Boyne commissioners going after violations

Boyne City Commissioners are starting to take action to enforce some of their zoning ordinances as they agreed to authorize the City Attorney to initiate prosecution procedures against Mark Birnbaum for zoning ordinance violations at his residence on West Michigan Avenue.

Birnbaum constructed a new home on the lakefront lot he recently purchased and in so doing, constructed the home so it does not meet the sideyard setbacks for the Zoning Board of Appeals one month ago asking for a variance to allow for his building to become legal but was denied. The house sits about one foot on the west side and six inches on the eastern side from being legal.

He was given several options at that time to clear up the problems, but the city has not heard of the conditions being met. He was given the option of tearing down the structure to make it fit right with the ordinance, or purchase additional property along the sides of the structure from the neigh-

Another issue which would have asked of the commissioners that would initiate another action against Northern Associates for violations for the Harborage Maritime Park on East Division Street was resolved by the firm before it came to action by the commission.

A third discussion was held concerning the after-the-fact application the developer had made to add fill along the waterfront of the property along Front Street. Several residents have complained that the fill was seeping into the lake during a rainstorm and possibly hurting the lake fishery.

The developer had constructed the fill to a height approved by the Department of Natural Resources but was one foot lower than that the Corps of Engineers requires.

The Commissioners authorized sending a letter to the two governmental bodies asking that the project be treated the same as any other project and that it be closely monitored to make sure that it followed what the permit had allowed.

The letter, asked by Commissioner Sandra Stanley, also asked that the two agencies come up with some consistency on the proper height of fill and agree to the same height requirements.

Commissioner Bill Grimm asked if the letter could also include the Corps setting a bench mark so that others in the future would have some point to work off of as they add fill or do any other work along the waterfront.

Those action items out of the way, the Commissioners approved the use of the Veteran's Park for the annual fireworks to be held on the Fourth of July. They also approved the closing of Boyne Avenue and Lake Streets for the annual parade which will start at 10 a.m. on the Fourth.

Liz Huff asked if the cast iron park benches could be put out again in the downtown area and was told that was being done although some of the benches have been broken. The cast iron is very brittle and is susceptible to breakage.

Millage issues pass in EJ, BF

Millage issues passed in both East Jordan and Boyne Falls school districts at the annual school elections held Monday, East Jordan voters agreeing to a onehalf mill renewal that will provide for textbooks, reading books and resource books. The renewal passed with 223 yes votes to 170 no in what school officials called a normal June vote.

Business and operations director Ruby Dipzinski was pleased with the outcome saying that the community supports their schools when there is a need.

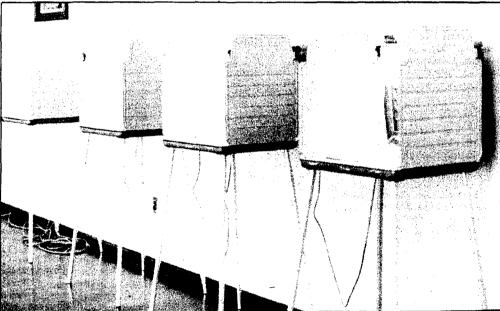

Boyne Falls voters renewed a three year operating millage of 21.37 mills which represents about two-thirds of the millage the district has been levying. Voters approved the issue with 80 voting yes and 36 voting no.

In what some considered to be a very light vote, Boyne City school district voters cast a total of 206 votes returning Judy Follette to a four-year term on the board, and electing Dale Owens to a two-year term. Owens garnered 115 votes in the only contested portion of the ballot while Linda Simpson had 78.

In East Jordan, Larry Chanda, running unopposed, received 334 votes to be renamed to his third four-year term on the board. East Jordan voters also approved levying the maximum allowable millage for one more year.

Although the amount of increase in the State Equalized Value (SEV) for the district was only 7.3 percent, it was too little to trigger the Headlee Amendment. School officials put the matter on the ballot because they were anticipating a larger increase and had to have ballot language approved before the SEVs were

Are you ready for it? Superintendent concerned over Alt-ed port the spending of money to fund

Boyne City School Board members gave their support to the continual funding crisis that plagues the Alternative Education school in Boyne City, at their monthly meeting held Monday night.

