Boyne schools to seek $12.4 million for expansion

Boyne City School District voters will be asked Tuesday, September 25th, to approve the school district borrowing not more than $12,410 and issuing general obligation bonds so that the school district can start on an ambitious building program that would include all three schools with additions, remodeling and refurbishing.

Specifically, the school district is asking for $884,000 for the present elementary school which would be used to remodel the building for grades kindergarten, first through third grades. The money would also be used to purchase equipment, erect and furnish additions and partially re-equip the school. The present middle school would become an upper elementary school and would hold grades four and five. The $1,140,000 projected to be spent on that school would include the erection

At the present high school, a projected $1,599,000 would be spent to upgrade the cafeteria and provide other shared facilities for a new addition which is projected to cost about $4,602,000 and which would house grades six, seven and

An additional $2,275,000 would be spent to build a new auditorium at the high school complex and another $900,000 for improvements to the athletic facilities for all three schools.

The School Board authorized asking the voters at a special board meeting held Monday night.

Last week, the board members received a preliminary report from Kingscott Associates, an architectural firm the board had hired after learning the recommendations of the city-wide Facility Utilization Study (FUS) Committee. The preliminary report said the firm of, furnishing and partially had met with teachers, school ad-remodeling of the facility to house ministrators and FUS committee members to get their input into what was needed for the school

Without preparing any conceptual drawings, the firm presented three different options to the board ranging from $13 plus million to the $15.5 million.

The board elected to go with the least expensive plan, thinking that the most the voters would approve was the least expensive one.

The three plans, one which would have provided for almost all of the needs the teachers and administrators desired, one inbetween and finally one that would provide the minimal needs program.

Superintendent Bob Nakoneczny told board members that he thought they picked the best plan for the community. "It's not the Taj Mahal", he said Monday.

Board members then discussed the hiring of a construction management firm to work with the architectural firm when the bond issue is approved. They asked Nakoneczny to set up meetings between the facility committee and three or four firms that would act as construction supervisors. From that, the committee will choose one or two that would appear in front of the full board. After interviewing the firm and its personnel, the board would name the firm. After the election, the firm would be hired.

School board members seem to think the voters of the community will be supportive in their quest to relieve classroom pressures the district is facing.

Nakoneczny said Monday that the district will be okay for this coming school year, but he doesn't know about the 1991-92 school year. This coming school year, all classrooms at the elementary and middle schools will be used. Band students will be bused each day to the high school for classes so the former band room can be utilized as a classroom. Incoming students going into the middle school next year may be facing the use of some portable classrooms or more students going to the high school for classes.

The school district has known for some time that it would be running out of space for students. Class sizes of about 100 to 120 students have been incoming for the past five years and are now in the fifth grade, filling the present middle school. The next few years will see those students filling the present high school to its rated capacity.

The present senior class is one of the smallest classes the district has had in the last few years with about 70 students. The incoming freshman class has over 100 expec-

To pay back the bond issue, voters will be paying about two mills more than the present. Nakoneczny said the payback of the bonds will be structured so that no more than two mills will be

Some debt retirement millage will be reduced as the bonds paying for the high school will be retired leaving the property owners within the district having about a one to two mill increase in their property taxes. It will take about 30 years to pay off the proposed bond issue.

After the board approved the asking for the bonds, Nakoneczny told them that "your action is historic. It will be meaningful to every child in the educational system for years and years to

In other action, the board approved the purchase of new band instruments for the growing music department band. The school authorized the spending of $7,981 for drums, Sousaphone, and various saxophones.

They also approved having a potluck dinner between the board and the school administrational staff families at the end of August.

Boyne Falls looking

It will be back to the pile of resumes of applicants as the Boyne Falls School district had both final candidates turn down the position last week.

The candidates were in the final selection process when one accepted another offer while the second, after being offered the position, turned it down.

The school system is looking for a replacement to Chuck Dobson who resigned at the end of the school year to take a position in Alaska.

Superintendent Charles Smith was hopeful the position would be filled soon as he was in a similar position last year before the board hired Dobson about three weeks into the school year.

The personnel committee of the board met Monday night to go over some of the other applicants for the position and will continue to search for the right candidate to fill the position.

The Commissioners a contract with the state for the grant which will see North Lake Street repayed and improved this fall as well as Altair Drive in the Industrial Park.

