BC has final budget ajustments

Boyne City Commissioners, with a relatively short agenda, finished out the 1990 city budget by making a few minor changes that are reflecting the real expenditures and income that fine-tuned it to the point where the auditing firm will be able to start next

The budget reflected almost a two percent increase in revenues. primarily due to new construction. That along with approved transfers of funds from one to another, and a almost two percent addition in expenditures was approved almost without comment by the commissioners.

They also heard a short report on the successful D.A.R.E. Golf Tournament that was held last Friday at Boyne Mountain. Boyne City is one of the recipients of the funds earned at the tourney said Randy Howard, Police Chief. Howard was one of the first police officers trained in the D.A.R.E. program in northern Michigan several years ago.

Saluting the memories of those who served our country in the armed forces, the American Legion Drill Team fired off three rounds during the ceremonies held last Monday at Veteran's Memorial Park in Boyne City.

Other members of the V.F.W. and Legion gave short speeches honoring the dead and the living members of the forces protecting our country.

Members of the American Legion Auxiliary placed a wreath in remembrance along with the V.F.W. Auxilliary.

As a portion of the event, the American Legion presented a check to Rebecca Palmiter, the band director of the Boyne City High School Band in the amount of $1,000. Another check for $100 from the Boyne Falls Polish Committee was also presented. The money will go for new uniforms for the growing band.

Great weekend kicks off

Before the Memorial weekend started last Friday, area business owners were asking themselves what the weekend would bring, would business be up, the same or

All of those questions were answered readily as most businesses reported sales were as good as last year and in some cases, better.

Of course the good weather over the weekend helped as the tourists plied into the community to enjoy our vacationland. The weather also helped those businesses with outside activities as well as the morel season which is winding down just in time for the summer season to begin.

According to Moe Bacciochi at the Sportsman Bar, business was almost double what they had last year, much of it because of the new outside deck they installed this spring.

Others said they had a good start to the summer.

Business in the area has been slow up until the weekend, according to one restaurant, and then the dam burst as they had almost too much business for the staff on hand.

Len Neeb, manager of One Water Street, felt the holiday weekend was "neck and neck with last year." Both Carol Hanes of Gocha's Womens Apparel and Jon Archambault of Harbor Wear agreed that business matched last years. "It was nice to see people around again," Hanes said.

Local merchants were not the only businesses with extra customers on their hands. Both Carter's Food Center and Glen's Market reported a busy weekend as tourists and residents stocked up for their parties and cookouts. Now with recent memories of the 1991 Memorial Day, area businesses can look towards the continued increase in business. The summer season has arrived.

New patient advocate health care form now available

A coalition of doctors, hospitals and lawyers announced today at a news conference in Lansing that its has developed a Durable Power of Attorney for Health Care form that is now available to Michigan residents.

The State Bar of Michigan, the Michigan State Medical Society, the Michigan Association of Osteopathic Physicians and Surgeons and the Michigan Hospital Association worked together for the past five months to develop a simple, do it yourself form shortly after the legislature passed the Patient Advocate Act in December 1990. Two copies of the form along with an educational brochure are available by mailing $2.00 to Patient Advocate, P.O. Box 950, East Lansing, MI 48826. Groups or organizations may order in quantity at $40 per hundred. Checks should be made out to "Patient Advocate."

The Patient Advocate allows Michigan residents over 18 years old to appoint another person, called the patient advocate, to make medical treatment decisions for them if they become ill and cannot make the decisions themselves. The patient advocate also may make decisions regarding care and custody if the patient cannot.

Two physicians must make the determination when a patient is unable to act. The designation of a patient advocate may be revoked at any time. The new law also allows an individual to let his or her nationt advocate make decisions regarding life-sustaining treatment. The form has a section to provide these instructions to the patient advocate.

An individual may appoint a natient advocate simply by completing one of the forms. Almost any adult can serve as a patient advocate, including a spouse, adult child, a friend or some other trusted person. The patient advocate should understand the individual's wishes completely before signing the acceptance portion of the form. Photocopies of the completed form should go to the individual's personal physician, to the patient advocate and to the hospital used most frequently.

