

New sign/sculpture at park

In case you haven't noticed, there is a new sign on the edge of Boyne City for the new Air/Industrial Park. The sign was installed a couple of weeks ago and looks like it is made of solid wood. There are those who think the sign is more a piece of sculpture than a sign, but we're not going to argue. Either way, it looks good and shows the expressive attitude of the community.

BF discusses middle school concept

Students in the sixth through eighth grades in Boyne Falls may see something different when they go to school this coming fall if a plan presented to the school board gets the approval it needs before seeing it enacted.

The plan would be to start a middle school concept among those grades, with classes to rotate between teachers, just like the high school does. Presently, students are being taught by one teacher for most of the day with the teacher guiding the students through different materials.

Under the new plan, according to School Principal Mike Wallace, would be to have the teachers involved teach the subjects they are best at and certified for. Wallace admitted he had a few problems to work out concerning the way the classes would rotate between instructors, but hoped to have all the details finished by the July board meeting.

Another program the school wants to start in the elementary level would be to develop a reading program for those lower level students. A lower level student is one who is not reading up to the level designed for the class, like a fourth grader reading at a third grade level. The school intends to start the program next year and will be adding a new series of books to cover the program.

Wallace said the new reading program would not cost the school district any more than it is presently spending as the new textbooks would be paid for by not replacing a few of the present system. Wallace figures about six to eight books are involved.

The school will also be starting a more creative way to teach penmanship skills. They will be adding creative writing skills to those classes just learning how to write in cursive. Instead of just copying an "a" several times, the students would be asked to make up a story and write it out to help with their penmanship.

In the high school, changes being planned include having the teachers provide some of the input as to who can go to North Central Michigan College to take classes instead of just the principal deciding all of the criteria.

An adjusted honors' policy is also being thought about that would help students who take "hard" courses. A 1.25 factor would be added to the grade they get in the course, which would be used to figure out such things as the honor roll, valedictorian, salutatorian and other honors. The grade given in the class would have no other effect as the grades would still be sent out to colleges on transcripts.

Wallace said the new policy may help create more students for some of the classes as the students did not want to take a hard class in fear they would be dropped from the honors' programs if they did poorly. With the change, a grade of "C" would become a "B minus" when the factor is applied.

Another thing being considered by the board would be to give those students who had completed all the requirements for the graduation by the end of their first senior semester, an "early out" of classes during the second semester. The students would still have to be in school for three hours a day, but could be released early to work or to go to college.

All of the changes being suggested came from an in-service training session of the teachers as they made suggestions as to how the school

Beaches bursting with bodies

Even with all of the construction machinery and the workers trying to complete the new beach project, plenty of people are taking advantage of the summer heat and sun to bring the children down to the park. At the other end of town, the North Boyne Beach is also getting attention, thanks to the load of sand the city brought in for the people who want to play in the sand.

Dumpster resolved, Trumco site OK'd

The problem of the dumpster has apparently been resolved after action taken at the Boyne City Planning Board meeting held Monday night.

The dumpster, which has been a thorn in the planning board's side since they approved a site plan for the White Mansion Apartments months ago, will be moved to a new location, according to an agreement worked out between the board and the owner of the property, Cal Gotts.

Gotts told the planners he would move the dumpster to about the middle of the site, almost 100 feet from where it was placed previously. Gotts told the planners the new site will be screened on three sides as per the approved site plan. He said he will be adding a gate at some time in the future.

The planners tried to get Gotts to commit to a time before it would be done, but Gotts told them if he had to specify a time when the gate would be installed, he would move the dumpster to the location approved by the planners on the original site plan.

That site is a few feet from where it is presently placed.

With that out of the way, the planners then read a letter from Steve Miller, who has been running a business out of his home. Planners had a concern he was going to start an auto repair business, but the letter read indicated he was only going to have his archery sales business at his location.

