

You could almost say that an old-fashioned steam roller was being used last week to pack the newly laid asphalt. But in reality, the steam was coming off of the hot asphalt and the steel rollers. Paving is now complete, or has been postponed, until spring by the asphalt contractor and the city.

State to delay M-75 rebuilding

Rebuilding of Boyne Avenue, which was supposed to be done next summer and fall by the Department of Transportation may be delayed until 1990, according to a letter the Boyne City Commissioners reviewed at their noon Tuesday meeting.

The work, according to the letter received by the city, cited delays in acquiring right-of-way at intersections and other areas of the planned work.

The road was to be rebuilt starting from beyond the city limits to the post office as part of the 1989 work slated by MDOT. It appears now that the bids for the job won't be let until 1990.

Also in the letter was a concern about the replacing of a watermain which runs from Division Street to Main Street. The city was thinking about replacing the present six inch main with an eight inch main. The city would have to pick up the cost difference if it is done.

The letter said the delay might work to the city's benefit, as they would have another year to gather up the funds to install the watermain. The total cost is estimated to be in the area of $80,000.

The city and the commissioners suggested a letter writing campaign be started to ensure the project is on schedule for the 1989 year, instead of being delayed. Those interested in writing in support of the project are asked to write a letter to MDOT, Post Office Box 30050, Lansing, Michigan 48509.

The city also agreed to let the present roadwork stop for the winter.

Due to the weather problems, only the first course of pavement was put down on Michigan Avenue. The second course of paving will include the widening of the street, the addition of paved shoulders, and the bike path will now be completed in the spring.

City Manager Randy Frykberg told the commissioners that the shoulders would be too soft for completion of the paving and other finishing work that will have to be done. He said one of the contractors' machines was buried in mud after it tried to smooth over an area.

The weather has wrecked havoc on the completion of the construction projects around town. Asphalt paving was done on all critical streets in between rain storms.

At the monthly evening meeting, it was expected the commissioners would approve the transferring of Commercial Facilities Exemption Certificates of the Par-T-Pac from Michael Gabos to Galen Rutka, The Wolverine/Dilworth Inn from William Beckenhauer III to Peter Robinson.

The commissioners were also expected to approve the naming of Ruth Rivard and Walter Coyle to become members of the annual board of review.

News Briefs

The third annual memorial services of the Charlevoix County Hospice will be held this Sunday, November 13, at 4:00 p.m. at the United Methodist Church in Boyne City. The memorial service is for the families, friends, and volunteers of patients who have died during the past year. Following the service, the church will be having a potluck dinner for all of the volunteers.

The City of Charlevoix was awarded a $17,500 Coastal Management Grant from the State of Michigan announced Ralph Ostling and Mitch Irwin. The money will be used to help design and construct an underpass along the south side of the Pine River Channel. The project is supposed to commence this month and be completed by next September.

East Jordan PTO has started the first week of their annual Morley Candy sale. The sale started Nov. 4 and will conclude November 14. Candy will then be delivered on November 21.

Also in East Jordan, a special thanks should go out to the members of Mrs. Holley's and Ms. MacJennett's seventh grade "Quest" classes for the job they did in cleaning up the trash and debris in the downtown, around the high school and along the creek. They did the work several weeks ago, and further recognition is warranted.

Pizza Hut in Charlevoix is again holding a fundraising event for the Charlevoix County Hospice Group. During November, the restaurant is donating $1.00 to the Hospice for every medium or large pizza sold on Mondays.

Board members may appeal recall

Those Boyne City School Board members up for recall, Richard May, David Guzniczak, Judy Follette, Bea Reinhardt and Thelma Behling, found out Monday they have an option to appeal the recall although they are undecided as to what they should do.

The board members learned of the appeal after the county elections board gave their approval to the wording on each of the petitions asking for the recall of the four members of the board.

The rules of recall give the board members ten days from last Monday to decide whether or not they should appeal the wording on the petitions. If they do appeal, then the writers of the petitions will have to reword them and resubmit them to the elections board.

Mrs. Behling said she hasn't heard what the group of board members may do as they haven't had a meeting to discuss the options. She said she was leaning towards filing an appeal as that would put the election behind them.

Crowds were pretty heavy and continuous during the voting in Boyne City during last Tuesday's election.

Republicans still dominate national, state, county races

While the Bush-Quayle team took the nation, and Charlevoix County, 5802 to the Dukakis-Bentsen team, 3875, the winners of the hotly contested local races seemed to be of more interest to election workers as the contests were counted.

Winners included Don Riegler, Bob Davis, Ralph Ostling for federal and state offices, while county offices went to Kraag Liberman, George Lasater, Jane Brannon, Joan Balch, Charlene Gaskin, Clayton Healey, Mary Feindt, Ralph Harmon, Larry Matthew, Donald Smith, Thomas Braeky, Walter Hufford and Phillip Johnson.