The Durable Power of Attorney for Health Care ensures that an individual's desire to accept or refuse medical treatment is honored when he or she is unable to participate in medical treatment decisions. The coalition recommends that everyone over 18 years old complete a Durable Power of Attorney for Health Care form.

Speakers at the news conference included State Bar of Michigan president James Robinson. Michigan State Medical Society president Robert Burton, MD. Michigan Hospital Association president Spencer Johnson, and Michigan Association of Osteopathic Physicians and Surgeons executive director William Stevenson. Nancy Crandall. Director of the Michigan Office of Services to the Aging.

congratulated the coalition for its efforts in developing the new form.

Opinions

The Boyne Area was booming last weekend as tourists visited the state park, second home owners came north to open cottages and in general tourists arrived.

But after they get into the area, merchants, businesses, and the general community have to put on the proper attitude that will help them enjoy their stay, even if it is only for a long weekend, or two weeks, or the entire summer.

Many times we have heard the term "Fudgie" for anyone wearing golfing clothes, not wearing socks, or just "looking different" from any of the local element.

What we have to remember is that in many cases, the money the tourist brings to the community filters down to the local level and becomes money to buy groceries, make car payments, house payments and pay taxes.

Every tourist dollar, according to those in the industry, turns over within the community five times before it is spent elsewhere.

It is this cash flow which we all need to survive the months without tourists.

So even if you are held up at a traffic light by some group of people eating ice cream cones, or can't get on the links at the exact times you desire, or the traffic on the roads means the children can't play in the streets, it all means a temporary inconvenience to the locals.

But no matter what, the tourist season brings money to our pockets to help us get through the long fall and springs.

We need the tourist business in our shops, our restaurants and our other businesses.

The money they earn is transferred out in salaries to employees who in turn shop in other stores to buy the items they need.

In other words, one hand shakes another and we need all of the business we can shake from the visitors and the locals.

Jottings

WITH JIM SILBAR

Okay, now that I am almost sane, I can tell the story.

You see, about 10 years ago The Charlevoix County Press moved into this, the present, office. After about a month of remodeling, we moved all of the equipment, computers, typesetters, darkroom and everything else that makes up the newspapers' files.

For about ten of those years, I have been drinking water, coffee made from water, washing my hands in water and all of the many other things that you do with water.

Sometimes I think I would get dishpan hands without ever washing a dish at the office. Well, maybe sometimes, but not very often I am told.

Anyway, until they dug up the water line out in front of the office last fall, I new I was almost crazy.

The water line proved it.

Connecting the line to the main was a piece of lead pipe, a couple of feet long. I still have a piece of it next to my desk, several months after it was replaced by something a little safer.

Lead pipes, cups, and dishes I have been told, were part of the cause of the downfall of the Roman Empire. I guess the rulers ate off the dishes, drank the liquids, and used lead for many of the utinsils.

Historians tell us they all were demented in some way, which helped bring their downfall.

In my case, I don't think I was getting that much lead in the water, but you never know.

Now, I don't think I ever got too crazy, but I can remember many a time when I ran around the office like my head was cut off, especially on Tuesdays when everything has to be completed in time to take the paper to the printer.

I used to call it fighting a deadline.

Now, I still have to fight the deadline, but I am slightly less likely to be running around trying to do this and that while at the same time do those and them.

It's been a few months now, and I am just starting to settle down into some sort of routine where things seem to get done, whether or not I do them.

Sure, I still do a lot, but with a clearer head, according to those who know about lead in your veins.

According to some of the residents, all that lead I was drinking went down to the right foot.

Others said it went to the part of the anatomy where you spread the load when you sit.

A few more have said that the lead settled between the ears sense some of the things they are talking about at the coffee table seem a little dense to me.

But, after a few months of drinking the water from the new pipe, I am declaring myself sane. At least somewhat.

But then summer is coming on like a January blizzard on a weekend.

Ooops, it's here.

Time for me to go crazy again. At least until the Labor Day vacation is over.

