3 awarded plaques for saving life

Three members of the Boyne City community were given special awards at the Tuesday noon meeting of the City Commission By Henry Erber and Todd Sorenson of the Boyne City Ambulance Department for their action which saved the life of a Utica man who had a choking incident at the Country Star Restaurant recently.

The man, a victim of Parkinson's Disease, started choking soon after trying to swallow some meat. The quick action of three at that time saved the man's life.

The three, Ron Powers, a retired member of the Boyne City Ambulance team, along with Hostess Judy Fehrlen and employee Gerald Topolinski, provided the quick emergency service to get the man back breathing. Powers was eating a meal in the restaurant at the time of the incident. Topolinski is currently in training to become an EMT and assisted in the action while Fehrlen gave mouth to mouth resuscitation after several tries of the Heimlich maneuver. The maneuver did not work as the food particle was lodged too deep in the man's throat, Fehrlen told the appreciative audience.

The family was appreciative and sent a letter to the Ambulance Department telling them of their gratitude.

Boyne hedges on setting public marina meeting

Boyne City officials almost set a separate public informational hearing at the Tuesday noon meeting, but decided to wait and see how many show up at the monthly Parks and Recreation Board meeting that will be held this Thursday at 7:00 p.m. before deciding.

If a large crowd appears at the parks meeting, then next Tuesday the City Commissioners will probably set a public informational meeting at either the Commission Chambers at City Hall or at the Boyne City High School.

While the marina issue was not brought up as an agenda item at the noon meeting, the question is definitely on the minds of the Commissioners. Officially, the city still has not received any notice from the state or from the Corps of Engineers as to the specifics of the proposed project which would build a 65 slip marina in front of the One Water Street Restaurant.

In other action, the Commissioners gave their okay to close down a portion of the roadway of Water Street for the Mushroom Festival Committee as a safety measure to ensure that young children don't get hit by a car. The mushroom children's morel hunt is slated for the Sunset Park area which will be roped off for the youngsters.

They also agreed to start an experimental recycling program using newsprint as a bedding material for dairy cattle. The idea came from city policeman Augie Stolt who gave a copy of the farming magazine to City Manager Randy Frykberg for information.

Stolt is also a farmer with dairy cattle and said he would be willing to experiment with his forage chopper to chop up the newsprint and use it on his farm.

Stolt said that according to the magazine, farms that have tried the material like using it and it can be disposed of just like ordinary bedding material and recycled into the ground. Because the newsprint is chopped up, it degrades more quickly than if it were in a landfill. The Commissioners agreed to start the program using employee newsprint first. If the program is successful, then other farmers will he notified to see if they would want to join in the program and possibly pay for the recycled paper.

City Commissioner Bill Grimm asked Frykberg about the storm sewer outlet that crosses into the Peninsula Beach area, saying the pipe was broken and had sharp edges that someone might get hurt on. He was told by City Manager Dick Young that when the pipe was installed several years ago when the beach was constructed, the water was higher. Now, he said, the pipe was laid too high for it to get underwater as it was when it was installed. Young did say that the city was looking at the problem and is trying to figure out what can be done.

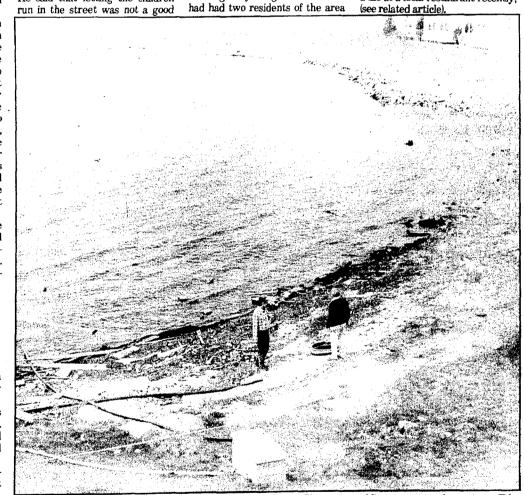

Sandra Stanley asked about the closing of the Grant Street Hill and was told that it was done as a temporary measure some time ago. The street has not been opened after last week's meeting.