The hotly contested Probate Court Judge contest was taken by Frederick Mulhauser over Seberon Litzenberger by almost a two to one margin. In the county, Mulhauser received 5470 votes while Litzenberger took only 2650.

Charlevoix will be getting a new mayor after Gary Probert unseated incumbent Ralph McRae.

All four of the state proposals were approved by the voters by fairly wide margins in the county.

Specifically, in some of the hot races, Congressman Davis held onto his seat by taking 62.3 percent of the county vote while Irwin had only 37 percent.

Ostling took 58 percent of the vote, better than he did the last time he faced Ellen Addington. She garnered 41.9 percent of the local vote.

In the townships, the write in votes were not strong enough to beat the effort of Doug Shields in Evangeline Township. His team also won out over Marsha Towne and Judy Everest, who were write-ins for trustee seats.

Perhaps one of the closest races was for the supervisor spot in South Arm Township where incumbent Harold Pletz narrowly won over Neal Colburn by only eight votes.

In the Boyne Valley trustee race, Carl Fiel and Leon Jarema won the spots beating out Patrick Harmon.

Royce Rolls took the supervisor spot over write-in and Jamie Haas in Melrose Township.

Other township offices went to those who were not contested.

The Positive Side

"Take time to think - It is the source of power."

Jottings

BY JIM SILBAR

Ooops. It has been called to my attention that the congressman representing our district, Bob Davis, is not the ranking Republican on a couple of committees. He is only the head on one. So I stand corrected.

But when it comes to things political, people get strange. It is either a love or a hate type of thing.

I mean, does it really matter whether or not you support X for office? Is he going to make or change the world from his supposedly lofty position?

Actually, few men do help change the world, but the only people who may know that it changed are the historians. And they usually decide who was great, long after they have left the office.

So if a seated politician only has one top spot on a committee, he got that by being around longer than the other guys. And that still makes him more powerful than the new guys coming into the office.

If you are a beginning politician, starting out because you won your first state or federal office, you are the little guy on the block. There isn't much you can do partly because you don't know the ground rules.

Sure, you may think of a lot of changes that should or could be made, but the chances of even getting to say something about those changes won't happen unless you can get one of the people who have been around a long time to concur and present the idea to the rest of the group.

Even then, you would have several, probably, standing in line waiting to take their shots at your idea. From hearing it is dumb, to hearing it will never work, or it will cost too much, or it isn't in the interest of the west, (or east, south, north), each idea has to pass a lot of scrutiny before it becomes...not your idea, but the guy you went to see who has the seniority.

This type of thinking doesn't just work in politics, it works in business, too.

Like the person fresh out of college who is filled with tons of great ideas on how to do things differently. I is amazing how fast he gets shot down by his bosses until the day comes that he is a boss and he will then shoot down some upstart fresh out of school who wants to see change.

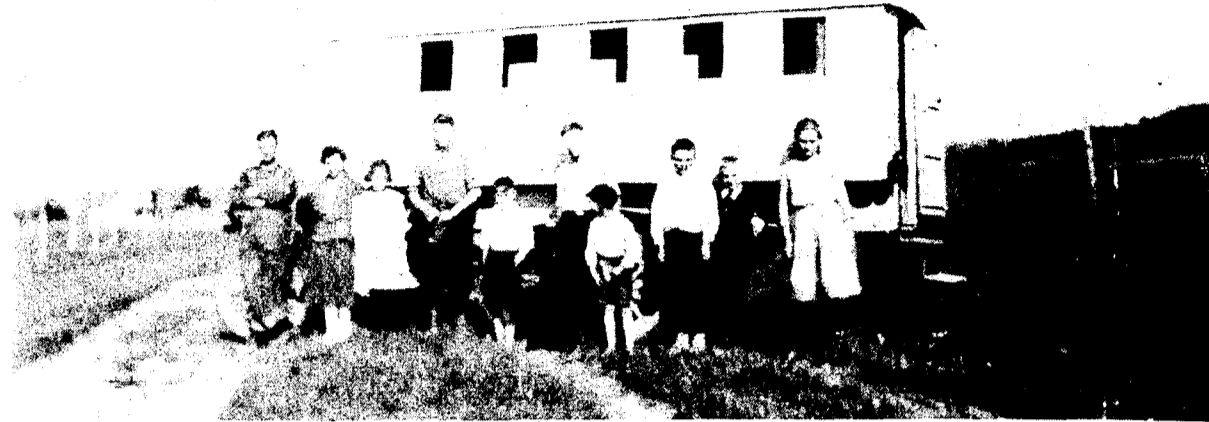

And business isn't the only other place where the lack of thinking and the resistance to changes happens.

Just look around the community. Any community. Are the older folks extremely set in their ways? Do the younger people of the community not want to tackle any of the real issues for fear of reprisal?

Is that why no one wants to step forward to run for school board?

