Finally, river project begins

After a wait of over 10 years, work on rebuilding and protecting the shoreline in Old City Park was started this week. The project will have rip-rap and a sidewalk along the water when it is completed in a few weeks, according to officials from Soil and Water, the agency providing the grant to complete the work. C.H. Smith Company workers started by cutting and pulling the stumps of a few dead trees along the river.

Advance Bd of Commerce disgruntled with Alt Ed

Members of the Advance Board of Commerce are a little bit disgruntled at the Boyne City Schools, said Thelma Behling at Monday night's July school board meeting. She said the group would like to see the Boyne City Board of Education live up to the commitments it made when it agreed last year to use the Commerce building for the Alternative Education Program.

The agreement calls for the school system to provide some improvements to the building and to maintain it so it can be used by others, but according to members, nothing has been done.

According to Behling, the members told her that the women's bathroom was supposed to be fixed by the schools, and other improvements that were talked about should be done.

But the school system is having trouble just trying to keep the Alternative Education program alive, Superintendent Nakoneczny said. He told school board members that there was money in the budget to do about $20 to $25,000 worth of repairs that are needed on the building, including new plumbing, a water heater, new furnace and insulation in the walls and ceiling.

But with the Charlevoix County consortium idea not getting off the ground this year, the school administration has been spending the last few days just trying to see how they could keep the program

Behling asked the school administrators to see if something could be done before the annual meeting of the Commerce Board yet this summer and was told that the administration is trying to find money. Board member Dave Guzniczak told the school administration about a plan being offered by his company that could install a water heater at no cost to the school system.

Behling asked the board to consider making some of the repairs in order to keep the program con-

Nakoneczny told the members that if the consortium idea had been accepted by East Jordan, there would have been enough money to ensure the repairs would be done. He reiterated that the alternative education program was one based on "brick and mortar' and expressed concerns that other school systems have not jumped in with financial support. He said the program was designed to help in several areas and had asked the County Commissioners to lend their financial support as well as the students they are keeping in school saves the county money by not having the students involved with the court system and the social services.

In the meantime, he and program director Shelly Martin are trying to make sure that the amount of money the school

In prior action, the school board members elected Robin Hissong to again head the board while Guzniczak was reappointed the Vice President, Bea Reinhardt, Secretary and Behling Treasurer. One board member said that retaining the same leaders will help save the system some money because they would not need new signature plates for the paying of

The board then named committee members who will be serving on the three main committees and approved a consent agenda that will provide raises for substitute teachers and staff members. Also included in the consent agenda was the naming of banks to act as depositories for the various accounts the school runs.

They then set a special meeting date of July 24 at 5:30 p.m. to award the bids for the tax anticipation notes, set the dates of board meetings to the second Monday of the month and named co-curricular assignments for the middle school.

The board then hired Colleen Ameel as the new Special Education instructor for the midfifth grade teacher.

They then agreed to purchase a new pick-up truck from Tallberg Motors and approved the listing of the student Building Trades house. It will be listed as about 90 percent complete with all real estate companies being able to sell the house at a 5 percent commission. The house is at 528 Lewis Street and is open to the public for viewing.

Marina proposal gathers opposition momentum

With the Corps of Engineers finally sending out a notice that opens the public comment period on the proposed marina facility in front of One Water Street Restaurant, opponents are gearing up again to urge the disapproval of the issue.

The marina proposal calls for a 65 slip marina, enclosed in a rock breakwall that reaches out into the lake about 280 feet.

Opponents say the proposed site is prime fish habitat and the facility would disturb the lake bottom and possibly harm the conditions for the present Peninsula Beach swimming area.

The proposal is being sought by the owners of One Water Street and Company, the group that brought One Water Street Restaurant to the community.

Opponents are setting upameeting Thursday, July 12, which will be held at the City Hall immediately after the Parks and Recreation Board meeting in order to explain plans and ways to oppose the project.

The city has already expressed they are in opposition to the plan, along with Parks and Recreation Board. They will be sending another letter to the Corps this week expressing their concern with the project.

Those wishing to oppose the project or support it can also send letters to the Corps expressing their concerns.

If enough comment is gained, the Corps may set up a public hearing on the matter or they may just turn down the request.

Historically, the Corps and the Department of Natural Resources (DNR) have rejected other requests for the use of public waters for private concerns.