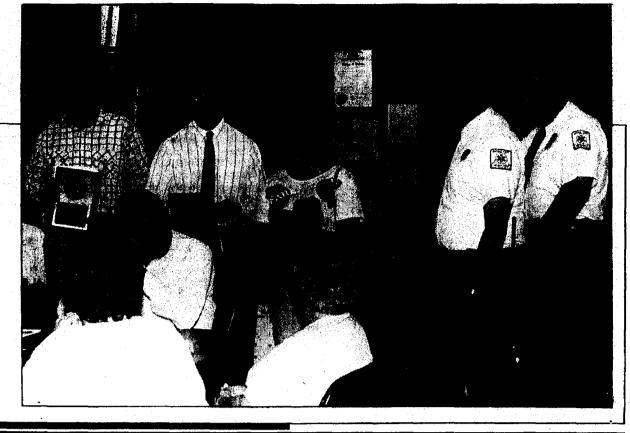

Commissioner Vic Ruggles said that he had a concern about the closing of the street and making a playground for the neighborhood. He said that letting the children and better, thanks to the work of the Boyne Mushroom Festival Association, the Boyne Valley Lions Club and the Chamber of Commerce.

This year, there are plenty of events for those who are not competitors to the actual Mushroom Hunting Championship.

To start with, the Schmidt Amusement Carnival will be open for business this year on Thursday, starting at 4 p.m. In previous years they did not open until Friday. The carnival continues to run in Veteran's Park Friday afternoon and evening, Saturday and Sunday. Sherman Schmidt says that he will be bringing in some different rides this year for by Mrs. Schmidt.

For those not wanting to attend the carnival, a big tent will be put up in the parking lot by Stafford's One Water Street Restaurant for the weekend.

There, people may register for the contest starting at 8 a.m. The contestants will then go to the Boyne City High School parking lot where they will form up into a caravan that will take them out to a secret location for the actual picking contest.

Those in the contest will find they have one and half hours to run out into the woods, find as many mushrooms as possible and make it back to the starting spot before the final siren sounds.

"caps" will count in the contest. Last year contestants gathered over 2,000 mushrooms in the timed period.

Back in Boyne City, the activities start at the Big Tent at 11:30 a.m. when food and bar service starts. Inside the tent will be displays of mushrooms, booths filled with vendors and other displays.

Fresh morels and appetizers made with morels will be featured along with a regular lunch menu from Stafford's.

Free entertainment will begin about noon along with free horsedrawn havrides. The havwagons will leave from the tent, circle the downtown area, and end up at the carnival, finally returning to the tent. The hayrides are to last all afternoon.

Entertainer Sean Ryan, popular Northern Michigan singer and storyteller, will appear throughout the afternoon at the Big Tent as well as locally know juggler, Tom Tropic, with his feats of skill and jokes.

Morel Mountain manager Larry Lonik will be displaying, hopefully, some of the morels the firm has started to grow for the commercial market. He will also be available to answer questions about morels and to autograph copies of his book, "The Curious Morel."

Around 2 p.m., the first round mushroom hunt finalists will be announced for those who will qualify for the finals that will take place on Sunday.

It looks like Bay Township voters will be going to the polls June 28th for the second recall election of Township Supervisor Allie "Bud" Chipman. Also on the ballot will be Clerk Charles Breithaupt.

Both were certified as to having the proper number of names submitted on recall petitions, County Clerk Jane Brannon said Monday. Chipman had 112 valid signatures while Breithaupt had 108. Fiftyone signatures were necessary to force the election.

The petitions called for the ouster of Chipman and Breithaupt saying that they caused controversy and conflict within the township. The petitions were submitted by Lyle Barkley, an opponent of the way the two have been running the township.

Since this is the second attempt to oust Chipman, Barkley had to pay for the election. He submitted See Election/Page 8

Clip and save this cala BY ROBERT SKOGLUND

This morning I got a letter from Marge Cook which is not remarkable in itself, because Marge is a good writer. The stories that she has published are fun to read. Marge confessed that after reading my recent column on genealogy she had thrown it away-then had dug it out of the wastebasket and read it again.

As anyone who writes newsnaner column knows, receiving a letter from a reader is about as likely as Barbara Bush making the cover on Seventeen magazine - unless the reader is enraged or just opening a real estate office. Even hate mail is welcomed by columnists because if the reader chews you out for writing balderdash, you know for sure that you have at least one intelligent reader.

Imagine, then, how good one feels upon receiving a complimentary letter. I have often savored it since. Marge said that she was asked to marry a couple I had mentioned in the article.

Earlier in the week, Mrs. Pease had also made some pleasant comment about the story as we squeezed by one another in the doorway to the Coffee Shop. Come to think of it several other people mentioned it, too. Interestingly enough, everyone who claimed to have read the story was either mentioned in it or lived next door to someone who was.

All of which illustrates a glorious truth that newspaper editors have known for years: people enjoy seeing their names in the paper. These clippings, for they are clipped, form the basis of family scrapbooks. Some people like my cousin, Truman Hilt, can't enjoy a column unless it's stuck on the refrigerator door. Joe Robinson hung his trophies in bunches from the wall on clothes pins until they curled and turned brown like old bananas.

