuine product, and the relief you want. (Adv.)

Wording Invitations to Sub-Deb's Party

DEAR Mrs. Post: My husband and I would like to give a small dance for our daughter who is of sub-debutante age, and the question of a proper form for invitations has come up. If we have them engraved "Mr. and Mrs. request the pleasure of your company at a dance in honor of their daughter..." won't this invitation suggest that we are bringing our daughter out at this dance? We would not like to create this impression. It seems that all the invitations my son receives to debutante parties are worded this way, but it is also true that my husband and I receive invitations to older parties also in this same wording.

Answer: An invitation such as you suggested and also the one in which the daughter's name appears immediately under that of the parents does mean that she is "out" or is to be presented at the party. On invitations to parties given for younger daughters it would be better to have forms engraved, if you do not already have them, which are intended to be filled in. These same forms are used for dinners or other occasions, which do not require a large enough number to have an especially worded invitation engraved. Your daughter's name would simply be written across the top.

Where Fashion Leads We Trail Like Sheep

DEAR Mrs. Post: Will you please explain about the wearing of veils in the present day? Mother insists that they were never intended to be worn after dark and I can hardly believe she is right because why would so many of the hats bought for street wear have veils attached to them?

Answer: It is impossible to attempt to limit fashions. Perhaps women will wear veils around their wrists or around their necks next, for whatever fashion says to do we all, like so many sheep, follow after. Of course they didn't used to wear veils in the evening. Of course they didn't used to go without backs in their dresses either, nor did they play tennis in panties! At present they do wear stiff little ruffle trimmings on the hats and call them veils, and also call some of the hats they grace evening hats. As for the large circular evening veils that are dropped snugly over the hair to keep it in place, and then flare smartly at the bottom edge, which are illustrated in the fashion magazines, they are perhaps legitimate children of day before yesterday's "fascinator."

Announcing a Birth

DEAR Mrs. Post: Is it unusual for parents to handwrite an announcement of a baby's birth on plain white cards? I think something simple like "Mr. and Mrs. John Parents are happy to announce the birth of Mary Lou at St. Luke's Hospital" would be nicer than having them printed, or filling in stock forms. And is it all right to mention the hospital as I have, since I would like my out of town friends to send letters to me.

Answer: I would get a box of very small sized white note paper instead of cards, and write exactly what you said. Break the message down this way:

Mr. and Mrs. John Parent are happy to announce the birth of Mary Lou at St. Luke's Hospital on Friday, February 10th

Cutting-In at Dance

SOME time ago I was the guest of a girl at a big dance at which I was a total stranger. Stags cut in on us frequently and I stood out most of the evening. Could I have cut in on other girls whom I had not met?

Answer: What your friend should have done would have been to take you up to some of the girls first before you and she went on dancing. Then the next time she was cut in on you could have cut in on any of these girls to whom she had introduced you. To leave you not knowing a person in the room was showing very little social tact on her part.

"At Home" Cards.

DEAR Mrs. Post: After our marriage we are going west for several months but do not expect that my husband will have to stay on after that time. His next place will be permanent but we are not sure where it will be as yet. Under the circumstances, what should I do about enclosing at home cards with my announcements?

Answer: I wouldn't enclose at home cards. Those who want to write you can write to your own home address and by and by, when you are settled permanently, send out your visiting card with your address on it.

300 Indians Now Enrolled To Aid Red Men of State

There isn't a tomahawk or a scalping knife in the whole outfit, but the leaders of Northern Michigan's new Indian tribe are confident they will succeed where their belligerent ancestors failed.

The new tribe — popularly known as "MIDA" — has enrolled 300 Indians in Emmet, Cheboygan, Charlevoix, Antrim and Leelanau counties under the leadership of Chief Fred Ettawageshik, of Harbor Springs, and is prepared for a vigorous campaign this winter.

"MIDA" which is incorporated as the Michigan Indian Defense Association, a non-political organization, is pledged to work for the betterment of the Indian, substituting peaceful agitation for warlike operations.

Chief Ettawageshik envisions eventual organization of all of Michigan's 9,000 Indians as a first step toward a nation-wide Indian group, thereby justifying the English translation of his name which means "from horizon to horizon."

To expose Phony Indians
Peaceful though its technique is, MIDA is preparing this winter to dig up the hypothetical hatchet and go on the warpath against those professional entertainers who fraudulently pose as "Indian entertainers and dancers." The tribe is pledged to expose such imposters.

"The Indian does not seek glorification in the glare of theatrical floodlights for the amusement of a pleasure-seeking vacation crowd," Chief Ettawageshik explained. "The Indian seeks the glory of his own honor and integrity, protection of his family, security of his home and education of his children."

The exposure of fraudulent "Indians" is only one of MIDA's objectives. The organization seeks recognition of its members as full-fledged citizens; special legislation to protect them from discrimination and exploitation; an act by the state legislature setting aside an "American Indian Day" and publicity for deserving members of the race.

MIDA is governed by a chief, an assistant chief, a chief's messenger (secretary) and a paymaster (treasurer.) The organization was formed in 1934 by a group of Indians and Northern Michigan white men which included the Rev. Fr. Aubert Keuter, known as "the little brown father of the red man." The organization sponsors such events as the Ottawa Naming Ceremonial festival, which is held at Harbor Springs once each summer for the purpose of bestowing an Indian name on some white person who has been of great service to the race.

Red Cross Replaces Farm Family Losses

The Red Cross gave agricultural rehabilitation to 10,116 farm families following the severe eastern floods of last winter. Types of aid included feed seed, livestock, farm tools and machinery and other items essential to agricultural productivity. More than $599,000 was expended by the organization to meet these requirements.

In addition to occupational assistance, rural families hard hit by the flood waters were rescued, clothed, fed and sheltered by the Red Cross. Where it was necessary the Red Cross repaired and rebuilt out-buildings, barns and other structures. Medical and nursing care were provided and homes re-furnished.

Red Cross agricultural rehabilitation benefited nearly three times as many families as received all other types of Red Cross occupational rehabilitation combined.

America takes inventory of her blessings and is thankful. No other nation can show so long a list, headed by such items as "Peace," "Security," "Abundance," "Personal Liberty."