Marshall Sayles

Dear reader: Please forget the presidential election for a moment and listen to this:

At the tail end of my column published in this newspaper last week I wrote that..."within a few days we are going to put four people off the schoolboard."

That was a stupid mistake. And I am suffering for it. I wanted to call it back and exterminate the untrue sentence with a quick spray of roach killer before it got printed, but it was too late.

Doctors, Lawyers, Presidents and newspaper people make mistakes. Others have been known to go through life without making a single error.

When a newspaperman fouls up he knows there is no place to hide that printed word. For more than fifty years I've known this: Once you ring a bell, neither the Lord nor a healthy bay at the moon can un-ring it for you.

I do not believe schoolboard members should be recalled. Regular elections can take care of whatever should be done. I will not sign any recall petitions.

I now raise my right foot and swear that I will make no more nincompoopish statements concerning this recall stuff.

Those wishing to argue can join me at the river, where I will be hanging my head. The hours will be from two to four on Wednesday, and from ten to noon on Fridays.

Weather permitting.

I shall now finish this column in such a manner that it will not taste like a cup of coffee that has been boiled in a galvanized pail.

Back to the presidential election mentioned at the high part of this column.

As I write this I do now know who is president. That's because this is being written on Saturday. The election was fought three days later. So at this moment, I am more ignorant than usual. (No more than one comment per person, please).

I voted by absentee ballot since I am old enough to pull a trick like that. And let me tell those candidates something. After I had voted I received notice after notice asking me to vote for so and so. How could I? I had already voted. They wasted a lot of money sending those requests after hundreds of people had already voted by absentee ballot. Get your stuff out early if you want the absentee vote.

That's my advice to those candidates who are now wringing their hands and wondering why

Spends day at school, observing

Dear Editor:

I recently used a vacation day to spend an entire day at the Boyne City Elementary School. The morning was spent in my son's 1st grade class and the afternoon was spent in my daughter's 3rd grade class.

Upon entering the front door I observed the principal, Ed Snyder, selling lunch tickets to students at the office window. He could have sat in his office and said it was not part of his job, but he didn't. He was handling each student with a friendly smile and congenial conversation.

The morning class began with the students excited about getting started. The children interacted with the teacher in a constant exchange of ideas, questions, answers, and thoughts. It was exciting to experience. The entire class was involved in the learning experience. I was given the opportunity to explain to the class a little bit about my occupation. After 3 minutes I had lost the attention of 75% of the students and quickly ended. I worked one-on-one with the students on the computer, spending 10-15 minutes with each child. The room was crowded so we were out in the hallway. The computer programs provided by the teacher were interesting and intellectually challenging to each student. At the same time, the teacher worked with the remaining students on a variety of areas, continually keeping the students interested and participating. I purchased my lunch and ate lunch with my son and his friends in the cafeteria. A real experience! The cafeteria seats approximately 200 students and serves 447 students through the use of three overlapping lunch periods. It is a choreographer's nightmare. Yet, the flow of children through the lunch line, in and out of the cafeteria, and the actions of the children were exemplary. This is due to the four paid helpers, two inside and two outside, along with a paid cash register attendant. These people created order out of chaos, without using heavy handed tactics. This is also not the place for teachers to be supervising. They need the few minutes lunch provides to be able to relax and be fully prepared for an afternoon of teaching, not worn out from supervising a cafeteria. It was a pleasant experience with nutritional, good tasting food.

The afternoon spent in my daughter's 3rd grade class was also exciting and enjoyable. Again, my attempts at keeping the attention of the students failed in less than five minutes. With the 3rd graders I worked with groups of three children on the computer. The computer programs provided by the teacher were again intellectually challenging and fun for the students. At the same time the teacher was also teaching a variety of subjects. The 3rd grade curriculum includes more distinct subjects than the 1st grade, such as math., science,

ARTICHOKES
I used to think that artichokes were too fancy for me. However, I have changed my mind. Not only do we have the fresh ones available, occasionally, we can buy them boxed in the frozen food sections of our markets, the canned artichoke hearts, and marinated ones in glass jars. Mr. L. H. Orebaugh sent me this a few years ago. I would like to share it now.

ABOUT ARTICHOKES
"Glove" or "French" artichokes, the kind usually seen in markets and with which we are hereinafter concerned, are the edible flowers of a plant belonging to the thistle family. They are not to be confused with "Jerusalem" artichokes which are the underground tubers of a species of sunflower. Some people may shy away from the subject artichokes, possible because of the rather indelicate way in which they are eaten. Others may not be clear as to the manner of their preparation and consumption. A Frenchman sees no impropriety in pulling artichoke leaves through his teeth, but regards Americans as somewhat barbaric when they gnaw sweet corn off the cob.

