

Ready for boaters

Almost ready for boaters are these new slips in the Boyne City marina. The firm will have these slips ready for use this season within a few days according to city officials. The marina was filled this weekend with boaters and the new slips will add 24 more places for boaters to dock.

Riparian concerns drawing BC attention

Interest in riparian rights is drawing the attention of the Boyne City Commissioners as they continue to hear about problems along the Lake Charlevoix shoreline within Boyne City.

One resident asked about the legality of a dock that was installed and looks like it is out into the public's right-of-way at the North Lake Street access. He was told that after several visits to the site, the dock is completely legal and well within the property owners riparian area.

That dock issue brought up other riparian concerns as other docks may be infringing on city owned riparian rights in other areas.

The problem is that few know specifically where riparian rights head off of the shoreline. Some head out into the lake on angles other than straight off shore.

Those docks in the North Boyne area have a riparian heading southwest to the imaginary point where they all meet. Several docks in the area are pointed straight west and may be infringing.

Additional questions were asked about the installation of the new slips that are to be placed along the shoreline near the city marina. The city intends on installing several slips to be used as shoppers' docks along the shoreline between the present marina and the boat launch site. They are supposed to be installed before June 15.

Dave Seeley asked about the possibility of the city adding a dock out into the boat launching site at the Veteran's Park site and was told that will probably come next summer when the city builds a new dock for the north Lake Street launching site and will be bringing the old dock to the Veteran's Park site. Seeley asked if anything could be done for this season as he thought launching small boats at the Veteran's Park site could help lessen the traffic on the N. Lake site. He suggested that signage be installed to try to limit the boats being launched to under 14 feet to eliminate any insurance problems caused by launching larger boats into the shallower water.

Seeley offered to help with the installation using some of the old docks that were pulled to make room for the floating docks. He was told the city was thinking of saving one of the docks and that could be placed over by the launch site.

Seeley also thanked the commissioners for their stand on the proposed marina. One Water Street Company is trying to develop in front of the restaurant.

In other water related questions, Commissioner Bill

Grimm asked when water quality testing was to begin at the Peninsula Beach swimming area. He was told the tests would be done weekly and would be starting this week. The results will be included in the Commissioners' packets each week at Grimm's suggestion.

Grimm also asked that a letter be written to the Governor, State Representatives and others asking for some sort of property tax relief. He made the suggestion so that the commissioners could digest the matter before sending it out.

Grimm said that while the state average increase in assessments was only up eight percent statewide, it was up as much as 15 percent in Boyne City. He suggested that if the assessments continue to grow each year without relief, the state could just take over the operation of the city.

In other action, the commission tabled a presentation by the City Housing Commission until the director could appear. Commissioner Sandra Stanley asked that the war against army worms should be started. Grimm said that Dipol was very effective against the caterpillars.

News Briefs

This weekend tribal members from many native Indian nations and tribes will be gathering for the 9th annual Anishinabe Inter-Tribal Council Eagle Pow Wow at the council grounds located at the end of Mill Street in East Jordan. The events will start at 1 p.m. Saturday and Sunday.

The American Red Cross and the East Jordan Lutheran Church remind the community to stop by the church Thursday, June 7 between 1 p.m. and 6:45 p.m. and donate a pint of blood. The blood drive is for all East Jordan and area residents.

Although we haven't yet been hampered by the zebra mussel, a task force has been set up by the governor to study the mussel. They gained entry into the Great Lakes from the ballast water dumped by a foreign ship and attached themselves to shorelines, boats, municipal water intake pipes and have already choked off water supplies in some communities. The mussels, which have no natural predators in North America, also destroy fish spawning beds.

The East Jordan Lions and Lioness Clubs are looking for items to be donated for the auction on July 14th. They do not want clothing items but seem willing to take almost everything else. A percent of the proceeds will be going toward the Camp Daggett Project. To donate an item, call 536-2247 days or 536-3116 evenings.

With a three round salute, Boyne City veterans from the American Legion, the Veterans of Foreign Wars and the new Vietnam Veteran's Post remembered those who gave their lives in previous wars. The ceremonies were well attended this year as the crowd listened to former veterans expressing their thoughts and prayers. The Ladies Auxiliary placed wreaths in honor of those who served while the Boyne City High School band played taps and two other renditions.