The grant, which took three years to get to Boyne City after the state approved it, but failed to provide money for the program, was based on the economic need of the city and was given for the amount of traffic going to the two plants located on the street along with the shopping center. Tourism also had a small factor in the grant as the road leads to the Young State Park just outside of town.

The road will be repaved and the low spots will be corrected by Hödgkiss and Douma Contractors. They were the low bidder on the project which will have the state paying up to $208,613 of the cost. The city will be providing 25 percent of the money.

Work is expected to begin shortly after the Labor Day weekend and will include the roadway from about State Street to Michigan Avenue. Completion date is set for the first of November.

The city also announced that they will begin the flushing of fire hydrants within the city. The hydrants are being flushed starting with the hydrants closest to the water plant and then working out to city limits.

The residents may notice their water will be rusty after the flushing is done in their area. They are asked to let some water run to help clear out the system leading from the road to the house.

Boyne plant honored as best in state

U.S. Environmental Protection Agency (EPA) Region 5 today announced that the city of Boyne City, MI, received the 1990 Operation and Maintenance Award as the State's bestoperated wastewater treatment

The award was presented at noon on August 7, 1990, at Boyne City City Hall by Environmental Engineering specialist David Stoltenberg.

The Boyne City plant, which is in a high-value recreational area, has an exemplary record of pollutant removal. The award is based on the plant's practice of: -adding ferric chloride to aerated lagoons to control algae growth while removing phosphorus; varying the rate of discharge from the aerated lagoons to allow equipment maintenance to be scheduled during periods of zero flow: and

-close control of chlorination to protect the quality of Lake Charlevoix.

In addition, the esthetics of the plant have been improved to enable it to fit into a recreational setting, which includes a beach, a park, a marina, and a hotel and restaurant.

The Boyne City plant receives 400,000 gallons of wastewater daily while serving a population of 3,800. Industry contributes about 10 percent of the flow.

The facility is supervised by Michael Banfield, superintendent. The city manager is W. Randolph Frykberg, Ph.D. The plant was designed by Williams and Works, Grand Rapids, Mich.

Either the horses are getting stronger, or the Boyne Falls Polish Festival Committee should find some more men to sit on the sled the horses pull. The judges ran out of metal to put into the sled, so some heavy men re added to try to get the horses to stop pulling.

Polish Festival soggy but great

Although it sometimes got soggy, and the vendors in the flea market had to cover their wares to protect them, the 16th annual Boyne Falls Polish Festival will go into the record books as a lot of tourists, locals and resorters made their way to the many activities of the festival. The committee again worked together and pulled the entire community into helping with the festival, one of the top attractions of the area each year.

Kristin Harvey of Boyne City was recently selected to represent Michigan on the National Rural Electric Cooperative Association's (NRECA) Youth Tour Committee.

Her selection was made recently while she and Anna Taylor, also of Boyne City, were participating in the NRECA Washington, D.C. Rural Electric Youth Tour.

The two Boyne City High School juniors won the trip to Washington, D.C. in an essay contest sponsored by their electric cooperative, Top O' Michigan Electric Co. Trip expenses were paid by Top O' Michigan.

As a Youth Tour committee member, Kristin will attend the NRECA's annual meeting Feb. 3-6, 1991, in New Orleans and will return to Washington, D.C. next summer as a junior staffer for the 1991 Youth Tour.

"Kristin is exuberant, enthusiastic, outgoing and showed real leadership ability," said Mike Ruda with the Michigan Electric Cooperative Association (MECA) who chaperoned the Michigan delegation's trip. "She is well suited for this honor and will represent Michigan well on the committee.

"In fact, we had an outstanding group of teenagers from Michigan at this year's tour.'

Kristin and Anna were among 13 students representing electric cooperatives in Michigan who participated in this year's tour. The Michigan group joined some 1100 students representing electric cooperatives throughout the United States at this year's program.

They toured historic sites, met with their legislators and participated in other activities sponsored by NRECA.

Anna is active in drama and 4-H. She is a National Honor Society member and also tutors elementary students. Her future plans are to become a teacher.

Kristin is a National Honor Society member and is one the school honor roll. She is active in student council and varsity basketball and track. She is also a sixth grade camp counselor and a youth basketball camp counselor. Her hobbies include swimming, tennis, creative writing and reading.

NRECA and MECA are service organizations representing electric cooperatives, including Top O' Michigan, on a national and statewide basis respectively.

