Planners unprepared and overwhelmed by Park

A crowd of veterans, from the American Legion and the VFW "overwhelmed" the Boyne City Planning Commission at Monday night's meeting. The planners heard for the first time, some of the changes that are outlined for Veterans Park, and they decided that they weren't ready to make a commitment at just a glance.

The Vets showed up at the meeting to push for their improvement that they want in the park located by the waterfront.

They have suggested to the Parks and Recreation Board that by moving the cannons from their present location along the waterfront, to a new location by the road, and the addition of a speakers platform and podium made out of cement, the park would be a more fitting place to have a memorial for all those who have served our country.

The speakers platform would be open to all who want to use it, say the vets.

But the planners, after hearing a lot of discussion on the project, voted to have another meeting with the vets and the Parks Board to work out some of the details.

Don Toffolo, one of the members of the planning commission isn't sure that the location the vets desire may be the best place for the memorial. "I would like to see the memorial be placed where the present cannons are located," he said, "if we need to make a quick answer." But he added that he would like to have some more time to study the whole park plan.

The redo of the site plan for the park has considerable changes from the plans that were developed several years ago by the city's engineering firm, Johnson, Johnson and Roy.

Among the changes are the keeping of the ring road as is presently in use, omitting some of the parking areas, eliminating the beach area as the city now has a beach on the lake, omitting the portable bleachers that were proposed in the original plan and several other changes.

The Parks Board would also like a moratorium on any more boulders placed in the park for markers.

Others at the hearing wanted to make sure that the senior citizens would have an area for recreation in the park. They were assured that their concerns would be utilized.

The area where the Vets want to place their memorial is the area where the tennis courts were located.

They are proposing a nine foot by twelve foot poured concrete riser that is two feet high. The riser would have a podium for speakers and flag post in one corner with a flag that would always be flying, it being lighted at night.

The entire memorial would be put on a space in the park about 55 feet long and 20 feet wide.

The veterans group is also proposing a sign for the park that would be made out of stainless steel, formed into an arch eight feet wide and twelve feet tall. The letters of the sign would also be made of stainless steel so that the whole sign is relatively maintenance free.

Citing that the memorial is an "emotional issue," Kate Schaffer, the head of the Commission asked that the commissioners hold another meeting with the veterans to find out more about the project. Commissioner Don Toffolo put the suggestion into a motion and the planners then scheduled a special meeting to be held next Monday evening at 6:00 p.m.

In other action the planners continued their discussion with Lloyd VanAlstine, owner of the proposed Boyne Auto building slated to be built on the old Parrish Chevrolet property behind the post office.

Some members of the commission still are not satisfied with the facade of building that VanAlstine has proposed.

The only reason that the planners get to tell VanAlstine how the building should look is that VanAlstine has asked to be considered for a property tax abatement on the project. Because of the asking for the tax relief, the planners are suggesting ways to have the building look the way that they think it would best fit in with the downtown part of the city.

This is the second time VanAlstine has appeared with a proposed plan. He was supposed to have had several meetings with a sub-committee of the planners to work out whatever problems there were. The sub-committee held only one meeting at which, according to VanAlstine, not much was done.

VanAlstine indicated that he was willing to work with the city on whatever they wanted providing it fit his own criteria for the building.

VanAlstine has met 12 of the fourteen criteria that the planners have to consider before they could recommend a tax abatement of up to 12 years.

After hearing discussion on what changes would still have to be made, City Commissioner Thelma Behling, as a member of the audience, asked "Why put this man through all this?" She was answered by City Manager Tim Clifton who said that because of a lot of requests for the tax abatement program in the past, he was directed by the commissioners to work out a procedure that could be used, and that the Planning Commission was given the responsibility for hearing the matters.

Clifton also said that the city commissioners had posted a moratorium and that that rule was still in effect. Clifton added that the matter would still have to be approved by the City Commission as there would have to be additional public hearings because of other taxing authorities concerned.

Six other firms in the downtown area have been granted abatements for varying terms.

After still more discussion, the planners passed a resolution to recommend a tax abatement for two to four years under the present site plan, but if the planners could have additional input, they could recommend up to the full twelve years.