Moore to take repeat trip to Lottery show

Michael Moore, who just took a trip down to Detroit for the Fame and Fortune Lottery Show May 12th, where he won a new Dodge Caravan worth $15,094, will be famous for another reason.

Moore is the first Fame and Fortune contestant to pull off a repeat as his name was drawn again last Friday during the taping of the show and he will again be heading down to Detroit to try to win the $50,000 Grand Prize.

Moore will appear on the June 2 show which will be aired on WGTU Channel 29 in Traverse City at 7:30.

Moore was selected by sending in a ticket that had three television sets shown. His ticket was first drawn out of a total of 20,000 tickets that are received by lottery officials, and then was drawn out of the 250 tickets in the barrel that survived the first drawing done by lottery officials.

Once the drawing is completed the tickets are then thrown away and the process is repeated the following week with a new batch of tickets.

According to lottery officials, every ticket sent in has the same chance to be drawn.

Michael Carr, the Commissioner of the state lotteries said "We don't have any restrictions on the number of times a Fame and Fortune player can appear on the show. We want contestants to continue playing the game after they have been on the show and it wouldn't be fair to block their selection."

Moore purchased his ticket at Mel's Service in Boyne City for the May 12 show and at Par-T-Pac for the upcoming show. Moore was quite surprised to get another phone call from Lottery officials.

Making good on a promise during the Memorial Day services was Warren Davis from the American Legion. He promised the Boyne City High School band would receive a donation to be spent for band uniforms last year during the services and this year, gave band teacher Rebecca Palminter a check for $1,000. He also said the check had earned interest and added another $100 check given to the veterans by the Boyne Falls Polish Committee.

BC Junior Girl Scouts plant trees

Understanding the serious need for the planting of trees to restore and maintain a healthy environment on Earth, the girls of Boyne City Junior Girl Scout Troop No. 280 recently contributed to reforestation efforts by planting evergreen seedlings in conjunction with the national observance of Earth Day. Trees obtained from the Charlevoix County Soil and Water Conservation District were planted at the scouts' homes and troop meeting place during the month of April.

The troop members decided to plant the trees after learning about the many environmental benefits which they provide. By attending the Eco-Fair held at the Emmet County Fairgrounds on April 22, and further studying the deforestation problem, the scouts discovered that trees not only beautify the environment; they also consume carbon dioxide, which is considered to be responsible for approximately half of the global warming trend; control climate, including reducing the heating and cooling needs of buildings; reduce polluting runoff by intercepting rainfall; prevent soil erosion; and provide shelter and food for wildlife.

East Jordan Garden Club news

The annual spring flower planting in East Jordan will be held during Michigan Garden Week, it was announced by Adelaide Richter, Civic Committee chairperson, at the May 21st meeting of the East Jordan Garden Club. The meeting, held in the District Library, was conducted by vice-president Jean Muha.

Garden Club members who signed up for the planting will meet on Monday, June 4 at 9 a.m. at the bridge and divide into groups for flower planting at Elm Pointe, the Medical Center, the Library, and at the park.

Mary Whitmore, resident ecologist of the U of M Biological station at Douglas Lake, was introduced as the day's speaker. Her educational talk was on the "Common Loon, Bird of Mist and Mystery". Whitmore told of the five different kinds of loon, that they eat fish, small invertebrates and aquatic plants, and that loons usually come back to the same nest after migration. Their hauntingly beautiful voice and equally striking plumage make them easy to identify. The Common Loon is currently a threatened species in Michigan, with an estimated population of less than 300 breeding pairs. The birds' hazards are all man-made - humans, environmental waste and fishing nets. The Loon is most at home on a lake. Its legs and feet are set far back on the body, providing excellent underwater propulsion, but making it difficult for the bird to walk on land. Whitmore also showed a video of the Common Loon by Peter Roberts, which she narrated.

The Federated Garden Clubs of Michigan will present a membership award to the East Jordan Garden Club during the annual convention held in Grand Rapids. It was also announced at the meeting that the Farmers' Market will be held on Fridays from 8 a.m. to 12 noon in the bank parking lot during July, August and September.

Tea hostesses at the May meeting were Alice Nesman and Helen Dudek.

The Humble Farmer

BY ROBERT SKOGLUND
The Cultural Center

One of the great things about living in the 20th century is the easy way we can get around. Nine hundred years ago Peter the Hermit might have inspired one's ancestors to travel in Europe, but there was a lot of fighting, murder and robbery in those days, and from what I've read, those who stayed on the farm were better off than their curious neighbors who yearned to gad about.