Those opposing the marina hope the Corps and the DNR continue with that plan.

In case they don't and the Corps approves the use of the lake, others express concerns over the taking of public lands as the group intends on using a riparian map that was created before the lands were filled about the turn of the century. The riparian map shows the city would have to give up land that is presently Sunset Park and that land would revert to the One Water Street Group.

Boyne City accused of not enforcing rules

"I can't believe the city would make an ordinance and not enforce it." said John Howard at the Tuesday noon meeting of the Boyne City Commission. He was referring to the city owned boat launching site on North Lake Street after learning the city was not enforcing the marina lauch fees that were established last year.

The matter was brought before the commission by Gene Mont who told the commissioners that there were plenty of boats being launched without paying the fees. He said the part-time help was not able to cover all of the time required to reach the people launching boats. Mont asked that the City Harbormaster also put in some time to try to get the fees as well as cover the boat slip fees at the city owned marina.

City administration told the commissioners that while not everybody was paying, most were. Mont said that is a little like shoplifting at an area store, saying that wasn't the legal way to do business. Mont is a member of the Parks and Recreation Board of the city which developed the cost structure for the launch site. He asked that the police department make three or four trips through the site to ensure the people launching boats are found and made to pay. He also asked that another employee be hired to help with the situation.

Another employee was not covered in the budget, he was told by City Manager Randy Frykberg, and if another employee were hired, it would have to be through the City Commissioners adjusting the city budget, Frykberg said the entire launch fee system was still in the learning stage and may have to be fine-tuned.

Commissioner Vic Ruggles suggested that the new launching fees were still not a mandatory thing and that he did not see the problem of not reaching all who use the ramp.

It was suggested from the audience that a person be hired on a percentage basis with them getting a percentage of the fees collected. Frykberg said he would meet with Mont to see if he would be willing to help out. In other action, the Commissioner approved the use of the boat launch site as a pull out place for the Ironton Ferry this winter after being asked by Road Commissioner John Kujawski who said pulling the boat out here in Boyne' City would save the county money and time as they plan to work on it this winter getting it ready for the Coast Guard inspection it has to undergo.

Kujawski said that the county would be willing to pay all costs for the use of the site. Allowing the ferry to be drydocked in Boyne would save much time as the crew working on the ferry would not have to travel back to the garage from a great distance in order to get tools or parts that are needed, he said.

The Commissioners agreed and will allow the county to pull the ferry and store it on the city launch site this winter. The county said they expect to pull it out after the fall season and put it back in before the spring rush of boats

The Commissioner also will be sharing in the cost of paving 440 feet of Earl Street which was asked by residents of the street. The cost for the city share was estimated to be $1,355 while the residents will be paying $1,000. The difference in the costs is that the city is picking up the full cost of the intersection with Lincoln Street.

The Commissioners then applauded the work of three city. volunteers who have completed a

Get informed, involved

It must be an election year.

And every election year the government bureaucrats seem to want to justify their existance so they can look good to whomever is elected.

This means the bureaucrats are looking at spending the taxpayers' money to build new facilities that they say are needed.

Of course they are going to build something they say "is for the future", and it becomes a Taj Mahal.

For instance, the county court system is asking the County Commissioners for a new courthouse. The Health Department is going to build a new structure that they will rent from some private firm. The school systems are looking at additional buildings. And of course, the salaries of those bureaucrats keep going up every year with more money and more benefits.

All of this is going to come out of our own pockets.

The bureaucrats seem to think that all of us must have deep pockets because they keep asking for more and more.

We happen to think that most of us are about taxed out and tapped out as far as having additional money that could be spent to satisfy the politicians and the bureaucrats.

Because of that, we would hope that our apathetic community would stand up and get involved to try to control some of the costs of government.

We don't see politicians, for example, asking to take less money to do the job they do, and we won't call it work as most don't do anything hard enough to sweat.

We don't see teachers asking for less money for teaching so that more money could be put into programs that would teach students how to count coins and make change, or how to fill out an application for a job, or how to spell correctly. We don't even hear of educators teaching students what to wear when they make a job application or go to an interview.

We don't see bureaucrats with any ability to think for themselves. Or have any kind of common sense. They can only go by some rule that was not written for the application being considered.

The only way to stop the increase in costs to taxpayers is to write letters, get involved, get informed, and let the government know what they should or could do in any

For most parts, doing nothing may become better than spending more tax dollars on some idea that doesn't have merit in the first place if only because common sense shows the right course.

