

SHE IS ACCUSED OF STEALING MORE THAN $100,000

Food service worker faces charges

Former Boyne City Public School employee Wendy Juday was arrested March 16 on criminal complaint charges of embezzling more than $100,000 from the school food service.

On June 1, 2004, the Boyne City police department was contacted by the Bovne City School District regarding the apparent ongoing theft of funds from the food service department. Because school food services are subsidized by the United States Department of Agriculture, federal investigators were contacted and a joint investigation began

Mark McClutchey, a special agent of the USDA Office of Inspector General, issued an affidavit in support of a criminal complaint alleging that Juday stole funds from the Boyne City Public Schools lunch program over the five years of her employment with BCPS.

According to McClutchey's interview with Kathy Frugé, food service director at Boyne City schools, the food service department grossed approximately $30,000 during the 1997-98 school year. The following year Juday began working as a cashier. That year the gross revenue dropped to $15.000.

By the 2002-03 school year, the food service department at BCPS was losing approximately $20,000 annually, according to the complaint.

The losses were blamed on students, who were believed to be stealing food from the school cafeteria. Food prices were raised to help compensate for the losses, according to the complaint.

However, Jim Cooper, superintendent of Boyne City schools, said that breakfast nor hot lunch costs have been raised since 2000.

He added that à la carte items were increased by 20 percent, but this was after an audit showed that they had been under-priced compared to other schools. Cooper said that while there not work. are probably small losses due to erschool had never considered a $20,000 annual deficit as an issue of student theft.

costs to compensate, and that neither food sales on the days each of the cashiers worked against sales on the days each cashier did not work, including Juday. In her statement to McClutchey, Frugé reported that she noticed that food sales were significantly higher on the days Juday did

On Jan. 6, 2004, according to the ror or occasional student theft, the complaint, Frugé watched from a remote computer monitor, and witnessed real-time transactions taking place at Juday's cash register. She During the 2003-04 school year, observed Juday accept cash payments in fact the school did not raise food Frugé began comparing recorded from students and then not register the sales. Frugé observed Juday at the end of the day as she closed out her register, and she saw her hit the "total" button first, which allowed Juday to know the amount of sales registered during that day.

A deficit averaging $125 occurred on the days Juday was working.

Based on this information, McClutchey's affidavit alleges that Juday embezzled about $106,700 during her five-year employment with

AT A GLANCE

Spring arrives with another burst of winter

Spring officially began at 7:33 a.m. Sunday, but local folks still woke to a layer of new snow and frosty windows on their cars on Monday.

What makes it officially springtime, whether or not we've had a glimpse of robins or heard the trickle of melted snow in mudtime?

It is because at 7:33 a.m. Eastern Standard Time on March 20, at that very moment, the sun passed over the earth's equator heading north. We know this as the vernal equinox - and, and, in the northern hemisphere, the beginning of spring.

It is also the time, and it happens twice a year, when day and night are approximately equal in length, but from starting Sunday, the days began to outlast the nights.

It is also the only day of the year when the sun rises due east and sets due west, as seen anywhere on the planet.

Patrols keep Crazy Days crowd in check

Arrests were up during Boyne Mountain's Crazy Days again this year. The trend has been slightly upward over the last several years, but this year the State Police and Charlevoix County Sheriff's annual coalition had a boost from Boyne Mountain security, according to Sheriff George Lasater. "There was a more consistent, teamwork approach with Boyne Mountain," the sheriff said. "It made a big difference."

Jordan Valley library board can't even agree on an agenda

The Jordan Valley District Library held its regularly scheduled meeting last Tuesday.

President Chris Curtin requested a motion for-approval of the agenda. Member Harry Watson moved that the agenda be approved with the addition of an item to remove the president and vice president of the board. President Curtin said that she would not entertain such a motion, which was "deleterious" to the library. Member Bob Sherman said that it was the right of a board member to request an addition to the agenda, and he moved that the agenda be revised to include discussion on the officers' removal. Curtin again refused to hear the motion.

"I feel there needs to be forward motion, and sometimes that means there needs to be a new person at the helm." Sara Schroeder, JVDL board member

Watson presented a typed motion that enumerated the alleged offenses

The sheriff's department and state police have worked together on patrols in years past.

'We meet together beforehand," Lasater said. "It is a very cooperative team effort. We even use our auxiliary members to transport to the jail so that we don't lose our on-duty troopers.

"One thing we did differently this year was to take two deputies off the road and put them in civilian clothes on the mountain to work on drug-related offences," Lasater added.

The results of the combined law enforcement efforts were a total of 27 arrests, most of which took place on Saturday.

These included 10 drunk driving, nine controlled substance, two disorderly, one minor in possession, one transport with open intoxicant, two fugitive warrants, and one weapons arrest.

There were no personal injury or property damage accidents in the area related to the Boyne Mountain carnival.

"To me that says we're doing our job," Lasater said.

To that end, Howell posted a list of projects for her students to choose from

Crazy boarders

People came in crowds to celebrate Boyne Mountain's carnival, Crazy Days, last weekend. Visitors could watch participants in many events, including the ever-popular "Slush Cup" - and the more intrepid among them could participate. Crazy Days marks the beginning of the end of the ski season and is a popular event with sklers and snowboarders from all over Michigan.

EJ board suspends student for bomb threat

The East Jordan Public School board met in closed session last week to discuss expulsion proceedings for one of the students involved with last month's bomb threat.

The session was closed at the request of the student's family. The name of the student is not being released. The board gave the student a long-term suspension of 150 days for misconduct and for violation of the code of student conduct.

Expulsion proceedings are pending for another student involved in the scare, which emptied the high school.

The threat was made in the form of a hand-written note left in one of the high school's restrooms.

After investigation, the threat was determined to be a hoax, but consistent with the school's procedures, the high school staff and student body were evacuated to the middle school while fire, law enforcement and emergency medical service crews responded.

We take these kinds of things very seriously, and will do all that we can to make sure they don't occur," said superintendent Chip Hansen.

School finances dominate BC board meeting

The Boyne City school board meeting last week was dominated by a discussion of school finances all over Michigan.