In fact, elsewhere in the world there are many who wonder whether to be thankful even for life itself, surrounded as it is by misery, death, and destruction. Rich or poor, in America we have much to be thankful for.

Home Heating Hints

By John Barclay Heating Expert

Rubbish and Garbage Should Not Be Burned in Your Furnace, They Cause Trouble.

I SHOULD like to caution you against burning garbage and rubbish in the heating plant of your home. Many home-owners are given to this practice, knowing it is a quick and easy way to dispose of garbage, but, not realizing fully that it is very harmful to the furnace.

Your furnace was built to burn coal, and coal only. Garbage and rubbish, when burned in it, deposit a thick crust of soot on the burning surfaces, and this soot absorbs much of the heat that should go into your rooms. They also form clinkers which, as you know, cause no end of trouble for you in keeping your fire burning efficiently.

Don't burn rubbish or garbage in furnace. They cause heavy soot to cake on surfaces and waste heat and also cause clinkers to form. Keep the ashpit clean.

Remember this: A clean furnace, like a clean automobile engine, will give better service and greater comfort.

Overdone Politeness

From early childhood, the Chinese are taught so thoroughly to mind their own business that they rarely render assistance when a person is drowning, a house is burning or a store is being robbed. In fact, purse-snatching in broad daylight is a common occurrence on the streets of Chinese cities because thieves are fairly certain that no one will interfere.—Collier's Weekly.

HELP KIDNEYS

To Get Rid of Acid and Poisonous Waste

Your kidneys help to keep you well by constantly filtering waste matter from the blood. If your kidneys get functionally disordered and fail to remove excess impurities, there may be poisoning of the whole system and body-wide distress.

Burning, scanty or too frequent urination may be a warning of some kidney or bladder disturbance.

You may suffer nagging backache, persistent headache, attacks of dizziness, getting up at night, swelling, puffiness under the eyes—feel weak, nervous, all played out.

SYNOPSIS

Young Gregory Sterling, having made a fortune in the West, reluctantly returns to his home town, and takes a luxurious room at the Whitall House on the edge of town. As he looks across the street to the park, he sees a girl sitting on a park bench suddenly reel over, and rushes to her rescue. He takes her still unconscious, to a hospital, where the doctor pronounces the case starvation. Gregory engages a private room and a special nurse, Miss Gowen, and gives orders to keep secret the identity of the girl's benefactor. While Gregory considers endowing a hospital room in memory of his mother, for the free use of strangers, he finds a purse beneath the park bench where the girl had sat. Opening it, he finds it empty except for a letter addressed to Miss Margaret McLaren, 1458 Rodman street, with a blurred Vermont postmark.

So Greg started out to find Rodman street and at last discovered the address on one of a row of old brownstone front houses.

There were lights in the second story, and a dim light coming from the transom over the front door; but it was a long time before anybody came and then the door was opened but a few inches over a sturdy door chain.

"Who's there?" asked a sharp elderly voice.

"Does Miss Margaret McLaren live here?" asked Greg.

"No. She certainly doesn't. Not any more!" said the sharp voice. "I told her this morning that she needn't come back tonight whining around for me to let her in. She can't step her foot inside this house again, not till she pays me the three weeks' rent she owes me. And if it's her suitcase you've come for you can't have it till the room rent's paid."

Greg was still for a minute, considering.

"I didn't come for her suitcase," he said. "I was just trying to look up some of her friends, but it doesn't sound as if you were one. I had thought it might interest you to know that she had an accident this afternoon and she's in the hospital unconscious now."

"Accident! Humph! Well, they needn't try to bring her here. I don't intend to take care of any sick people. I got enough to take care of my roomers. I'm sick and old. All I've got to say is she deserves what she gets. Anybody that 'ud give up a perfectly good position just because she couldn't stomach the man that employs her deserves to get down and out. These aren't any times to be so squeamish about jobs. What'd you come here for anyway? Because you aren't likely to get it."

"No, so I see," said Greg indignantly. "Well, suppose I happened to come to pay her rent?"

"Who are you, anyway?" she hissed. "I never saw you with her. Why should you pay her rent?"

"I'm only a friend and you never did see me with her, but I might pay her rent just to save her having to listen to you when she is able to come back again. How much is her rent, anyway?"

"It's $15!" said the woman, beligerently. "and I won't come down a cent for cash, either!"

"Is that all?" said Greg amusedly. "Well, I'll pay it if you'll make out a receipt in full to date."

"I'm not unfriendly," said the woman, "but we have to look out for ourselves. We have to live! I suppose you can come in. If you're really going to pay."

She eyed the roll of bills in Greg's hand greedily.

She wrote the receipt painstakingly and handed it over. Greg folded it carefully and put it in his pocket.

As he walked out the door and down the street Greg was thinking of his clean little shack on the hillside with the whispering pines all around. Somehow there was something terribly desolate and dreary in this rooming house. And was this the place where the little white-faced girl had lived? For how long? he wondered.

But then, of course, the pocket-book might not have belonged to her. Or even if it had the letter might not have been hers. He couldn't tell a thing until he found out if Margaret were really her name.

When he reached his room in the hotel he took the letter out of his pocket, half reverently, and opened it.

It was only a torn half-sheet of cheap notepaper, and just a few lines written on it at that, no name signed, either. It read:

"Dear Child—Sam Fletcher is going down to the village, so I write a line to let you know the money came safely. Your Grandfather says, 'Bless the child' and tell her not to send any more now. We'll make out. Get yourself a good warm winter coat. His knee is a little better now, we think. Don't overwork. Lovingly,

"GRANDMOTHER.

"P. S.—Is that man you work for all right? It kind of worries me what you say about him. Maybe you better try for another job."

Well, there wasn't any help here. No date except the blurred postmark, and no name of the town or people. Obviously he couldn't let that grandfather and grandmother know. He couldn't go all over the state of Vermont asking for Margaret McLaren's grandparents.

He put the letter slowly back into the envelope. He wished he knew how she was.

Early in the morning his telephone rang, causing him to waken sharply to sudden anxiety.

