Yes, there is snow up here in the North contrary to popular beliefs of city dwellers. This picture was taken just after last week's snowfall back in the woods on Horton Creek. While the picture isn't exactly a news picture, we thought it looked nice enough anyway that we wanted to use it to show some of the beauty in snowfalls that frequently hit the area in the winter time. Of course we are expecting a lot more snow to fall around the area so that the snowmobilers and cross country skiers will have plenty of it to partake in their favorite sports.

Boyer City rejects county waste plan

Voting to table approval of the Solid Waste Committee's plan until mandated by the state or until funds are available to implement it, Boyne City commissioners, in effect, added their veto to the countywide plan. Four other communities in the county have tabled it. Ten have approved.

The solid waste plan itself was not the problem, commissioners agreed; it was the price tag required by procedures outlined by the Department of Natural Resources. City manager Tim Clifton has pointed out that the total cost of either closing a landfill operation or getting it licensed would run into the hundreds of thousands of dollars, if done in exact compliance to the state's Public Act 641.

"Public Act 641 will change," said Dennis Jason, Jason represented the committee at the commissioners' meeting Tuesday, Jan. 4. He added, "Every act is updated."

Meantime, if the committee doesn't get 3/4 approval out of the 19 communities in the county, county planner Larry Sullivan said, they will either try to "make changes in the plan, or turn it over to the DNR, which can do as it sees fit."

As to the chances of getting approval, Larry Levensgood, County Health Department sanitarian said, "We want everyone to review it. Don't consider things final."

The committee has until June before the plan is due for submission to the DNR.

The concern underlying the DNR's mandating county plans for solid waste disposal is, as Sullivan said, to prevent contamination of groundwater. Once it is contaminated the costs of decontamination are nearly astronomical.

Levensgood said pollution comes not just from big industry. Small town businesses have waste chemicals, and, he said, "the majority of priority pollutants are generated from households."

Levensgood noted that Charlevoix, Petoskey, Traverse City, and other neighboring cities are having water contamination problems. "And Boyne City soils are no less sandy," he said. Councilwoman Thelma Behling commented that the federal government doesn't hesitate about creating and burying nuclear wastes.

She noted that Boyne City has 160 acres and has barely used 10. The point was that some sort of cooperation might have resulted in a portion of the county arranging to continue the use of the landfill. As it stands, the county plan calls for one licensed landfill. None had been license-able by the DNR until Ironston's privately operated fill was approved late in 1982.

The plan then asks communities like Boyne City to transfer their waste to the central landfill with packer trucks.

The central landfill is much more cost efficient, according to the data the committee used.

Asked why the solid waste committee did not make some effort to solve the problem of financing that the communities face if they accept the plan, Larry Sullivan explained it was left vague in spots on purpose to allow flexibility.

If a community were mandated to finance any of their measures with taxes and then a court decision like the decision won by Delta County came along, "we in effect, exclude the community from receiving funds."

Commissioner Bill Grimm asked, "for the record," he said, "What guarantee is there that if the investment (to make a licensed landfill) were made by, say, a private dealer, that there wouldn't be another demand made in, say, seven years?"

Sullivan answered, "There is a provision in 641 for five or seven years to accommodate new standards."

The county's plan calls for closure of landfills not licensed by the DNR by 1984. Jason said, "I think implementation would be a two or three year process."

And if Boyne City didn't comply? Sullivan answered that he didn't know when the DNR would exact compliance... "Could be a week," he said.

Nearly all the other counties in Michigan are going through the same effort, with county committees trying to draw up plans that satisfy both their communities and the DNR. Out of 10 in northern Michigan, Sullivan said, most are at the same stage as Charlevoix County is.

Vendors ask market to run two days

The harvest of 1982 brings this report on the farmers' market in Boyne City. Leanna Hardy, director of the Senior Citizen Center, said the market netted the center $258.20.

The summer of 1982 was the third year the seniors had sponsored the project, and the returns were $63.60 more than those of last year, she said.

Vendors and customers both have requested the market again for next year. They would like it to be open on Wednesdays as well as Saturdays.

Last summer they had 45 vendors, Hardy said, and much more help from the seniors in running it than ever before.

The income from the market is from the fees charged by the center for the use of a stall where the farmers and home gardeners displayed their produce.

The market was open for 13 weeks. The last week was free for the vendors, Hardy said, in appreciation for their support.

Sheriff's department went after drunk drivers over week-end

For driver protection on New Year's Eve, the sheriff's office had four cars out patrolling the county, double the usual number. Sheriff George Lasater said one each was in the general area of Charlevoix, Boyne City, and East Jordan, and the fourth stayed with the high concentrations of traffic.

Lasater had public radio warnings out that drunk driving convictions would result in jail sentences, and two OUIL arrests were made on New Year's Eve.

The sheriff said the district court pursues the policy with which he is in complete accord, that "all drunk drivers arrested in Charlevoix County are guaranteed time in jail."

