Annual mushroom pickers, quartets hit town this weekend

Over 500 mushroom hunters are expected to make the mad rush through the woods after they parade through town on their way to the secret mushroom hunting grounds this Saturday.

The contestant hunters are hoping that they will find enough of the little morels so that they will qualify to do the same thing again on Sunday for the finals of the National Mushroom Championships.

This year the 24th annual festival is again sponsored by the Boyne City Chamber of Commerce and the Boyne Valley Lions Club.

With the mushroom contest as a background there will be plenty of other activities for the non-mushroom hunter as they could visit a "must," a flea market, have a mushroom lunch at an area restaurant, visit local retail stores that are offering special mushroom festival savings, or they could listen to one of the free clinics that will tell you how to identify morel mushrooms before they head out into the woods for some leisurely picking.

The clinic, described by Chamber executive Kate Schafer as a "must" for the first time hunters, will be held at 9 a.m. Saturday at the Boyne City High School.

This year the anticipation is growing because of the rains during the first of the week, and the expected warmer weather making an appearance by the weekend. Both are factors in finding a strong mushroom crop in the woods that surround the area.

Hunters who have been out searching the woods so far are finding morels where they grew two years ago, they say. Last year, the mushroom crop left a lot to be desired by the contestants who were in the contest.

Of the 500 expected hunters on Saturday, the largest contingent will be coming from southern Michigan and Ohio. In the past, contestants have come from the east and the west coasts to participate.

The competitors will have 90 minutes to gather morels on the official hunting grounds which are not disclosed until moments before the match so that all competitors have a chance of picking in an area that has not been all-picked out, according to members of the Lions Club.

The top finishers in the categories will come back Sunday at 10:30 a.m. for the finals and a chance to win the prizes.

After another 90 minute picking session, the competitors will be brought back into town for the prize ceremonies at about 1:30 p.m.

While the pickers will be vying for the top prize, many other folks will enjoy the carnival that will open on Thursday and run until Sunday. A flea market is being set up to run on Saturday and Sunday in the same area as the carnival.

Among the many booths will be a bake sale with profits slated to help

Sorenson asks appliance replacement for senior housing

The 1970 stoves, furnaces, water heaters, and refrigerators need replacement, city housing commissioner Todd Sorenson told the city commission Tuesday, May 3. Sorenson was not on the housing commission when the first Litzenburger apartments went up in 1970. He said the appliances used were the cheapest kind and they already have had to replace some.

Sorenson has submitted a pre-application for Comprehensive Improvement Assistance Program funds to purchase new appliances and make repairs on the 24 apartments and on 16 houses on Wenonah and Harris Streets, also part of the low cost housing program. The total request is for $219,000.

Besides the appliances, the funds are needed for problem-causing sewer clean-outs, and heaved flooring.

Insulating improvements are also being asked. An engineer from the federal Housing and Urban Development agency, Sorenson said, will be checking over the itemized list in the pre-application.

Sorenson explained that the month-to-month operation of the dwelling another festival Boyne City has each winter, Smeltania.

As the night approaches, the activities will not decrease as the Barbershoppers make their appearance in town for the Annual Bush League Contest. The quartets, none of which has won any national or state events, will be vying for the recognition and the trophy. The event is traditionally set up for "beginning" barbershop quartets, and as in the past, will provide plenty of action throughout the weekend in area restaurants and bars as the groups try to get in a little last minute practice before the event.

A complete festival schedule of events appears in the special mushroom section included with this newspaper.

Boyne man dies in county jail

Charlevoix County Sheriff deputies found 23-year-old Ray Sobleski dead from hanging in his cell Saturday evening when they checked the condition of the prisoners.

Sobleski was being held on a probation violation charge in the jail after he was arrested Saturday afternoon by Emmet County Sheriff's deputies at a private residence in Petoskey.

The prisoner was declared dead by deputy medical coroner John Lignell, M.D. He had hanged himself sometime between 7 and 9 p.m. according to the sheriff's report. He was found at 9 p.m. by the deputies, according to Scott Beatty, County Prosecutor.

Transit will never make money, hope state aid will cover costs

"It will never make any money; we know that," is the way Vincent Olach described the county's transit system. Olach is one of the members of the county's ad hoc committee, studying what to do about county bus transportation.

Olach said the committee is in total agreement to keep the busses running. Recommendations on how to do this are expected at the Wednesday, May 10 meeting of the committee.

The transit has been overseen by the county commission on aging. Olach explained, because Art Saworski, who directs the transit, is chairman of the commission. The committee will review this arrangement as well as the problem of funding.

Olach said state and federal funding will vary as it is based on local effort. "For state aid," he said, "take the transit budget, subtract fares and get 60 percent of what remains. But that could go as low as 40 percent this year," he added.