"Is this Mr. Sterling? Well, this is Miss Gowen, the nurse. I just wanted to tell you that our patient rested nicely all night, took her medicine and nourishment like a lamb and is still sleeping. The doctor came in in the night and says she is doing well. He says she may sleep right on through the day, you can't tell."

Greg felt like a child on a holiday after he had hung up. Why was he so glad about an utter stranger? Well, he was. It was something to have somebody to care about, even a stranger about whom he knew nothing. He had saved her life perhaps. Didn't that give him some right to be glad?

He ate his breakfast joyously, planning what he would do. He had intended going out to see the old landmarks that morning, his old home, the schoolhouse, the church where his mother and he used to go regularly on Sunday, the house

everybody. You see, I hadn't been eating much yesterday. I was worried, and I just sat down there a little while to rest. I had no idea I would collapse like that. I suppose I'm rather run down. I've been working hard."

"Yes," said Greg sympathetically. "I can see you would. And it's perhaps a good thing you did collapse just when you did. I'm certainly glad I was on hand to see you fall."

"But say," he suddenly caught himself and looked at the nurse, "am I talking too much? Are you sure I don't tire you, Miss McLaren? I wouldn't want you to have a set-back from my coming in."

"Oh, no," said the invalid quickly. "I'm glad you came. Perhaps you can fix things up for me right away so I can leave. Since you brought me here you ought to know how to cut some of the red tape that seems to hinder my leaving."

"Why, sure!" he said reassuringly. "I'll see what can be done, but I don't believe anybody will be willing you should leave right away. You see, you really need a few days' rest after such an experience."

"But I must!" said the girl firmly. "It's absolutely imperative that I go out and see about a job at once. I was to have met a man early this morning, and it is really necessary that I keep my appointment."

"Look here, little friend," he said earnestly, "we really couldn't let you go out and hunt a job today."

"Oh, but please," interrupted the girl earnestly, "you don't understand. I cannot afford to stay here."

"Well, now there you are mistaken, Miss McLaren," Greg spoke gladly, confidently. "This isn't a regular private room and it won't cost you a cent. This room is a memorial room to my mother. And the nurse goes along with it. Isn't that right, Miss Gowen?"

"It certainly is," said the nurse brightly.

Margaret McLaren lay there looking from one to the other of them, and then suddenly her great eyes filled with tears.

"Oh," she said with a quiver of her lips, "I never heard of having rooms like this for nothing, but it's heavenly, wonderful!" Her lips trembled. "I hope some day there may be a way that I can do something for somebody like this. But now listen, please—wonderful as all this is, and much as I would love to stay here and just rest—the white lids quivered shut for just an instant over the big, dark eyes, "I just can't! I've got to get back to work. There are reasons why—"

"You needn't try to explain," he said pityingly, "you have a right to keep your reasons to yourself."

"You are kind," she said gently, "but you aren't really even an acquaintance, you know. I mean—of course you've been wonderfully friendly, but you are really a stranger. You don't know a thing about me."

"You'd be surprised," grinned Greg suddenly, "how much I know. One can't spend nearly 24 hours thinking about a person and trying to find her friends without turning up quite a good deal about her."

"You were trying to find my friends? But I haven't any friends about here."

"So I discovered," said Greg. "But you see I was thinking there might be a mother somewhere worrying and I thought I ought to do my best to find her."

"No," she said with a hint of tears in her voice, "my mother and father died when I was a child. I have a grandfather and grandmother—but they are away off in Vermont."

"Yes," said Greg. "I found that out, too. I don't know as I should, but I did. I was going to ask your pardon for that before we get through. But you see I kept thinking maybe you had somebody who would worry about you."

"Why, how could you possibly find that out?" said the girl in wonder.

"Well," said Greg, giving her one of his pleasant boyish grins, "you see, it was this way. After I got back to my hotel I walked over to that bench where you were sitting when you fell. You see, I just got back to this town yesterday after ten years out West, and it happens that park used to be a meadow when I was here before, where I used to go with my mother sometimes to pick violets. So when I went back and sat down awhile and got to thinking about you, wondering who you were and if somebody was worrying about you, and then my foot touched something in the grass and I picked it up and it was a pocket-book. I wondered if it could be yours and looked at it. There wasn't anything in it but a handkerchief and a letter."

The girl suddenly sat up in bed, a kind of fright in her eyes.

"Oh, you didn't telegraph to Grandmother, did you?"

"I couldn't," said Greg. "There wasn't any name signed but Grandmother, and there wasn't any address. Even the postmark was blurred so all I could get was Vermont."

"Oh! I'm so thankful!" said the girl, dropping back on her pillows. "I wouldn't have Grandmother know for anything."

"So am I," grinned Greg, "if you feel that way about it."

The nurse came quietly and brought her a glass of orange juice. "Am I staying too long?" asked Greg, springing to his feet and looking apprehensively at the nurse.

"No, you're being good for her," said the nurse. "It was just fine she had this, that's all. She's going to be fine in a day or so now."

"But really," said the girl as she drained the glass and handed it back to the nurse, "I've just got to look up a job tonight and be ready to go to work Monday morning. I'm so sorry to disappoint you two, you've been so kind. But it's an absolute necessity."

"Yes?" said Greg, dropping back into his chair again. "I was coming to that job. Tell me about it."

"I had an advertisement that sounded hopeful," she said after an instant's hesitation, lifting truthful eyes to his face. "I wasn't sure about it, of course. But I had no trouble in getting my first job last fall. But the head of the firm died and the business went into the hands of a receiver. Then this last job I had to leave. The man was—well—just impossible! He was very offensive. I couldn't stand it. I had to leave without my pay, which made things very hard. And—I wouldn't feel like going back for a reference."

"Now, Miss McLaren, suppose you just put this thing out of your mind and rest quietly here. I'll guarantee to get you a good job by Monday, or as soon after as the doctor thinks it's safe for you to go back to work."

"Oh, I'll take anything, at first. I must, of course."

"No," said Greg, "you won't. You've got to have a good salary. You can't live on anything."

"Now, you go to sleep again and get really rested. I'll be seeing you again tomorrow. Now don't you worry. I've killed a bear and a rattlesnake and fought wild steers. There's just one more thing in that line I'd like to do and that is beat up the last fellow you worked for, and I will yet if he ever gets in my way. But meantime I'll land a job for you the first of next week. Now don't you fret another worry. Good-night."