According to Laurie Howell, district court probation officer, if convicted of operating under the influence of liquor (OUIL), the driver gets a sentence of three days in jail for a first offense, five days for a second. The jail sentence can go to a year in certain circumstances.

In addition, there are fines and court costs, probation possible for a year, and, as of March 1982, follow-up counseling for those suffering with a drinking problem.

Alcohol highway safety classes are also part of the procedures. These cost $75 and consist of two interviews and four classes as a means of cutting down on repeaters out on the road.

Howell said if a driver refuses the breathalyzer test, then, according to the state's Implied Consent law, the driver automatically loses his or her driver's license for 90 days. She added that OUIL applies to operation of snowmobiles, boats, motorcycles, and trucks, as well as cars.

This New Year's was not a bad one, the sheriff commented. He thought the weather might have helped to hold it down.

His department will have a grant from the Office of Highway Safety, Lasater said. His application for $38,000, earmarked for reduction of drunk driving in the county, has been approved, he said, although he doesn't know yet exactly what amount will be awarded.

"Emmet and Charlevoix are among those with the highest per capita rate of drunk drivers in the state," he explained. The federal government funding is specifically directed to such areas.

According to Howell, in April Michigan will have an all-new law on drunk driving. It will be more severe, she said.

1982; a year in review

East Jordan is looking at the possibility of producing its own electricity.

City superintendent Mike Dionne has prepared a "Notice of Intent" to the state department of commerce stating the city would like to conduct a feasibility study of producing electricity.

Two ad hoc committees are looking into the possibility of Charlevoix County vying for federal automated flight service station.

One committee is comprised of private citizens who initiated the idea, the other is three members of the county board of commissioners' airport committee.

Boyer City will seek a $10,000 grant to continue work towards development of an industrial park.

Public hearings on whether the spent fuel pool at Big Rock Point nuclear power plant can be expanded will begin June 7 at Boyne Mountain Lodge in Boyne Falls.

Charlevoix County will continue to administer zoning ordinances for townships which want it to—at least for another year.

General questions on property taxes were answered at the Boyne City noon commission meeting, Tuesday, June 8, by county equalization director Joan Blanchard.

Boyer City employs the equalization department staff to do the city's assessing.

Two Boyne City women were arrested following an armed robbery of the Edward's IGA grocery store, 5 W. Main, Boyne City, on Monday, June 7.

The pair, Annette Washburn, 33, and Thelma Thompson, 30, have been charged with armed robbery and possessed a firearm during a felony, said arresting officer Randy Howard. Twenty dollars was stolen.

The Day of the Eagle will be Saturday, June 12, in East Jordan.

Indians from all over North Michigan will gather at the East Jordan High School soccer field from 1 to 5 p.m. and 7 to 10 p.m.

"I believe this is the first time ever all will have gotten together," Antione said. "We're honored to be host for the schools of Michigan."

A tax request to support county bus service will be on the August 10 primary ballot.

The request for .29 mills was approved last week by the Charlevoix County board of commissioners.

The tax, if approved, would be for three years—1983-85. It would generate about $100,000 each year for the bus line.

The unemployment rate in Charlevoix County inched lower during April, but still stood at 21.9 percent.

The playground equipment in Veterans Memorial Park has been busy since the Boyne City High School student-build structure was installed last week.

All tax requests on county school ballots were approved Monday. Boyne City had one millage renewal request, East Jordan had two and Charlevoix three.

In school board races, Gary Mellon was the winner in Boyne City and Lawrence Chanda was the victor in East Jordan.

Charlevoix County is selling its air force. But it will still have its navy. County commissioners last week accepted a bid of $24,751 to sell the county-owned medical evacuation plane stored on Beaver Island.

Three candidates are running for mayor in East Jordan.

They are Cal Gots, Bill Merwin and Al Joseph. Present mayor Archie Nemceek is not running again.

The county solid waste planning committee has finished nearly two years of work and now may face the hardest part of its task.

The document—which details how garbage and other unwanted items will be disposed of—has to be approved by at least 15 governmental bodies.

The U.S. Army Corps of Engineers is attempting to take over control of 4,700 miles of waterways in Michigan—including the Boyne and Jordan rivers. Area Cong. Bob Davis, state Lt. Gov. James Brickley and others are trying to block the effort, Davis has introduced legislation to half the action.

East Jordan Schools will operate with a $2,384,000 budget during the 1982-83 school year. The budget is $114,000 higher than the one for the 1981-82 year which ends today.

No-till farming is getting a boost from the federal government, county executive director Helen Dietze said at the annual Conservation Programs Review on Monday, June 28.

The Boyne City school board Monday night approved a $3 million budget for the coming year.

Total spending is estimated at $3,177,408, while revenues are expected to be $2,975,258. The balance will be made up from funds left over from this budget year, which ends today.

JULY
Delighting East Jordan spectators over the July 4 weekend were 260 hydroplanes and runabouts, racing in South Arm waters.

Two of the rafts, racing down the Boyne River for Fourth of July festivities, were assembled and crewed by women. They were among the approximately 20 competitors.

