Tax Gestapo?

"... we sincerely feel that the small businessman in some instances is getting gyped in having to pay 'protection' money for unemployment compensation particularly when his business has no history of unemployment.

But more especially we resent the punitive attitude toward business on the part of government. The practice now seems to be to let the unpaid citizen collector make out his reports, hoping that he will be sucker enough to make a mistake, and then to pounce upon him with penalties and interest.

Why is it there is no effort to consult with the businessman when he starts out, or when a new tax is imposed, in order to educate and help him as a volunteer member of the tax collecting and taxpaying army?

Is it because the government has found it more profitable to let the suckers get lost in the maze of fine print and then penalize them for it? The philosophy of a tax investigating Gestapo, instead of a helping hand, doesn't ring true in America.

One of our friends gave us a clipping which tells of a lead editorial in the Indianapolis Star two weeks ago, calling for the abolition of the Federal income tax. The editorial referred to a similar proposal by T. Coleman Andrews, former collector of internal revenue, and said that the income tax is "right out of the Communist manifesto, which declares that a 'heavy progressive income tax' is the first step in destroying a free and competitive economic system."

The income tax, of course, is the backbone of the financial strength of our nation. Its abolition without an adequate substitute would imperil our standing in the free world, but on the other hand its continuance seems to be bringing us ever closer to the socialistic state that we fear.

NORTHERN LIGHTS

(Compiled by the News-Herald Staff)

(From The Whitehall Forum)

It has been the history of the world that civilizations crumble from within. Rome wasn't conquered by barbarians. Romans had long since ceased to be free, dignified citizens by the time the barbarians moved in.

How did it happen? Rome citizens kept demanding benefits from the state. Slaves did the work, so there was no work for free citizens. They lived on the dole. Apparently they didn't resent the dole. Their demand was for "Bread and The Circus" — security and recreation. Well-meaning politicians fought for more and better food for them; self-seeking politicians sought more and more gory spectacles for them. A whole lot of Christians died in the Roman circus in order to provide votes for callous politicians.

How far along that same road have we marched in America?

We ask the government to help us provide schooling for our children; milk and hot lunches for them; bus transportation for them; roads for our cars; guaranteed pensions for our old age; guarantees for our bank deposits; an eye on the stock market so we can't throw our money away.

We want assurances of full employment — whatever that is; we want practically full pay if we're laid off; we want less hours and less work; we want to fix it so that everybody gets more or less the same pay and has the same standard of living — our sliding scale of income tax rates takes care of that beautifully.

ALL OF THESE things have come about through popular demand. Many of them have been fought through by well-meaning people who have the welfare of the people sincerely at heart. Many of them have been fought through by people who do not have the welfare of our people sincerely at heart.

Where are we going, America? And when do we stop to take stock? Are all of these security measures we have insisted upon and are insisting upon really security for our people; or do some of them do more harm than they do good, in that they lull our people and cause them to relax their vigilance?

The pioneer who took off for the west had his eyes on the horizon, and faith in God and himself. He didn't ask for old age pension and federally-built schools. He was sure he could provide for what his family needed.

Today our reliance is on the power of the ballot. We want to solve economic problems by politics. We have come to believe that if enough of us holler for it, at the polls, we can be guaranteed against ill health, old age, and the need to solve our own moral and financial problems.

There is no lack of politicians who believe that if we give them the power, they will be able to do these things for us. It would take, of course, a lot of power.

Long ago someone said that "Power corrupts, complete power corrupts completely." We must never forget that.

HAVE YOU HEARD

about Long Distance credit cards? No fumbling for change, no owing a friend the price of a call when you use his phone. All you do when you make an out-of-town call is give the operator the information on your credit card. The cost of the call will then appear on your regular telephone bill. Interested? Make arrangements for your credit card by calling our Business Office.

HOW MANY MILES

is it from your basement to your telephone? It surely must seem like miles every time you dash upstairs when the phone rings. All that sprinting is really unnecessary when you consider the low cost of having a telephone in your basement. The monthly charge is just about a dollar. There is just one installation charge no matter how many additional phones you have installed at the same time. You have only to call our Business Office to order yours.

JUST 30 YEARS AGO

this month Alexander Graham Bell spoke these words over the first telephone. "Mr. Watson, come here, I want you." Today the telephone company offers more than 400 kinds of service. For example, besides conventional telephones, we provide telephone service to ships and automobiles, trains and trucks, foreign countries, radio and television network service and equipment for automatic telephone answering and photograph transmission. Wherever a communications need exists the telephone company stands ready to serve.