The board heard a short discussion about some concerns of Superintendent Bob Nakoneczny during discussions of the new Charlevoix County Consortium that will be taking over the program if all of the details between the five school districts can be worked out.

The details involve the way money will be divided from the fiscal agent, tentatively the East Jordan School District, and the need for a building program to create funds to build two schools that would be for the alternative education and adult education programs.

One school would be constructed in the Ironton area while the other would be on the peninsula side of the ferry.

Nakoneczny told the board that if the funding arrangements can't be worked out, he wondered if the and could generate about $3,500 Boyne school district would sup- per student which would pay all the program.

Board members agreed that the program, which just finished its first year, was an asset to the county, and even if the consortium can't fund the program as it stands, the school district would make up any difference in order to keep the program growing and developing.

Nakoneczny said "We really need this county-wide program to help lessen the potential load on county social and welfare systems. The problem is getting others to see the vision we see." He explained that the kids can be successful if given the chance and that the school district has to give them that chance.

The board agreed to support the program as long as it is at a reasonable expense

Nakoneczny said he is meeting with Chip Hanson, the superintendent of the East Jordan School system which would be handing the money for the program as they are still in the State Aid formula the costs and provide the buildings for the school.

Boyne City also has to get an agreement from the Advance Board of Commerce who offered the building to house the school last year. Nakoneczny anticipates that the alternative program would have to use the building for several more years while it builds up a fund to develop the two schools he says are needed to run the program. He said the building being used now will be needing some improvements and he is trying to see where the money will be found in the budget to do some of the improvements.

The board then approved a resolution to borrow up to $1.5 million in tax anticipation notes to cover the school expenses from September to January when the tax monies start coming in. Last year the district borrowed $1.2 million and Nakoneczny told the board that was a little tight on the funding. The year before the district borrowed about the same as being asked for next year. The board then recalled both Shelly Martin and Sherry Sheldon as both had received lay-off notices earlier this year when funding for their programs was not certain. Funding will again allow the district to retain the two administrators.

The board then approved the purchase of 29 new computers, 25 more for the high school so that the school could develop another computer room in place of typing. All of the computers would be networked together to teach the typing skills.

They also purchased three more computers for the elementary, middle and high school administrations so they could be connected with the central computer in the superintendent's office.

The board also agreed to fill all coaching positions for next year with the exception of the football coach as the former coach, Jack Gebauer, resigned last week. The administration has started a search for a new football coach, according to Joe Tibaldi, the high school principal.

They also authorized the transportation of middle school band See BC Schools/Page 6

Land conservation through trusts

One of the most exciting frontiers of the conservation movement in the United States today is the effort to protect natural land and open space. From Maine to Hawaii and from the Florida Keys to Alaska, nearly 800 non-profit organizations called land trusts are working round the clock to insure that careless development does not gobble up the most imnortant natural resource we have, land.

The fundamental principle upon which land trusts operate is simple: the best way to protect an important resource is to acquire it. Trusts around the nation are showing that there is no shortage of people who are willing to put their money where their mouth is to protect natural land. Land trusts have protected over 2,000,000 acres of land through outright acquisition and conservation easements, which involve restricting future uses of property. Trusts are protecting fragile natural areas threatened by urban sprawl in metropolitan areas, large ranches bordering National Parks, scenic trails and even picturesque farmland around towns and rural

In northwest Lower Michigan, the land trust movement is having an impact. The Michigan Chapter of The Nature Conservancy, a nation-wide organization well known for its efforts to protect endangered species, owns a number of important properties. The Walloon Lake Association Trust protects a number of important natural areas surrounding Walloon Lake, and the Leelanau Conservancy, a new trust, has completed two large and important preservation projects in its first two years of existence.