Diana Terrell of Traverse City was here on Monday and took her sisters Maryanne Watkins and Angela Skrocki to lunch at One Water Street in celebration of Maryanne's July 23 birthday. Mrs. Elizabeth Harrington of San Jose, California has been here this past week visiting her sister, Dr. and Mrs. Hylon (Vivian) Heaton and family. Earlier in July, the Heaton's daughter, Emily Heaton, of the Bahamas was home. the first time Emily had been to Boyne City in five years. She was able to join the group of 30 who were here for the Heaton-Meyer family reunion.

Monday marked Grandvue's 100th year anniversary celebration and it was reported they were having a wonderful time!

On Saturday, July 28th, 140 of the Reinhardt family gathered for the first Reinhardt family reunion. It was held at the Clarence and Hilda Reinhardt home on Deer Lake. Some even camped near there on Friday night, as some came from many points throughout Michigan, with Lyle and Elaine West coming from Texas and other descendents of Clarence's dad's brother Will's family, who came from Oregon. All enjoyed various outside games, swimming, and the pot luck dinner. which included prime rib roasts, donated by Ron, Terry, and Dale Reinhardt. In keeping things straight on who's who. Sue Reinhardt Hobbs arranged family bulletin boards of pictures and Jamie, daughter of Dale Reinhardt, constructed a T A L L bulletin board of the Reinhardt family tree! The five living descendents of John and Anna Reinhardt are: Mildred Stoltz, Emma McGeorge, Helen Howard, Carl Reinhardt, and Clarence Reinhardt. Their five deceased children (whose descendents were at the reunion) are: Edna Locke, Earl Reinhardt, Ernest Reinhardt, Ada Ness, and Otto Reinhardt. The gala event ended around the evening campfire, with a sing-along and music of the S.S.B. Band. A good time was had by all! Approximately 100 friends and relatives gathered at the home of the Rev. and Mrs. James Larson on Friday evening, August 3rd, for an open house for their daughter Karen and husband Larry R. Williams, the son of Larry E. and Irene Williams, who were married in Charlevoix earlier that morning. In spite of intermittent rain, the spirit of joy and congratulations was not dampened, as all enjoyed the special time and the lovely effect of the canopied buffet table in the yard, which was decorated in the wedding motiff, using Karen's favorite colors of pink and white. The buffet table of delicious food, a beautiful 'pink & white' wedding babies breath and miniature pink ward to the next reunion.

The Humble Farmer

BY ROBERT SKOGLUND

Everyone has to have something that they're number one at so's to have something to brag around to their friends. My bachelor friend Greensleeves can talk for hours about the countless times he's been stood-up, rejected, humiliated or betrayed by women.

"Did I ever tell you what hap-pened on my first date with Porkie Pigg's ex-wife?" Greensleeves closed his eyes and grimaced at the thought before comtinuing. "I hadn't been around too much 10 years ago and didn't know what to expect after an expensive evening on the town."

I said, "If it still stands out in your mind after all your more recent failures it must have been exceptionally horrible.'

"On second thought, I won't see this in the newspaper next week, will I?"

Looking my friend squarely in the eye, I said, "If what you've done is bad enough, if I'm convinced it will titillate the public, it's my duty as a newspaper columnist to get it into my editor's hand as quickly as possible." "The public does have the right to know," he mumbled truthfully. "But how come you never write anything about our friend Winky? It might be true that I have bad luck when it comes to my relationships with women, but Winky goes around looking for trouble. There's a difference. He and I were sitting around home shooting the breeze with a couple of friends about one o'clock on a Sunday morning when Winky sees a rusty pair of antique leg irons I'd been planning to sell at the Old Gaol Museum down in Wiscasset.

'Just to be funny, he snaps one end around his wrist.'

I said, "I can understand that. His wrist is about as big as my leg or your waist."

The key was fastened on them with a rusty piece of wire. One of the girls was going to help him get the thing off his arm, but she twisted the key off while trying to unlock it. Oh, they thought it was hilarious until they asked me for the other key. Of course I had to tell them that there was only one.

"Winky wasn't too pleased, but antique leg irons are nothing to fool with and nobody had begged him to try them on anyway. Around 5 o'clock he left my place and went down to the restaurant for break-

I said, "didn't anyone say anything?"

"He borrowed a ratty old topcoat I had here so no one noticed because it had very baggy sleeves. After breakfast he came back here and we sat around jawing at one another about how such things can't happen. At 9 we went down to the locksmith who took the thing off. I gave it to him for his trouble. It's hanging on the wall there now with some other curiosities that he'll probably write a book about some day."