He took her slim little hand in his briefly, shyly and then left, with a wave of the hand to the nurse, and a smile like sunshine.

"It Was Very Good of You to Care for Me," She Said.

where Alice used to live, all the places with which he had been familiar. But that could wait. He wanted to get this business of the hospital fixed up first.

He found there were formalities. He couldn't just transform a hospital room into any kind of a free place he wished at will. There were officials and there was a board. But fortunately the board had a meeting that morning, and he was informed that he could present his proposition at 11 o'clock.

The board was so gracious to this opulent stranger who was willing to pay cash for a room that very often stood idle because it was available only to wealthy people. When the arrangements were completed Greg went to see about having the bronze tablet made for the door, and it was late in the afternoon before he got back to the hospital.

He found the nurse just coming out of the room.

"I've been trying to telephone you," she said. "She woke up a few moments ago and insisted on getting right up and going away. I told her that would be impossible until the doctor came, that we had no right to let her go away until she had been dismissed. Then she said she absolutely must. That she had to go somewhere and apply for a job. She seemed awfully upset that she hadn't got there by eight o'clock. I've had a time keeping her quieted down. I thought perhaps if you could come in and jolly her along a little it might help."

"I'll come!" said Greg with a light in his eyes.

When Greg arrived the nurse swung Margaret's door open and said in a clear, cheery tone:

"Miss McLaren, I'm bringing a visitor to see you. This is Mr. Sterling, who picked you up yesterday and brought you here. He's been anxious to know how you are, and I knew you would want to thank him."

The girl on the bed turned quick troubled eyes toward the young man, and a little color sprang into her white cheeks.

Greg went toward the bed with his cheerful grin.

"But say!" he exclaimed eagerly. "You're looking better already, aren't you? I certainly am glad. You had me scared last night."

The girl managed a wan smile.

"It was very good of you to care for me," she said. "I'm sorry I had to make so much trouble for everybody. You see, I hadn't been eating much yesterday. I was worried, and I just sat down there a little while to rest. I had no idea I would collapse like that. I suppose I'm rather run down. I've been working hard."

"Yes," said Greg sympathetically. "I can see you would. And it's perhaps a good thing you did collapse just when you did. I'm certainly glad I was on hand to see you fall."

"But say," he suddenly caught himself and looked at the nurse, "am I talking too much? Are you sure I don't tire you, Miss McLaren? I wouldn't want you to have a set-back from my coming in."

"Oh, no," said the invalid quickly. "I'm glad you came. Perhaps you can fix things up for me right away so I can leave. Since you brought me here you ought to know how to cut some of the red tape that seems to hinder my leaving."

"Why, sure!" he said reassuringly. "I'll see what can be done, but I don't believe anybody will be willing you should leave right away. You see, you really need a few days' rest after such an experience."

"But I must!" said the girl firmly. "It's absolutely imperative that I go out and see about a job at once. I was to have met a man early this morning, and it is really necessary that I keep my appointment."

"Look here, little friend," he said earnestly, "we really couldn't let you go out and hunt a job today."

"Oh, but please," interrupted the girl earnestly, "you don't understand. I cannot afford to stay here."

"Well, now there you are mistaken, Miss McLaren," Greg spoke gladly, confidently. "This isn't a regular private room and it won't cost you a cent. This room is a memorial room to my mother. And the nurse goes along with it. Isn't that right, Miss Gowen?"

"It certainly is," said the nurse brightly.

Margaret McLaren lay there looking from one to the other of them, and then suddenly her great eyes filled with tears.

"Oh," she said with a quiver of her lips, "I never heard of having rooms like this for nothing, but it's heavenly, wonderful!" Her lips trembled. "I hope some day there may be a way that I can do something for somebody like this. But now listen, please—wonderful as all this is, and much as I would love to stay here and just rest—the white lids quivered shut for just an instant over the big, dark eyes, "I just can't! I've got to get back to work. There are reasons why—"

"You needn't try to explain," he said pityingly, "you have a right to keep your reasons to yourself."

"You are kind," she said gently, "but you aren't really even an acquaintance, you know. I mean—of course you've been wonderfully friendly, but you are really a stranger. You don't know a thing about me."

"You'd be surprised," grinned Greg suddenly, "how much I know. One can't spend nearly 24 hours thinking about a person and trying to find her friends without turning up quite a good deal about her."

"You were trying to find my friends? But I haven't any friends about here."

"So I discovered," said Greg. "But you see I was thinking there might be a mother somewhere worrying and I thought I ought to do my best to find her."

"No," she said with a hint of tears in her voice, "my mother and father died when I was a child. I have a grandfather and grandmother—but they are away off in Vermont."

"Yes," said Greg. "I found that out, too. I don't know as I should, but I did. I was going to ask your pardon for that before we get through. But you see I kept thinking maybe you had somebody who would worry about you."

"Why, how could you possibly find that out?" said the girl in wonder.

"Well," said Greg, giving her one of his pleasant boyish grins, "you see, it was this way. After I got back to my hotel I walked over to that bench where you were sitting when you fell. You see, I just got back to this town yesterday after ten years out West, and it happens that park used to be a meadow when I was here before, where I used to go with my mother sometimes to pick violets. So when I went back and sat down awhile and got to thinking about you, wondering who you were and if somebody was worrying about you, and then my foot touched something in the grass and I picked it up and it was a pocket-book. I wondered if it could be yours and looked at it. There wasn't anything in it but a handkerchief and a letter."

The girl suddenly sat up in bed, a kind of fright in her eyes.

"Oh, you didn't telegraph to Grandmother, did you?"

"I couldn't," said Greg. "There wasn't any name signed but Grandmother, and there wasn't any address. Even the postmark was blurred so all I could get was Vermont."

"Oh! I'm so thankful!" said the girl, dropping back on her pillows. "I wouldn't have Grandmother know for anything."

"So am I," grinned Greg, "if you feel that way about it."

The nurse came quietly and brought her a glass of orange juice. "Am I staying too long?" asked Greg, springing to his feet and looking apprehensively at the nurse.