It was probably the biggest crowd the small village of Horton Bay has seen in a couple of years... at least since the last parade held there two years ago.

The world renowned resort area hosted its biennial Fourth of July Parade last weekend and the residents, vacation and year-around, joined in the festivities and had a lot of fun putting the parade together, watching it, and celebrating after it was over.

Step two of the renovation of Water Street water mains will begin right after Labor Day, one year after the initiation of step one, Boyne City manager Tim Clifton told the city commission at its noon meeting Tuesday, July 13.

This second phase, affecting Water Street between Park and East Streets, has been budgeted as a capital improvement and is part of a five-year schedule of city maintenance.

Improving the present city dock in East Jordan may be the way toward eventually realizing the hoped-for marina, according to an analysis by city superintendent Mike Dionne.

Dionne told city council pillings on the south side are not holding the dock on a level because they aren't securely driven into the lake bed.

Dionne explained what is needed is to splice the pillings so that they would be long enough to drive deeply into the lake bed.

Area school districts took care of their housekeeping chores Monday as they held their annual organizational meetings.

In Boyne City, president George Shiotelis was elected by his fellow board members to another term. Mark Behling was elected vice-president, while Eleanor West was named secretary and Ray Towne was named treasurer.

Boyer Falls school board's new line up is Art Saworski, president; Jim Churchill, vice president; Bob Winhusen, secretary; Don Wilson, treasurer.

At the East Jordan school board meeting, officers chosen were Mary Jason, president; Bob Sherman, vice president; Ed Drenth, secretary; and Herb Griffin, treasurer.

Last August Hudson Township residents voted to have their own fire department. By September they finished the fire house—a concrete block building attached to the township hall. By October they had their new $56,000 fire truck.

The auditor's report of Boyne City's finances revealed budgeting to be on a good basis except for one thing. Auditor Eric Peterson of Hill, Woodcock and Distel told city commissioners Tuesday that the water/wastewater fund losses cannot be covered by borrowing from other funds, even though the results balance the books.

The planned changes along North Lake Street in Boyne City have not met with unanimous approval. The owners and operators of the stores in the plaza containing the Country Star supermarket and Butler Drugs have complained to city officials that they are not happy with the proposal.

Top O'Michigan Rural Electric Co. customers will have an opportunity to participate in the advisory vote on whether Northern Michigan Electric Cooperative Inc. should merge with Wolverine Electric Cooperative.

One of the leading critics of aspects of the operation of the Big Rock Point nuclear power plant was given permission Monday, July 19, to tour the facility.

Christa-Maria of Charlevoix said her tour was conducted by the "very knowledgeable" Pat Donnelly, an employee of Big Rock.

"Draw up your proposal for a design," was the suggestion of city attorney William McTaggart to Willard Gahn, manager of Country Star Market in Boyne City.

Gahn had come to the city commission meeting Tuesday, July 27, representing the complaints of his company and of other merchants in the plaza about the traffic island and sidewalk projected to go in between Lake Street traffic and the parking lot.

Various uses have been thought of for the old barn on city property on Pleasant Valley Road in Boyne City. But it looks as if it will have to be torn down instead.

Called "the loft," the building is vacant except, as Howard Carson said, for the porcupines that come in at night.

East Jordan City Council has to decide what to do about private docks on public property.

Store owner Vern Stark brought the matter up, asking for permission to put a dock out in front of the Star's Party Store, just across M-66 from the lake.

Celebrating 30 years of service to Bendix-Courter, Inc. this week are Elouise Kent, who was hired by the company in December of 1952. She is now the Shipping and Receiving Clerk Lead in the material control department of the plant. Looking on at one of the products the firm made years ago, is Bernice Bears, who is presently an assembly technician in the Production Department. She was hired on January 5, 1952 and is also celebrating her 30th year with the company. Both women were honored with flowers and a cake from the top officials of the company.

Mediation training to start in northern Michigan

On January 10, 1983 attorneys, pastors, and laymen will come together at the Chalet Restaurant in Gaylord for a full day of training in Christian mediation.

The purpose of Christian mediation is to provide an alternative to the court process for resolution of legal disputes.

The training session is open to all interested persons without charge except for the meals. The training will be conducted by Mr. Laury Eck, National Director of the Christian Conciliation Service.

The parties enter into a mediation/arbitration agreement, which (in most cases) will provide a legally enforceable decision. Christian conciliation differs from the 140 other alternative dispute resolution programs listed by the American Bar Association, because Biblical principles govern the processes and procedures. Generally, the mediation panel is composed of an attorney, a pastor and a lay person with some particular gifts or expertise that will assist in the resolution of the dispute.

Submitting disputes to the church for resolution is not a recent innovation. The Jewish Rabbinical Court System, Bet(h) Din, goes back thousands of years. Rabbi Graubart head of the Midwest Bet Din, recently addressed a National Conciliator training conference held at Wheaton college and explained the historical development of the rabbinical court system.