Want To Take Off That Weight?

You can't lose weight unless you've really made up your mind to do it.

Weight control is an individual problem. No one can do it for you. The more you learn on someone else for support, the less likely you are to be successful.

You must make changes in living as well as in eating changes which you live with indefinitely — not just for two months while you lose 10 pounds.

This philosophy is expressed in a new bulletin, "Live Lean and Like It," available at county extension office in Boyne City.

Written by Dr. Margaret Ohlson, nutrition professor at MSU, the bulletin tells who should lose weight and then how to go about doing it.

Fasting today because you over-stuffed yourself yesterday is not the way to make good food habits.

Your body needs the basic nutrients every day and it needs them equally distributed throughout the day.

These daily basic nutrients can be had by including: One pint of skim milk or buttermilk; three servings of high protein food, such as egg meat, fish or cheese; three servings of cereals; two servings of green vegetable; two servings of fruit; and three small pats of butter or margarine, or three tablespoons salad oil or shortening.

How much additional food you should add to this basic daily diet depends on how many calories you, as an individual burn in a day. This will vary from 1,500 to 6,000 calories depending on size, sex, age and the amount of work you do. For example, if you are a young woman of average size whose work is done chiefly in a sitting position, you need 1,900 to 2,200 calories every day to maintain your weight. If you want to lose weight, then you must subtract 500 to 1,000 calories per day from this figure.

The extra foods you add to the basic diet may mean a lot in terms of satisfying your appetite, points out Dr. Ohlson. A potato per day can be an excellent investment in morale; or so can an occasional cookie. Often a choice of whole milk instead of skim milk may mean the difference in being satisfied or really hungry before the next meal.

Regular consistent exercise can help you lose weight, but only if done while on a well-balanced diet suited to your needs.

Dr. Ohlson suggests that a thorough medical check should always precede weight reduction. And, as you grow older, you should see your doctor at regular intervals even if you only want to maintain your weight.

LETTER BOX

Marshall Sayles, Editor:

The world is becoming poorer today. Louis Bromfield is no longer with us. His chair at the council table in the field of better agricultural practices is vacant.

His genial forthrightness and great capacity of expression and demonstration are going to be missed tremendously by most of us.

The void left by his passing will be a long time in refilling, perhaps never. His was a unique soul, blessed with an exceptional gift for broad expression by the spoken and printed word, plus and insatiable desire to learn, and know, the complete answers in a field that assures all life.

Although my acquaintance with Mr. Bromfield was of a cursory nature, for many years I have considered it a privilege to call him friend. His life was blessed with intimate friendships with great people throughout the civilized world, but he had the spiritual capacity to give freely of his life to any, and all, who were real friends of the soil.

It was only recently that I was advised by his secretary of his hospitalization as the reason for the seeming apathy relative to certain ideas under formulation for future expression.

Whether these plans will, or can, now take form and meaning is problematical. However, his mark in the universe is still with us as a monument to a better agriculture, and he has fulfilled his destiny, in that he has left us with a better, and richer, world for his having been here. For this we should offer up many thanks, as we will ever be his debtors.

Roger Austin

Dr. J. VanDellen left early Saturday morning to attend "The American Academy of General Practitioners of Scientific Assembly" at Washington D. C. He will return to his office here March 23rd.

Mr. and Mrs. Clifford Marshall of Flint spent the week end with their mother, Mrs. Anna Kraft.

Mr. and Mrs. Otto Merritt spent the weekend at Lansing visiting their daughter and son-in-law Mr. and Mrs. Vernell Neese and family and with their son and daughter in law Mr. and Mrs. Arthur Merritt.

Transplant Strawberries Early In Year

Early transplanting of strawberries pays off in bigger yield the next year, Ed Rehman, Charlevoix county Farm Agent says. Runners that form in June will produce twice as many berries the next year as runners that form in July, he points out. This is true for June bearing varieties. Everbearing varieties produce the best crop the same year they are planted.

Agent Rehman says Harry Bell, extension horticulturist at Michigan State University, recommends setting out plants as soon as the ground can be suitably worked in the Spring. For Charlevoix county this date is usually around May 1.

Agent Rehman also advises growers to set plants about 28 inches apart. The ideal spacing is no more than four plants per square foot by September 1.

Many growers, he points out have been setting plants about 18 inches apart because of likely losses of several plants. However, plants have become more vigorous with increased control of diseases and insects so that fewer die now.

Interest Up In County Humane Society

Members of the Charlevoix County Humane Society held their annual meeting at Boyne City March 13.

Guests from Hayes township East Jordan and Charlevoix attended, and nineteen new memberships and renewals were recorded.