Superintendent Jim Cooper said that Boyne City schools were in fairly good shape financially, due to careful budgeting and cuts, but cautioned that the money would be gone in three years if there are no changes in the way things are financed at the state level.

This, he admitted, puts BCPS in a much better position than many other districts, but he characterized all Michigan school districts as being in a line heading for a cliff. Some have gone over; all are moving closer, he said.

The problem, according to Cooper and member Debra Noblett, who represented the board at a meeting between 11 districts to discuss the school funding crisis in Michigan, is Proposal A.

The schools all are willing to bear responsibility to control expenditures and generate revenue. But with land value increasing, the amount of funding from the state is decreasing and almost every district in the state is in a crisis, according to Cooper.

"What needs to be done with the funding crisis in Michigan?" Cooper said.

"In each district we need to ask, 'What are we doing to control costs? What are we doing to generate revenue?""

In 1994, Cooper said, Proposal A passed with overwhelming voter support. Its purpose was to take reliance off property tax and to close the gap between the rich and poor school districts.

"It accomplished both these things," Cooper said. "But legislatively it has been tweaked over 70 times since then. Those 70 tweaks have cost the school aid fund over $550,000 a year.

"We are not asking for new money or more money. We are just asking to fix Proposal A," he said. Cooper said that many special interest-type groups have received tax breaks due to the changes in Proposal A. He said this is money the schools are entitled to, based on the will of the voters with Proposal A.

But he also noted that school administrators and boards have little impact on legislators.

"If citizens and communities demand it, it'll get done," he said. "Is education a priority in your community or not?

"(We have to) create a grassroots process to make change or every district in Michigan is in danger of losing the educational process beyond recognition - or shutting doors, and I don't know which is worse," Cooper said.

The board discussed how best to proceed with educating the public about the funding crisis and how to get people involved in an effort to affect policy changes in Lansing. They agreed to meet next month, with each member bringing several guests. The purpose of the meeting will be to create a plan to raise public awareness and support of fixing Proposal A.

The next regular BCPS board meeting will be Monday, April 18, at 7 p.m., a week later than the regular schedule due to spring break.

Dreaming of long retirement?

It started because Howell had heard that the hospital was upgrading its computers and she called to find out what they were going to do with the old ones "And then I begged for them," she said.

"It was going to cost the hospital between $5,000 and $7,000 to get rid of them," said Kowalski. "That's where we came in. We'd take as many computers as we could get and get them up and running."

CAH agreed to give the students about 80 computers.

First the boys requested a truck and an enclosed trailer from superintendent Bill Aten, but that didn't work out. Instead they were able to borrow a step-van from the Charlevoix Intermediate School District, and janitor Tim Robach picked up the computers and drove them back to Boyne Falls.

Aten lent a hand again, calling Boyne Falls Storage, who generously agreed to allow the students to store the computers at. that facility, free of charge, until all the computers are "up and running."

The boys have taken on the responsibility for getting each and every one of the donated computers back in working condition. But it was their decision of what to do with the refurbished machines that is particularly noteworthy.

The boys wrote a survey, which was Emailed to each classroom teacher, to determine which students do not have a computer in their homes. Students who qualify will be given a refurbished computer

"I'm glad I chose this project. It's nice doing something for people giving (the computers) away. It'll make some people's lives easier." - Daryl Kowalski to keep. If there are leftover computers, Howell hopes to be able to establish a "lending library," where students can borrow computers when their own are out of commission.

The boys are committed to repairing the computers themselves. They have learned problem solving skills, basic knowledge of computers and some technical skills that will help them complete that end of the project, which they expect will take the rest of the school year.

Another skill: "We have our resident computer geeks, and (Crego and Kowalski) know when to ask for help," Howell said. There is a work station set up in the classroom to work on the CAH computers. Any time computers are involved there are problems, and loading software is creating a little havoc for the project.

In the classroom, students can be heard anthropomorphizing their computers: "This computer is being stupid," said a frustrated

"resident geek." But it is a benign remark, heard in various translations throughout the session, made by students who love computers.

"I'm glad I chose this project," Kowalski said. "It's nice doing something for people - giving (the computers) away. It'll make some people's lives easier."

The boys are not yet sure how distribution will go, "It will depend on how repairs go," they said. But they do not want to do any computer distribution until all the machines have been serviced. They had a completed donor list at the end of last week.

"We will start distributing as soon as all the systems are ready to go," Kowalski said.

Crego is the more hands-on member of their team in terms of computer servicing. "I'm not so much of a computer geek," said Kowalski, "But I'm willing to learn."

The students of Boyne Falls High School and Ms. Howell's Independent Computer Project class would like to thank the Charlevoix Area Hospital and Boyne Falls Storage for their generosity and contribution to making this project a success.

personally. Curtin said none of the offenses alleged constituted a basis for removal, and requested a name and address for Watson's attorney.

"I will entertain a motion to accept the agenda or I will adjourn the meeting," said Curtin

"I feel there needs to be forward motion, and sometimes that means there needs to be a new person at the helm," board member Sara Schroeder said. "I don't see it as a negative thing.

"If we are here for the good of the library, we need to each look at ourselves and see what we're doing and how we are affecting the library."

Wardwell read a statement "in the hope that it (would) put things in perspective and stop ... confrontation." The statement said that the previous board had acted on a vision, that it saw a new library, paid for by grants, not by raising bonds, and that the board had worked together toward reaching that goal. She said that it became divisive only in the last year as the make-up of the library board changed. She cited examples of current board members voting on things and then rescinding those votes.

She concluded by saying that the leadership of the board had been proven over its years of working with the vision of the previous board, but that the vision may need to be looked at.

"I ask the majority, what is your vision? To spend yet more taxpayers' money merely deconstructing a foundation you helped to create?" Wardwell said. "Bring to this table a great vision. Make it every bit as visionary as the one preceding and I will support it 110 percent."

"The auditor's report has said repeatedly that (library director Dawn Pringle) shouldn't be doing all the (accounting) work, but we are told there's no money to hire someone to help," she said. "Now there's money to spend on web-based software, new facilities - I am afraid that there won't be a library for my kids to use.'