Today, however, it's not big deal to travel 200 or even 2,000 miles for a weekend. Two hundred miles is a simple four-hour drive on our new network of interstate highways, and a 2,000 mile plane ride takes no longer. Nowadays rural people need not look and feel like country bumpkins. A couple of hours in the family pickup brings them to the nearest cultural center. Ours happens to be Boston, where one can easily find a 17-dollar parking space in the basement of Copley Square and then relax and do the town.

Those who have sought out culture before know that door locks don't mean much in cities, so they do not leave anything of value in their cars. CB radios and radar detectors — anything that might be unscrewed, as a matter of fact — are unbolted the day before and left on the farm. This is part of the price of acquiring culture, but for those who occasionally need to experience the finer things in life it's worth it.

Our rural visitors are now in the cavern jammed with cars and a few out-of-town pickups beneath Copley Square. There is an elevator which will bring them up to the shopping mall where they can sit for awhile and watch the people swirl by. They have an hour to kill before the movie starts.

We pause here, however, because the people involved must not be named. This doesn't usually bother me, but in this case I've been told it better — if I know what's good for me. So let's call her "Ida" and him "Olle."

To continue, Ida and Olle no sooner plunk themselves down on a bench right there in the heart of the hustle and bustle of that great, big beautiful shopping mall at Copley Square, when along comes a big black guy who puts his foot through a plate glass window and reaches in and takes out a jacket. Ida is somewhat surprised, even though she's been to Boston before. "There is a police woman standing there with a little radio on her belt," Ida says, "but this fellow doesn't pay her no more mind than if she was a fencepost, and starts to saunter off with the jacket under his arm just as unconcerned as if he did his shopping like that every day. There are other people besides us watching, too, but nobody gets in his way or acts like anything's amiss."

"The police woman was on her little radio while he was doing his fancy footwork with the window, and before he's gone too far she's got three big policemen there. Can you believe this character with the coat simply tries to walk out around them just as if he's got something very important to do? Anyway, he's not about to give up the coat, so they try to take it from him, and I'll be darned if they don't tear that brand new coat clean in two."

"Well, the police can't talk him into going along with them quietly so they wrestle him to the ground, flip him over, and snap the cuffs on him. By this time there's a small crowd standing around watching and he's making loud noises about how the cuffs hurt. Some woman who's seen the while thing chirps, 'Wouldn't he make a good ad for that little radio they're always trying to sell to old people on TV? You wear it around your neck and when you get in trouble it says, 'I've fallen down, and I can't get up.'"

A few other black guys have showed up and they're asking why the police are hurting their black brother on the ground. I could see it wouldn't take long to start a riot if you went about it right.

"Olle and me got out of there. Outside, on the street, there were little pink papers under the windshield wipers. One was on the sidewalk and Olle picked it up to see what it was. It said, 'My name is Monique and I'd like to love you. Wouldn't you like to love me, too?' There was a telephone number with it. No, we turned right around went straight home. Olle figured we could only handle so much culture in one day."

This view shows the old city hall and fire station, complete with the then new fire engine for Boyne City. The fire department still has the engine, lovingly restored for parades. Other buildings seen in the picture include the Boyne City, Gaylord and Alpena head offices, which is still standing today as the location for the Buick Real Estate and Van Treese offices.

Jottings

BY JIM SILBAR

As I sit here in front of the computer wondering if what I am writing will carry through to the ends of time like a Shakespeare, or a Poe, or even a Hemingway, I wonder what they used to do if they came up with "writer's block."

Writer's block is a thing where the brain refuses to function in the manner which the writer wants.

The writer just wants his thoughts to flow out of the brain like water flowing into Lake Charlevoix.

Sometimes a dam is constructed by beavers or fallen logs so the flow just doesn't follow the course of the river.

But, I don't think I have ever had a serious case of writer's block. There are just too many things around these parts that attract my attention and get the old brain gears turning.

Sometimes they turn with a wobble, like the gear needs a new bearing to straighten out the wear on the gear. In my case it is when I come up with wild hare-brained ideas like putting a bridge over the lake, or even filling the lake with boat slips.