Any person interested in becoming a mediator or learning more about the service is invited to attend one or more of the training sessions at the January 10, 1983 seminar and workshop. Reservations and further information can be obtained by writing Northern Michigan Christian Conciliation Service, P.O. Box 458, Boyne City, MI 49712, or calling (616) 582-6948. Reservations while not required will be appreciated (only those with reservations will receive course materials). Most pastors and local attorneys have additional information on the program.

'83 can be better if..

1983—Will it be a good year? It will if we, the taxpayers of the government, can ask the legislature to do a couple of things to try to get our economy going, help with the unemployment problems of the state, and help with the already overbearing tax load the government is costing us.

One of the things we should try to urge the legislature to do is to pass a bill to lower the minimum wage. It is currently set at $3.35 per hour for those with jobs that meet the Federal levels.

If the wage law were lowered to about $1.60 per hour, as it was back when, then employers could afford to hire some of the unemployed youngsters looking for their first job in the marketplace. An employer could afford to hire, train and work with a person who doesn't have the skills necessary to do the job. Employers could probably live with the fact that the person, while they are in the training phase, will produce less, but, at the same time, cost less to have on their staff.

We remember when we could afford to hire teenage kids to do some of the jobs that did not require a whole lot of skill, and the skill could be learned on the job, but, under the guidelines of today, we cannot afford to increase the payroll and still make a profit. After all, we only know of one business that can afford to run at a loss, and that is the government itself. And you can see what they are doing to our nation.

The second thing we would like to see happen that might help our economy would be the elimination of lobbyists. While most lobbyists are nice people, they represent a small portion of the whole. They represent the special interest groups. This in itself is not a bad idea, but, it's getting to the point where the governing officials see more lobbyists than see their constituents.

In fact, sometimes it is hard to get in a word because the lobbyist is taking up the time of the senator or the representative. And everyone is looking for a "deal" for the particular group they are working with.

In the Federal government, just try to call down to your elected official and try to talk personally with him. It's almost impossible. But, a lobbyist for the National Association of Kenuten Valve Suppliers, for example, can get his ear almost immediately to express their views on what bill they would like to see passed, or how something should be voted upon.

By eliminating the lobby groups, perhaps our legislators and elected officials would have more time to work on things that are important, like really finding the "waste" in government and really getting rid of it to save the taxpayers some money.

Another thing that would be nice, is to have every elected official not start any new legislation. It seems that everyone who gets elected, has to try and get a new law passed to justify his election. Most of the new bills are written and put in the hands of the congressman or senator by the lobbyists anyway, so if we could stop the lobbyists, maybe we could live without a new law being passed for the personal gain of a few.

We don't think any of this will come to pass, because we don't think our present elected officials care, and if they do read this, we invite them to respond. In the meantime, we taxpayers will continue to struggle to support the government, and pray for the day when we have another Boston Tea Party.

Marshall Sayles

This is the time of year when everything is gone: Christmas, New Years, your money...

Happy New Year! Ha. What do they mean by that! 1983 moved in with a gasoline tax in one hand and a cigarette tax in the other. One of these days the government is going to raise taxes and the citizens are going to raise the wildest crop of Cain yet seen in the good, old U.S. and A.

My wife drove from home to the hospital each day during my recent unpleasantness. One morning our hill was all ice and dangerous. So she phoned up the road commission. In no time at all the hill was sanded. You couldn't get better attention if you were the only man in town selling whiskey.

The Chamber of Commerce is preparing a winter festival for Smeltania on Lake Charlevoix. Now, suppose the lake doesn't freeze over this winter. Suppose it freezes under instead. I've hung around the lake for more than 50 year man and boy and there have been a number of times when it froze under. That's when there are two or three inches of water on top of the ice. It's very dangerous to walk on the lake when it's frozen under. Water on top of ice makes ice more icy. I hope the lake freezes over instead of under and that the Chamber's program is a huge success. (I was talking about this with a friend and he said that it might not be a bad idea if I were to slip back into the hospital for a while.)

March may only be eight weeks away on the calendar, but it's six months away for those who work outdoors.

Let me now thank those who sent sympathy cards while I was bent over the edge of a hospital bed with my tongue hanging out. I've no idea why so many people wanted me to stop being sick, but it was nice of them to say so. A large number said they would rather see me return home in a car than a hearse. Those words tickled me muchly. In fact, it was the first time in my life that I was tickled and sick at the same time. Cards arrived from three states including Michigan and some even came from Boyne City where people know me. But my friends, now, they are something else again. One friend's card said things could have been worse. I might have been pregnant. Another said he wanted to send money to help pay the enormous hospital expense, but he had already sealed the envelope. A third reported a pool that was taking bets on who would get me if I should perish and forget to come back—the Lord or the Devil. I didn't mind that so much, but it made me mad when I learned that the bets were going for only a quarter.

I've never understood why those acquainted with the ill send great gobs of sympathy, while real, close friends always send funny stuff that makes your stomach sort of cramp up when you laugh.

Happy New Year everyone! Please follow Mr. Reagan's advice. Give to the soup kitchen of your choice.