"No, you're being good for her," said the nurse. "It was just fine she had this, that's all. She's going to be fine in a day or so now."

"But really," said the girl as she drained the glass and handed it back to the nurse, "I've just got to look up a job tonight and be ready to go to work Monday morning. I'm so sorry to disappoint you two, you've been so kind. But it's an absolute necessity."

"Yes?" said Greg, dropping back into his chair again. "I was coming to that job. Tell me about it."

"I had an advertisement that sounded hopeful," she said after an instant's hesitation, lifting truthful eyes to his face. "I wasn't sure about it, of course. But I had no trouble in getting my first job last fall. But the head of the firm died and the business went into the hands of a receiver. Then this last job I had to leave. The man was—well—just impossible! He was very offensive. I couldn't stand it. I had to leave without my pay, which made things very hard. And—I wouldn't feel like going back for a reference."

"Now, Miss McLaren, suppose you just put this thing out of your mind and rest quietly here. I'll guarantee to get you a good job by Monday, or as soon after as the doctor thinks it's safe for you to go back to work."

"Oh, I'll take anything, at first. I must, of course."

"No," said Greg, "you won't. You've got to have a good salary. You can't live on anything."

"Now, you go to sleep again and get really rested. I'll be seeing you again tomorrow. Now don't you worry. I've killed a bear and a rattlesnake and fought wild steers. There's just one more thing in that line I'd like to do and that is beat up the last fellow you worked for, and I will yet if he ever gets in my way. But meantime I'll land a job for you the first of next week. Now don't you fret another worry. Good-night."

He took her slim little hand in his briefly, shyly and then left, with a wave of the hand to the nurse, and a smile like sunshine.

"PRAISE ALLAH!" for the "BIG APPLE"

Wild Urge of Youth Finds Its Outlet in This Hectic Modern Adaptation of the Old Virginia Reel to "Swing" Music.

By WILLIAM C. UTLEY

YOU'D never believe it, but it all started in the House of Peace. And it has caused more excitement, noise and general pandemonium in the giddy social whirl than anything since Gilda Gray and the thousands who imitated her shimmy.

"That's the 'Big Apple.' An untamed, exhausting thing that releases all the wild urge of youth in a modern, nervous age. To say that it has taken the country by storm is like saying Shirley Temple has charm; you've got to add: 'And then some!'"

A few months ago no one had ever heard of this dance. Yet today you'll find the "Big Apple" in places of such widely divergent character as Chicago's "black and tan" belt and New York's Rockefeller Center; almost any cross-roads Saturday night dance hall and Hollywood's Brown Derby.

The "Big Apple" is not a fruit growers' promotion gag, although perhaps nothing has publicized the apple so widely since the phrase, "An apple a day keeps the doctor away," was coined. It was named for the negro night club where it originated—the Big Apple club in Columbia, S. C. In other days the building had been a synagogue called the House of Peace—an odd enough birthplace for this frantic frolic of the feet.

You've Got to Be Athletic.

Negroes invented it, young college students saw it and introduced it at their parties, and from there it spread to the four points of the compass faster than the latest Mae West joke.

Let's visit a party where the "Big Apple" is in progress. It may be at a fraternity dance in one of the large state universities, at a fine seashore hotel, at a swanky country club or at a honky-tonk joint in Harlem. The rigorous routine is the same.

The band leader is the boss here, and he can drive his slaves to rhythm as hard as any slave driver in an ancient galley. He throws them waving their arms and kicking their feet into the old familiar "Charleston," and with another call he plunges them into the newer and wilder "Suzy-Q." "Swing high" sets the circle shifting in a clockwise direction; "swing low" shifts it into reverse. Couples "cut the apple" and "heel the apple" at the call.

Survival of the Fittest.

After this preliminary workout the leader calls upon individual couples

At Kearney, N. J., 800 students threatened a strike if High School Principal G. G. Mankey refused to lift his ban on the "Big Apple." Here are two Kearney students who don't give a hang for the rule, dancing their favorite new "swing" craze.

from the leader, all the couples who have not by this time fallen by the wayside duck their heads and stagger into the center crying "Wahoo!"

What does all this represent? A return to the savage and primitive? Is civilization degenerating? Perhaps. But is not "swing" music itself merely a technical refinement of the primitive, elemental rhythm of the tom-tom? Only sophisticated overtones have been added. Most folks would rather believe that the "Big Apple" is a good thing for modern civilization, for civilized though we may be there is a wild urge in the meekest among us, and the dance gives that urge safe physical expression.

Probably the "Big Apple" is no wilder for us than the Virginia Reel daring variations of it—the Bunny Hug, the Grizzly Bear, the Gotham Gobble and the Lovers' Walk.

And then! "Alexander's Ragtime Band!" The storm broke. This was a brand-new kind of music. Exciting. Stimulating. Hot. Ragtime! Dancing came out into the open. The restaurants sacrificed a few tables for floor space on which to dance. Orchestra directors who had led sweet, stringed dinner-music numbers suddenly began to sway their hips in the new rhythm of jazz!

From South America came the Tango, about the same time that the Turkey Trot made its bow. It was a good change of pace and it has lived until this day.

Vernon and Irene Castle, the famous dance team, were the idol of youth in those days. Early in 1913 they bowled the country over with their grace and invention; they made a graceful, more pleasant thing of the Turkey Trot. Thousands flocked to see them in Louis Martin's Cafe de l'Opera.

Castle Killed in 1918.

The Castles probably did more than any other professional dancers to increase the popularity of public dancing. Their most important contribution was the invention of the Fox Trot, which is the basis of most dancing today. Originally, it consisted of eight running steps and turn; later it slowed down to four slow and four quick steps.

All through the World war the craze for the Fox Trot continued. Vernon Castle was killed in 1918, but not before the changes in dancing which he had helped to bring about had become well established. The soldier boys danced it with their wives and sweethearts before they went overseas and after they came back.

It was upon their return that the mad period we call the Jazz age began. Youth was finding a new freedom. The speakeasy had become a national institution. The cry was for more and faster and "hotter" music. And some weird and abortive dance steps found their ways to the public fancy.

Enter the Rhumba.