PREPARATION: At the market, choose good-sized, dark green, compact artichokes with the fewest, if any, black leaf tips or spots. One artichoke makes one vegetable serving.
At home, rinse well in water, and cut off the bottom stem so that the artichoke will stand upright. Discard the few small leaves at the bottom. Then cut off about three-fourths inch off the top, and with the kitchen shears, trim off the top half inch of each pointed leaf. (Occasionally, artichokes will be found with rounded, tipped leaves, but follow the same procedure.) Place artichokes (four for example) in deep saucepan with a well-fitting lid, close enough together so that they will stand upright. Press a small half clove of garlic among the top leaves of each. (Optional) In a mixing bowl combine:
2 cups Hot water
2 teasp. salt
1 teasp. lemon juice
3 tablespoons olive or salad oil
Pour over the artichokes in the pan. Heat to a boil then cover tightly, reduce heat to low and cook 30 minutes or until tender and when a leaf can be pulled out easily.

Now, for a very short history of the interesting artichoke. They are the flower buds of a large thistle. Before the Christian era a gigantic thistle called cardoon was cultivated for its leafy shoots which were grown in the dark to make them white and tender. That was the way the people of Rome, Carthage and Greece grew them. They were very popular during the 2nd century, A.D. By 1400 the Italians were cultivating the modern form of artichoke. From Italy it was introduced to France and England though it never became popular in England or its colonies as in France and Spain. So it is logical that most of our artichokes are grown in Louisiana settled by the France and in California where the Spanish settled.

I looked for fresh artichokes in our markets today and did not find them, and I am always reluctant to write about foods that are hard to find. I will make an exception here because of the other products that are available.

However, if you do find fresh ones, grab them up, they are so good and not as hard to prepare as it seems. Actually no harder than any other fresh vegetable; and sure to impress your friends and family. Just follow Mr. Orebaugh's directions and serve.

To eat them, put out a leaf and dip base in melted butter served in a little container on the same plate, pull through teeth, scraping out the pulp. Discard leaves on plate. My son-in-law Don prepared them like this and I might suggest that you do not put the stringy parts left on the plates into the garbage disposal. They will really choke it up. Don had his problems here.

Now, here are a few suggestions for using the prepared artichoke heart that come canned or frozen. They are especially good with Hollandaise sauce.

Here is an easy sauce made in the microwave.

QUICK HOLLANDAISE SAUCE
1/2 cup (1 stick) butter
1 egg, lightly beaten
2 tablespoons lemon juice
Salt and pepper to taste

1-Place butter in a 2 cup glass measure and microwave at power level HIGH for 2 1/2 to 4 minutes, or until melted. Beat in the egg, using a wire whip. Microwave uncovered, at power level LOW and DEFROST for 1 1/2 minutes, or until egg appears slightly set.

2-Beat in lemon juice, whisking briskly with the wire whip to prevent lumps. Season to taste with salt and pepper. Use at once with fish or vegetables. Do not reheat.

For a beautiful meal-in-a-dish salad you can prepare this

VEGETABLE TUNA PLATTER

This recipe calls for 3 small artichokes, trimmed, though you can use the frozen one that are already to cook. (Also use any amounts for the vegetables—substitute the veggies that you especially like. These are suggestions):
3 small artichokes, trimmed
1/2 lb. small red potatoes
1 1/2 cups fresh broccoli flowerets
1 1/2 cups cauliflowerets
16 fresh asparagus spears
1 1/2 cups fresh green beans
1 1/2 cups sliced fresh carrots
1 large tomato, cut in wedges
2 cans (7 oz. each) sold pack tuna, drained

Place steamer basket in a large saucepan or kettle. Pour in 1 or 2 inches of water (water must not touch basket bottom.) Cover the saucepan; bring water to a boil; reduce heat and steam each vegetable except the tomato over simmering water until tender. Arrange in a platter then refrigerate in the following marinade for several hours.

LEMON MARINADE
1/4 cup peanut oil
1/4 cup lemon juice
1/4 cup chopped fresh parsley
2 tablespoons cider vinegar
1 tablespoon chopped fresh chives
2 teaspoons grated onion
1 clove garlic, minced
1/2 teaspoon cumin seed
1/4 teaspoon dry mustard

Place all ingredients in small bowl or jar and stir or shake to mix well. With this, serve hot biscuits, muffins or rolls for a complete luncheon or dinner.

Just a few suggestions with artichokes:

Put a couple of cooked or canned artichoke hearts on the plate when you serve Eggs Benedict and pour your sauce over all. If using the frozen hearts follow the directions for cooking on the package.

Or city commissioner? Or county office?

Are the people most interested afraid to get bitten?

Is that the leadership we are lacking?

Questions that begat questions. And we have another vote coming up next week that is also a part of where the community's direction is going.

Sure, you voted in the general election last Tuesday, but now, you are asked to vote again to raise your taxes so children can ride a bus to school.

The issue of recall is a part of this, too.

Certain members of the community want to have their children bused, while others don't want to see the cost rise, or changes being made to the status quo.