Contributions to further the activities of society totaled $92 for February.

President Sam Arbuckle reported on the condition of the societies finances revealing that they will not permit any building or further installations at the animal shelter at this time.

Nor can they replace their used truck, for a more efficient and presentable method of transporting animals unless financed over a period of time in which members can solicit contributions, the societies only source of income.

Arbuckle introduced the all-inclusive new dog-ordinance that Boyne City is going to adopt when a few revised sections have been completed and explained that copies were being mailed to both East Jordan and Charlevoix officials in hopes that they will consider doing likewise making a co-ordinated dog-control program throughout the county.

By request of both membership and the visiting citizens, from East Jordan and Charlevoix, Arbuckle appointed chairmen of two action committees to meet with members and interested citizens of both cities to thoroughly discuss the needs of the two communities; and decide what the society can do to correct an appalling situation of dogs at large.

Guests spoke in detail of obscene, dangerous contagious conditions that contribute to the morally degrading dog-situation in both East Jordan and Charlevoix.

They were not too optimistic about the ability of the Humane Society to get any substantial assistance from either to help correct the situation brought about by their lack of interest.

TALE OF THE NORTHERN TRAIL

MR. & MRS. ELMER BRUDY

After touring the Matanuska Valley, we drove back down the Glenn Highway to a stream we had crossed a few days previously and pitched our camp beyond a gravel pit and out of sight of the road. We chose this particular spot because the stream was small and slower moving than many, and looked like a Michigan trout stream.

We had caught no fish in Anchorage either. Here we were again told that the salmon had already spawned.

Knowing that fishing in Alaska and the Yukon is rated by sports writers and others as the ne plus ultra, Elmer had set his heart on some fine catches of fish—particularly the cutthroat trout, grayling trout, and varieties of salmon not to be had in our home waters.

We had relied upon information from the Milepost and of local residents for our choice of fishing spots and type of bait. So far we had not caught a single fish nor even seen one large enough to be worthy of catching; and we hated to leave Alaska with a record of complete failure.

So we decided that if our promising stream was also barren we would accept the offer of a bush pilot we had met the week before and have him fly us back over the mountains to some seldom-fished streams and lakes where he "guaranteed" anyone could catch plenty of grayling and lake trout. He said he would be available the first of the week.

Not only did we catch no fish, but we found that camping out with no means of warmth except a bonfire was exceedingly uncomfortable. There was a layer of ice on our water bucket and the thermometer said 25 degrees although it had already been daylight for several hours.

So we returned to bush pilot Smith's place only to find that he had "gone to town" and wouldn't be back until the middle of the week when he was scheduled to fly in another party of hunters.

A local guide at this lodge told us of an incomplete road which is built from the Richardson Highway to Mt. McKinley—North America's highest mountain—and suggested that we drive up the road as far as possible where he thought we should have some better fishing.

So we drove over bumps and rocks and stones, through deep holes and loose gravel, up and up and up, far above the timberline until it seemed we must be nearly on top of the world itself.

Finally we could go no further. We had come to a stream without a bridge. There were several cars there, so we parked the Ford between a station wagon on from Minnesota and one from Arizona, and we all fished together, nobody catching anything.

The next day we contacted still another bush pilot about whom we had heard, but we had no reservations and as hunting season was about to open, all guides and pilots were devoting their time to hunting parties, and were no longer interested in late fishermen.

We tried to rent a boat, but three people had been drowned in a sudden windstorm over this huge lake (Paxson) a few days before and the boats were all beached.

Then someone told us we should see "Doc" Huffman who frequently took parties out fishing by using an outboard motor on a plastic boat to get around to the other side of the mountain. It developed that Doc Huffman is a retired dentist who now owns and operates a hunting and fishing camp accessible to the highway. We found Huffman's camp, only to be told by his wife everything had been reserved.

But after we presented Elmer's business card, she decided that perhaps we had enough in common to find a vacancy for us. She knew Doc would want to visit with us as soon as he returned. He had "gone to town" two or three days before for supplies and was expected back "soon." They never know how long a trip such as that over several hundred miles of mountain road will take.

It happened that Bob and Marge Donaway of Anchorage were vacationing in one of Huffman's cabins. While they are not native Alaskans they both have lived there so long that they refer to us in the states as "outsiders." Marge was expecting their second baby in a few weeks and while she had made the long and hazardous fishing trip the day before, she did not plan to go out again that day. Mrs. Huffman was sure Bob would like to go and that he would have no objection to company. She inquired and Bob agreed after first ascertaining that Elmer looked like a man who could walk ten miles without collapsing.