Jottings

BY JIM SILBAR

After looking around Boyne City over the holidays, one of the things that I have been impressed with, is the great amount of status we all look for in ourselves.

I mean, almost everyone is wearing a pair of fashion jeans, one item of status. Or a ski jacket that is made by the current leader of fashion in West Dibbleville. Everything has to have a name.

We get up in the morning to eat a status meal, dress in our status apparel, participate in the status sports, get entertained by drinking the status liquids, and go to sleep in even status sheets and blankets on the bed.

I mean, when is it going to end.

My kids live in their status jeans when I can remember the day when just jeans were outlawed from the schools. I was happy to be able to afford a pair of skis, and they were the army surplus type with no name. But now, if I were to go skiing, I would have to dress in a name pair of pants, jacket, and have a name pair of skis with a name pair of bindings to go with a name pair of boots.

It's the same with golf or any other sport.

When I was going to college, and the college did not offer the courses that I was interested in, I transferred to another school. Why? Not because of a better curriculum, my justification was that the school had better sports equipment. It had a "name."

In skiing now, one of the hottest items is a pair of handmade "boutique" skis. They sell for about $500. And they will not necessarily let you make turns better, or run faster, or let you be the best skier of the hill. They just cost enough for the handmade, limited edition, exclusive distribution, and graphically designed skis to become one of the premier status symbols of the sport. Where will it all end.

Of course the status game is not just appearing in the apparel and the sporting equipment we have in the marketplace, but in everything.

Our cars have to still have a little status, our food, and our jobs. You can't be a garbage collector or a janitor anymore, you have to be a refuse engineer or a custodial supervisor.

Even where we choose to live has a status influence. Do we live in Boyne City, or do we live in Uppercrest North. Just ask a realtor where the neat addresses are, you will get a list a yard long. From Harbor Springs to Horton Bay, and on even to West Uppercrest North, every town has its own status.

You just can't live in the woods anymore, you have to live in the "Suburbs" of, and so on.

Even I am fully conscious of status, I lean towards the finer things in life, just like a lot of other folks do. Now, if I can find a place to park my Ferrari when I go over to Europe to do my skiing after I can fit into my Reinalter special ski pants, and ski on my Vielhaber skis, and drink Pernod with Perrier, I guess I'll survive just like all the rest of us common folks.

Barbara Cruden

A mountain woman who could not read, still had a good ear for words. She named her baby son Satan, because it sounded so splendid.

As a child, I used to think "iniquity" was a splendid-sounding word. It was hard to associate evil with a word that suggested to me a dark velvet coat, fastened with slender gold chains, and decorated with heavy embroidered panels. "Iniquity" was an assemblage of all that was mysterious and glamorous in the ancient circles of power.

There's still something correct about all that.

"Enemy" was easy to sense. It looks and sounds ugly and faceless. But "adversary"—that has a ring too gallant to use as the Bible does in saying "thine adversary, the devil."

Many words are said to have actually sprung from an association of sound and meaning. I'm sure "bowl" is one of these. It sounds exactly the way my mother's set of mixing bowls did when she stacked them to put them away—"Bowl-l-l-l!"

Today I have all these plastic containers with their plastic covers. They need a word with the appropriate sound to it. The sound and the word, I have decided, is "plox." Hand me a plox, please...

"Rasp" is unquestionably correct for a rasp, and saw, hammer, router, ax, and plane: these all relate to how they sound. But "wife," "parent," "spouse"—none of them suit. Even "daughter" has a stand-offish sound.

We need some new words there. I'm sure better-sounding words would bring about a better feeling for these remarkable roles.

Many other remarkable things have no words for them at all. Thus they even do not seem to exist. Or we steal a word from its regular meaning and apply it to the unworried thing. Like "oral literacy" when "literary" has to do with the written word. Unforgivable!

As a teacher I used to wish for a word to describe the particular kind of peace that fills a classroom when all 35 students are bent simultaneously and more or less interestedly over their writing.

Words are needed also for the effects of modern technology. No popularized word has emerged yet for the frozen slush that collects under car fenders in winter. But not to despair. I have a word here. "Slubs." They are all slubs.

(Don't kick your slubs off in your friend's driveway.)

One of the pleasures of learning a foreign language is to discover what they did to match sounds and qualities.

I never liked our word "dogs" but it turned out I liked the French word less. "Le chien" has no warmth to it, no strength.

Our word "star" has the brightness of the "st" and the far-away sound of the "ar." It's a very good word.

The Spanish "estrellita" is also good. It has affection for stars. It has sparkle.

The Spanish have a good word for grasshopper, too, wish I could remember it.

Having words is a way to be rich.

Letters

Voices disapproval

Dear Editor,
I am writing this letter as a concerned resident of Boyne City.

I would like to take this opportunity to voice my whole-hearted opposition to Plan B.

I feel that any support for this plan is in direct opposition to the time-honored precedent of majority rule as a means of settling matters such as this, which directly affect the community as a whole.