Probably we might have expected ballroom dancing to wane in popularity during the dark years of the depression; but the opposite was the actual case. The explanation may be found in the fact that dancing provided an escape from gloom and in the added leisure which most people had to endure.

The Rhumba came in during the depression. Some tourists probably picked it up in the West Indies and started the country on the way to a new craze. It will never become as popular as the Fox Trot or waltz, because it is too difficult, but it may remain beside the Tango as a "stunt" number for the more accomplished dancers.

Most important of the recent innovations is "swing" music, which is hardly more than a refresh of old-time Jazz. With it came the lively Shag, a dance which is the most important fundamental of the Big Apple.

But in America more than anywhere else fame is a fickle creature, and who knows, perhaps next year the Big Apple will have been forgotten and some new and even madder dance inspiration will fire the country.

Lesson for November 28

CHRISTIAN FRUITFULNESS

LESSON TEXT—John 15:1-16.
GOLDEN TEXT—Herein is my Father glorified, that ye bear much fruit; so shall ye be my disciples.—John 15:8.
PRIMARY TOPIC—Jesus' Rule of Love.
JUNIOR TOPIC—The Loyalty of Love.
INTERMEDIATE AND SENIOR TOPIC—What May We Expect to Achieve?
YOUNG PEOPLE AND ADULT TOPIC—How Christians Become Fruitful.

Thanksgiving day has just afforded each one of us a special opportunity to return praise to God for the fruitfulness of America's broad acres. It is appropriate that we think today of the Christian life as manifesting itself in the bearing of fruit.

Christian work of which we spoke last Sunday may (at least in a measure) be imitated, but fruit cannot be imitated. It is the result of life and only those who know the new birth bear the fruit of Christianity.

The chapter before us is a portion of Scripture which has been the peculiar favorite of God's children in all generations. It is at the center of our Lord's words with his disciples immediately before his death on the cross.

Many are the expositions of this passage, but a beautifully simple one which came to the writer from Dr. W. Graham Scroggie is suggested as most helpful.

I. Life and Fruitfulness (vv. 1-8)

Life results in fruit and there can be no true fruit where there is no life. Christ is the vine, the Father is the keeper of the vine. We who are Christ's are the branches abiding in him, that is, living our whole life in and for him in such close union with him that his life as the vine brings forth fruit in us as the branches. That is real Christian living.

But, alas, there are branches that seem to belong to the vine but they lack the one indispensable evidence of life which is the normal bearing of fruit. These the Father must take and cast away to be destroyed. While we must not read into these words more than our Lord intended, let us beware lest we explain away their serious import. These are grave words of warning to false professors of Christianity, but they are not spoken to distress and dishearten true followers of the Lord Jesus Christ.

Fruit in the Christian is undoubtedly first of all the fruit of character but that character is also to show in conduct. Note the progress—"fruit" (v. 2), "more fruit" (v. 2), "much fruit" (v. 5).

In order to bear more fruit there is need of pruning and cleansing (vv. 2, 3). Pleasant? Not always, but always profitable. Let us thank God for even the pruning knife when its work is needed.

Do not miss the prayer promise in verse 7. It is an unlimited promise with a closely limited condition. Let us meet the condition and claim the promise.

II. Love and Friendship (vv. 9-16)

"This is my commandment that ye love one another." In verse 10 we read that to abide in the love of Christ we must keep his commandments and now we learn that it is his command that we love one another. We are not to await the impulse prompted by the beauty or kindness or propinquity of someone, but we are to love one another. Many a Christian who has obeyed the commandments against stealing, adultery, and blasphemy has never noticed that he is commanded to love.

The joy of Christ was fulfilled on the eve of Calvary by the love of his disciples for one another and for him. He rejoices today when we love the brethren and love him, for thus we enter upon the beautiful relationship of friends.

Dr. Scroggie says, "We may be God's children without being his friends; the one is based on his gift of life to us; the other, upon our offering of love for him. Are you a friend of God? You cannot have God and the world for friends at the same time. The friendship of the world is enmity with God. The world hates Christ, and therefore will not love you if you are like him."

But, oh! the sweet intimacy of fellowship with him. Read verses 14 to 16. Chosen and appointed by him, for "he first loved us," we are not kept in the distant position of servants but are brought into his circle of friends with whom he shares the glorious secrets of his Father, and our Father. It is a great thing to be a Christian, a friend of the Saviour.

Intellect

Every man should use his intellect not as he uses his lamp in the study, only for his own seeing, but as the lighthouse uses its lamps, that those afar off on the sea may see the shining and learn their way.

The Past

The wise man must remember that while he is a descendant of the past, he is a parent of the future, and that his thoughts are as children born to him, which he may not carelessly let die.—Spencer.

HOW TO SEW

by Ruth Wyeth Spears

Silk Shades Give a Soft Glow

THERE is subtlety in the light that glows through a silk shade, and many decorators are using them for the room that needs the softness of plaited folds and the mellowness obtained by placing two tones of fabric one over the other.

Two tones of China silk, one to be used for a plain lining and the other for a gathered outside covering will make an attractive shade. Before you buy the material it is best to experiment with samples one over the other trying them both in daylight and over an artificial light. You will also need a roll of silk binding tape matching the top color of the shade. This tape is to wrap the wire frame. And fancy braid either in gold, silver or a harmonizing tone of silk is used to bind the top and bottom of the shade. Use cotton thread to match the outside tone of the silk.

Slip the binding tape off the roll and wrap a rubber band around it as shown here at A. Working from the inside end of the tape wrap the frame as shown at B. The outside layer of silk is put on next. This is gathered both top and bottom and pinned to the wire covering as at C and D so that it is stretched quite tight. Joinings in the outside covering need not be sewed but may be hidden under the folds. This material is sewed in place as at E.

Next, cut a straight strip for the lining and fit it around the outside of the frame as shown here at F. Trim the joining allowing a seam as shown at G. Sew to the frame at the bottom as at H. Trim quite close at the bottom. Turn lining to inside as at I. Slip stitch the joining. Turn in raw edges at top and whip around top of frame. Pin the binding around and then sew it with stitches buried in the mesh of the braid.