"If the money isn't there (for the webbased software) then we didn't plan properly or we are rushing into something," Schroeder

"As a citizen I encourage the rest of you, as a quorum, to continue the meeting and get on with the business you have neglected for months."

- Mark Robinson

added. She said that there are many issues facing the library board, much smaller than a big building project, that it can't afford.

"Keeping up with the Jones, every wish list — if you question these things, you are considered 'anti-library'," Schroeder said. "Doing nothing should be an option. We need to recognize that this may not be the time to incur the expense.'

After an hour of contentious discussion, Curtin closed the meeting, but everyone on the board and most of the audience stayed in their seats. At that point, audience members took the opportunity to address the assembled board.

"As a citizen I encourage the rest of you, as a quorum, to continue the meeting and get on with the business you have neglected for months," said Mark Robinson. "Re-open what the probable former chairperson closed. The community expects you to move forward and let the chips fall where they may."

belongs, and therefore familiar with the library, addressed the board at Curtin's request.

"The team has died. You have to have rules for running. You have got to abide by by-laws. You need a mediator or something - you have a really serious problem." she said. "I really feel sorry for East Jordan. Somehow that has to be the priority, because a town needs a library. Individuals can't do this - a team has to.

> "Start there, with what you want for the library in 25 years. Put personalities aside. Move back. Move back from strategic planning, back to the vision. Libraries have grown, not to keep up with their neighbors, but to meet demand," she said.

Audience member Carl Bluhm said, "Chris, you are not arguing against six people, but with the will of the school board and city commission (who appointed the board members). Don't make the mistake of thinking it's you against these people." Board member Linda Robinson said that she had been approached by Curtin prior to the meeting and had been told that Curtin intended to remove her from the position of treasurer and replace her with Sara Schroeder, because, according to Robinson, Curtin said she had worked with Schroeder previously.

According to Robinson's account, Curtin requested her resignation, which she denied. Curtin stated that she intended to remove Robinson anyway, and Robinson requested that she give reasons to the board, to which Curtin responded that she did not have to. Curtin also asked Robinson if she would like to be the secretary, a position currently held by member Diane Boyer.

After another hour of debate, the board an agreement that Curtin hear a motion to remove her and Wardwell at the next meeting, if the attorney agreed to it. Watson stated that she should consult her own lawyer, because the board would not approve any additional taxpayer-funded legal fees.

Juday's employment was terminated on Feb. 19, 2004, but she had not reported to work since Jan. 9, according to Boyne City Assistant Police Chief Jeffrey Gettel.

On June 24, 2004, McClutchey interviewed Juday, who issued a written sworn statement.

"Within two to three months of starting work, I began taking money from the cash register," she wrote. "I would intentionally not input food sales into the cash register, so that extra cash would be available at the end of the day.

"At the end of each day, I would total the food sales inputted into the computerized register, and keep all the cash in excess of that amount," she said.

According to her statement, Juday was taking the money when she transported the lunch money to the bank for deposit. She also stated that the amount varied every day depending upon what was being served in the lunchroom, but that she estimated that she was taking between $40 and $80 a day.

She also admitted to taking some money from football admissions before "handing over the money bag.

She estimated that her total theft amounted to approximately $60,000. "I may have taken more than $60,000, but that is my best guess," she said in the statement.

Juday also said that she used the money for living expenses and to pay for her children's activities.

"It was a big mistake allowing any cashier to take money to the bank," said Gettel. "I'm sure they like to trust people, but sometimes you trust too much and it ends up being too great a temptation for some people."

Cooper agreed. The school, he said, will implement greater internal and external checks and balances, utilizing software better and making sure that more people are responsible for accounting oversight, as well as providing additional training.

"We think the process is working, we do internal auditing just to keep a running total so that we know where we are budget-wise," Cooper said. "But our awareness level is raised that much more.'

Juday was arrested at a private residence in Boyne Falls on March 16 and appeared in federal court in Grand Rapids on a complaint of stealing federal program funds.

The charge carries a maximum penalty of up to 10 years' imprisonment, a fine of $250,000 and restitution.

Schroeder acknowledged that she was one of the board/members who had "flipflopped" on votes and issues.

"I am guilty of going back on some decisions. Especially in the first few months I needed to take in everything that was going on," she said. But she said that as her understanding has increased, so have her concerns

Late bloomer tries a new thing

I did this crazy, impulsive thing recently. I went shopping by myself, but that wasn't it. Shopping by myself could be a mistake, though, I might be more prone to crazy impulsiveness, but I do enjoy it.

But here's what I did: I got fake fingernails, I know, it's not like I pierced my nose or anything, but it was still pretty much out of character.

I was a nail-biter until I was 34. I gnawed my poor fingernails way past the quick and I suffered from nail envy most of my life. Magazines with sleek models holding Virginia Slims made me weak with envy — the cigarette held no appeal, but the glorious nails that tipped the Eventually, always a late bloomer, I quit biting my nails, but they never achieved even a modicum of glamour. They are splitty, brittle things. And mostly I don't care, except that I absolutely love my wedding ring. It really deserves gor-

So there I was, walking along past a nail place in the mall, and I dove in. If I'd had to wait, I probably would not have done it, but this Vietnamese guy monosyllabically offered me a chair and grabbed my hand.

Bingo! — just like that I was committed to fake nails. My own scrubby ones were hacked off and then resurfaced with a baby rotary grinder, lickety-split. There was no way I could back out of the deal.

Not saying a word, the Victnamese-American nail technician glued long plastic nails to the end of my own mutilated ones. These were about an inch-and-a-half long and made me feel like one of those Eastern men in old National Geographics with their long, curling nails.

Finished gluing, the tech said tersely. "How long?" and then clipped them without waiting for a response, "Okay?" I was putty in his hands; he was the expert, whatever he thought. Secretly, not daring to contradict him, I hoped I could still type.

From there, acrylic was brushed deftly over my remaining real nail and the plastic tips, blending them into one smooth sweep of nail. Quick, quick.

But suddenly my mostly silent nail tech made a noise, a disapproving inhalation between his teeth. I watched closely, trying to see what he might have done wrong, but all the nails looked the same to me.