Lately, though, I have been falling out of ideas except for one that I heard Tuesday that sounded like a good idea for those with little space and a growing need to play golf.

This idea would be good for those who own just a few acres of land instead of the great amount a golf course would need.

On this few acres, you would construct about two golf holes and three different tees.

That way you could enjoy a game of golf whenever you wanted without having to apply for tee times at area courses. After all, you probably have to mow a lawn anyway, so why not make a couple of greens on each end of the few acres.

And then make three different tees for each direction.

Shooting from the one nearest the house, you could play down the course, hole out and head for the tee that comes back to home. After holing out at the second green, you would have to go to a different tee than you played previously. And so on... You would have your round of golf, and if you want to play eighteen, just keep on going.

I think this would be a great idea for those folks who have a long narrow lot.

This idea would lessen the amount of golfing pressure several have seen over the weekends when they could not find a place to play. You would just have to go out to the sideyard and hit a few.

Like all golf courses, you could build in the features that would make the holes interesting. You could have a water trap on one of the holes so you would become proficient playing over water when you go to someone else's house who lives on the lake. Or when you go out to a real course like Boyne Highlands or the Mountain.

Now I know it takes some time to figure out how to build a course, and even more time to allow the grass and other parts of the course to fill in and become beautiful.

I know that just by looking at my front lawn where I am trying to get grass to grow. It seems like it will take years for the grass to fill in where the moles have been over the winter.

Congratulations to our graduate

PIES

All through our country's history pies have been the ultimate dessert. New England's apple and the South's pecan pies besides all of those custard, meringues and all kinds of fruit pies between were made daily by our ancestors.

Huckleberry pie was a favorite in Michigan. After the forest fires went through Michigan their ashes left soil that was just perfect for the huckleberry bushes that grew there. Even the people in towns and cities had their day to pick berries. My Mother and Dad rode the old "Huckleberry Line" out of Flint which went from Flint to Fostoria. They would leave early in the morning, spend the day in the country and catch the train back home in the late afternoon with their pails full. Mother would be canning the berries all the next day. Nobody tired of huckleberry pie. In those days it was not a complete meal without pie. The cooks even made pie with vinegar when lemons were not available in our lumber camps up North; see All Barne's "Vinegar Pie." I made it for our historical society. It was good and they loved it!

I made pies often those first years of my marriage, then when my husband and daughter both started counting calories I stopped making them except for special occasions. Many of us quit making pies for this same reason when we heard of the cholesterol and calories in one piece of pie.

We still hunger for those delicious pies. I believe it when I see how fast pies disappear at potluck suppers. Now we are making crusts with graham cracker and other cookie crumbs without all that shortening. Also our vegetable shortenings are free from cholesterol now so I am all for making a pie for our family's special occasions; and what a choice we have of frozen, canned and fresh fruits that are available in our markets.

If you are going to make your own crust, you might like to try these "tips to remember" to make good pie dough. I clipped this from a newspaper some time ago.

1. Water and shortening should be chilled to help make flakier crust.
2. Chill dough after mixing it to relax gluten.
3. Handle dough minimally while mixing and while rolling out to prevent a rubbery crust.

4. Start baking in a very hot oven. The contrast between cool dough and hot oven causes air expansion and contributes to a light crust.

5. Lard and vegetable shortening produce flakier doughs than butter.

Here are a couple of special pie recipes from a Household Magazine, 1956. This was a time when many of us were making pies and the recipes were terrific. I

Starting with the premise that married couples fight, a safe assumption since considerable evidence points to it, modern marriage counselors conduct classes for the wedded on how to behave in a sportsmanlike fashion in marital combat.

Their ideas, explained by Patricia Rodriguez in an issue of USA Weekend, sound reasonable enough but assume that belligerent battlers can act reasonably too, a shakier premise. Still, these marital experts seem convinced that couples can follow their rules with proper instruction and forge fine marriages as a result.

"Fighting is healthy in a good relationship, but we teach couples how to do it," declares Morris Gordon.

His students devote 144 hours to learning how at his PAIRS Institute, a marriage counseling firm in Falls Church, Va. His wife, Lori, created the course, which features a daily "temperature reading" time for couples to promote domestic tranquility.

This takes place at a specific time each day and starts out with praise, or a kindly word at least, for the other by each partner. Then comes sharing information of interest or concern to the mate, followed by questions, if any, about what's been said.