The state has also offered 100 percent bus replacements after 120,000 miles—if they're available, Olach said. Bus replacement is a looming concern as the system's busses are now crossing the 100,000 mile mark.

"We think we could get two of the five we need," he said. If maintenance on any of the others gets high, Olach said, the transit would just have to quit using them and reschedule the routes somehow for the remaining busses.

Reported in the county commission minutes for March 9, Dan Parras, of the state Department of Transportation told the commissioners that the additional busses needed for replacement might be available next year.

Parras also noted that a state-wide study showed that fares average 56 cents a mile while costs of the bus service are set at 79 cents per mile.

Members of the ad hoc committee are: chairman, Don Smith, of the county commission; Fred Welch, road commission manager; Vincent Olach, Marvin Loding, and Ralph Richardson.

Country Star gets 2nd 10 acre parcel rezoned for market

It took longer to arrange a quorum than it did to approve rezoning for a new Country Star Restaurant Friday. Eventually, however, the Boyne City planning commission okayed a request from Peninsula Construction Company to change the zoning from industrial to general commercial/industrial. This cleared the way for construction of the restaurant and supermarket.

The request for the rezoning of a second ten acre parcel will allow the builder to place the supermarket on an adjacent 10 acre site.

The planners had previously approved a change from an industrial zoning to general commercial/industrial to the builder for the restaurant on another 10 acre parcel.

Lewis Poole, the manager of the Control Engineering plant located across the street from the rezoned land, was the only person to speak at the public hearing held before the planners took the action. He voiced no opposition to the project, but asked the planners if there would still be enough industrial zoned property in the area for other businesses that may want to locate in the town. Kate Schafer, the head of the planners, assured Poole that there would be as they had plans for an industrial park complex in the same area. She also said there is enough other land in the city for industrial expansion.

The site is located between the Catholic Church and the Top Of Michigan Rural Electric Company on M-75 at the eastern side of town.

With the rezoning, the builders are hoping to break ground as soon as possible after getting all the plans approved by the governing bodies.

Final approval by the city commission came May 3.

East Jordan sets self-clean-up day, May 14

According to the Chamber of Commerce, you can pay to have it done, or get out there and do it yourself with your neighbors and people you never got to before.

That is East Jordan's Community Clean-up Day, Saturday, May 14. Chamber executive-director Judy Shea said it starts at the city parking lot across from city hall at 11:30 a.m., and is sponsored by the Chamber and the city recreation department. And it ends with a free picnic for everybody that worked. The picnic will be at 4:45 p.m. at the Tourist Park pavilion.

Ten crew leaders will be there and "we'll divide people up for what they would like to do," Shea said. That includes children too, who, Shea said, will probably need to take their shoes off if they do any painting.

One thing that needs painting is fencing at the ball park. Others might want to "do up" the Chamber of Commerce building that is the tourist front door.

Shea said there will be stumps to cut, flower gardens to dig, and other outdoor jobs.

"We ask that people bring their own equipment if at all possible," Shea said. That includes rake, shovel, clippers, chain saw (only the owner will use it), and brooms.

Shea noted that the city is having budget problems. "This could save the city a lot."

While people are doing spring house cleaning, the Chamber of Commerce and the Indian Powwow committee are getting together a rummage sale and flea market for Saturday, May 7.

Just in time for people to take the unused objects that turned up in house or garage cleaning down to the old Glen's Market building. These donations will help in covering Powwow expenses.

The building will be open Friday night and Saturday morning just before the sale for those who have salable items.

