Red Devils come up short in district final

EAST JORDAN — The East Jordan volleyball team battled their way to the district championship earlier in the week, and were peaking at the right time of the year, but came up just short in the district final contest against Elk Rapids on November 2.

The Red Devils gave it all they had but fell to the Elks, 23-25, 8-25, 26-24 and 9-25.

The top server for East Jordan was senior libero, Abby Peterson, as she served at 100 percent, going 16-for-16.

Layken Alward led the team with nine blocks, while Julia Sherman finished with 16 kills.

Setter, Chelsea Gibson passed with an 87 percent accuracy rating.

The Red Devils will graduate four seniors, in Alward, Gibson, Peterson and Sherman.

Coach Gregg Swanson noted that the Elks played a great game and are a well rounded team with limited weaknesses.

"We are a young team with eight returning players, hoping to progress even further next year," coach Swanson said. "Our seniors will be hard to replace, but we do have an excellent class of sophomores coming up. I'm excited to see what happens next year."

EJ moves past Lady Ironmen in district opener

EAST JORDAN — The Lady Red Devils wasted little time in establishing their home court advantage against visiting Mancelona on October 31.

East Jordan took down the Ironmen in four sets, winning 25-8, 25-20, 23-25 and 25-21.

Chelsea Gibson went 19-for-19 serving to lead EJ, while Julia Sherman added six blocks, and Abby Peterson passed with 93 percent accuracy.

Ramblers bounced by Chiefs in district play

CHEBOYGAN — The Boyne City volleyball team was unable to carry the momentum that they had built throughout the season into the district semifinal matchup with Cheboygan on November 1.

The Ramblers would drop the match-up in three straight sets, 6-25, 21-25 and 21-25.

"My girls just came out looking flat in game one, we were doing nothing to build our momentum or stop Cheboygan," Boyne City coach Mallory Slate said. "Kuddos to them for coming out to play, that was definitely not the same team we saw earlier in the season."

"It's a disappointing way to end the season knowing you could have played better but there is no looking back now," the coach added. "We have seven great seniors that will be leaving our program such as stand-outs; Kelsey Hubbard, Tyla Coates and Katie McHugh who will all be greatly missed."

Leading the Ramblers was Hubbard with a 38 dig effort, while also going 42-of-42 on serve receive. Annabelle Seelye added 20 digs, 10 assists and four kills, while McHugh had five kills and two blocks and sophomore Brooklyn Fitzpatrick chipped in with four kills.

Coach Slate noted that Boyne City has a very talented sophomore group coming up so the success should continue for the Rambler program the next few years.

Michigan's Amazing Animals – The Lake Trout

By Patrick Bevier

Here are some fabulously-finned facts regarding a favorite game fish of many Michiganders : the Lake Trout.

The Name Game: Lake Trout are also known as mackinaw, lake char, touladi, togue, salmon trout, and grey trout. In Lake Superior, it's also dubbed siscowet, paperbelly and lean.

Naturally Native: Lake trout are one of two native trout species in Michigan. Their fellow char and close relatives, the brook trout, are the other: Michigan's other trout species, the rainbow and brown, were introduced to Michigan from the western U.S. and Europe, respectively.

Splendid Splake: the aforementioned brook trout and lake trout can produce viable hybrids known as Splake. Splake can be caught in several Michigan bodies of water including Higgins, Torch, and Crystal lakes and in the bays of upper Lake Michigan and Lake Superior. The Michigan record splake weighed 17.5 pounds when the delighted angler hooked it on a Kast Master lure in Big Bay De Noc.

Laker Logistics: Lake Trout prefer water temperatures between 40-55 F. They spawn in the fall and deposit their eggs after dark among the gravel on the lake bottom. Lakers reach sexual maturity at age 6 or 7. Average weight is 10 pounds but some laker leviathans reach 50 pounds. Lakers are long-lived and may survive to age 25.