Planners then asked the city to send a letter to Miller asking him to connect the garage with his home so he would be in conformance with the new ordinance. He would then be asked to re-apply for a permit to operate a home business.

In other action, the planners said they are still looking for nominations to the Marvin Loding Awards. They have three so far and are hoping to have a few more, especially in the residential area. They set a deadline of July 20 for the final screening of nominations. After screening, they will ask the city commission to approve the awards.

The planners then approved a site plan for the new Trumco Inc. building to be constructed in the Air/Industrial Park. The 60 foot by 80 foot building will have a hanger as part of the building and will have a paved access strip into the airport proper.

The projected cost of the building will be about $135,000, according to Larry Trumble, the owner of the business. He also said construction will be starting in a couple of weeks.

Planners also approved the holding of a special meeting Monday, July 8, at 5:00 to review a site plan for a Shell Mini-Mart which is set for M-75 South. Also on the agenda will be a review of the site plan for the new Boyne City Nursery School.

Boyne City retains county to do tax assessing

Boyne City will be using the same "company", the Charlevoix County Department of Equalization, for doing the assessments on property within the city after the yearly contract was renewed at the noon meeting of the city commissioners.

The contract runs from September to September and will be at the same costs as last year: $5.25 per parcel for maintenance on the roof; $9.75 for reappraisals and updates; and $15.00 per parcel for appraising for new construction. Other rates for appraising industrial and commercial properties will be computed on a time plus expense basis.

The city elected to renew the contract after discovering they could not get the same price elsewhere for the same services. Included in the contract is about $4,000 of expenses that would have to be paid to the county no matter who did the appraisals and updates.

According to Randy Fryberg, city manager, the county has all of the records up to date and is one of a few cities in northern Michigan that will be able to comply with all of the new state requirements.

The estimated cost of the service was around $15,000 for the year.

Commissioners then approved a change in the street lighting

Jottings

BY JIMSILBAR

I think I am going to be mad this week.

I mean, here it is, not even summer yet, people are just starting to put their toes into the water for that first swim, boat owners are still getting their boats ready for the water or have just put them in and the winter clothing catalogs are out.

I used to gripe when swimwear went on sale in July, but now I think the retailers of mail order kingdom are just rushing the season a little bit.

What do they think? That it will be cold enough to buy some of the things they are offering this fall this pre-summer?

And the colors they are asking people to buy. I don't know many that would buy a purple outfit, but there it is, just ready for you to spend your bucks on.

Back a few years ago, I can remember when someone wore those kind of colors only if they were a clown with the circus. Or if they owned a great company and spent most of their time on the golf or tennis courts...down in Florida or somewhere where, nobody knew them.

We used to call those guys clothes-horses. They had a different suit of clothes for any and all occasions, and even some in between. The clothes were also made of some fabric like rayon or silk and were imported from Italy or France.

Imported from the great fashion centers of the world, the designers seemed to stress being different from the norm.

Today, there are clothing experts who tell you to dress on the corporate level.

Like a politician always wearing a blue suit. Bankers always in grey, used car salesmen in something loud and garish, it is the expected norm today.

I can hardly wait for some writer to come in the door.

I already know what he will be wearing.

It will be something wash and wear, usually rumpled, a grey cardigan sweater, no socks, and smoking a pipe because someone once told him it was neat.

If he wears glasses, they will be something with dark frames, and possibly will have dark lenses to go along with the invisible nature some writers want to portray.

There will be about two burn holes in the sweater, the shoes will be unpolished, and the hair will be scattered all over the head.

Boy, that's starting to sound like something I should do.

But, getting back to summer, and catalogs, and boating, swimming, golf and tennis, I think people should know they are not allowed to open those catalogs until the first week of August. And only then if they have children who need back-to-school clothing.

I know it is too early for me to want to really look at something I may want to wear when the wind is blowing, the snow is about three feet deep and it had just snowed about a foot more and I will have to clean out the driveway before I can get to work.

How does that sound when the temperature is hovering around the 90° mark?