VanAlstine then said, "I've been willing to work with you, but to grant only a two to four year abatement, it isn't worth it so we might as well forget it."

The matter was referred to the City Commission who, according to several members, will look at the project in a different light.

Three other projects were okayed by the planners at the meeting. One involved a parking lot that Courters, Inc., division of Allied plans on putting in next to a building that they are converting to a manufacturing and "clean" room facility.

The parking lot will be for the employees who will be working in the new facility. The lot is to be located south of the present Adgate Realty building.

The planners approved the lot subject to a review at the end of a six month period so that they can see that the lot is covered with a dust free surface. They also asked for a cedar hedge that would screen the lot from the road and that the lot be lighted so that the lights would be directed on the lot and away from the neighboring properties.

The planners approved a duplex site plan that will be constructed on Michigan Avenue on the north side of town by Nichols Construction of Flushing, Michigan.

Lastly, the planners approved the request by Marv Roberts to vacate a portion of Prospect Street. The street, while on the plot maps, could not be constructed so as to be usable, according to Clifton. The matter now goes to the City Commissioners for their approval.

Clifford Green, post commander-elect of the East Jordan Veterans of Foreign Wars, gives the first poppy to Ellen Cihak, mayor pro-tem. Veterans of the VFW and American Legion posts in the area cities will be out collecting donations in exchange for the poppies on Buddy Poppy

Days, May 19, 20, and 21. Green said they are to "honor the dead, and help the living." The living are the soldiers still in veterans' hospitals. The use of the poppy as a symbol comes from the World War I poem that begins... "In Flanders Field the poppies blow between the crosses, row on row..."

Salmon project spawns county's concern

Questions on the chinook salmon project, being carried out by the Department of Natural Resources, will be heard and possibly answered at meetings scheduled for the next six or seven days. The project includes a salmon harvesting station along with the weir to prevent both salmon and lamprey from spawning upstream.

The county planning commission will hold a special meeting Thursday, May 19 for review of the project, before voting for or against approval. County planner Larry Sullivan had raised several concerns. These were answered in writing by DNR Fisheries Division's Bruce Vollmer.

Vollmer said the DNR did not need to submit a specific impact statement as a blanket statement regarding weirs had already been arranged. Vollmer also denied the complaint that the DNR had not considered alternate sites, naming two that they had rejected because of unfavorable factors.

As to alerting other agencies about the project, Vollmer wrote, "It was decided not to involve other agencies at that time since funding for the barrier and land control had not been secured."

The planning commission is one of several agencies which must approve the project before it is proposed for federal funding.

Another hurdle is the approval of a variance from the Jordan Wild River zoning board, meeting Tuesday, May 24 at 1:30 p.m. at the South Arm Township building. The zoning board was included as one of the "agencies" in Vollmer's statement.

Denial of the variance would stop the project. DNR officials have said they would appeal a negative decision. Appeals are made to the Natural Resources Commission, the directive board of the DNR.

The necessity for the variance springs from regulations made by the DNR in 1974 when it was forming the zoning plan for the Wild-Scenic Rivers category applied to the Jordan.

The purpose stated was "to protect free-flowing conditions, fish and wild life resources, water quality, and scenic and aesthetic qualities, and historical and recreational values at the Jordan River and adjoining land."

In the process of getting land-holders along the river committed to the new zoning category, the DNR also stated, "(We) do not plan to 'open up' the river. Most fallen trees and debris will be left in the river. They may be re-arranged to increase stream flow and provide fish cover, but the stream will not be cleared to encourage canoe traffic. The public does have the right to fish and canoe the river and can gain access at public access sites. The Natural River Program does not cater to the public recreationist."

The DNR statement said further, the Jordan River was chosen for the wild-scenic category "Because of the Jordan's natural beauty, pure water, and stable flow, uninterrupted by dams."

Resistance to the DNR salmon project springs considerably from the belief that the DNR has slurred over their own restrictions.

The 16 to 18 inch weir planned for the Jordan, south of Rogers Bridge is a dam, and at spawning season it will be closed and produce a certain amount of flooding. For the summer months before the salmon run, the proposal has been to have a gate in the dam open for canoeists.