Showing Lakers some Love: With the advent of what has been called, "the single greatest success story in fisheries history" - that being the introduction of Pacific salmon (Coho and Chinook) to the Great Lakes in 1966, lake trout -the once "kings of the great lakes" – have been playing second fiddle for quite a while. The big char don't fight as vigorously as their salmonid brethren. Many people prefer the flavor of salmon over lake trout as well. However, with the recent dip in salmon stocks in Lake Huron and Lake Michigan lake trout have become a more targeted species by anglers.

Arctic Advantage: Many anglers target lakers through the ice as they actively feed all winter. They hit various lures including Jigging Raps, Do-

Lucky to be Alive: a sea lamprey scar on the belly of a lake trout evidences the previous presence of one of the deadly parasites.

Jiggers and others. A favorite combination that we've employed is fishing for smelt on hook and line in Higgins Lake- eating some of the delicious little rainbow minnows-but using some of them to catch lake trout through the ice at depths up to 100 feet.

Invasive Involvement: Lake trout have close ecological relationships with two of the Great Lakes most noteworthy invasive species-the sea lamprey and round goby. Lamprey, which invaded the upper Great Lakes from the ocean in the 1930's, have had an extremely detrimental impact on lake trout populations. The blood sucking parasites, in combination with other factors such as large scale commercial fishing, all but wiped out laker biomass. The round goby, on the other hand, have filled a niche as a favorite forage fish for lakers (we've caught lake trout with teaming over mouthfuls of the little bug-eyed bandits).

Laker Lures: Lake trout are most often caught by deep water trolling with downriggers using flashers and flies, spoons, or cowbells and minnows. In spring and fall we've caught them from break walls and piers including those in Manistee, Petoskey, Charlevoix, and Ludington. Best baits have been spawn bags, smelt, or minnows fished on the bottom or casting spoons and spinners. In particular, Moonshine glow spoons can be deadly at dusk and after dark.

Remarkable Records: Lakers are Michigan's largest trout with the state record tipping the scales at 61.5 pounds! It was landed from Lake Superior in 1997. The world record laker was a battling behemoth that strained the scales at 72 pounds and was boated from Canada's Great Bear Lake.

Tantalizing to the Tummy: Winning lake trout recipes can be found on-line at Genius Kitchen and Hunter, Angler, Gardener, Cook.

Jim Chamberlain, fishing with veterans as part of an Operation Injured Soldiers outing, landed this beautiful lake trout on Lake Michigan.

Hunter Ed is valuable Michigan resource

Program helps keep hunting a cherished tradition in state

By BOB GWIDZ
 Michigan Department of Natural Resources

ARENAC COUNTY – Todd Switala has always been a volunteer. He's coached Little League baseball, swim and soccer teams, led Cub Scout and Boy Scout groups, and he puts on an annual youth sucker-fishing tournament near his home in Sterling, where he serves as president of the Sterling Sportsmen Association.

He's well-known for his efforts in Arenac County, but his reputation spread statewide when the Michigan Department of Natural Resources named him Hunter Safety Education Instructor of the Year.

It's an honor he accepts with a casual shrug.

"Anything we can do for the youth, I'm all for it," said Switala, a 50-year-old retired union brick layer and full-time community activist. "I've always thought that."

Switala was barely an adult, 30 years ago, when he thought it was time to recreate the local sportsmen's club, which had closed its doors in 1963.

He and a handful of locals came up with a plan to purchase the decrepit building and in 1993, even before the facility was fit to be used, he started a hunter safety program, holding classes at a nearby 4-H building.

Except for a couple of years when he was out of the loop, recuperating from a fall from a scaffolding, he's been at it ever since.

DNR Conservation Officer Philip Hudson, who patrols Arenac County and nominated Switala for the award, said Switala is responsible for teaching nearly 2,000 future hunters.

"He's very dedicated," Hudson said. "He's never late, always early, ready and prepared. The amount of time he puts into (this) is way beyond what would be expected from any volunteer. He's an amazing guy."

Switala says even he's not sure "what it is that got a hold of me," causing him to hurl himself headlong into hunter education, except that he loves hunting himself and "you get enjoyment out of passing the sport along."