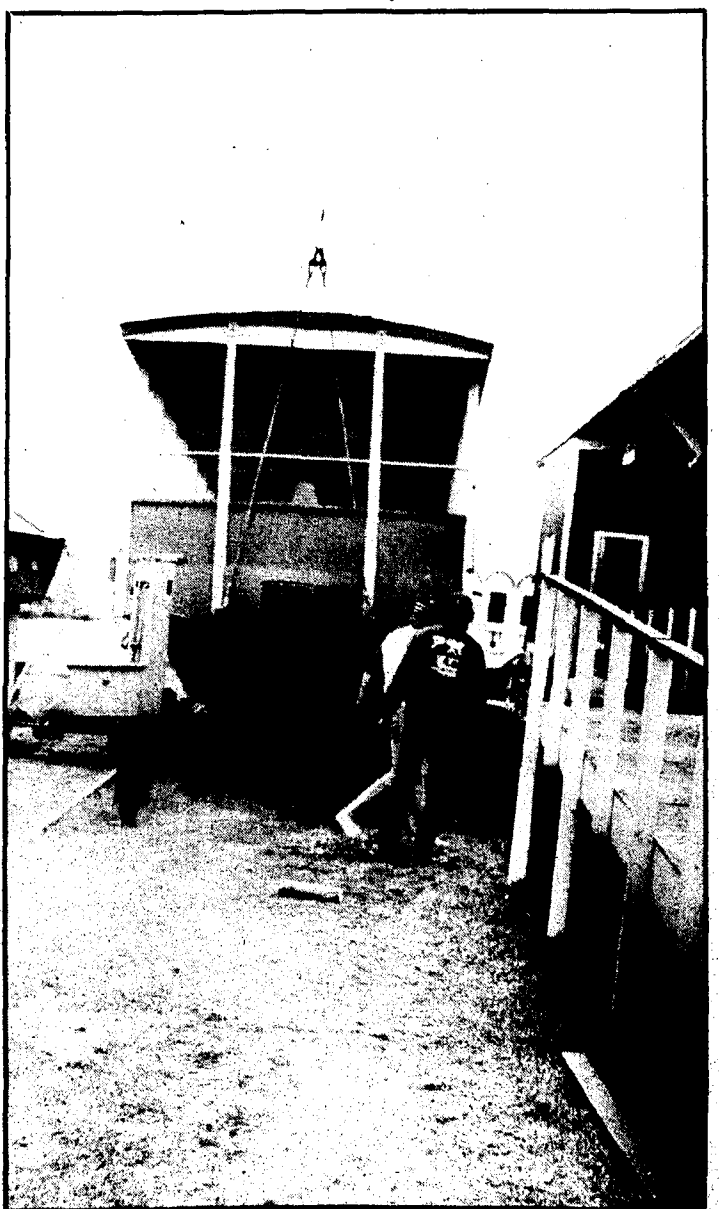

The sale and flea market will run from 9 a.m. to 5 p.m.

May 7 is also yard clean-up day around town. Part of Community Pride Month as proclaimed by Mayor Bill Merwin.

City gets preliminary approval for block grant

On Tuesday, May 3, the City of Boyne City received word from the Office of Community Development, Michigan Department of Commerce, the agency administering the Michigan Small Cities Community Development Block Grant Program, that it has reviewed the city's pre-application for the Central Business District/Well/Waterfront/Restaurant Development and has authorized the city to submit a full application for same.

It should be noted that instructions to submit a full application are not a guarantee that funds will be forthcoming, however, full applications are only requested for projects which have the likelihood of being funded. The city is hoping to have a response in about two weeks.

It seemed to take a long time, but it was just minutes for the crew from the Depot Restaurant to lift up the open railroad car and transfer it to tracks they had constructed closer to the restaurant. The open car will become a place for outside dining when the job is finished, and the other railroad cars, reminiscent of the railroad era in Boyne City, will be grouped together to become a museum and a gift shop.

So you're not feeling well?
No, I've got to see the doctor because of our city water department.
What's the water department got to do with it?
I've had stomach trouble ever since I got my last bill.

A Boyne City man went over to Charlevoix to bail his friend out of jail. The man at the desk said the charge was $400 and costs. The man from Boyne City scratched his head. "He sure is in jail, ain't he?"

Many students graduating from high school cannot do simple arithmetic, write a few paragraphs, or properly fill out a work application form. That's according to a recent national educational survey. Those on the survey team say that our present educational system is a national scandal. A group of us boys were graduated from school with "D" averages, went to work and did as well as most. There seems to be a lot of difference between a "D" in those days and a "B" today. That's all I've got to say about this because whenever I get lost in serious thought I always wind up in unfamiliar territory.

How come smelt seem to like the small Porter creek at Advance? Years ago they used to swim up the Boyne River by the thousands. The answer seems to be that lately the Boyne River has been so full of trout in the spring, the smelt can't get up the river. So the small, silvery fish get discouraged and go to Advance. I wrote this to see if you knew the difference between a lie and a joke.

We got to talking about money the other day. One man wondered what ever happened to the two dollar bill. Another said he was wondering what had become of all those Susan B's that looked like a quarter. I just sat there, wondering what happened to all of the money I used to have.

I'll bet there aren't 10 men left in Boyne City who used to go into a poolroom and shake the dice to see who paid for the cigar.

The barbershoppers and the mush-roomers are in competition for space. The singers and the pickers are holding their events on the same weekend. The two programs are excellent Boyne City attractions, but when they are both held on the same weekend there are not enough rooms in town to hold all the visitors. Last year many visitors were sent to Petoskey for rooms. How easy this could be settled if one of the groups would choose a different weekend. I know it could be done. Weekends aren't that hard to come by.

Let me tell you something before I jerk this sheet from the typewriter. It ain't easy to keep the 10 commandments and a sense of humor at the same time.