Myself, I just wish the issue were over. And I wish the school board would stop asking for our support. We should never have to be asked, we should contribute to the educational needs.

Of all the advice I have dished out to various people this week, I believe that this is the best.

Dear city commission: Please take out an ad in next week's paper explaining the Park Street Bridge signs. One side says "2 tons". On the other side it says "3-tons". Does that mean I can Look closely and you will notice that since I made that schoolboard boo-boo I am behaving myself more than necessary.

Dawn Archambault grabs a rebound during the game against Cheboygan last Tuesday. Boyne City went on to win 57-46.

Ramblers defeat Cheboygan, 57-46

BY SCOTT KNIPE

Last week the Rambler girls took an important victory over Cheboygan, 57-46, in a well played, intense game. Friday they traveled to Mancelona and were again confronted with the problem that has faced them all season long, winning away from home. Mancy defeated the Ramblers soundly, 64-42.

In Tuesday's game with Cheboygan, Mindy Stadt led the Rambler scoring surge with 20 points. Kristen Harvey boosted the team with a solid 13. Tysh Crozier and Stacey McGeorge each scored eight, Dawn Archambault five, and Amy Weeks three. Defensively the whole team was sound, and that was perhaps one of the biggest contributions to the victory.

On their first Friday night game of the season, Boyne simply could not muster the offensive power they needed, and although they held the rebounding edge over Mancy, it had slipped drastically from the previous game of that week. Boyne even out shot Mancelona from the foul stripe, but their shots from the hardwood were not falling, and that led to the loss. Tysh Crozier rose to occasion Friday, collecting more than a third of the Rambler points, with 18 for the night. Nancy McCullough and Stadt each contributed six, and Weeks, McGeorge, and Archambault each added four. In the end it just wasn't enough.

The Ramblers are again on the road this week, as they take on Vanderbilt and Gaylord.

First Grange "Friend of Rural Michigan award"

The first Grange "Friend of Rural Michigan Award" was announced by Roland G. Winter, State Grange President during their annual convention held in Charlevoix last week. The prestigious award went to Gordon Guyer, former director of the Michigan State University Cooperative Extension Service, former director of the Department of Natural Resources, and DNR Commissioner.

Winter stated that the Michigan State Grange has for many years worked for the betterment of agriculture not only within the State of Michigan but also on the national level. He said, "In accomplishing these goals we have worked with many other organizations and with many individuals using their expertise to help guide us as we developed resolutions and policy."

"We have not only always taken the time to say thank-you to people and organizations when they have assisted us. As we sit back and think about it, we know there are many people who have earned a gold star for the time and effort they have spent in helping us as a farm fraternal organization reach our many and varied objectives."

"We have held Gordon Guyer in very high esteem for many years as he carried out his responsibilities in important positions both in education and in government roles. He excelled in each position that he filled with his tremendous abilities and foresight and molded whatever department or organization that he was heading into a smooth-running efficient operation."

"We know that he will do an outstanding job in his new position of Vice President for Governmental Affairs for Michigan State University, the same that he has done in every other position that he has ever held. We wish him the very best when he assumes his new duties."

Winter then presented an engraved plaque to Guyer, stating, "We hope you will find space in your office to hang this plaque, which will remind you, every time you see it, of the high regard that your friends in the Grange have for you."

Each year someone will be recognized by the Michigan State Grange for their friendship to rural Michigan.

Nature from your backdoor Animals and their winter 'preserves'

BY GLENN R. DUDDERAR

When we think of animals storing food for the winter, the first one to come to mind for most people is the fox or gray squirrel and the way it buries nuts. This activity often takes place in the front lawn or flower bed, where it's obvious to homeowner and passer-by alike.

The red squirrel, too, stores nuts for the winter. It may bury them or stash them in a tree, a nest or a convenient attic. These caches may be quite large, amounting to two or three grocery sacks full. Flying squirrels also make large food caches like this.

The familiar chipmunk is another larder stocker. The chipmunk actually digs a separate compartment off the main tunnel of its burrow and fills it with food.

The deer mouse, or white-footed mouse, will stash its winter food supply in an abandoned bird's nest, a hollow log or tree or, if it's moved into your home for the winter, in an old boot or a kitchen drawer. Piles of firewood are also favorite places for the deer mouse's food cache. The best story I've heard was about a child's rocking horse stored in an attic. The hollow horse had a mouse-sized hole in it, and by the time the mouse was done putting seeds in it, it was significantly heavier than it had been and it rattled when it bounced on its springs.

Another animal people commonly think of in connection with storing food for the winter is the beaver, which prepares for winter by jamming branches in the mud under the ice. This underwater larder eliminates the need to risk coming out on the ice or the shore in the winter to feed.