"You started to tell me about your first date with Pigg's ex-

"Did I say that we'd been to a dance? I can't even remember where we'd been, but it doesn't matter. She'd invited me in for a quick cup of coffee and I no sooner get my feet under the table when I hear a pickup truck screaming by in second gear. The tires are squealing so you can smell the rubber, and the exhaust is coming out of two hot rod mufflers like the brrraaaap of machine guns. I was even more nervous back then than I am now and I said, 'What's that?'

'And she says, 'Oh, don't pay no attention. It's only Porkie, my exhusband. He knows I'm here and he knows you're here, and he'd like to know who you are. So he's either going to drive his truck into this kitchen at 70 miles an hour, or else he's going to come in here and check you out.' And ever since then I've quickly walked them to the door, rushed straight home and then called to say good-night."

Back in 1888 when this picture was taken, Walloon Lake may not have looked as pristine as it does today. This picture was taken looking up M-75 toward U.S. 131 Highway. Notice the amount of brush, tree stumps and other shoreline debris. The time this was taken, the area was in the early stages of the logging boom which lasted until the late 1920s. If you have any old pictures of the area, please bring them to our office so we can make a copy and share it

BY JIM SILBAR It sure seems like someone out there is trying to make a lot of money in a very short time. Greed may be the best word for those who are raising the price of one of the commodities we really need in northern Michigan.

Gasoline.

We-need it because we have to drive our cars to do almost everything-going to buy groceries, go to the job, see friends across the township and much

As of early this week, the price of gas is rising faster than liquid levels of the Port-a-johns at last weekend's Polish Festival Beer

I drove into the gas station early Monday morning to be greeted by Mel Howard changing the prices for the umpteenth time in the past

Knowing the price increase is being blamed on the Iraqis military move into Kuwait. I had heard television reports of the price increase but I wasn't prepared for the swiftness that they called the stations to inform them of what they should be charging for the gas.

The gas station owners are between a rock and a hard place because they are controlled by the companies that provide the gas.

Mel seems to think of another reason for the increase than just

He thinks that the gas companies are raising the rates because the government is thinking about an increase in gas taxes. He said the companies are just getting in ahead of the Feds. He also thinks that if the companies raise the prices, then the feds will have a much more difficult time trying to put a proposed 50 cent increase on the gallon.

Both he and I imagined the yelling of the constituents if the price of gas increased to about $2.00 a gallon because of the taxes and the price gouging of the gas companies.

Other local dealers said there was no way gas should be increased the way it has over the weekend. They say there is plenty of gas in the pipelines and the new gas coming in will not arrive for many days.

Even more now that the pipelines over there in the Mideast have been turned off or shut down. What it all means is that you and I are going to have to drive much more conservatively. We are going to have to learn to plan our trips using the car.

No more rides around the country on Sundays, or making trips to Petoskey just to buy one item.

I just wonder where the prices will settle in at, and whether or not they will affect something in my

on-where's George? Our Ship of State is floundering in a sea of deficits, national debt, cost overruns, scandal and corruption in S&L mess, stealing from our Social Security and highway trust funds, drugs and violent crimes and the list goes on and on. That poor old boat is out there without a crew or captain and the seas get rougher by the day. The crew and captain or President Bush and congress if you will, are all safely ashore blaming everybody but themreelection and getting nothing done except raise the national

We elected Bush president and he promised that he could be trusted to make the hard, tough decisions but now that the time for decisions is here we find he lacks the stomach to do the job. No matter how you slice it, it is his job as president, chairman of the board or chief executive officer or whatever you want to call him, to stand up and take charge of things. It matters but little who is to blame for the mess we are in, the job at hand is to do something about it and he should start acting like the boss-man.

The only way we can reduce our debt structure is to find more revenues-a lot more. If you take away all the entitlement programs you wouldn't save enough to even pay the interest on the debt. We need more money and to get more money we must go to where the Bush-wants to face that simple

The longer they stand around arguing amongst themselves the farther we go in debt. So the question hangs on and is as pertinent as ever, WHERE'S GEORGE?