Tradition holds that it's the bride upon whom attention is centered at a wedding. Tradition dictates too that father of the bride's only visible part in proceedings (his sizable monetary part often eliciting more vocal expression, but not in public) is to escort the bride in her grand entrance. As for the ringbearer, when one is there, he's little noticed.

But likely no one explained any of this to Aaron. Or, if so, he forgot what with his dear grandpa so close by, which accounted for why at the wedding last Saturday night, the ringbearer, dogged by grandfather, also father of the bride, upstaged the bride. Still, one could say Aaron acted out the gist of what the tradition is meant to do and be.

Reviewing what took place between 7:00 and 8 p.m. that day, perhaps the first person down the aisle, the maid of honor, gave notice that the occasion wouldn't prove to be typical of such ceremonies. Not only pregnant, which isn't unusual for wedding participants these day, but she was breathtakingly so. In fact, her reaching the altar without needing to take time out to give birth along the way seemed an iffy proposition at best.

According to news floated after the ceremony, the baby wasn't due for four days. But in light of how often babies come on schedule, one has to question the value of such a date. In any case, unborn baby stayed put for the ceremony.

And just as well too. Since after a closely fitting garbed junior bridesmaid descended the aisle (in contrast to the likely last minute architectural changes in the matron's baglike dress to accomodate size and perch position of the baby), along came Aaron. From then on, the lady would have had a hard go to call attention to need for a hospital run.

All eyes fixed on the two-and-ahalf-year-old, dressed in pearl grey tuxedo with pink bow tie and cummerbund (garb of the evening for male participants) as he came down the aisle. Brown eyes wide, satin pillow clutched, he made it halfway to the altar before turning back. Then, even with mom and grandpa urging him on, he continued retracing his steps till grandpa joined him, took his hand and moved him forward again. But the moment grandpa turned back, Aaron did too. So grandpa picked him up, carried him to grandma.

Once fatherly duties were completed, grandpa sat with Aaron, holding the clearly delighted child through much of the ceremony. It appears he got down once, slipped off, grandpa seen striding up aisle alone, returning with Aaron in Having held many of the attender's attention from his position overlooking grandpa's shoulder for most of the ceremony, one would think Aaron willing to depart without further ado. But not so. At the close of the wedding, after bride and groom's departure, Aaron went next. Flanked by grandparents, both hands were held fast. So he decided to take advantage of such a fine opening, picked up his feet and voiced his wish to be swung a bit. Grandparents, being what they are, swing him up the aisle they did.

Thus Asron topped off the occasion with a grand finale.

Lest anyone wonder, the bride looked beautiful but tense. Dubious help were the action's of Aaron, a treasure salvaged out of a sorry first union, so unpromising in fact that the Catholic Church declared it annulled. Yet, surely she wanted him there for the event of her lifelong Church.

Besides, he showed what the ceremony is all about - the push off for formation of new families. Aaron did more too, got four generations involved in the proceedings, great grandmother

Scenic view protected with conservation easement in County in Northern Michigan are discovering that preserving open spaces is good for business as well as the environment. The Little Traverse Conservancy has received a leadership conservation easement donation protecting 64acres of scenic, ridge-top farmland overlooking Lake Charlevoix in Hayes Township. The easement was donated by Jon and Faye Gerster, owners of the 85-acre parcel known as The Ridgelands of

The permanently protected open space will surround 14 singlefamily residences in what some officials are calling a model, conservation-minded development

Realizing the natural significance of the property, the Gersters, working with the Hayes Township Planning Commission and the Little Traverse Conservancy, created a plan which includes the conservation easement and limits future development of the property to 14 building sites on 21 of the 85 acres.

As a result, people travelling along Boyne City Road will see open spaces and few houses on the site. Future residents are assured of sweeping, panormaic views of Lake Charlevoix, rolling meadows, ridges and valleys, with the conservation easement guaranteeing that the surrounding 64 acres will never be developed.