Does that cool off that layer of sweat this week?

Or would it be better if you could own a restaurant or a place with a walk-in cooler where you could hide from the heat?

Remembrances

Village of Walloon Lake 1901-1903.

Back about the time of Hemingway visiting the Walloon Lake area for the summer, it was a boom town according to this picture from the turn of the century. Notice the long docks that allowed the boats with deep drafts to get near the shore at the village. Also notice the road was dirt that eventually became M-75. The New Walloon Hotel was in its prime, taking guests for the summer months while the boats took passengers all over the lake to the many cottages.

Marshall Sayles

The title of today's lesson is: Unless the pickles are dill.

"I can't open this jar of pickles," my wife said.

I went over to twist the metal top off the glass. No go. So I did what we always do when we can't open a jar. Got a knife and beat the top with the handle. It loosens it so you can twist it off. But no. It was frozen to the glass.

"Give me the hammer, the screw driver and the pliers out of the bottom drawer," I said.

"You'll crack the glass," she said. "I don't want pickle water all over my kitchen floor."

I beat the metal top with the hammer. That would flatten it out so it could be twisted off. But I forgot something. You must first pound your thumb as you hold the glass down. It's impossible to get the top off a jar of pickles until you have hollered and stomped the floor. Running water on your thumb seems to help. If there's a way to blame your wife, do it.

I battered the metal lid until it looked like Ronald Reagan returning from a European conference. Then, using the hand with the good thumb, I twisted the top off.

"That's it," I said, putting a sliced pickle into my mouth and then gagging it into the sink.

"You know I don't like sweet pickles," I said. "You always buy dills for me."

"They are not for you," she said. "We're having company and I'm going to use these for dinner. You can eat sweet pickles for once. They won't kill you." (If I had known that, I would have hammered my thumb much harder so I couldn't get the top off.)

Being a blue-blooded individual like Ollie North who skips congress and protects the president, I decided to put on a pair of dark glasses and straighten this pickle thing out once and for all.

I typed out a new house law, pasting it to the refrigerator door: "The Surgeon General has determined that sweet pickles are dangerous to your health.

Therefore and to wit, from this day forward it will be against house rules to open, give away or allowed to be consumed on these premises any pickles not dill all the way through."

Before company came my wife had ripped the sign off the refrigerator and when company had come I was eating my dinner in the basement.

Moral to husbands: Think two or three times before rushing in to the kitchen to help your wife. Make feeble and clumsy attempts to open a jar unless the pickles are dill. Nail the basement door shut.

There are some people who will think that this story is not true. It makes me mad when I can't do something about people who think.

A Tribute to Hugh D. Juday
The Last Reward

This is my crown? How can it be! No jeweled crown was meant for me.

I lived my life among earth's poor And earned no key to heaven's door;

No big success, no world acclaim Can be attached to this man's name. Please check again my page to see What small reward might be for me. The Master smiled and said, Well done.

I earned the key for you, my son. Your love for those who could not see

Reveals in truth your love for me. My record shows what's in one's heart

That sets a good man's deeds apart. No one can earn eternal rest

But every man can do his best. Lay down your cross; put on your crown

Life's night is o'er; the day begun.

EJHS grad appears in Cosmopolitan magazine

An article written by Christine Beyer, a graduate of East Jordan High School, is featured in the June 1987 issue of Cosmopolitan magazine. The article describes a unique weight-loss method she discovered, and showcases some of her original poetry.

While at E.J.H.S., Christine was a member of the cheerleading squad for five years, raced for the high school ski team, and was president of her senior class. Her father, James Beyer, is a former varsity football coach for the Red Devils, and earned honors as a regional "Coach of the Year."

Following graduation in 1980, Christine attended Central Michigan University. It was there that she was first published, in the school's literary magazine. Since then she has been an award winner in several national poetry competitions. Her work has appeared in numerous publications, among them PUB, The San Fernando Poetry Journal, and Writer's Journal.