Your typical scrapbook containes the picture of father, writhing on the floor of the gym, that night he missed the dunk shot and broke his leg. (Took first prize for "Sports Coverage" at that year's press convention.) There is the wedding picture. "I don't know what possessed Marsha to save the dress. She was crowding it a bit at the seams even back then."

The column, then, is always viewed subjectively. What matters is not what one says, but who one says it about. I've really know that for years. Tommy Malloy once told me that he only read the first paragraph of my column just to see if there was anything interesting in it. The next week I started it out with his name column didn't have anything to do with Tommy, but I figured if I could grab his attention he'd read all of it before realizing he'd been had.

I showed Paul Devine a newspaper item about a wild man who had attacked his trash collector with a dull sword. Paul was horrified: said, "Might as well use a saw as a dull sword."

Lawyer Crandall said he'd heard of cases where garbage men had thought new chainsaws on garage floors were trash.

Priscilla Adams confided that one of the animal rights people got on her case about a fur coat she was wearing. She explained that the poor thing had already been dead for 30 years before she got it. I've seen the garment in question, and think that 30 years is being PEDETOUS.

If you sat all the way through town meeting you heard a germane discussion on our animal control ordinance. I didn't stand and say that I thought a man ought to be able to eat any of his neighbor's pets he can trap on his front lawn, but I wanted to. Yummy! I can smell pets on my good old charcoal grill now. I'm thinking, of course, about Timmy Polky's steers.

I never did have a grill until I borrowed one from Frank Rackliff last summer. After making it fast, fore and aft, I started home but the wind snatched off the top right abeam of Everett Baum's. So I bought Frank a new one and claimed the spoils.

This column will probably be clipped, as most that contain names are. True, nobody save the Court Record column just so they can circle their kid's name wherever it appears. But then they don't need to. The neighbors

Now I don't know about the truth to the story, but drinking caffee the other day with one of our snow birders, he related the following story to me as I gagged on the collee from figuring out if it was true or not.

Seems some lady down in Florida had trouble with one of the state's widespread problems-walking catfish. I don't know the scientific name, but those catfish are walking all over the place, I guess, to find other water to live in.

This lady captured one of those catfish walking about on her lawn one day, and promptly took it into the house and put it in her aquarium, along with all of the tropical fish she had.

After some thought, and many attempts by the fish to escape out of the acuarium, the lady netted the catfish and took it out of the water for a few moments. She then put the animal back in the somerium.

a grand opening so that fishermen and their wives can see the many selections they carry as they continue to expand and grow. The shop started in the garage of the house when son Chuck was laid off from his regular job. The two went after all of the permits and followed the regulations to a "T", making sure that what they did was proper with all of the authorities.

They started with live baits because Chuck liked to fish and thought there was a need that they could fill for those fishing the many inland lakes in the area.

Going into this trout season, the two have started stocking flies for northern waters for the flycasters, and other artificual lures for the spincasters.

If a customer doesn't see what he or she wants from the varied selection they offer, a special order can be made with the many firms they deal with and will arrive at the store in a couple of days. Alice said.

Chuck said that he wants to develop fly fishing in the area, and knows of many little feeder streams to the Boyne River and the Bear River that have good fishing. Some of the places he takes fishermen are way off the beaten track so the fishing pressure is less. That helps make for catching fish as the streams are hardly hit by the multitudes of fishermen

MOTHER'S DAY

Browsing through a modern. magazine recently, I read that when women hear people telling them that they are just like their mothers, many liked the idea. However some women resented this. I think it natural for most women when they are very young to think that they know more than their mothers, but this is something that most of us outgrow. As a mother in her seventies I can look back to my mother and my grandmother with love and understanding. When I look into the mirror now I see that I look more like my mother every day and I like it. I am happy to have had a role-model in my Mother.

Our mothers might not always be wise in their decisions for us or themselves, however they are forever wise in their love. I can also look ahead to my daughters and granddaughters and know that they will experience this wonderful love that seems to be eternal as far as mothers are concerned. They are and will be role models to the future generations.

Maybe this Mother's Day we mothers can concentrate on being role models and accept the gifts and honors with a deep appreciation, whether we deserve it or not

Now what can we prepare for mother to express this special kind of love? Children can learn at an early age to be a part of this celebration. The very young can help to make this

BIRD'S NEST SALAD From an old cookbook.

Rub a few drops of green coloring into cream cheese, mixing well. Use just a little at a time for a delicate color like bird's eggs. Roll into balls the size of bird's eggs.