Council turns down Elm Pointe Friends offer

Acting on committee recommendation, East Jordan city council at a special meeting on May 3 turned down the Friends of Elm Pointe proposal to run the park for a year.

The proposal had been offered as a means of reducing city expense in the operation of the 11-acre city park. The Friends of Elm Pointe are a group of residents in East Jordan and South Arm Township, opposed to the city's plan to sell the park.

In making the Elm Pointe committee recommendation to the council, committee chairwoman Ellen Cihak said that while the council was studying ways to sell the park, it seemed unwise to enter into any agreement on the park.

The Friends had offered the proposal at a previous council meeting and the ad hoc committee had been directed to review the proposal, which guaranteed year-around park operation using no more city funds than the $4,500 already budgeted for the summer months.

The council's decision to consider sale of the park in order to have funds for city projects has provoked a heated response from those using the park for civic and private activities. They state that no other city property can offer the kind of setting needed for the Portside Arts Fair, the Historical Society's Museum, for weddings, outdoor religious occasions, and other such events.

But, said Mayor Bill Merwin, that doesn't change the fact that the city needs capital to pay for utility repairs that have been put off from year to year. Capital is needed also, the council has said, for the kind of projects that will draw business to the town and also draw new property owners, thus increasing the tax base.

An increased tax base is cited as the means of collecting more revenue without raising present taxes.

Bill Steude, a lawyer in the Michigan Municipal League, told The Press that typically, more people means more services, and thus the cost of city government goes up as population goes up. Higher population would not make revenue increase faster than expenses. He noted that more demand for property also raises property values. Higher property values, of course, ultimately means higher taxes.

With increasing the number of residents the only certain increase in revenues over expenses, he said, would be the increase in state revenue sharing, which is figured on a per capita basis.

He said the city has six ways of obtaining more revenue or decreasing costs: increasing tax collections, increasing fees for services, cutting services, contracting with other nearby government agencies for shared operations, drawing in new industry, or annexation.

Council members recently went to a Municipal League seminar, which they report was very helpful.

Their view has been that the Elm Pointe sale (which would depend on public vote) was preferable to raising taxes, or having a city income tax.

If the Elm Pointe plan should fall through, and the city income tax proposed, the tax idea would also have to pass a city wide referendum.

The earlier hope has dimmed that the park could be sold to the county with Kammer Recreation Trust funds from the state. The fund already has a backlog of requests.

Asking that the Friends of Elm Pointe proposal be considered further, Cygred Riley, one of those originating Portside Arts Show, asked the council if their proposal wouldn't be to the advantage of the city at least until the park was sold.

Cihak told The Press that the committee "will continue to study the resolution of the Elm Pointe question, leaving open the possibility of keeping it going economically."

City listens to engineer's opinion on Front St.

Citizen concern over the quality of the street The Harborage is building for the city prompted Boyne City commissioners to ask the city engineer for an opinion before accepting the street.

The construction is the realignment of Front Street through The Harborage to allow more space for the condominium complex. The actual lay-out of the realigned stretch, developer Rick Smith said, was done by a professional highway engineer. The road is not yet paved.

George Granger, engineer for the city, reported at the May 17 noon meeting that there were three concerns the public questioned. One was the high bank on the south side of the roadway and the possibility of an off-the-lake wind dropping snow on the road because of the berm.

Granger said, "Frankly, I don't know how you predict where snow's going to drop." He added that there were a number of factors affecting a snowstorm. One of them was that buildings would be going up behind the berm as an additional buffer.

He said the three driveway openings could have an effect, and so could the angle of the wind. He pointed out that the berms have a three-to-one slope, a more gentle slope than road builders typically use.

The height of the berms will be altered anyway, he said, because they were so close to where construction would be taking place. Most of the bank is off the road right-of-way.

Problem two was drainage. Two dips in the road could be raised, but that could speed up the run-off. It depends on the ditches along the road, Granger said, and on the functioning of water-retention ponds on the Harborage grounds.