Currently, Christine is on the editorial staff of Corporate Report Minnesota, a monthly magazine based in Minneapolis that reports on the business activities of companies headquartered in the Ninth Federal Reserve District. She resides in Shoreview, Minnesota, with her twin sister, Carol.

Boyer City eighth graders celebrated "Sun" Day

As a part of a problem-solving series in science, eighth graders at Boyne City Middle School planned and then enjoyed a Solar Energy Day. The objective was to make others aware of the sun as an alternative energy source.

Thursday, June 4, 1987 was chosen as "Sun" Day and several activities made the day a special one for the entire student body. Posters went up prior to "Sun" Day to remind everyone to dress in the sun's colors of yellow, orange and red. Sunglasses and colorful Zinka (zinc oxide) added to the sunny atmosphere. "WSUN" radio station did several "spots" on the P.A. system, with cuts from various "sun songs" and factual information on solar energy.

At noon, 27 eighth graders participated in a solar cookout, cooking hot dogs on their homemade solar cookers, roasting marshmallows using a solar furnace, and drinking solar tea. Other noon time activities included woodburning with magnifying glasses and observing a solar collector at work.

The school day ended with an all-school assembly out on the lawn in full sun. Each grade sat as a class. Science students shared a few more solar facts; awarded sand pails and sunglasses to the best solar dressers (students and teachers); and taught everyone a cheer they had created to honor the sun. Each class then cheered the sun as a group. The fifth graders cheered with the most enthusiasm; seventh graders cheered the loudest; and eighth graders cheered with the most clarity. With the weather's cooperation, Thursday really was "Sun" Day and a fun day too!

Dusting Doesn't Make Me Jog

When it comes to achieving a healthy lifestyle, I've not felt like a smashing success, at least in the diet and exercise departments, which is pretty much all there is when you come right down to it—that and mental outlook. My outlook has been fairly good except when I thought about my deficiencies in the diet and exercise line, though that was beginning to be oftener than I wished. But all that has changed as of last Friday. That's when I read a small article in the Health section of "Insight" magazine.

The article dealt with the value of laughter. "Internal jogging" is what Dr. William Fry, an authority on the psychology of laughter, calls it. He and several other scientists have been doing a lot of research on the subject. They have found that laughter—not your polite laugh nor your nervous little titter but the good hearty kind—pushes production of stuff that acts as neurotransmitters, a major one of which is Epinephrine. And this impressive "E" word does great work in raising both the heart and metabolic rate, which is distinctly good for us.

Also laughing makes us breathe more deeply. So our lungs expand and exercise and smile whenever we laugh.

Where I come into this picture is that, with all due modesty, I have to say that I'm a world-class laugher. As far as I can tell, I was born that way; it came with my package. I laugh easily and often and hard, the tears-rolling-down-the-cheeks kind of laughter. I gravitate toward people who love to laugh and buy books that make me laugh. And I enjoy every minute of it.

The new-found knowledge about the healthy side of laughter has taken away the sting of my "almost but not quite's" in the other areas of my pursuit of a healthy lifestyle. The pain is gone but not the memory.

For example, there's salads. Everyone knows they're healthy, just like carrots, although I found out last week that carrots aren't so great unless you make them into juice, and I don't have one of those frightfully expensive juicers so that's that. Anyway, we eat tons of salad at our house and go through many heads of lettuce, which is the problem. Head lettuce has little food value. It seems that leaf lettuce is the ticket or, better still, spinach, beet or dandelion greens. We do eat some leaf lettuce but we like the head lettuce better because it has more crunch. As for the other greens, life's too short for misery at mealtime.

Ware-withal

Exercises—same deal. My husband and I walk almost every night. And the distance we cover, 2 and 3/4 miles, measures up to acceptable standards. But we don't go fast enough for the medical experts, who call for 4 miles per hour. Our fastest trip has taken just under 50 minutes. Healthy or not, speed just doesn't excite us.