Letters

Editor,
I have moved to the City of East Jordan within the last three years, and as a newcomer to the area, I wish to express my thoughts on the sale of Elm Pointe.

Elm Pointe is an extremely choice piece of property. It stands out as a place of beauty in a town burdened with eyesores. It was donated for the recreational pleasure of our citizens, and its use is not solely restricted to the tourist population.

Elm Pointe is a quiet, charming retreat that can be envied by many communities, and we are proud to own such a facility.

The community's concern and appreciation for Elm Pointe has been repeatedly demonstrated by its willingness to devote time and resources toward upkeep and improvements.

The sale of Elm Pointe would be a short-sighted solution to more deep-seated problems that beset East Jordan. Elm Pointe is a valuable asset to the town's residents, and its loss would be greatly felt by many.

Jottings

I have been searching my brain for the last couple of weeks, trying to come up with a super slick saying that could be applied to this week's mushroom festival.

I thought I could come up with a better idea than Bill Underhill's naked snowdance for the Smeltania Festival, but, after several weeks, I am at a standstill, watching the morels grow all around me.

When I was in Florida hunting seashells I had the opportunity to get the famous Sanibel Stoop from trying to find a certain kind of shell. I thought that I could come up with a phrase similar to the Stoop for mushrooms.

The only thing I could figure out was the Morel Mope. But after saying that one, I decided that it sounds more like a dejected mushroom hunter than a successful one, and we all know that everyone is a successful hunter of those elusive, tasty morsels.

Then Bob Read, out of the blue, came up with Fungus Fumble. But that sounds too much like the hunter had a case of the dropsies. And besides, who would want to admit that the morel is nothing more than just a fungus.

But out in the hardwoods habitat, someone will come up with a slogan that explains everything I would like to see in a slogan. I just haven't lived long enough yet.

But, I have had my first morels, served to me on a platter as there were enough of them to share around the Sportsman. Seems Mo and Gino have an eye for those things or else they have someone else picking them for them.

And every year I hear a rumor that someone somewhere has found a way to grow the little things. The latest one says that it was a young man who found out a real simple way that no one ever thought of before to grow the morsels. The story goes that he sold the secret to Michigan State University agricultural experts who are trying to refine the system so that it is commercially viable.

One of these years I am going to find enough time and have enough money to try to track down some of the things I hear about the morel.

Maybe the moral is not to believe too much about the morel. That could keep me out of a lot of trouble.

The last time I tried to pick mushrooms, it was the shaggy mane variety that grows in the fall. When I was cooking them up with a lot of butter, I smelled up the whole house.

Wild mushrooms have a definitely different taste than the kind I always put on my pizza. You know, the generic kind that are at the stores.

This year I have vowed that I would get out into the woods before the poison ivy starts growing so that I could find a few of the elusive things. And this year, I even know where I can find them.

Several of the long time hunters have told me all their secrets about where the big ones, the black ones, the white ones, the in-between ones, the hidden patches of them where they grow in fairy rings are, and everything about those morels.

I'll share that secret with you...they are in the woods.

And that is what they tell me.

So if you see a guy hopelessly lost somewhere between Boyne City and Vanderbuilt, or someother place, and he has a Sanibel Stoop trying to find those northern Michigan seashells in the forest, do me a favor and point out one or two. I need all the help I can get.

Remembrances

White's Mill Number three was located on the south side of the Boyne River at the eastern city limits. Across the river was Spring Street and Coon's pasture. The low building in the front of the picture was a vertical drying shed where the freshly cut lumber was stored standing up. Most of the lumber was air dried, in what was called ricks, outside. A rick was built using the lumber in such a way that air could get to all sides and was stacked in a criss-cross manner. This picture also shows the Boyne City Broom Handle factory which was the building with the smaller chimney. The broom handle factory used hard maple to make the handles for brooms, cutting the lumber down into sticks and then turning them on lathes to get the round shape. This is another picture from the collection of Ed Hartnell and was taken by the photographer Leavenworth in 1918.

Barbara Cruden

All creatures love a pond, including, of course, us. On the first warm day of spring the only place to be is at a pond. It should be a locally-celebrated holiday. "Go home," the boss should say. "It's Pond Day."

The still leafless trees stand down to the shore on one side, like a peaceful army. Horizontal ripples shimmer across the reflection of their straight gray trunks.

There are children and polliwogs over on the meadow side. Small children, big, glossy polliwogs, just starting their legs.

"Put them back in the water," you tell the children. "They can't breathe out of water yet."

The wondrous polliwogs will turn into wonderful bull frogs. The animal book says it takes a bull frog polliwog two years to mature.

Those masses of black eggs in clouds of jelly, floating among the reeds, are toads' eggs. Frogs, the book says, lay their eggs later on, in the summer.