A lot of the members of the weasel family make food caches, though they're temporary rather than sufficient for overwintering. I received a call recently from a homeowner who found two dead squirrels, some dead mice and a dead bird in the backyard woodpile. The caller thought someone was playing a joke on him by putting road kills on his woodpile. The joker was likely a skunk. When food is abundant, a skunk can find or kill more than it can eat. Like weasels and minks, the skunk may cache the surplus in a handy woodpile or hollow tree. If you find a pile of small dead animals on the edge of your suburban or rural backyard, you can bet one of the members of the weasel family has been active there. In the bird world, three birds that are familiar to most homeowners stash food: the nuthatch, the bluejay and the common crow.

The nuthatch stashes seeds and fruits in cracks and crevices. Sunflower seeds from the bird feeder stashed under the edges of shingles are common signs of the nuthatch at work.

The bluejay will fill its throat sack full of sunflower seeds, then fly off in search of a place to hide the food. A clump of sunflowers growing where none were planted by humans probably indicates a bluejay food stash that was never revisited. The jay may also tuck acorns away in the ground.

Crows will do basically the same thing, except that crows eat and cache a wide variety of foods. You're less likely to see the food-stashing behavior of crows, of course, because they tend not to be backyard birds.

Though fable and myth attribute wisdom to the animals that put food away for lean times, the fact is that food storing is strictly an innate or instinctive behavior. Animals store food in relation to its abundance — the more there is, the language, social studies, etc. The entire class was again actively participating in the learning process. It was a real joy to experience.

Both teachers I visited during the day had taken postgraduate classes in the last year and are presently using teaching techniques and methods they learned. How many of us can say the same about our jobs?

The in classroom learning activities of every student in the school are enhanced with music, art, library, and physical education that take place in their special areas of the school. These areas are an integral part of each student's education and from what I saw are taught with an uncompromising degree of excellence. The joy, excitement, maturity, and educational growth both of my children get from these areas can't be measured in dollars and cents.

Near the end of the day I stopped and talked with Ed Snyder, the principal, to get more information on how and why this school functions. There are a total of 581 students. The Learning Center enhances the education of 37 students. A child that qualifies for the Learning Center, "special education," is either in the one full day class or the two half day classes. The Chapter I program enhances the education of 140 students. This program allows students to spend one half hour each day with one-to-one help in either math or reading. Students qualify for this by testing at certain levels in either area according to their grade. The Challenge program enhances the education of 60 students. It is a gifted and talented program for students achieving at certain levels in regular classroom work that are in the 2nd through 4th grades. They meet one half day per week with students at their grade level and a teacher. The enhancement programs affect about 41% of all students at any given time. I think that this is significant.

After leaving the school, I could not help but be positively affected by what I experienced. Even though the school is overcrowded with an undersized cafeteria and overcrowded rooms, some classes have 29 students, I did not hear any complaints from anyone. Our children are getting an enriching and thorough education by a professional staff that is constantly looking for ways to do a better job. I believe this is the type of education my children and yours not only want but need. The children of this area are our greatest and most important asset. This will give them the opportunity to have choices when they graduate from high school. Choices because they can do more than read and write, add and subtract. The education they are getting will let them be able to apply their academic skills to today's world. I am one parent that will stand by our current academic program as being top priority. This is an area that cannot be short changed. The curriculum at the Boyne City Elementary School cannot be cut and I am willing to vote for increased millage if that is what is required to keep it. How could I tell my children when they have graduated that I couldn't afford a small increase in property tax and that is why they don't have the education to get a good job or allow them to go to college? I couldn't and I won't! I encourage everyone, whether you have children in school or not, to take the time to visit one or all of our schools. Take the time to see all the great things that are happening in our school system.

Says 'thanks' for locating sailors

Editor:

I would like to express my thanks on behalf of the Destroyer Escort Sailors Association for the article you inserted in your paper to help locate former DE sailors. Your cooperation enabled us to receive over 1,000 responses. All of the newly-found were happy, and many were reunited with an old shipmate.

At the last convention, many of the wives were surprised at the fellowship evidenced. The firm handshakes and warm embraces displayed among the former DE sailors touched many of the on-lookers. One wife, seeing tears on the cheeks of her husband, exclaimed, "Oh! He's crying!" Another remarked that this 40th year reunion is far more touching than any gathering of the family tree. In response to that remark we can say, "We were a close-knit 200 plus family, who shared the anxieties of war and sea duty; we were a group of young people who displayed the dedication of duty and enhanced the 'buddy' feeling."

Present among us were two ex-sailors who were in boot camp together and assigned to the same ship on the same day. Their last contact with each other was when their ship was torpedoed, each landing in a different South Pacific hospital. Through the years they had thought of each other and finally had a face to face meeting.

One of the DE sailors who read the published article wrote that he used to visit his friend's home and saw above the mantle a large picture of a destroyer escort that his friend's uncle served on. Years later this young man enlisted in the service and served on the same ship. The sailor and the uncle both attended the convention.

A grand-daughter saw the article in her local paper. Having heard numerous sea stories from her grandfather, she enrolled him in DESA and presented the membership as a 65th birthday present.