The Little Traverse Conservancy, established in 1972 by local residents interested in protecting land in Emmet, Charlevoix, Cheboygan, Mackinac and Chippewa counties, is typical of some of the larger land trusts in the nation and shows what private conservation efforts can accomplish. When the Colonial Point Forest, 286 acres of spectacular red oaks and other old-growth species, was bought by logging company 1984, the Conservancy served as a rallying point for local residents interested in seeing the land preserved. The effort raised $1.5 million to save the land. In a similar display of support for land conservation, the people of Charlevoix donated their time and money to complete a $700,000 fundraiser to acquire North Point sand dunes, a beautiful area of Lake Michigan dunes whith three threatened species of plants and beautiful scenery. Both areas are now in public ownership and are open for all to enjoy.

The strength of the land trust movement in northern Michigan is typical of the sort of support land trusts are receiving around the nation. In the last five years the Little Traverse Conservancy has raised over $5,000,000 to acquire natural land for the enjoyment of the people and the benefit of wildlife and watersheds. Nationwide, many more millions have been donated by people who see a need for individuals to work to protect natural areas in their communities. The movement continues to gain strength.

Land trusts are not the only answer to the many environmental problems faced by our society. But they do represent proof that people are becoming more aware of the need for all of us to act, with our hearts and our checkbooks, to address the problems we face before it is too late. The success and unprecedented growth of the land trust movement shows that people are not only thinking about land conservation, they're doing something about it.

FATHER'S DAY

I find myself becoming quite emotional when I think of Father's Day, as I recall the fathers that I have known who loved their families and worked hard to provide for them through the years. My first thoughts are about my own father, born in 1876 in Lapeer County, Michigan. What a different world it was when he was young. Michigan was mainly populated by farmers who raised most of their own food and bought only a few staples at the local grocery store. Here is an advertisement in the Clare County Press Oct. 1, 1880, when Papa was four years old.

"To the people of Clare and Surrounding Country:

As we have been supplying the Patrons of Industry for the past four months at a certain per centage for Cash, we have concluded to sell to everybody on the same basis FOR CASH. Below we give you a few quotations:

So Fathers take note!

Good strawberries are usually abundant on Father's Day. This is what Roger Williams, the founder of Providence, R.I. in 1636 wrote in his "Key to the Language of America.

"The strawberry is the wonder of all the fruits growing naturally or in parts where the natives have planted. I have seen many times as many as would fill a good ship within a few miles of Compasse. He also said that, "The Indians bruise them in a mortor and mixe them with meat to make strawberry bread."

In making your strawberry shortcake for Father's Day you might want to follow this suggestion on how to serve it; from an old cookbook.

STRAWBERRY SHORTCAKE "While shortcakes bake, wash and hull berries, crush half the berries and sprinkle generously with sugar. Sugar the remaining whole berries. Take shortcakes from oven and while still hot, split in two layers, dot surfaces with butter. Drain crushed berries (save the juice) and spoon over one layer, cover with second layer and place whole berries on top-place in oven about 5 minutes then pour the fresh juice on top and serve with plain or whipped cream." Personally, I believe that the oven should be turned off before putting the shortcake back in. Sound delicious? As you can see the oldtimers took it for granted that everyone knew how to make shortcake. Now, I make my shortcake from the directions on the box of biscuit mix. It's always Happy Father's Day!

Night Flight is the newest, largest and most exciting ensemble from within the AFLC Band of Flight Concert Band, This cohesive piece group combines traditional big band instrumentation with modern music technology, resulting in a unique blend of jazz and contemporary sounds.

The AFLC Band of Flight was founded in 1942 at Wright Patterson Air Force base near Dayton, Ohio. The various ensembles within the unit travel more than 100,000 miles in performance annually for millions of people throughout the midwest.

Some of the other events and activities which are scheduled for the 2nd annual Air Fair on June 16th include a fly in for pilots, airplane rides over Otsego County and an Air Show featuring military aircraft, biplanes and old war birds. All activities will take place at the Otsego County Air-

"Gaylord is extremely fortunate to have been selected as a performance site by this high a caliber of Air Force Band," commented Herb Swan, Air Fair ch-chairman.