East Jordan's Portside Art Fair a success

There was plenty of action at the slightly dampened tists' work as it kept people off the beach and brought East Jordan Portside Art Fair this past weekend, them to the show. although some have said the rain helped sales of the ar-

East Jordan's Portside Art Fair took place August 4th and 5th at Elm Pointe, and, despite inclement weather, an estimated 6000-8000 people attended the two-day event. Committee member Ann Dingman was not overly concerned about the weather. "In some ways it can help," she says, because people aren't boating or at the beach."

The Portside Art Fair is one of the most favored shows in the area, in part because of the beautiful setting. The Elm Pointe estate, donated to the City of East Jordan by the Westgate family in the 1970s.

It features a gracious span of shaded green leading to the blue waters of Lake Charlevoix. "The location is unique," says Dingman, "and is a very popular setting with the artists."

The personal touch also makes the show and sale a success. Over 100 volunteers began work at 5:30 a.m. on Saturday to help the artists unload and set up. Helpers circulated throughout the day of-fering coffee, lemonade and necessary assistance to the participants. "We try to make them feel at home," says Mrs. Dingman.

Porcelain artist, Pam Beatty of Boca Raton, Florida and Charlevoix calls the atmosphere 'very friendly." "The Portside show has a nice setting and nice people; it's also one of the best shows for sales volume," she says. Michael J. Weber, of Palm Beach, Florida, whose vibrant dry brush watercolors drew an enthusiastic crowd, agrees that Elm Pointe is a fine location for art. "The setting is wonderful," Weber says.

Artist selection is by invitation or application. . "Artists who have shown here for the last two years are invited back," Dingman says. "Other artists send us slides for evaluation."

Purchase prizes are awarded yearly and the winning art finds a permanent home in Elm Pointe's Sygrid Riley Gallery. (Mrs. Riley devoted 25 years of service to the fair.) This year Petoskey photographer Luciano and basketmaker Brenda Ritter of Vestaburg won the purchase prize awards. The show was juried by Phylis Lloyd, curator of the Kresge Art Museum at Michigan State University.

The Portside Art Fair Committee limits the show to 100 artists who represent the highest quality work in the most mediums possible. "We try for a diversity," says Dingman, "and we don't just limit ourselves to one example of each medium."

As participation in the two day events grows every year, coordinating the fair is a year-around job. Dingman and co-committee members Laura Hansen, Patti Hodge and Lynn Carson are already planning next year's show. She credits the location, volunteers and community spirit for the success of the Portside Art Fair. "People have pride in Elm Pointe,"

The people in freedom seeking countries in Eastern Europe, who look with longing at Americans' rights and privileges, might be surprised to learn that when a democracy such as this works successfully, its citizens put up with peculiar, even discomforting presences. Not only that, but they defend the right of their creators to do so.

To understand how this works, Europeans need only know about a situation in Dearborn, Michigan, a well-heeled city east of Detroit not into indulgence in gaudy display.

That fluorescent lime green decoration doesn't suit this community, is plain to see. Yet there it is, a lot of it too for the limited amount of ground it covers, un-mistakably there. And it has been there ever since Judith Lubeski of Yinger Street painted her whole front porch and sidewalk that vivid green this past spring.

Lubeski's neighbors, many of whom don't share her preference in exterior home decor, are not about to forceher to make it not be there either; her freedom of choice seems more important to them than what they see, with varying degrees of disapproval, as her questionable taste.

According to the Detroit Free Press, The city authorities' attention came to the matter in May when an unidentified resident, annoyed by the appearance of Lubeski's home, called the city's building code department. One the basis of the porch and sidewalk being at odds with a Dearborn city ordinance regulating the appearance of homes therein, a city inspector issued a ticket to Lubeski.

When news reports of the ticketing came out, dozens of people called City Hall on the side of Lubeski and her property improvements. Also, 30 neighbors signed a petition in support of Lubeski and her home work.

City spokesman, Doyne Jackson, said recently that the unidentified complainer has now declined to testify in court about the matter as well. So, after careful consideration of the ordinance's wording that the woman was ticketed as being in violation of, city officials decided not to pursue the matter, a mere misdemeanor

The ordinance was designed to make similar the appearance of all homes in Dearborn neighborhoods. It's generally been used to rule on the acceptability of types of houses and garages and so gives details on approved architectural styles only and doesn't cover specifically other property appearance issues like

Just because the city dropped the charge doesn't mean its administrators have forgotten it, however. According to spokesman Jackson, there's talk now of amending the ordinance to include the oversighted items.