An ex-DE sailor who served on one of the 30 Coast Guard-manned ships was delighted that we possessed current addresses of his crew.

A newly located DE man informed us he will be in Charleston, S.C., wheel chair and all, for the 1989 convention to meet his buddies who served on these Small-But Deadly ships.

For many sailors who served on the destroyer escorts after the ships were recommissioned for the Korean and Vietnam wars, it was their first get-together.

We also heard from several officers, some now retired admirals. Those attending the reunion were delighted to renew acquaintances with the men who served under them — in much more relaxed surroundings.

From the many men of the destroyer escorts and converted DEs who were able to attend the reunion due to your placement of the article in your newspaper, "A HEARTY THANKS."

Sincerely yours,

Praises adult day care centers

Editor:

This is a plea to Alzheimer's caregivers.

Alzheimer's patients or people with dementia have an especially great need for a social outlet to provide a more meaningful life and thus increase their sense of worth and dignity.

I speak with two years experience, having taken care of my mother who is in the early stages of Alzheimer's disease.

My mother was enrolled in the Waterford Township Adult Day Care Center for the last one and a half years. It made her a new person. She changed from a depressed, introverted person to a happy, contented one, who is sensitive and caring of others. She always looked forward to and was eager to go to the "center", (however reluctant at first). Since all projects and activities are devised to motivate and stimulate, she derived a sense of self-worth and accomplishment. She also developed many close relationships with the other female and male participants.

Recently, we moved to the Petoskey-Charlevoix area and enrolled mother in the newly opened adult day care in Petoskey called "The Living Room Adult Day Care". They are certainly filling a great need for this Northern area.

I urge all caregivers of dependent adults to maintain the quality of life, dignity, and self-worth for our loved ones, as well as for ourselves. Adult day care had been my salvation, for both my mother and myself.

How much does my deer weigh?

BY REG SHARKEY

With the blaze orange army preparing to invade the northwoods and make an assault on the wary whitetail—America's grandest big game animal—the perennial question arises: How much does, or did, my deer weigh?

Now I've hunted deer for 60 years, sans three years of World War II service, and I've taken my share of them.

I know only too well that the average-sized deer (a 140 pounds on the hoof) gets heavier the farther you have to drag the critter.

I believe that is why most successful hunters overestimate the weight of their fallen quarry. And that is why some hunters who have their animal taken care of by a professional processor think that they don't get back all the meat they should.

So, I will give you the scoop on this controversial subject.

Let me say that in my younger days I worked for a butcher, and later on had a food business with a meat market. So I am versed in processing domestic animals as well as the wild ones.

That is why I take care of my own deer and, occasionally, have kept track of them during processing to come up with verifiable figures.

A couple of years ago I downed a small yearling 8-point buck that I once more thought would be a good subject for establishing weights, from live to boned meat. And that same year I received a chart from the DNR covering the subject.

By the way of the following chart, as you will notice, in the first column entitled heart girth (measured around the chest cavity back of the front legs), will give you a fairly accurate live weight of your deer; and, of course, if you scan across the chart the edible meat you end up with.

To check the accuracy of that chart I kept track of the little eight point buck I took in that season.

Here are my figures. Of course I couldn't weigh the blood because a heart shot deer pumps it out in a hurry, nor could the entrails be weighed so I estimated those two factors. And I estimated the buck at 130 pounds live weight.

 Head 7.50 lbs.
 Hide 10.50 lbs.
 Legs 4.0 lbs.
 Bones & trimmings 26.00 lbs.
 Total 73.00 lbs.

So taking 73 pounds from the estimated 130 pounds live weight leaves 57 pounds of eating or freezer meat. In actual weight of pure meat I weighed 56.25 pounds. So the DNR chart is quite accurate.

You deer hunters keep that DNR chart for future references.

Oh yes, just remember if you louse up a deer carcass by poor shooting, you'll have to subtract quite a bit more in trimming waste. So do some dry firing as well as live firing at recognized ranges.

Good luck.

Maybe you'll be one of the lucky ones and see something like this in the woods on opening day.

Farmer's lung disease has no cure

Most people imagine the air down on the farm is clean and fresh, but actually it is often laden with lung-crippling dusts and molds.

Those dusts and molds - commonly found in grain bins and hay storages, around the livestock and in feeds - can cause farmer's lung disease.

It is a non-infectious condition that, with repeated exposure to dusts and molds, can severely restrict a person's ability to breathe.

"There is no cure for the disease," says Howard J. Doss, Michigan State University Cooperative Extension Service agricultural safety specialist.

Once a person has farmer's lung, he or she has the disease permanently. Each additional exposure to dusts or molds will aggravate the problem. The individual's sensitivity to the dust or mold is the primary factor in the recurrence and intensity of the disease, Doss says.

The body will provide several signals that a person is in danger of contracting farmer's lung.