As we all know, the City Commission chose to hold a referendum on this matter, with the election taking place in August 1979 with 52% of the voters turning out. The citizens of Boyne City overwhelmingly (698-394) rejected the closing of Front Street.

Although we could go through all of the arguments made before that election, I feel it is totally inappropriate and unwarranted to do so. For the Planning Commission or the City Commission to disregard these voters wishes at the January 11, 1983 joint session would be inexcusable.

I personally feel this effort by Harborage Development to circumvent the wishes of the people of Boyne City in this matter creates an atmosphere of resentment and distrust. An arrangement reached 2 1/2 years ago stating "At no time in the future would Front Street be closed between Second and the intersection of Division and Lake" should not be merely pushed aside.

Thank you,
Marvin Lodrig
Boyne City

Taking a running jump shot, this Boyne City 7th grader makes an attempt to even the score in Monday night's basketball game with Charlevoix. It didn't help as Charlevoix went on to win both the 7th and the 8th grade contests.

BC 7th and 8th graders lose to Charlevoix Monday

Boyne City seventh and eighth graders started off the new year basketball season, losing to arch rival Charlevoix in both games. The seventh graders lost 35 to 21, while the eighth graders dropped their game 42-35.

In the seventh grade game, coach Bud Beebe used almost the entire bench of the young players who played the hearts out trying to get the lead in the game and make the plays work according to the way they trained.

But the end result showed a loss, with Boyne's players showing improvement made and a lot more improvement to come in the future games.

Big point honors for the seventh graders from Boyne were Brian Napont who scored six points

Snary appointed EJ coach

Dennis Snary has been appointed as coach for the East Jordan Varsity basketball team, replacing Bill Chase who resigned Dec. 13th. Snary started working with the team just before the Christmas break and has his first game under his belt with the team, a losing effort to powerhouse Charlevoix that was held during the Christmas break.

According to principal

Bud Ashton, Snary has coached at the junior high level. He played three years with Eastern Michigan University.

Snary said he's starting off with conditioning the team and working on much-needed fundamentals in order to catch up after losing Chase.

Asked about his athletics policy, Snary said, "The team will be expected to conduct themselves in a manner the community would be proud of."

How to dress a child for skiing

Special care should be taken in outfitting your child for a day of skiing, as a child will not always know what is best to wear. It is very important that the child is kept both warm and comfortable when out on skis to insure that the child does not find skiing unpleasant or wearisome.

Parents don't need to go to any great expense for clothing. Old clothes are fine for skiing as long as they meet the warmth and comfort requirements. A well-fitting hat is also important, as most body warmth is lost without one.

Equipment for children should be rented at first, as children will quickly grow out of any equipment that is bought for them.

Many ski shops, ski shows, and ski clubs conduct ski swaps prior to each season, which is an economical solution to the annual purchase of skis and boots.

Parents shouldn't load their children down with lots of equipment to carry, so that they are tired before they even get a chance to go skiing.

Here are a few tips regarding specific purchases of equipment for children.

Skis should be no longer than the child's height. For the very young, some parents buy a good pair of plastic skis, and then as the child progresses, switch to a pair with good interlocking steel edges and a polyethylene base, which make the ski easier to maintain and control.

Bindings should be of the highest quality, and it's dangerous to try and get by with an inferior brand for your kids. Although a child's bones are less brittle than an adult's, a child's muscles which is the only part of are less developed, and the child's light weight puts a greater burden on the efficiency of the release mechanism. Remember that bindings have a long life, and good ones for your child now are an investment, as they can be used on successively longer skis as your child's feet grow.

To solve the problem of outfitting your child's growing feet, you can buy boots that are a little too big for your child, with space for two fingers behind the heel when the toes are touching the front of the boot. During the first season, have your child use two pairs of heavy ski socks, and in the second, just use one medium-weight pair.

If children are warm, safe, and comfortable, they will be in the best frame of mind to find skiing a fun experience.

There are many differences between alpine and cross-country skiing, and what follows are some questions that alpine skiers ask about cross country skiing.

Why aren't bindings used with cross country skis? Chiefly because cross country skiing requires full ankle freedom, and the ability to lift your heel during stride. Furthermore, cross-country ski equipment, because the skier must provide his own motive power, is lighter-typical light-touring skis, boots and bindings for the average adult weigh about six pounds compared to more than 20 pounds for equivalent alpine gear. Because your foot and leg are free to twist around your toe, your boot attached to the

SKI YOU CAN DO IT

PEDAL A BIKE THROUGH THE BUMPS

Stiff legs and static positions can ruin a run through the bumps. If you're tense and have trouble flexing your legs in moguls, try the following exercise on a gently moguled slope to loosen up.

With ankles bent, hips up over your skis and hands forward, pick a shallow line and traverse toward the crest of a mogul. When you reach the top of the bump, transfer all of your weight to the downhill ski and raise your opposite ski (A). Ride the downhill ski off the mogul crest, press down into the trough and then slide up toward the crest of the next bump. On its peak, transfer your weight to the uphill ski and lift the lower ski off the snow (B). Ride the uphill ski down into the mogul trough, then up the next bump, and so on.