"If someone decides to paint their garage shocking orange and there is a citizen complaint, this could happen again," said the city mouthpiece.

Meanwhile, Lubeski doesn't have to pay a fine, and she proved you can fight City Hall without even trying, with help from friends, and some strangers who spoke for her too.

How does she feel now?

"The green porch stays - I feel says the 47-year-old terrific. Lubeski, the creator of arresting exteriors.

That's how democracy works when it works right. So once the citizens of countries like Poland get economic problems squared away and can turn to work on aesthetics, they can look forward to putting up with things like fluorescent lime green porches and sidewalks; as long as they can take it that is. May this knowledge cheer them

Arts Council brings poet to East Jordan park

Poet Terry Wooten will present a free show at 7 p.m. Friday, August 10, at East Jordan Memorial Park. His appearance is the third of a summer performing arts series sponsored by Jordan River Arts Council.

Wooten has an oral repertoire that brings poetry alive for listeners of all ages. His recitations are sprinkled with his own original poetry, along with works of poets such as Ezra Pound, Robert Frost, Walt Whitman and Michigan's own Max Ellison, with whom Wooten apprenticed for five years.

Selections will include Michigan folklore, poems of the Old West and Indian and Chinese translations. His repertoire ranges from Jim Harrison's "I Owe the Dentist $900," Ogden Nash's

"Custard the Dragon" and Woody Guthrie's "Riot on the Picket Line" to Chaucer's "The Prologue," Emity Dickinson's "A Bird" and Edna St. Vincent Millay's "The Buck in the Snow.'

Wooten built and hosts the Stone Circle on his farm outside north of Elk Rapids, where he holds audience participation poetry recitations starting at sunset every summer Saturday. His books of poems include "Got in an Argument Over Harmony," "The 45th Parallel," "Okey" and "Words Wild With Bloom,"

The public is invited to bring their own lawn chairs or blankets for this free program in the park. In case of rain, the performance will take place at East Jordan High School.

Little red devil

BY REG SHARKEY

Up here in the north country no wild critter is better known than the noisy busybody red squirrel.

Wrapped up in a rusty red, white bellied overcoat, this 5 to 10 ounce member of the rodent family, at times, can be the devil reincarnated, especially when it sets up housekeeping in attics, between walls, or farm granaries.

But for all its undersirable habits it is an interesting animal to watch.

It's high aerial acrobatics is something to behold, running with reckless abandon through treetops, sure-footed as a mountain goat. And if it should miss its footing, falling earthward, it spreads its legs, extends its tail and lands unharmed on terrafirma, none the worse for the occasional misstep.

Disturbed by anything strange their verbal chastising is a series of sharp rattling barks, spits, sputters and growls.

Compatible at breeding time, the red squirrels otherwise live solitary lives. Young of the year are together until the following autumn when the brood splits up to establish individual territories and nests.

Next to the lovable little chipmunk (a cousin of the red squirrel) the red one is a top hoarder of

I've seen them denude cedars of their seed pods, storing them in ground level larders where they not only serve the harvester, but also provide food for mice and other ground dwelling rodents.

Red squirrels pair in late winter and spring; March into April in these parts.

Gestation period lasts 40 days when three to six young, weighing about 1-ounce are born. They are blind, naked and helpless and are weaned at five weeks. They are then trained by the mother to be on their own.

From observation they are like playful human youngsters until the following fall when they become intolerable to each other and scat-

Wintertime brings no hardships to red squirrels. Having scattered larders at ground level, deep snow causes no problems. Burrowing through the snow arterial runways are established from one larder to another. Thus there is safety from feathered aerial hunters.

Although red squirrels offer little incentive to be hunted by humans they do fill the food bill for various other wild creatures: pine martens, the top squirrel hunter; bob cats, red foxes, coyotes, weasels, and feathered raptors.

In spite of their not so good habits, like eating bird eggs, and raising hob in human habitations. they are an interesting part of our native fauna.

The desolation of a winterlocked swamp can be enlivened by the cheerful chatter, or the vitriolic scolding of a red squirrel.

P.S. (Pot Shot): Good gad Gertrude! Who does DNR Director David Hales think he's placating when he says the DNR will pay a $50,000 fine for the fish killing fiasco on the Muskegon River a few days ago?

Who is paying for that foul shot? The Michigan sportsman who buys a fishing license, of course. Perhaps it should come out of Hale's pocket, as well as the rests of the brass responsible for what will take years to rectify.