Commissioner Steve Moody asked that the city and The Harborage agree that these matters could be adjusted by

Who rules the rulers...The Planners?

While we applaud the involvement of the public in our city's meeting, we sometimes wonder if the Commissioners really do listen to what the public wants to say about the community that they live in and work in.

At Monday night's Planning Commission meeting, a large group of veterans came to support their request for a memorial that they are proposing be constructed in the Veterans Memorial Park.

The veterans had already received approval from the Parks and Recreation Board on the proposed project. They have spent the last many months working with the Board to work out the details of the memorial, where in the park it should be placed and how it should look.

But the Planning Commission has second thoughts on what they would like to see in the park. And where they would like to see things placed. The planners have taken it upon themselves to be the ruling fathers, eliminating all the good work that the parks people have put into the project.

The parks people have talked with the public, have had many discussions about the park and what needs to be done with it to make it better in the eye of the public.

After last Monday's meeting, several members of the new ruling authority have decided, without asking any of the people who live here in town—who pay their taxes here in town, and who should carry more weight as to the park's use—how the park should be designed and used.

The planners say they are thinking of the long term. The public of the short term.

We don't see it that way. In fact, we see holes in almost everything that the planners see in the park.

If the taxpaying public wants to make an improvement in the park design because they think it is what they want, then they should, even if it may in the future, be a mistake.

There is no thing that is built by man that is permanent. What man builds, he can destroy, he can take care of, he can tear down and change.

If twenty years in the future some public group decides that the proposed memorial for those who served in war should be moved, then so be it. It could be moved at that time.

But we are talking about today. And today after many, many, meetings with those who are charged with the development of the parks and the recreational facilities in town, the Parks and Recreation Board have decided that they want to listen to the people who care, who live here in town, and who want a memorial placed in a very small area of the park.

They have also undertaken other requests for the proposed changes in the Veterans Memorial Park for other special interest groups like the senior citizens. They have special concerns also.

The Board has also heard from many other parties who have helped in the design of the many recreational facilities here in town. But, no one, even those on the planning commission who were asked to help, should refrain from what the public wants to do with the public lands.

We are happy that the City Commission has the final say in whatever is decided, perhaps they can follow another committee's recommendations.

After shoveling the grandeur of winter, we now are mowing the glory of summer.

How can you tell which houses are the oldest in Boyne City? By checking the kind of nails that were used to build them. If the nails are square, the house is a real oldie. (Some people don't believe that nails used to be square, but that's all right. Some people don't believe a lot of things that were then, but aren't now; for instance, the fact that the Boyne River used to execute a corkscrew dance before flowing into Lake Charlevoix.)

Real cold winter weather would often force square nails out of the wood. I can remember my father saying that it was "so cold this morning, I had to dodge nails on my way to work." He used to lie like that and I'm happy that I never took after that side of him.

The purpose of this item is to assure the uninformed that nails were square and that cold weather did pull them a little way out of the wood. (Every time I write an item I always try to sneak in an important purpose like that.)

My friend was telling me about the personal loan he'd gotten at the bank. I asked why they called it personal and he said that whenever he misses a payment, they get personal.

Some say that our current depression or recession isn't as bad as the big one of the 30's. Well, it is. It's worse. Today when we're poor we have more things to go without.

A reader post cards to say that sophisticated people pass over this column because of its over abundance of belly laughs. I looked up the word sophisticated and found it to mean an intelligent person who has gotten the hang of things and can afford to wear a necktie. Well, do, re, mi. Twenty-seven neckties hang a dangling in my closet. One day I shall put one on and write a column for the highly intelligent who don't know what they're dumb at. (There's something screwy with this, but I haven't the time to rewrite it.)

Our yard, overwhelmed with the on-rush of summer, made a great blunder by pushing up dandelions instead of grass.

It's quite obvious that Ronald Reagan and his staff, who are trying to find ways to put this country back together again, have never sat around a morning coffee table with a group of small town businessmen.

I let a close friend read this column before it was published, feeling quite sure he would say that it was a mental achievement of a magnitude found only in a genius. When he was through reading he asked what I wanted to be when I grew up.