We don't need additional governmental facilities and their higher costs.

Let the proper people know how you feel. And do it today before the money is spent.

Americans are not known for doing things halfheartedly, and some, the non-ists, appear to be running true to form when it comes to mending their ways. But expert opinion on the matter holds that what they're doing, which consists of not doing lots of things, is really not moving at all.

Non-ists earnestly focus on avoiding evil or that which they consider harmful or might prove to be so down the road anyway, and regard this as a complete way of concerns This view sociologists and psychologists, who don't share with them the theory that just because one is doing nothing that might not be good for

Once upon a time, bands played in this gazebo, the original which was located in the Old City park, almost every weekend during the warm days, but the gazebo fell into disrepair and was eventually torn down. After a few years, a donation of a new gazebo to the city was made by Gordon Flodquist in honor of his wife Nellie. Today starts another tradition when music comes back to the gazebo every Wednesday during the summer. Next week Chris

BY JIM SILBAR

As I was reading a magazine the other day, a February issue as I recall, I remember getting intrigued with an article about an artist who only created canvasses of buildings and roofs.

He never painted anything with people, or even painted people.

Now that is not something that all of the artists in the world are commanded to do, learn how to paint people, but to spend an entire career painting roofs and all of the colors and shading that are created by roofs, I found in-

I can accept that painter, even though my idea of painting a roof would be to ask why not just reshingle it. And my approach to painting people is still stuck back in kindergarten when I used to draw stick figures.

So I cannot say that I can qualify as a genuine "artiste" like others in the area.

And when I go to craft shows, or to art shows, I can get real interested in the amount of work it pleasant to someone's eyes.

If it wasn't pleasant, it probably wouldn't sell and the artist either becomes a starving type or doesn't paint what doesn't sell.

Unless he or she becomes relatively famous during a lifetime and then dies. When that happens, the value of the paintings becomes astronomical.

Like I don't think I could ever afford a Matisse, a Degas, or any of the artists who were masters of the craft.

I even get chills when I look at one of those paintings up close, thinking that here is something that should be protected from guys like me who may inadvertantly damage something that is worth more than I even could think.

So I look forward to the art shows, the craft shows, knowing that I can't afford to buy something, and also knowing that if there were the time back in my youth to have learned how to master the art of painting something besides walls, ceilings, and doors, I too could perhaps do

Of course there is some "art" that I do not agree with, but that is the privilege of art. You don't have to like any of it if you don't want to.

I remember sometime years ago going to an art show and seeing what was called metal sculpture. Some guy had taken a bunch of tin cans, heated them with a torch, improperly brazed pieces of brazing rod onto the cane and called it art. Seems he was intrigued with the colors left by the heating process.

To me, such art is glorified lan-

If a person is to be a sculptor, then he should invest in tools to work stone, and start buying large pieces of the stone so he could end up with many small pieces. Or he should learn the procedures and requirements or casting materials like bronze, steel, iron, etc. If he was real rich, he could practice using gold or silver.

And he should polish up his skills of welding, or grinding and polishing the material.

But, like I said, art is in the eyes of the beholder. And that is controlled by the beholdee who toiled and created the item.

Special water quality monitoring program on Lake Charlevoix

This year, the Top of the Mitt Watershed Council is conducting extensive testing of dissolved oxygen (DO) levels in Lake Charlevoix. It is a follow-up to the Watershed Council's Five year Monitoring program, performed in 1987, which provided comprehensive testing for 13 water quality parameters. The study is funded two-thirds by the Lake Charlevoix Association and one-third by the Watershed Council.

Deep lakes with high water quality usually contain significant DO in their bottom waters throughout the summer. A decline in DO concentrations in the bottom waters is caused by decomposing organic matter. As a lake becomes more nutrient enriched, it supports more algae, which increases the amount of organic matter decomposing on the lake bottom. An absence of DO can have negative impacts on deep water fish and trigger a chemical reaction that releases nutrients from the sediments.

Watershed Council staff members will sample the lake to measure the temperature and DO levels at different depths. Lake Charlevoix will be test seven times from May to September of 1990, in May and late September of 1991 and 1992, and seven times between ice out and fall turnover in

The study will provide baseline information about Charlevoix's water quality and will help the Watershed Council and the Lake Charlevoix Association suggest measures to protect the

POTATOES

By this time in our North Country, the flowers that we planted are in full bloom, our vegetable gardens are beautiful to behold and I can hardly wait for the early potatoes. We always called them the new potatoes. It seems that we never tire of some foods though we do welcome a change and new potatoes just fit into our needs.