One toad lays 4,000 to 15,000 eggs each spring.

You figure the possible value of that when you learn that each full-grown toad is worth $100 to a farmer, because each toad will eat 10,000 insect pests before the summer is over. Multiply again, because a toad may live 35 summers or so.

Of course, Nature covers her bets. The huge number of eggs is necessary, because many of them will never make it to toad-hood. On the tree side of the pond, a duck swims. Such eggs will help her diet.

The male duck flies in from across the meadow, starts to float straight down to the water like a parachute, then changes his mind and flies away again with that hectic wing-action ducks have. Too many children, he was probably thinking.

A buzzard sails by from another direction, a black-winged glider. No wing-flapping there. And on the pond, a water beetle whirls like a dervish. It's contribution to spring's day of celebration.

Then a turtle climbs up on a log, and the water makes its back shine. As it begins to be warmed by the sun, it seems to say, "You, too. Just soak up this one perfect day. Don't go away."

So you shelve the things you have to do. You have an off-and-on conversation with your friend. You get your shoes wet, but that's nothing. The kids are wet half way up to their knees.

They drag the yellow canoe across the meadow and launch it. Eight children clamber in. There are three paddles and two of them are going in opposite directions. The third is flailing the air, showering water on everyone.

A little breeze moves the canoe in spite of contrary paddling. The duck silently slips away. Frogs hide. The pond belongs to the yellow canoe and the children.

But then, you'd have to say, all of it belongs to Spring. The children, the quiet trees, the duck. All of it, cupped in her golden fingers.

Ten-year-olds Eve Reinhardt, Christa DeGrow, Brandy LaBrecque, JoAnn Looze and Toni Toton smile as they hold onto the first place trophy that they won last weekend down at the Pampa Lanes in Warren. The trophy represents the first place finish the team from Boyne City had in the state championships for Prep Girls. The team qualified for the state meet by winning the regionals that were held in Petoskey in February. While all the girls bowl in the Friday leagues at the Boyne City Lanes, they formed a team just to compete in these meets, calling themselves "pin pals." In winning the championships, they went up against 22 other teams and beat the second place finisher by 83 pins. Christa had the high series for the team.

Group starts new walleye ass'n.

A new sport-fishermans group, the Lake Charlevoix Walleye Association was started last week by Pat Mitchell, the owner of the Sport-fisherman in Boyne City.

"Since the DNR does not plant the walleye species of fish," said Mitchell, "we started this organization to be able to buy enough of the fish to start a sport fishing program in Lake Charlevoix."

The organization hopes to buy 2,500 of the fish to start with, and plant them in the fall. The fish will be ordered this week for the fall delivery. One other thing that the new organization plans to do will be the installation of fish habitats in the lake for the walleyes and other species. The habitats, piles of brush, will be dropped in the lake and weighted down so that the fish will be able to have some hiding places. The habitats are planned to go as soon as the DNR can tell the organization where they want them placed so that they will not interfere with navigation or cause any other hazard.

LCWA is also looking for members according to Mitchell. Besides the $10 individual memberships, the group is offering business memberships for $35. A member should enjoy fishing for walleyes Mitchell added.

"We hope that the organization will grow," he said, "as we want to increase the plants each year until we have as good of a base for sportfishing for the walleye as some of the other lakes that have all ready planted them."

The DNR has already given approval for the walleye plant, according to Mitchell. Mason Schroeder, the fish biologist for the DNR in the Gaylord office has said that there would be no problem with the walleye plant at a meeting held recently at Carp Lake. The LCWA is currently seeking non-profit status, said Mitchell, so that the organization can accept donations for the project.

Mitchell hopes that the species will bring other fishermen into the area instead of places further north. It will also give the wintertime fisherman something else to fish for besides smelt, he added.

People interested in joining the group can reach Mitchell at his shop or by calling 582-2949 for more information.

Public screening set on history of Boyne City

An "open to the public" screening of Boyne City during the highly active lumber era will be held at 7 p.m., Monday, May 9 in the city hall auditorium.

"The history of Boyne City will come alive at this slide show screening," according to William Underhill, chairman of Boyne City's Historical Commission, an official city agency.

Photos, some in color and some in black and white, will be screened and discussed by Robert Morgridge, Boyne City teacher, historian and author of "Settlers to Sidewalks"—a recently published history of the community.

Chairman Underhill

said the meeting was called to show Boyne City activities when there were 7,000 residents and some 13 lumber mills operating in the area. There will be no charge.

In addition to the photo discussion, residents will learn of the commission's work toward development of a Boyne City historical museum.

The commission's function has been helped by recent merger with the long active Boyne City Historical Society.