Likely it's at the bottom of anyone's list of edible foods. It certainly was at the bottom of mine. Those lumps! That texture! I early resolved that as soon as I grew up I would never, ever eat oatmeal again.

Times change things, don't they. Here I am eating oatmeal for breakfast.

First it was for thrift. In that way times didn't change. The Depression then; the Recession now. Then we ate oatmeal for breakfast, tomato soup for lunch, baked beans for dinner. And no desserts.

But while I fiercely dislike tomato soup and baked beans, I've come to—well, be comforted by oatmeal. Only it must be oatmeal WITH something: raisins or dates; sunflower seeds or nuts; coconut or banana; molasses, maybe; maybe all of them at once, and get out the good silverware, we're having oatmeal-special this morning!

But the lumps must be because of the "floaters." Never oatmeal lumps.

And oatmeal should be so gently and efficiently cooked that not a bit of it sticks to the pan. It should just slip plop into your bowl.

That's the second thing about oatmeal. So simple. How I have wished dinner were so un-thought-taking. Just to stir and plop.

The encyclopedia says one oatmeal serving contains 16 parts protein. It doesn't say who started us off in oatmeal, but I always supposed it was the Scots. Possibly that was the association with thrift.

Or possibly because around the corner from where we lived was the family of the president of the nation's biggest oatmeal company. And they were Scots.

As a child I never thought much about it. I only knew that their house was much larger than ours, but then their children were considerably plumper than we were.

I never asked them if they ate oatmeal for breakfast. Plump Angus, the youngest of them took up that much of the sidewalk when he roller-skated, we never got to chat.

When I was little I was very strict with how milk was poured on my oatmeal. It could never be stirred in. The oatmeal had to rise like a washed-out-looking island above the tides of milk.

Then I would dig little canals across my island or try to make milky initials in the oatmeal. It would postpone having to think of it as oatmeal.

But the past is flown. Now I stir in the milk. That is, if there is any. Often enough, having run out, I have had to pour in orange juice or cider.

And it's not bad. And the whole thing lasts about four hours.

I can think of only one other food that is so thrifty, accommodating, nourishing, and good with dates, nuts, orange juice, and so on. It's squash. And I hated that too when I was little.

Jottings

BY JIM SILBAR

What kind of day was it? It was the kind of day that you wished you were at the beach. A day where you could be as lazy as you wanted, a day that you take rest of the year and yes...the day that you caught spring fever.

I had such a day several times last week as I looked out the window at the bicyclists passing by, the convertibles with the tops down, and the classic cars that never ever get driven when there is a hint of rain in the forecast.

In fact, due to the great weather of last week, I had several days where I caught the fever.

And when I catch it, I just want to lie around, stare into space and contemplate my existence.

But others in my family have different ideas.

So after work one day last week, I was out shoveling rocks off the beach, checking out where the garden is going to go, picking up brush that had fallen down over the winter, and in general, kept hopping by the "boss."

This is the time of the year that a lot of work gets done. The stores are busy making their changes for the summer season, the yards are raked, mowed and in general spruced up so that they will look nice, and a lot of the construction men start working in earnest as they have lots to do and little time to do it in.

I sometimes get envious of those who have outside jobs, especially when the weather is great. Of course, I don't even bother to think about them when the weather is bad and they have to be out in it.

In this business we do some planning for the summer too.

Right now we are busy trying to let people know about our Fun and Sun publication that we will be starting to deliver the middle of June.

Of course we are trying to work hard to develop it and to make it better, but, we try to do that every issue.

The times for the newspaper business have not been what you could call boom. We are a business just like others in the community and

The Harborage, if in two years the problems warranted it.

Following agreement on this, Granger went to the third problem, the new intersection created by having Front Street moved up from the lake shore.

The proposed intersection involves Sidney Street as well as Division. While stop signs would be in place, the question of right of way could be hard to resolve. Also, right turn off Division could be a hairpin turn.

Granger said right-angle turns are much preferred. He suggested curving Division into a right angle junction with Front for either one or both lanes.