I love to go to our local farmer's market and buy those teeny white and red potatoes; just scrub them good and cook, eating them "skin and all." How I hunger for those new potatoes creamed with fresh garden peas. These tastes and yearnings never seem to leave us. The perfect early summer meal in my estimation is the old-time creamed new potatoes and peas, a slice of ham or fried, fresh-caught fish and strawberry shortcake or watermelon.

However, I have decided that I do not believe the old myth that 'You can't teach an old dog new tricks." We oldsters are learning something new daily. I learned recently that the early colonists in our country obtained the Jerusalem artichoke from the Indians which later enjoyed a wide popularity in Europe until they were replaced by the potato. How about that? John Randolph of Williamsburg wrote in "A Treatise on Gardening by a Citizen of Virginia" in referring to the Jerusalem artichoke (penned between 1760 and 1775.) "Some admire them, but they are of a flatulent nature, and are apt to cause commotions in the belly." I am glad it was replaced by the

BASQUE POTATOES 6 medium potatoes, peeled 6 slices bacon 1/2 cup chopped onion

1 teaspoon salt

1/4 teaspoon black pepper, freshly ground is best

Cook the potatoes in lightly salted water until almost tender. Drain off the water and return to low heat. Slide the pan back and forth a few times to completely dry the potatoes. When cool enough to handle, cut in 1/8" slices and set aside.

In a heavy 12" skillet, a non-stick type is best, fry the bacon, turning frequently until crisp; transfer to paper towels and crumble into bits.

Pour off all the fat leaving about 4 tablespooons in the pan and save the rest, if any. Add the onions to the pan and fry about 5 minutes until soft but not brown. Then carefully add the potatoes to mix with the onions. Then cook over low heat until bottom side is brown. Slide a spatula around the edge of the skillet and as far under the potatoes as you can without crumbling them. Plance an inverted plate over the pan and grasping both plate and skillet with holders, turn them over. Slide the potoatoes back into the skillet to which you have added more bacon fat if it is not the non-stock

Cook 2 to 3 minutes to brown the bottom, then reduce the heat to low. Meanwhile beat the eggs, salt and pepper until combined and pour over the potatoes and sprinkle with the bacon bits.

Cover the skillet and cook 5 to 6 minutes at low heat until eggs are every way, in the '70s and '80s and feel guilty about it now. And they're frightened too, feel that life has gotten out of hand what with the insider trading scandals, the '87 stock market crash, the AIDS epidemic plus the bewildering array of information that the electronic age has spewed out at them.

So they figure that if they can get hold of their lives by way of self-denial, they'll feel better, more in control of things. Whether it works or not isn't known, but they seem to enjoy themselves keeping tabs on the latest thing not to do anyway.

This focusing on the negative hasn't escaped the notice of politicians, the most successful ones defining where they stand for by repeating what they're not for. It doesn't make for bright political campaigns, but it wins elections...

And restaurants that have ken to serving "nonnitrate, taken to serving nonindustrial" food do booming business. Nonindustrial? Never mind. It's a "non", so it's good.

Perhaps psychologists are right about the cause of non-ism. Certainly they're right that people can't get on with their lives by simply avoiding what is or may be harmful. But likely most won't stick with non-ism long anyway, Americans being too exuberant for such a listless lifestyle. Meantime, psychologists should relax, stop fussing and consider that people are doing what Nancy Reagan told them to when she said: "Just Say

STATE FINALIST DRIVER-Larry Essenberg of Ellsworth participated in the recent State Championship School Bus Roadeo in Eaton Rapids. During the roadeo, Essenberg, a driver for the Ellsworth Community Schools, took written tests covering state laws, conducted a pretrip safety inspection and maneuvered a school bus through a skill course requiring difficult driving maneuvers. The state roadeo featured 52 participants who qualified for the event by finishing among the top drivers at one of 16 regional roadeos last month. Laurie Bullard of Swartz Creek won the state title and will represent Michigan at the National School Bus Roadeo July 18 in Seattle. Final preparations set scene for Charlevoix grand opening

K mart Corporation has announced that employees at the new K mart store located at 06600 M-66, North are busy preparing for the grand opening on Sun., July 22. Charlevoix officials and K mart officials will take part in a brief ribbon cutting ceremony at the store on Thurs., July 19 at 8:30 a.m.