Cancer fundraiser set for June 22-July 4

Have Fun-FIGHT CAN-CER-Win prizes is the theme of a Cancer fundraiser during the Festival of Classics week, June 22 through July 4. For a $1.00 donation, participants can either try for a hole-in-one at the Boyne Rapids Adventure Golf on M-75 in Boyne City, or bowl three balls at Paul Bunyan Lanes on US-31 in Charlevoix for a winning score. One-half of the proceeds at each event is donated to the Northern Michigan American Cancer Society (each county will be selling advance tickets). 50% will be returned as prize money, with winners receiving certificates for their share of winnings redeemable at many participating businesses in Boyne City or Charlevoix.

Get the family or your friends together for some friendly competition. Play often— you're helping the Cancer Society help everyone. You can pay as you play, or purchase advance tickets from Cancer volunteers. This fundraiser is coordinated by the Boyne Country Snowmobile Club.

Ware-withal by Gail Ware

If "Olly, olly oxen free!" and other shouts of children's games seem to ring out more clearly this spring, likely it's not because the voices of the young have gotten hut louder. because background roar that covered their cries has been replaced by a sedater sound, a clicking whir; 'tis the sound of the old, grey mower, and it's pretty much what it used to be, too.

Reel lawn mowers, the kind powered by people not gasoline, have come back big in 1990 for philosophical clear reasons. Whether firm views can prevail over not so firm bodies is a shakier

(The old style mowers have been continuously used at cemeteries and golf courses, but mostly only diehards or those with small yards have lately used them around home.)

The demand for motorless lawn mowers started with the ecologyminded who oppose the noise and air pollution of the newer models. Then, due to the layer of charm that tends to settle on practices of the past for nostalgia prone folk, making the recalling more rosy than the reality, demand for the mowers spread and has now outpaced production.

Likely the supply will catch up soon, though, and it could come about the time those who consider themselves fortunate to have found one, and already used the thing several times, have had their fill of reminders as to why they bought a gas powered mower in the first place.

For instance, small twigs a gas powered mower rides right over. A hand-powered model often picks them up and winds them around the shaft between the wheel and the frame bringing forward (or backward) motion to a halt. Removing them is not the stuff good memories are made of.

As for stones, those that a gas guzzler hits, nick or dull blades, but the machine keeps right on going. Stones stop reel mower pusher and pushee in their tracks until the offending object is found and flung out of the way.

Which brings up the time element. Motor powered mowers move faster whether the operator is afoot or astride, and there are hallgames to be watched on weekend afternoons.

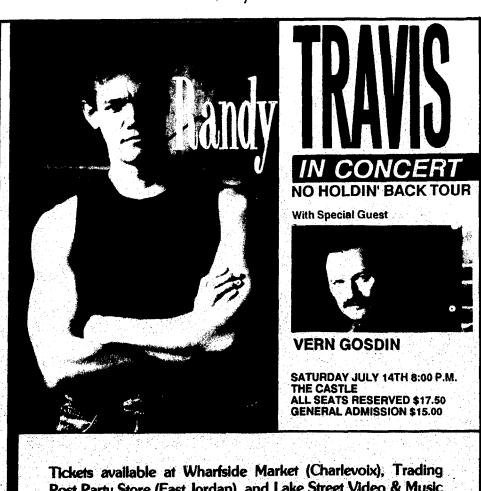

Now to the heart, or rather, all the muscle of the matter. One may think that it's just arms and shoulders that do the work. But the day after or same day of lawn cutting, the body knows better and says so. Head to toe, all parts of the body do, and not only muscles but tendons, bones too, speak up. Even flab complains although in time, it won't, so it's said, because it will simply melt away, a pain for pounds trade-off.

A clicking whir and children's voices (Is it "Olly, ooly oxen (or) ochen free!"?) beat a fumy roar any day, but what a toll on a body. But not on a wallet $75 - and some are bright red now, too, not that color cures pain.

The comparatively low price could, though. What was formerly spent on equipment, could be spent hiring a youth to operate it. Then one could indulge an attack of nostalgia and be ecologically correct without hurting. (Youth doesn't mind pain when the pay is good enough.)

There sat the big-eyed, still fuzzy little owl on a neighbors stone

Alerted to the fledgling's whereabouts by a neighbor, with camera in hand I hied myself to the

We've had a pair of barred owls using our woods as part of their hunting territory for a couple of years now. They serenade us with their "who cooks for you" deep throaty call beginning at twilight and on through the night.