The upper respiratory system - nose, mouth and larynx area - will show injury in the form of nosebleeds, coughing and sore throat. Rhinitis, with runny nose and watery eyes, is also a symptom of respiratory tract problems.

The middle portion of the respiratory tract - the trachea and the bronchial tubes and their major subdivision - will show asthma-like symptoms such as coughing, wheezing and shortness of breath.

"Acute symptoms will occur from four to eight hours after heavy exposure," Doss says. "These symptoms include fever with sweating and chills, a troublesome but unproductive cough, shortness of breath, and a general feeling of malaise with aching muscles and joints. These symptoms may resolve in a couple of days or persist for weeks."

The mold and dust particles that cause the disease are so tiny that the only way a person can prevent inhaling them is to wear a

Three EJ runners compete in Lansing

BY PAMBURR
Three runners from East Jordan competed in the cross country final State run Saturday in Lansing and had an excellent day. Tim Brennan has had an outstanding cross country career at East Jordan. Last year he placed third in this event and became EJ's first all-stater in cross country. This year Tim qualified by placing second in regionals. The second place finish was his first loss of the season. With thirteen wins and one loss, Tim was a determined runner at the Individual run and ended up taking home the first place honors making him an all-stater for two consecutive years. This accomplishment has not been done by any other East Jordan athlete.

First year runner Holly Johnson, a sophomore, placed third in the individual run, making her East Jordan's first girl all-stater. Holly has an excellent season with 10 first place finishes. Also placing in the top 30 of the individual runners was Theresa Brennan. Theresa placed 27th and had an extremely strong finish to allow her to meet this goal.

Another win puts EJ 12-5 for year

BY PAMBURR
East Jordan put another point in its win column Tuesday night by defeating Charlevoix 55-46 in non-conference play. The Red Devils are now 12-5 for the year and Charlevoix 4-12. East Jordan led 13-9 at the end of the first period and by four at the half. The Devils built up the lead by 10 in the fourth quarter and then with three minutes left in the game, Charlevoix's Jean Habel hit 2 three pointers making EJ up by only four. For East Jordan Jill Burt scored 17, Dia Jones

11, and Christie Barber 10. On the boards Barber had nine, Burt eight and Kathy Carson seven. "Our defense was poorly executed and we were down after the loss to Mancelona" said Coach Hines. East Jordan's junior varsity also won 43-19. Carrie Gee led the scoring attack with 10 points.

Lady Devils defeat Harbor Springs 60-48

BY PAMBURR
The Devils convincingly defeated the Rams of Harbor Springs 60-48 Thursday night. The team has been flat since the crucial losses to Bellaire and Mancelona but came on strong the first quarter scoring 22 points to harbor's 6. "We started our first quarter with one of the better quarters we've had in a couple of weeks" coach Hines said. "At least we're getting back on the winning track. We're shooting a little better."

Leading East Jordan in the game was Jill Burt with 18 points, 11 rebounds, and seven steals. Sara Chase added 10 points and seven assists. Coach Hines credited Sara for having one of her better floor games at point guard. On the boards Buffy Kooyer had six rebounds while Dawn Noiro and Kathy Carson each had 4.

EJ also won the JV game 56-44. Jenny Sherman led the Devils with 20 points.

Sevenski, Westbrook place at Frankenmuth

BY BECKY HAUSLER
Joe Westbrook and Mike Sevenski, two young runners from the Boyne Falls School, placed well in the State Cross Country Finals held last weekend in Frankenmuth.

After finishing in the top fifteen at the regionals the two were taken to the state meet where Sevenski placed sixth with a time of 19:00 out of 30 Class D runners from all over the state. Westbrook finished 17th with a time of 19:38. The first 15 runners were awarded medals while the school is proud of both. They are lower classmen and will be running in future state meets.

more they store the food, the weather folklore attributes some significance to the quantity of nuts that squirrels put away for winter. But squirrels' storing large quantities of nuts has more to do with the good growing season for nut trees than the severity of the winter to come. If food is abundant and an animal has sufficient storage facilities, it may continue the food stashing beyond all reason, storing far more than it could consume. The seeds in the rocking horse are probably a good example of an animal that responded to available food and an ideal storage place by storing more than it could possibly use. In a situation like that, storing may go on un-disposable respiratory dust mask, Doss says. These masks are designed to filter dust and some molds. A box of 15 masks costs under $20. The considerably cheaper "painter's mask" normally provides no protection against the mold spores, dusts and animal danders commonly found on the farm, particularly in confined spaces such as bins, mows and similar structures where livestock and feedstuffs are housed. "Everyone who is working in these types of areas should be encouraged to wear a mask, and for the mask to be effective, it should be used according to the manufacturer's recommendations," Doss says. The development of farmer's lung is often confused with other respiratory ailments, he says. By the time it is diagnosed (usually by taking a lung tissue sample), it may be disastrously too late for the victim.