Complaints come next, accompanied by suggestions on how to satisfy the aggrieved party. This part of the session requires mates to hold hands, make eye contact and not interrupt each other. No mention is made of prescribed facial expression, though, a tool more eloquent than words.

However that part turns out, the show must go on. The finale calls for sharing how each hopes the rest of the day will go, a move calculated to end the session on an upbeat note, assuming that the couple is still on speaking terms after the preceding, or listening terms at least.

Howard Markman at the University of Denver, founder of another marriage counseling program called PREP, has different rules for fighting but hardly easier to handle. He teaches that either partner can state his complaint at any time, but the other has the right to say, "Now is not a good time"; that is, so long as he or she sets up another time to get back to the problem within 24 hours. Then when the complaint is aired and each partner has made clear how he sees the situation, the problem can be worked on.

Another right Markman established is that either partner can call a halt to the discussion for the time being when he or she feels it's getting nasty. Both rights sound reasonable but the delays frightfully frustrating for the one who is anxious to air his grievance immediately.

Also, Markman warns against dragging other complaints into the discussion unless directly related. (He assumes that battling partners agree on what's related, a true leap of faith.)

Maybe these courses can and do

1990 Senior Intern applications sought

Public service is a challenge that every American should accept, Sen. Mitch Irwin said today in announcing a recruitment drive for 1990 Legislative Senior Intern candidates.

"I would like to urge all eligible citizens wanting to learn more about how state government works to apply for an internship," Irwin, founder of Michigan's Legislative Senior Intern Program, said.

"The annual senior intern program is an ideal opportunity for seniors to learn first-hand the legislative process," Irwin said. "Having knowledge of how Lansing works will aid our northern Michigan seniors in communicating their needs and goals." "Each year, I welcome the chance to host a senior in my office to assist legislatively, to help respond to constituent concerns, and to become more acquainted with the State Capitol," Irwin added. "I encourage all interested seniors to apply for an internship post."

This year's internship program will include workshops on legislative procedures, effective lobbying methods, and networking to promote senior concerns. This year's program is scheduled for September 10-14.

Applications can be obtained by calling 517-373-1725. Housing will be provided for seniors at the Radisson Hotel in Lansing, Irwin said. Transportation to and from Lansing is the responsibility of the intern, although Senator Irwin provides a stipend to help cover those costs.

To be eligible for an internship, a senior must be: 60 years old or older, in good health, actively involved in senior programs and activities in his or her community, and willing to commit to the week-long program in Lansing.

Deadline for applying for an internship in Sen. Irwin's office is June 15.

Irwin said he was looking forward to receiving applications from interested north country seniors and added that any questions regarding the program should be directed to his office.

Charlevoix residents came out in full to help plant the thousands of petunias on Bridge Street in Charlevoix last Thursday. The project brings a brighter, more colorful look to the city each summer.

Beltone celebrates Golden Anniversary '90

When automobile radio builder Sam Posen decided to design and build a new hearing aid for his friend, Sol Decker, back in the late 1930s, it sparked the creation of a company that eventually would help more than three million people to hear better.

This year, Beltone Electronics Corporation celebrates its 50th year of helping hearing-impaired people to enjoy life more through better hearing.

The company has grown since Sam and Faye Posen built and sold their first hearing aids in a tiny Chicago office in 1940. Half a century later, Beltone has the largest single facility for the manufacture of hearing aids and audiometers in North America.

Beltone employs 1,100 people in its Chicago headquarters and 100 in its Canadian plant. Authorized dispensers at 3,300 offices and service centers across the United States, Canada and in 47 other countries worldwide select and fit Beltone models.

This growth reflects the evolution of a dynamic hearing aid industry—an industry that barely existed 50 years ago. Back then, a hearing aid was a bulky, three-part set of vacuum tubes, wires and batteries wired together with heavy, black cords.

This changed in 1944 when Beltone introduced the Mono-Pac, the industry's first single-unit hearing aid which could be worn discreetly in a shirt or coat pocket. Hearing instruments continued to shrink as Beltone and other manufacturers began utilizing mercury batteries and transistors in hearing aid design.

As hearing aids became smaller, different varieties also became available. In its early days, a standard hearing aid was purchased off the shelf—a "one size fits all" approach to hearing loss. Today, Beltone manufactures the widest range of hearing instruments in the world, from tiny in-the-canal models to powerful eyeglass and body-worn aids.