I had a hunch that the oldsters were nesting nearby, so I wasn't too surprised to see the fledgling.

Not sure, however, if the owlet was OK I called Sue Butler, licensed animal rehabilitator of Boyne City, asking her if she thought the young owl was able to fend for itself, which turned out to be a silly

Nevertheless after talking with Sue I went back to check on the owlet, and it was gone. Concerned that someone had picked it up, perhaps the well-intentioned, but owl ignorant person that had a left a portion of banana as food, I knew the little meat eater would be doomed.

But my concern would soon be laid to rest.

That evening my wife mentioned a soft whining sound that seemed to be coming from our nearby woods. The following morning I heard the same sound and after a half hour of listening and looking I found the owlet high up in a basswood tree, and while observing the little fellow I heard a similar sound not too far away, and I soon located either the mamma or pappa perched close to the trunk of a big maple.

All day long there was the soft little whine of assurance twix adult and baby.

Our night hooters And then caught without my camera mamma flew in to junior with a red squirrel. Dashing to the house for my camera I returned just in time to shoot a frame. However, light and position of the owls didn't give me a good shot. All through the week I observed junior and mamma carrying on what owls are supposed to do rearing their kids.

Now barred owls, unlike the great horned one, do hunt during the day so junior didn't lack nourishment. Unable to fly very well the little guy toured his high aerial refuge by climbing parrotlike from limb to limb using his large feet and bill.

After one rainy night I observed the mamma grooming junior evidently trying to dry the little

Then this last Sunday morning I vent to the woods and listened for the soft owl communicating calling. It was silent in the woods Junior must have found his wings and followed his mamma back across the road into the deep

Hopefully we'll continue to hear the night sounds of the hunting barred owls while dropping off to sleep, or to hear them on awakening at daylight in the early

This young owl used his beak and large claws to climb and pull himself up the tree to safety.

Red Cross ground breaking set

The Red Cross will be breaking ground for their new blood center to be located on the corner of. Division and Mitchell Streets in Petoskey.

The ground breaking ceremony is set for 1 p.m. Thursday, June 28.

Construction of the new 15,000 square foot building will begin shortly after the ceremonies and will be able to process about 60,000 blood products annually.

Officials expect it will fit the area until the year 2010.

The Humble Farmer

BY ROBERT SKOGLUND The Trust Fund

Gramp Wiley, who gives lots of free advice to his friends, met his match a couple of years ago. Our neighbor Mark was thinking about marrying a girl he'd been keeping company with, but he couldn't quite bring himself to do it.

As he explained his situation to Gramp, the 78 year old sage listened intently, just as you'd expect Ann Landers to do.

Gramp already know that Mark had been married some years before to a wonderful woman. She could do this and that and everything else besides, and everyone thought Mark was lucky to live under the same roof with Life moved along comfortably for five years or so and then Mark noticed a change. His wife became restless and unhappy. She'd go for long walks by herself and sometimes she'd cry.

When Mark spoke to his fatherin-law of these symptoms, the older man said, "Ah ha," and gave Mark an illustrated book entitled "The Joys of Sex."-

Mark's wife started going on little two or three-day business trips and once or twice a week she'd call Mark to say she was having supper at her girlfriend's house and that she'd be home in a couple of

An 11 year old who watches soap operas could see through that plot in a hurry, but it had never occurred to Mark not to trust his wife. Instead, he'd switched toothpaste brands four or five times and had stopped clipping his toenails in bed. He was really surprised when a woman from down the road came in one day and said, "Mark, your wife ran off this morning with my husband. What do you intend to do about it?"

We never gossip about our neighbors but somehow Gramp Wiley and everyone else in town already kn ew all of these things about Mark.

"I'd like to marry Susie," Mark confessed, "but Gramp, I just can't trust her. Since my wife ran off I haven't been able to trust any woman. If susie's ten minutes late, I automatically assume shes been having coffee and cookies with some other guy."

Gramp, who had been married to the same woman for 57 years, knew he wasn't qualified to comment and was honest enough to admit it.

"That's something you've got to work out with Susie," was all that Gramp would say.