With practice, you'll find this stepping action from one ski to another feels similar to pedaling a bicycle where you must transfer your weight from one foot to the other.

As you become more adept at this exercise, begin choosing slightly steeper traverses and move on to more challenging slopes. With practice, you'll improve your flexibility in the bumps, develop independent leg action and improve your balance. Reprinted with permission of Ski Magazine. ## What alpine skiers are asking about cross country ski, you have plenty of protection in case of a fall.

Why are cross country skis so skinny? The stability and turning precision required in alpine skiing, where the skier reaches greater speeds, are not as important in cross-country, so the skis need not be as wide. The narrower ski widths also cut ski weight, making skiing on the flat and uphill less work than it would be with heavier skis.

How can you ski both uphill and downhill on cross-country skis? Cross-country skis both grip and glide on snow. A cross-country ski will glide as long as it is in motion; once gliding stops, however, it grips the snow and must be unweighted to start gliding again. What gives a cross country ski its ability to grip for a kick on the flat or climb uphill are the waxes used on waxable skis or the unidirectional, serrated pattern or inlaid section of furlike material, with the nap pointed backwards, on the base of waxless skis.

If only your toe is attached to the ski in cross-country, doesn't that make the ski harder to turn? Actually, cross-country skis are no more difficult to turn than alpine skis. However, turning technique in cross-country is less forgiving of skier error than in alpine because turning depends almost entirely on correct weight placement. Edging plays a lesser role, so cross-country turns tend to be wider than those that could be executed on the same slope at the same speed with alpine gear.

Baskets on cross-country ski poles seem bigger than those on alpine poles. Why? In cross-country, you use your poles to provide from a tenth to a quarter of your forward power. Most baskets are larger to enable the pole to better ride on top of the snow and provide a larger "platform" on which to push off.

Why do cross-country skiers wear knickers? Proper execution of the various cross-country strides demand full leg freedom, and alpine ski pants constrain cross-country movements which can tire the skier during a cross-country tour. This is why knickers and knee socks, which allow full ankle, knee and hip freedom are standard for cross-country.

Tips about accessories

Runaway Straps In addition to primary equipment items—skis, boots, bindings, and poles—the skier should be aware of the importance of accessories, like runaway straps, ski brakes, and socks.

Ski Brakes Runaway straps should attach around the leg, instead of at the toe. Focusing the force of impact around the leg rather than pulling at the toe minimizes twist on the leg after release.

Ski Brakes The ski brake is a relatively new accessory designed to reduce injuries from falling, wind-milling skis by separating the skier from his ski. It also has the advantage, by reason of its snow-gripping, spring-activated arms.

Mid--Am makes annual Boyne stop

If you would like to see some possible members of the United States Olympic Team in 1988, this weekend at Boyne Mountain may be the best opportunity to do that as the Mid-America Series makes its annual after the holiday stop here in the Lower Peninsula.

The ski racing series, started this year's tour at Pine Mountain, Iron Mountain, Michigan the week before Christmas, then took a break for the holidays, moved to Marquette Mountain in Marquette, Mi. for three days of racing and then to Boyne for the weekend.

There are several more stops in the circuit before it will come back to Boyne the last week of February—first week of March for the finals.

Some of the racers, the best amateur ski racers in the Midwest, include locals Brian Shorter of Harbor Springs, Marlee Brown of Petoskey, and Chris Kuhn of Boyne City.

They will be racing against the tour leaders of Dan Lautner of Traverse City, and Liette Casanova of Wakefield, Mi. A total of 150 of the best in the Midwest will be entered at the race.

The Mid-America Series, which started in 1971 has developed several midwestern racers and provided them the stepping stone to our National Ski team. Cory Carlson of Minneapolis is now on the national "B" team as well as Terry Ahola from Gladstone, Mi. who was named to one of the national teams. Other racers who have participated in the series and made it to the olympics have included Mary Seaton, of Hancock, Mi. The series has developed quite a few other world class racers who have participated in World Cup and Europa cup races as well as the Nor-Am, Can-Am, Albert and other major North American races.

This weekend's race will actually be two races; both slaloms for the men and women. There will be one slalom race on Saturday and another on Sunday. The races start at 9:00 a.m. both days, and if you want to watch, remember that the best racers start down the hill first.

A Mid-Am race consists of two runs of slalom with the times for each run combined to make a total time. The fastest total time wins so a racer may not do well in one of the two runs but really smoke coming down the hill on their second run to take the race on the combined time.

It will take a good racer about 45 seconds to come down the South McClouth run going through or around 65 slalom gates. A recreational skier will take about two minutes to come down the same hill. When you see where a few racers are falling, or making mistakes, you may want to get up closer so you can yell the traditional European cheer to the racers. It sounds like a "hup, hup, hup", as the spectators urge them on.

All of the racers are members of the United States Ski Association, which sanctions amateur racing here in the states. Because of the international stature of the Mid-Ams, the races are run under the more stringent International Ski Federation rules and is therefore sanctioned by them as well as the USA.