He must've realized how it sounded, because for the first time in our brief encounter he volunteered some information. He was reacting to the news coming from a television mounted on the wall behind him. While he worked on my nails, his mind was engaged with the news. What he was hearing was of the courtroom massacre by a man named Nichols, who had overpowered his escort, taken her gun and killed the judge and two others.

Of course it was horrible news. That quick intake of breath was horror, shock, disbelief, disgust, all registered without missing a beat. I was grateful for that response. It made the man holding my hand more human, more flesh and blood. We spoke of Nichols for a moment.

Then I told him I worked for a newspaper and I hoped I could still type. And he laughed just slightly, and then volunteered, in heavily accented English, that he is taking a technical writing class at Northwestern Michigan College, and that he is doing a research paper on geology.

I asked more: His name was Song Hi, but he changed it to David when he became a United States citizen. Song means mountain. He left five brothers and sisters in Vietnam, but has a brother in a southern state. They both came to the U.S. to do nails.

I braved up. "Don't you think it's a little weird you could come to the States and make a living putting fake nails on women?"

She coulda been a contender

By KATIE WOLCOTT

In "On the Waterfront," Marlon Brando's character says, "You was my brother. Charley, you should a looked out for me a little bit. You should a taken care of me just a little bit so I wouldn't have to take them dives for the short-end money.... You don't understand. I could had class. I could been a contender. I could been somebody, instead of a burn, which is what I am, let's face it."

I was never a contender. I never even wanted to be a contender. I never had the competitive spirit to outperform or give 150 percent just to win. Instead, I have a low-key personality. Instead of making waves, I swim into or surf with any turbulence created around me.

That's not to say I'm a slacker. In most cases, I give everything my best and enjoy a nice challenge. However, I was never driven to do benter than someone else ... especially in sports ... until now. I've been bitten by a bloodthirsty bug that has infected me with a deep-seeded need to finish first, rank high, and leave others in my dust. So far, the bug has only found its way into a small chunk of my life and I'm thoroughly enjoying what it has done to me.

So, let's take a look at when the bug first laid its beady little eyes on me. It was a little over two years ago. I was at the doctor's office for my routine physical and he had the audacity to comment that I'd gained three pounds since the previous year and I should watch my weight. I left his office feeling bitter and insulted.

How dare he get picky over three little pounds? How dare he throw my height and age on a chart and presume to tell me I'm out of bounds? I eat right. I exercise. What does he know? I'll show him. At next year's appointment, I'll be 10 pounds lighter and we'll see what he has to say about that.

So, I evaluated my life and decided I probably did snack too much. I probably ate larger portions than I needed to. I probably could put in a little more time exercising each week. I made some basic lifestyle changes and, indeed, dropped 10 pounds by the next year.

I was actually excited for that next doctor's appointbool. Gradually, I ranked higher and higher in my pretend standings, until the fated day when I had beaten evvs. eryone but the phantom swimmer in the fast lane.

He was like a dolphin, zipping from one end to the other as if gliding through air. I'd never raced against the Phantom, but on that day, I knew I was ready to give it a shot. As usual, the Phantom was already in the pool when I got there. I staked out a lane next to his, pulled down my goggles, and began my race. No matter how fast, strong, and far I stretched my arms and legs, I couldn't keep up with him. I put everything I had into each lap but couldn't match his pace. I cleaned up my form and made each stroke crisper, but still couldn't compete with him.

I got frustrated. I wondered what he was doing that I wasn't. I wanted to know what I was doing wrong. I needed to be better. Then, the Phantom stopped, paused at the end of the pool, pushed up his goggles, shook out his arms, hoisted himself up to sit on the pool's edge, and took off his flippers. I was stunned, angered, and relieved all at the same time. The Phantom was a fake. A cheater. He was using performance-enhancing equipment. He obviously had no respect for the secret tournament I was hosting in my head. So, I did what any respectable athlete would do—disqualified him for cheating and declared myself the tournament's champion.

Finding the competitive edge in jogging was more difficult. I didn't have anyone to race against, so it was me against the clock. Here, I didn't strive to go faster. Instead, I aimed to go longer: first 20 minutes, then 45, and eventually over an hour. One day, I told myself I was going for two hours. After an hour, I was halfway done and feeling both good and uneasy. Nevertheless, I kept going and made it.

It was both the worst and best feeling ever, I was beaming with pride but also queasy and aching. Eventually, all the aches went away and I had an immense sense of personal satisfaction. Later, I entered a 10K race, I knew I wouldn't finish at the top but I had a goal. Then, I saw my competition and picked out all the people I absolutely had to beat.

The Graveyard of Sunken Ships

Webster defines a 'hazard' as a source of danger, a chance, a venture or risk. Navigating Oyster Bay can pose a hazard.

There are six ships that have been laid to rest on the bottom of Oyster Bay from a 206-ton schooner to a 57-foot steamer.

This past summer, 2004, an incident involving a 20foot pleasure boat was reported. While navigating Oyster Bay, the pleasure boat struck part of one of the submerged vessels: raking the bottom of the boat and causing damage to the pleasure boat's outdrive. The passengers in the pleasure boat were thrown forward, falling down. Luckily for the passengers, only bruises were incurred. It could have been much worse.

The Charlevoix County sheriff was notified of the incident. The U.S. Coast Guard was also informed of the incident and asked why there is no marker placed above water to identify this submerged boating hazard area before someone is seriously injured. The Coast Guard indicated that the sunken/submerged vessels are marked on the Lake Charlevoix navigational chart and also that "everybody knows about them."

This does not appear to be sufficient marking or hazard warning of the submerged vessels. Where there is a definite navigational hazard, why not have a marking buoy placed and secured to identify the area for the safety of all boaters?

Enough is enough to the editor:

As I'm sure you know, Friday, March 11, there was a car accident in between Petoskey and Walloon involving four students from Boyne City High School. I would just like to say, as a good friend of those individuals involved, I am sick of hearing about the accident from the press.

I shouldn't have asked. He did not think it was weird, and stopped talking, except to ask briefly, "What color polish?" Natural, I said, hypocritically. "French is best," he said, which I accepted meekly, but our short camaraderie was sadly at an end.