To see how quickly the industry has changed, consider that nearly 80 percent of today's hearing aid wearers choose in-the-ear models. Most of the others select behind-the-ear instruments. Eyeglass and body-worn varieties make up less than 1 percent of hearing aid sales.

Less than 10 years ago, only one third chose in-the-ear hearing aids. Most (about 58 percent) wore behind-the-ear models and another 10 percent had eyeglass or body-worn models.

The circuitry within hearing aids also has evolved dramatically. Shortly after World War II, printed electronic circuitry replaced the conventional soldered wiring used in earlier instruments. Eventually, microcircuitry enabled companies to customize a hearing aid for each wearer.

Today, Beltone produces its own microcircuitry using computer and laser technology. Computers select each custom in-the-ear hearing aid's electronic components from more than three million possible combinations. Due to this technology, today's hearing impaired person is able to hear better than ever before.

With half a century of experience, Beltone is looking ahead to the next 50 years. Beltone president, Larry Posen, says micro-instrumentation and "intelligent" amplifying systems are top priorities for Beltone.

"We're already downsizing our models so they're less noticeable and more comfortable," Posen said. "I expect hearing aids of the 21st century to be even smaller and have micro-computers in them. These will memorize a person's hearing loss and adjust automatically to changes in the hearing environment."

These tiny, computerized hearing aids of the future represent the dramatic progress made by Beltone and other hearing aid companies since Sol Decker became the first Beltone customer 50 years ago.

To schedule a hearing test or receive a copy of "The Beltone Guide to Better Hearing," call the Beltone dispenser in your area, listed in your local telephone directory, or call 1-800-621-1275 in the U.S. or 1-800-387-3744 in Canada.

Free Fishing Weekend coming June 9-10

BY REG SHARKEY
 "Last year, thousands of Michigan residents and nonresidents experienced the fun of fishing Michigan Free Fishing Weekend clinics and derbies, statewide," said DNR Director David Hales. "That's the spirit of this weekend, passing on fishing fun, skills and ethics to new anglers, and it's reflected in the growing numbers of free fishing events held each year."

So expounds a rather nonsporting Director of our Michigan Department of Natural Resources about the June 9-10 license-less fishing weekend.

Well, by gosh, ol' Dave is really thumping the drum to go out and help yourself to all the different species of fish finning around in the pristine waters of our watery State.

But if the pleasure of angling in Michigan revolves more around just getting out and commuting with Nature by wetting a line, I think Hales has another think coming.

Show me a first time line dunker who might derive satisfaction from buying all the angling paraphernalia necessary to cross swords with a piscatorial battler and then go home without a trophy, and I'll buy you a short beer.

Then, too, what about some of those streamlined beauties finning about in some of our 11,000 inland lakes or 36,000 miles of rivers and streams and our wold famous Great Lakes fishery?

First of all fishing laws are getting so complicated it takes a Philadelphia lawyer to interpret them, for after all just because there is no fishing license required for the two-day splurge doesn't mean you can throw the book (fishing guide) away; and perhaps, by the time you read the Fishing Law Digest, the free fishing weekend will be history.

But the, suppose as a neophyte free fishin' weekender you are lucky enough to latch onto a fish. You probably should consider turning the blighter loose 'cause like hidden taxes you'll be taking on something that can't do you any good. You could be laying yourself open to getting a shot of polychlorinated biphenyls (PCBs), mercury, dioxins, polycyclic aromatic hydrocarbons (PAHs), polybrominated biphenyls (PBBs), and chlordane. In all but five bodies of water included in the advisory, PCBs or mercury are the chemicals of concern.

Of course the powers that be say that in small doses you don't have to worry too much about those poisonous chemicals. Sort of like saying a cigarette a day won't do you any harm.

But be that what it may, go ahead and fish free this Free Fishing Weekend for after all you may not catch any of the finny tribe, and if you do a one time meal of your fishing prowess won't put you six feet under.

Good luck!
 Parting Shot: Best take your fishing guide with you, especially if you're just a free fishin' weekender. Who knows, you might catch the Loch Ness Monster and it might be verboten!

There is nothing like a good mess of panfish almost weekend, you can fish to your heart's content, if you ready for the frying pan. With the free fishing are content to deal with things Sharkey tells us.