"The new Charlevoix K mart store is designed to carry a full line of merchandise, making shopping easier and more convenient for customers," said Bill Gryson, regional manager of K mart's Midwestern Regional Office, located in Hoffman Estates, Illinois. "The Charlevoix store is part of a nationwide effort to align the company's products and presentation with the changing tastes of American families."

Plans for the grand opening include substantial savings for K mart customers on items such as Havoline Supreme motor oil and Scott paper towels.

Along with discount prices on quality items, customers will be greeted by friendly associates, assisted in finding merchandise and given the opportunity to win a gas powered mini truck and trailer complements of Havoline Motor Oil.

Free balloons, hats, yardsticks, memo pads, crayons, fishing lures and other items will be given to customers by clowns at the grand opening and a local radio station will air remote broadcasts.

There are 126 K mart stores in Michigan including the new Charlevoix store and there are now approximately 17,200 employees.

K mart Corporation serves America with over 4,000 retail outlets in all 50 states in the United States and in Puerto Rico and Canada. K mart, currently operating 2,325 K mart stores, is also the parent company for Pay Less Drug Stores, Builders Square, Waldenbooks, PACE Membership Warehouse Clubs and The Sports Authority.

Getting forgetful? Improve your memory

Your memory. If you don't use it, you're sure to lose it. Sometimes you forget things you've known all your life. Other times you can't remember where you left your keys or your glasses. It is frustrating, but you can improve your memory with a course offered by the Burns Clinic Foundation. The class is set for Tuesday, July 24, at 10 a.m. at the Burns Clinic classroom at 560 West Mitchell in Petoskey. Designed for senior citizens and other interested persons, the one time, free of charge class will be taught by Burns Clinic Health Educator Therese Green, who says you can remember her name by thinking of "green trees". This is only one of the techniques to improve your memory that Green will discuss. The three types of memory: sensory memory, short term memory, and long term memory, are important topics in the class.

Your sensory memory is what you received by the five senses: taste, smell, sight, sound, and touch. Many times we don't remember what's going on around us because we don't pay attention. And as we age, and our hearing or sight isn't as sharp, our sensory perception lessens. Thus, our sensory memory is not as capable as it

Short term memory lasts from a few seconds to a few minutes, and is a conscious thought process. For instance, you're introduced to someone new and a few minutes later you cannot remember their name. The name was in your short term memory bank, and you lost it after just a few minutes.

order to remember something from your short term or sensory memory, you must store it in your long term memory. This is done by making use of the information and make other associations to remember the event. Techniques such as plays on words, ie, "green trees" for Therese Green, paying close attento surroundings, and tion visualization are useful in storing events in your long term memory. There is no charge for the Memory Enhancement Program sponsored by the Burns Clinic Foundation, but pre-registration is required. Call the Burns Clinic Department of Health Education and Nutrition at 616-348-2134 to register and for more information.

and down, across valleys, through tim-ber and brush, and in the open.

A good bow is like / an extension of the hunter. A bowhunter must be totally familiar with the bow, the arrow and the sights. Once shooting a bow becomes second nature, and accuracy is guaranteed, only then is a person really ready to hit the woods in search of game. True bowhunters plan on taking only one shot at big game. They learn the habits of the game they seek, and when they make their draw and release, the result is a perfect hit.

So you'll have to excuse me now, it's time to turn off the baseball game, set aside my cold drink and pick up my bow for an hour of target practice.

Every morning we are awakend by the babylike crying of young crows putting on their heartrending plea for chow.

When we began luring a pair of crows to fuel up at our place in the spring of last year we didn't anticipate being adopted as stepparents to a noisy quartet of young

This spring the two previous year moochers were back in late March. Well and good we thought. But in our "glad to see 'em" attitude we overlooked the fact that common law cohabitation has its ramifications: that as sure as the sun sets and rises the out-ofwedlock marriage would produce offspring.

Well, anyhow, about two weeks ago the god-awful squalling began. And now we're stuck with the blighters until the youngsters strike off on their own.

But like most human offspring they will mooch off the efforts of their elders until they put a foot down and refuse to cram food into gaping maws.