Because of the property redrawing involved in the alternatives to the present proposed layout, the commissioners decided to keep the intersection as is, noting that no accidents have taken place at a similar intersection with Marshall Street.

The realigned section of Front Street will be turned over to the city on completion. All the construction costs have been borne by The Harborage.

we rely on other businesses who may want to use our publication to advertise their wares and services.

And when their business falls off, ours does too. But we keep trying, and when we hear of success stories about a ad, we're happy. We are also happy to hear about success stories of the kids, so that we can put their names in the paper also.

With all the changes that have been made around town, and those that are going to come, we know that this town will be a great place to live in, to shop in, and to have fun in.

But, like others we talk to, we would like to have some of those great things happening right now.

After all, isn't the American way wanting things to happen now? Don't we want the employment, business climate, housing and all the other indicators of a good economy to be instantly changed for the better?

I sure would. And it will happen.

East Jordan Council Minutes

PROCEEDINGS OF EAST JORDAN CITY COUNCIL
East Jordan City Council met in Special Session, Wednesday, May 11, 1983, at 7 p.m., Mayor Merwin presiding and all members present. The purpose of the meeting was to receive and act on recommendations from the Elm Pointe and Finance Committees. A new fee schedule was adopted for Elm Pointe users, an answer was adopted from the Friends of Elm Pointe as follows: To the Friends of Elm Pointe, in answer to your proposal given to council May 3, 1983. Because we are still researching the possible sale of Elm Pointe, we feel it is unwise to enter into any contractual agreement at this time. Furthermore, we wish to clarify, Elm Pointe is being considered for sale to enable the city to implement capital projects for the city's growth. It is not being considered for sale solely for the burden of support and operation. Funds for the Tourist Park docks are being borrowed from the Computer Fund and United Design Associates, Inc. will be doing a study for the marina. Meeting adjourned about 9:45 p.m. A copy of the official minutes of the above meeting are posted at the City Hall for perusal during normal working hours.

Group hears about "sugaring"

Robert "Bob" Omland, East Jordan, grandson of Morel hunting still good Warm sunny weather last Thursday and most of Friday with 80 degree temperatures was followed on Saturday with rain all day. Temperatures last week ranged from 26-80 degrees. Precipitation for the week totaled 1.06 inches.

Fishing pressure and success on trout streams was generally light over the weekend because of rain all day Saturday and cold temperatures on Sunday.

Many outstate people as well as local people were in the woods on Sunday picking dark morel mushrooms and having fair success. Many of these mushrooms are small as cold 25 degree night temperatures continue. White morels are just beginning to appear and if any warm nights should arrive picking should be good by this coming weekend. Most mushrooms are located near old stumps and in the hardwood upland area.

Pressure and success on the inland lakes for the opening of northern pike and walleye season was generally light with only a few good fish taken. Drifting and trolling with minnows and crawlers produced the best results on walleye.

Many wild flowers are presently blooming as the first green vegetation begins to show on the forest floor.

Baby deer (1983 model) are presently being born at this time and often people see these babies and feel they are lost, but this is not the case and they should not be picked up. Anyone who is found with a fawn in possession can be arrested.

The time is near for the camping season in the north country and State Parks and Forestry Campgrounds are open for you to enjoy. If camping on state land that is not considered a park you have to post a camp permit card that is available from DNR offices and many license dealers free of charge.

An ex-Navy man, he now operates a maple syrup production and trout pond business not far from the old paternal homestead. He annually taps some 1800 trees with the assistance of his wife and two small children. Omland shared all details of modern syrup processing with members and visitors at East Jordan's Art and Historical meeting, Thursday, May 12 at the Elm Pointe Museum.

"We'll have to have him return to share his other talents," said program chairwoman Ora Stevenson. "Bob is also a vocalist, pianist, organist, a skilled tuner and restorer of pianos and a horticulturist."

Phyllis Malpass served as volunteer hostess for the group's first meeting of the summer season, providing light refreshments.

"It's a neighborly gesture continuing the custom of early settlers in the Jordan Valley, following meeting-study sessions," explained museum hostess chairwoman Ann Wagbo. She is also a resident of the early Norwegian settlement near East Jordan.