Every Homemaker should have a copy of Mrs. Spears' new book, SEWING. Forty-eight pages of step-by-step directions for making slipcovers and dressing tables; restoring and upholstering chairs, couches; making curtains for every type of room and purpose. Making lampshades, rugs, ottomans and other useful articles for the home. Readers wishing a copy should send name and address, enclosing 25 cents, to Mrs. Spears, 210 South Desplaines St., Chicago, Illinois.

AROUND THE HOUSE

In Making Vegetable Salads.—To prevent vegetable salads from becoming too watery, dry the vegetables before combining with the salad dressing.

Washing Voile.—Voile frocks will not shrink if you use a tablespoonful of epsom salts to every gallon of water when washing them.

When Washing Blankets: Never leave any soap in blankets as this will turn them yellow. Allow half a cupful of vinegar to each gallon of final rinsing water; this will clear all soap from them.

Wipe Up Acid Foods.—Since some enamels lose their luster when they come in contact with acid, always be careful to wipe up, immediately, any vinegar, lemon juice, tomato, or other acid food that is spilled on the enamel of your range.

When Sales Drop—Between 1929 and 1933 the expenditure for advertising in newspapers and periodicals dropped 50 per cent, but the value of manufactured products showed a much greater reduction percentage.

ples to "shine." Each couple, at a nod from him, takes a turn in the center of the circle while the others thankfully drop to one knee, clap in rhythm and cheer the "shiners" on. Couple after couple demonstrates the progress or the retrogress of the modern dance—depending entirely upon the point of view. There are dozens of variations, among them the Camel Walk, Peckin' and Posin', the Flea Hop, the Bunny Jump, the Sugar Foot and (probably most violent of all) the Lindy Hop. When one couple has performed everything it knows or exhausted every last ounce of strength, another is called upon.

The music gets faster and faster, the walls of the trumpet and clarinet grow more and more weird, and the moans of the saxophone lower and bluer. It builds up to an exciting peak, and then at a signal was for our grandfathers and grandmothers.

The waltz, sweet, graceful and proper, was the popular dance of two generations ago. But a faint glimmer of light heralding the dawn of a new age was the faster, jerkier variation called the Boston. The dare-devils danced it.

Ragtime Revolutionizes Dancing. The Spanish-American war, the horseless carriage, the phonograph and other innovations speeded up life, and the dance kept pace with the one-step, and later the two-step. Things were perking up.

Came 1910, and the American dance suddenly became a craze. The Turkey Trot had been invented. A guy could now dance a lot closer to his gal than the waltz ever permitted. The sanctimonious lifted worried eyebrows, but the young folks kept right on with their jerky new step and even invented more

WISE

The wise and pleasant way to relieve a cough due to a cold is a Smith Brothers Cough Drop. (Two kinds: Black or Menthol-5¢.)

Smith Bros. Cough Drops are the only drops containing VITAMIN A.

This is the vitamin that raises the resistance of the mucous membranes of the nose and throat to cold and cough infections.

Are Women Better Shoppers than Men?

GRANTING a woman's reputation for wise buying, let's trace the methods by which she has earned it. Where does she find out about the advantages and details of electrical refrigeration? What tells her how to keep the whole household clean—rugs, floors, bathroom tiling—and have energy left over for golf and parties? How does she learn about new and delicious entrees and desserts that surprise and delight her family? Where does she discover those subtleties of dress and make-up that a man appreciates but never understands?

Why, she reads the advertisements. She is a consistent, thoughtful reader of advertisements, because she has found that she can believe them—and profit thereby. Overlooking the advertisements would be depriving herself of data continuously useful in her job of Purchasing Agent to the Family.

For that matter, watch a wise man buy a car or a suit or an insurance policy. Not a bad shopper himself! He reads advertisements, too!

PING PONG MATCHES

The practice ping pong tournament is far on its way, with a few of the best players in the lead. It will probably be finished this week. Those in the lead are Gould, Green, Sloop and Archer.

Boyer City's table tennis champions invaded East Jordan's tables for the first round of a here and there engagement.

Richard Saxton had an easy time with Boyer's champ and defeated him in only two games by the scores 21-5 and 21-8. Louis Cihak had difficulty disposing of his man and was carried into three games but finally won a close third game. Mockerman had an easy time defeating his man in only two games by the scores of 21-11 and 21-8. The other two men forced their Boyer adversaries to the limit and no one knew until the final point was made who would be the victor. However Ayres and Green went down to defeat.

The East Jordan boys had a return match with Boyer City last Monday night. There were some changes in the number 3, 4, 5 positions, as the quality of play is changing. There are many players who are playing at the high school tables who are showing remarkable improvement.

ICE CREAM FOR THE BOYS

An ice cream party for the football squad in honor of the senior boys on the squad was given Wednesday after school by the freshman and sophomore members. They and coach Cohn furnished the cake and the ingredients for the ice cream which was made at school. The teachers also were invited.

CHATTER

Mr. Ter Wee's theme song is "Welcome Sweet Spring Time" since he slid into the ditch on the way home from Alpena.

Another talent has been discovered in the squad — beside being able to play football they sure can create a lot of volume! You should have heard them give nine raps for Mr. Drew at the theatre.

We wonder if Louise Bechtold and Fred Lewis both want spats for Christmas to prevent them from measuring their length in the snow.

A great many people believe Tom Joyn't is drowned — as his car has been on the bank of the lake for the past two weeks.

We wonder what Patty Sinclair and Frances Malpass are doing with all their enthusiasm since football season has ended. Bottle it up girls! — Basketball is on its way!

Mr. Roberts, will your man Friday be driving the new Chevrolet?

Mr. Wade spent some time hunting last week. It's been rumored it was in the deer park. City officials are having a recount on the deer.

Mr. Smith left for home Wednesday carrying a mixed cargo.

We suggest that Mr. Waleutt take time off to write a mystery story. He knows more chemical ways to "Kill 'em off" than Sherlock Holmes or Oppenheim.

Faith Gidley tells us that the wind doesn't whistle the same on the east side as it does on the west side.

Dutch Simmons is seeing the country in a covered wagon.

GIRL SCOUTS

Instead of their regular meeting at the high school, the Girl Scouts enjoyed a scavenger hunt last Tuesday night. They scoured the countryside for such articles as a bird's nest, pumpkin seed, egg with pumpkin on it, 1901 penny, men's shoes (size 12).

red, white, and blue pencil, and a V initialed ring. The girls divided into groups of six. A prize was given to the winning group. Later in the evening ice cream and cake was served.