A Charlevoix County homestead is one of 14 Michigan farms which will receive state centennial certification this spring.

The Harvey Crozier farm near Deer Lake received centennial certification this spring, according to Secretary of State Richard Austin.

A centennial farm is one which has been in continuous possession of the same family for 100 years or more and must contain a minimum of 10 acres with an estimated sales of $50 or, if less than 10 acres, gross sales of $250.

More than 4,000 Michigan farms have been certified as centennial farms since the program started in 1948, Austin said.

Certificates to owners are provided by the Michigan History Division of the Department of State. Markers are provided by Detroit Edison and Consumers Power companies.

Marine Pvt. Patrick A. Slate, son of Albert L. and Lorean H. Slate of East Jordan, has completed recruit training at the Marine Corps Recruit Depot, San Diego. During the 11-week training cycle, he learned the basics of battlefield survival. He was introduced to the typical daily routine that he will experience during his enlistment and studied the personal and professional standards traditionally exhibited by Marines.

He participated in an active physical conditioning program and gained proficiency in a variety of military skills, including first aid, rifle marksmanship and close order drill. Teamwork and self-discipline were emphasized throughout the training cycle.

4-H Youth Programs of Charlevoix and Emmet counties are hosting Dr. J. Lee Taylor, a Michigan State University specialist, for a gardening workshop on May 11, at 7:30 p.m. in the auditorium of the City Hall in Boyne City.

Dr. Taylor, Professor of Horticulture and Extension specialist, is presenting a short series of programs in the northern Michigan area to help young people doing 4-H gardening this summer have a successful season. He has already presented information in Presque Isle and Cheboygan counties.

The public is also invited to attend this evening workshop and learn about vegetable varieties to choose for this area of the state and best choices of varieties for eating, canning and freezing. Dr. Taylor will discuss planting techniques and give information about fertilizing a garden. 4-H's need to know about showing vegetables at the fair so tips and techniques for preparing fair exhibits will be another of Dr. Taylor's topics. In addition, those attending will hear about new and interesting developments in the world of gardening in general. People are encouraged to bring questions about their gardening problems as a question period is included in the program.

There are many gardening classes included in the County Fair where both Emmet and Charlevoix county 4-H's show their summer's bounty. Classes are included for different ages of individual members, club exhibits and for family gardeners. Plan on being included by getting off to a good gardening start and take advantage of Dr. Taylor's visit to the area. This program will help all local gardeners as well as 4-H members. Dr. Taylor brings excellent credentials and background to the subject he will be discussing. He is the recipient of a number of professional awards and holds membership in many horticultural groups. He is the author of Growing Plants Indoors as well as numerous bulletins, brochures and articles for professional journals.

Welcome mushroom hunters to the 24th annual championships

They are off and running to find those morels and be named as the national champion.

It took a madness to start morel hunt championships

BY MARSHALL SAYLES
Mushroom Madness!
 That's Boyne City's lead-off to many Chamber of Commerce festivals and events scheduled from spring through the winter. Officially it's called the National Mushroom Hunting Championships that are held in a secret hunting ground that is picked or should we say decided, just before the event from the starting place at the City Park. On signal, hundreds of people leave in frantic search of the tasty morel. Hours later they return to have their pickings counted in hopes of making the finals that happen the next day and then, they hope to win a prize.

However, in those early days, there was no organization to the looking and the picking. Folks simply raced off into the woods, got their mushrooms, and came home bragging and showing their loot. No one seemed to realize that they were doing it all wrong. Their activities were not regulated and thus, eventually, were out of harmony with the growing complexity of the times. It was disturbing to see people carrying on like that without specific orders from the powers that be. So the Chamber of Commerce, the City Council and civic organizations decided to drag mushroom picking into the twentieth century. That was about a quarter of a century ago. They all agreed to organize the confusion by establishing a mushroom picking contest. The idea was to make it a national affair, one that would attract people to Boyne City-- people who might spend money with our merchants and also put the community a little larger on the map. Local pickers threw their hats into the air, going for the idea with grocery sacks, fingers and all. After all, Boyne City residents could out-pick anyone who came here thinking that they would show our local yokels a thing or two. And so the years passed, and the word spread, pickers came from far and wide. It was those far and wide pickers who stopped our local people from bragging. Some years our people were out-picked and some years they weren't. The moral to this morel story is that it doesn't pay to brag with far and wide people around. Boyne City's mushroom festival has whipped up so much excitement that newspapers, magazines and television representatives are usually on hand to report who picked the most mushrooms and where. That's because, although Michigan has a great number of festivals, Boyne's national contest draws the greater number of people. One hundred years ago no one would have thought that Boyne City would create a nation-wide hurrah over that scawny, four inch wrinkle.