Mark took Gramp's advice and confessed everything to Susie.

When she learned that he didn't trust her, she got so mad she cried. Then she got all mushy and hugged him and said that she had to marry him because she'd never be able to love anyone else.

They agreed that the problem was in Mark's head and that they couldn't be really happy until he got over his hang up about not being able to trust her. A psychiatrist would be expensive, but they realized that money isn't important when it's used to buy happiness.

So three times a week Mark visited the man Susie called "The Shrink." In a year the money Mark had saved for a downpayment on a nice home was half gone. But Susie hugged him and encouraged him and said that the money wasn't important conpared to their happiness.

During the second year of treatment, Susie began dropping in on Mark's hour long sessions. When they'd leave Susie would imitate "The Shrink's" funny lisp, and they'd laugh about it all the way home. "Why do you suppose he's let himself get so overweight?" she'd ask. "Doesn't his office smell funny. I bet he never changes his socks."

But Mark was making progress and at the end of the second year his psychiatrist friend said he saw no need of continuing the visits. Mark agreed. He had learned to trust Susie, and he had no more money for treatments, anyway.

Gramp Wiley, who hears all the news that's fit to tell before anyone else, told me about Mark's last visit to the psychiatrist.

"It was the last visit, so it only made sense that Susie go in with him. The three congratulated each other all around because Mark had really learned to trust Susie. And Susie pointed out that Mark's cure was so complete that he trusted all women.

'And that's when she went over and stood by the shrink. He put his arm around her and they told Mark that they'd been seeing each other for about six months. They'd accidentally met in a restaurant one day and had had coffee together while they discussed Mark's progress.

"A coffee date once or twice a week had moved along to other things until they'd decided to get married.

"Mark said they told him they'd waited until he was completely over his trust hang up before they told him, but I personally think they were waiting for the builders to complete the new wing on the shrink's summer house."

Remembrances

The North Boyne School back around the turn of the century was located near the former Beulah Home for Boys on the first bluff above the lake. The school was used for many years before being torn down due to the dwindling population of Boyne City after the lumber years started fading into the past.

BY JIM SILBAR

One of the interesting things about this job as publisher-editor is that you sometimes run into people who have a sense of vision.

Those kind of folks are unusual in that they sometimes see things way out there, and I mean way

Not that they are crazy folks, but that they really have their head screwed on in such a way that they think about the future a

And in some cases, the way they think comes true when the future arrives with the next sunlight.

One of the people with that sense is Boyne City School's Bob Kanoneczny.

It marvels me when he starts talking about what could be if this or that occurs in the field of

Right now, he is talking about the opportunities of educating the "at risk" student.

Your first question is what is an "at risk" student. Well he or she is someone who may think that dropping out of school may be the right thing to do. It may seem to be at the time when it is done, but for most young adults, the need for education is growing more and more each day.

It is getting difficult to find someplace in the work-a-day world that does not have or use computers. Only through education of some sort can a person learn what is involved with a machine that can be typed on or can figure out some kind of math and crunch number so even an accountant can understand what is going on.

Other persons with that idea of a vision are Rick and Dave Smith.

Not that many will agree with the two, but they have a vision of the area that in some cases is totally different than what others are hoping to see in the future.

Sure, they're developers and they want to see the area grow, but even they can see the use of rules and regulations to control the growth. Heck, they probably helped write the rules in some cases.

Another visionary is Randy Frykberg. He will tell you what could happen to the community if you can get him to sit still long enough. His only problem is that ne is doing too much all at the same time to be able to sit down and talk about it.

In East Jordan, Superintendent Mike Dionne has the vision. He can see his town developing in the years ahead and he is working to develop everything so it can do that without too much trouble.

There are plenty businessmen with a visionary outlook in the area also. If they did not have any vision of what they thought their business would be not be in business. The great hope is that all with like in the future, then they would the ability to envision the future of the area, the people and the what's coming up will be able to work together to make this area one of the best places to live, work, and

In my case, I can envision a lot more than what I can agree to, but that is part of what makes me, me.

Sure. I sometimes have crazy ideas, just like the next guy, but who knows, maybe my crazy idea may just start the gears working