I finished and walked out into the mall with a life-long craving satiated. I drove to Sam's Club next and ran into more friends than I knew I had — all down-to-earth sorts — and I had to keep cramming my hands into my pockets to hide my conceit.

Finally, I am sort of used to these nails, pink today, and clicking happily along on the keyboard. I can still type, and I forget to hide them, so I guess I'm adjusting.

But I learned something. I chose to do a frivolous thing, and David facilitated that thing for me. But he was a serious person, unfrivolous indeed, responsive to the news, studying geology, technical writing, choosing to become American, assimilating himself by abandoning his mountain and choosing David — and accommodating crazy feminine vanity without judgement. I admire him. ment. I wanted to hear him comment on how well I'd done. And, what did he say about my new weight? Absolutely nothing. Again, I left his office feeling bitter and insulted.

How dare he tell me to lose weight then fail to comment when I do? How dare he tell me to get on the chart then neglect to give me points for succeeding?

I ate less. I exercised more. What does he know? I'll show him. At next year's appointment, I'll be 10 more pounds lighter and if he doesn't say anything, I'll gouge his eyes out with a rusty fork.

So, again, I evaluated my life and decided to mix up my exercise routine by swimming and jogging. I swam before work and jogged after. At first, it was grueling. I didn't want to get up early to swim and had to force myself out the door after work to run. However, after a couple weeks, I got in shape and it got easier. My muscles didn't hurt and I actually looked forward to challenging myself to go faster and longer.

That's when the bug got me. Unbeknownst to them, I found myself racing against all the other swimmers at the and running like a bat out of hell. I couldn't let a cheater beat me. I caught another woman drinking coffee before the race and couldn't let myself lose to her. The list went on and on. In the end, I beat the cheater by a hair, finished faster than I thought I could, and felt better about myself and more confident than I had in a long time.

I took off another 15 pounds that year. Again I was excited about my doctor's appointment. He hadn't commented on my 10-pound drop, but surely he'd say something about 25. And he did. He told me I looked great and asked why I'd lost the weight. I told him it was because he told me to. He looked at me like a wise adult looks at a naïve child and said, "I suggested you watch your weight. I didn't tell you to lose weight. You made that decision."

He had pointed me in the right direction, but I'd chosen to look out for myself. I'd taken care of myself. I'd challenged myself with class and succeeded. That's when I decided that I am a contender and I like it.

(Katie Wolcott writes from her home in Gaylord.)

I know that it is your job it get the breaking stories out to the populace, and while your stories were in a way promoting our high school musical HONK!, many of us, including the victims and their families, would really like to move on.

As a friend and member of the community, I understand the need for knowledge, and from my experience living in a small town, I know how quickly rumors can spread. But over a week after the fact, I do believe it is in everyone's best interest if we move on, and this is where your help would be greatly appreciated.

So thank you for your time, and I am sorry to be blunt, but we are just getting sick of the publicity.

JOHNNY MCGEORGE of Columbus, Ohio and sister, Mary Jo and Bob Rhodes of Grand Blanc spent this past week in Boyne with their grandmother, Jessie Willson, and also visited other area relatives. They were very pleased to be able to attend the absolutely fantastic Boyne City Drama Department's presentation of "Honk" directed by their cousin, Stacy McGeorge, over the weekend!

SANDY LAMY of Boyne City hosted a baby shower for son, Derrick and future daughter-in-law Erica Lyles from Muskegon. The future mom, Erica, was showered with some helpful/necessary baby items. The event was held at Lakeview Village Clubhouse. There was plenty of good food for all to share. Guests included great-grandmothers-to-be Marilyn Jarema from Boyne City and Nancy Goalen from Petoskey. Ultrasound pictures were shown to all guests and it looks like a girl! Baby gifts included plenty of pink items and darling booties. Good luck, Erica, with the delivery! The relatives include the Hacker, Jarema, Cribb and Pellerito families. All are looking forward to meeting our new relative!

AT THE BOYNE Area Senior Center this week: Thursday, March 24, lunch will be served at Litzenburger Place at noon. This will be Easter dinner and ham will be served. # Women's healthy heart program offered in BC

A repeat presentation of a special program just for women will be held at 6:30 p.m. Thursday, March 24, at the Wolverine Dilworth Hotel in Boyne City.

The Charlevoix Area Hospital Foundation program will feature wine, cheese, chocolate and a discussion about women's heart health. The same program was held last month in Charlevoix.

"Because of the response," said Foundation event coordinator Patti Barraw, "we are hosting the program for a second time.'

Designed to help women recognize the symptoms of a heart attack that are specific to a woman, the program will explain how to describe those symptoms to your physician.

Statistics show that heart disease is the number one killer of women in America. The American Heart Association says that women can combat those numbers by increasing their consumption of fruits, vegetables and whole grains; decreased consumption of saturated fats and trans fatty acids; choosing foods full of nutrients; controlling

WEDNESDAY, MARCH 2005 PAGE 7 A family of boarders

, By JANE BOOZE Staff Writer

Most snowboard instructors never even attempt to achieve Level III status. Of the few who do, fewer succeed. Of those who become Level III instructors, fewer still are over age 30. Duane Miller of East Jordan is a notable exception.

Being notable, and exceptional, runs in the Miller family.

Dusty Miller, an eighth-grader at East Jordan Middle School took home a third place finish in the United States of America Snowboard Association slope-style competition at Nubs Nob in late February, riding in the highly competitive junior men's division.

Slope-style, according to Dusty's dad, Duane, is the best of two runs on a course made up of big air jumps, small "hits," or jumps and rails.

"The competitors are judged on the difficulty of tricks, amplitude and landing," said Duane. "This event is a qualifier for the USASA Nationals held at Copper Mountain in Colorado in April.'

Dusty is not the only Miller progeny with boarding skills. His older brother Hunter, a senior at East Jordan High School, took third place in the Chevy Truck - Evolution Tour Boarder Cross at Boyne Mountain on March

"The Boarder Cross is like Roller Derby on snow," Duane said. "The course is made up of table-top jumps, speed bumps, rollers, step-up jumps and bermed turns.