Springtime means morels to the north

For uncounted but large and growing numbers of enthusiasts, springtime in Michigan means morels. Morels are delectable wild mushrooms, fairly easy to find and identify, and, generally safe to eat. For the beginning mushroom hunter or the local expert, the half-dozen species of morels are the safest group among the more than 2,000 kinds of wild mushrooms found in Michigan.

Reading this will tell you something about morels, as well as something about the delights and dangers of hunting mushrooms. It will not tell you enough about morels or wild mushrooms generally. The beginning mushroomer is advised to do two things at the outset: (1) make your first several mushroom hunts, whether for morels or other edible species, with someone who knows his mushrooms, and (2) equip yourself with a mushroom book. (3) Make sure you attend the identification class that is part of the National Mushroom Festival.

Like many other recreational sports, mushroom hunting has its hazards. It's a safe sport for the sensible person. It's a foolhardy pastime for the ignorant or careless.

Finding an expert to conduct you on your first forays after morels is a problem you must solve for yourself. Finding a good book is easier. Best on the market is The Mushroom Hunter's Field Guide by Dr. Alexander H. Smith of the University of Michigan. Available at most bookstores, it provides pictures and descriptions of about 125 of the edible and poisonous species that the amateur collector is most likely to encounter.

About the only other items of equipment needed to collect morels are a hoop handled basket and a knife. A basket is a much better container for mushrooms than a paper sack; but use a sack in preference to a plastic bag. Morels packed in airtight plastic bags will begin to spoil before you get them home. The experts use an old onion bag or a burlap sack. No license is required to hunt morels. Ordinary field clothes, including stout walking shoes or boots, complete the basic outfit.

Pictures to illustrate this article include ten species of mushrooms which divide into two groups—the true morels (species of verpa or morchella) and the false morels (species of Helvella or gyromitra). The false morels were put in only because they often are found at the same times and in many of the same places as the true ones. As a group, the false morels are dangerous and to be left alone.

Latin names will be used throughout the rest of this article, simply because there is no other way to identify mushrooms accurately.

All species of morchella found in Michigan have one characteristic in common; their caps (heads, tops) are pitted with little hollows, as if holes had been punched part-way into them. The pattern of the pits varies from species to species, but all have the pits. Verpa and helvella species may be ridged, wrinkled, waved or even quite smooth, but in any case they do not have hole-like pits.

Any other so-called general rule about morels fails its most important test: it is not always true.

May is the best time for morels in Michigan, although they can be found from late April through June. Contrary to common belief, morels are not confined to the northern part of the state; some of the best hunting is in southern Michigan. Like all wild mushrooms, morels require other specific conditions of moisture and temperature. Some springs are good for morels, some are poor. Last year, for example, was considered to be a bad one for the finding of the elusive mushroom in quantity. A warm spring with plenty of moisture is best. Cold, dry springs can mean almost total failure of the crop.

Morels are where you find them. Some suggestions on where to look for the various species can be given, but be prepared to wear out considerable shoe leather in your quest. Unlike some wild mushrooms, morels don't ordinarily grow in large clusters or "fairy rings," but where you find one there probably will be others close by. Don't expect even your best friend to disclose his pet morel ground to you. That kind of secret is passed from father to son.

Don't expect, either, to find morels easily at first. Because they blend into the background of last fall's leaves and dead grass, they are hard to spot even though you may be looking right at them. For the beginner it sometimes helps to get down on hands and knees. Seen from that vantage point, any brownish object poking up above ground level may be a morel. On the other hand, it may be a stick, tree root, bracken stub or any one of several dozen other things. Your eye for morels will sharpen with practice, so don't get discouraged.

all other morels in that the sides of the cap hang completely free from the top of the stalk, like a skirt. This is the only possibly dangerous morel species. A few people experience symptoms akin to intoxication after eating them. Grows in rich, wet soil along the edges of streams and swamps.

Verpa conica
—Uncommon, not usually collected. Caps are small and have little substance. Edible but not worth bothering with.

Verpa bohemica

—Some guides class the verpa species with the false morels, but Dr. Smith considers them as belonging to the true morel group. These are the earliest of the morels, usually appearing before trees and shrubs have leafed out. Caps are dark brown, and differ from

When you find 'em, here's how to cook 'em

BY BEA SMITH

Now how to prepare those wonderful morels? Here is a quote from an old cookbook about mushrooms. "The peasants of a great portion of Europe eat mushrooms raw with salt and dry bread, and wholesome and good they are. The true flavor of mushrooms, nevertheless, is greatly heightened by cooking; and cook them how you may — broil, a stew, or a fry with the simple addition of butter, salt and pepper, and they are excellent. There is one rule that should always be observed in however mode they are cooked, and that is that they should be served up quickly and hot."