The Ridgelands conservation easement also protects the rural an important greenbelt along a quarter mile of Boyne City Road

"This is the trend of the future," commented Jon Gerster, "We see clustered housing with open spaced preserved by conservation easements a necessity to preserving open spaces and preventing our region from becoming a junk

"As a developer, this approach makes more sense econimically than fighting for maximum housing density," Gerster continued, "Not only do the building sites become more desireable in the long run, but our development will not detract from the overall rural feeling of the township, quality of the area by maintaining which is, after all, what draws people here in the first place.

Land Protection Specialist Pam Hogoboom indicated that the Gerster donation demonstrates the effectiveness of conservation easements in achieving a balance between development and preservation. "We recognize that devlopment in our region is inevitable but it can and should incorporate open space protection. In fact, we are finding that not only do the townships want to encourage this more balanced approach, but this approach is also becoming market driven.

"People place a high value on having protected open space near their residences," said Hogoboom.

The Little Traverse Conservancy completed three conservation easements in Hayes Township last year, and according to Hayes Township Supervisor, Paul Hoadley, the Gerster easement is indicative of a new trend in the rural township's efforts to maintain its scenic beauty.

"Conservation easements are a beautiful approach," Hoadley commented, "They are our best tool. They do not detract from the overall tax base, milleages are not increased, property values are enhanced, and open spaces are maintained.

"Conservation easements enable property owners, developers, and the township to all be winners. They enable farmers people homesteads to maintian their properties without incurring undue tax burdens. And, easements prevent the township from being cut up into little boxes," Hoadley

POULTRY

What a difference a few years makel "Foods and Home Making" a home economics book published in 1928 explains why chicken is more expensive than meat. It states, "Although chicken meat is expensive, it can be combined with other foods. Chicken broth is a good flavoring material. Rice flavored with chicken broth is especially palatable. Chicken bones can be used for soups. The occasional purchase of a chicken may be justified even in the average home where economy must be practiced."

It took a number of pages in the above book to explain how to butcher, pick the feathers off, clean and draw the chicken, turkey and other poultry. I, for one, am so thankful for our dressed chickens on the market with only the parts one wants for whatever recipe is being used.

Actually, the greatest food revolution in history has been taking place right under our noses the last fifty years, and nowhere is it more pronounced than in the history of poultry.

Every Spring one could hear the peeping of baby chicks in all the small town post offices throughout Michigan. People sent to Sears Roebuck and other places for their chicks to feed and care for until they were ready to be sold as broilers or raised for laying hens for the eggs. The farmer's wife was in the poultry business; it was her own pin-money.

Mother had an incubator and she hatched her own baby chicks. It was so exciting to see them crack the shells and emerge from them. In a very short time they were dry and so beautiful. I thought then, and I still do think that baby chicks and especially baby ducks are Mother Natures' cutest creations. Mother had also a few setting hens who incubated more chickens. The mother hen was very fierce and protective of her eggs at this time. We kept our distance from her.

My niece, Nellie is one of many farm women who still raise their own poultry. She and her husband, Armond, have a large dairy farm in the thumb area of Michigan. I think that she buys her baby chicks at their local co-op. Then raises them to the size for fryers and broilers; butchers them and removes the skins, they do not need to remove the feathers doing it this way. They do not want the skins as they are cholesterol and low fat concious.

They dress enough chickens for their freezer to keep them for another year. This is the way Nellie prepared a couple of those chickens for dinner one day last fall.

I am always delighted to visit with Nellie as she cooks in her large modern farm kitchen. She has all of the correct equipment necessary to do anything. She even pasturizes her own milk.

This might take about one hour. turning the meat occasionally. I do not think that I have ever tasted a more delicious chicken.

P.S. If the chicken becomes too dry while cooking add just a small amount of water.

Here is a tasty dish using canned chicken broth; I think that Grandma would have like this

As a turkey hunter I should have known it was the alarm signal of a hen turkey.

Walking on I came to the edge of an open field and a hen turkey flushed out of the woods, thundering away on flailing wings.

I surmized the lone hen, seen before near an old corn field, wouldn't be a loner unless she was incubating a clutch of eggs, coming off the nest twice a day to feed.

Told by a mushroom hunter, who had spotted the brooding hen, I spent a good hour cautiously seeking her out.