The Girl Scouts are completely organized for another year's work, with twenty-five members who meet each Tuesday in the gymnasium. Two new lieutenants are assisting this year: Miss Sylvia Niemi, and Miss Mary Carolyn King. Miss Mildred Kjellander is continuing as captain.

The Scouts organized in April, 1936, and registered with National Headquarters. Some of the girls who belonged last year have dropped out, but five new ones have joined. They are Nancy Price, Ironton; Alice Weiler, Helen Whiteford, Patty Sinclair, Alice Galmore and Betty Kamradt.

Last summer twenty-six Scouts went camping at Camp Daggett.

SEVENTH GRADE PARTY

The seventh grade held a masquerade party last Saturday evening in the High School auditorium. The boys and girls came dressed in old clothes and with blackened faces. The party began at 8:00 o'clock and included a grand march, amateur program, singing, and relay game. Miss Finch, Miss MacDonald, and Mr. Cohn starred on the amateur program with their song (accompanied by actions) "Down by the Old Mill Stream."

Later in the evening the names of animals were placed on every one's back. Each had to find the person with the same name, and would be partners for the refreshments of ice cream and cake.

VARSITY BASKETBALL

At the first call for basketball twenty-four men went on duty training for the first game, which will be played with the alumni on Friday, November 26.

Coach Abe Cohn has five letter men back this year to make up his first team. They are F. Antoine, R. Saxton, J. Isaman, F. Holley, and F. Morgan. The rest of the first squad will be made up of B. Bartlett, L. Cihak, B. Bennett, R. Gibbard, and C. Bulow.

Of the first squad there are five sophomores, two juniors, and three seniors.

A few of the boys were getting practice beforehand scrubbing the floor for the first game. (Of course Frank C., Bruce B., Chris B. and Jack I. wouldn't know a thing about it.)

The red and black has a game with Pellston December 1, and a game with Bellaire, December 7. Both are home games.

HOME ECONOMICS CLUB HIKE

As its first activity of the year the Home Economics Club went on a hike last Saturday afternoon. They left the high school at 2:30 and got back home about 6:45. Their route led from town out on the Boyne City road.

On their way back the girls stopped at Artie Houtman's home and were served cocoa, sandwiches, and apples.

The club will meet next week to plan the year's program. The officers this year are as follows: Jean Bartlett, president; Sophie Skrocki, vice-president; and Artie Houtman, secretary - treasurer.

1937 FOOTBALL SEASON

The 1937 football season ended two weeks ago in a fight-to-the-finish battle with Boyne City. On the whole the East Jordan team had a fine year, losing two, tying one, and winning four of the seven scheduled games. They placed third in the Northern Class C schools, and five of their seniors were honored by positions on the all conference team. Below is a list of the scores:—

Frankfort 0	East Jordan 6
Harbor Springs 0	East Jordan 0
Mancelona 12	East Jordan 13
Charlevoix 26	East Jordan 0
Rogers City 0	East Jordan 6
Gaylord 6	East Jordan 12
Boyer City 20	East Jordan 0

BOYNE CITY BANQUET

Boyer City held an annual football banquet at the Boyne City high school Monday night. Teams from many surrounding towns were invited to attend. Coach Cohn took about eleven boys on the East Jordan team. Weber, the back field coach from Michigan State College, was the guest speaker.

JUNIOR PLAY

Either "The Brat" or "The Whole Town's Talking" will be given as the junior class play this year. For the last two weeks a committee of four juniors and Miss Mary Elizabeth Finch have been reading plays. They narrowed their selection down to two. Mr. E. E. Wade will make the final selection.

P T A HAS SUPPER

The Parent Teachers Association held their annual Harvest supper and reception for the teachers in the high school auditorium November 18. Approximately one hundred and fifteen attended. The pot luck supper was served by the home economics girls.

The program consisted of a baritone duet by Faith Gidley and Anna Jean Sherman, and a flute solo by Marty Clark. Miss Beryl McDonald was accompanist.

Then Mr. E. E. Wade gave a resume of the various improvements made during the past year in the school buildings, and outlined future needs. Later he introduced the teachers. The new faculty members gave short talks. After the supper the new building was open for inspection and many members of the association availed themselves of this opportunity to see it.

THE DEBATE

The East Jordan High School debating team was defeated 3 - 0 in their first home debate Friday night by Afton High School. The East Jordan team which upheld the negative was composed of Douglas Johnson, Frances Lenosky and Irene Brintnall. Mr. E. E. Wade acted as chairman. Miss Bergmun, Miss Metz, and Mr. Bund, all of Petoskey, were judges.

After the debate a lunch consisting of sandwiches, cocoa, and fruit salad, was served in the home economics room. The tables were attractively decorated with Thanksgiving pumpkins and corn. The guests were the teams, coaches, judges, and teachers.

Flying Automobile,

World's first Flying Automobile is piloted by "Jerry" Phillips, Hollywood, Cal. In flying this ship from California to New York, Phillips encountered all kinds of weather—sunshine, bitter cold temperatures, rain and blinding snowstorms.

Arrowbile, wings detached, handles like a conventional automobile. Propeller does not revolve. Drive is through rear wheels. The Studebaker engine and High Geared Blue Sunoco give the "automobile" a top road speed of 70 m.p.h.

Pilot Phillips simply drives into any Sunoco station and fills the tank. He says, "The performance of the plane is as good with Blue Sunoco as with premium priced airplane fuels."

and SUNOCO
WINTER OIL

Mr. G. A. Burn, the automotive engineer who supervised these tests, says in his report:

"The Arrowbile was serviced with regular Blue Sunoco and Sunoco Winter Oil before being placed in the huge refrigeration room. The engine was a 1938 Studebaker Commander motor. After hours of exposure to 15° below zero cold, the engine was started in two-fifths of a second. Mr. Earl E. Moore and Mr. Brelin Sander of the Studebaker Corporation acted as observers, and timing was checked by Mr. Earl Drake of the Western Union Telegraph Company."