Blind skiing can help learning

Reach out with your feelings. Ski with sensitivity. Develop an awareness of your edges, of pressure points within your boots. Both the inner game of tennis and the zen of motorcycle maintenance have now been transferred to skiing. Supervisors at ski schools are encouraging students to develop intrinsic feedback—an awareness of the feelings that accompany both their ski successes and their failures in hopes of rediscovering the former and avoiding the latter.

One way to discover this kind of felling for your skiing is to do it as the blind do. Watching a student with the large yellow bib labeled BLIND SKIER can be a fascinating sight, as the student swivels neatly on top of each unseen mogul, sinking exactly on a new set of edges into a nicely finished turn. The skier's turns may sometimes be more precise in relation to the terrain than the

Here are a few rules to follow. First, pick the right terrain—gentle terrain. You'll quickly discover that one of your first problems as a blind skier is keeping your balance, and a steep slope will aggravate that problem. Secondly, be sure to have someone with you, to give you timing and directions, and who will also protect you from traffic. Also, don't cheat; you'll lose all the benefits. If you just can't resist the impulse to open your eyes when you feel anxiety (which will be often), put on a blindfold. To beat the problem of balance, try snowplowing down the hill and edge your skis to a sudden stop. Chances are you will promptly sit down on the snow. Most of us rely more on our vision to maintain our balance than we realize. As you practice, you'll find yourself adjusting your posture—flexing knees and ankles, spreading arms and lowering hands, straightening upper body. That's the way you should be skiing even when your eyes are open.

Next, you'll discover the importance of companionship. Skiing is not a solitary exercise for the blind, as it sometimes is for the sighted. The blind depend on their companion's voice not only for instruction but for safety. And they're very sensitive to words and inflections. You will be, too—insecurity and vagueness on the part of your buddy will make you feel insecure. "Turn on that bump ahead." What bump? How far ahead? Which way? On the other hand, given an instructor who speaks concisely and clearly (usually from behind so his or her voice isn't lost on the wind) and who keeps reassuring you with chatter even while you're resting, you discover that this trust has a very special value in skiing—it blocks out fear.

You also become aware of other sounds when you're skiing blind. The chair lift, for example; its noises are almost frightening. And the snow. Do a traverse across the hill with your eyes shut and a friend behind. Listen to the sound of your gliding edges. Do a couple of checks or stems. Notice the difference in sounds between carving and slipping? Between icy and granular? Packed and unpacked? The blind do.

Notice the association probably have for some friendly reassurance.

of wind with speed. One instructor, describing the first time he skied blindfolded, noted that the only way he knew he was turning was that he wasn't picking up speed.

And, if nothing else, your experiments skiing blind will probably enhance your appreciation—for not having such handicaps yourself. And your respect—for those who do and ski anyway. And your perceptiveness—of the need that many you meet on the slopes probably have for some friendly reassurance.

Don't do it yourself - take a lesson

In this age of "Do It Yourself" and "Doing your own thing" is there still a need for teachers and lessons? Look around you and you will find the answer. Everywhere you look people are taking lessons of one sort or another. Lessons are offered in everything from animal husbandry to Zen, from gourmet cooking to gymnastics and we see both young and old participating.

But, more important than the fact that these lessons are being taught is the question "Why?": why such a demand to be taught a skill or activity? Maybe the American Society is becoming more and more participation oriented. Many of us are no longer satisfied to sit by the sidelines and watch other people do it, we want to do it ourselves. It is the lesson or the act of being taught which enables us to gain the basic skills necessary to engage in a given activity.

It is in the sport of snow skiing that the need for lessons or more specifically their benefit, is exemplified.

For the beginning skier the class and its lesson may be the only solace in an otherwise hostile environment. It is during the lesson that the student will meet other people of the same age and ability level. It is within the lesson, at the beginning stages of skiing, that the social need for friendship and camaraderie is fulfilled.

The need for guidance, the need to be taught, is provided by the professional instructor. He or she is trained to make your every experience on skis an enjoyable one and to lead you through a series of maneuvers or stepping stones on the road to becoming a better and better skier.

Initially, the lesson may entail such simple activities as putting on skis, walking on them, and turning around. Later you will learn how to slide on skis and, of course, to stop. With the aid of the ski teacher you will be taught to maneuver on the hill and how to safely participate in the sport.

After you have learned the basic skills and as your ability increases the instructor will show you how to ski more efficiently. During each lesson you will be helped over those little hurdles and taken to new plateaus of expertise and enjoyment. You will be through a well planned progression leading to that eventual goal of "Parallel skiing."

As a parallel skier, you will probably find yourself taking a few lessons. However, every now and again a brush up with a few pointers from the "Pro" will get out the kinks and keep you free from getting rusty. Or, better yet, a series of coaching lessons to keep your skills fine tuned might be in order.

As with any sport, you can learn it yourself or have a friend teach you. But, the professional instructor and the well planned lesson will enable you to be a better skier, learn quicker, and do it safely.