I am not an expert on mushroom cooking so I became an inquiring reporter and asked a number of friends how they do it. They all agreed with the old cookbook—and they all soak them in salt water first. Erma Mills dips them in flour and fries them in butter. Mary Topolinski who usually finds many morels just fries them in butter after soaking them in salt water and draining them in the refrigerator. Anne Jenkins fries the large ones in butter and stews the small ones for scrambled eggs and other recipes. This is the way she does it.

MORELS IN SCRAMBLED EGGS
 In a heavy-bottomed pan she cooks them over very low heat and lets them stew in their own juice until tender, season with butter, salt and pepper, then pours beaten eggs over them. Serve hot.

MORELS IN CREAM
 These are delicious poured over buttered toast as a luncheon or supper dish.
 4 tablespoons butter

1 onion, chopped
 1 pound sliced morels or small ones whole salt and pepper
 paprika
 juice on ½ lemon
 2 tablespoons flour
 ¾ cup half and half
 Melt the butter in a frying pan, and cook the onion until transparent. Add the mushrooms, and cook for a few minutes. Add the seasonings and flour. Cook for about 5 minutes before adding the cream. Stir until smooth, do not boil. Another quote from the old cookbook. "Mushrooms can be cooked in the same manner as the recipes for oysters, either stewed, fried, broiled, or as a soup." So happy hunting. I'm sure our recent rains will bring them up; and no matter how many you find or how you cook them, our Northern Michigan morels are the most delicious mushrooms ever!

Morels to look for in the woods

Morchella angusticeps
 -The common, so-called "black" morel, although color may vary from dark cream to brownish-black. Normally appears in early May, in moist aspen, birch and balsam fir woods. Also look around dead elm trees. Cap attached to stalk at base, hollow inside. Small but edible and choice.

Morchella crassipes
 -The "giant" among morels, growing at times close to a foot in height. Not to common here in the north, but the lucky finder doesn't need many to make a meal. Similar to esculenta in all respects, but larger. Fruits in late May and early June. More common in southern Michigan where the weather seems to be better suited for them. Hunt in oak, beech and maple forests, old orchards, in moist, rich garden soil, and around elm stumps. These are edible and taste great fried up with butter.

Helvella [gyromitra] species

-You will find this group of mushrooms listed in guidebooks under both Latin generic names. Of the four illustrated species, only gigas can be considered technically safe, and it is easily confused with the others. Underwoodii and infula are poisonous. Esculenta, popularly called the "beefsteak" mushroom has long been a problem. Many people have eaten it for years without ill effects; others have been [Concluded on Page 8]

Morchella hybrida
 -Cap small in relation to stalk, and detached from stalk about half-way toward bottom of cap. Fruits abundantly about one year in three on moist humus in oak and beech woods. Easily confused with verpa bohemica. Poorest of the morchella species for eating, and not worth collecting.

Morchella esculenta
 -The common, so called "white" morel. Colors vary from light cream to yellowish-brown. Cap attached to stalk at base, hollow inside. Fruits in latter half of May. Found in a wide variety of habitats, including old orchards, beech-maple forests, oak woods and burned-over meadows. These, considered by the local hunters are the best edible mushroom. Dried, they are known to be worth $75.00 a pound to restaurants serving wild foods.

Cautions listed

[Concluded from Page 7] poisoned by it. Recent research has disclosed that esculenta contains a toxic substance chemically similar to rocket fuel, which may or may not be destroyed by cooking. Only safe rule to follow is: leave all helvella [gyromitra] species alone. The risk is not worth taking.

To sum up, collectors who confine their efforts to three species of Morchella—angusticeps, esculenta and crassipes—are on safe ground so long as ordinary precautions are observed. All three species have pitted, roughly cone-shaped caps attached to the stalk at the base. The other species mentioned in this article either are not particularly good or pose some degree of danger ranging from mild to serious.

First, don't expect morels to taste like other mushrooms. They have their own flavor. Mushrooms of any kind are better unwashed, and you can eliminate the need for washing morels by doing a clean job of collecting. Cut off the lower stem of each one as you pick it and brush any loose dirt off the cap. If you must wash your morels, dry them thoroughly on paper towels. Save the water to put outside under an old elm, there will be spore in the water and the next year, you may have them growing in your back yard. Cut off stems at base of caps, and slice caps in half lengthwise. Melt a generous amount of butter or margarine in a frying pan and add enough morel halves to cover bottom of pan. Do not heat. Saute about five minutes on each side. Serve immediately.

Morels may also be creamed, stewed, or otherwise used in recipes which call for mushrooms, but the flavor is delicate and easily overwhelmed.