Since I found out about this "Internal jogging" stuff, and knowing that I do it so easily, I just grab an Erma Bombeck book from the shelf and read a while when I'm feeling a bit unfit. And I'm back in shape in no time.

Thinking about this healthy lifestyle matter, it has occurred to me that maybe we do things that are individually right for us—and don't do things that aren't. That would explain why I dust so seldom. It could be that it's simply not good for me, which is such a splendid idea that I'm surprised I didn't think of it before. But now that I have, I feel very, very healthy.

Consumers Big Rock plant was world class level in 1986

Consumers Power Company's Big Rock Point nuclear plant was a world-class performer during 1986—an accomplishment that was cited recently by General Electric Company (GE), the plant's designer. Statistics released show that Big Rock Point was available to generate power 95.5 percent of the time during 1986—a higher percentage than achieved by any other GE-designed commercial nuclear reactor worldwide. The plant's 81.3 percent capacity factor, a comparison of actual power production versus the theoretical maximum output, ranked the plant among the top four GE-designed nuclear plants in the US in 1986. The plant's top ranking was recognized at the site with a plaque presented by GE to Thomas W. Elward, plant manager. "This is another feather in our cap," said Elward. "Big Rock Point has a long history of outstanding performance."

In 1977, Big Rock Point set a world record for continuous operation by a boiling water reactor. Among its accomplishments during 1986, the plant succeeded in generating more power than during any other calendar year in its 24-year history. Big Rock Point began operation in 1962. It is capable of generating 69 megawatts of electricity, an amount sufficient to serve a community of 50,000 people.

BY ELOUISE ROSSLER

"I must travel in France and learn about my own people as I have in the United States," commented Claire Boyer as she ends a school year in East Jordan, after coming in September from her home in Longwy, France, as a Rotary Exchange Student. "There will be some cultural shock when I go back," but Claire feels she has changed a lot, grown up a lot and will be able to make the adjustments needed to continue her life in France.

Having celebrated her eighteenth birthday in the U.S., she has completed the twelfth grade at East Jordan High School. She has especially enjoyed classes relating to government and economics as her future includes attending a business school. She will have to take the twelfth grade again next year in France in order to pass the stringent twelfth grade exams before being admitted to a university. The French educational system is almost purely academic and students have less free time than American students. "If you could combine the more social attitude and the more academic aspects of the two systems, you would have many benefits," commented Claire.

Claire is the middle child, having a sister 22 and one 14. She did not have difficulty leaving home as she felt quite independent of her parents already. She will live at home next year to complete her high school; however, had she not been an exchange student she would have been going to the university and leaving home this fall. She feels that French students become independent of their parents younger; however, this may be partially because the educational system forces them to choose what they plan to do younger and forces them into those areas.

Claire's greatest (and a most pleasant) surprise were the small towns and the friendly, accepting people in them. Life in France is primarily of an urban style, so the distance to metropolitan areas from East Jordan surprised Claire.

A charming young lady, small in size, with sparkling brown eyes, and a shy smile that constantly tickles the corners of her mouth, Claire is a talented violinist who has played with the Northern Michigan Youth Orchestra as well as having entertained many other groups with her musical ability. Claire is intensely interested in the philosophy of government and how individuals fit into the overall and total picture. Ready at the drop of a hat to discuss anything of a philosophical nature, she has often been unaware of time as she and a new friend explored the problems of the two countries, applying their own brands of solutions. Claire has taken English and Spanish, but found that learning to really "converse" in English took so much time when she first arrived. She made great improvements in the first two days she was here because she wanted so badly to communicate with everyone she met.

In ten years, Claire hopes to be the manager of a company or a factory, having gained an executive position. She also dreams of traveling and spending a year at a time in many different countries as she has here, to learn the language and the culture. She feels she has gained maturity and knowledge and has learned to think freer as Americans do. "I think in English now; I will have to start to think in French again soon." However, she feels it is important to remain herself and has not attempted to become an "American." She knows what she has gained and will take many memories home, but is fearful that there is no way for others to realize how much she has learned. Since France, and all of Europe, tend to be a few years behind what is happening in America, she has already seen some of the next steps in trends that were beginning in France when she left. Women still do not have the status American women do, she commented, but it is changing.