Four times a year – in February, March, August and September – he spends a weekend teaching hunter safety to an increasingly diverse crew.

"The last class I had had 42 students, 23 of them girls and seven of them adult females," Switala said. "Back in the day, it was all 13-year-old boys."

He also provides the hands-on field sessions that support the on-line and home study programs.

Switala calls his approach to hunter safety EDGE training – educate, demonstrate, guide and enable – something he picked up in other programs.

"I never thought of myself as an educator," said Switala, who has been lauded by the school district for the outdoor education programs he puts on for fourth- and fifth-graders at the local school. "I like the word 'mentor.' In life there are ways you do things and ways you don't do things. I think we all think it should be that way."

A strong believer in hands-on learning, Switala says he has his students handling firearms properly within the first hour of class. He runs them through 14 hours of training – more than the minimum requirement – saying he wishes he had 24 hours. He then offers all the students the opportunity to return at a later date and shoot clay targets at the sportsmen's club.

Switala holds his classroom shooting sessions with air rifles at the club's inside range, demonstrating proper procedures to the first student, then requiring that student to instruct the next one, so he knows it's sunk in.

"I drill them pretty hard," he said. "Then we hold mock hunts – a bird hunt, a rabbit hunt, a deer hunt – so they can demonstrate what they learned. It's everything but live ammo."

When administering the written test, he reads each question aloud – "not every kid is the best reader," he said – and after the tests are corrected, he goes over every incorrect answer with each student, making sure any mistake is corrected.

"To me one wrong answer is failing," he said. "You want them to get it right."

And over the years, he's never had a student he couldn't certify, though he admits he had one student that took two years to successfully complete the training.

Hunter safety education in Michigan has evolved over the decades.

"It's been around since the mid-1940s," explained Lt. Tom Wanless, who oversees the program for the DNR's Law Enforcement Division. "When the National Rifle Association conducted the program nationwide. "When the states assumed control, we were one of the first states to do so."

Hunting was a lot more dangerous back then compared to what it is today, and every step the state has taken has improved safety, Wanless said.

In 1971, hunter safety training became mandatory for first-time hunters ages 12 to 16. In 1988, hunter safety became mandatory for all first-time hunters born after Jan. 1, 1960.

"That's when the numbers of hunting casualty incidences really started to nosedive," Wanless said.

In 1971, Michigan witnessed a total of 15 deaths and 180 injuries involving hunting. In 1988 there were 10 deaths and 91 injuries.

"That was the last year that we had double-digit deaths, and since then we've only had one year on record where we had more than five related deaths – seven," Wanless said. "And we had two years when we had no deaths."

Today, to purchase a hunting license in Michigan, hunters must show proof of a previous hunting experience – such as a license from another state – or have completed hunter safety training.

There is one exception – beginning hunters may purchase an apprentice license, which allows them to hunt under the tutelage of an experienced hunter for up to two years, then they must complete the training to continue hunting.

Three options exist for taking hunter safety courses in Michigan. Hunters may take:

A traditional classroom course, which involves a minimum of 10 hours spread over at least two days.

An online course, offered by state-approved private vendors, and then attend a hands-on field day (typically 4 hours, with a certified instructor).

A home-study course, with the hunter safety manual for at least a week, before attending the hands-on field day.

"We have about 3,000 volunteers teaching it out there," Wanless said.

Some conservation officers teach hunter safety, and some teachers teach it at schools.

"Volunteer instructors are the backbone of this program," Wanless said. "We're teaching approximately 20,000 students a year. That would take up a lot of our conservation officers' time that they would not be able to be out in the field. Because of our volunteers, we're making safer and more responsible hunters."

However, Michigan needs more volunteer instructors, Wanless said.

"The average age of our instructors is getting up there. Some of them have volunteered for over 40 years. We'd love to see more younger adults get involved," he said. "Anyone who is interested in instructing, who is willing to share their knowledge and talent to help out our future hunters, should check us out."