Arrange on a flat dish some small. well-crimped lettuce leaves; group them to look like nests. Moisten them with French dressing and place 5 of the cheese balls in each nest of leaves. The cheese balls may be varied by flecking them with black, white or red pepper.

At the "Chef's Taste" gathering at Shanty Creek, the chef from Garland served lingonberry sauce on smoked venison. It was delicious and reminded me that it is time to visit Punzel's Swedish Gift Shop near Buckley. I love to go there and I always buy my favorite lingonberry preserves. You could make this delicious ligonberry tort for mother even if she is not Swedish. She will be delighted.

Stir in almond extract and chocolate milk mixture.

Sift flour mixture on top and fold in gently but thoroughly.

Pour into 2 greased 9" cake pans and bake in preheated oven 350 degrees for 10 minutes. Reduce heat to 325 and continue baking 25 to 30 minutes or until a toothpick inserted in center comes out dry.

Cool several minutes then invert on a cake rack to cool completely. Spread lingonberry jam or preserves between layers. Frost the top with this

CHARLEVOIX COUNTY PRESS-May 9, 1990

Reg Sharkey's Northern Journal Loons appear, but are few

BY REG SHARKEY

Once more loons have returned to occupy ancestral nesting sites in Michigan.

But it seems to be an uphill battle to preserve these primitive birds.

However, there is a glimmer of hope for the approximately 300 pairs of nesting loons accounted for in the last tally by "Loon Rangers.'

In my over four decades as a "native" of this area I have watched loons nesting on Emmet County's Round Lake sandwiched between busy US-31 and M-119. When I first came up here in '47 the small lake seemed pristine with a couple of cottages on the southeast shore, and loons were nesting in the shallow southern bay. Barney Kleinhenz, a year 'round resident, who rented boats for fishing, encouraged people to refrain from using motors so that the lake remained serene and quiet. And the loons were successful in rearing young year after year.

But now this is no more. As a delegated Loon Ranger for Round Lake, I have seen shoreline development-condos and the likes-bringing in an influx of water activity that thwarts the reproductive efforts of these fascinating birds.

For the last three years the loons have been unsuccessful in rearing young. High-powered boats, some used for water skiing, have made it tough on loon chicks. And now those damnable motorized water water scooters-or fleas. whatever they are supposed to be called-are making their appearance.

Observing a nesting loon from my small car-operated john boat a couple summers ago I was enraged when a high-powered bass boat put in at the public fishing site, roared across the lake to a near shoreline to cast for bass. When the wake hit my little craft it lifted it up and continued on towards the nesting loon, and I though, "God All Mighty, the eggs will be washed out of the nest!" But, perhaps, it was the hand of God that calmed the waters enough save the nest from destruction.

So this is what loons in Michigan, and all over their nesting range must contend with.-

Why must we as humans be so selfish that we refuse to forego the artificial manmade pleasures for the fascination of observing God's creatures going about their daily habits secure and unmolested?

There is a glimmer of hope for Michigan loons. According to the latest report compiled by the DNR and the Michigan Loon Preservation Association loons have been taken off the endangered list and put on the threatened list.

But with the unrelenting pressure of continued waterfront development and related activities loons are still facing an uphill battle for survival.

In my book the nighttime crying of a loon has far more value that the snarl of a high-powered motor boat towing screaming water skiers.

Breakwall ready for installation Floatation Dock Systems, the added to the marina within a short company which will be installing the new experimental breakwall for the Boyne City Marina, said they will begin installing the breakwall possibly next week.

The long awaited breakwall which was supposed to have been installed last fall, was found to need a different system of anchoring after one of the sections was installed several weeks ago.

The anchors that were proposed by the company were large rocks, but they found they have a tendency to roll when placed on the lake bed.

The company decided that would not be the best for the breakwall, so they engineered a new anchoring system to replace the rocks. The rocks were picked up and were moved to other sites where the company is installing docks recently.

The new system consists of six foot square blocks of cement that are one foot thick. There will be two blocks for each of the five sections of breakwall. Each block weighs about 5,880 pounds, which is more than the rocks would have weighed.

Engineers for the firm decided this way would be better because the large blocks would hold onto the lake bottom better and would not rock the way the rocks would have.

If the installation is completed on schedule next week, the company hopes to complete the installation of the 35 slips that will be

The city will not have to pay for the experimental breakwall until it is okayed by the Department of Natural Resources. The DNR wants to look at the breakwall for the next three years to determine if it works in this application.

If the breakwall is approved, the state will pay for about half of the cost with the city picking up the remainder. Boating fees for the use of the rebuilt marina will be used to make the payment, estimated at about $180,000.

The city will be collecting dockage fees for the next three years to build up a fund for the payment.