"Competitors from 14 states and Canada competed for a spot at the Junior World's in Switzerland," he said. "Riders compete four at a time and the top two advance to the next round. Body armor and full-face helmets required." A lot of dads would be speaking Greek, referring to "table-tops" and "rails," but not Duane. His sons are a chip off the old iceberg, though Duane rejects the very concept of "old" anything.

He turned 50 last Wednesday. He would rather not make an issue of it, but it makes his own recent accomplishment even more extraordinary.

Miller has been a snowboard instructor at Boyne Mountain for nine years. The first year, he obtained his Level I ing seems to come naturally - something he didn't know certification, the second year he earned Level II. For the past five years he has been working toward Level III.

The American Association of Snowboard Instructors study guide describes it this way: Level I is your high-school diploma, Level Il is a college degree, and Level III is the Masters. It goes on:

"Your demonstration (riding) skills must be nearly perfect. You must be able to change the timing, intensity and/or duration of any movement. You must be able to make your board perform equally well on a wide variety of terrain and snow ... Level III demands mastery.' "It was very stressful," said

Miller, who took his Level III exam in Redwing, Minnesota early in March

"One big motivation was proving that I was not too old turns," he said. to do this," he said, describing an exercise regime that took the form of wake-boarding and working out on a trampoline during the summer.

"Level III is tougher for snowboarding than skiing. We have to be able to do big jumps, rails and half-pipes," he said

The exam is not all about riding, though. It is a twoday exam, with three components each day: riding, teaching and technical knowledge. A candidate can miss one piece and still pass, so five of six tests is acceptable, as long as the failing section isn't in teaching skills. An instructor must above all be able to teach

Fortunately for Miller, teaching is a strong suit. He has been a scuba instructor for nine years, and teach-when he was younger.

"You have to be patient, not easily frustrated and able to adapt to a variety of learning styles," he said. "You also have to be able to gain the trust of the student and have good communication skills.<sup>3</sup>

He passed the teaching portions with high marks and strong comments such as "...good use of concise explanations."

Miller enjoys teaching all different age groups.

"Kids are visual learners," he said, "so you have to be able to demonstrate. I am careful to teach in progression - you can't walk before you can crawl. People get hurt trying to do things they're not ready for.

"Adults are fun. They can understand and relate to technical things - what joints are flexing when on

Duane Miller

At Redwing, students watched each other ride on video, and did analysis on body movement and weight distribution. Teaching people to ride requires a great deal of technical knowledge. Miller had taken Level III before and passed the written, but failed the demonstrating end of the exams, and was told that he would not have to retake the written portion. As a result, he practiced his riding, watching and evaluating videos of himself, and didn't worry too much about the written portion.

He had been misinformed. He went into the written portion, largely those essential technical knowledge ques-

He scored an 86 of a possible 89 - the highest in his class

Miller's wife Nancy teaches, too. She is a Level I Nordic cross-country ski instructor, a Level I ski instructor and a Level I snowboard instructor. She sees Duane as an inspiration to the young ... and not-so-young. She said she is proud of his attainment of Level III, and even more so because he did not let perceptions about age stand in his way.

Hunter is a Level I snowboard instructor, and the youngest instructor ever to earn Level I at Boyne Mountain.

"Very rarely is someone unteachable," Miller said. "The hardest ones are the ones that are physically unprepared, with a sedentary life-style. It's a balance sport. If you have good balance, chances are you can do it."

Miller said that anyone who skateboards, wakeboards or works out on a trampoline has an edge in learning to snowboard. The trampoline is especially helpful in learning to do spins, and gaining body control while in the air.

Miller will be on the educational staff at Boyne Mountain, which he credits for giving him time off to train for the exam. He will be able to do clinics and certify Levels I and II.

And beyond that, he will compete.

"Next year I am going to go for the national championship in my age group," he said. "My goal is to participate in all five events."

Last year he only entered two events, slope-style, where he placed 12th, and Boarder-Cross, in which he placed sixth

But he's riding better than ever, and next year he enters a new age group. As the AASI said, Level III is the Masters degree - but there's always more to learn. Looks like Miller's working on his PhD.

As for Hunter and Dusty, one look at their parents, who are both active, interested and always learning, and they can see that there is no limit to what they can accomplish.

Skiers compete at Junior Olympics

Max Sasso, all members of the Boyne Alpine Race team, competed in last week's Junior Olympics held in Vail and Winter Park, Colo.

Skiers ages 13 to 15 raced in four events each. downhill, super G, giant slalom and slalom.

BART's top finishers in the national event were Katherine Rowley, who placed 5th in slalom out of 65 in slalom out of 97 male competitors. Rowley placed fourth overall in central USSA's 10-state region and 15th overall nationally. Both Brennan and Rowley attend East Jordan High

TECHNOLOGY IN A NORTHERN MICHIGAN WORKPLACE MAKING A DIFFERENCE FOR STAFF AND PATIENTS

New computer technology continues to emerge at a rapid pace, its impact has touched and affected almost every aspect of our daily life in some manner. On occasion, we each have experienced adjustments in new car, telephone, or even bank technology as it has been inserted without our "consent." On the other hand, we have all marveled at what technology is doing in the field of medical diagnosis. It is certainly the hope of those who develop new technology to enhance and improve the life style of our culture.

Maple Ridge Dental Group in East Jordan has recently invested in a technology platform that aids in the diagnostic process for the practicing dentists, facilitates patients to gain an immediate and visual understanding of treatment possibilities, and make some dental procedures much easier.

A digital x-ray system is now available in the practice of Doctors Sladics, Swartz and Kempton. The computer generated images will reduce radiation exposure for each required x-ray. An additional benefit is the greatly multiplied size of the x-ray image on a monitor. Patients are able to see and discuss components of dental disease by sharing the image with the dentist and staff almost immediately. The staff doctors can efficiently communicate with insurance companies and specialists by e-mail transmission of #### female competitors, and Mac Brennan, who placed 33rd Katherine Rowley, Mac Brennan, Cole Spalding and these digital images.