Believe me, with her brown mottled feathers-unlike the redwattled toms with their red and blue wattles-she blended in with last years fallen leaves.

I finally located her amid a scattering of leaves and dappled sunspots. Staying a good distance away I photographed her with my telephoto lens, and if she blinked an eye I didn't notice it.

Lally, Dilworth open new brokerage in Boyne City

BY JANENNE FROATS

Even though the cosmetic surgery on what was formerly an old city garage continues, the par-tners of Dilworth & Lally Yacht Brokers, Wes Dilworth and Pat Lally, will continue the renovations of the North Lake Street building even though the business is now

This yacht brokerage business will offer local residents yacht management, a discount marine catalog store and and will specialize in assisting their customers with the buying or selling of their top dollar toys.

Having long been affiliated with the Boyne area, both partners feel good about their decision to centralize their business in Boyne City. "We selected Boyne City because the community is very healthy." Lally said. "It's a pleasant place to be and our location, across from the municipal marina sets us with boating on our mind all the time.

The near waterfront location is not the only attraction for the brokers. They feel the town has a variety of residents, from the small boat fisherman to the Great Lake yachters. "It's a real people's boating world," Lally said.

Because of this mixture, the company feels their discount marine catalog will be a benefit to all. According to their first newsletter, Dilworth and Lally stated that "our commitment to you is value."

The discount marine catalog, the first in the north, will have access to goods offered by all the major marine suppliers. "It gives the customer a much better selection." Lally said. Another benefit that the partners plan to integrate into the discount catalog business is the additional savings gained when receiving "sound advice to pick the right gear the first time." According to Dilworth, the firm can get almost everything within a couple of days.

Dilworth and Lally Yacht Brokers will be handling yacht sales from two different perspec-tives. Wes Dilworth describes this two tier program. "The first is for the large sale of power boats, 30 feet and larger, that we market regionally throughout the Great Lakes," he said. "The other tier is for smaller local boats that we'll market out of the showroom here."

As brokers, they feel they can offer valuable assistance to both the buyer and seller. The partners expressed their help to the buyers by "offering protection" so that your "new" boat will be in the condition you expect, will be delivered with all gear on time, and we show you how to operate all the "bells and whistles." The seller can look forward to being freed of all the managerial aspects of the sale.

The versatility of this business also includes yacht management. An example given by Lally was of a boat owner coming to town for a vacation. The owner is struck with mechanical problems. The yacht management service would cover all areas of getting the boat repaired. From contracting a mechanic, moving the boat to and from service or home, cleaning the boat and any other unpleasant tasks that accompany a boating break down. This type of operation can not only spare an early trip back home, but can take away the hassles for any boat owner.

In order to provide these types of services, the partners have invested in the latest office technology. "We are equipped with the latest computers, fax machines, high speed copiers and laser printers," Lally said.

sources These add technological edge to the business. We can have immediate contact with 400 other brokers throughout the county," Dilworth added. "We can literally print information right now on 20,000 boats."

The business and its wide range of services has been in the organization process since last fall. 'We came to the idea in terms of the need of the marketplace last fall," Dilworth said. "There's a lot of opportunity in Boyne City for business, particularly the marine

The partners consider their business more than just a job. "We sell dreams and fun," Dilworth

VILLAGE OF BOYNE FALLS HEARING INCREASING PROPERTY TAX

The Village Council of the Village of Boyne Falls will hold a public hearing at 7:00 p.m. on Monday June 10, 1991 in the village council chambers in the Village Hall, 2290 Railroad Street, to receive testimony and discuss a proposed additional 1991 Village operating millage rate.

The Village has complete authority to establish the number of mills to be levied from within its authorized millage rate.

In order to maintain basic village services, the village proposed to levy an additional millage rate of .6301 mills (63 cents per $1000 SEV) above the 12.29 mill base tax rate, or a total operating rate of 12.29 mills (12.29 per $1000.00 SEV.) This will provide an estimated 5.4 percent increase in village operating revenues. (Public comment on this proposed increase is welcome at the public hearing.)