It's interesting, however, to see the young ones put on their heartrending show, crying and vibrating their wings as if starvation was just around the next bush.

But gradually the young crows are beginning to pick up the tricks of the trade.

Now they sometimes come on their own, but still give those starvation concerts.

With observation of the old birds the youngsters have learned to pick up all the bits and pieces of scattered food, putting it in a pile and then cramming the works into their maws before flying away.

Lately they have developed a most interesting routine. Each one, picking up as much as can be carried, will fly to a nearby stump. There they deposit their loot and like a bunch of human kids enjoying a picnic they load up with the goodies, then fly away to sleep off their orgy

And the oldsters, knowing the tricks of the trade, take advantage of our ground level bird bath.

If the consistancy of the bread isn't to their liking they take it to the bath and dunk it before it goes down the hatch. Whether they

But, regardless of some of their not so good habits, the woodland Black Barts are intelligent and desirable avians; and some of the people I have known could possibly learn something from the feathered Einsteins.

That team, called the "Staff", and headed up by Boyne City basketball coaches Rob Neu, Gregg Upton, Tom Neidhamer and Mark Ameel, took the final game played among thirty teams vying championships

The three on three is patterned after the Gus Mackler Tournaments and involves teams of four players, three playing and a substitute, working their hearts out trying to win a half court game where baskets count one point. Two if the player can hit a goal from outside of the normal three point line. Fifteen points wins the game and moves the team to the next level of the stepladder con-

the rim as well. In the later stages of the game, the play for the division championship found the opposing team trying for long shots to try to even up the match. But Upton scored the last point as he evaded and worked around the

In the girls division, the 12 to 14 age bracket was won by "4 Score" a team from Bellaire and Central composed of Dhana Lockhart, Shana Lockhart, Susan Sheppard and Katie Goodwin. In the 15 to 17 category, the "Humphrey Heifers" from Boyne City took the win. The players for that team included Kim Stadt. Dawn Archembault, Nancy McCullough and Kristin Harvey.

In the 18 to 30 division for the girls, the "Bad Girls" took the championship back to East Jordan with a team consisting of Kristy Miller, Jill Burt, Lisa Dody and Dawn Hankins.

In the boys division, the "Bad Boys" from Charlevoix took the 12 to 14 age bracket with Don Jess. David Skeel, Brandon Webb and Zack Pajtas. The "Dead Beats" of Central Lake and Bellaire took the 15 to 17 classification with a team consisting of Brian McDonough,

The team that the coaches played on was in the 18 to 30 category and they showed they could play against some of the younger players, just a few years out of the high schools of the area. They took the ball to the net and scored almost every time as Greg Upton found his way past the defenders time after time. Free docking for Venetian boat paraders There's incentive to enter Charlevoix's Venetian Boat Parade (Saturday, July 28) - free docking for the fireworks, plus no entry fee. "The Boat Parade was the reason for the first Venetian Festival," comments Charlevoix Chamber Executive Director Jacqueline Merta. "So to encourage boaters and keep the tradition, we are setting aside the main docks in Round Lake. And this year, we will let the sail boats, which parade first, at 8.00 p.m. tie up at the docks during the lighted boat parade, which doesn't begin until 10:00 p.m. The lighted boats will join them at the docks during the fireworks.

"We're expecting a very successful parade this year based on the turnout last year and growing interest in maintaining this Charlevoix tradition," Merta continued, explaining that the parade "will have only two divisions, sail boats under sail and lighted and/or decorated boats."

Charlevoix's Venetian Festival became a tradition 60 years ago when a group of summer resorters decided to celebrate summer with a decorated boat contest in Round Lake. Over the years the Venetian festival has grown to include landbased festivities as well, but the boat parade has remained the focus of the event. In the last several years members of the Charlevoix Yacht Club have volunteered to help reinvigorate the parade, by organizing entries and working with the Chamber of Commerce. The Chamber will see that non-participating boats are compactly moored in the center of Round Lake.

How can you guarantee that you could replace your home? No problem.

Auto-Owners Homeowners Policy offers optional guaranteed home replacement cost coverage for homes that qualify. It's broader coverage—so you'll never run out of money for covered losses. It may be more economical than your current policy that doesn't include guaranteed home replacement. Just ask your "no problem" Auto-Owners agent to tell you how Homeowners protection can be no problem for you and your home.