Bob is a civil and mechanical engineer. His principle work is with highway construction and maintenance and his particular field is logistics. He had much interesting information to offer. He had been on survey parties, shut off as long as six months from contact with civilization as we know it, occasionally meeting and securing supplies from Eskimos, but otherwise occupied with his work and the business of surviving the winter in the arctic.

He has worked in recharting the waters of the coast line of Alaska, because not only does the geographic coast change continuously and rapidly but so does the depth of the waters in each vicinity. This is because Alaska is a comparatively new land where, for example, the glaciers are continually changing its shape and contour.

Bob pointed out several areas where there is evidence of this newness of the land as shown by the fact that the water has not yet found its lowest level. In such areas one may walk on land that is actually lower than a river bed above him, or stand below the level of a lake nearby.

They also told us about homesteading in Alaska. It is possible to acquire ownership of 160 acres of land by living on it for three years, by building a habitable house and by bringing one-fourth of it under cultivation by the end of the third year. There is no charge for this land if the homesteader remains the three years and fulfills these requirements. Or, after living there fourteen months he may buy his land outright at $1.25 per acre. Veterans receive credit of up to two years for their service in the armed forces.

After a boat trip of some 20 miles and a hike of half that far down stream through the brush and tundra, Elmer and Bob came to a grayling stream, a rapid ice cold stream about the size of the Pigeon or Sturgeon Rivers at home. On their way to and from the river and all along the river banks were skeletons of fish two to three feet in length. One could barely walk ten feet between them, they were so plentiful. All of which indicated that not too long before a great many bear of the region had been enjoying a feast of fresh salmon.

We marvelled at the courage of such people as Bob, Marge and the others who go out on these long treks by themselves just for fun. The only armament they carry is their fish poles. Bob did admit that three or four weeks previous he would not have considered it a safe place to spend the day, as a hungry Bruin might have thought him rude to have disturbed his lunch hour.

At last they stepped into the river, and under the expert guidance of Bob, Elmer began to feel and see the grayling rise and take the flies. The grayling will lunge at any kind of fly, and if he misses it the first time he'll try and try again. They strike from the swiftest part of the current and when they are near the surface their dorsal fin can be seen extruding from the water just before the strike. This, of course, is the identifying mark of the grayling and makes it appear in the water to be something akin to a shark. (To be continued next week)

Orchard Notes . . .

By C. FAIRMAN

This is the time of year to study ways of reducing orchard expenses. Cultivating early will save more late cultivatings.

Manure may be the cheapest fertilizer this year, depending on the growers supply of family labor.

Change spray materials or rotate materials for effect. Using a high priced material once and a lower priced material another time. A higher priced insecticide that would kill Red Banded Leaf Roller, Codling Moth, Curculio and Apple Maggott all with one spray would in some cases be the cheapest. A material that would kill Curculio only would be expensive to use if other insects were present.

The size of the prospective fruit crop the market for some would all have a bearing on selecting materials for the coming season.

We are attending all of the spring fruit meetings. A new spray calendar will be out. I will be pleased to talk over fruit situations at any time.

A VETERANS' SHRINE Plan Decoration Day Memorial Dedication

The Ladies Get Together Club of North Echo are happy to announce that several of the project workers have met families on the rural mail routes, and over $50.00 in pledges have been collected towards the building of the Veterans' Memorial in East Jordan.

It is evident that there is much good will expressed as the people of the community watch the steady progress in raising the needed money. At this rate East Jordan will surely be in the front rank of towns whose parks have Veterans' Memorial Shrines.

The American Legion Auxiliary is moving ahead aggressively in the project. The Girl Scouts have also caught the spirit! They expect to sell Veterans' Memorial tags April 13th and 14th.

Because it is hoped and expected that the beautiful Memorial Shrine will be ready for Memorial Day, its dedication on that day is planned. That will be a fitting feature of the day's exercises. Already there is considerable enthusiasm as plans are being made.

A POPULAR and very able speaker will be secured who will stir all of us as the new Memorial shrine is fittingly and formally dedicated. What could possibly be a better occasion to emphasize the mighty forces of Brotherhood and Peace which our lovely flag stands for always!

Many friends of the project are urging that strong efforts be made to achieve this goal as quickly as possible. It will be only a few days until Spring arrives; that will be a relief for us all! We all love the warmth and brightness which the bursting buds and caroling birds make known to us. We are very sure that our Veterans gave of their richest and finest so that America can go on with the deathless beauty of the Stars and Stripes. Contributed.