Digital photography is also a daily part of the Maple Ridge practice. Dr. Sladics says, "this technology has empowered our staff to communicate to patients in a manner that was previously unimaginable". Patients can visualize cracked fillings, fractured teeth, replacement restorations, cosmetic concerns and soft tissue diseases and have a clear understanding that a problem exists. Photography allows the patient to become engaged and interactive as a treatment plan is discussed. In addition, photos are generated and sent as valuable laboratory information or in support of insurance claims

An office wide network allows each room, including the waiting room to allow patients complete access to a wealth of educational information specific to hundreds of dental procedures. A pictorial and verbal summary of many dental techniques can be viewed to help answer questions relating to difficult treatment scenarios. Dr. Danielle Swartz loves to engage her patients in the program and says in short "a picture is worth a thousand words"

A Biolase dental laser unit is a part of the office technology platform. A dental laser is relatively new to routine use as a treatment instrument in the dental office. The laser will not replace the dental handpiece in the short term, but it does offer patients > and staff some wonderful treatment options. Certain tooth preparation procedures may be done without traditional anesthesia (the shot). These include small or perhaps medium sized cavities where preexisting metal does not exist. Dr. Kempton reports that patients may experience "a sense of coldness, much like that of cating a popsicle," . In addition to fillings, the laser is very effective in supporting the treatment of periodontal disease, removal of soft tissue pathology, cosmetic tissue sculpting and painlessly stopping the progress and discomfort of the classic "cold sores." The laser can also effectively desensitize chronically "cold" sensitive areas for most patients.

Technology has made patients feel a part of the diagnostic process. It is certainly not essential for dentists to provide excellent care, but has been a valuable tool for the staff at Maple Ridge Dental to engage and communicate more effectively and efficiently with our patients.

We look forward to meeting you. Our staff team takes great pride in their commitment to your care. We offer a full compliment of general dental services including, child care, family care, emergency services, cosmetics, implant and restorative dentistry.

Appointments can be made with Dr. Kempton, Dr. Sladics and Dr. Swartz, by calling 231-536-2601. The office is located in East Jordan. Hours are Monday through Friday, 8 a.m. to 5 p.m.

Students compete at state conference

Three students from East Jordan High School's DECA chapter competed at the State Career Development conference March 11-13 in Dearborn.

Rosa Ambrosio competed in marketing management while Laura Schihl and Ashley Skop competed as a team in financial analysig, Students completed a test in their occupational area and performed two role-plays to show their knowledge and skills in marketing.

Schihl and Skop received three medals for their performance – one for each role-play and one for placing as a top 10 finalist at the state level.

DECA is an international marketing organization. Through DECA, students learn to apply marketing concepts to various marketing occupation areas. Students compete at the district level and qualify to compete at state. Winners at the state competition then compete at the international level.

DECA is the organization's name and not an acronym.

Her fiance is a 1990 graduate of George Washington University in Washington D.C. with a bachelor's in history and a 2000 MBA from Eastern Michigan University. He is currently the sales manager for All Media Guide in Ann Arbor.

The couple is planning a July 31 wedding in Ann Arbor.

SERVICE BRIEFS

Army Pvt. AZ K. AHMED has graduated from One Station Unit Training at Fort Sill, Lawton, Okla. The training included completion of basic military training and advanced individual training.

In basic training, he received instruction in drill and ceremonies, weapons, map reading, tactics, military courtesy, military justice, physical fitness, first aid, and Army history and traditions.

Ahmed is the son of Maria Baldenebro and stepson of Santiago Hernandez of East Jordan. He is a 2004 graduate of East Jordan High School.

Piano tuner completes training

Christine M. Brown of Boyne City recently completed an in-depth training course in the care, maintenance and repair of pianos.

The Associate Seminar featured more than 15 hours of intensive handson instruction from a select group of nine experts in the field of piano technology. Brown services pianos in schools, churches, restaurants, performance centers and individual homes in Charlevoix and Emmet counties. She can be reached at 582-9337.

Resourceful scouts

East Jordan Webelos of Pack 17 took home the first place traveling trophy from the 2005 Klondike Derby, hosted by Troop 49 of Boyne City. Luke Hawley, Steven Boris, Alex Grutsch, Alex Hanson, and Derek Hanson put their skills to the test. More than 130 scouts had to act out a rescue of a victim that had fallen through ice. The scouts were judged on their methods of removing victim from water and subsequent treatment for broken bones and frost bite. They had to build a shelter and a fire, provide the victim with a hot beverage and signal for help. Afterwards, they were required to take their sieds, fully packed with all their gear, on a timed run though the woods on a cold day. Rick Hawley, the boys' scout leader, said he "feels blessed with the most joyful experience he has ever had the chance to take part in." Hawley said he could only help prepare them; during the event the boys were on their own.

Raven Hill extends hours over spring break and exploration at Raven Hill Discovery Center.

Located between East Jordan and Boyne City, the center will be open extra hours over spring break for families who are sticking close to home or having friends or relatives visit

Hours are noon to 4 p.m. every day from Saturday, March 26, through Sunday, April 10, except Easter Sunday.

Indoor exhibits include science, history and art interactive stations, as well as guided sessions with the center's exotic animals. Outdoor exhibits will be open, if the weather allows.

Raven Hill Discovery Center is a regional science and technology center. It is located on 157 acres in a rural area of northwestern lower Michigan next to the Little Traverse Conservancy's Raven Ridge Nature Preserve.

Treat yourself and your family to an afternoon of fun It is also a cultural, historical and art center. The overall goal of the center is to build life-long connections for children and adults that link science, history and the arts in a hands-on learning environment.

> Over the past four years Raven Hill Discovery Center has had more than 90,000 visitors experience science and technology, history and the arts through hands-on exhibits and displays. Programs include school field trips, scout activities, classes for kids, adult enrichment classes and professional development for teachers. Raven Hill is also open to the general public, individuals, groups, and organizations > Hours vary with the time of year. The center is open weekends year-round and daily between Memorial Day and Labor Day or any time by appointment.

Boyne Thunder will roar again this summer

Boyne City Main Street is boosting summer excitement up a notch by hosting the second annual Boyne Thunder Poker Run July 15-16. 40 high-performance offshore boats, up to 50 feet long, are expected to participate.

During the poker run, each participant will collect one randomly-selected playing card, enclosed in a sealed envelope, at each of five locations.

Upon returning to the starting point, the envelopes are opened and played like a poker hand. The best hand wins first prize, and the next two win second and third cash prizes.