Claire has enjoyed her nine months in East Jordan and is looking forward to a trip to the west planned by Rotary for a group of exchange students. She will return for a few weeks to East Jordan before leaving for France.

"If you're naturally curious, you have a great time (as an exchange student). You have to accept the new culture and adapt without always comparing it to your home country. It is not "foreign", it is just different. Adapt without losing your own personality is the key." With that attitude, Claire will certainly be able to pursue whatever she chooses in life. Hopefully, she has gained enough from us to make her time and efforts worthwhile; those who have known her have certainly learned!

Ant? Termite? Take a close look

In springtime—April or May, in Michigan—large numbers of ants develop wings and leave their nests in swarms to mate and start new colonies. Homeowners encountering these insects often mistake them for termites and assume their homes are about to be eaten down around their ears.

Gary Dunn, Extension entomologist at Michigan State University, advises staying calm and examining one of the insects closely—with a hand lens, if possible.

Look first at the insect's body. An ant has a constricted or pinched-in waistline—a termite is thick-bodied its entire length. The wings are different, too. An ant has front wings that are considerably larger than its hind wings. In termites, the wings are about the same size.

"Ants are a lot more common than termites in northern states such as Michigan," Dunn points out. "So chances are that a swarm of small winged insects is winged ants. It's a good idea to check them closely, however, just in case."

"If it turns out that you are seeing termites instead of ants, don't panic," he advises. "They aren't going to destroy your home overnight." For help in identifying or controlling swarming insects or other pests, you can contact your local Cooperative Extension service.

Hole in one

While on vacation in the Kansas City, Kansas area, May 23, Clifford Bradshaw of East Jordan shot a hole-in-one at the Tomahawk Golf Course. It was a 155 yard shot over a cliff on the ninth hole of the course. It was his first one in the six or seven years of golfing.

could run better and give a better education to the students.

While all of the suggestions and changes have not been approved, the board was receptive to many of them.

In other action, the board approved the starting of cross country as a varsity sport. The league had voted to start the sport earlier this month. It is expected to cost about $1,100 which is included in the new annual budget as part of the sports' outlays.

Schedule B positions were filled by the board. Those include class advisors, student council advisors, band leaders, basketball and baseball coaches.

The board also approved being

Boyne Falls

a member school of the Michigan High School Athletic Association.

The board then had a discussion on the costs of adding a new portable classroom to the school. The cost was estimated to be about $5,000 and the room would be used to house a preschool program as well as other classes. A final decision will be coming at the July meeting.

They also approved the borrowing of $404,000 in tax anticipation loan to help cover the costs until the tax monies come in. They also set a date for a Budget in Taxation Hearing, Budget Hearing and a special meeting for June 29th at 7 p.m.

contract the city has with Consumers Power. The change was necessary because of Consumer Power rules and will cost the city $1.00 more per year. The change came after a street light was damaged and the bulb was replaced by one of a larger size as the previous bulb was not being made any more.

Commissioner Steve Moody told the rest of the commissioners they should pay the additional dollar in cash, expressing some discontent with the amount of time spent on figuring out the new costs by both the city and the company.

Because of a near fatal accident Monday, and other accidents within the past week, the city will be asking the State Highway Department to consider making a change to a four-way stop at the corner of State and East Streets.

According to Police Chief John Talboys, the only way the state is willing to make a change is when accidents occur on their roads.

The city will be sending a letter to the state asking for a change. Moody suggested that it be worded strongly so the state will be forced into action.

The intersection has had many near misses and accidents over the years and has been a problem for the city. Because it is a designated state highway, control for signage and other traffic matters rests with the highway department.