BoyneThunder begins in Boyne City and continues on to Charlevoix, Northport, Beaver Island and Bay Harbor. The boats will return to Boyne City Marina for the event's culmination which includes a Thunder Feast by the lake.

All of last year's boats are returning along with many new entrants.

"Some of these incredible boats are capable of speeds well over 125 mph," said event organizer Howard Newkirk.

The sleek, high-power boats arrive in Boyne City Friday, July 15 for burn-in runs and public viewing at the marina. Offshore teams and the public are then invited to gather at Garrett's Water Street Restaurant for food and entertainment by David Cisco. The bash will feature a unique walk-about auction, which includes nautical performance gear and local entertainment nackages.

Boyne Thunder continues Saturday, July 16. with the 120-mile offshore poker run, a classic wooden boat show in Veterans Memorial Park, the Lake Charlevoix Champagne Yacht Cruise and a carnival all day and evening in the park The yacht cruise provides guests with VIP views of the action, including the return of Boyne Thunder offshore boats. The evening will culminate with Thunder Feast, a community/ boater cookout with live entertainment in Veterans Memorial Park in Boyne City, and a city-wide walking pub crawl.

The entire event has been created by Boyne City Main Street, a volunteer-driven organization dedicated to historic preservation and economic growth of Boyne City. The event supports Camp Quality, a program to benefit children with cancer.

For additional information on any Boyne Thunder event, call (231) 582-2471 or E-mail info@BovneThunder.com or visit www.BoyneThunder.com.

Concord drama students make donations

Concord Academy Boyne has emphasized community service since the school opened 10 years ago.

For the 2005-2006 school year, the school will be using the theme "Concord Cares," which will be led by parent Denise Brown. During the year, each class will host a special service event for the community.

The theme, Concord Cares, was kicked off last Friday and Saturday by the seventh and eighth grade drama class which presented the musical, "The Castaways." The story was about children who had no families or homes in the late 1800s and how they were cared for and given an opportunity to have a new family of their own.

Concord Academy Boyne is a public charter school, is free, and open to all students. It adheres to the benchmarks set by the Michigan Department of Education. As a public school, CAB is bound by the same standards as traditional public schools. However, as a charter school, it is able to make operational decisions not feasible for traditional public schools, according to a school spokesperson.

CAB class sizes are small and its kindergar ten through 12th grade program emphasizes music, dance, drama and the fine arts.

The school is located between Boyne City and Boyne Falls on M-75. For more information, call 582-0194.

depth of 4.0 feet below low Public comment on a proposed marina for the Boyne water datum elevation of Beach Club will be accepted by the U.S. Army Corps of Engineers until April 3.

The Beach Club, planned for development at 475 North Lake St., across from Glen's Market, will feature a 30 unit hotel/condo with two- and three-bedroom suites and balconies overlooking Lake Charlevoix, and an 111-slip marina.

The motel has been approved by the Boyne City planning commission.

The marina project has not yet been approved, and Devlon Properties of Charlevoix, developers, have applied to the U.S. Army Corps of Engineers for a permit to do preliminary dredging from a 3.2 acre area to create a marina basin. The area will be dredged, according to the joint notice, to a "maximum Marie Johnson, as Ida Duck, armed with only a cell phone and a suitcase, goes in search of her son, the Ugly Duckling. She never loses confidence that she will find her son- or that his difference is a good thing.

Honk? eggstravaganza a delight

By JANE BOOZE Staff Writer

hen Ugly, played by Taylor Carlston, first burst onto the stage with a joyful and vociferous "Honk!" the scene had already been set for his discomfiture. He was preceded by four darling ducklings, a disengaged dad, a doting mama duck, a conniving cat and a barnyard full of prejudiced poultry.

His size, his color and his voice immediately exempted him from membership in the darling ducklings club, and it seemed the only ones who cared what happened to him were his-faithful mother - and the cat, who had designs on him.

The show was a modern adaptation of Hans Christian Andersen's "The Ugly Duckling," and its updates and comedic twists did nothing to take away from the original storyline. In the end, it is still a story about a misfit who overcomes negative circumstances and thrives --- and this one sings and dances Ugly, the duckling, wanders away from home in the company of the cat, and has many experiences on his journey home that lead him to self-realization, which does not end when he discovers that he is a swan.

He finally discovers that what has always set him apart can't keep him apart from a family who loves him. He rises above the pettiness of the farmyard to bring about changes - which in his case means a little integration of some migrating birds.

With vibrant costumes, a chorus of fabulous voices, wonderful special effects (who wasn't a little nervous when the peas first disappeared into the bubbling cauldron at the cat's house?), and incredible sets. Stacy McGeorge's debut into high school directing was a huge success.

The sets are worth a second mention. Chuck Britton's artwork and designs in conjunction with McGeorge's vision were magical. Every set was believable, from the diving lessons under sparkling waters to flurried snows under black lights.

The bohemian frogs were a total delight, not only because of their upbeat attitude. The song, the costumes and the tadpoles were a great addition to the play, and must have hooked a few little people who will be familiar with the stage for years to come.

There was not an actor that does not deserve credit and recognition for his or her part in Honk. The voices really were outstanding, the delivery of lines and the ability to stay in character (even with character changes) was wonderful.

But two were missing last weekend: Jenna Raber, a senior who was to appear for the first time on stage, and had worked so hard to find her "inner chicken;" and Ethan Knott, whose roles were missed as Drake, the father swan and the farmer. Both were injured in a car accident during a winter storm last week. They were strong supporting roles, and the understudies had less than a week to recreate the characters, with much switching of roles to accommodate the cast gaps.

It was proof positive that the show must go on. No show goes on without feeling the absence of two such hard-working, dedicated drama students, but the understudies showed their respect by doing a fine job in the vacated roles >

Congratulation's to all of the cast and crew of Honk, to the fantastic and committed adult crew, as well as the unsung heroes behind the curtain who make the scene changes in record time and whisper on and off the stage without recognition

Always one of the best things that can happen at a play is the sound of spontaneous children's laughter coming from the audience. If that is a measure of success, Honk

Well done, Boyne City drama department.
